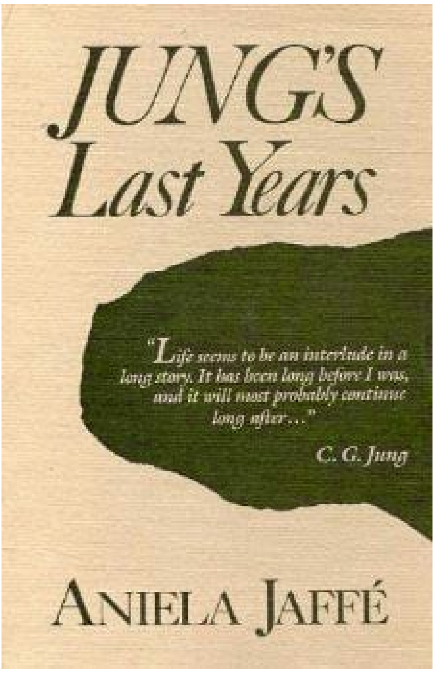
MAN AND HIS SYMBOLS
edited, with an introduction, by
CARL G. JUNG
Profusely illustrated
L A U R E L

[3]

[4]Buy at Amazon here

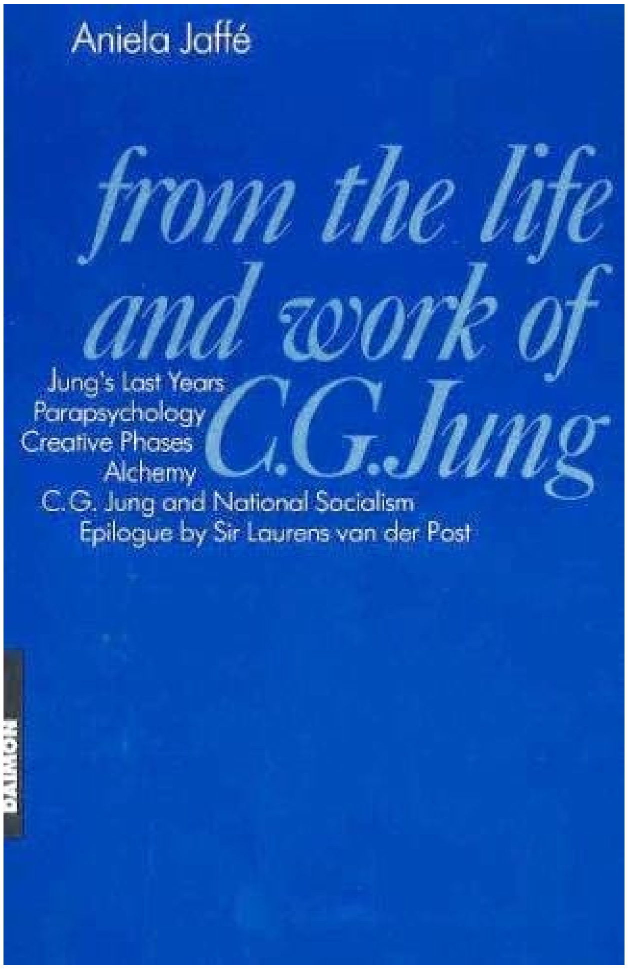


JUNG'S Last Years
"Life seems to be an interlude in a long story. It has been long before I was, and it will most probably continue long after..."
C. G. Jung
ANIELA JAFFÉ

[5]

[6]Buy at Amazon here

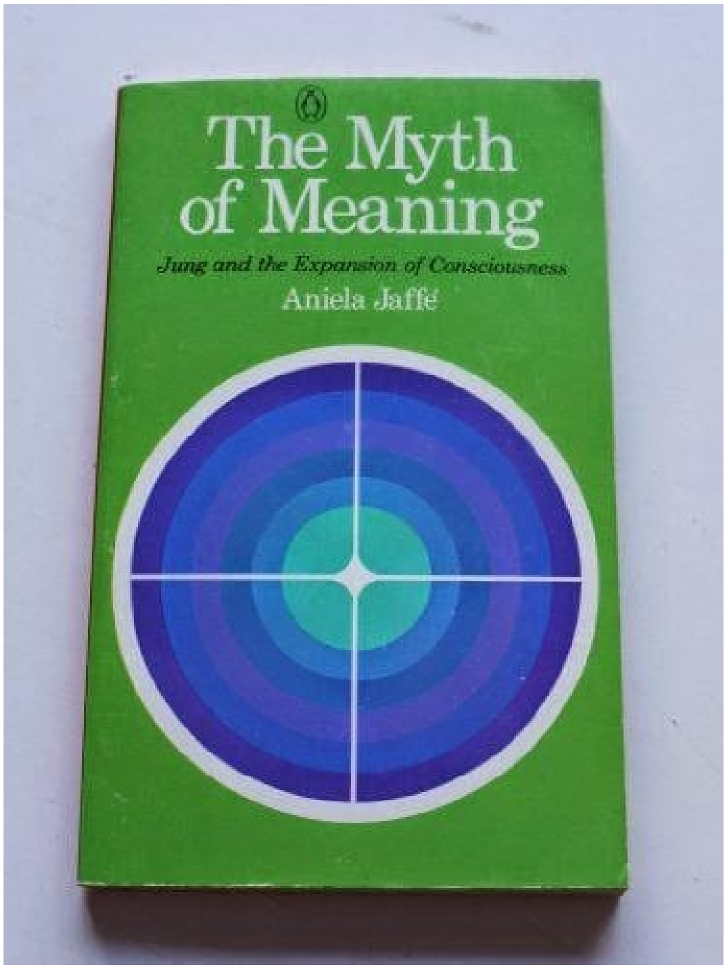
[7]



Aniela Jaffé
from the life and work of C.G.Jung
Jung's Last Years
Parapsychology
Creative Phases
Alchemy
C.G. Jung and National Socialism
Epilogue by Sir Laurens van der Post
DAIMON

[8]Buy at Amazon here

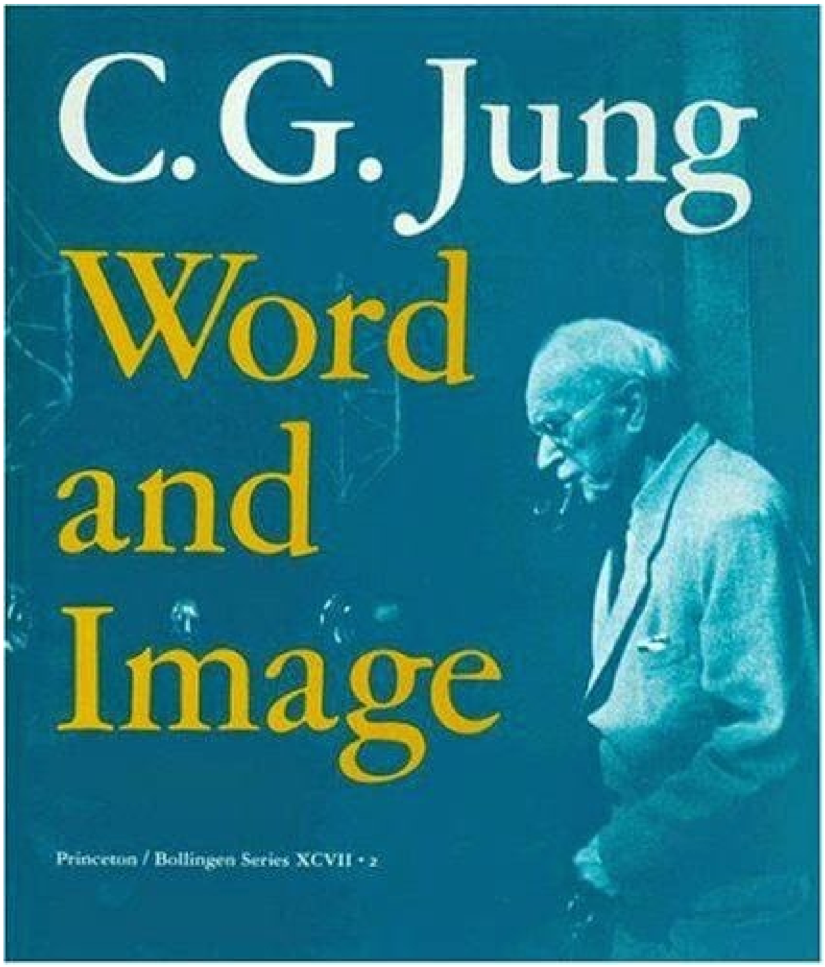
[9]



The Myth of Meaning
Jung and the Expansion of Consciousness
Aniela Jaffé

[10]Buy at Amazon here

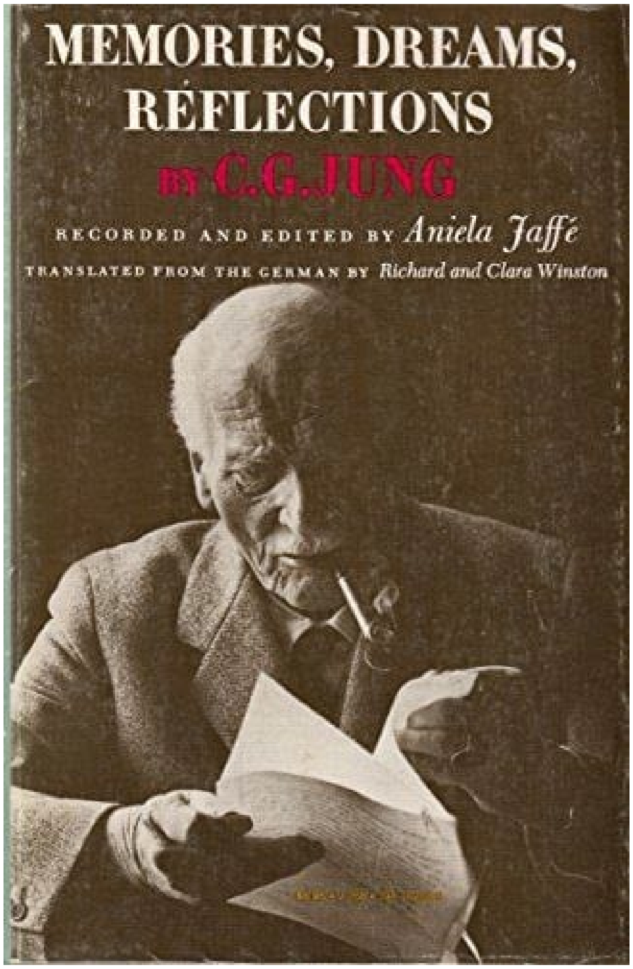
[11]



C.G. Jung
Word and Image
Princeton / Bollingen Series XCVII • 2

[12]Buy at Amazon here

[13]



MEMORIES, DREAMS, REFLECTIONS

BY C.G.JUNG

RECORDED AND EDITED BY Aniela Jaffé

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN BY Richard and Clara Winston

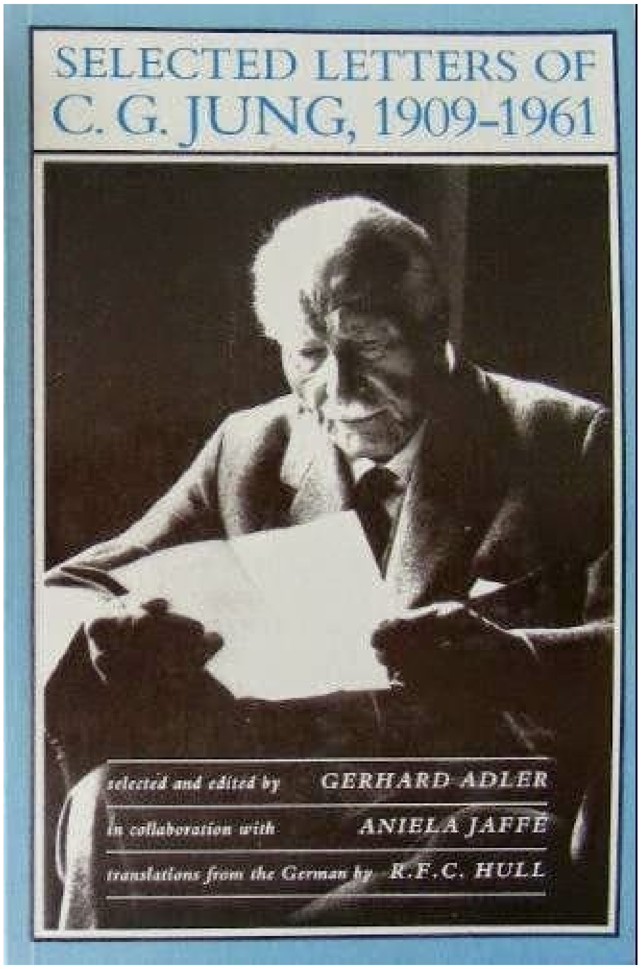
[14]Buy at Amazon here

[15]



SELECTED LETTERS OF
C. G. JUNG, 1909-1961
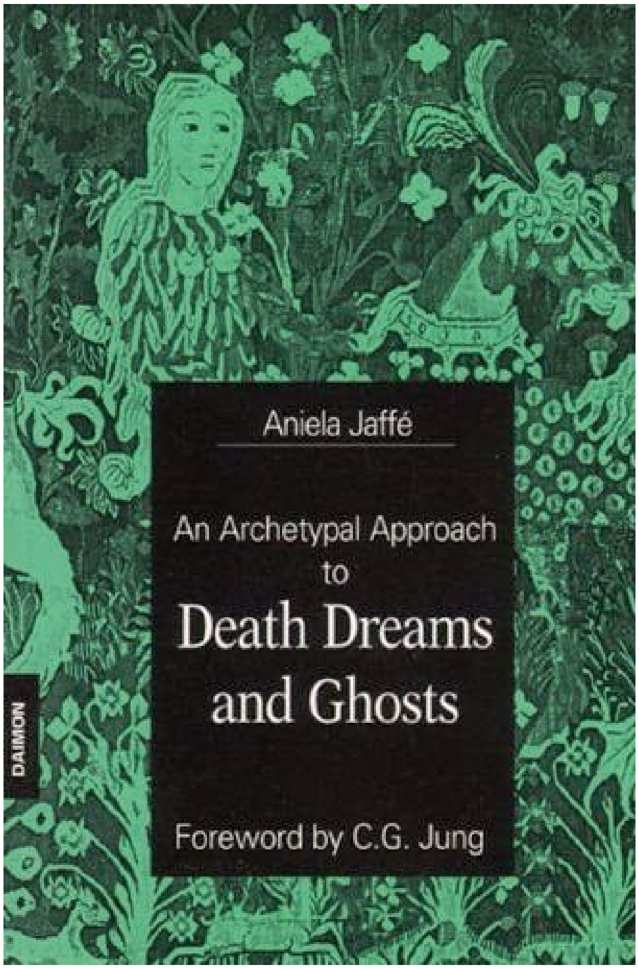
selected and edited by GERHARD ADLER in collaboration with ANIELA JAFFÉ translations from the German by R.F.C. HULL

[16]Buy at Amazon here

[17]



Aniela Jaffé
An Archetypal Approach to Death Dreams and Ghosts
Foreword by C.G. Jung
DAIMON

[18]Buy at Amazon here

[19] Memories,
Dreams,
Reflections Recorded and edited by
Aniela Jaffé
Translated from the German by Richard and Clara Winston
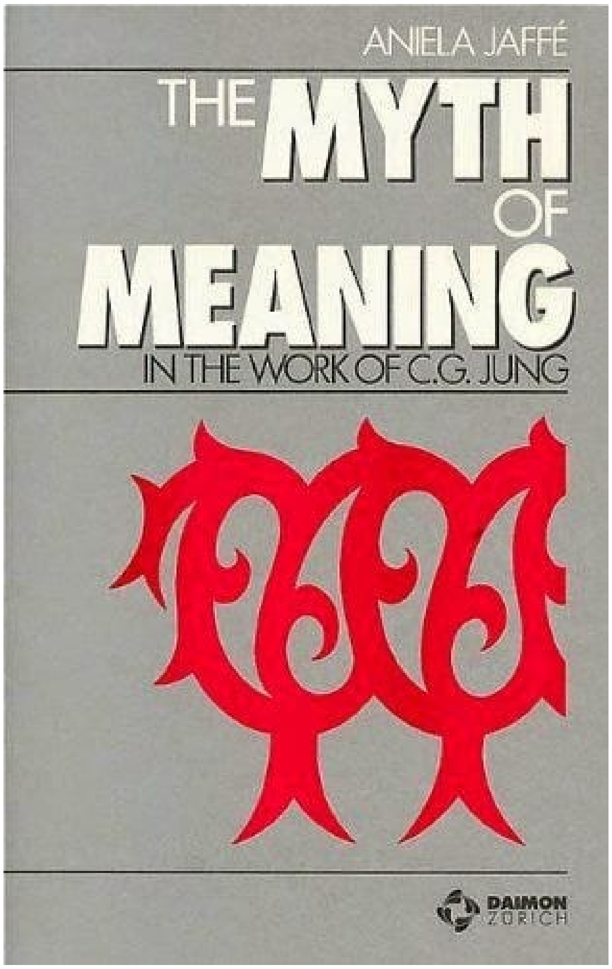
C. G. Jung

[20]Buy at Amazon here

[21]



ANIELA JAFFÉ
THE MYTH OF MEANING
IN THE WORK OF C.G. JUNG
DAIMON ZÜRICH

[22]Buy at Amazon here

[23] ANIELA JAFFÉ
WAS C.G. JUNG A MYSTIC?
AND OTHER ESSAYS
DAIMON

[24]Buy at Amazon here

[25]Books by Edward Edinger

[26]Books by Barbara Hannah

[27]Aniela Jaffe Books

[28]Karl Kerenyi Books

[29]Books by Erich Neumann

[30]Books by Sonu Shamdasani

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/49772-1j.jpg`
2. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0882145002/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_qoMxub1QSACJP`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/eb0e9-2j.jpg`
4. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0440351839/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_.nMxub08HBCN3`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/da20e-3j.jpg`
6. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0882145053/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_0nMxub04BFCKG`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/06eb1-4j.jpg`
8. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856305157/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_AnMxub0R6XNKN`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/20b6c-5j.jpg`

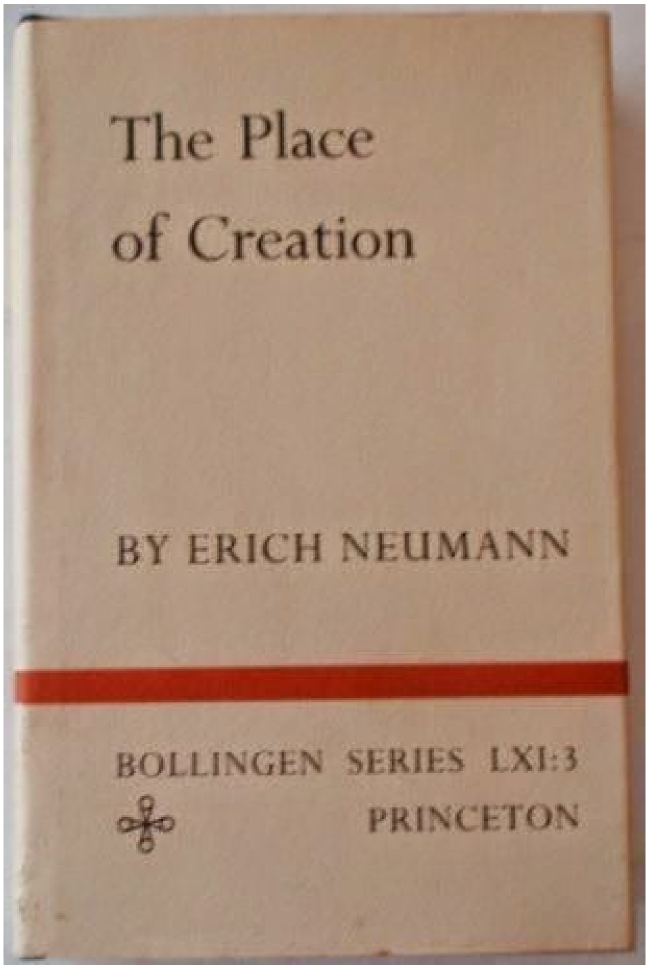
10. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0140039902/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_mnMxub0T7V07K
11. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b8776-6j.jpg
12. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691018472/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_.mMxub0YZCT9H
13. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/4d3d3-7j.jpg
14. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0394702689/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_rmMxub1JSA2AD
15. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/24168-8j.jpg
16. http://www.amazon.com/dp/069101860X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_UmMxub0DJGH20
17. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/597ae-9j.jpg
18. http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856305807/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_EmMxub0GP1KQZ
19. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/1c629-10j.jpg
20. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0394702689/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_rmMxub1JSA2AD
21. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/24480-11j.jpg
22. http://www.amazon.com/dp/069101860X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_UmMxub0DJGH20
23. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/e9a30-12j.jpg
24. http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856305807/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_EmMxub0GP1KQZ
25. http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-edward-edinger-jungian.html
26. http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-barbara-hannah_7.html
27. http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/aniela-jaffe-book.html
28. http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/karl-kerenyi-books-jungian.html
29. http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-erich-neumann-jungian.html
30. http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-sonu-shamdasani-jungian.html

---

Books by Erich Neumann [Jungian] (2019-11-08 04:13)

Books by Erich Neumann [Jungian]

[1]



[2]
Buy at Amazon here

[3]

Archetypal World
of Henry Moore
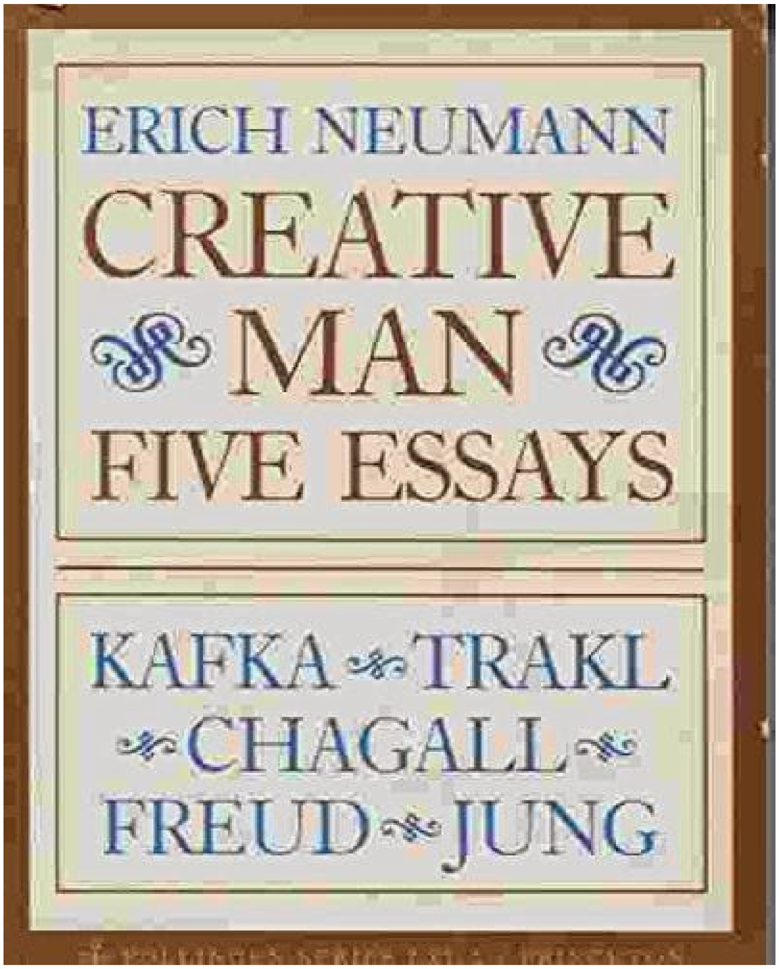
Pantheon

[4]Buy at Amazon here

[5]



ERICH NEUMANN
CREATIVE
MAN
FIVE ESSAYS
KAFKA
TRAKL
CHAGALL
FREUD
JUNG

[6]Buy at Amazon here

[7]
Copyrighted Material

The Fear of the Feminine and other essays on feminine psychology

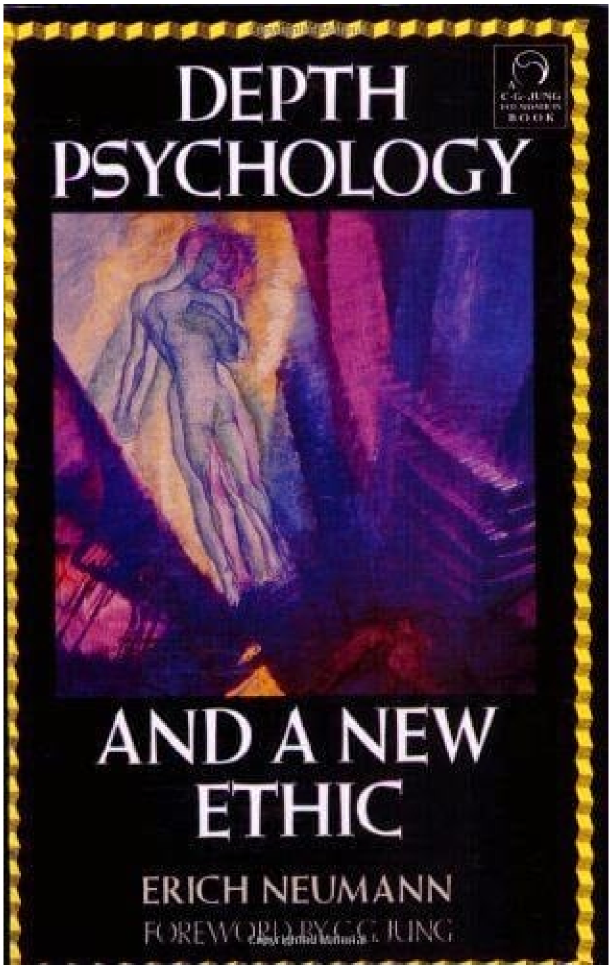
Erich Neumann

Copyrighted Material

[8]Buy at Amazon here

[9]



DEPTH
PSYCHOLOGY AND A NEW ETHIC
ERICH NEUMANN
FOREWORD BY C.G. JUNG
A C.G. JUNG FOUNDATION BOOK

[10]Buy at Amazon here

[11] Art and
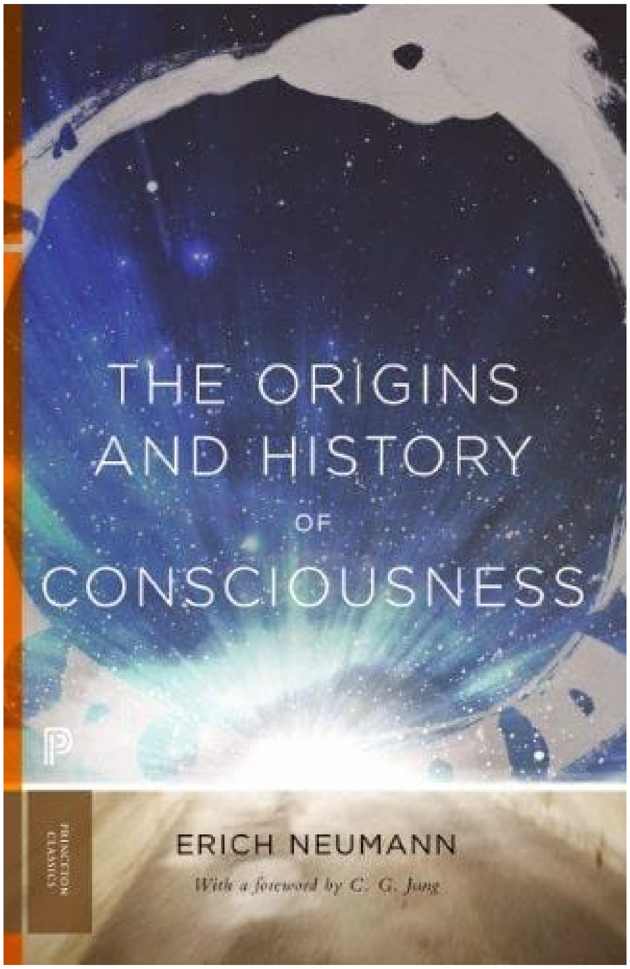
the Creative Unconscious
Erich Neumann
BOLLINGEN SERIES / PRINCETON

[12]Buy at Amazon here

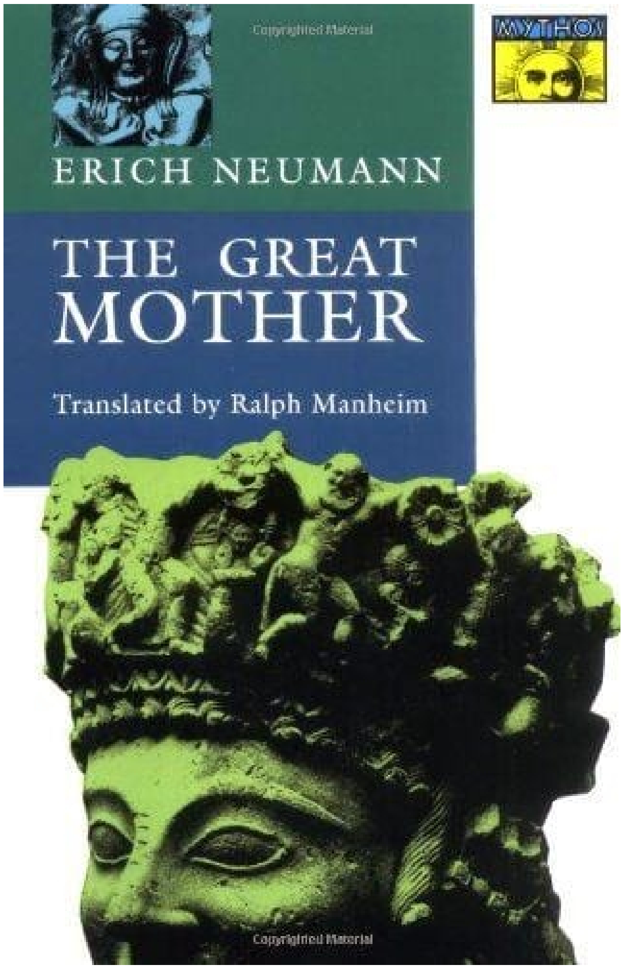
[13]



THE ORIGINS AND HISTORY OF CONSCIOUSNESS
ERICH NEUMANN
With a foreword by C. G. Jung
PRINCETON CLASSICS

[14]Buy at Amazon here

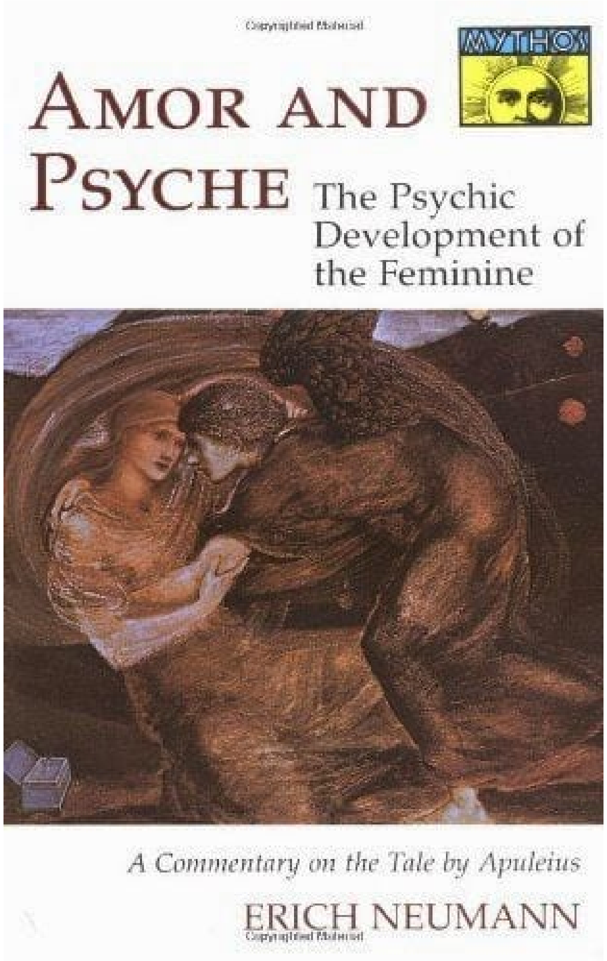
[15]



Copyrighted Material
MYTHOS
ERICH NEUMANN
THE GREAT MOTHER
Translated by Ralph Manheim
Copyrighted Material

[16]Buy at Amazon here

[17]



Copyrighted Material
MYTHOS
AMOR AND PSYCHE
The Psychic Development of the Feminine
A Commentary on the Tale by Apuleius
ERICH NEUMANN
Copyrighted Material

[18]Buy at Amazon here

[19]Erich Neumann on Pinterest

[20]
Books by Edward Edinger

[21]Books by Barbara Hannah

[22]Books by Erich Neumann

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/4f2a6-1e.jpg`
2. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691099650/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_KMOwub024CWY1`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/d0862-2e.jpg`
4. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/B000LQX9I8/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_qMOwub1Z988MH`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/0b596-3e.jpg`
6. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691018480/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_0LOwub108EHF0`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/43fd8-4e.jpg`
8. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691034737/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_ILOwub1NGH0JM`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/3f420-5e.jpg`
10. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0877735719/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_jLOwub1RDFE1G`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/fca5d-6e.jpg`
12. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691017735/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_SKOwub1D7W391`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/36628-7e.jpg`
14. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691163596/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_zKOwub0WNTJPY`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/2fdaa-8e.jpg`
16. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691017808/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_9A-vub1PEWTGY`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/920f5-9e.jpg`
18. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691017727/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_GA-vub1MK3R5N`
19. `http://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/erich-neumann-bookstore-jungian/`
20. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-edward-edinger-jungian.html`
21. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-barbara-hannah_7.html`
22. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-erich-neumann-jungian.html`

Carl Jung: To be "normal" is the ideal aim for the unsuccessful (2019-11-08 04:13)

[1]

To be "normal" is the ideal aim for the unsuccessful, for all those who are still below the general level of adaptation.

But for people of more than average ability, people who never found it difficult to gain successes and to accomplish their share of the world's work - for them the moral compulsion to be nothing but normal signifies the bed of Procrustes - deadly and insupportable boredom, a hell of sterility and hopelessness. Carl Jung,CW 16, Page 161

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/c49f1-normal.jpg`

Carl Jung and The afternoon of human life naturally forms part of the growth of human life.

(2019-11-08 04:18)

[1]

[Carl Jung and The afternoon of human life naturally forms part of the growth of human life.]

A human being would certainly not grow to be seventy or eighty years old if this longevity had no meaning for the species.

The afternoon of human life must also have a significance of its own and cannot be merely a pitiful appendage to life’s morning.

The significance of the morning undoubtedly lies in the development of the individual, our entrenchment in the outer world, the propagation of our kind, and the care of our children.

This is the obvious purpose of nature. But when this purpose has been attained - and more than attained - shall the earning of money, the extension of conquests, and the expansion of life go steadily on beyond the bounds of all reason and sense?

Whoever carries over into the afternoon the law of the morning, or the natural aim, must pay for it with damage to his soul, just as surely as a growing youth who tries to carry over his childish egoism into adult life must pay for this mistake with social failure. Carl Jung, "The Stages of Life" (1930). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P. 787

http://oaks.nvg.org/individuation.html

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/fc591-adult.jpg`

Karl Kerenyi Books [Jungian] (2019-11-08 04:22)

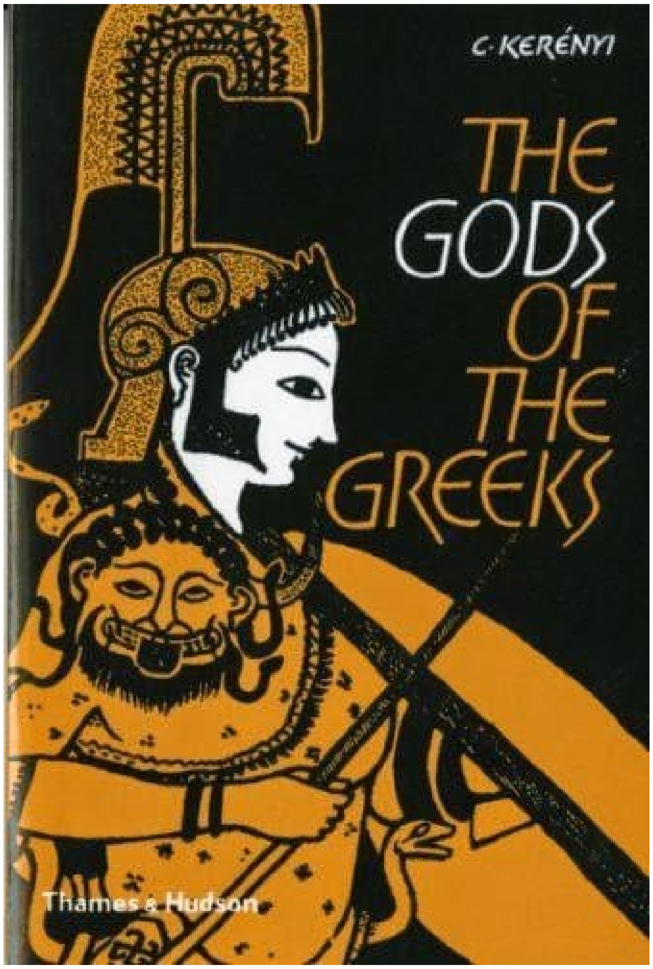
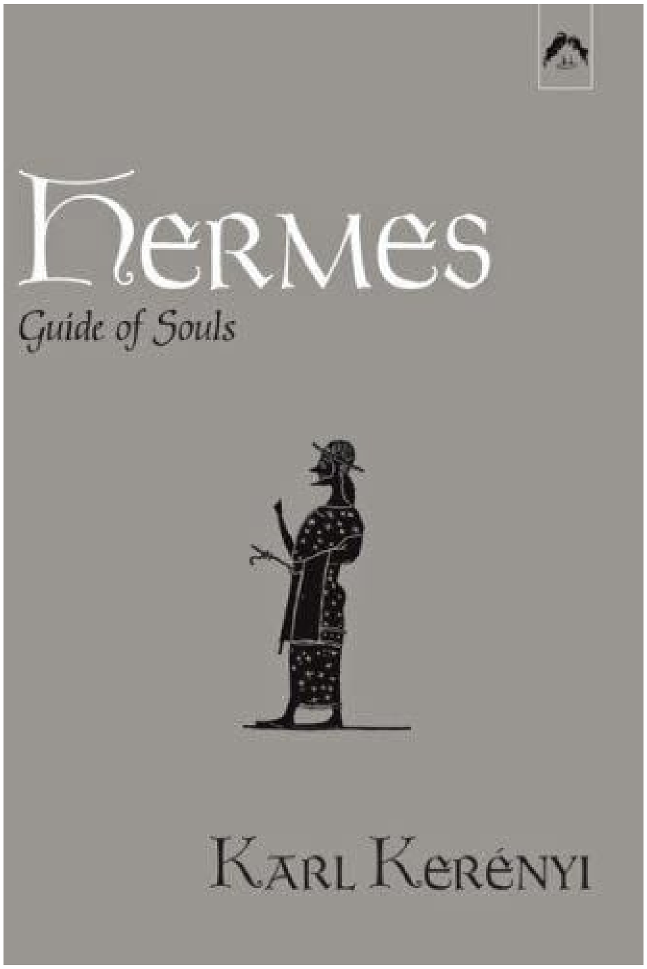
[1]



C·KERÉNYI
THE GODS OF THE GREEKS
Thames & Hudson

[2]Buy at Amazon here

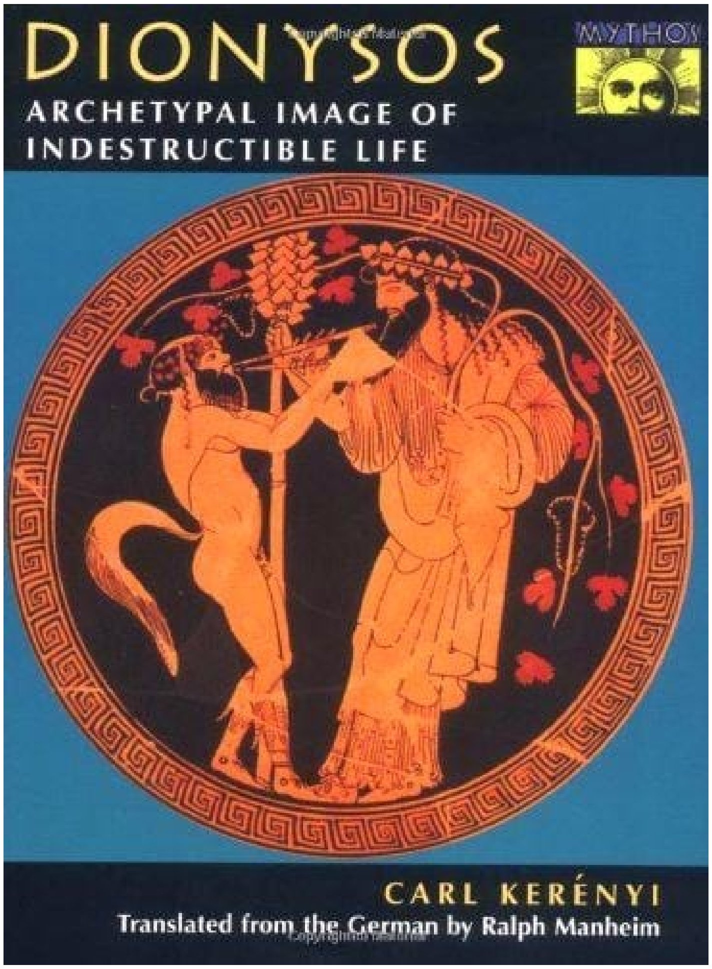
[3]



Hermes
Guide of Souls
Karl Kerényi

[4]Buy at Amazon here

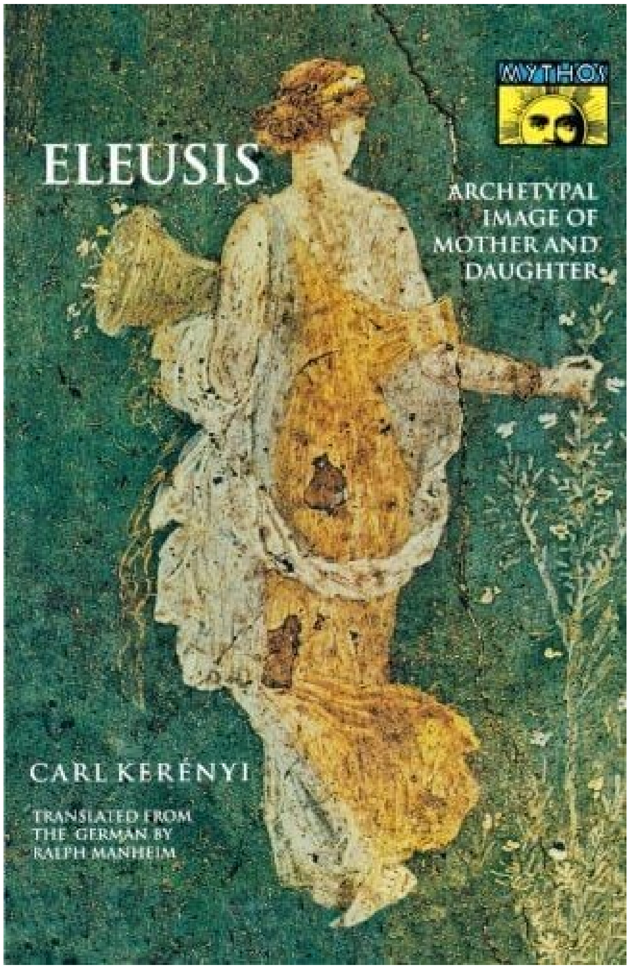
[5]



DIONYSOS
ARCHETYPAL IMAGE OF INDESTRUCTIBLE LIFE
MYTHOS
CARL KERÉNYI
Translated from the German by Ralph Manheim

[6]Buy at Amazon here

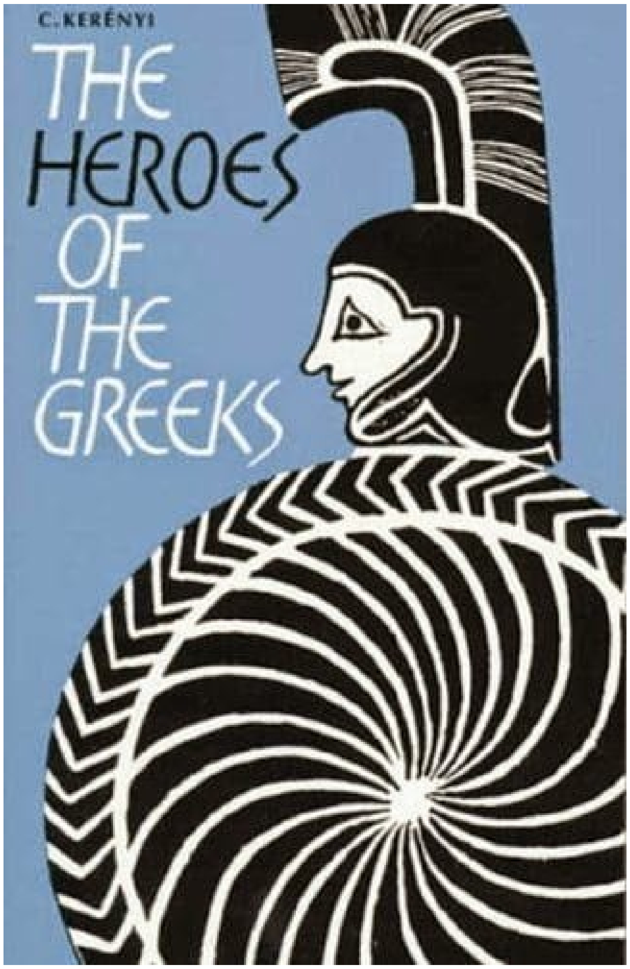
[7]



MYTHOS
ELEUSIS
ARCHETYPAL IMAGE OF MOTHER AND DAUGHTER
CARL KERÉNYI
TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN BY RALPH MANHEIM

[8]Buy at Amazon here

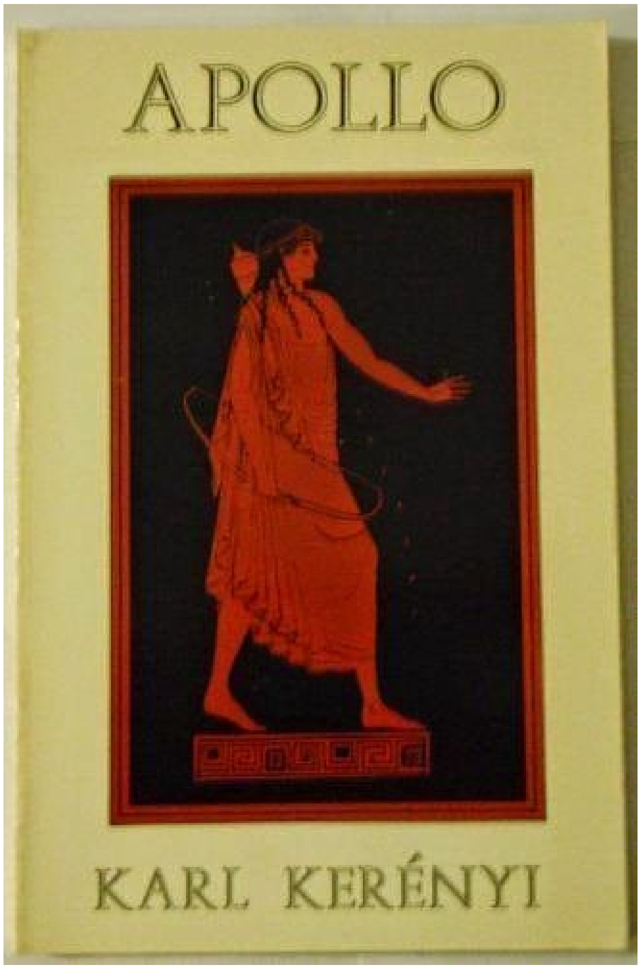
[9]



C. KERÉNYI
THE HEROES OF THE GREEKS

[10]Buy at Amazon here

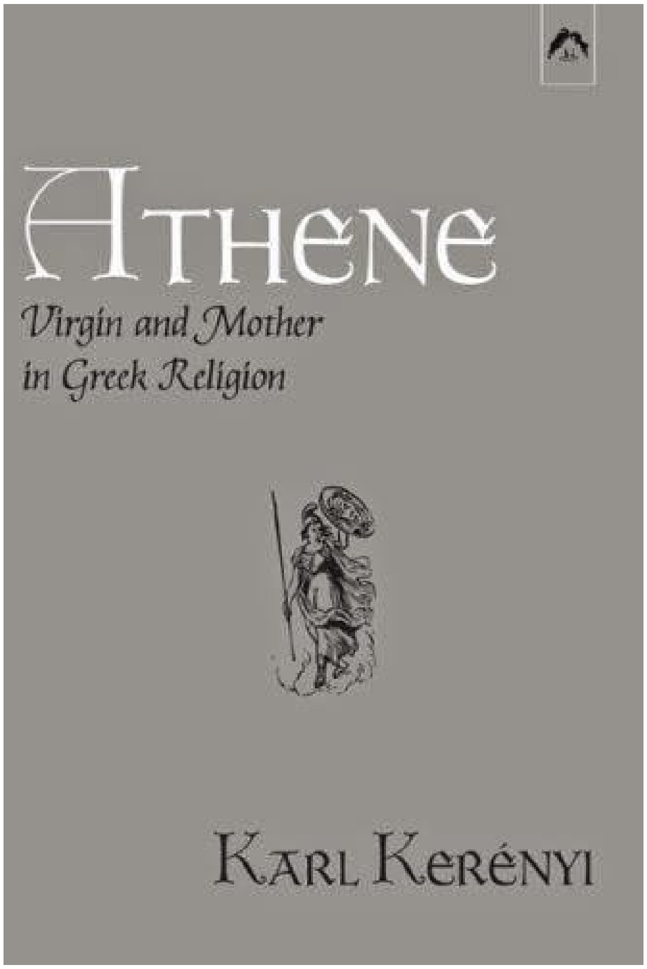
[11]



APOLLO
KARL KERÉNYI

[12]Buy at Amazon here

[13]



[14]Buy at Amazon here

[15]Karl Kerenyi Facebook Page

[16]Karl Kerenyi Books

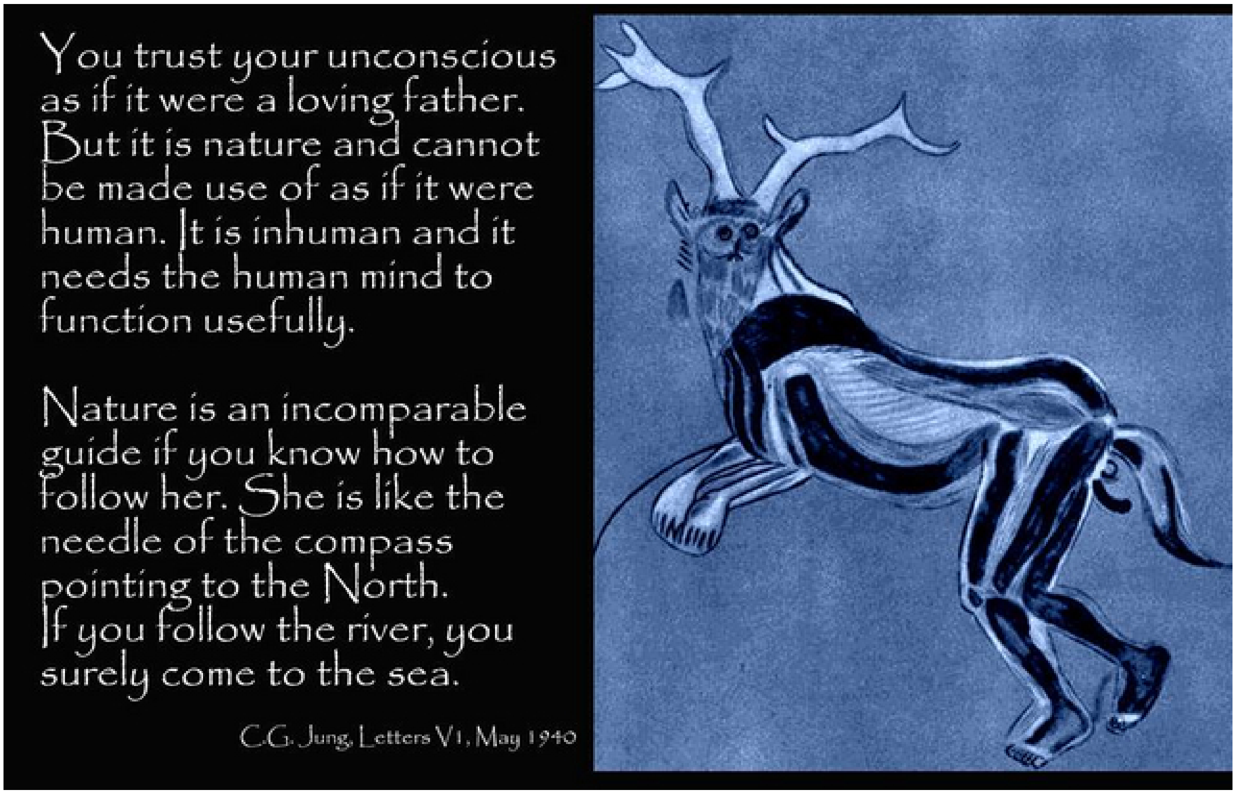
1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/446fb-1k.jpg`
2. `http:///`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/cd6a2-2k.jpg`
4. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0882142240/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Vv-vub1ZHYC9D`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/beae9-3k.jpg`
6. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691029156/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_8v-vub1SJHVT3`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/2a380-4k.jpg`
8. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691019150/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_hw-vub1AY4PQN`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/e3c5b-5k.jpg`
10. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/050027049X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Rw-vub06M3FYM`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/86200-6k.jpg`
12. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/088214216X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_.w-vub0V3KY1N`

13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/2c382-7k.jpg`
14. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0882142097/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Ew-vub1HJQVQQ`
15. `https://www.facebook.com/pages/Karl-Kerenyi/1484915891796424`
16. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/karl-kerenyi-books-jungian.html`

Carl Jung: Your destiny is the result of the collaboration between the conscious and the unconscious.

(2019-11-08 04:25)

[1]



You trust your unconscious as if it were a loving father. But it is nature and cannot be made use of as if it were human. It is inhuman and it needs the human mind to function usefully.

Nature is an incomparable guide if you know how to follow her. She is like the needle of the compass pointing to the North. If you follow the river, you surely come to the sea.

C.G. Jung, Letters V1, May 1940

Anonymous

Dear Mrs. N., 20 May 1940

This is just the kind of experience you needed.

You trust your unconscious as if it were a loving father. But it is nature and cannot be made use of as if it were a reliable human being.

It is inhuman and it needs the human mind to function usefully for man's purposes.

Nature is an incomparable guide if you know how to follow her.

She is like the needle of the compass pointing to the North, which is most useful when you have a good man-made ship and when you know how to navigate.

That's about the position.

If you follow the river, you surely come to the sea finally. But if you take it literally you soon get stuck in an impassable gorge and you complain of being misguided.

The unconscious is useless without the human mind.

It always seeks its collective purposes and never your individual destiny.

Your destiny is the result of the collaboration between the conscious and the unconscious.

I am actually in the mountains with my family and all the little grandchildren avoiding the dangers of Zurich.

We all hope and pray for a British victory over the Antichrist. Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Page 283.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http://www.blogger.com/home

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/12b4f-1letters2bsea.jpg`

Carl Jung: Try to touch things that remind you of your·reality. (2019-11-08 04:30)

[1]
REALITY
CHECK AHEAD

Anonymous

Dear Mrs. N., 22 May 1939

Regression into childhood is a very typical effect of a brain hemorrhage.

I can imagine that these impressions have a strong effect upon you.

The presence of a person dying (and under such conditions) has a definite effect upon one's unconscious.

Such an influence makes the world unreal and strengthens the unconscious so that it often forms a vortex in which one is sucked under.

Be careful that this does not happen to you!

Try to touch things that remind you of your·reality.

I also hope that my letter will be a cool draught from another world.

I think you always have the chance to run into stormy weather at sea.

With me the sea usually tries its best to imitate a mill-pond.

Mrs. X.'s great scheme of a world symbol collection is certainly a great adventure.

I confess my imagination cannot even grasp the scope of it, but we have heard of mountains in labour which eventually brought forth a mouse.

Thus we won't disturb her.

The idea itself is quite useful, but such a thing, if efficiently done, should be based on the collaboration of at least one hundred scholars.

The Jewish race problem is really a crucial question, so crucial that I wouldn't know how to tackle it.

It has so many aspects and every one of them leads to any amount of misunderstandings.

If we were living in a calm world where a reasonable discussion would be possible and where people would be sure that they were always dealing with gentlemen, one could risk a discussion, but the general atmosphere is poisoned and overheated to such an extent that every word sounds wrong.

It is an almost hopeless beginning to say something about the race problem.

I have actually reduced my work simply because I had to do it and I expect to reduce it still more in the future.

I had something like a little collapse the other day on account of overworking.

I feel quite all right now again, but I have to be careful.

When I'm less plagued with patients my spirit grows perhaps more adventurous and then I might have some ideas again, but for the time being I have not even ideas.

Hoping you are otherwise always in good health, I remain with best wishes,

Yours cordially,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 271-271

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

Great Sites to visit:

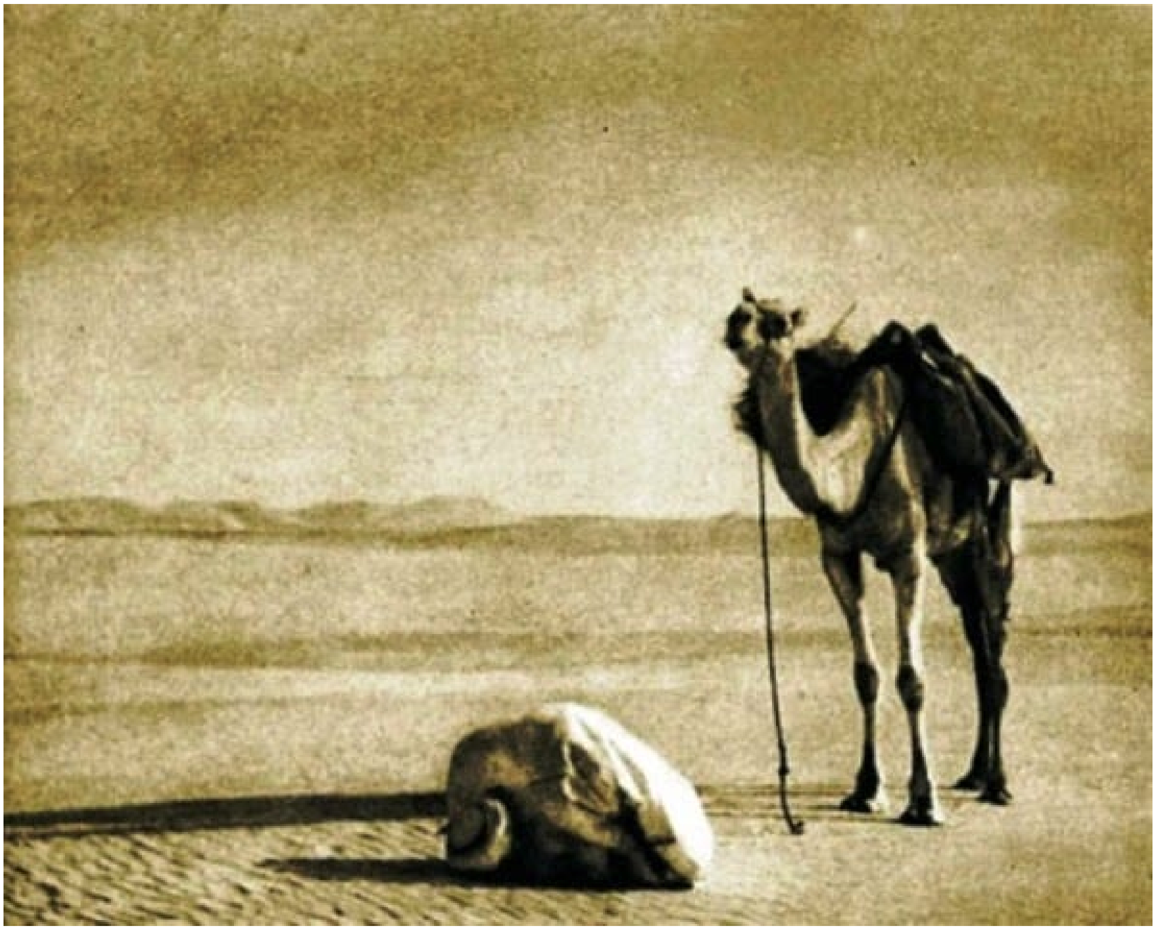
1. Jenna Lilla’s Path of the Soul http://jennalilla.org/
2. Steve Jung-Hearted Parker’s Jung Currents http://jungcurrents.com/
3. Frith Luton’s Jungian Dream Analysis and Psychotherapy: http://frithluton.com/articles/

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/e1457-12breality.jpg`

Carl Jung on Christianity, Buddhism and Islam (2019-11-08 04:32)

[1]



[Carl Jung on Christianity, Buddhism and Islam]

To Paul Maag

Dear Colleague, 20 June 1933

How subjective belief is you can see from the fact that I positively do not believe that Christianity is the only and the highest manifestation of the truth.

There is at least as much truth in Buddhism, and in other religions too.

If for instance I had to choose between the Greek Orthodox Church and Islam, I would opt for Islam.

If you brag about your belief, others brag about theirs.

Thus all discussion is only a religious war, but any real discussion remains impossible.

With collegial regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung Letters Volume 1, Page 127. [Excerpt]

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b522c-islam.jpg`

Memoirs of Tina Keller "Quotations" (2019-11-08 04:47)

I came to experience sex as an ecstasy and I just knew that this was a religious sacrament. Joy, including the body and its pleasure, became for me part of religion.- Tina Keller-Jenny, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 116

[1]Tina Keller Memoirs

Belonging to a materialistic age, I overvalue quantity. If my time is full, and I have an impression of achievement and even pressure, I get satisfaction. But inwardly I know that if I have plenty of leisure to satisfy my introverted side, my work is of better quality. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 155

I have never heard Jung present his views in a better way than on this occasion, and I believe the very sincere concern of the Quakers created this excellent atmosphere to which Dr. Jung responded. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 98.

Dr. Jung said, "Follow that which is alive in you and it will lead you to God, even if it seems to go in another direction." Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 152

This kind of group [Oxford Group] life is not good for me and I must avoid it. For a few days, when I felt so estranged from myself, insanity seemed threatening. Remembering Dr. Jung's teaching brought me back to normality. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 147

While in Geneva I also had the privilege of doing psychological work with Professor Charles Baudouin. He is well known for his book on Suggestion and Autosuggestion (1920) that is translated into many languages. Tina

Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 131

When I first heard C. G. Jung speak, there was an echo in me. He seemed to have discovered things I needed to hear although I could not have said why I was so fascinated. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 134

It becomes clear that just following nature does not lead to what humans are meant to become. There is in humans an urge to think, to put in order, an urge to create. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 136

But the so-called "inferior function" seems not to be available unless the person goes through a crisis. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 170

I had put Mary on a pedestal, and she had now proved to me that she was human with human weaknesses. Dr. Jung had said that it was the worst one could do to a person to place her on a pedestal! Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 176

In the course of the years I realize that only such crucial pain can bring fundamental transformation. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 176

I went to Zurich to see Toni Wolff who as always was willing to help. But the sessions with her were empty; her words did not reach me and my grief was beyond words. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 178

As I left Toni Wolff after the last of those fruitless interviews, she intuitively mentioned "the great Mother." "You seem to have come to the problem of the 'great Mother,"' she said... Yet once again her intuition had led her in the right direction. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 179

When anger came it was like a cleansing wind. There was nothing to regret or restore. I had to realize that I had done my best. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 185

It was also through Dr. Jung's attitude that I was now able to accept my feelings of anger without self criticism. Out of the anger grew a healthy resolution to prove myself by doing good work. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para186

I had to experience that even the best intentions of Toni Wolff could not reach me. Only so was I open to the Earthmother's healing. You may say the Earthmother is an imagination, and yet it was a very real experience. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para187

Results of psychotherapy are often quite unpredictable. Each person is different and so is the effect of the interaction of an individual with a therapist. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 124

Dr. Jung had shown me that it was quite useless to reason or puzzle about "God" with the intellect. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para186

Toni Wolff was Jung's close collaborator. She was certainly part of that process of search and discovery, when everything seemed still fluid and formulations were tentatively being sought. Wherever the Jungs were, Toni Wolff was there also. She participated with her whole being during her whole life in Jung's world. Tina Keller, The Memoir of Tina Keller-Jenny, Page 28.

Like Dr. Bircher I had been disappointed with official medicine. Much time was spent in establishing a diagnosis, but then treatment consisted mostly in alleviating symptoms. When a destructive process had once set in, official medicine has no means to reverse the process. Sometimes fundamentally changing a person's nutrition and habits, Dr. Bircher was able to help a chronic invalid regain real health. When an incurable illness had set in, the way the patient was accompanied on his way towards death was also impressive, for then psychotherapy was given priority, and again special nutrition was sometimes able to reduce pain and discomfort. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 117

In former centuries many marriage partners lived in such associations where each person was part of a functioning whole. Personal relationship was much less important than the functioning whole which was kept stable, as each adapted to a common goal. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 171

I tried to help my patients find themselves and open to the growth process. More and more I tried to eliminate the patterns of the doctor-patient relationship. The work must be a collaboration, and in the measure that I came closer to wholeness myself, I was also better able to put responsibility onto the patient. I want to consider my work more like the work of a gardener, and I am concerned with finding the best conditions for growth. The human being is a living growing whole, wherein all parts and functions are related. A diagnosis cannot be clearly established. If we can provide good conditions for growth, malfunctioning will gradually correct itself. A child at birth has many possibilities, and of these only a selected part is allowed to develop according to the parents' mentality and culture. In our changing world many undeveloped urges cause trouble because they need to be developed also and used. I would in my therapy room provide an atmosphere as if it were a playroom where "the child" in an adult may again be a child for a while and experience and thus develop unused faculties. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 126

I am gradually learning, on my way of becoming, that there is a definite core of self and that I have outgrown my inner divisions. There is now a central goal, in which I feel my conscious and unconscious wills are united. I am noticing how often living is easy, as if everything was collaborating, for instance the opposites of acting and non-doing. Also quite often, outer circumstances seem to come surprisingly as needed. I am often astonished how things fall into place without my doing. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 139

Unless we feel ourselves to be part of an organic whole, our concern for individual development has a tendency to become self-centered. We need both a feeling of solidarity as well as the feeling of self-value. They must complement each other. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 140

Belonging to a materialistic age, I overvalue quantity. If my time is full, and I have an impression of achievement and even pressure, I get satisfaction. But inwardly I know that if I have plenty of leisure to satisfy my introverted side, my work is of better quality. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 155

I have never heard Jung present his views in a better way than on this occasion, and I believe the very sincere concern of the Quakers created this excellent atmosphere to which Dr. Jung responded. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 98.

Dr. Jung said, "Follow that which is alive in you and it will lead you to God, even if it seems to go in another direction." Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 152

This kind of group [Oxford Group] life is not good for me and I must avoid it. For a few days, when I felt so estranged from myself, insanity seemed threatening. Remembering Dr. Jung's teaching brought me back to normality. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 147

While in Geneva I also had the privilege of doing psychological work with Professor Charles Baudouin. He is well known for his book on Suggestion and Autosuggestion (1920) that is translated into many languages. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 131

When I first heard C. G. Jung speak, there was an echo in me. He seemed to have discovered things I needed to hear although I could not have said why I was so fascinated. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 134

It becomes clear that just following nature does not lead to what humans are meant to become. There is in humans an urge to think, to put in order, an urge to create. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 136

But the so-called "inferior function" seems not to be available unless the person goes through a crisis. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 170

I had put Mary on a pedestal, and she had now proved to me that she was human with human weaknesses. Dr. Jung had said that it was the worst one could do to a person to place her on a pedestal! Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 176

In the course of the years I realize that only such crucial pain can bring fundamental transformation. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 176

I went to Zurich to see Toni Wolff who as always was willing to help. But the sessions with her were empty; her words did not reach me and my grief was beyond words. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 178

As I left Toni Wolff after the last of those fruitless interviews, she intuitively mentioned "the great Mother." "You seem to have come to the problem of the 'great Mother,"' she said... Yet once again her intuition had led her in the right direction. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 179

When anger came it was like a cleansing wind. There was nothing to regret or restore. I had to realize that I had done my best. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 185

It was also through Dr. Jung's attitude that I was now able to accept my feelings of anger without self criticism. Out of the anger grew a healthy resolution to prove myself by doing good work. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para186

I had to experience that even the best intentions of Toni Wolff could not reach me. Only so was I open to the Earthmother's healing. You may say the Earthmother is an imagination, and yet it was a very real experience. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 187

Results of psychotherapy are often quite unpredictable. Each person is different and so is the effect of the interaction of an individual with a therapist. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 124

Dr. Jung had shown me that it was quite useless to reason or puzzle about "God" with the intellect. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 186

Many years ago Dr. Jung loaned me The Betty Book by Stewart Edward White. This book and the series of books following it have meant very much to me, and I keep rereading them. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 220

It seems to me now that only as I learned to live in my body did the psychological development also become real and alive. All I had intellectually understood had to be assimilated as I learned to live in my body. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 224

As I am trying to show, body awareness can bring great enrichment to life and could be an enormous help toward fuller life experience for many modern persons who are inclined toward a one-sided intellectualism. Tina

Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 232

I believe Dr. Jung was not really interested in that Institute. Some of the collaborators, however, were very anxious that there be a foundation carrying Dr. Jung's name as a protection of their professional status. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 189

So one finds amongst people who believe that they are unselfish and altruistic, unconscious cruelty and tyranny. I have seen cases where well meaning persons seem to become a real danger for those at their mercy. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 264

I became more and more aware that I needed to develop the strong and hard qualities. Also I must become able to think clearly and realistically, to decide and be precise and not vague in what I say. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 265

The work I did with Toni Wolff however stands apart, and the basic attitude of Dr. Jung made possible all that became helpful. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 265

As for sixteen years I had been the only Jungian psychotherapist in Geneva, and as Dr. Jung had often sent patients to me, I naturally asked him to recommend me to the Jung Institute in Zurich, as analyst. Mrs. Jung1 and Dr. Meier, 2 who were on the board, had assured me that of course I would collaborate. But Dr. Jung refused to recommend me. He wrote a letter saying that he was now old and did not wish to interfere in matters of the Institute. I believe Dr. Jung was not really interested in that Institute. Some of the collaborators, however, were very anxious that there be a foundation carrying Dr. Jung's name as a protection of their professional status. I heard indirectly that there was much rivalry and discord among the members of the directing board, and probably Dr. Jung did me a service in thus hindering me from collaboration. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 189

I have elsewhere spoken of my husband and of his good balance between body awareness and mental gifts. I had to gradually acquire what he had naturally and I would insist that it can be acquired, but it is a long and slow apprenticeship. When I stress that I followed my imagination, I want to say that there is no fixed recipe. Each person must find time to really concentrate on his body needs and let go to enjoy lying on his back and just watching the breath come and go; to have the courage to be alone and inactive, if possible in nature, or somewhere you are comfortable and undisturbed. Let your imagination find some pleasurable memory where you felt you were authentically you, perhaps as a child, perhaps on a special vacation when alone, and recapture the atmosphere of such a special time. Enjoy it, come back to it another time, until you begin to feel what is authentically you.

From there you may find what your real needs are and how often you do things you do not really want to do. It is most important that we come back to the atmosphere small children sometimes still have and that real artists are trying to recapture and transmit. We need another attitude to life where we are part of it, enjoy it, and let life carry us along instinctively, sensitive to inner promptings. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 234

It was my destiny to meet Dr. Jung. Nothing can change the fact that I needed this enormous challenge in order to become the person I was meant to become. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 269

I think Dr. Jung gave me courage to accept risk and also to welcome the unknown. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 269

Dr. Jung was against my studies; he was holding back my impulsive drive, but I had to follow the inner guidance, even against Dr. Jung. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 269

Although Jung's psychology freed me from many outworn, traditional conceptions, all that was most important in my life I recognize as being "beyond" psychology. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 275

I am afraid many of the young persons who are now allowed to follow their inclinations too freely, lack the strength of will to overcome obstacles when a goal really attracts them. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 277

I remembered how Jung had told me of his own beginnings, how he had listened very carefully to his patients and tried to make them find their own answers that arose from their own authentic depth. I am quite convinced that listening to the client is essential and it takes years of practice to improve such listening. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 283

Then Dr. Jung told me an experience of his own as an example. He was swimming in the lake; he was a very good swimmer. That time he was seized by a cramp and as he could not move his arms; it seemed as if he must drown. Suddenly he knew that the cramp was showing him that he was doing violence to himself in an area where evidently life wanted his acceptance. The moment he promised himself to let go of the self-discipline he was imposing upon himself, the cramp subsided and he could swim again. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 153

A very meditative movement my teacher taught me was what she called "inner swinging." It could be in silence or with some rather slow music. I should do nothing but be receptive, feeling an inner rhythmic movement, as if I were a plant being moved by a gentle breeze. If it succeeds, it brings a real inner calm and is most satisfying. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 243

Seeing the pairs of opposites as relative and not as moral absolutes was a revelation. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 266

I have described before how Dr. Jung taught me to write "from the unconscious" and how this training became through the years a guiding compass which I could no more miss. I therefore owe to his teaching very efficient techniques for dealing with my difficulties. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 266

When some of his patients were in such an insoluble conflict, Dr. Jung as their doctor did not pretend to have an answer, he merely waited with the patient to see what would happen spontaneously. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 268

In those early days, when one arrived for the analytic hour, the so-called "red book" often stood open on an easel.3 In it Dr. Jung had been painting or had just finished a picture.

I remember Dr. Jung telling me: "Follow that which is alive in you." Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 22

Dr. Jung wrote in his "black and red books" during emotional upheavals and during the period of discovery described his "visions" and then wrote dialogues and commentaries. I developed daily "dialogues." Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 24

For several months Mrs. Jung and I together took lessons in physics; she also had come to feel the need for more education. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 26

He [Jung] was in favor of "lay" analysts and there were at the time a number of therapists who had no academic training. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 26

I am deeply shocked that her [Toni Wolff] name and intimate participation is not mentioned in the autobiography of Jung. It is my conviction today that he, as well as Toni and Jung's wife, Emma, would wish that Toni be included when Jung's lifework is remembered. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 28

Very early in life I felt intuitively an "invisible world" around me and I imagined I belonged to it. I tried to take refuge in this imagination when I was uncomfortable in the so-called reality. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 114

As I was a fear-ridden child, I knew that I needed help from some suprahuman power, as I could not overcome fear by my own strength. I had a governess who would pray with me when I was so afraid at night; I could feel how real religion was to her. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 114

I was about 18 when my father wanted my younger sister to go to an excellent college for girls in England. So I asked him to let me go also, to which he agreed. In spite of having sustained financial losses, he felt education was the best capital he could give to his children. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 114

I had no doubt that this was the "right" man God had sent to me and this conviction lasted through all the 51 years of marriage and beyond. Even when marriage presented many difficulties and even when I was unhappy, I still knew that this was the "right" man for me. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 116

I was incredibly happy when my husband led me out of the narrow restrictions of my home into a life with wide horizons. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 116

My husband came from a peasant family. They had known poverty, but they radiated contentment and happiness as I had not known in my home. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Para 116

How glad I was that my husband did not belong to the sophisticated society like the young men I had met at dances! My husband was dose to nature; everything was natural including the way he led me into sexuality. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Para 116

I who had grown up in a Victorian home whose mother felt sex to be a "duty" and who repressed all expressions of exuberance. I came to experience sex as an "ecstasy" and I just "knew" that this was a religious sacrament. Joy, including the body and its pleasure, became for me part of religion. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Para 116

I saw the artist in my husband. He was very musical and when he played the piano he spoke to my heart. This meant more than any words. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Para 117

On the other hand, I was also repelled, because Dr. Jung could be so sarcastic. He made fun of people in an unfeeling way. He was not the kind of man I was attracted to. But perhaps only a man who did not wish to be labeled "good" could explore the dark unknown? A "good" man, like my husband, would keep to the light side of life. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 16

My husband was attracted to Jung's ideas; he never doubted that he belonged with the Jungian movement. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 16

It was only later that people realized how the disappearance of symptoms is not identical with healing. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 16

It is the incredible mastery with which Toni helped me deal with this powerful figure of imagination that makes me say that she did for me what Dr. Jung could never have done. Dr. Jung agreed when I told him and said that it was the privilege of woman to go with her patients into their dark places, and that man had the tendency to stand aloof. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 28

I know that Dr. Jung tried to separate from Toni because he felt responsible. He did not want to involve her in a situation that would hinder her from living her own life. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 29

I have of course regretted that as Dr. Jung more and more concentrated on formulating the scientific books he wrote, he discontinued his "active imagination" and I also wish that some of that material contained in the "black book" could be accessible to certain readers. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 30

In the tower Dr. Jung tried to leave civilization behind. He wore clothes he had used in Africa; he worked with his hands and lived in a special atmosphere which is described in his autobiography. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 31

Message One morning as I awoke there was an incredible joy in me because the message "you are children of God" had taken on full reality. This truth transformed everything. It means that there is in me and in others a divine heredity. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 133

My reason is offended at the very idea of the combination of opposites. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 133

In many ways I was superficial, but that also helped me achieve, not hesitate before big tasks. I needed this superficiality for my studies where otherwise I would have gotten too discouraged. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 134

I had a most enriching contact with a Quaker group that asked me to speak to them about Jungian psychology. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 135

The radiant message about being "children of God" transcends psychology. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 135

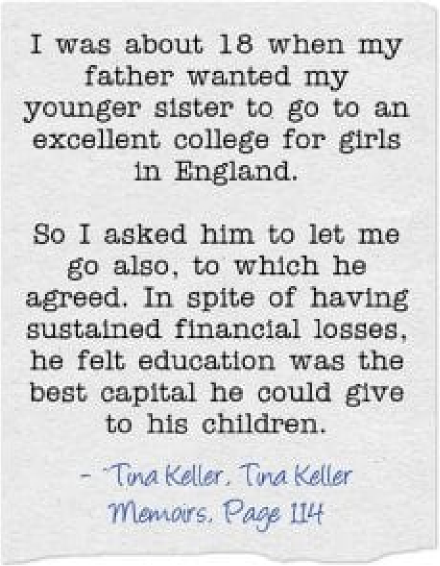
He [Jung] had shown me the reality of the inner life and it is thanks to C. G. Jung’s teaching that my association with "Leonard" [Tina’s Animus] has been an enrichment, not a disturbance. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 135

I object to the way churches insist on our being miserable sinners. It discourages people and brings resignation. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 135

I know evil is a reality, but it is also a mystery and in the teaching about sin, there are many misunderstandings. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 135

For my part, I can only say that when I hear and feel the radiant message about being children of God, I am awed and have a great desire to be worthy. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 135

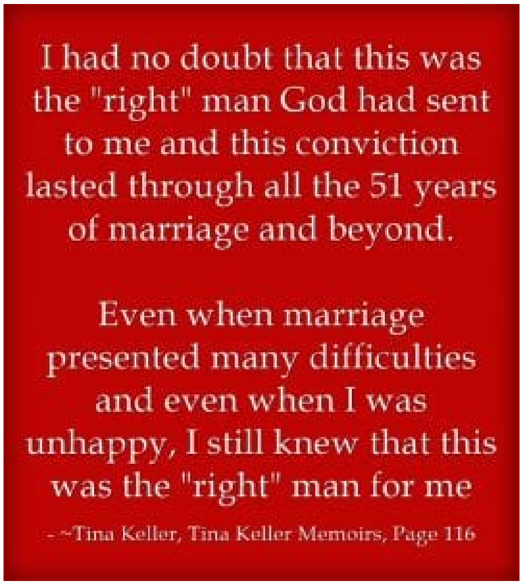
There were all the mistakes I had committed and I was regretful or angry about. Gradually I learnt, that there is nothing to regret, ignorance and errors made new learning possible. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 138.



I was about 18 when my father wanted my younger sister to go to an excellent college for girls in England.

So I asked him to let me go also, to which he agreed. In spite of having sustained financial losses, he felt education was the best capital he could give to his children.

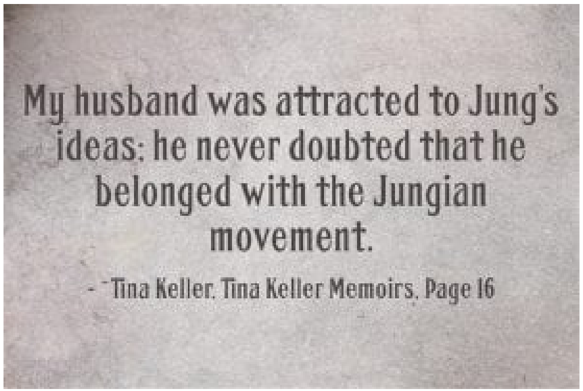
- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 114



I had no doubt that this was the "right" man God had sent to me and this conviction lasted through all the 51 years of marriage and beyond.

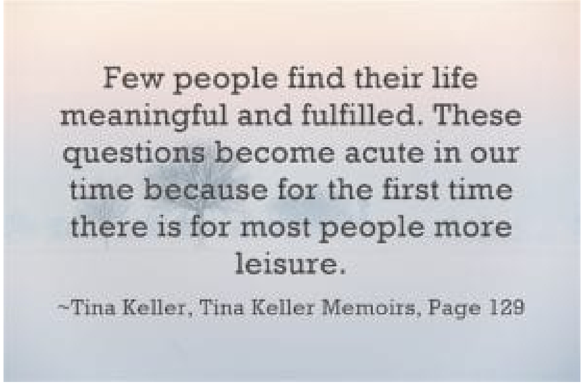
Even when marriage presented many difficulties and even when I was unhappy, I still knew that this was the "right" man for me

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 116



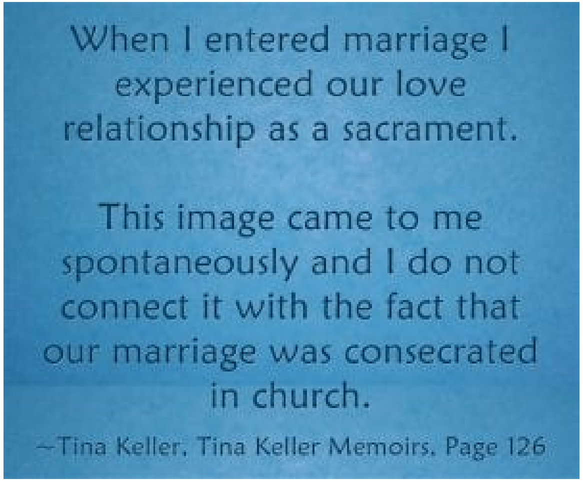
My husband was attracted to Jung's ideas: he never doubted that he belonged with the Jungian movement.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 16



Few people find their life meaningful and fulfilled. These questions become acute in our time because for the first time there is for most people more leisure.

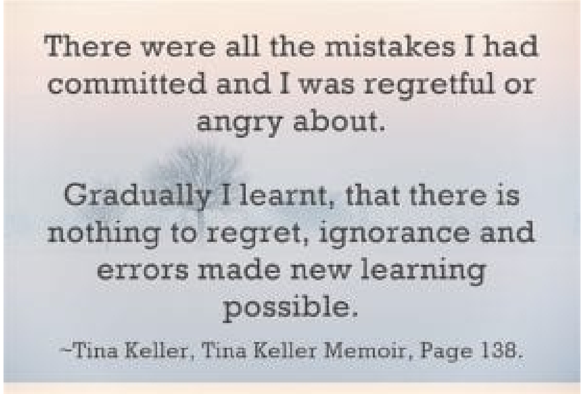
~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 129



When I entered marriage I experienced our love relationship as a sacrament.

This image came to me spontaneously and I do not connect it with the fact that our marriage was consecrated in church.

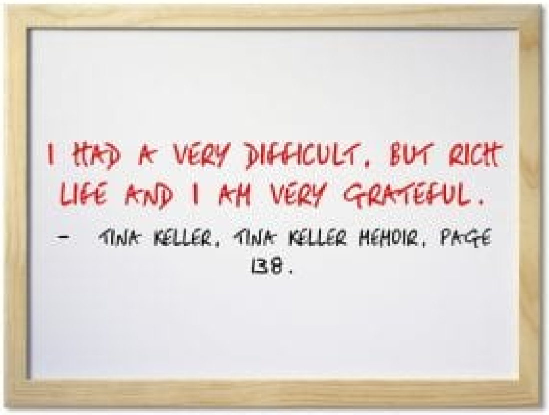
~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 126



There were all the mistakes I had committed and I was regretful or angry about.

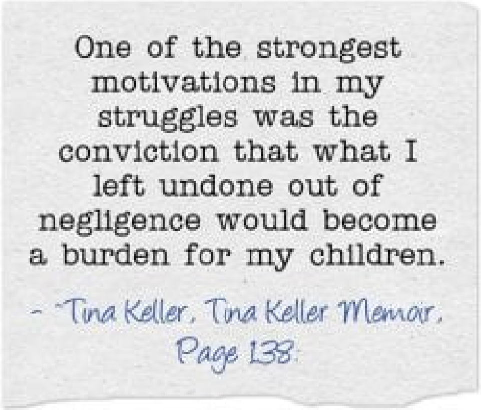
Gradually I learnt, that there is nothing to regret, ignorance and errors made new learning possible.

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 138.



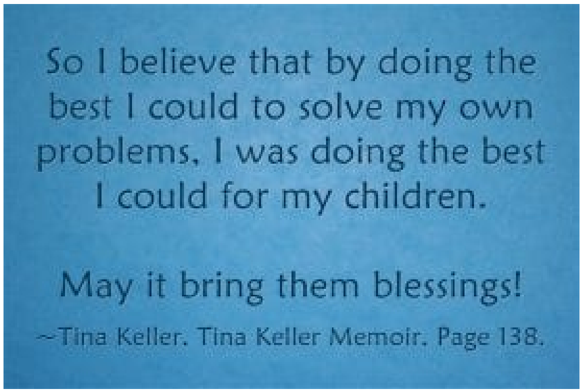
I HAD A VERY DIFFICULT, BUT RICH LIFE AND I AM VERY GRATEFUL.

– TINA KELLER, TINA KELLER MEMOIR, PAGE 138.



One of the strongest motivations in my struggles was the conviction that what I left undone out of negligence would become a burden for my children.

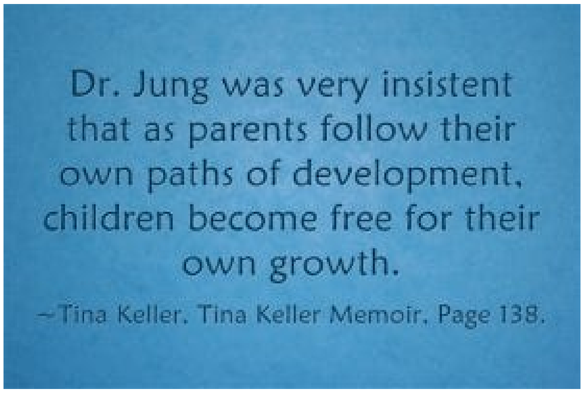
- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 138.



So I believe that by doing the best I could to solve my own problems, I was doing the best I could for my children.

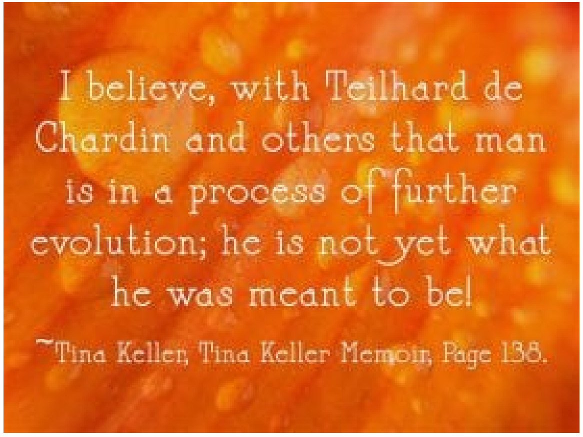
May it bring them blessings!

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 138.



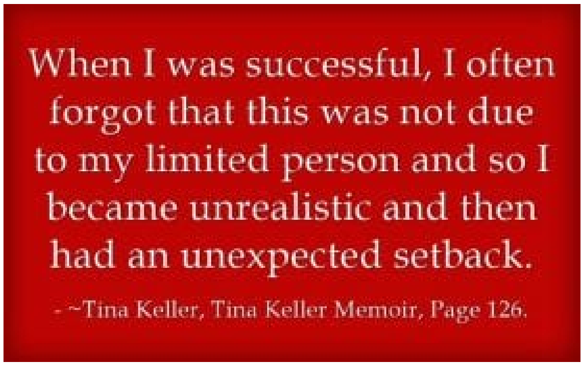
Dr. Jung was very insistent that as parents follow their own paths of development, children become free for their own growth.

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 138.



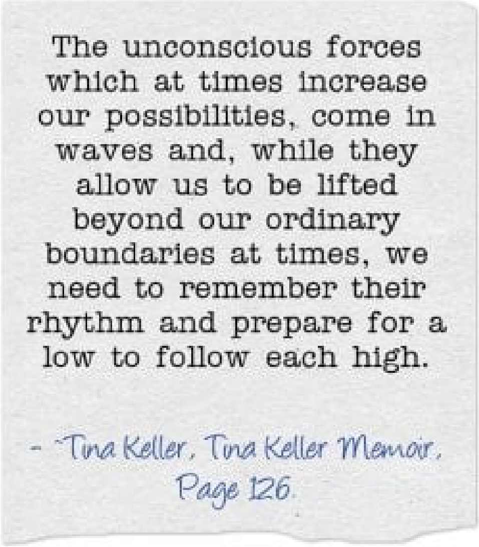
I believe, with Teilhard de Chardin and others that man is in a process of further evolution; he is not yet what he was meant to be!

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 138.



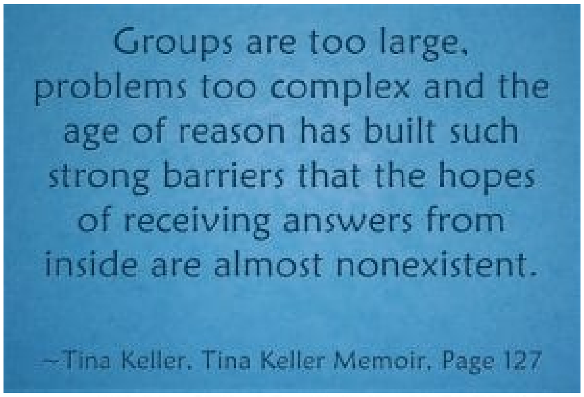
When I was successful, I often forgot that this was not due to my limited person and so I became unrealistic and then had an unexpected setback.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 126.



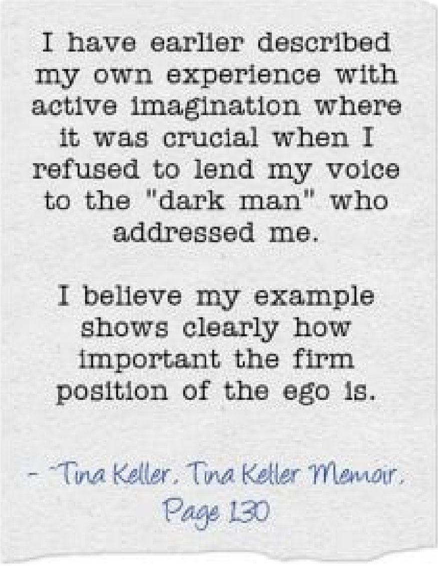
The unconscious forces which at times increase our possibilities, come in waves and, while they allow us to be lifted beyond our ordinary boundaries at times, we need to remember their rhythm and prepare for a low to follow each high.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 126.



Groups are too large, problems too complex and the age of reason has built such strong barriers that the hopes of receiving answers from inside are almost nonexistent.

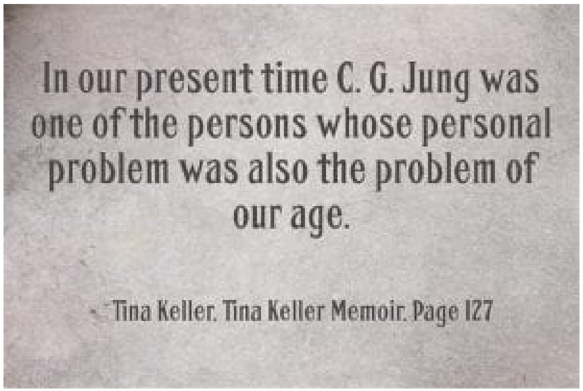
~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 127



I have earlier described my own experience with active imagination where it was crucial when I refused to lend my voice to the "dark man" who addressed me.

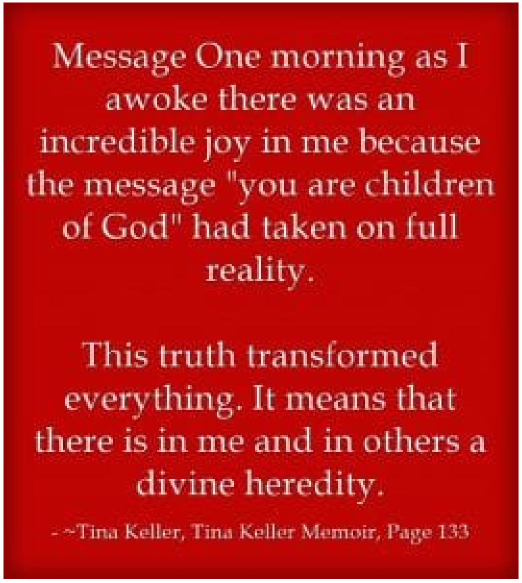
I believe my example shows clearly how important the firm position of the ego is.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 130



In our present time C. G. Jung was one of the persons whose personal problem was also the problem of our age.

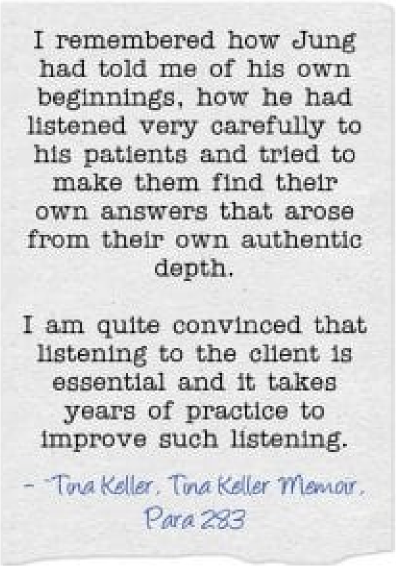
- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 127



Message One morning as I awoke there was an incredible joy in me because the message "you are children of God" had taken on full reality.

This truth transformed everything. It means that there is in me and in others a divine heredity.

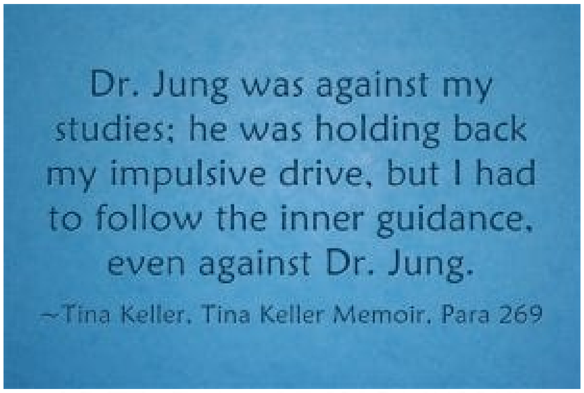
- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 133



I remembered how Jung had told me of his own beginnings, how he had listened very carefully to his patients and tried to make them find their own answers that arose from their own authentic depth.

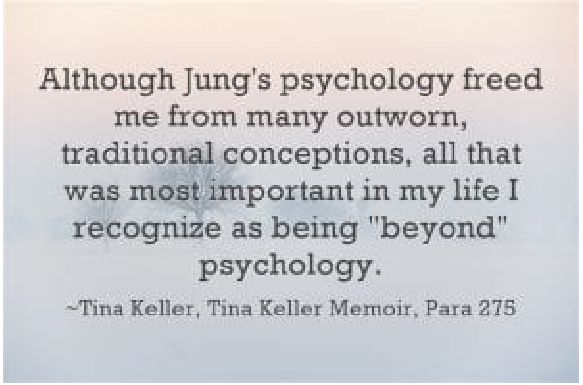
I am quite convinced that listening to the client is essential and it takes years of practice to improve such listening.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 283



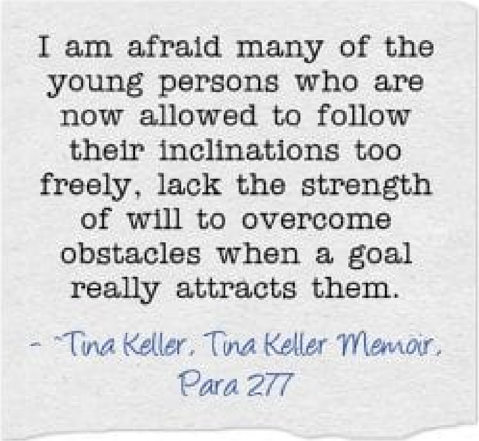
Dr. Jung was against my studies; he was holding back my impulsive drive, but I had to follow the inner guidance, even against Dr. Jung.

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 269



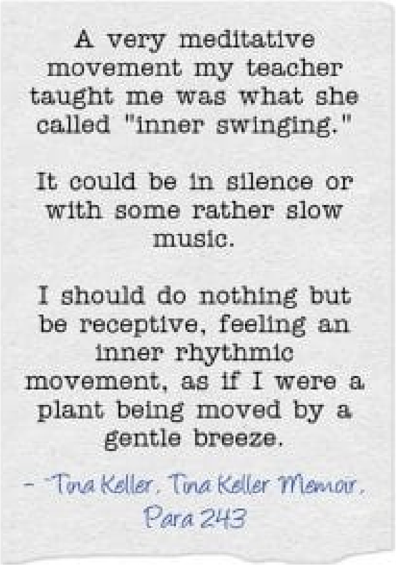
Although Jung's psychology freed me from many outworn, traditional conceptions, all that was most important in my life I recognize as being "beyond" psychology.

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 275



I am afraid many of the young persons who are now allowed to follow their inclinations too freely, lack the strength of will to overcome obstacles when a goal really attracts them.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 277

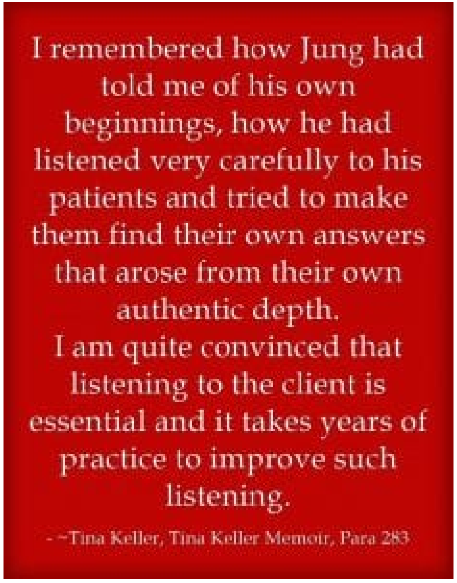


A very meditative movement my teacher taught me was what she called "inner swinging."

It could be in silence or with some rather slow music.

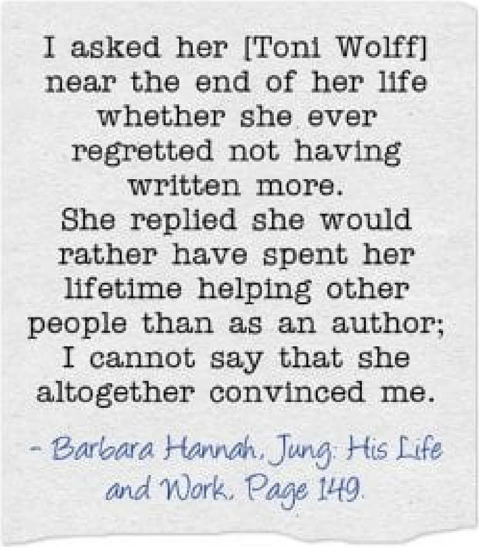
I should do nothing but be receptive, feeling an inner rhythmic movement, as if I were a plant being moved by a gentle breeze.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 243



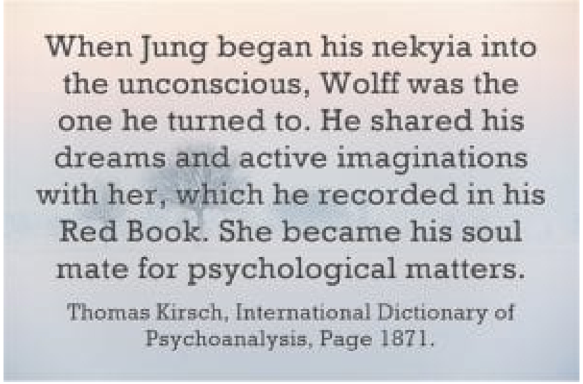
I remembered how Jung had told me of his own beginnings, how he had listened very carefully to his patients and tried to make them find their own answers that arose from their own authentic depth.
I am quite convinced that listening to the client is essential and it takes years of practice to improve such listening.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 283



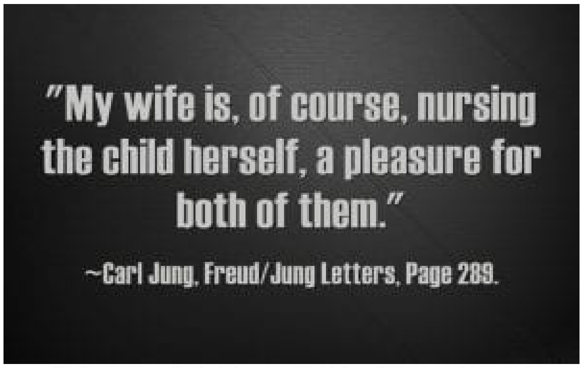
I asked her [Toni Wolff] near the end of her life whether she ever regretted not having written more.
She replied she would rather have spent her lifetime helping other people than as an author; I cannot say that she altogether convinced me.

- Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and Work, Page 149.



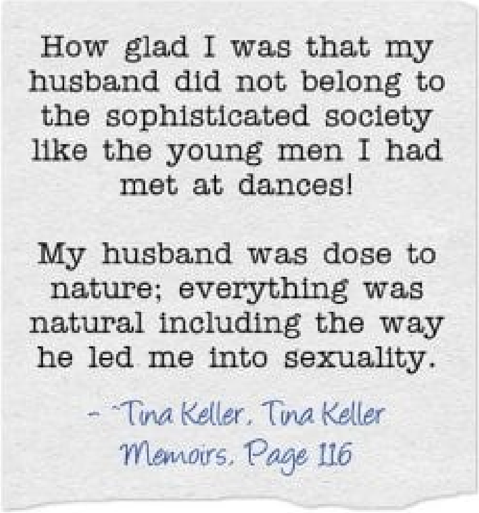
When Jung began his nekyia into the unconscious, Wolff was the one he turned to. He shared his dreams and active imaginations with her, which he recorded in his Red Book. She became his soul mate for psychological matters.

Thomas Kirsch, International Dictionary of Psychoanalysis, Page 1871.



"My wife is, of course, nursing the child herself, a pleasure for both of them."

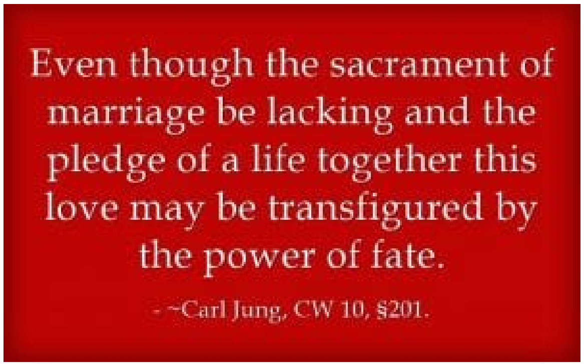
~Carl Jung, Freud/Jung Letters, Page 289.



How glad I was that my husband did not belong to the sophisticated society like the young men I had met at dances!

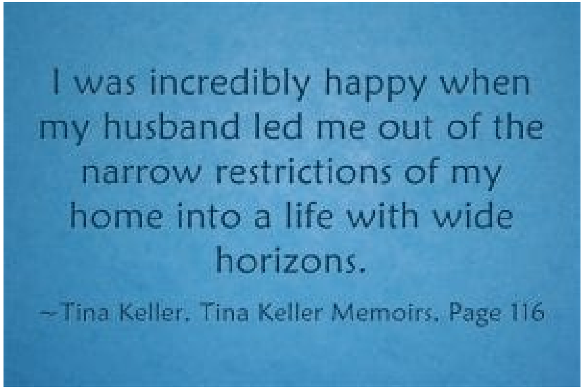
My husband was dose to nature; everything was natural including the way he led me into sexuality.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 116



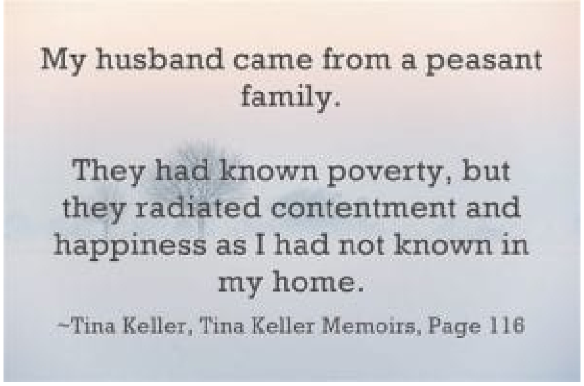
Even though the sacrament of marriage be lacking and the pledge of a life together this love may be transfigured by the power of fate.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 10, §201.



I was incredibly happy when my husband led me out of the narrow restrictions of my home into a life with wide horizons.

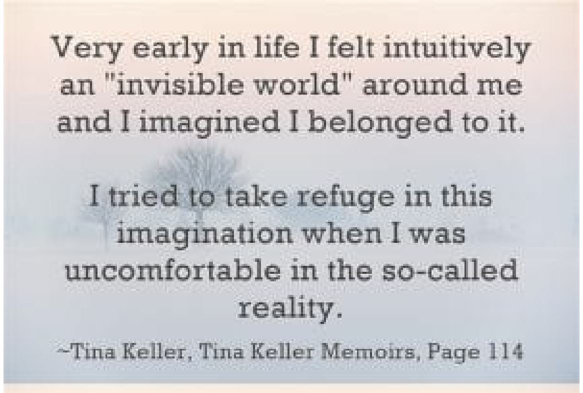
~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 116



My husband came from a peasant family.

They had known poverty, but they radiated contentment and happiness as I had not known in my home.

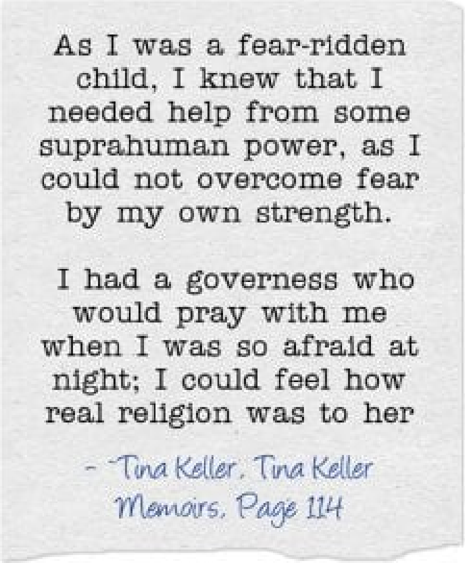
~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 116



Very early in life I felt intuitively an "invisible world" around me and I imagined I belonged to it.

I tried to take refuge in this imagination when I was uncomfortable in the so-called reality.

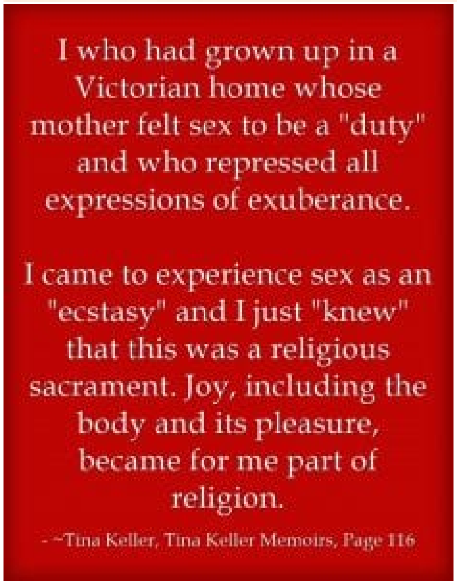
~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 114



As I was a fear-ridden child, I knew that I needed help from some suprahuman power, as I could not overcome fear by my own strength.

I had a governess who would pray with me when I was so afraid at night; I could feel how real religion was to her

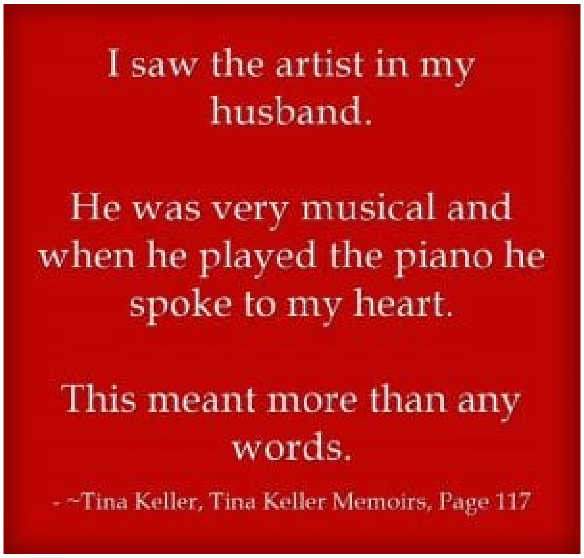
- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 114



I who had grown up in a Victorian home whose mother felt sex to be a "duty" and who repressed all expressions of exuberance.

I came to experience sex as an "ecstasy" and I just "knew" that this was a religious sacrament. Joy, including the body and its pleasure, became for me part of religion.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 116

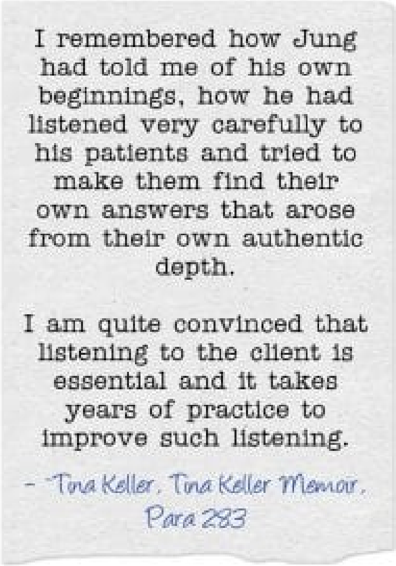


I saw the artist in my husband.

He was very musical and when he played the piano he spoke to my heart.

This meant more than any words.

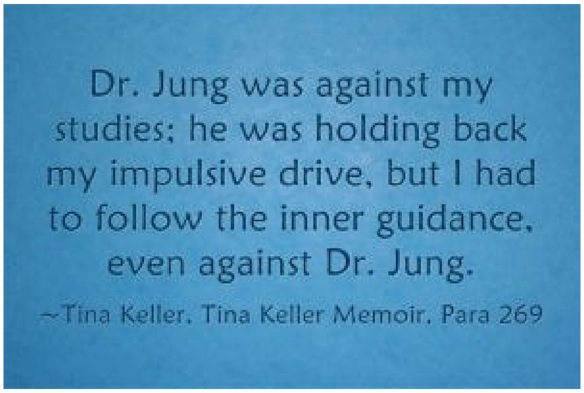
- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Page 117



I remembered how Jung had told me of his own beginnings, how he had listened very carefully to his patients and tried to make them find their own answers that arose from their own authentic depth.

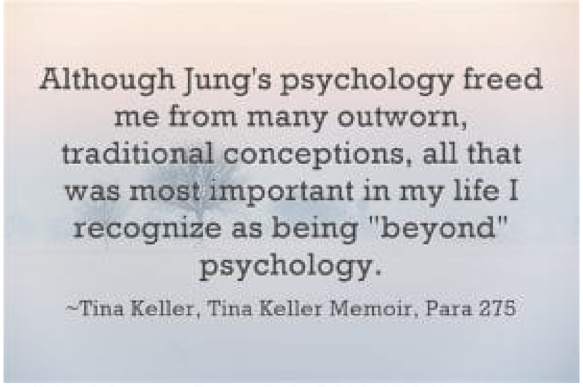
I am quite convinced that listening to the client is essential and it takes years of practice to improve such listening.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 283



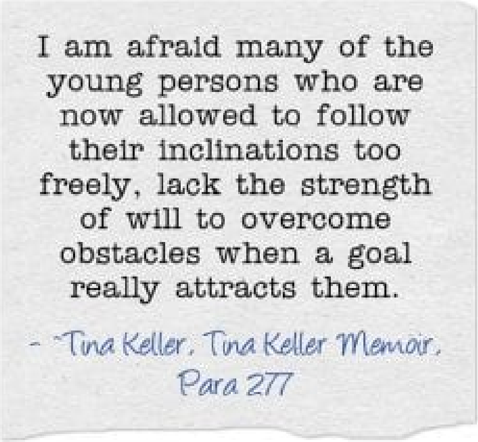
Dr. Jung was against my studies; he was holding back my impulsive drive, but I had to follow the inner guidance, even against Dr. Jung.

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 269



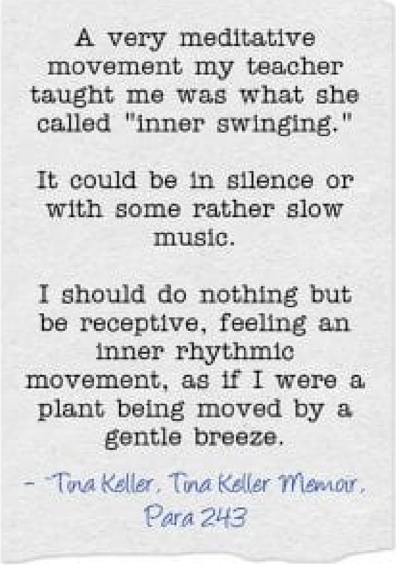
Although Jung's psychology freed me from many outworn, traditional conceptions, all that was most important in my life I recognize as being "beyond" psychology.

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 275



I am afraid many of the young persons who are now allowed to follow their inclinations too freely, lack the strength of will to overcome obstacles when a goal really attracts them.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 277

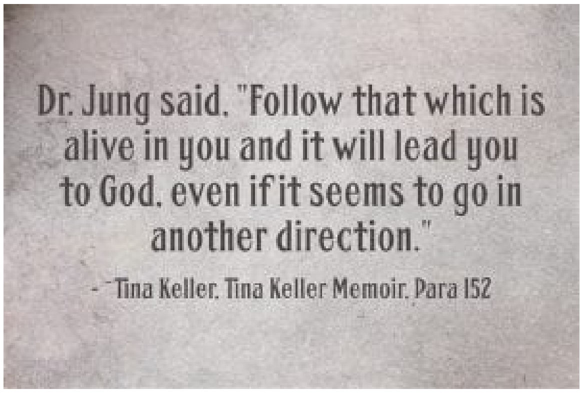


A very meditative movement my teacher taught me was what she called "inner swinging."

It could be in silence or with some rather slow music.

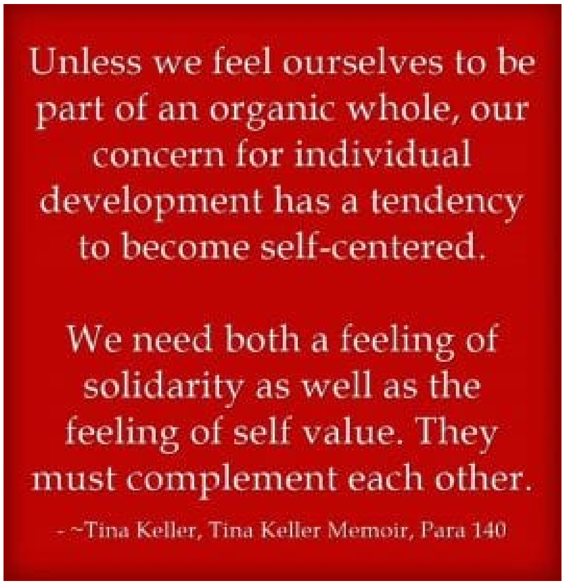
I should do nothing but be receptive, feeling an inner rhythmic movement, as if I were a plant being moved by a gentle breeze.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 243



Dr. Jung said, "Follow that which is alive in you and it will lead you to God, even if it seems to go in another direction."

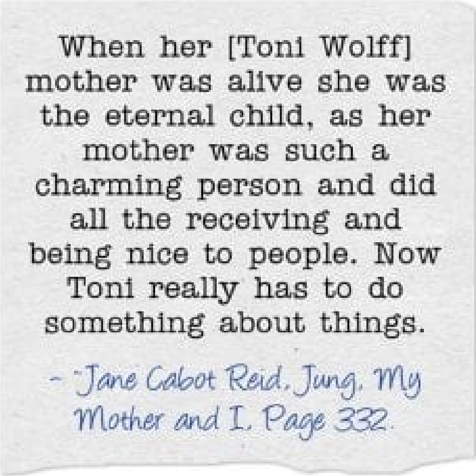
- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 152



Unless we feel ourselves to be part of an organic whole, our concern for individual development has a tendency to become self-centered.

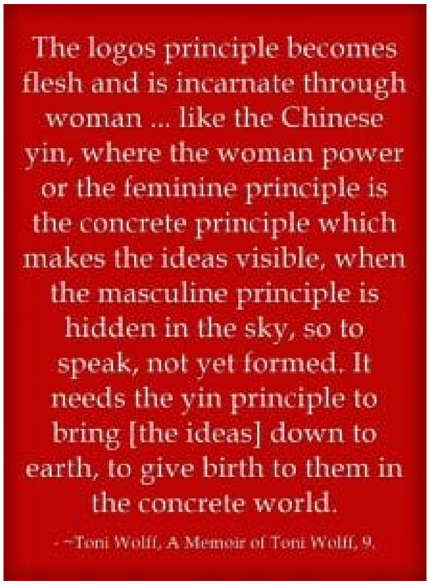
We need both a feeling of solidarity as well as the feeling of self value. They must complement each other.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 140



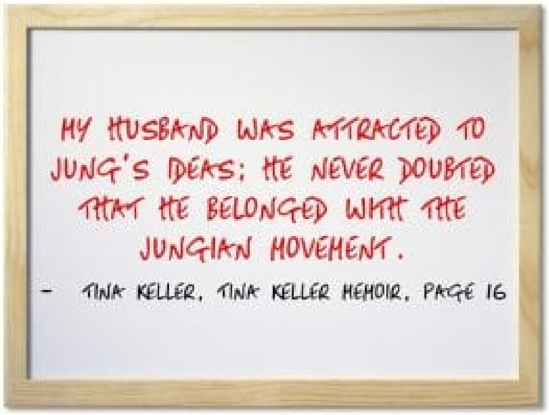
When her [Toni Wolff] mother was alive she was the eternal child, as her mother was such a charming person and did all the receiving and being nice to people. Now Toni really has to do something about things.

- Jane Cabot Reid, Jung, My Mother and I, Page 332.



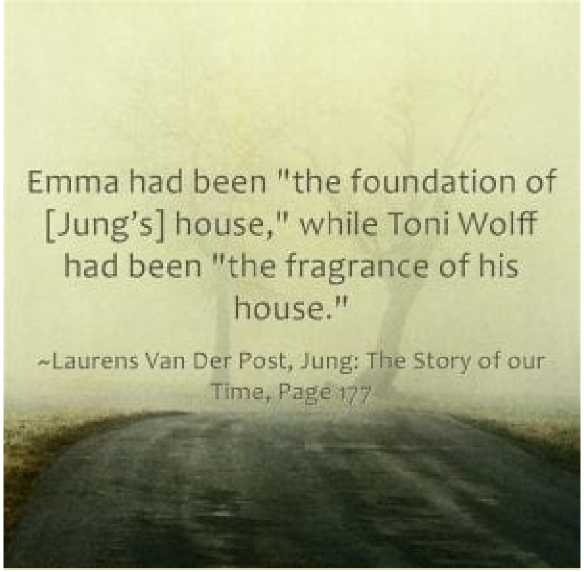
The logos principle becomes flesh and is incarnate through woman ... like the Chinese yin, where the woman power or the feminine principle is the concrete principle which makes the ideas visible, when the masculine principle is hidden in the sky, so to speak, not yet formed. It needs the yin principle to bring [the ideas] down to earth, to give birth to them in the concrete world.

- ~Toni Wolff, A Memoir of Toni Wolff, 9.



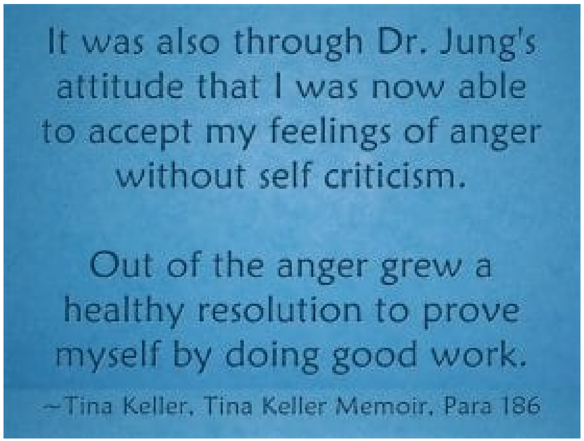
MY HUSBAND WAS ATTRACTED TO JUNG'S IDEAS; HE NEVER DOUBTED THAT HE BELONGED WITH THE JUNGIAN MOVEMENT.

- TINA KELLER, TINA KELLER MEMOIR, PAGE 16



Emma had been "the foundation of [Jung's] house," while Toni Wolff had been "the fragrance of his house."

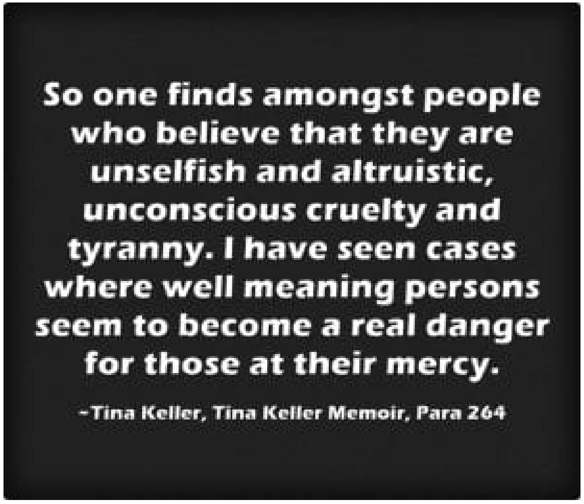
~Laurens Van Der Post, Jung: The Story of our Time, Page 177



It was also through Dr. Jung's attitude that I was now able to accept my feelings of anger without self criticism.

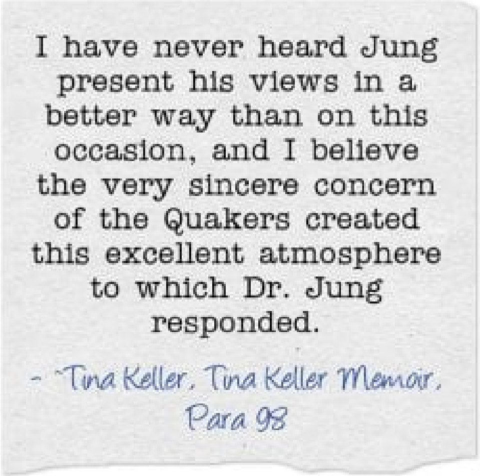
Out of the anger grew a healthy resolution to prove myself by doing good work.

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 186



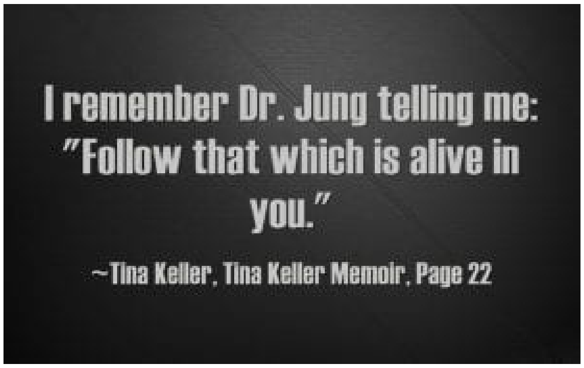
So one finds amongst people who believe that they are unselfish and altruistic, unconscious cruelty and tyranny. I have seen cases where well meaning persons seem to become a real danger for those at their mercy.

-Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 264



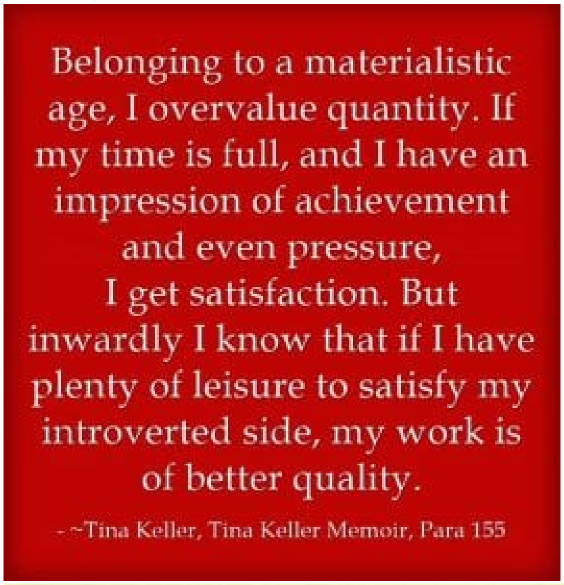
I have never heard Jung present his views in a better way than on this occasion, and I believe the very sincere concern of the Quakers created this excellent atmosphere to which Dr. Jung responded.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 98



I remember Dr. Jung telling me: "Follow that which is alive in you."

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 22

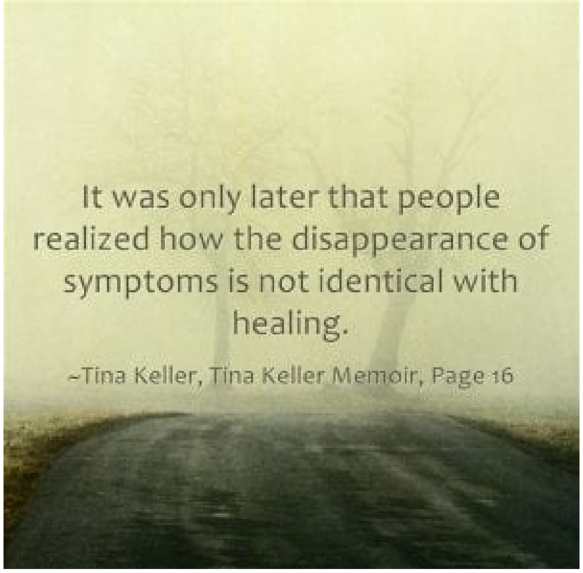


Belonging to a materialistic age, I overvalue quantity. If my time is full, and I have an impression of achievement and even pressure,
I get satisfaction. But inwardly I know that if I have plenty of leisure to satisfy my introverted side, my work is of better quality.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 155

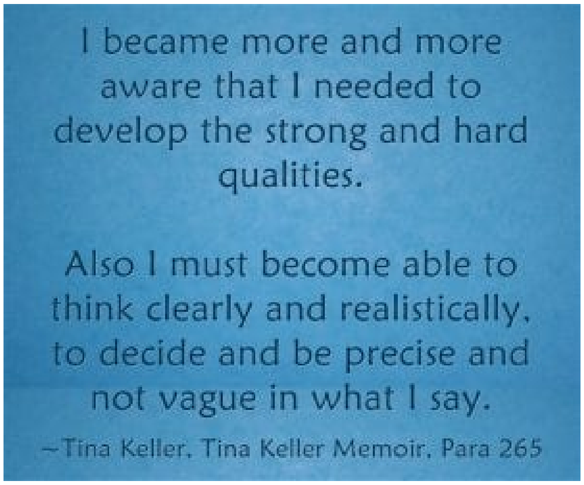
Dr. Jung had shown me that it was quite useless to reason or puzzle about "God" with the intellect.

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 186



It was only later that people realized how the disappearance of symptoms is not identical with healing.

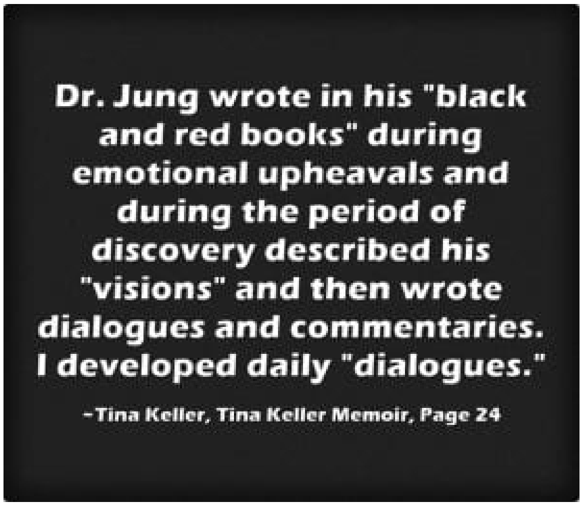
~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 16



I became more and more aware that I needed to develop the strong and hard qualities.

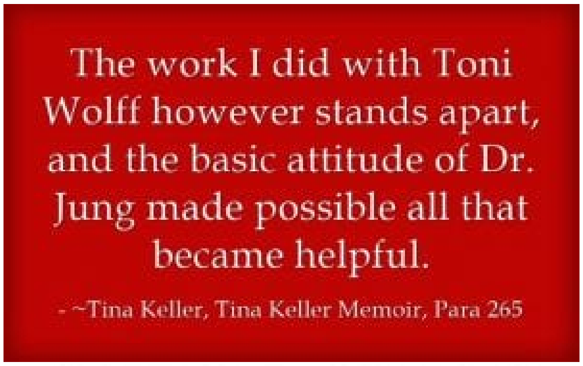
Also I must become able to think clearly and realistically, to decide and be precise and not vague in what I say.

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 265



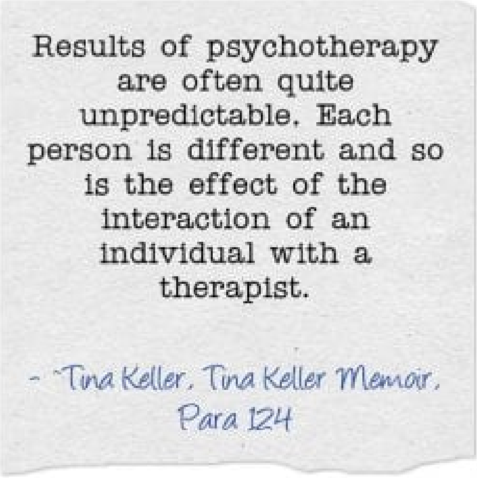
Dr. Jung wrote in his "black and red books" during emotional upheavals and during the period of discovery described his "visions" and then wrote dialogues and commentaries. I developed daily "dialogues."

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 24



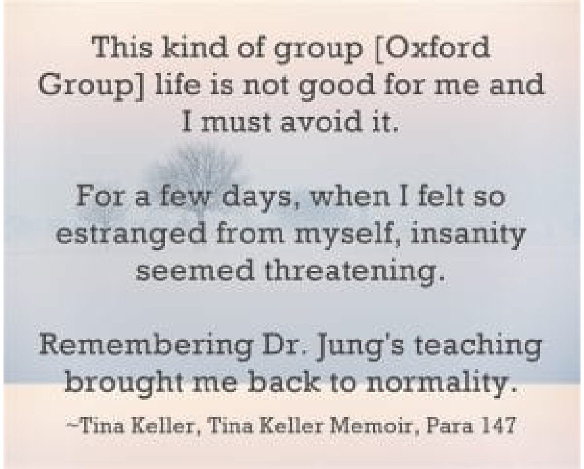
The work I did with Toni Wolff however stands apart, and the basic attitude of Dr. Jung made possible all that became helpful.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 265



Results of psychotherapy are often quite unpredictable. Each person is different and so is the effect of the interaction of an individual with a therapist.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 124

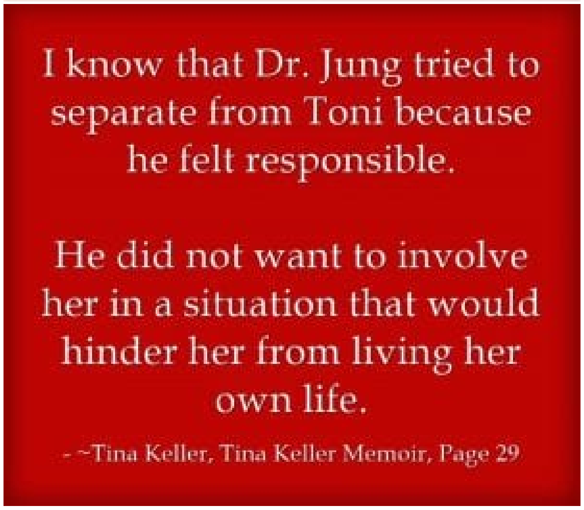


This kind of group [Oxford Group] life is not good for me and I must avoid it.

For a few days, when I felt so estranged from myself, insanity seemed threatening.

Remembering Dr. Jung's teaching brought me back to normality.

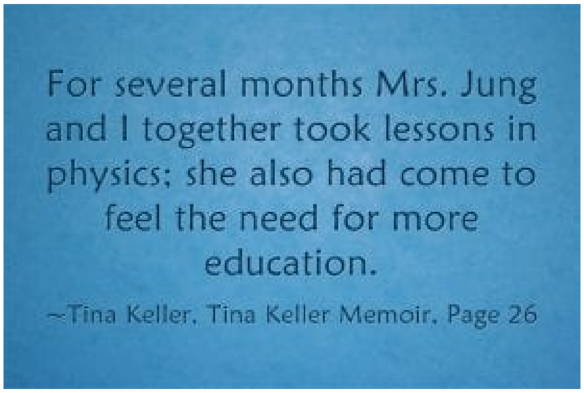
~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 147



I know that Dr. Jung tried to separate from Toni because he felt responsible.

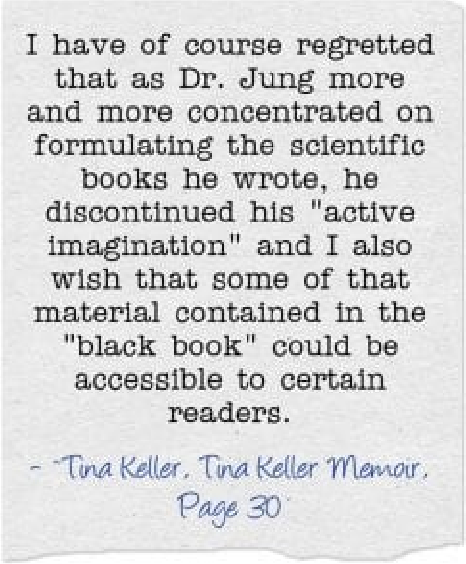
He did not want to involve her in a situation that would hinder her from living her own life.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 29



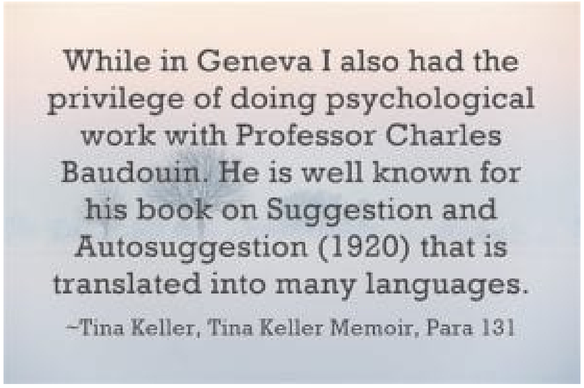
For several months Mrs. Jung and I together took lessons in physics; she also had come to feel the need for more education.

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 26



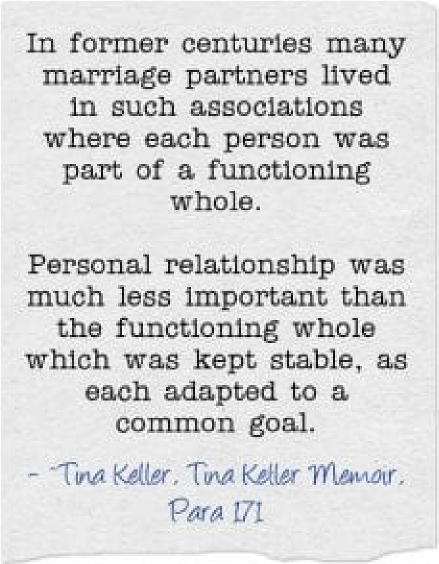
I have of course regretted that as Dr. Jung more and more concentrated on formulating the scientific books he wrote, he discontinued his "active imagination" and I also wish that some of that material contained in the "black book" could be accessible to certain readers.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 30



While in Geneva I also had the privilege of doing psychological work with Professor Charles Baudouin. He is well known for his book on Suggestion and Autosuggestion (1920) that is translated into many languages.

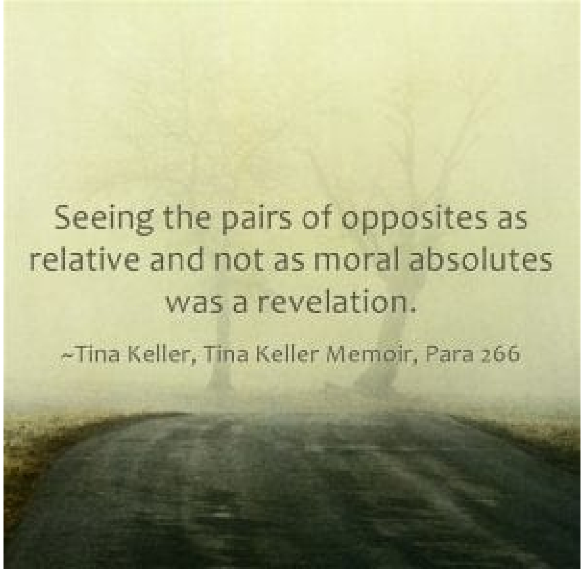
~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 131



In former centuries many marriage partners lived in such associations where each person was part of a functioning whole.

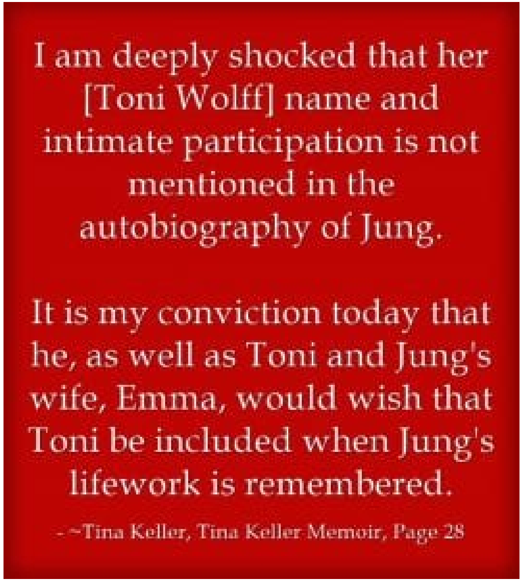
Personal relationship was much less important than the functioning whole which was kept stable, as each adapted to a common goal.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 171



Seeing the pairs of opposites as relative and not as moral absolutes was a revelation.

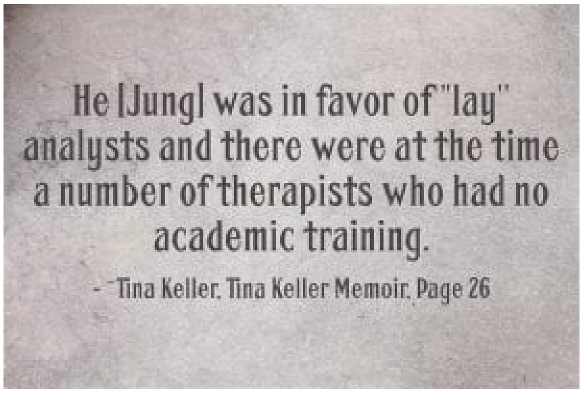
~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 266



I am deeply shocked that her [Toni Wolff] name and intimate participation is not mentioned in the autobiography of Jung.

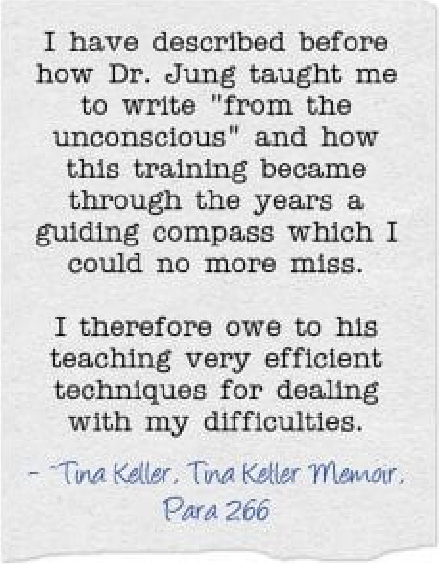
It is my conviction today that he, as well as Toni and Jung's wife, Emma, would wish that Toni be included when Jung's lifework is remembered.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 28



He [Jung] was in favor of "lay" analysts and there were at the time a number of therapists who had no academic training.

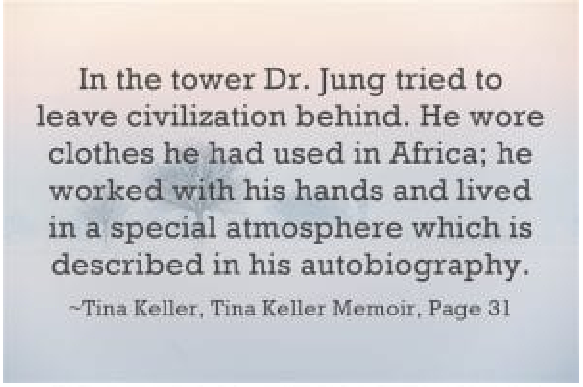
- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 26



I have described before how Dr. Jung taught me to write "from the unconscious" and how this training became through the years a guiding compass which I could no more miss.

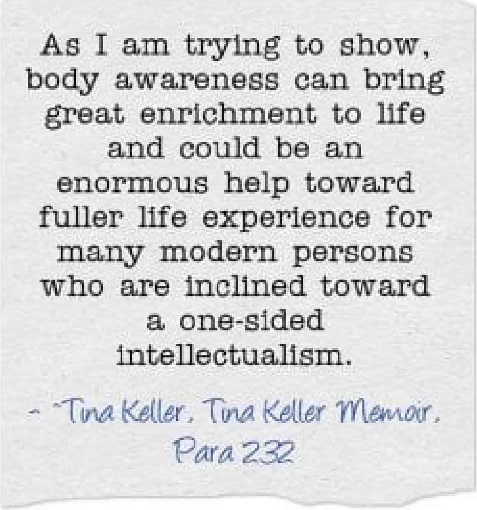
I therefore owe to his teaching very efficient techniques for dealing with my difficulties.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 266



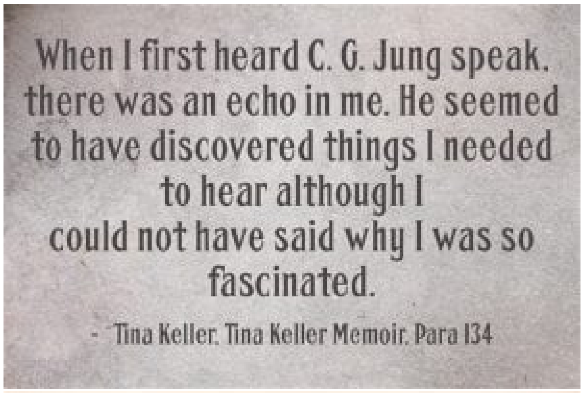
In the tower Dr. Jung tried to leave civilization behind. He wore clothes he had used in Africa; he worked with his hands and lived in a special atmosphere which is described in his autobiography.

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 31



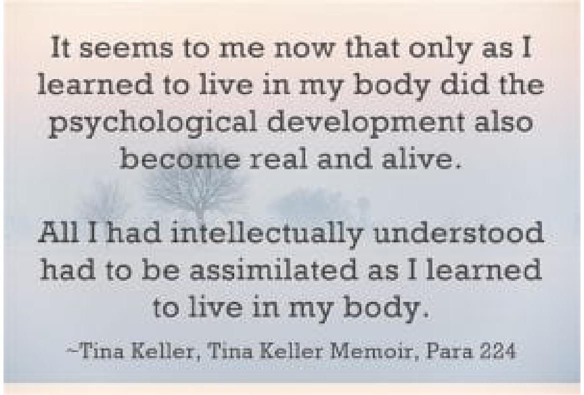
As I am trying to show, body awareness can bring great enrichment to life and could be an enormous help toward fuller life experience for many modern persons who are inclined toward a one-sided intellectualism.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 232



When I first heard C. G. Jung speak, there was an echo in me. He seemed to have discovered things I needed to hear although I could not have said why I was so fascinated.

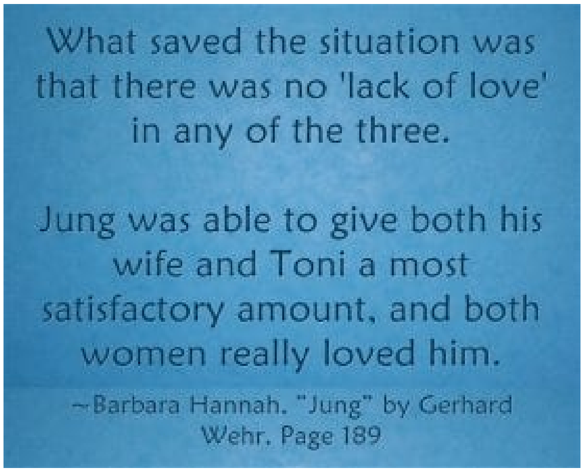
- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 134



It seems to me now that only as I learned to live in my body did the psychological development also become real and alive.

All I had intellectually understood had to be assimilated as I learned to live in my body.

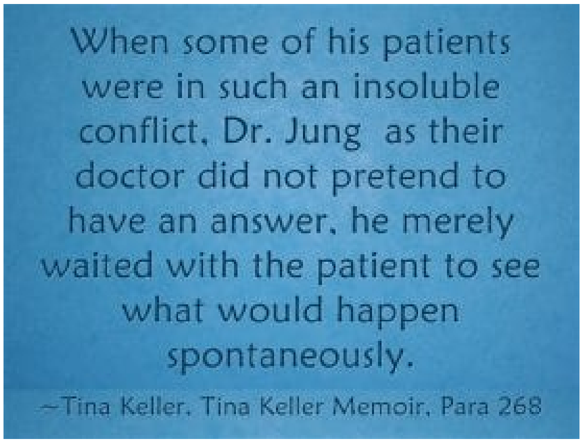
~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 224



What saved the situation was that there was no 'lack of love' in any of the three.

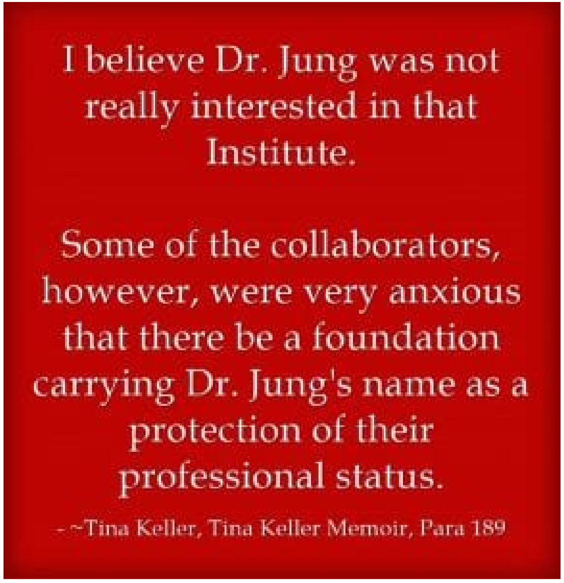
Jung was able to give both his wife and Toni a most satisfactory amount, and both women really loved him.

~Barbara Hannah, "Jung" by Gerhard Wehr, Page 189



When some of his patients were in such an insoluble conflict, Dr. Jung as their doctor did not pretend to have an answer, he merely waited with the patient to see what would happen spontaneously.

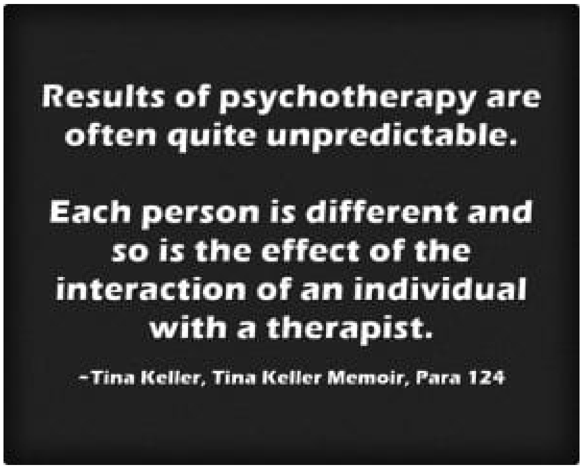
~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 268



I believe Dr. Jung was not really interested in that Institute.

Some of the collaborators, however, were very anxious that there be a foundation carrying Dr. Jung's name as a protection of their professional status.

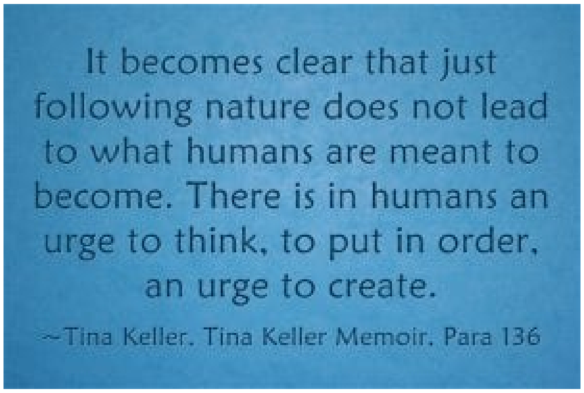
- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 189



Results of psychotherapy are often quite unpredictable.

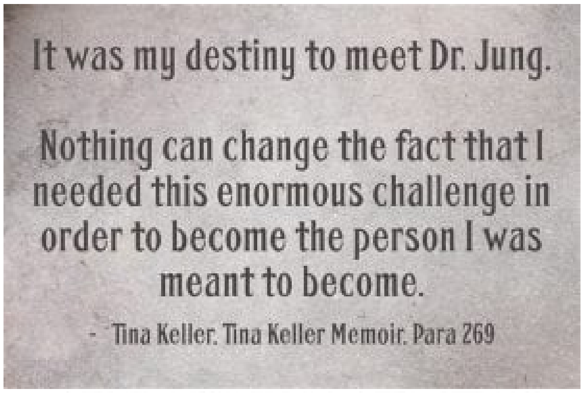
Each person is different and so is the effect of the interaction of an individual with a therapist.

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 124



It becomes clear that just following nature does not lead to what humans are meant to become. There is in humans an urge to think, to put in order, an urge to create.

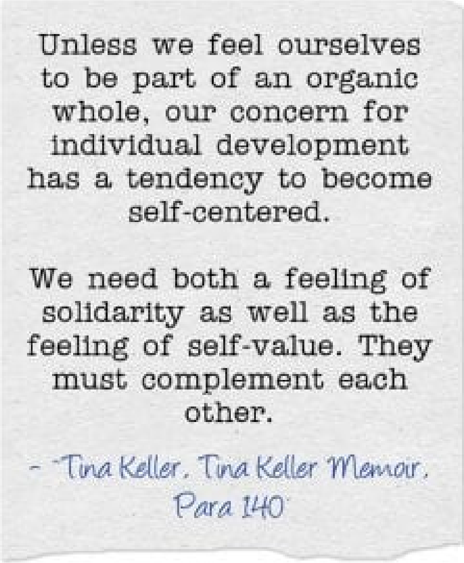
~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 136



It was my destiny to meet Dr. Jung.

Nothing can change the fact that I needed this enormous challenge in order to become the person I was meant to become.

- Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 269



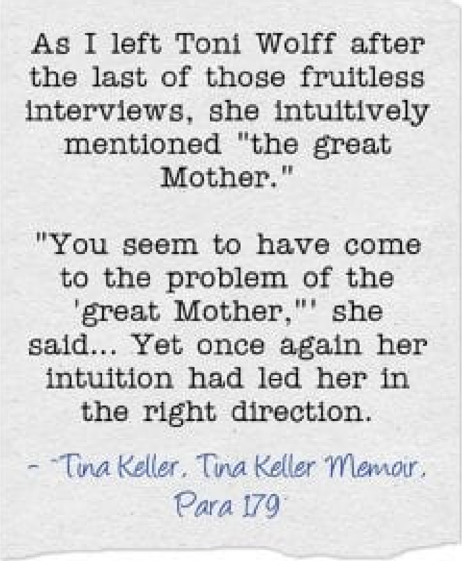
Unless we feel ourselves to be part of an organic whole, our concern for individual development has a tendency to become self-centered.

We need both a feeling of solidarity as well as the feeling of self-value. They must complement each other.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 140

I think Dr. Jung gave me courage to accept risk and also to welcome the unknown.

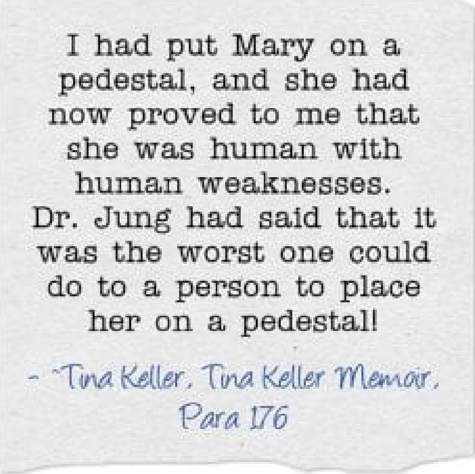
~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 269



As I left Toni Wolff after the last of those fruitless interviews, she intuitively mentioned "the great Mother."

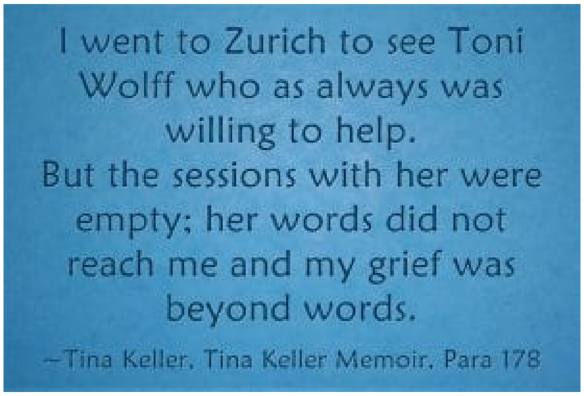
"You seem to have come to the problem of the 'great Mother,"' she said... Yet once again her intuition had led her in the right direction.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 179



I had put Mary on a pedestal, and she had now proved to me that she was human with human weaknesses.
Dr. Jung had said that it was the worst one could do to a person to place her on a pedestal!

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 176



I went to Zurich to see Toni Wolff who as always was willing to help.
But the sessions with her were empty; her words did not reach me and my grief was beyond words.

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 178

I had to experience that even the best intentions of Toni Wolff could not reach me.
Only so was I open to the Earthmother's healing.
You may say the Earthmother is an imagination, and yet it was a very real experience.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 187

In the course of the years I realize that only such crucial pain can bring fundamental transformation.

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 176

But the so-called "inferior function" seems not to be available unless the person goes through a crisis.

~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 170

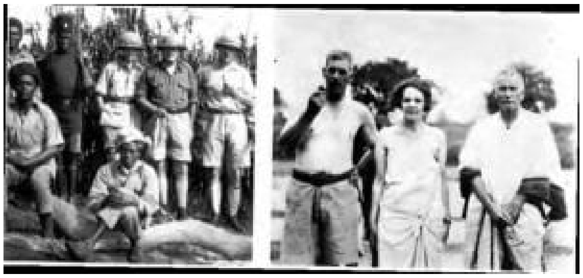
When anger came it was like a cleansing wind. There was nothing to regret or restore. I had to realize that I had done my best.

- ~Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Para 185

---

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Memoir-Tina-Keller-Jenny-Confrontation-Psychology/dp/188267085X/ref=sr_1_1?ie=UTF8&qid=1541670405&sr=8-1&keywords=tina+keller+memoirs+swa`

Carl Jung: I was enchanted by this sight-it was a picture of something utterly alien and outside my experience, (2019-11-08 04:53)



Twenty-five years later, when Jung wass in Central Africa, he was reminded of those experiments by a typical chain of associations.

On the train journey from Mombassa to Nairobi, he beheld a brownish-black figure who stood motionless on a steep red cliff, leaning on a long spear and looking down at the train.

“I was enchanted by this sight-it was a picture of something utterly alien and outside my experience, but on the other hand a most intense sentiment du deja-vu.

I had the feeling that I had already experienced this moment and had always known this world which was separated from me only by distance in time. . . .

The feeling-tone of this curious experience accompanied me throughout my whole journey through savage Africa.

I can recall only one other such recognition of the immemorially known.

That was when I first observed a parapsychological phenomenon together with my former chief, Professor Eugen Bleuler.

Beforehand I had imagined that I would be dumbfounded if I were to see so fantastic a thing.

But when it happened, I was not surprised at all; I felt it was perfectly natural, something I could take for granted because I had long since been acquainted with it." Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 10

Carl Jung: One could describe these movements . . . as levitation... (2019-11-08 04:59)

In 1961, the year of his death, looking back on the phenomena he had observed, Jung wrote in a letter:

"I have seen objects moving that were not directly touched, and moreover under absolutely satisfactory scientific conditions.

One could describe these movements . . . as levitation, if one assumes that the objects moved by themselves.

But this does not seem to be the case, because all the bodies that apparently moved by themselves moved as though lifted, shaken, or thrown by someone's hand.

In this series of experiments I, together with other observers, saw a hand and felt its pressure-apparently the hand that caused all the other phenomena of this kind.

The phenomena have nothing to do with the "will," since they occurred only when the medium was in a trance and precisely not in control of his will.

The phenomena seem to fall into the category of poltergeist manifestations.” Aniela Jaffe, Jung’s Last Years, Page 11.

Carl Jung: But what is outside time is, according to our understanding, outside change. (2019-11-08 05:05)

In a letter of May 1960, he wrote that in so far as the psyche is capable of telepathic and precognitive perceptions it exists, at least in part, in a "continuum outside time and space," hence the possibility authentic postmortal phenomenon.

The comparative rarity of such phenomena suggests at all events that the forms of existence inside and outside time are so sharply divided that crossing this boundary presents the greatest difficulties.

But this does not exclude the possibility that there is an existence outside time which runs parallel with existence inside time.

Yes, we ourselves may simultaneously exist in both worlds, and occasionally we do have intimations of a twofold existence.

But what is outside time is, according to our understanding, outside change.

It possesses relative eternity. Aniela Jaffe, Jung’s Last Years, Page 14

Uniting with the Self we reach the God (2019-11-08 05:10)

[1]

Through uniting with the Self we reach the God.

I must say this, not with reference to the opinions of the ancients or this or that authority; but because I have experienced it. It has happened thus in me. And it certainly happened in a way that I neither expected nor wished for. The experience of the God in this form was unexpected and unwanted. I wish I could say it was a deception and only too willingly would I disown this experience. But I cannot deny that it has seized me beyond all measure and steadily goes on working in me. So if it is a deception, then deception is my God.

Moreover, the God is in the deception. And if this were already the greatest bitterness that could happen to me, I would have to confess to this experience and recognize the God in it. No insight or objection is so strong that it could surpass the strength of this experience. And even if the God had revealed himself in a meaningless abomination, I could only avow that I have experienced the God in it. I even know that it is not too difficult to cite a theory that would sufficiently explain my experience and join it to the already known. I could furnish this theory myself and be satisfied in intellectual terms, and yet this theory would be unable to remove even the smallest part of the knowledge that I have experienced the God.

I recognize the God by the unshakeableness of the experience. I cannot help but recognize him by the experience. I do not want to believe it, I do not need to believe it, nor could I believe it. How can one believe such? My mind would need to be totally confused to believe such things. Given their nature, they are most improbable. Not only improbable but also impossible for our understanding. Only a sick brain could produce such deceptions. I am like those sick persons who have been overcome by delusion and sensory deception. But I must say that the God makes us sick. I experience the God in sickness. A living God afflicts our reason like a sickness. He fills the soul with intoxication. He fills us with reeling chaos.

How many will the God break?

The God appears to us in a certain state of the soul. Therefore we reach the God through the Self. Not the Self is God, although we reach the God through the Self. The God is behind the Self above the Self the Self itself when he appears. But he appears as our sickness, from which we must heal ourselves. We must heal ourselves from the God, since he is also our heaviest wound. For in the first instance the God's power resides entirely in the Self since the self is completely in the God, because we were not with the Self We must draw the Self to our side. Therefore we must wrestle with the God for the self Since the God is an unfathomable powerful movement that sweeps away the Self into the boundless, into dissolution. Hence when the God appears to us we are at first powerless, captivated, divided, sick, poisoned with the strongest poison, but drunk with the highest health.

For in the first instance the God's power resides entirely in the Self since the Self is completely in the God, because we were not with the self We must draw the self to our side. Therefore we must wrestle with the God for the Self Since the God is an unfathomable powerful movement that sweeps away the Self into the boundless, into dissolution. Hence when the God appears to us we are at first powerless, captivated, divided, sick, poisoned with the strongest poison, but drunk with the highest health.

Yet we cannot remain in this state, since all the powers of our body are consumed like fat in the flames. Hence we must strive to free the self from the God, so that we can live. It is certainly possible and even quite easy for our reason to deny the God and to speak only of sickness. Thus we accept the sick part and can also heal it. But it will be a healing with loss. We lose a part of life. We go on living, but as ones lamed by the God. Where the fire blazed dead ashes lie.

I believe that we have the choice: I preferred the living wonders of the God. I daily weigh up my whole life and I continue to fiery brilliance of the God as a higher and fuller life than the ashes of rationality. The ashes are suicide to me. I could perhaps put out the fire but I cannot deny to myself the experience of the God. Nor can I cut myself off from this experience. I also do not want to, since I want to live. My life wants itself whole.

Therefore I must serve my Self I must win it in this way. But I must win it so that my life will become whole. For it seems to me to be sinful to deform life where there is yet the possibility to live it fully. The service of the Self is therefore divine service and the service of mankind. If I carry myself I relieve mankind of myself and heal my Self from the God. I must free my Self from the God, since the God I experienced is more than love; he is also hate, he is more than beauty, he is also the abomination, he is more than wisdom, he is also meaninglessness, he is more than power, he is also powerlessness, he is more than omnipresence, he is also my creature.

Carl Jung; Red Book.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/11/20273-flesh.jpg`

Books by Sonu Shamdasani [Jungian] (2019-11-08 10:11)

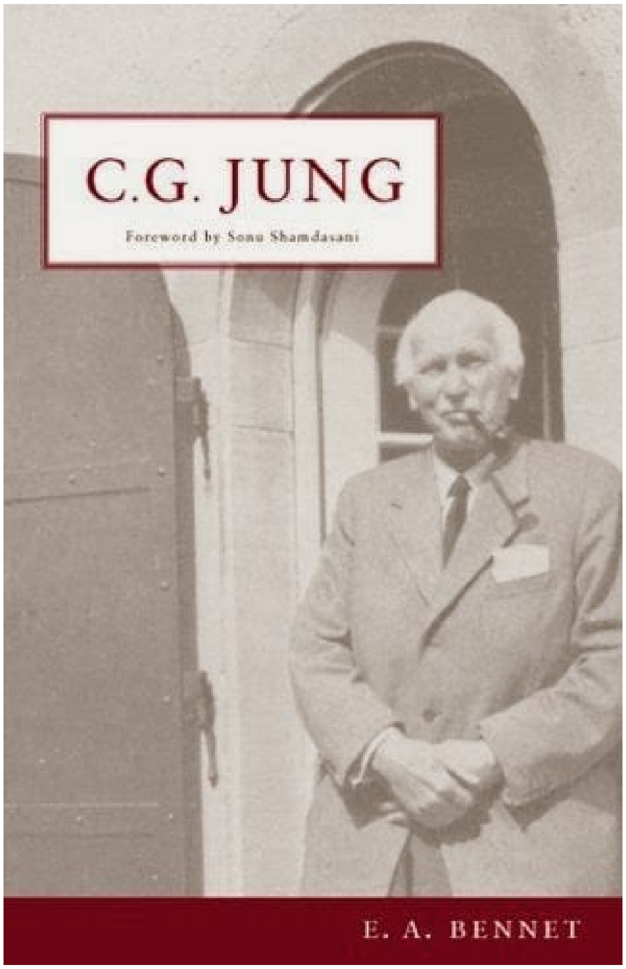
Books by Sonu Shamdasani [Jungian]

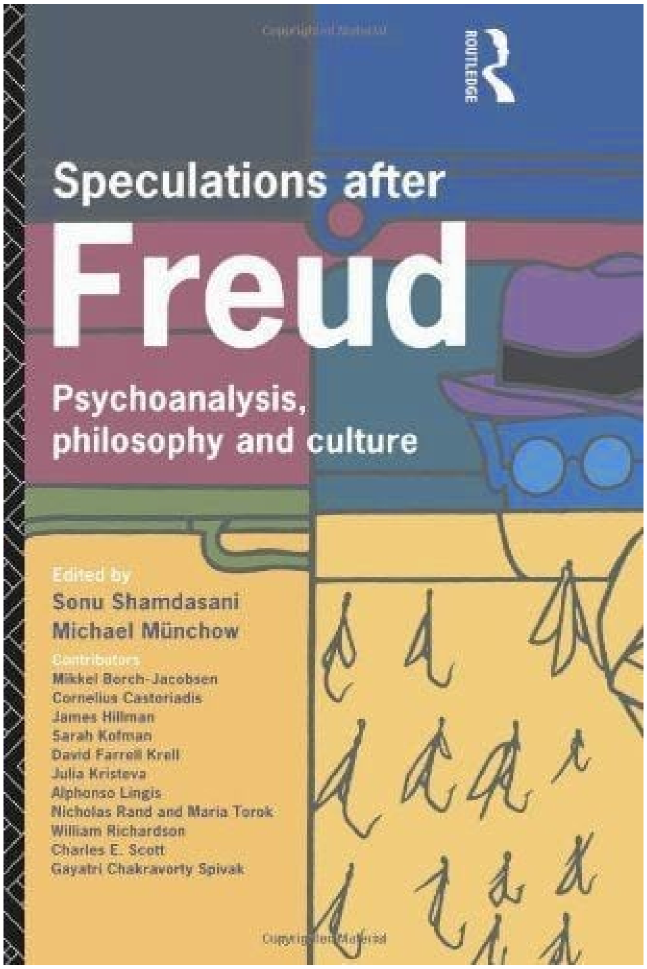
[1]



C.G. JUNG
Foreword by Sonu Shamdasani
E. A. BENNET

[2]Buy at Amazon here

[3]



Copyrighted Material

ROUTLEDGE

Speculations after Freud
Psychoanalysis, philosophy and culture

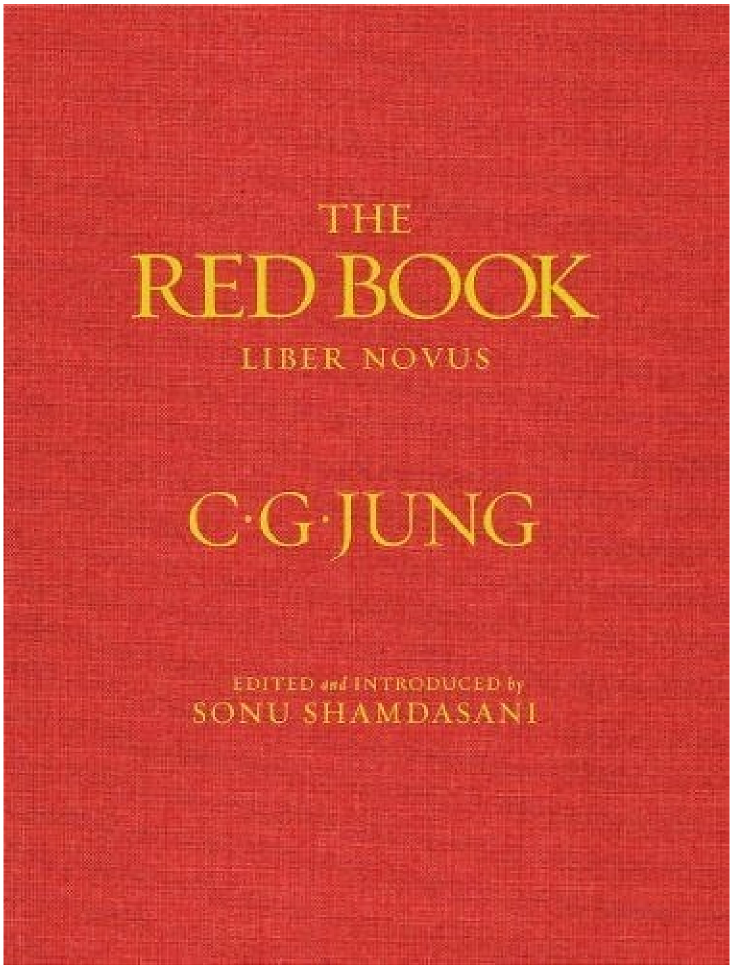
Edited by
Sonu Shamdasani
Michael Münchow

Contributors
Mikkel Borch-Jacobsen
Cornelius Castoriadis
James Hillman
Sarah Kofman
David Farrell Krell
Julia Kristeva
Alphonso Lingis
Nicholas Rand and Maria Torok
William Richardson
Charles E. Scott
Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak

Copyrighted Material

[4]Buy at Amazon here

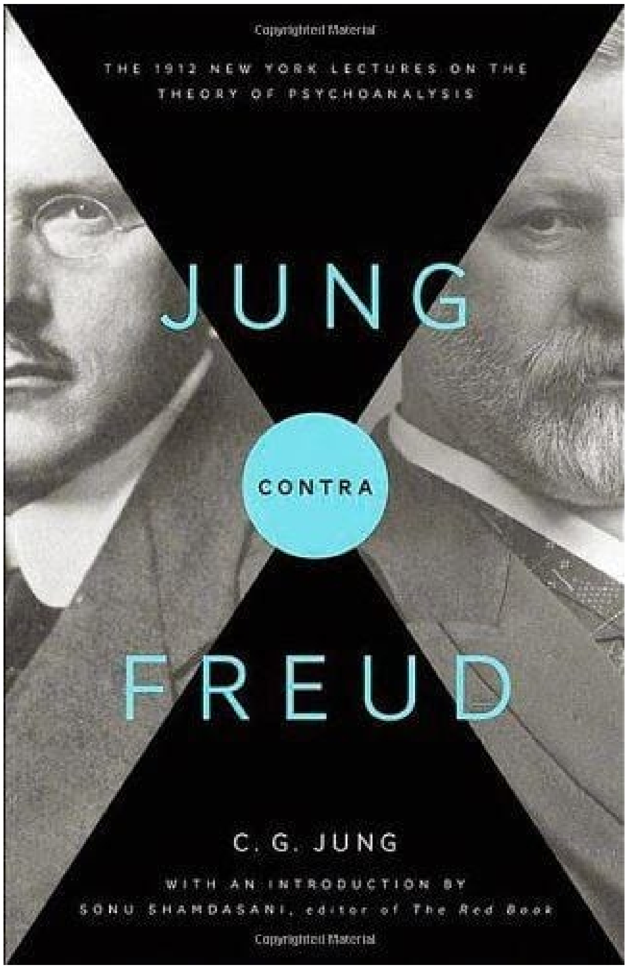
[5]



THE
RED BOOK
LIBER NOVUS
C·G·JUNG
EDITED and INTRODUCED by
SONU SHAMDASANI

[6]Buy at Amazon

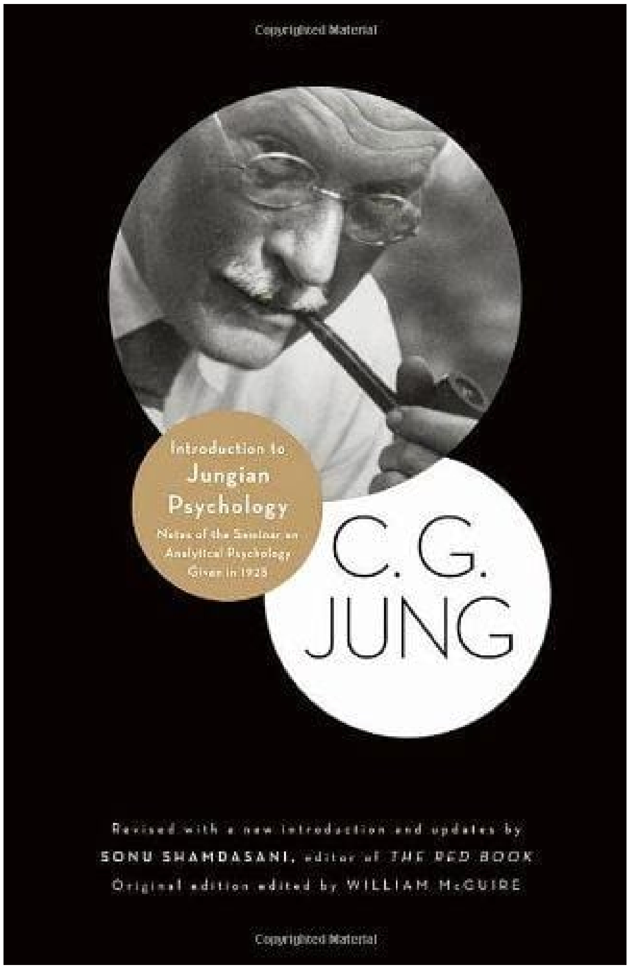
[7]



Copyrighted Material
THE 1912 NEW YORK LECTURES ON THE THEORY OF PSYCHOANALYSIS
JUNG
CONTRA
FREUD
C. G. JUNG
WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY
SONU SHAMDASANI, editor of The Red Book
Copyrighted Material

[8]Buy at Amazon here

[9]



Copyrighted Material
Introduction to Jungian
Psychology
Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology
Given in 1925
C.G.
JUNG
Revised with a new introduction and updates by
SONU SHAMDASANI, editor of THE RED BOOK
Original edition edited by WILLIAM McGUIRE
Copyrighted Material

[10]Buy at Amazon here

[11] BOLLINGEN SERIES / PRINCETON
Art and
the Creative Unconscious
Erich Neumann

[12]Buy at Amazon here

[13]

The Life and Ideas of James Hillman
Volume I
The Making of a Psychologist
DICK RUSSELL
Preface by Sonu Shamdasani

[14]Buy at Amazon here

[15] Copyrighted Material
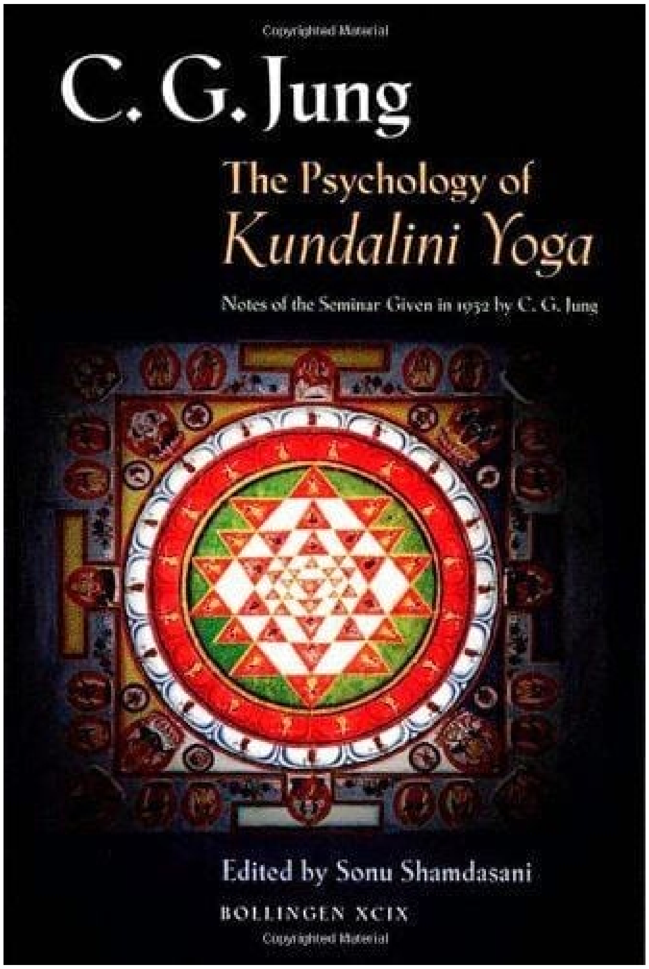
Cult Fictions
C.G. Jung and the Founding of Analytical Psychology
Sonu Shamdasani
Routledge
Copyrighted Material

[16]Buy at Amazon here

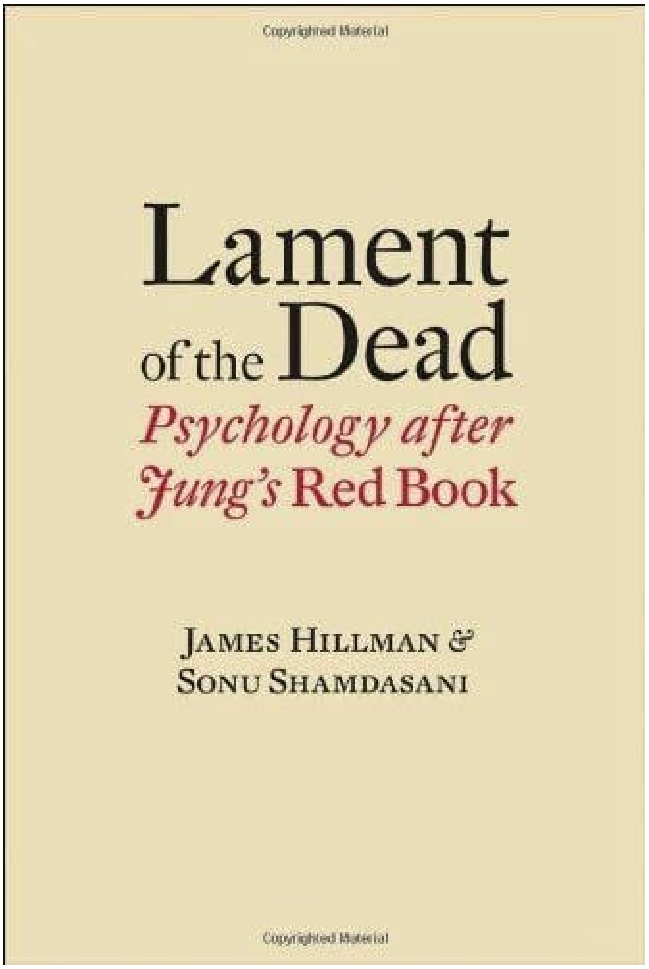
[17]



Copyrighted Material
C. G. Jung
The Psychology of
Kundalini Yoga
Notes of the Seminar Given in 1932 by C. G. Jung
Edited by Sonu Shamdasani
BOLLINGEN XCIX
Copyrighted Material

[18]Buy at Amazon here

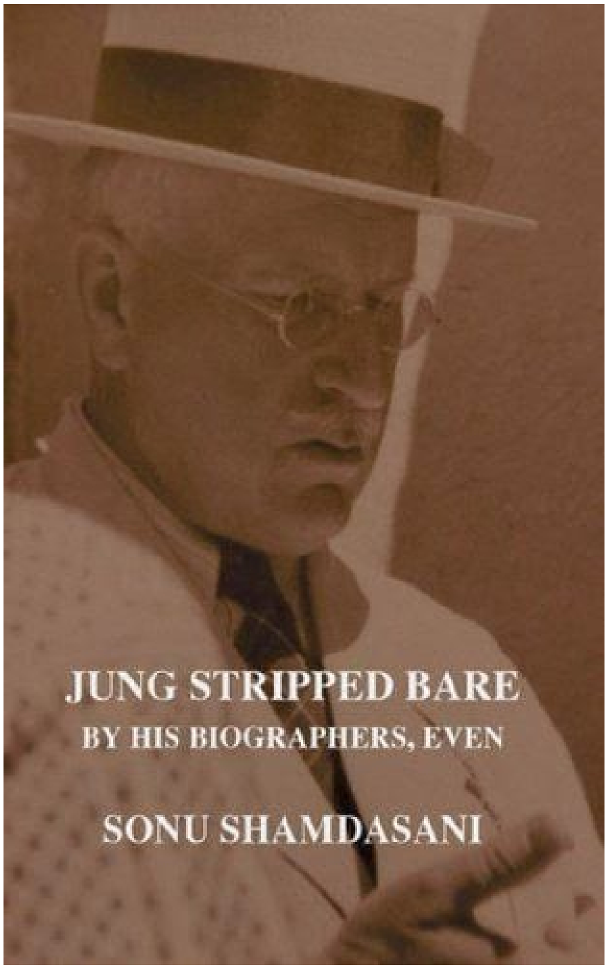
[19]



Copyrighted Material
Lament of the Dead
Psychology after Jung's Red Book
James Hillman &
Sonu Shamdasani
Copyrighted Material

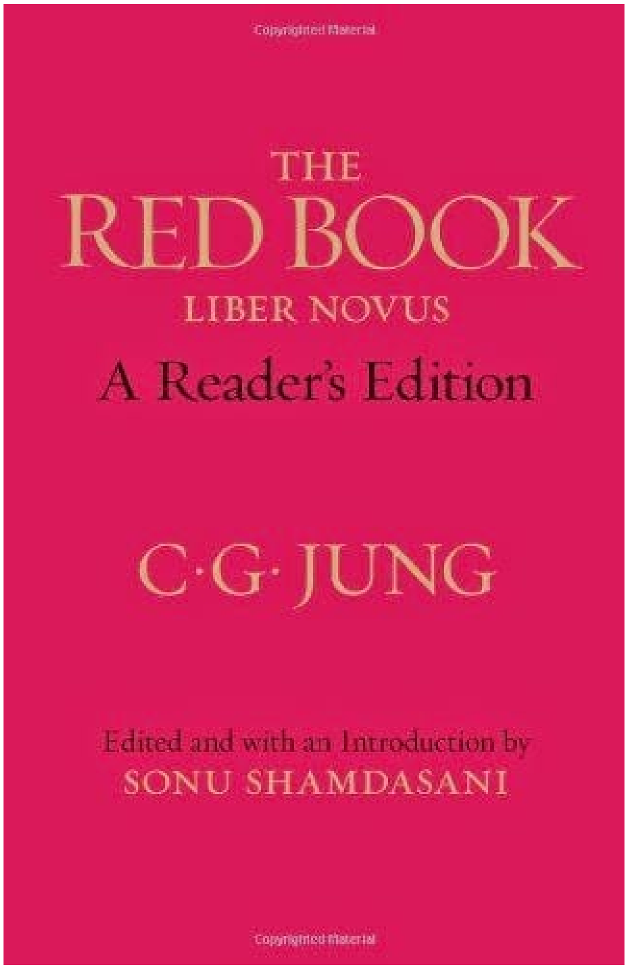
[20]Buy at Amazon here

[21]



JUNG STRIPPED BARE
BY HIS BIOGRAPHERS, EVEN
SONU SHAMDASANI

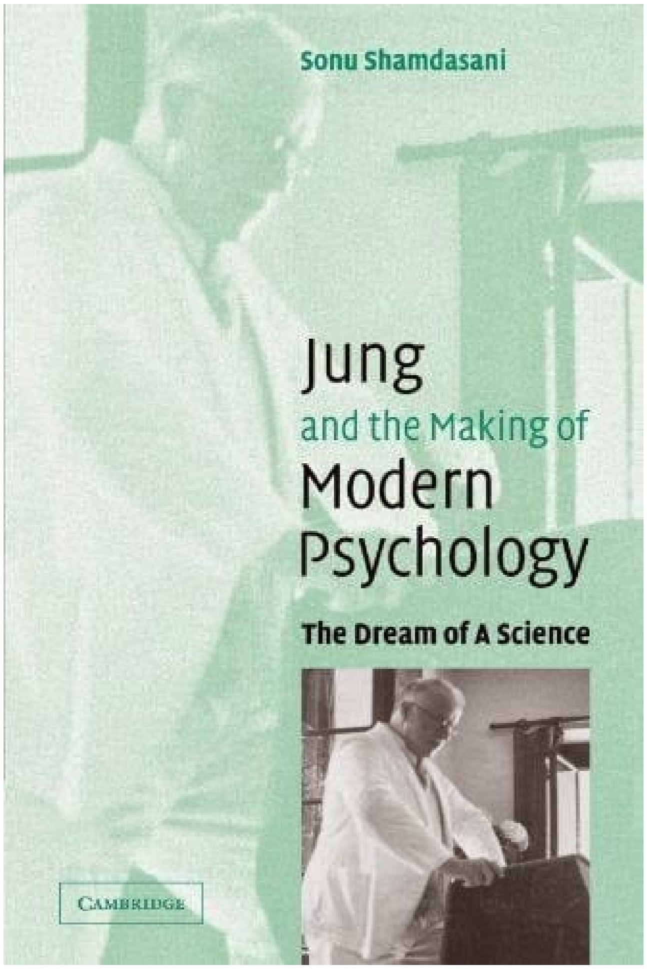
[22]Buy at Amazon here



Copyrighted Material
THE
RED BOOK
LIBER NOVUS
A Reader's Edition
C·G· JUNG
Edited and with an Introduction by
SONU SHAMDASANI
Copyrighted Material

[24]Buy at Amazon here

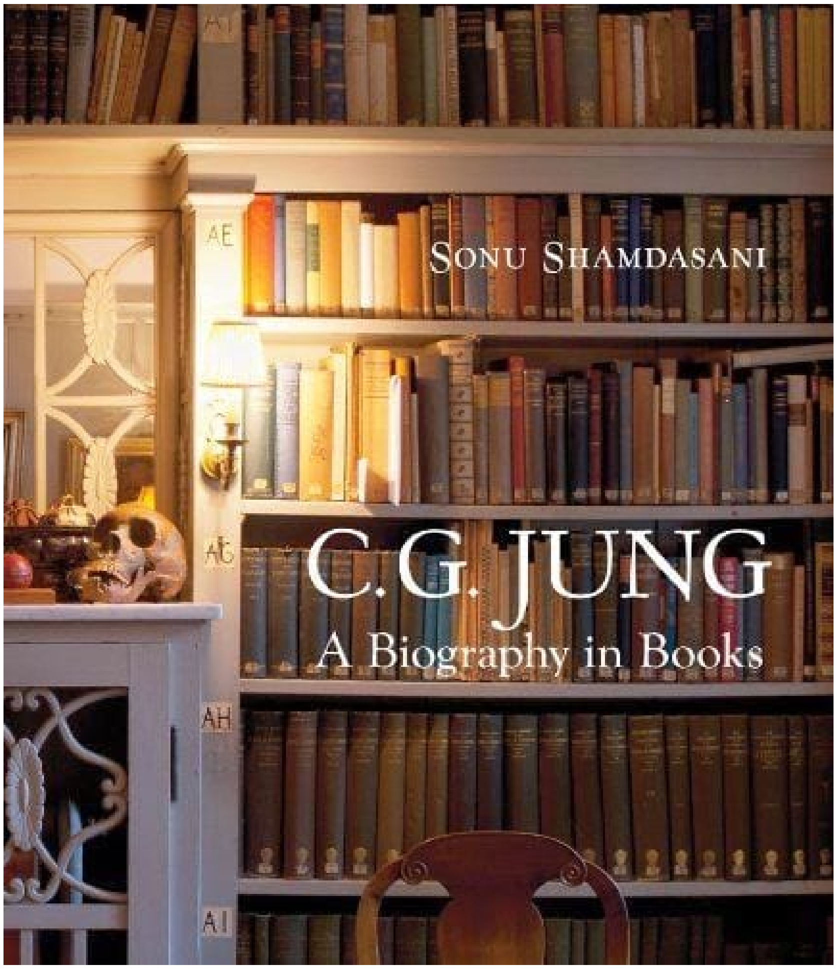
[25]



Sonu Shamdasani
Jung and the Making of Modern Psychology
The Dream of A Science
CAMBRIDGE

[26]Buy at Amazon here

[27]



Sonu Shamdasani
C.G. JUNG
A Biography in Books

[28]Buy at Amazon here

[29]
Books by Edward Edinger

[30]Books by Barbara Hannah

[31]Books by Erich Neumann

[32]Books by Sonu Shamdasani

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/3fa5c-1sonu.jpg`
2. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/188860235X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_0jtxub1B8Z9K1`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/0f591-2sonu.jpg`
4. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0415076560/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_wjtxub0QHWY0A`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/e941d-3sonu.jpg`
6. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0393065677/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_4itxub01ZSTM9`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/4fbfb-4sonu.jpg`
8. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691152519/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_xitxub1456VVS`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/93164-5sonu.jpg`
10. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691152055/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_jitxub0G0WDES`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/1454b-6e.jpg`
12. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691006768/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_8htxub0F1KMT9`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/e4adf-7sonu.jpg`
14. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/161145462X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Shtxub0RMMEG7`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/eb7ac-8sonu.jpg`
16. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0415186145/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Chtxub1JKTJ5G`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/522fe-9sonu.jpg`
18. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691006768/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_8htxub0F1KMT9`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/8896b-10sonu.jpg`
20. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0393088944/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_lhtxub1DQYWDM`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/83b77-11sonu.jpg`
22. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/1855753170/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_bhtxub1H98KX5`
23. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/c6860-12sonu.jpg`
24. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0393089088/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_1gtxub17W1PB4`
25. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/3bb90-13sonu.jpg`
26. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0521539099/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Jgtxub0GX86C9`
27. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/22715-14sonu.jpg`
28. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/039307367X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_jgtxub0ZQM292`
29. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-edward-edinger-jungian.html`
30. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-barbara-hannah_7.html`
31. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-erich-neumann-jungian.html`
32. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-sonu-shamdasani-jungian.html`

Books by Richard Wilhelm [Jungian] (2019-11-09 03:29)

[1] THE I CHING
OR BOOK OF CHANGES
WILHELM/BAYNES
BOLLINGEN SERIES XIX
PRINCETON UNIVERSITY PRESS
THE I CHING OR BOOK OF CHANGES
Wilhelm/Baynes

[2]Buy at Amazon here

[3] PENGUIN ARKANA
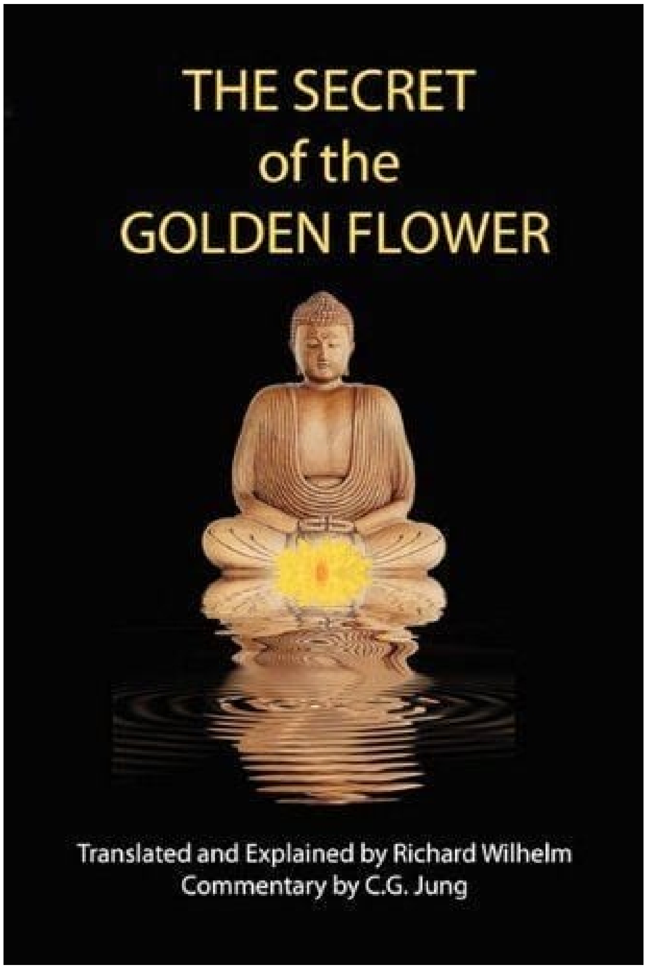
TAO TE CHING
LAO TZU
THE RICHARD WILHELM EDITION

[4]Buy at Amazon here

[5]



THE SECRET
of the
GOLDEN FLOWER
Translated and Explained by Richard Wilhelm
Commentary by C.G. Jung

[6]Buy at Amazon here

[7]
LECTURES ON THE I CHING
CONSTANCY
AND CHANGE

RICHARD WILHELM
Translated from the German by Irene Eber

BOLLINGEN SERIES XIX.2
PRINCETON

[8]Buy at Amazon here

[9] MYTHOS
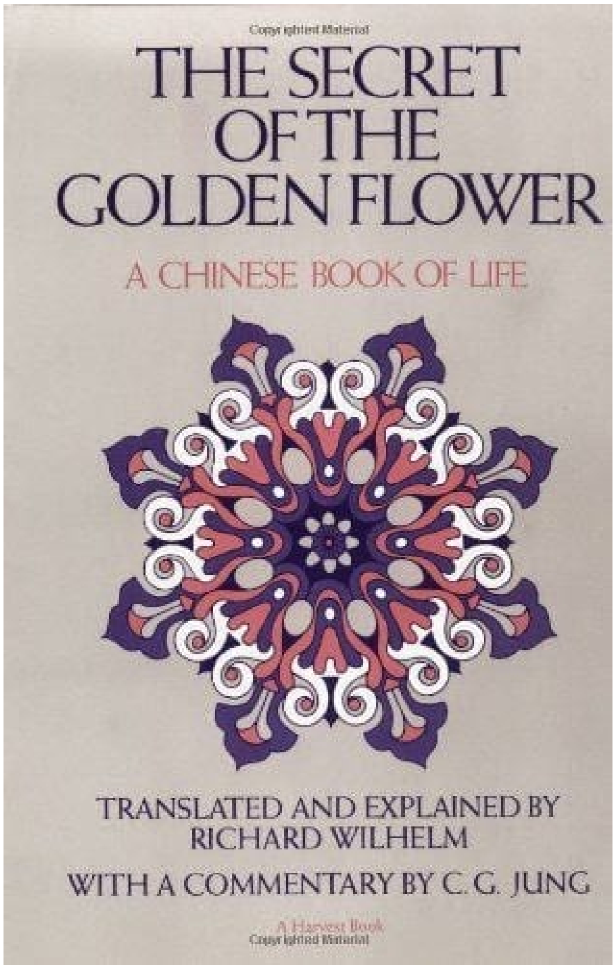
UNDERSTANDING THE I CHING
THE WILHELM LECTURES ON THE BOOK OF CHANGES
HELLMUT WILHELM
RICHARD WILHELM
bollingen series

[10]Buy at Amazon here

[11]



Copyrighted Material
THE SECRET OF THE GOLDEN FLOWER
A CHINESE BOOK OF LIFE
TRANSLATED AND EXPLAINED BY RICHARD WILHELM
WITH A COMMENTARY BY C. G. JUNG
A Harvest Book
Copyrighted Material

[12]Buy at Amazon here

[13] THE I CHING
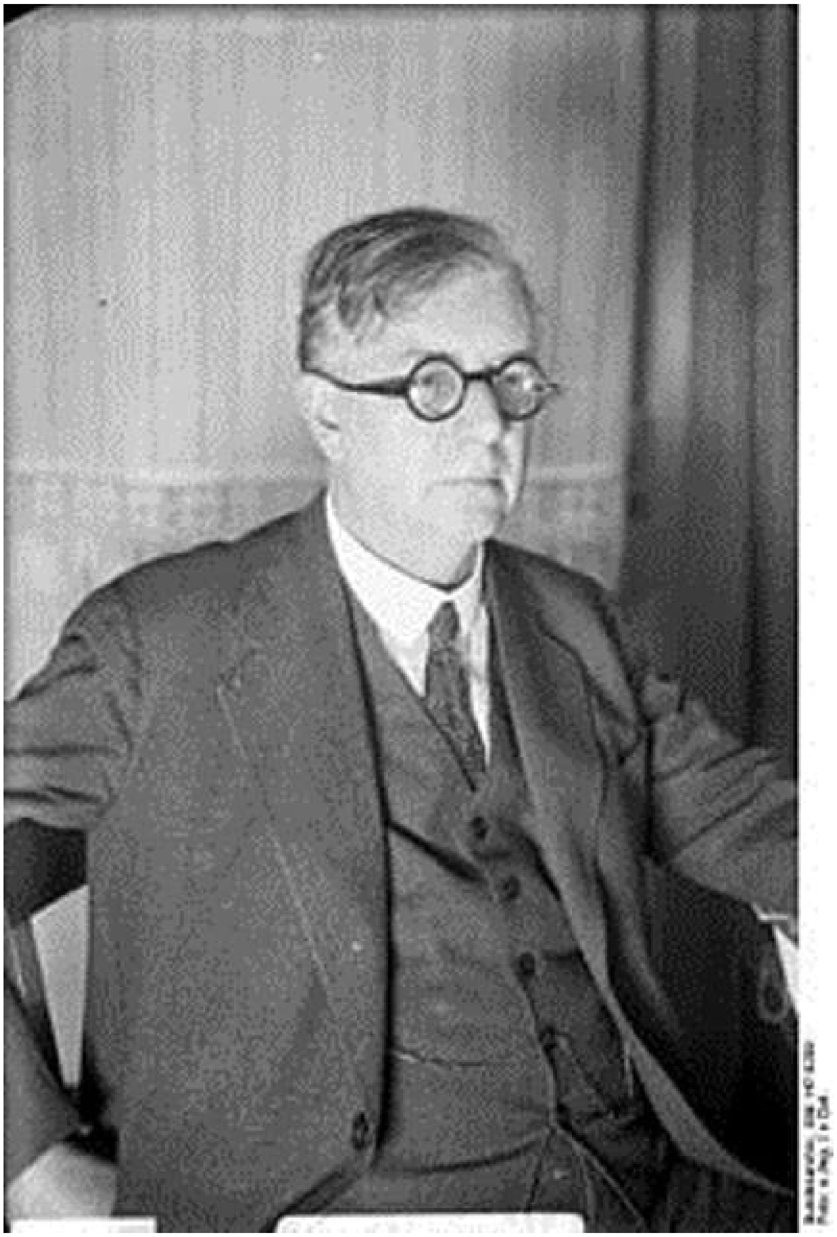
OR BOOK OF CHANGES
WILHELM/BAYNES
BOLLINGEN SERIES XIX
PRINCETON UNIVERSITY PRESS

[14]Buy at Amazon here

[15]

Bundesarchiv, Bild 146-2008-0022
Foto: o.Ang. | o.Dat.



[19]

Ein lamaistisches Vajry-Mandala zur Betrachtung zwecks Vorbereitung auf die Meditation

Tai-i chin-hua tsung-chih

DAS GEHEIMNIS
DER GOLDENEN
BLÜTE
EIN CHINESISCHES LEBENSBUCH

Überſetzt und erläutert von
RICHARD WILHELM
mit einem europäiſchen Kommentar von
C. G. JUNG

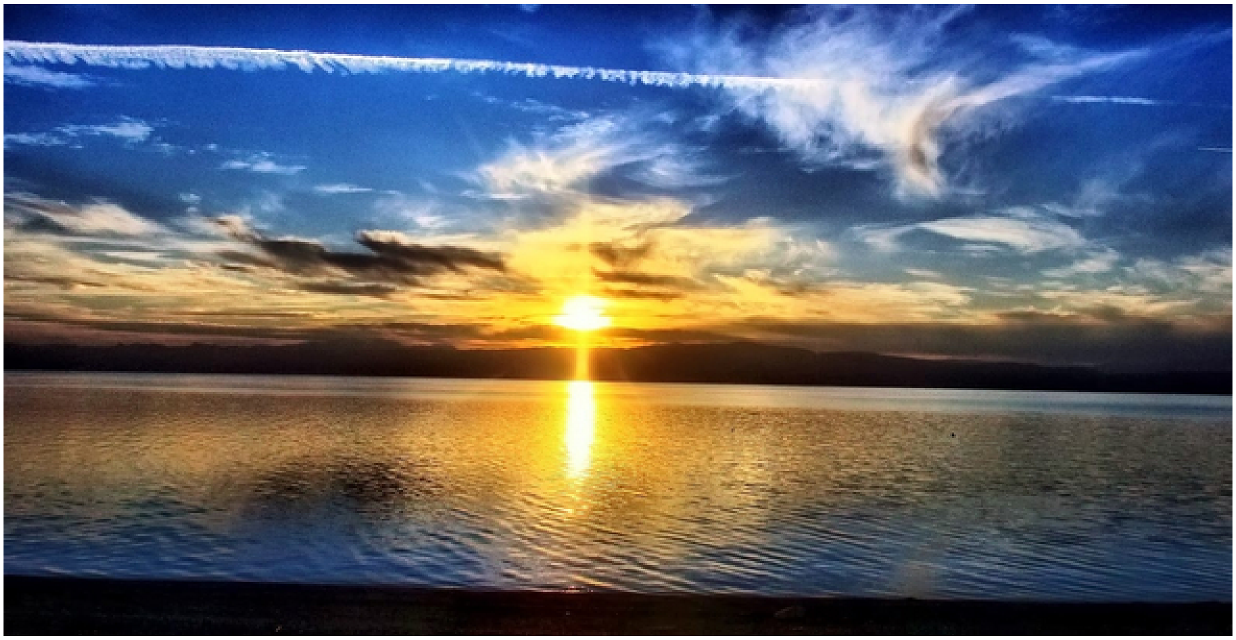
DORNVERLAG GRETE ULLMANN MÜNCHEN
c1929.

[21]
[22]

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/77eb9-aa.jpg
2. http://www.amazon.com/dp/B000P9XXKU/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_fGOxub10J3532
3. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b7879-bb.jpg
4. http://http//www.amazon.com/dp/0140190600/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_yFOxub0HFKMC5
5. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/03f2d-dd.jpg
6. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1585093432/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_bFOxub1MDATST
7. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/9432c-ee.jpg
8. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691018723/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_2EOxub134854G
9. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/10264-ff.jpg
10. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691001715/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_NEOxub01XESZB
11. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/c85bc-gg.jpg
12. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0156799804/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_gEOxub1KG2MMZ
13. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/9bf17-hh.jpg
14. http://www.amazon.com/dp/069109750X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_ZDOxub199GHNW
15. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/7c910-1w.jpg
16. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/ddcdd-2w.jpg
17. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/7b26b-3w.jpg
18. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/92b4e-4w.jpg
19. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b0cf0-6w.jpg
20. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/e3695-7w.jpg
21. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/fb0e5-original2bchinese2btext2btradition2bof2bthe2bi2bching.jpg
22. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b0335-richard2bwilhelm2bas2ba2byoung2bman.jpg

A sun that is endowed with human feeling and man’s limited consciousness. (2019-11-09 03:43)

[1]



Take for comparison the daily course of the sun - but a sun that is endowed with human feeling and man’s limited consciousness.

In the morning it rises from the nocturnal sea of unconsciousness and looks upon the wide, bright world which lies before it in an expanse that steadily widens the higher it climbs in the firmament.

In this extension of its field of action caused by its own rising, the sun will discover its significance; it will see the attainment of the greatest possible height, and the widest possible dissemination of its blessings, as its goal.

In this conviction the sun pursues its course to the unforeseen zenith-unforeseen, because its career is unique and individual, and the culminating point could not be calculated in advance.

At the stroke of noon the descent begins. And the descent means the reversal of all the ideals and values that were cherished in the morning. Carl Jung, "The Stages of Life" (1930). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P. 778.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/fe614-sun.jpg`

I want to emboss you like a coin (2019-11-09 04:03)

[1]

Soon after this on an autumn night I heard the voice of an old man (and this time I knew that it was Diahmon). He said: I want to turn you around. I want to master you. I want to emboss you like a coin. I want to do business with you. One should buy and sell you. You should pass from hand to hand. Self-willing is not for you. You are the will of the whole. Gold is no master out of its own will and yet it rules the whole, despised and greedily demanded, an inexorable ruler: it lies and waits. He who sees it longs for it.

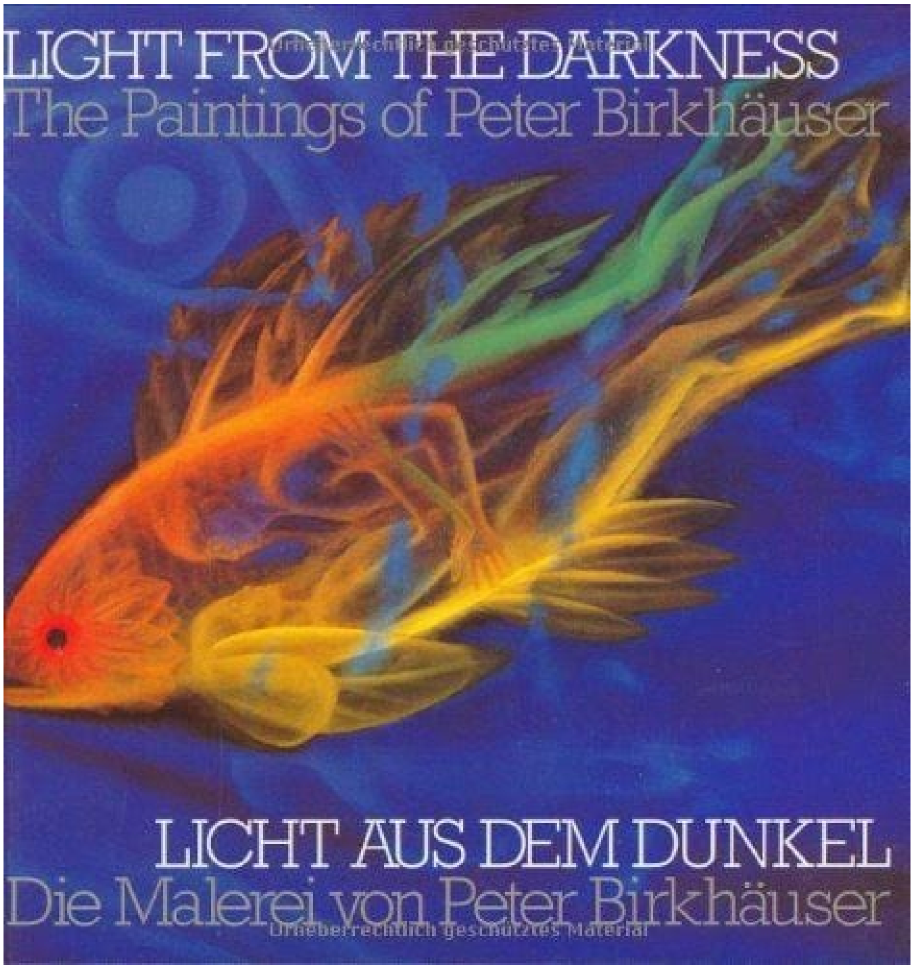
It does not follow one around, but lies silently, with a brightly gleaming countenance, self-sufficient, a king that needs no proof of its power. Everyone seeks after it, few find it, but even the smallest piece is highly esteemed. It neither gives nor squanders itself Everyone takes it where he finds it, and anxiously ensures that he doesn't lose the smallest part of it. Everyone denies that he depends on it, and yet he secretly stretches out his hand longingly toward it. Must gold prove its necessity? It is proven through the longing of men. Ask it: who takes me? He who takes it, has it. Gold does not stir. It sleeps and shines. Its brilliance confuses the senses. Without a word, it promises everything that men deem desirable. It ruins those to be ruined and helps those on the rise to ascend.

A blazing hoard is piled up, it awaits the taker. What tribulations do men not take upon themselves for the sake of gold? It waits and does not shorten their tribulations-the greater the tribulations, the greater the trouble, the more esteemed it is. It grows from underground, from the molten lava. It slowly exudes, hidden in veins and rocks. Man exerts all cunning to dig it out, to raise it." Carl Jung; Red Book.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/11/2c925-gold2bfunerary2bmask2bof2btutankhamun.jpg`

Marie Louise Von Franz Books [Jungian] (2019-11-09 04:19)

[1]



LIGHT FROM THE DARKNESS
The Paintings of Peter Birkhäuser
LICHT AUS DEM DUNKEL
Die Malerei von Peter Birkhäuser
Urheberrechtlich geschütztes Material

[2]Buy at Amazon here

[3] Marie-Louise von Franz
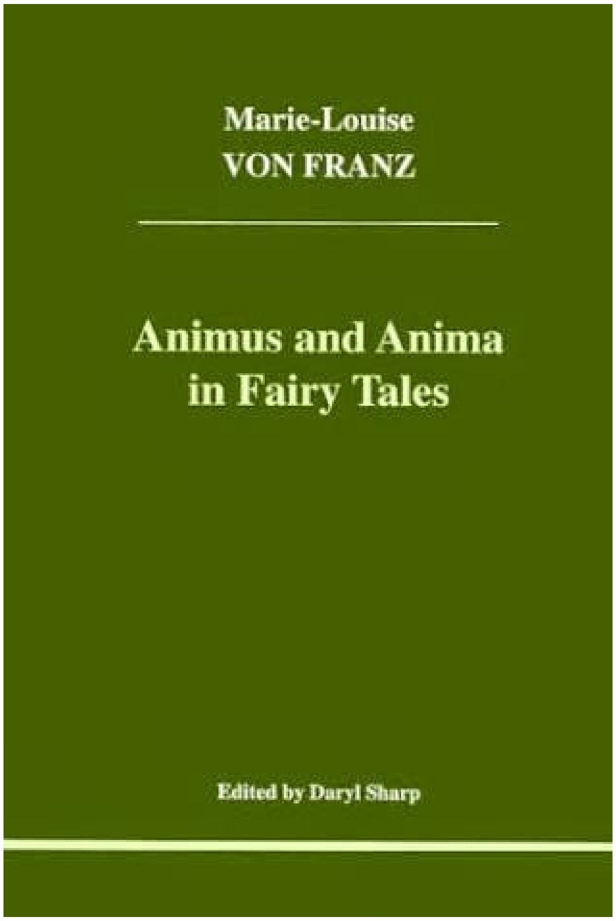
alchemical active imagination
REVISED EDITION
Nisi granum frumenti &c.

[4]Buy at Amazon here

[5]



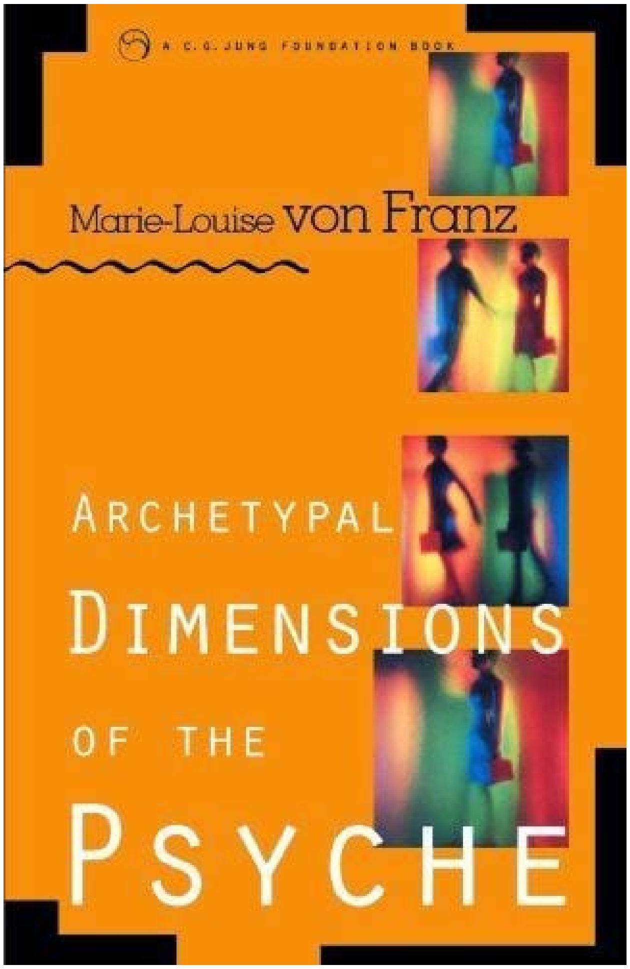
Marie-Louise
VON FRANZ

Animus and Anima
in Fairy Tales

Edited by Daryl Sharp

[6]Buy at Amazon here

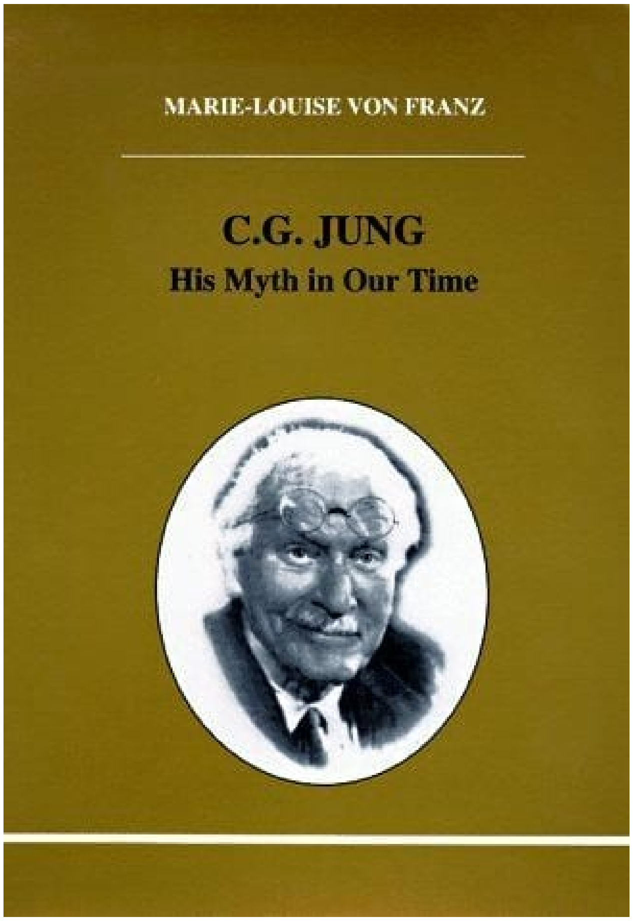
[7]



A C. G. JUNG FOUNDATION BOOK
Marie-Louise von Franz
ARCHETYPAL DIMENSIONS OF THE PSYCHE

[8]Buy at Amazon here

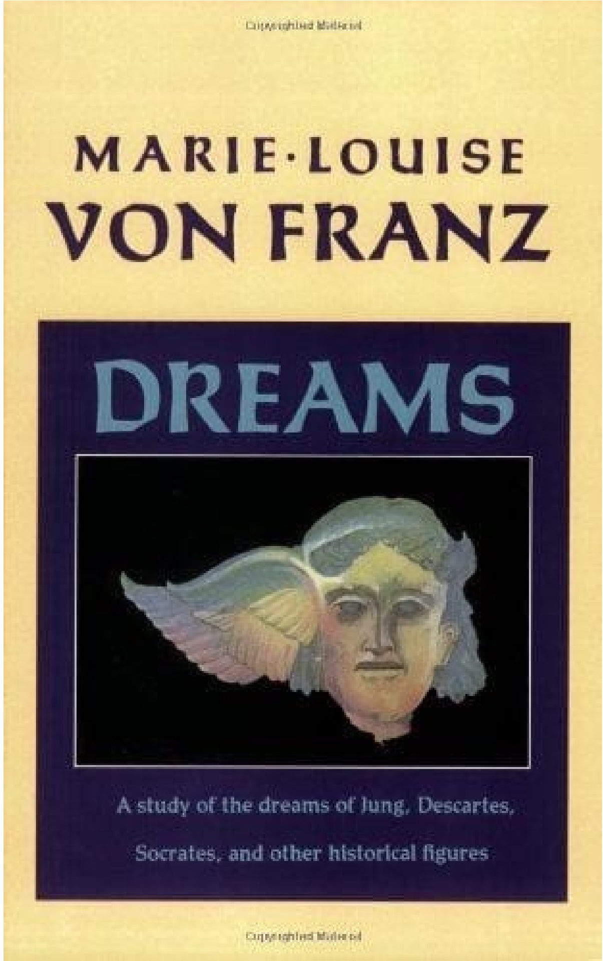
[9]



MARIE-LOUISE VON FRANZ
C.G. JUNG
His Myth in Our Time

[10]Buy at Amazon here

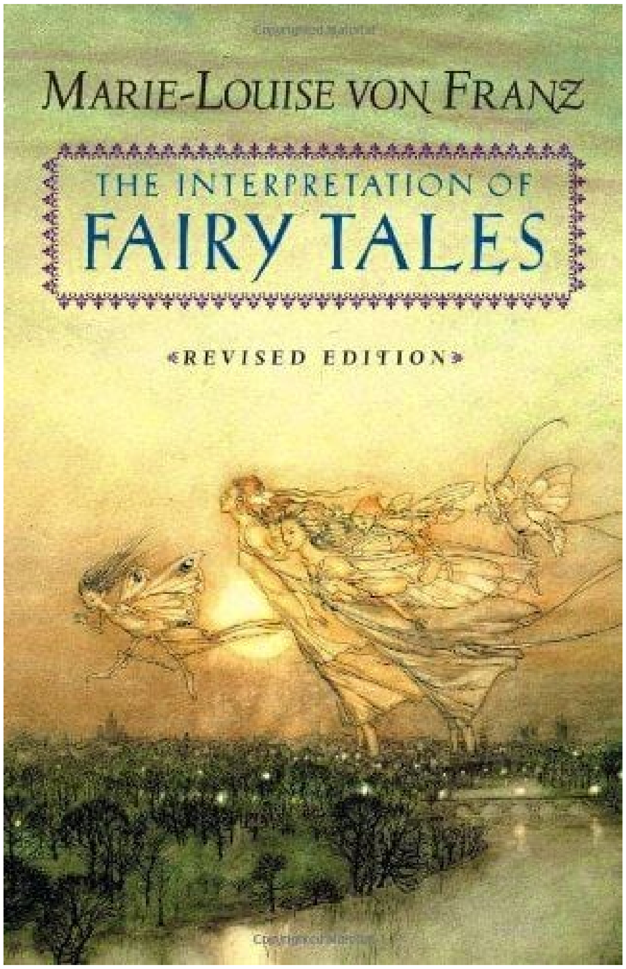
[11]



Copyrighted Material
MARIE·LOUISE
VON FRANZ
DREAMS
A study of the dreams of Jung, Descartes, Socrates, and other historical figures
Copyrighted Material

[12]Buy at Amazon here

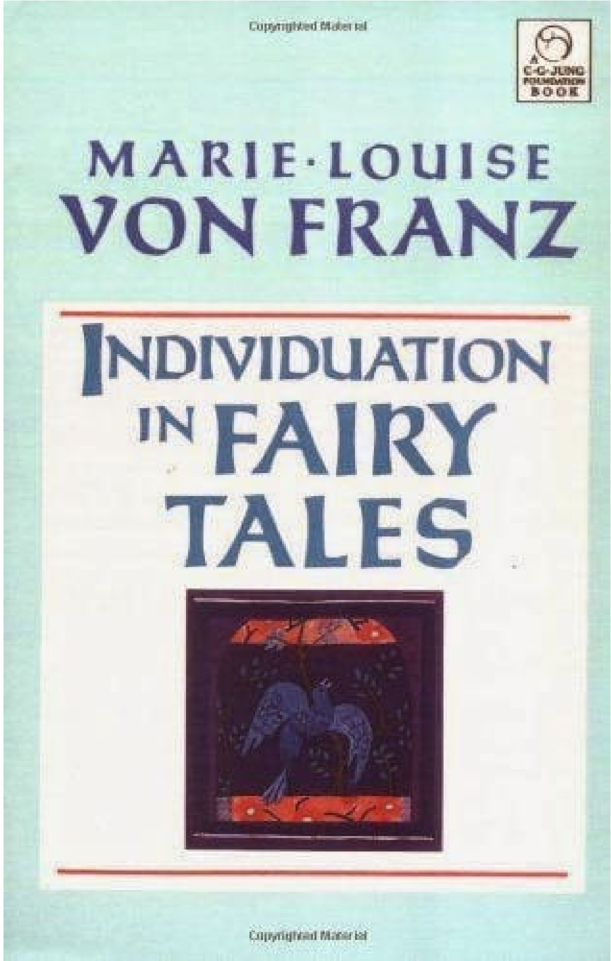
[13]



MARIE-LOUISE VON FRANZ
THE INTERPRETATION OF
FAIRY TALES
REVISED EDITION

[14]Buy at Amazon here

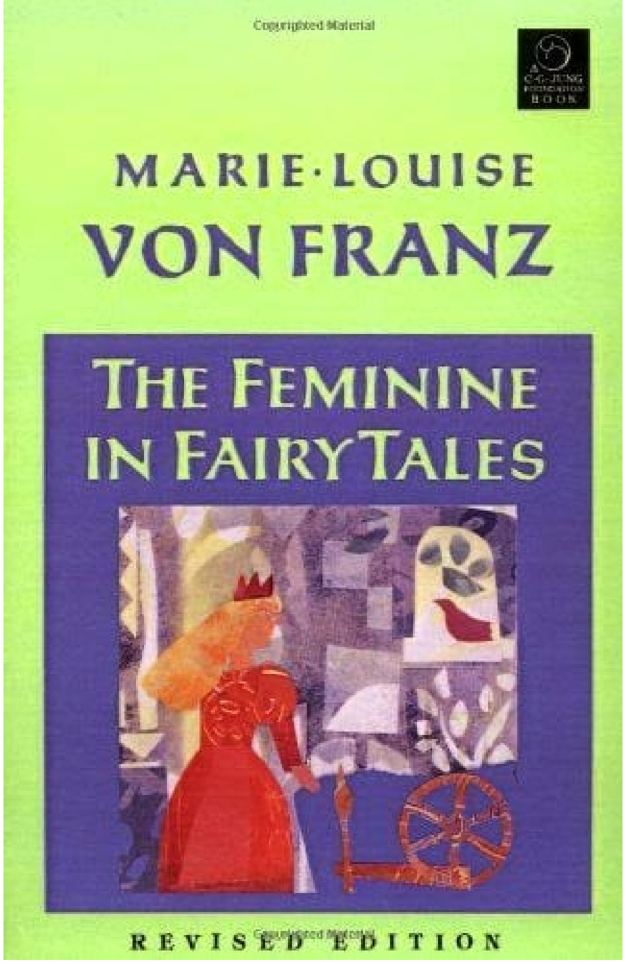
[15]



Copyrighted Material
A C·G·JUNG FOUNDATION BOOK
MARIE·LOUISE
VON FRANZ
INDIVIDUATION IN FAIRY TALES
Copyrighted Material

[16]Buy at Amazon here

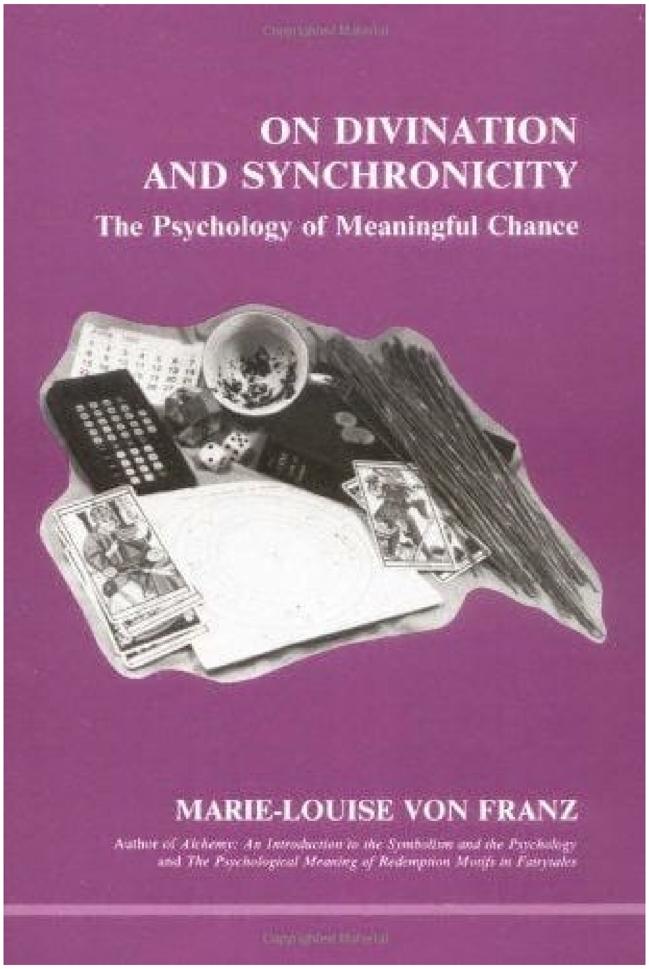
[17]



Copyrighted Material
A C.G. JUNG FOUNDATION BOOK
MARIE·LOUISE
VON FRANZ
THE FEMININE IN FAIRY TALES
REVISED EDITION

[18]Buy at Amazon here

[19]



Copyrighted Material

ON DIVINATION
AND SYNCHRONICITY
The Psychology of Meaningful Chance

MARIE-LOUISE VON FRANZ
Author of Alchemy: An Introduction to the Symbolism and the Psychology and The Psychological Meaning of Redemption Motifs in Fairytales

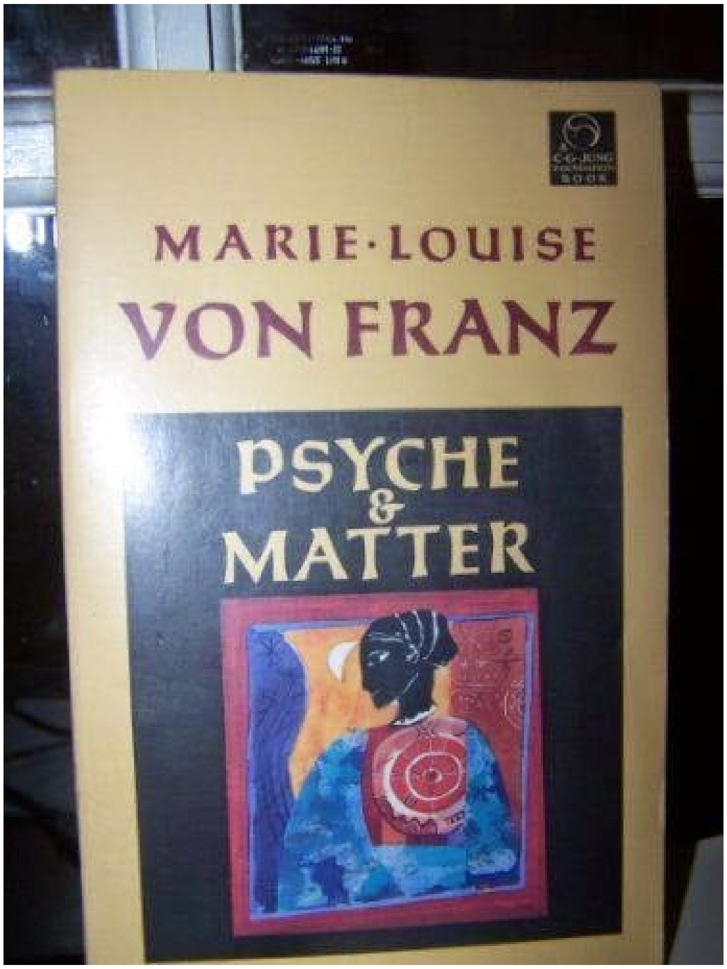
Copyrighted Material

[20]Buy at Amazon here

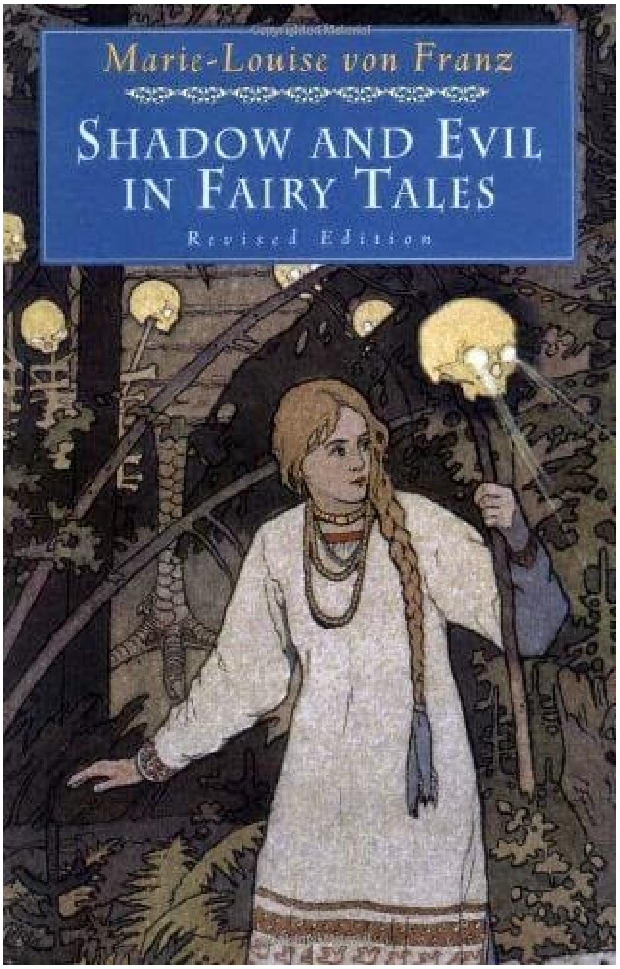
[21]



A C.G. JUNG FOUNDATION BOOK
MARIE·LOUISE
VON FRANZ
PSYCHE
&
MATTER

[22]Buy at Amazon

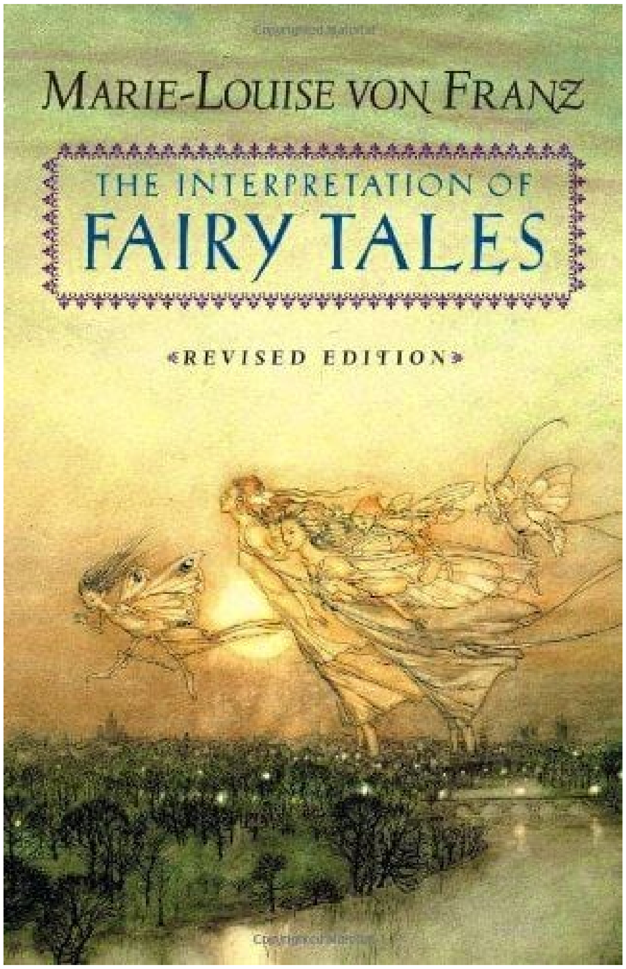
[23]



Copyrighted Material
Marie-Louise von Franz
SHADOW AND EVIL IN FAIRY TALES
Revised Edition

[24]Buy at Amazon here

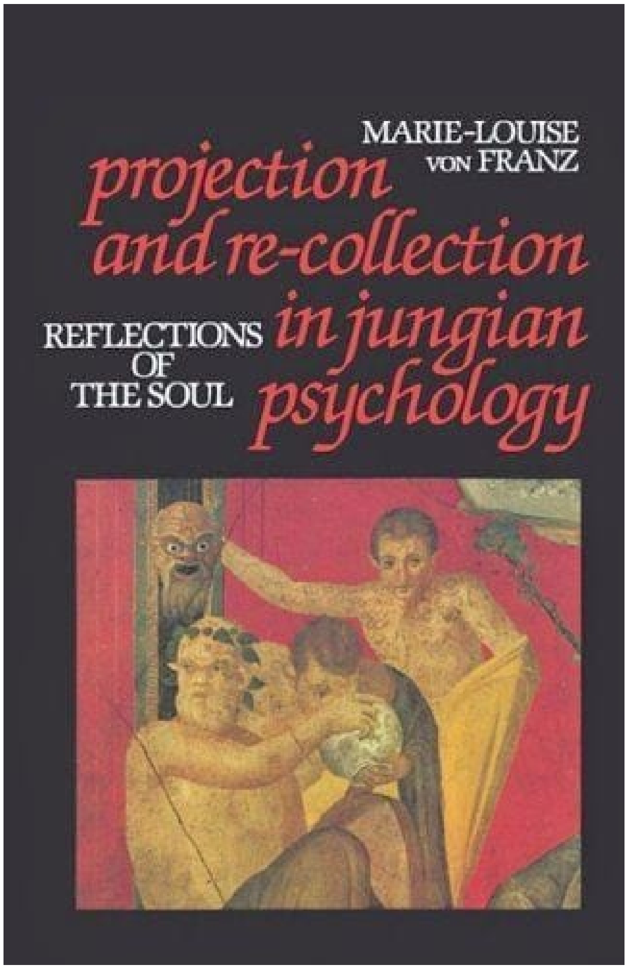
[25]



Copyrighted Material
MARIE-LOUISE VON FRANZ
THE INTERPRETATION OF
FAIRY TALES
REVISED EDITION
Copyrighted Material

[26]Buy at Amazon here

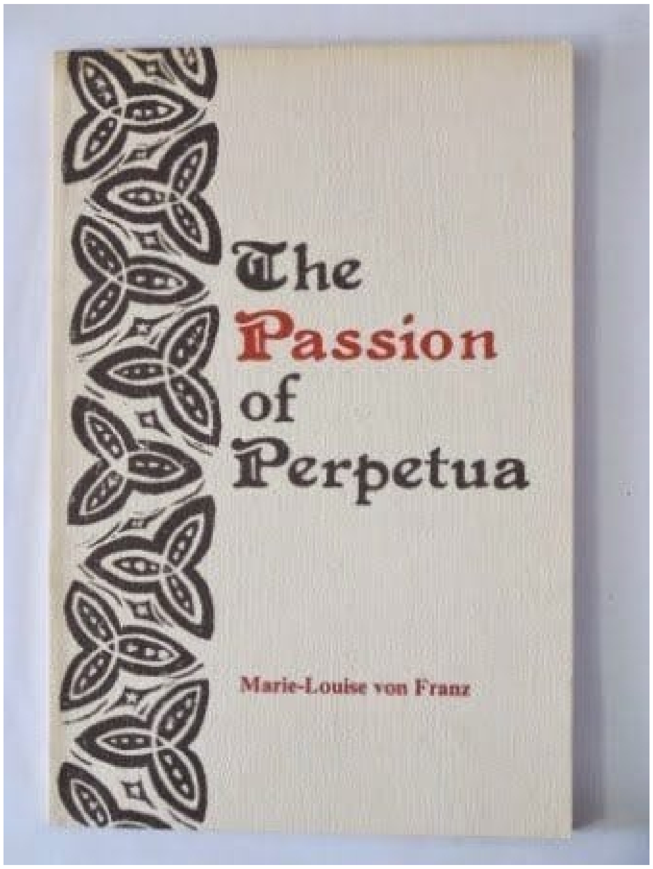
[27]



MARIE-LOUISE
VON FRANZ
projection and re-collection in jungian psychology
REFLECTIONS OF THE SOUL

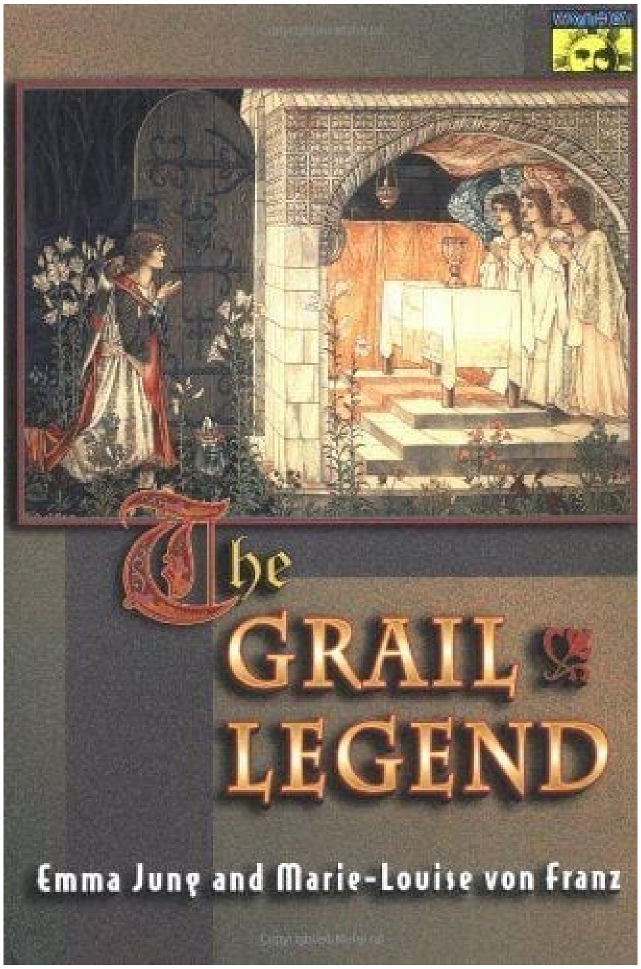
[28]Buy at Amazon here

[29]



The Passion of Perpetua
Marie-Louise von Franz

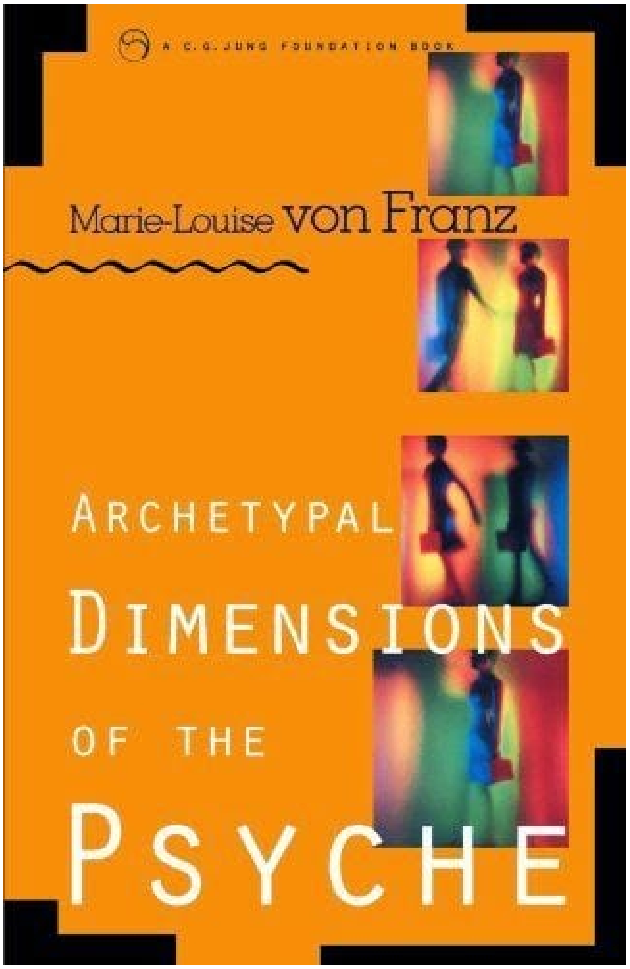
[30]Buy at Amazon here



The GRAIL LEGEND
Emma Jung and Marie-Louise von Franz

[32]Buy at Amazon here

[33]



A C.G. JUNG FOUNDATION BOOK
Marie-Louise von Franz
ARCHETYPAL DIMENSIONS
OF THE PSYCHE

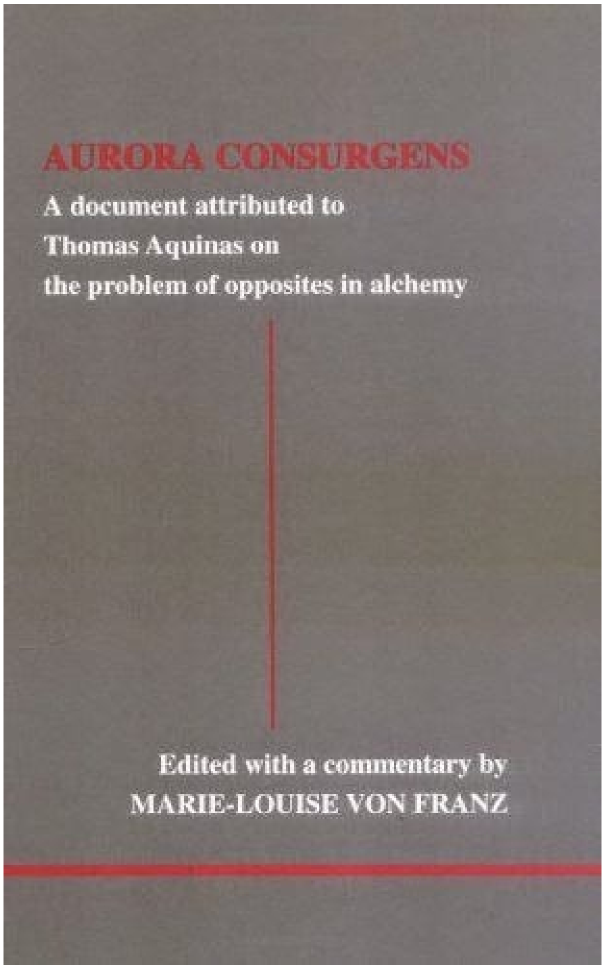
[34]Buy at Amazon here

[35]



AURORA CONSURGENS
A document attributed to Thomas Aquinas on the problem of opposites in alchemy

Edited with a commentary by
MARIE-LOUISE VON FRANZ

[36]Buy at Amazon here

[37]
MARIE-LOUISE VON FRANZ

The Psychological Meaning of REDEMPTION MOTIFS
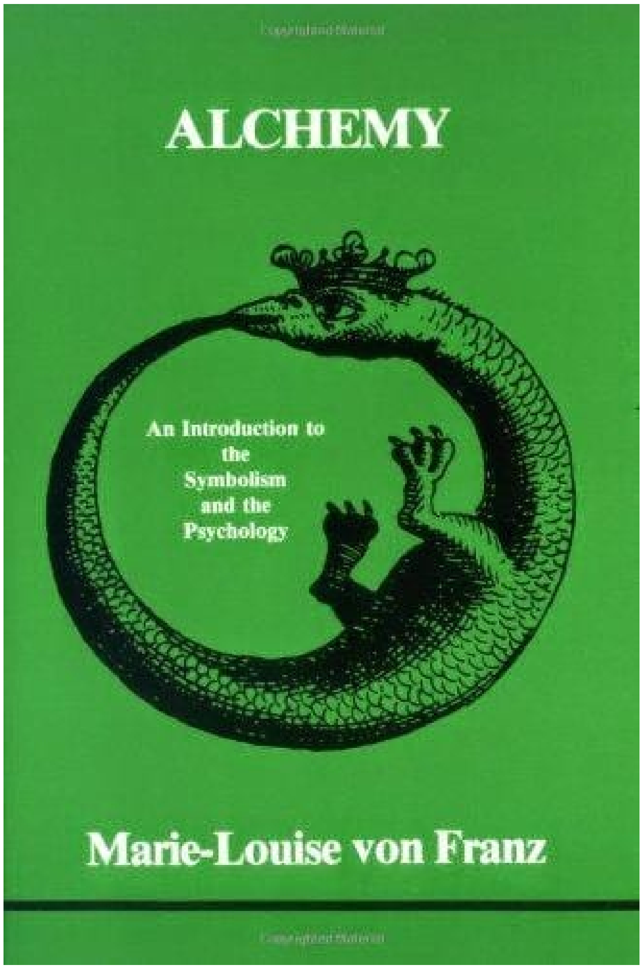
IN FAIRYTALES

[38]Buy at Amazon here

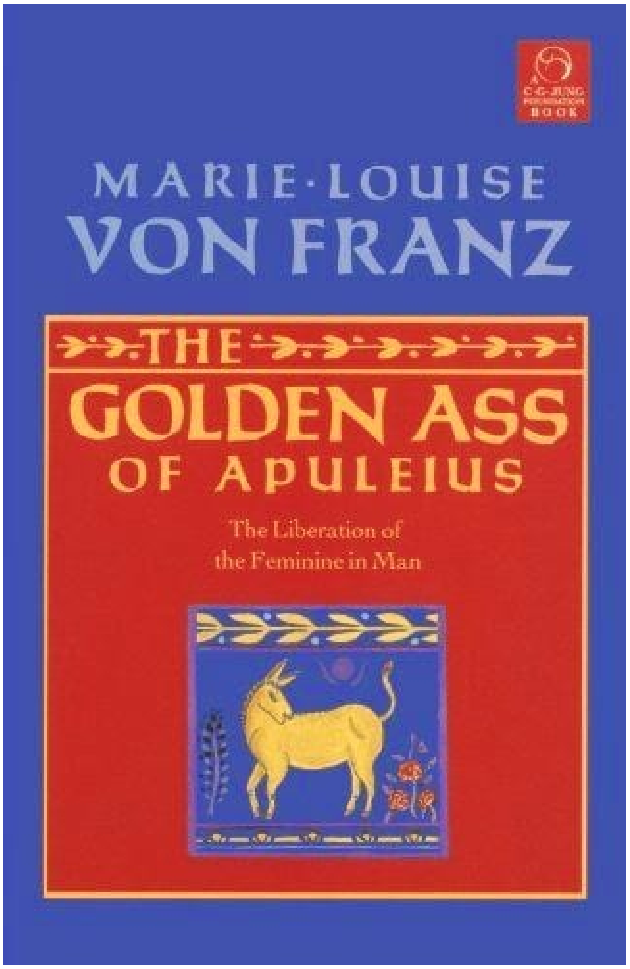
[39]



ALCHEMY
An Introduction to the Symbolism and the Psychology
Marie-Louise von Franz

[40]Buy at Amazon here

[41]



A C·G·JUNG FOUNDATION BOOK
MARIE·LOUISE
VON FRANZ
THE GOLDEN ASS
OF APULEIUS
The Liberation of the Feminine in Man

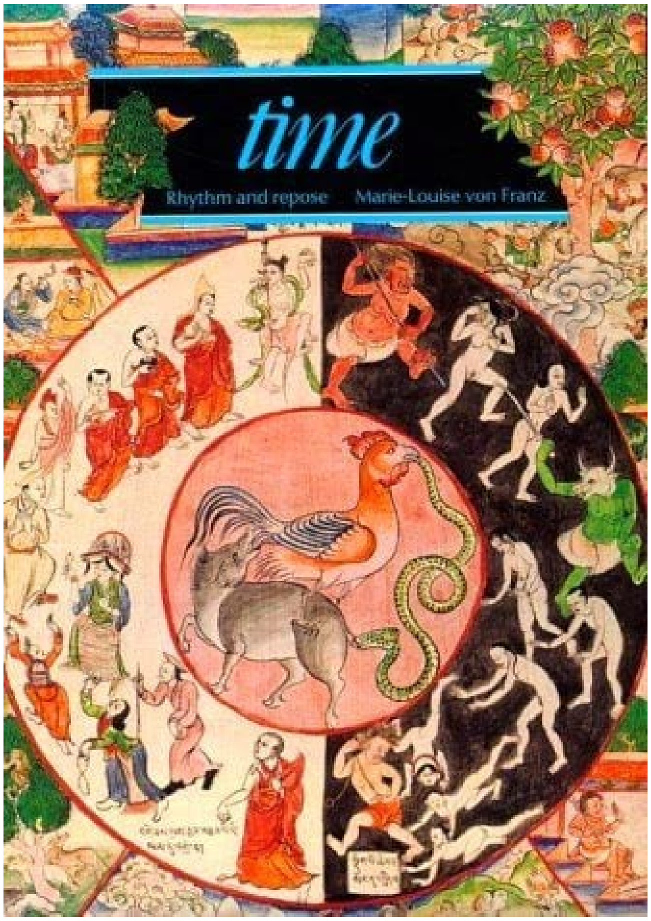
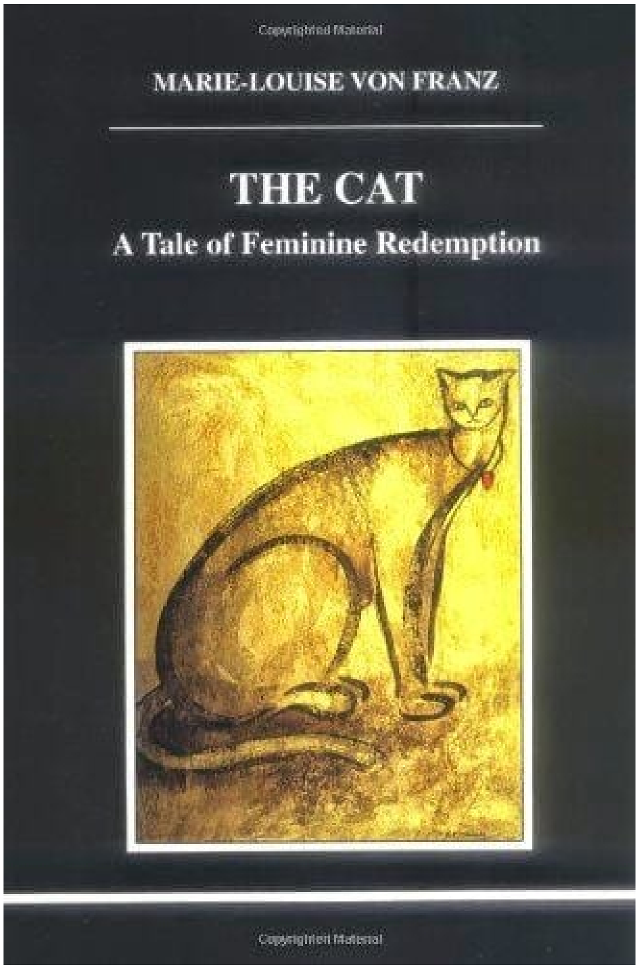
[42]Buy at Amazon

[43]



time
Rhythm and repose
Marie-Louise von Franz

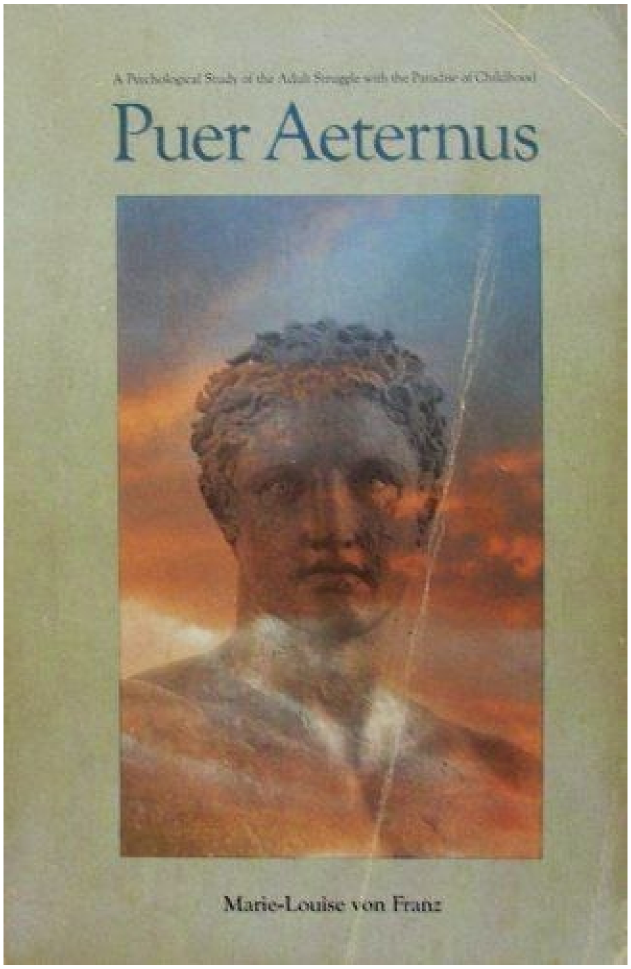
[44]Buy at Amazon here



Copyrighted Material
MARIE-LOUISE VON FRANZ
THE CAT
A Tale of Feminine Redemption
Copyrighted Material

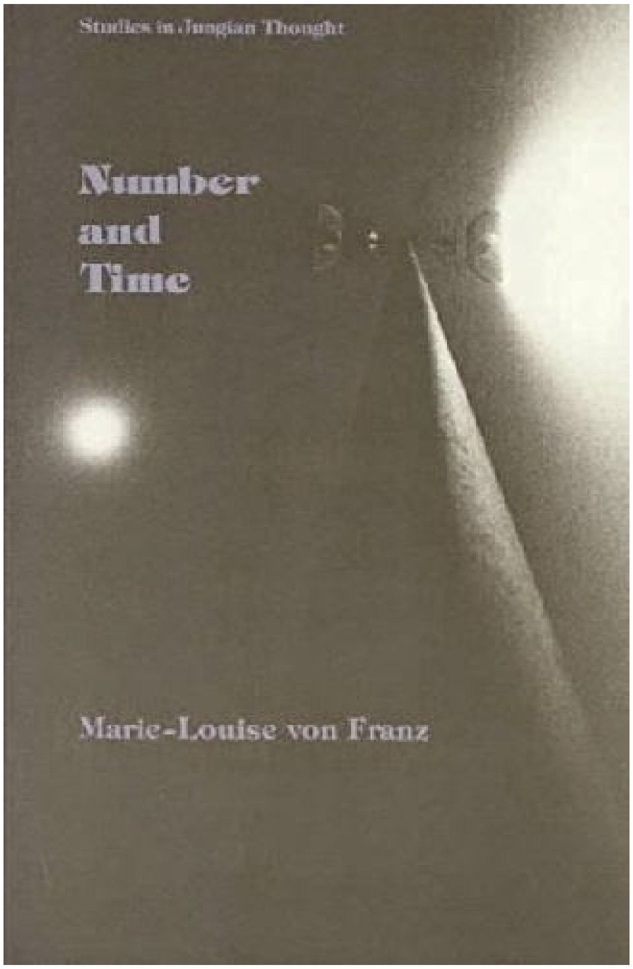
[46]Buy at Amazon here

[47]



A Psychological Study of the Adult Struggle with the Paradise of Childhood
Puer Aeternus
Marie-Louise von Franz

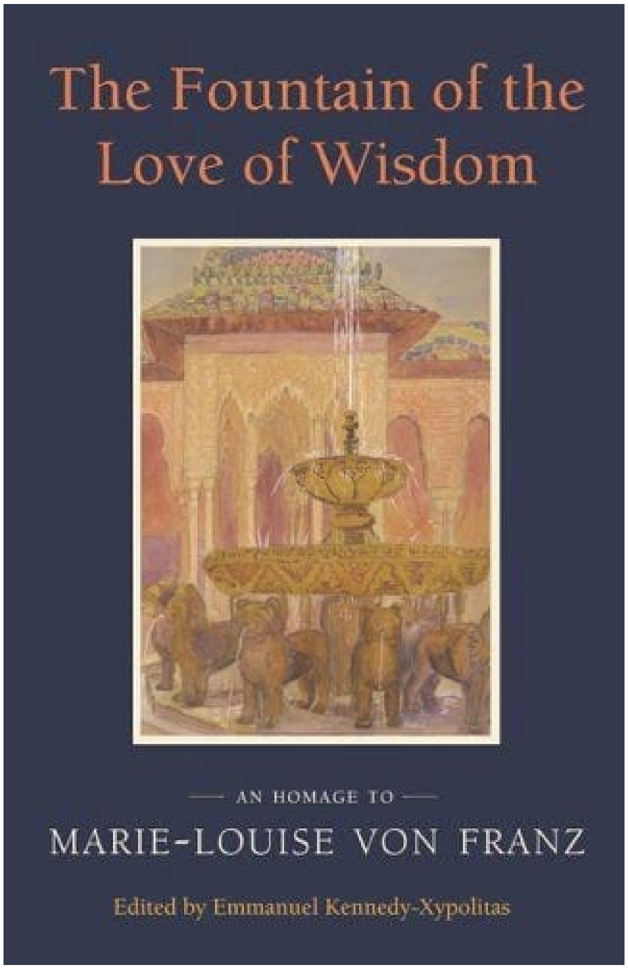
[48]Buy at Amazon here



Studies in Jungian Thought
Number and Time
Marie-Louise von Franz

[50]Buy at Amazon here

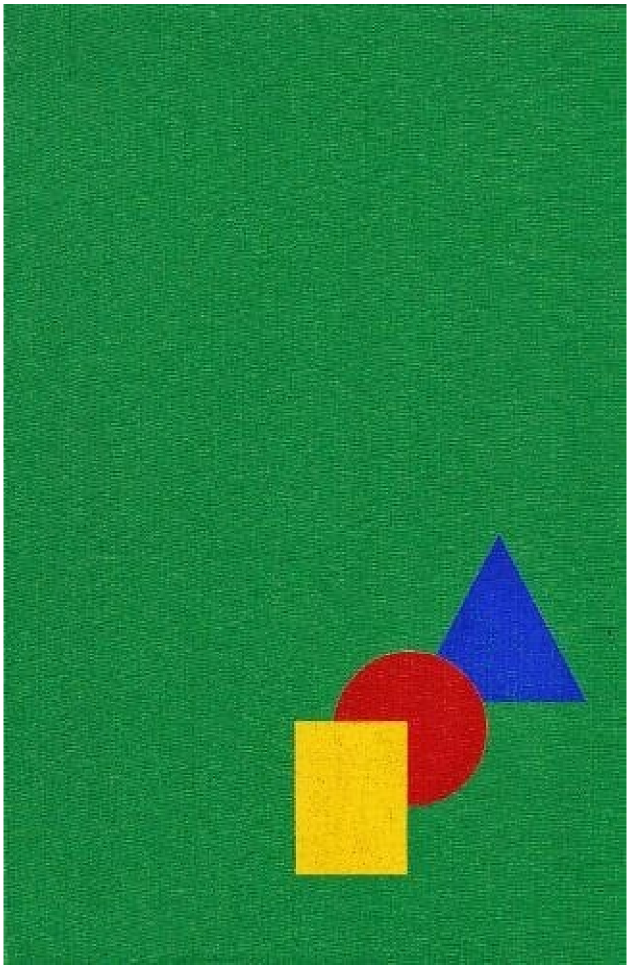
[51]



The Fountain of the Love of Wisdom
AN HOMAGE TO
MARIE-LOUISE VON FRANZ
Edited by Emmanuel Kennedy-Xypolitas

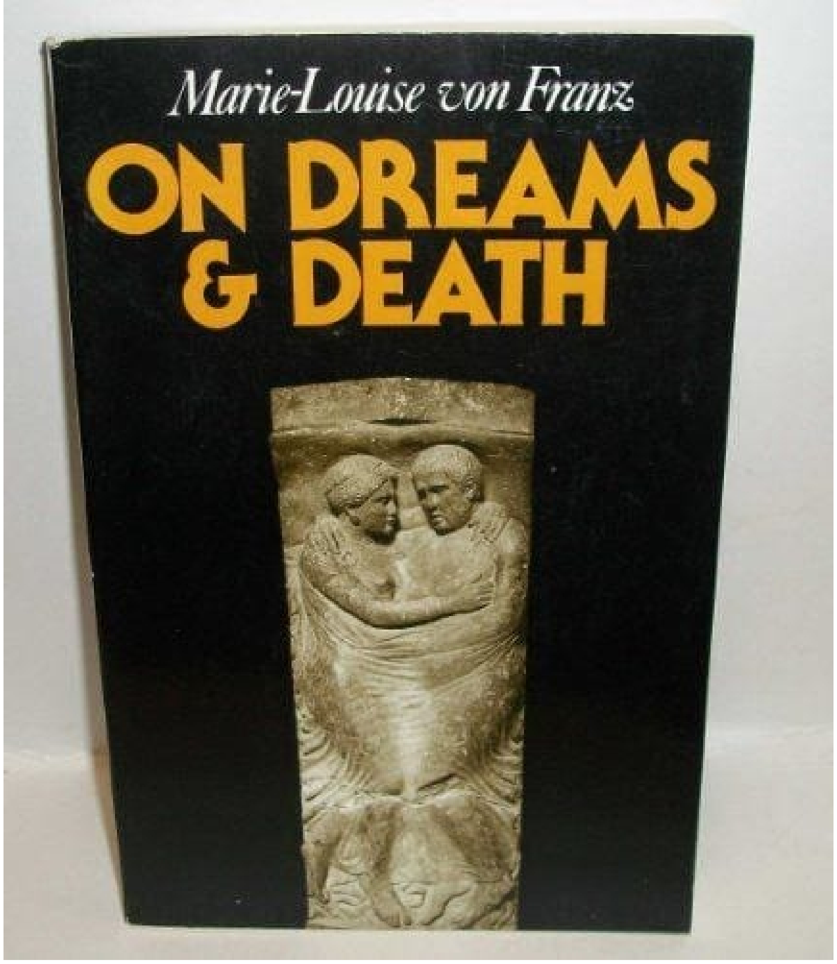
[52]Buy at Amazon here

[53]



[54]Buy at Amazon here

[55]



Marie-Louise von Franz
ON DREAMS & DEATH

[56]Buy on Amazon here

[57]

PSYCHO-THERAPY
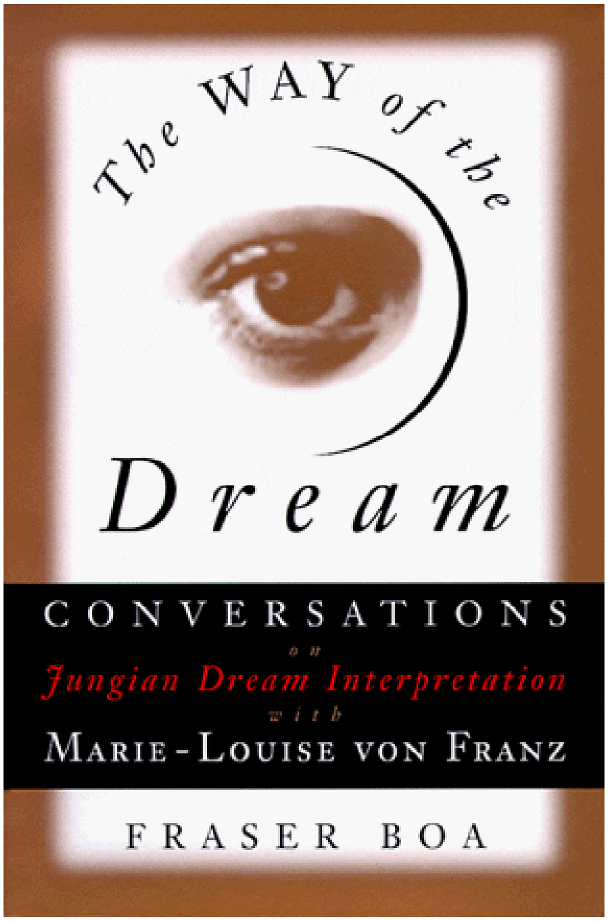
MARIE-LOUISE
VON FRANZ

[58]Buy at Amazon here



The WAY of the Dream
CONVERSATIONS on Jungian Dream Interpretation with Marie-Louise von Franz FRASER BOA

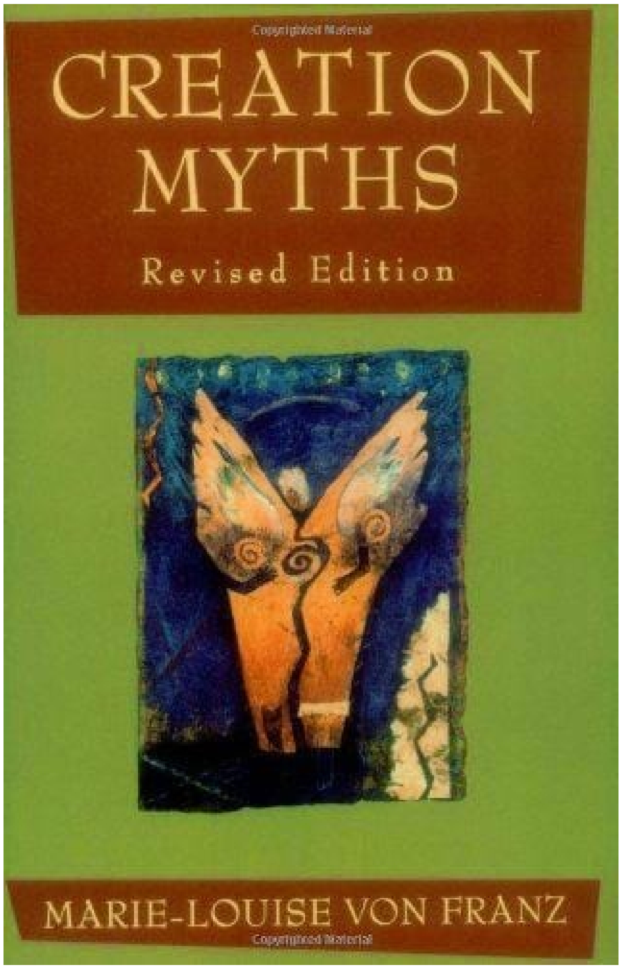
[60]Buy at Amazon here

[61]



Copyrighted Material
CREATION MYTHS
Revised Edition
MARIE-LOUISE VON FRANZ
Copyrighted Material

[62]Buy at Amazon here

[63]

[64]

[65]

[66]

[67]

[68]

[69]

[70]

[71]

[72]

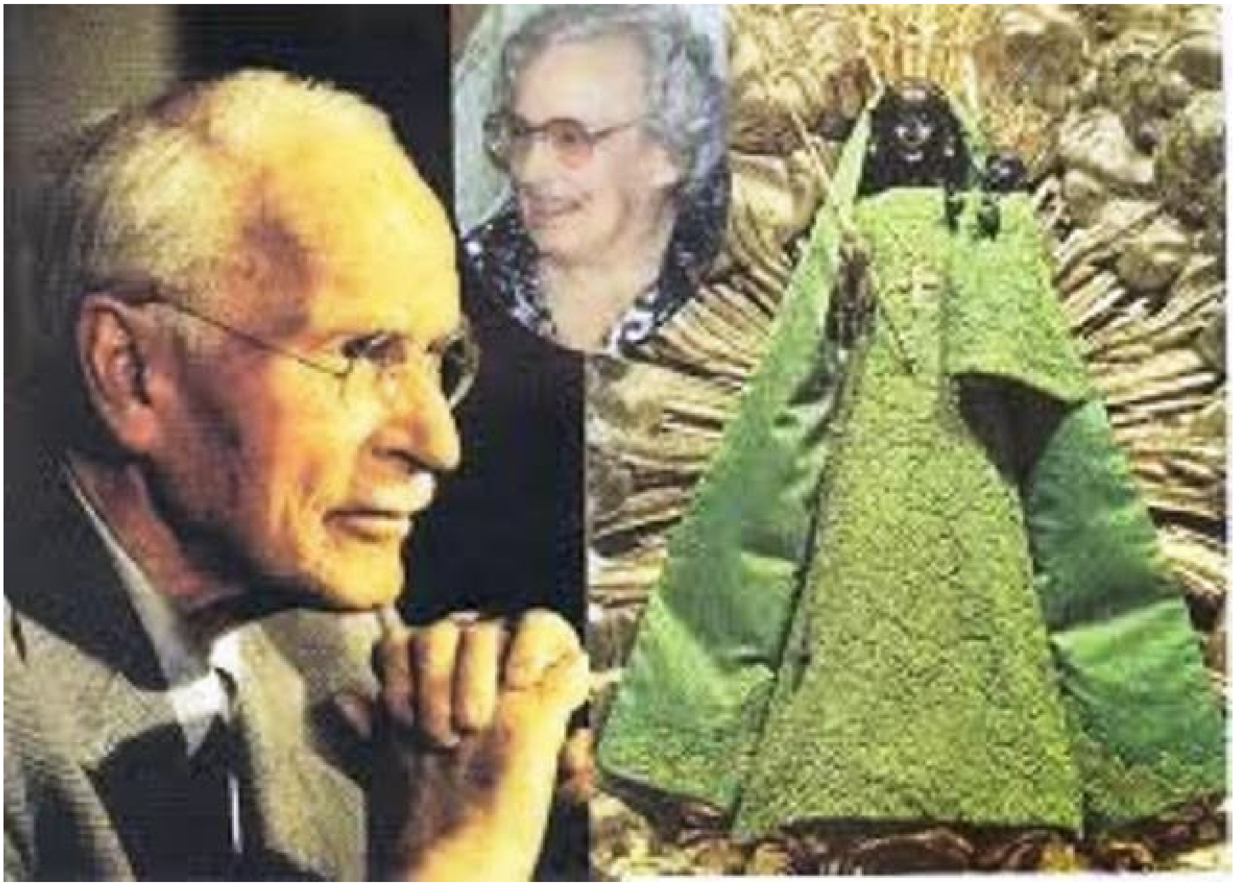
[73]

[74]

[75]

[76]

[77]



[78]

[79]Books by Marie Louise Von Franz

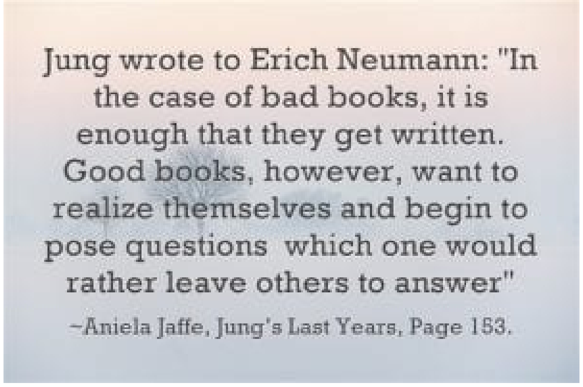
1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/c9a5e-1.jpg`
2. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/3764311908/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_HC3wub1EA77EF`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/3a0a1-2.jpg`
4. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0877735891/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_pB3wub1HXBWGD`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/3f2d7-3.jpg`
6. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/B00NP0D9M0/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_FA3wub0YQ1ZDA`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/6f97a-4.jpg`
8. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/1570624267/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_mz3wub11VX8G6`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b6e98-5.jpg`

10. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123783/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_vy3wub05NDTDH
11. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/1507e-6.jpg
12. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1570620350/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_yx3wub03VBSVD
13. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/bb641-7.jpg
14. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0877735263/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Su3wub03G16G0
15. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/a4da9-8.jpg
16. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1570626138/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Ov3wub1E7A70Z
17. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/caefb-9.jpg
18. http://www.amazon.com/dp/157062609X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Cw3wub0M877EP
19. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/31b0c-10.jpg
20. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123023/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_ft3wub0VB0WWT
21. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/2429f-11.jpg
22. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0877739021/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_qq3wub132H054
23. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/f1f3b-12.jpg
24. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0877739749/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Nn3wub0NC8T5V
25. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b7557-13.jpg
26. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0877735263/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_mp3wub1J8KCNJ
27. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/81912-14.jpg
28. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0877735263/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_mp3wub1J8KCNJ
29. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/fc5a9-15.jpg
30. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0875484174/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_zr3wub02DPGHB
31. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/5dc9e-16.jpg
32. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691002371/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_zP9vub1EWKHXX
33. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/286b0-17.jpg
34. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1570624267/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Oc-vub15BHZKQ
35. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/a02e0-18.jpg
36. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123902/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Kf-vub174YRR1
37. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/ea3cf-19.jpg
38. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123015/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_6f-vub0FV34ZP
39. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/7a1d4-20.jpg
40. http://www.amazon.com/dp/091912304X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_1c-vub023KHKF
41. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/e2a66-21.jpg
42. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1570626111/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Jd-vub0JPW9Y0
43. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/2513a-22.jpg
44. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0500810168/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_cf-vub1FV29GR
45. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/3f243-24.jpg
46. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123848/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Oe-vub1K7JAZM
47. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/86992-25.jpg
48. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0938434012/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_ye-vub17FP6YB
49. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/14b8e-26.jpg
50. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0810105322/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_vf-vub0GHKE1V
51. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/ac153-27.jpg
52. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1888602384/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_JK-vub01NZHCD
53. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/1e062-28.jpg
54. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0969325401/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Gg-vub0XFBQT9
55. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/f3760-29.jpg
56. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0877734054/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_pg-vub1NC1ASC
57. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/55e08-30.jpg
58. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1570626219/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_pd-vub1HNBHMJ
59. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/27759-31.gif

60. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1570620369/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_ad-vub0XF0BQN
61. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/f193e-32.jpg
62. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1570626065/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Wd-vub0Z5PVTA
63. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/78ca6-1.jpg
64. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/582ba-2.jpg
65. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/bcf75-3.jpg
66. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/240fc-4.jpg
67. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/aef95-5.jpg
68. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/4aa55-6.jpg
69. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/60301-7.jpg
70. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/e4599-8.jpg
71. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/bd428-9.jpg
72. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b2817-10.jpg
73. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/fd1fe-11.jpg
74. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/a6b85-12.jpg
75. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/f03ba-13.jpg
76. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/bc85d-14.jpg
77. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/1351c-15.jpg
78. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/33f3e-16.jpg
79. http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/marie-louise-von-franz-books-jungian.html

---

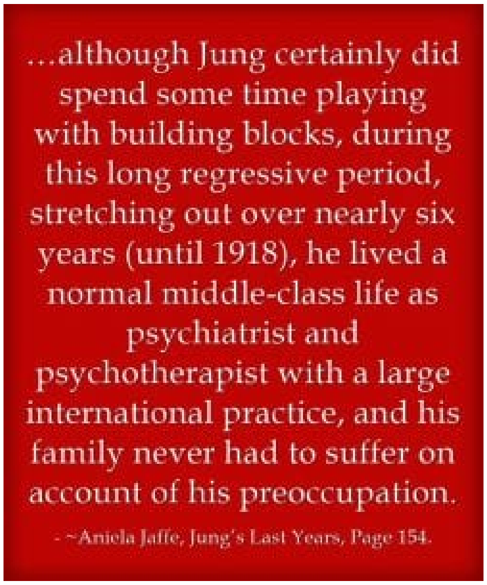
Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-11-09 04:21)



Jung wrote to Erich Neumann: "In the case of bad books, it is enough that they get written. Good books, however, want to realize themselves and begin to pose questions which one would rather leave others to answer"

~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 153.

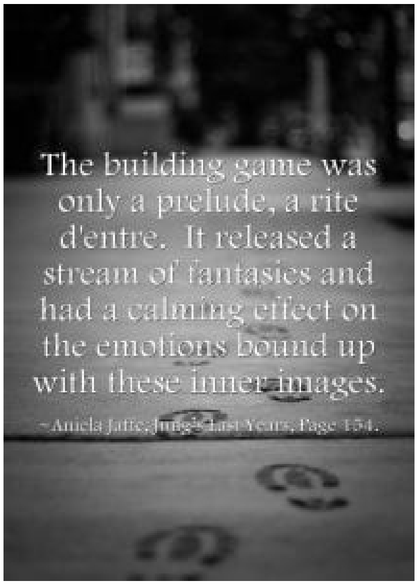
Jung wrote to Erich Neumann: ”In the case of bad books, it is enough that they get written. Good books, however, want to realize themselves and begin to pose questions which one would rather leave others to answer" Aniela Jaffe, Jung’s Last Years, Page 153.



…although Jung certainly did spend some time playing with building blocks, during this long regressive period, stretching out over nearly six years (until 1918), he lived a normal middle-class life as psychiatrist and psychotherapist with a large international practice, and his family never had to suffer on account of his preoccupation.

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 154.

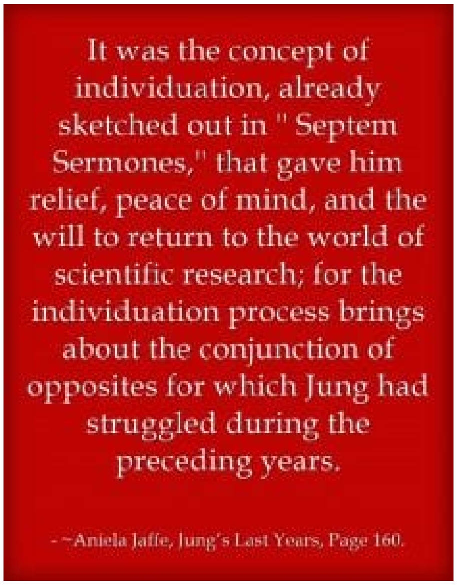
…although Jung certainly did spend some time playing with building blocks, during this long regressive period, stretching out over nearly six years (until 1918), he lived a normal middle-class life as psychiatrist and psychotherapist with a large international practice, and his family never had to suffer on account of his preoccupation. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 154.



The building game was only a prelude, a rite d'entre. It released a stream of fantasies and had a calming effect on the emotions bound up with these inner images.

~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 154.

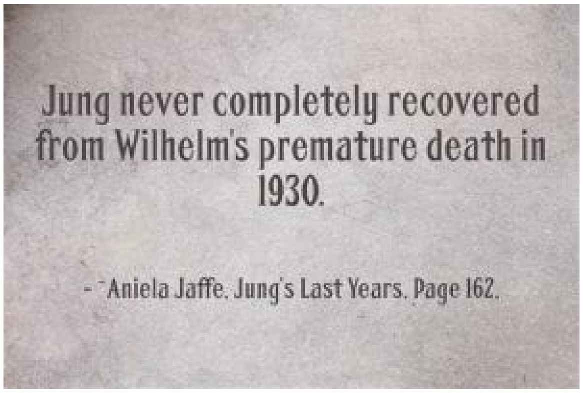
The building game was only a prelude, a rite d'entre. It released a stream of fantasies and had a calming effect on the emotions bound up with these inner images. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 154.



It was the concept of individuation, already sketched out in " Septem Sermones," that gave him relief, peace of mind, and the will to return to the world of scientific research; for the individuation process brings about the conjunction of opposites for which Jung had struggled during the preceding years.

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 160.

It was the concept of individuation, already sketched out in " Septem Sermones," that gave him relief, peace of mind, and the will to return to the world of scientific research; for the individuation process brings about the conjunction of opposites for which Jung had struggled during the preceding years. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 160.



Jung never completely recovered from Wilhelm's premature death in 1930.

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 162.

Jung never completely recovered from Wilhelm's premature death in 1930. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 162.

These visions filled Jung with indescribable bliss: "One cannot imagine the beauty and intensity of feeling during the visions. They were the most powerful things I have ever experienced."

~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 163.

These visions filled Jung with indescribable bliss: "One cannot imagine the beauty and intensity of feeling during the visions. They were the most powerful things I have ever experienced." Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 163.

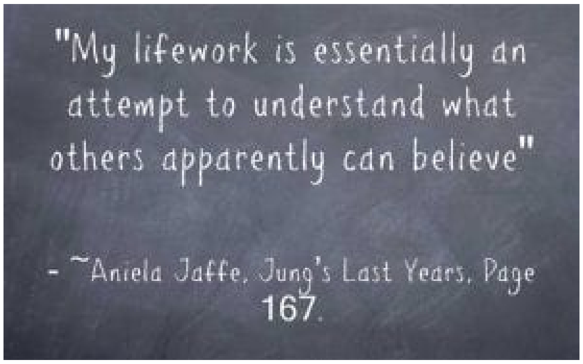
Having been stimulated by Karl Kertfnyi's book on the Aegean Festival in Faust Part II, he began working on Mysterium Coniunctionis in his sixty-sixth year; he finished the two volumes sixteen years later.

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 165.

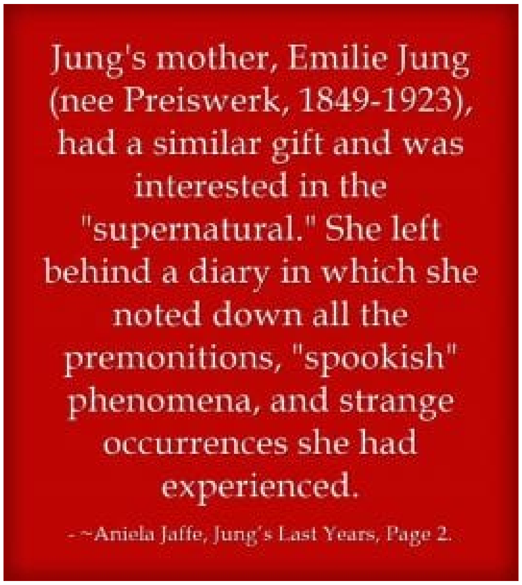
Having been stimulated by Karl Kerenyi's book on the Aegean Festival in Faust Part II, he began working on Mysterium Coniunctionis in his sixty-sixth year; he finished the two volumes sixteen years later. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 165.



"My lifework is essentially an attempt to understand what others apparently can believe"

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 167.

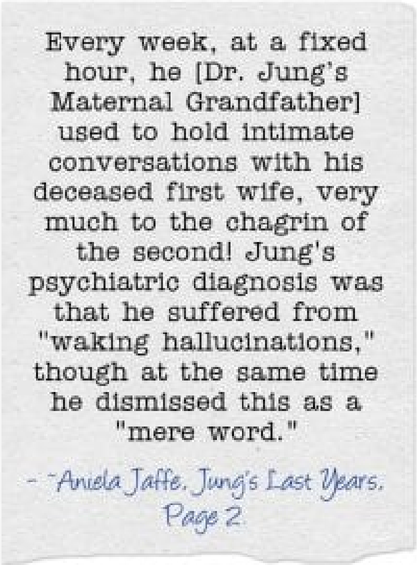
"My lifework is essentially an attempt to understand what others apparently can believe" Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 167.



Jung's mother, Emilie Jung (nee Preiswerk, 1849-1923), had a similar gift and was interested in the "supernatural." She left behind a diary in which she noted down all the premonitions, "spookish" phenomena, and strange occurrences she had experienced.

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 2.

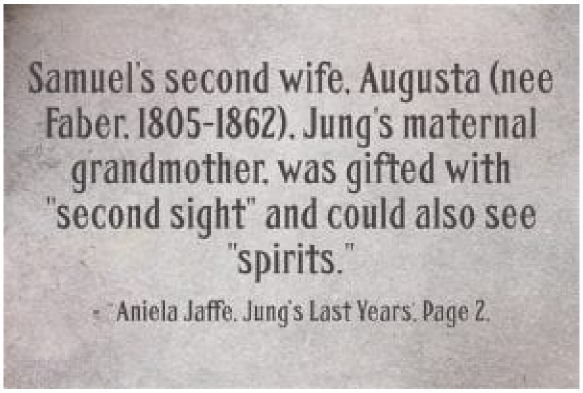
Jung's mother, Emilie Jung (nee Preiswerk, 1849-1923), had a similar gift and was interested in the "supernatural." She left behind a diary in which she noted down all the premonitions, "spookish" phenomena, and strange occurrences she had experienced. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 2.



Every week, at a fixed hour, he [Dr. Jung's Maternal Grandfather] used to hold intimate conversations with his deceased first wife, very much to the chagrin of the second! Jung's psychiatric diagnosis was that he suffered from "waking hallucinations," though at the same time he dismissed this as a "mere word."

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 2.

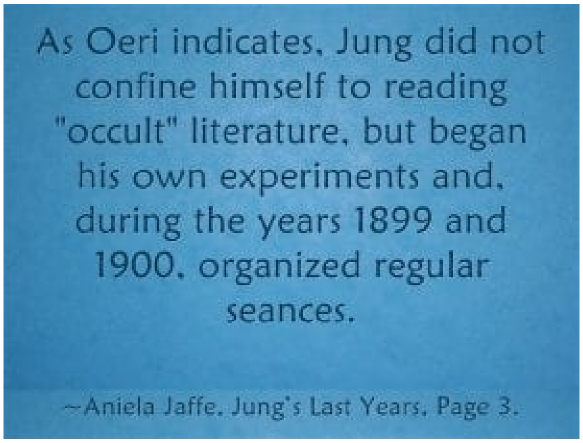
Every week, at a fixed hour, he [Dr. Jung's Maternal Grandfather] used to hold intimate conversations with his deceased first wife, very much to the chagrin of the second! Jung's psychiatric diagnosis was that he suffered from "waking hallucinations," though at the same time he dismissed this as a "mere word." Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 2.



Samuel's second wife, Augusta (nee Faber, 1805-1862), Jung's maternal grandmother, was gifted with "second sight" and could also see "spirits."

~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 2.

Samuel's second wife, Augusta (nee Faber, 1805-1862), Jung's maternal grandmother, was gifted with "second sight" and could also see "spirits." Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 2.



As Oeri indicates, Jung did not confine himself to reading "occult" literature, but began his own experiments and, during the years 1899 and 1900, organized regular seances.

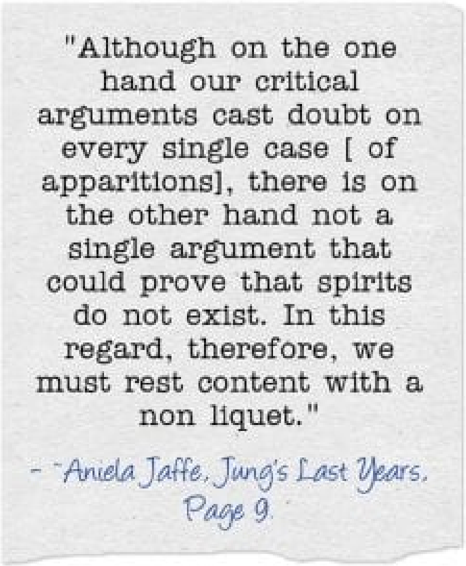
~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 3.

As Oeri indicates, Jung did not confine himself to reading "occult" literature, but began his own experiments and, during the years 1899 and 1900, organized regular seances. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 3.

The psychoid archetype is not to be confused with archetypal images or archetypal contents.

~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 7.

The psychoid archetype is not to be confused with archetypal images or archetypal contents. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 7.



"Although on the one hand our critical arguments cast doubt on every single case [of apparitions], there is on the other hand not a single argument that could prove that spirits do not exist. In this regard, therefore, we must rest content with a non liquet."

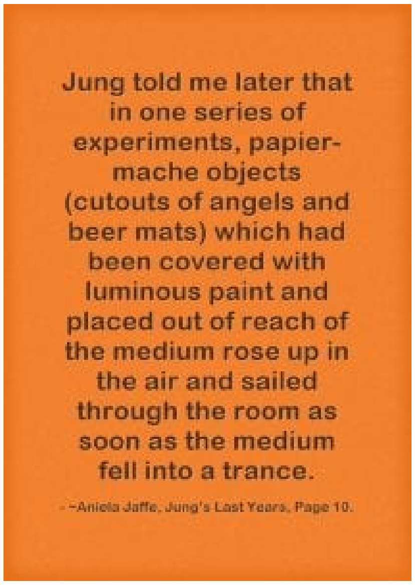
- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 9.

"Although on the one hand our critical arguments cast doubt on every single case [of apparitions], there is on the other hand not a single argument that could prove that spirits do not exist. In this regard, therefore, we must rest content with a non liquet." Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 9.

In the early twenties Jung, together with Count Albert Schrenk-Notzing and Professor Eugen Bleuler, carried out a series of experiments with the Austrian medium, Rudi Schneider, at the Burgholzli.

~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 10.

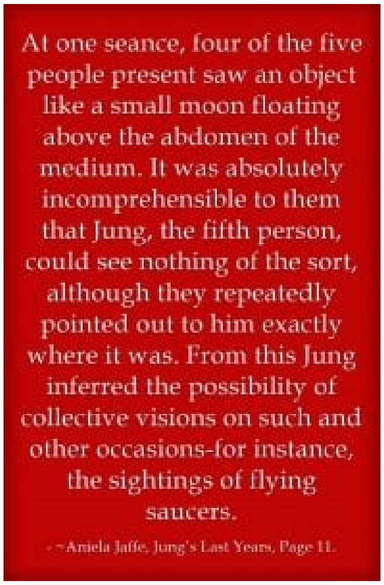
In the early twenties Jung, together with Count Albert Schrenk-Notzing and Professor Eugen Bleuler, carried out a series of experiments with the Austrian medium, Rudi Schneider, at the Burgholzli. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 10.



Jung told me later that in one series of experiments, papier-mache objects (cutouts of angels and beer mats) which had been covered with luminous paint and placed out of reach of the medium rose up in the air and sailed through the room as soon as the medium fell into a trance.

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 10.

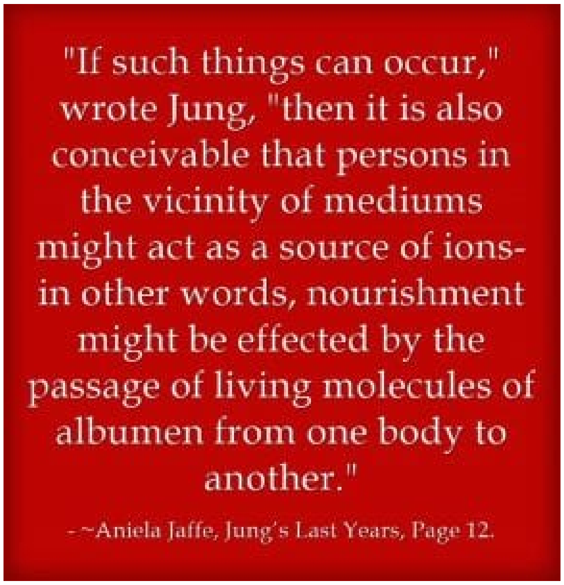
Jung told me later that in one series of experiments, papier-mache objects (cutouts of angels and beer mats) which had been covered with luminous paint and placed out of reach of the medium rose up in the air and sailed through the room as soon as the medium fell into a trance. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 10.



At one seance, four of the five people present saw an object like a small moon floating above the abdomen of the medium. It was absolutely incomprehensible to them that Jung, the fifth person, could see nothing of the sort, although they repeatedly pointed out to him exactly where it was. From this Jung inferred the possibility of collective visions on such and other occasions-for instance, the sightings of flying saucers.

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 11.

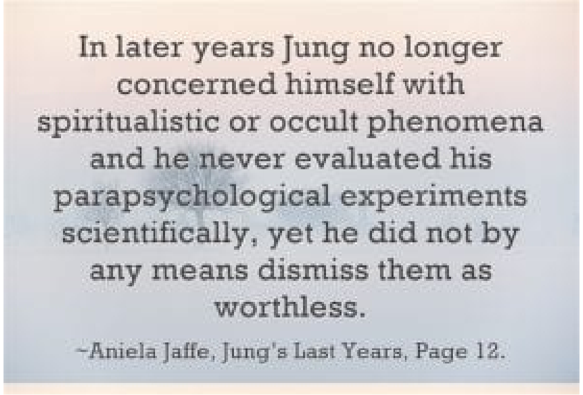
At one seance, four of the five people present saw an object like a small moon floating above the abdomen of the medium. It was absolutely incomprehensible to them that Jung, the fifth person, could see nothing of the sort, although they repeatedly pointed out to him exactly where it was. From this Jung inferred the possibility of collective visions on such and other occasions-for instance, the sightings of flying saucers. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 11.



"If such things can occur," wrote Jung, "then it is also conceivable that persons in the vicinity of mediums might act as a source of ions-in other words, nourishment might be effected by the passage of living molecules of albumen from one body to another."

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 12.

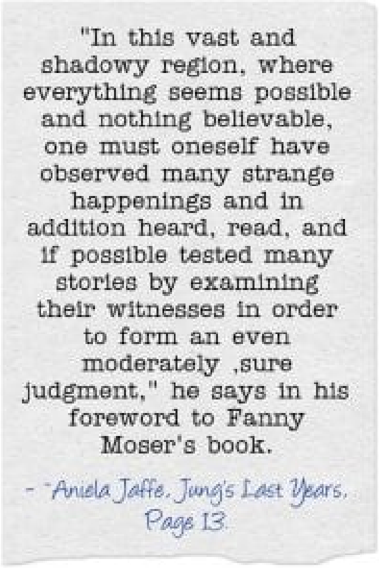
"If such things can occur," wrote Jung, "then it is also conceivable that persons in the vicinity of mediums might act as a source of ions-in other words, nourishment might be effected by the passage of living molecules of albumen from one body to another." Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 12.



In later years Jung no longer concerned himself with spiritualistic or occult phenomena and he never evaluated his parapsychological experiments scientifically, yet he did not by any means dismiss them as worthless.

~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 12.

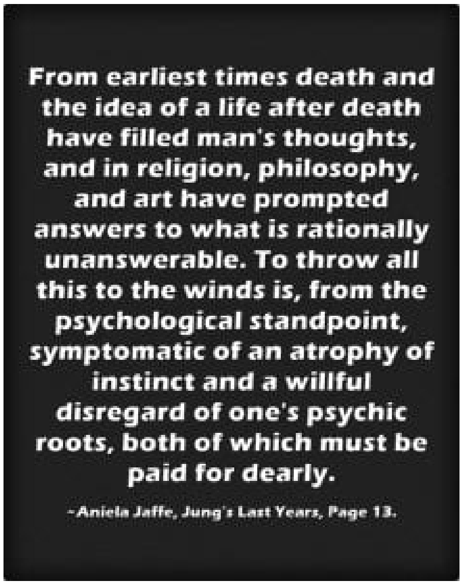
In later years Jung no longer concerned himself with spiritualistic or occult phenomena and he never evaluated his parapsychological experiments scientifically, yet he did not by any means dismiss them as worthless. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 12



"In this vast and shadowy region, where everything seems possible and nothing believable, one must oneself have observed many strange happenings and in addition heard, read, and if possible tested many stories by examining their witnesses in order to form an even moderately ,sure judgment," he says in his foreword to Fanny Moser's book.

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 13.

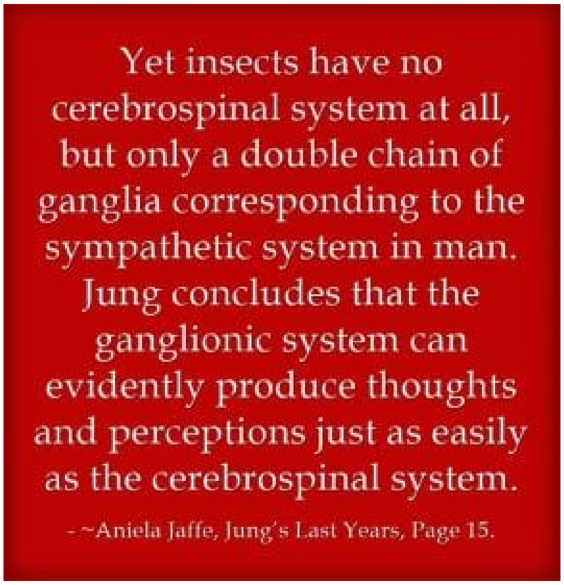
"In this vast and shadowy region, where everything seems possible and nothing believable, one must oneself have observed many strange happenings and in addition heard, read, and if possible tested many stories by examining their witnesses in order to form an even moderately ,sure judgment," he says in his foreword to Fanny Moser's book. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 13.



From earliest times death and the idea of a life after death have filled man's thoughts, and in religion, philosophy, and art have prompted answers to what is rationally unanswerable. To throw all this to the winds is, from the psychological standpoint, symptomatic of an atrophy of instinct and a willful disregard of one's psychic roots, both of which must be paid for dearly.

~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 13.

From earliest times death and the idea of a life after death have filled man's thoughts, and in religion, philosophy, and art have prompted answers to what is rationally unanswerable. To throw all this to the winds is, from the psychological standpoint, symptomatic of an atrophy of instinct and a willful disregard of one's psychic roots, both of which must be paid for dearly. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 13.

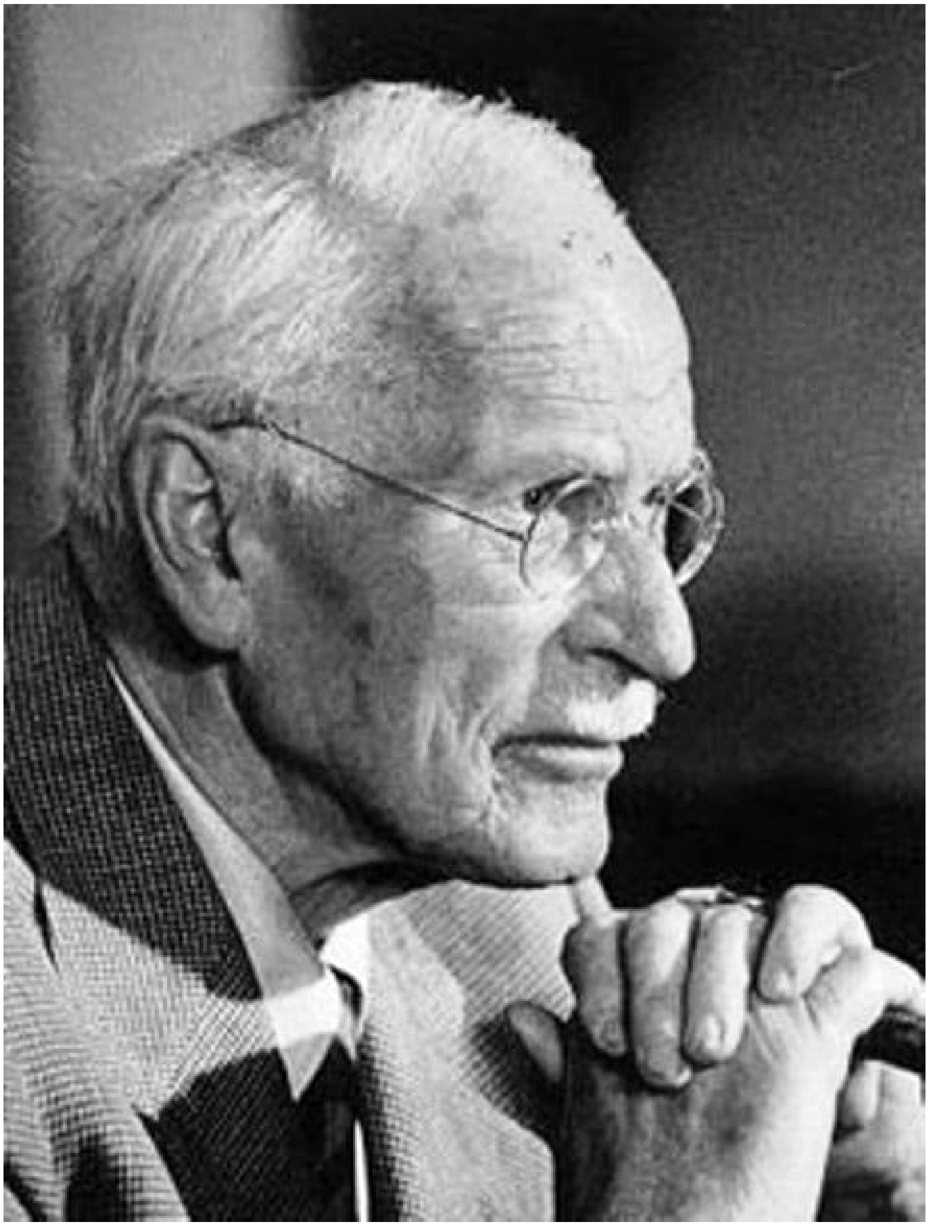


Yet insects have no cerebrospinal system at all, but only a double chain of ganglia corresponding to the sympathetic system in man. Jung concludes that the ganglionic system can evidently produce thoughts and perceptions just as easily as the cerebrospinal system.

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 15.

Yet insects have no cerebrospinal system at all, but only a double chain of ganglia corresponding to the sympathetic system in man. Jung concludes that the ganglionic system can evidently produce thoughts and perceptions just as easily as the cerebrospinal system. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 15.

Essay On Wotan By Dr. Carl Jung (2019-11-09 04:28)



Essay On Wotan By Dr. Carl Jung

Preface to: Essays on Contemporary Events

Medical psychotherapy, for practical reasons, has to deal with the whole of the psyche. Therefore, it is bound to come to terms with all those factors, biological as well as social and mental, which have a vital influence on psychic life.

We are living in times of great disruption: political passions are aflame, internal upheavals have brought nations to the brink of chaos, and the very foundations of our Weltanschauung are shattered. This critical state of things has such a tremendous influence on the psychic life of the individual that the doctor must follow its effects with more than usual attention. the storm of events does not sweep down upon him only from the great world outside; he feels the violence of its impact even in the quiet of his consulting-room and in the privacy of the medical consultation. As he has a responsibility towards his patients, he cannot afford to withdraw to the peaceful island of undisturbed scientific work, but must constantly descend into the arena of world events, in order to join in the battle of conflicting passions and opinions. Were he to remain aloof from the tumult, the calamity of his time would reach him only from afar, and his patients' suffering would find neither ear nor understanding. He would be at a loss to know how to talk to him, and to help him out of his isolation. For this reason the psychologist cannot avoid coming to grips with contemporary history, even his very soul shrinks from the political uproar, the lying propaganda, and the jarring speeches of the demagogues. We need not mention his duties as a citizen, which confront him with a similar task. As a physician, he has a higher obligation to humanity in this respect.

From time to time, therefore, I have felt obliged to step beyond the usual bounds of my profession. The experience of the psychologist is of a rather special kind, and it seemed to me that the general public might find it useful to hear his point of view. This was hardly a far-fetched conclusion, for surely the most naive of laymen could not fail to see that many contemporary figures and events were positively asking for psychological elucidation. Were psychopathic symptoms ever more conspicuous than in the contemporary political scene?

It has never been my wish to meddle in the political questions of the day. But in the course of the years I have written a few papers which give my reactions to current events. The present book contains a collection of these occasional essays, all written between 1936 and 1946. It is natural enough that my thoughts should have been especially concerned with Germany, which has been a problem to me ever since the first World War. My statements have evidently led to all manner of misunderstandings, which are chiefly due, no doubt, to the fact that my psychological point of view strikes many people as new and therefore strange. Instead of embarking upon lengthy arguments in an attempt to clear up these misunderstandings, I have found it simpler to collect all the passages in my other writings which deal with the same theme and to put them in an epilogue. The reader will thus be in a position to get a clear picture of the facts for himself.

"In Germany Shall diverse sects arise,
Coming very near to happy paganism.
The heart captivated and small receivings
Shall open the gate to pay the true tithe."]

When we look back to the time before 1914, we find ourselves living in a world of events which would have been inconceivable before the war. We were even beginning to regard war between civilized nations as a fable, thinking that such an absurdity would become less and less possible on our rational, internationally organized world. And what came after the war was a veritable witches' sabbath. Everywhere fantastic revolutions, violent alterations of the map, reversions in politics to medieval or even antique prototypes, totalitarian states that engulf their neighbours and outdo all previous theocracies in their absolutist claims, persecutions of Christians and Jews, wholesale political murder, and finally we have witnessed a light-hearted piratical raid on a peaceful, half-civilized people.

With such goings on in the wide world it is not in the least surprising that there should be equally curious manifestations on a smaller scale in other spheres. In the realm of philosophy we shall have to wait some time before anyone is able to assess the kind of age we are living in. But in the sphere of religion we can see at once that some very significant things have been happening. We need feel no surprise that in Russia the colourful splendours of the Eastern Orthodox Church have been superseded by the Movement of the Godless – indeed, one breathed a sigh of relief oneself when one emerged from the haze of an Orthodox church with its multitude of lamps and entered an honest mosque, where the sublime and invisible omnipresence of God was not crowded out by a superfluity of sacred paraphernalia. Tasteless and pitiably unintelligent as it is, and however deplorable the low spiritual level of the "scientific" reaction, it was inevitable that nineteenth-century "scientific" enlightenment should one day dawn in Russia.

But what is more than curious – indeed, piquant to a degree – is that an ancient god of storm and frenzy, the long quiescent Wotan, should awake, like an extinct volcano, to new activity, in a civilized country that had long been supposed to have outgrown the Middle Ages. We have seen him come to life in the German Youth Movement, and right at the beginning the blood of several sheep was shed in honour of his resurrection. Armed with rucksack and lute, blond youths, and sometimes girls as well, were to be seen as restless wanderers on every road from the North Cape to Sicily, faithful votaries of the roving god. Later, towards the end of the Weimar Republic, the wandering role was taken over by thousands of unemployed, who were to be met with everywhere on their aimless journeys. By 1933 they wandered no longer, but marched in their hundreds of thousands. The Hitler movement literally brought the whole of Germany to its feet, from five-year-olds to veterans, and produced a spectacle of a nation migrating from one place to another. Wotan the wanderer was on the move. He could be seen, looking rather shamefaced, in the meeting-house of a sect of simple folk in North Germany, disguised as Christ sitting on a white horse. I do not know if these people were aware of Wotan’s ancient connection with the figures of Christ and Dionysus, but it is not very probable.

Wotan is a restless wanderer who creates unrest and stirs up strife, now here, now there, and works magic. He was soon changed by Christianity into the devil, and only lived on in fading local traditions as a ghostly hunter who was seen with his retinue, flickering like a will o’ the wisp through the stormy night. In the Middle Ages the role of the restless wanderer was taken over by Ahasuerus, the Wandering Jew, which is not a Jewish but a Christian legend. The motif of the wanderer who has not accepted Christ was projected on the Jews, in the same way as we always rediscover our unconscious psychic contents in other people. At any rate the coincidence of anti-Semitism with the reawakening of Wotan is a psychological subtlety that may perhaps be worth mentioning.

The German youths who celebrated the solstice with sheep-sacrifices were not the first to hear the rustling in the primeval forest of the unconsciousness. They were anticipated by Nietzsche, Schuler, Stefan George, and Ludwig Klages. The literary tradition of the Rhineland and the country south of the Main has a classical stamp that cannot easily be got rid of; every interpretation of intoxication and exuberance is apt to be taken back to classical models, to Dionysus, to the puer aeternus and the cosmogonic Eros. No doubt it sounds better to academic ears to interpret these things as Dionysus, but Wotan might be a more correct interpretation. He is the god of storm and frenzy, the unleasher of passions and the lust of battle; moreover he is a superlative magician and artist in illusion who is versed in all secrets of an occult nature.

Nietzsche’s case is certainly a peculiar one. He had no knowledge of Germanic literature; he discovered the "cultural Philistine"; and the announcement that "God is dead" led to Zarathustra’s meeting with an unknown god in unexpected form, who approached him sometimes as an enemy and sometimes disguised as Zarathustra himself. Zarathustra, too, was a soothsayer, a magician, and the storm-wind:

And like a wind shall I come to blow among them, and with my spirit shall take away the breath of their spirit; thus my future wills it. Truly, a strong wind is Zarathustra to all that are low; and this counsel gives he to his enemies and to all that spit and spew: "Beware of spitting against the wind."

And when Zarathustra dreamed that he was guardian of the graves in the "lone mountain fortress of death," and was making a mighty effort to open the gates, suddenly

A roaring wind tore the gates asunder; whistling, shrieking, and keening, it cast a black coffin before me.
And amid the roaring and whistling and shrieking the coffin burst open and spouted a thousand peals of laughter.

The disciple who interpreted the dream said to Zarathustra:

Are you not yourself the wind with shrill whistling, which bursts open the gates of the fortress of death?

Are you not yourself the coffin filled with life’s gay malice and angel-grimaces?

In 1863 or 1864, in his poem TO THE UNKNOWN GOD, Nietzsche had written:

I shall and will know thee, Unknown One,
Who searchest out the depths of my soul,
And blowest through my life like a storm,
Ungraspable, and yet my kinsman!
I shall and will know thee, and serve thee.

Twenty years later, in his MISTRAL SONG, he wrote:

Mistral wind, chaser of clouds,
Killer of gloom, sweeper of the skies,
Raging storm-wind, how I love thee!
And we are not both the first-fruits
Of the same womb, forever predestined
To the same fate?

In the dithyramb known as ARIADNE'S LAMENT, Nietzsche is completely the victim of the hunter-god:

Stretched out, shuddering,
Like a half-dead thing whose feet are warmed,
Shaken by unknown fevers,
Shivering with piercing icy frost arrows,
Hunted by thee, O thought,
Unutterable! Veiled! horrible one!
Thou huntsman behind the cloud.
Struck down by thy lightning bolt,
Thou mocking eye that stares at me from the dark!
Thus I lie.
Writhing, twisting, tormented
With all eternal tortures,
Smitten
By thee, cruel huntsman,
Thou unknown – God!

This remarkable image of the hunter-god is not a mere dithyrambic figure of speech but is based on an experience which Nietzsche had when he was fifteen years old, at Pforta. It is described in a book by Nietzsche's sister, Elizabeth Foerster-Nietzsche. As he was wandering about in a gloomy wood at night, he was terrified by a "blood-curdling shriek from a neighbouring lunatic asylum," and soon afterwards he cam face to face with a huntsman whose "features were wild and uncanny." Setting his whistle to his lips "in a valley surrounded by wild scrub," the huntsman "blew such a shrill blast" that Nietzsche lost consciousness – but woke up again in Pforta. It was a nightmare. It is significant that in his dream Nietzsche, who in reality intended to go to Eisleben, Luther's town, discussed with the huntsman the question of going instead to "Teutschenthal" (Valley of the Germans). No one with ears can misunderstand the shrill whistling of the storm-god in the nocturnal wood.

Was it really only the classical philologist in Nietzsche that led to the god being called Dionysus instead of Wotan – or was it perhaps due to his fateful meeting with Wagner?

In his REICH OHNE RAUM, which was first published in 1919, Bruno Goetz saw the secret of coming events in Germany in the form of a very strange vision. I have never forgotten this little book, for it struck me at the time as a forecast of the German weather. It anticipates the conflict between the realm of ideas and life, between Wotan's dual nature as a god of storm and a god of secret musings. Wotan disappeared when his oaks fell and appeared again when the Christian God proved too weak to save Christendom from fratricidal slaughter. When the Holy Father at Rome could only impotently lament before God the fate of the grex segregatus, the one-eyed old hunter, on the edge of the German forest, laughed and saddled Sleipnir.

We are always convinced that the modern world is a reasonable world, basing our opinion on economic, political, and psychological factors. But if we may forget for a moment that we are living in the year of Our Lord 1936, and, laying aside our well-meaning, all-too-human reasonableness, may burden God or the gods with the responsibility for contemporary events instead of man, we would find Wotan quite suitable as a casual hypothesis. In fact, I venture the heretical suggestion that the unfathomable depths of Wotan's character explain more of National Socialism than all three reasonable factors put together. There is no doubt that each of these factors explains an important aspect of what is going on in Germany, but Wotan explains yet more. He is particularly enlightening in regard to a general phenomenon which is so strange to anybody not a German that it remains incomprehensible, even after the deepest reflection.

Perhaps we may sum up this general phenomenon as Ergriffenheit – a state of being seized or possessed. The term postulates not only an Ergriffener (one who is seized) but, also, an Ergreifer (one who seizes). Wotan is an Ergreifer of men, and, unless one wishes to deify Hitler – which has indeed actually happened – he is really the only explanation. It is true that Wotan shares this quality with his cousin Dionysus, but Dionysus seems to have exercised his influence mainly on women. The maenads were a species of female storm-troopers, and, according to mythical reports, were dangerous enough. Wotan confined himself to the berserkers, who found their vocation as the Blackshirts of mythical kings.

A mind that is still childish thinks of the gods as metaphysical entities existing in their own right, or else regards them as playful or superstitious inventions. From either point of view the parallel between Wotan redivivus and the social, political and psychic storm that is shaking Germany might have at least the value of a parable. But since the gods are without doubt personifications of psychic forces, to assert their metaphysical existence is as much an intellectual presumption as the opinion that they could ever be invented. Not that "psychic forces" have anything to do with the conscious mind, fond as we are of playing with the idea that consciousness and psyche are identical. This is only another piece of intellectual presumption. "Psychic forces" have far more to do with the realm of the unconscious. Our mania for rational explanations obviously has its roots in our fear of metaphysics, for the two were always hostile brothers. Hence, anything unexpected that approaches us from the dark realm is regarded either as coming from outside and, therefore, as real, or else as an hallucination and, therefore, not true. The idea that anything could be real or true which does not come from outside has hardly begun to dawn on contemporary man.

For the sake of better understanding and to avoid prejudice, we could of course dispense with the name "Wotan" and speak instead of the furor teutonicus. But we should only be saying the same thing and not as well, for the furor in this case is a mere psychologizing of Wotan and tells us no more than that the Germans are in a state of "fury." We thus lose sight of the most peculiar feature of this whole phenomenon, namely, the dramatic aspect of the Ergreifer and the Ergriffener. The impressive thing about the German phenomenon is that one man, who is obviously "possessed," has infected a whole nation to such an extent that everything is set in motion and has started rolling on its course towards perdition.

It seems to me that Wotan hits the mark as an hypothesis. Apparently he really was only asleep in the Kyffhauser mountain until the ravens called him and announced the break of day. He is a fundamental attribute of the German psyche, an irrational psychic factor which acts on the high pressure of civilization like a cyclone and blows it away. Despite their crankiness, the Wotan-worshippers seem to have judged things more correctly than the worshippers of reason. Apparently everyone had forgotten that Wotan is a Germanic datum of first importance, the truest expression and unsurpassed personification of a fundamental quality that is particularly characteristic of the Germans. Houston Stewart Chamberlain is a symptom which arouses suspicion that other veiled gods may be sleeping elsewhere. The emphasis on the Germanic race – commonly called "Aryan" – the Germanic heritage, blood and soil, the Wagalaweia songs, the ride of the Valkyries, Jesus as a blond and blue-eyed hero, the Greek mother of St. Paul, the devil as an international Alberich in Jewish or Masonic guise, the Nordic aurora borealis as the light of civilization, the inferior Mediterranean races – all this is the indispensable scenery for the drama that is taking place and at the bottom they all mean the same thing: a god has taken possession of the Germans and their house is filled with a "mighty rushing wind." It was soon after Hitler seized power, if I am not mistaken, that a cartoon appeared in PUNCH of a raving berserker tearing himself free from his bonds. A hurricane has broken loose in Germany while we still believe it is fine weather.

Things are comparatively quiet in Switzerland, though occasionally there is a puff of wind from the north or south. Sometimes it has a slightly ominous sound, sometimes it whispers so harmlessly or even idealistically that no one is alarmed. "Let the sleeping dogs lie" – we manage to get along pretty well with this proverbial wisdom. It is sometimes said that the Swiss are singularly averse to making a problem of themselves. I must rebut this accusation: the Swiss do have their problems, but they would not admit it for anything in the world, even though they see which way the wind is blowing. We thus pay our tribute to the time of storm and stress in Germany, but we never mention it, and this enables us to feel vastly superior.

It is above all the Germans who have an opportunity, perhaps unique in history, to look into their own hearts and to learn what those perils of the soul were from which Christianity tried to rescue mankind. Germany is a land of spiritual catastrophes, where nature never makes more than a pretense of peace with the world-ruling reason. The disturber of the peace is a wind that blows into Europe from Asia’s vastness, sweeping in on a wide front from Thrace to the Baltic, scattering the nations before it like dry leaves. or inspiring thoughts that shake the world to its foundations. It is an elemental Dionysus breaking into the Apollonian order. The rouser of this tempest is named Wotan, and we can learn a good deal about him from the political confusion and spiritual upheaval he has caused throughout history. For a more exact investigation of his character, however, we must go back to the age of myths, which did not explain everything in terms of man and his limited capacities, but sought the deeper cause in the psyche and its autonomous powers. Man’s earliest intuitions personified these powers. Man’s earliest intuitions personified these powers as gods, and described them in the myths with great care and circumstantiality according to their various characters. This could be done the more readily on account of the firmly established primordial types or images which are innate in the unconscious of many races and exercise a direct influence upon them. Because the behavior of a race takes on its specific character from its underlying images, we can speak of an archetype "Wotan." As an autonomous psychic factor, Wotan produces effects in the collective life of a people and thereby reveals his own nature. For Wotan has a peculiar biology of his own, quite apart from the nature of man. It is only from time to time that individuals fall under the irresistible influence of this unconscious factor. When it is quiescent, one is no more aware of the archetype Wotan than of a latent epilepsy. Could the Germans who were adults in 1914 have foreseen what they would be today? Such amazing transformations are the effect of the god of wind, that "bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth." It seizes everything in its path and overthrows everything that is not firmly rooted. When the wind blows it shakes everything that is insecure, whether without or within.

Martin Ninck has recently published a monograph which is a most welcome addition to our knowledge of Wotan’s nature. The reader need not fear that this book is nothing but a scientific study written with academic aloofness from the subject. Certainly the right to scientific objectivity is fully preserved, and the material has been collected with extraordinary thoroughness and presented in unusually clear form. But, over and above all this, one feels that the author is vitally interested in it, that the chord of Wotan is vibrating in him, too. This is no criticism – on the contrary, it is one of the chief merits of the book, which without this enthusiasm might easily have degenerated into a tedious catalogue. Ninck sketches a really magnificent portrait of the German archetype Wotan. He describes him in ten chapters, using all the available sources, as the berserker, the god of storm, the wanderer, the warrior, the Wunsch- and Minne-god, the lord of the dead and of the Einherjar, the master of secret knowledge, the magician, and the god of the poets. Neither the Valkyries nor the Fylgja are forgotten, for they form part of the mythological background and fateful significance of Wotan. Ninck's inquiry into the name and its origin is particularly instructive. He shows that Wotan is not only a god of rage and frenzy who embodies the instinctual and emotion aspect of the unconscious. Its intuitive and inspiring side, also, manifests itself in him, for he understands the runes and can interpret fate.

The Romans identified Wotan with Mercury, but his character does not really correspond to any Roman or Greek god, although there are certain resemblances. He is a wanderer like Mercury, for instance, he rules over the dead like Pluto and Kronos, and is connected with Dionysus by his emotional frenzy, particularly in its mantic aspect. It is surprising that Ninck does not mention Hermes, the god of revelation, who as pneuma and nous is associated with the wind. He would be the connecting-link with the Christian pneuma and the miracle of Pentecost. As Poimandres (the shepherd of men), Hermes is an Ergreifer like Wotan. Ninck rightly points out that Dionysus and the other Greek gods always remained under the supreme authority of Zeus, which indicates a fundamental difference between the Greek and the Germanic temperament. Ninck assumes an inner affinity between Wotan and Kronus, and the latter's defeat may perhaps be a sign that the Wotan-archetype was once overcome and split up in prehistoric times. At all events, the Germanic god represents a totality on a very primitive level, a psychological condition in which man's will was almost identical with the god's and entirely at his mercy. But the Greeks had gods who helped man against other gods; indeed, All-Father Zeus himself is not far from the ideal of a benevolent, enlightened despot.

It was not in Wotan's nature to linger on and show signs of old age. He simply disappeared when the times turned against him, and remained invisible for more than a thousand years, working anonymously and indirectly. Archetypes are like riverbeds which dry up when the water deserts them, but which it can find again at any time. An archetype is like an old watercourse along which the water of life has flowed for centuries, digging a deep channel for itself. The longer it has flowed in this channel the more likely it is that sooner or later the water will return to its old bed. The life of the individual as a member of society and particularly as a part of the State may be regulated like a canal, but the life of nations is a great rushing river which is utterly beyond human control, in the hands of One who has always been stronger than men. The League of Nations, which was supposed to possess supranational authority, is regarded by some as a child in need of care and protection, by others as an abortion. Thus, the life of nations rolls on unchecked, without guidance, unconscious of where it is going, like a rock crashing down the side of a hill, until it is stopped by an obstacle stronger than itself. Political events move from one impasse to the next, like a torrent caught in gullies, creeks and marshes. All human control comes to an end when the individual is caught in a mass movement. Then, the archetypes begin to function, as happens, also, in the lives of individuals when they are confronted with situations that cannot be dealt with in any of the familiar ways. But what a so-called Fuhrer does with a mass movement can plainly be seen if we turn our eyes to the north or south of our country.

The ruling archetype does not remain the same forever, as is evident from the temporal limitations that have been set to the hoped-for reign of peace, the "thousand-year Reich." The Mediterranean father-archetype of the just, order-loving, benevolent ruler had been shattered over the whole of northern Europe, as the present fate of the Christian Churches bears witness. Fascism in Italy and the civil war in Spain show that in the south as well the cataclysm has been far greater than one expected. Even the Catholic Church can no longer afford trials of strength.

The nationalist God has attacked Christianity on a broad front. In Russia, he is called technology and science, in Italy, Duce, and in Germany, "German Faith," "German Christianity," or the State. The "German Christians" are a contradiction in terms and would do better to join Hauer's "German Faith Movement." These are decent and well-meaning people who honestly admit their Ergriffenheit and try to come to terms with this new and undeniable fact. They go to an enormous amount of trouble to make it look less alarming by dressing it up in a conciliatory historical garb and giving us consoling glimpses of great figures such as Meister Eckhart, who was, also, a German and, also, ergriffen. In this way the awkward question of who the Ergreifer is is circumvented. He was always "God."

But the more Hauer restricts the world-wide sphere of Indo-European culture to the "Nordic" in general and to the Edda in particular, and the more "German" this faith becomes as a manifestation of Ergriffenheit, the more painfully evident it is that the "German" god is the god of the Germans.

One cannot read Hauer's book without emotion, if one regards it as the tragic and really heroic effort of a conscientious scholar who, without knowing how it happened to him, was violently summoned by the inaudible voice of the Ergreifer and is now trying with all his might, and with all his knowledge and ability, to build a bridge between the dark forces of life and the shining world of historical ideas. But what do all the beauties of the past from totally different levels of culture mean to the man of today, when confronted with a living and unfathomable tribal god such as he has never experienced before? They are sucked like dry leaves into the roaring whirlwind, and the rhythmic alliterations of the Edda became inextricably mixed up with Christian mystical texts, German poetry and the wisdom of the Upanishads. Hauer himself is ergriffen by the depths of meaning in the primal words lying at the root of the Germanic languages, to an extent that he certainly never knew before. Hauer the Indologist is not to blame for this, nor yet the Edda; it is rather the fault of kairos – the present moment in time – whose name on closer investigation turns out to be Wotan. I would, therefore, advise the German Faith Movement to throw aside their scruples. Intelligent people who will not confuse them with the crude Wotan-worshippers whose faith is a mere pretense. There are people in the German Faith Movement who are intelligent enough not only to believe, but to know, that the god of the Germans is Wotan and not the Christian God. This is a tragic experience and no disgrace. It has always been terrible to fall into the hands of a living god. Yahweh was no exception to this rule, and the Philistines, Edomites, Amorites and the rest, who were outside the Yahweh experience, must certainly have found it exceedingly disagreeable. The Semitic experience of Allah was for a long time an extremely painful affair for the whole of Christendom. We who stand outside judge the Germans far too much, as if they were responsible agents, but perhaps it would be nearer the truth to regard them, also, as victims.

If we apply are admittedly peculiar point of view consistently, we are driven to conclude that Wotan must, in time, reveal not only the restless, violent, stormy side of his character, but, also, his ecstatic and mantic qualities – a very different aspect of his nature. If this conclusion is correct, National Socialism would not be the last word. Things must be concealed in the background which we cannot imagine at present, but we may expect them to appear in the course of the next few years or decades. Wotan's reawakening is a stepping back into the past; the stream was damned up and has broken into its old channel. But the Obstruction will not last forever; it is rather a reculer pour mieux sauter, and the water will over leap the obstacle. Then, at last, we shall know what Wotan is saying when he "murmurs with Mimir's head."

Fast move the sons of Mim, and fate
Is heard in the note of the Gjallarhorn;
Loud blows Heimdall, the horn is aloft,
In fear quake all who on Hel-roads are.
Yggdrasill shakes and shivers on high
The ancient limbs, and the giant is loose;
Wotan murmurs with Mimir's head
But the kinsman of Surt shall slay him soon.

How fare the gods? how fare the elves?
All Jotunheim groans, the gods are at council;
Loud roar the dwarfs by the doors of stone,
The masters of the rocks: would you know yet more?

Now Garm howls loud before Gnipahellir;
The fetters will burst, and the wolf run free;

Much I do know, and more can see
Of the fate of the gods, the mighty in fight.

From the east comes Hrym with shield held high;
In giant-wrath does the serpent writhe;
O'er the waves he twists, and the tawny eagle
Gnaws corpses screaming; Naglfar is loose.

O'er the sea from the north there sails a ship
With the people of Hel, at the helm stands Loki;
After the wolf do wild men follow,
And with them the brother of Byleist goes.

http://allfatherwotan.org/essayonwotan.html

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/11/acb4b-jung.jpg`

Carl Jung: You know that I am still under the suspicion of being a secret Nazi agent despite all I say or do.

(2019-11-09 04:30)

[1]

OSS
STRATEGIC SERVICES
488

To Hugh Crichton-Miller

My dear Crichton-Miller, 28 June 1939

I have seen the list of the English delegates which Dr. Strauss has sent to our secretary.

I was surprised not to find one single name known to me.

I should think that more representative men would be preferable.

I expect you are coming to the meeting.

Your presence is all-important, because the English delegation does not impress me as being in any way au courant with the delicate situation in the International Society.

I am afraid that under the circumstances certain prejudices might decide instead of common sense.

Therefore I think your presence, not only as a vice-president but also as a representative of higher reason, will be indispensable.

You know that I am still under the suspicion of being a secret Nazi agent despite all I say or do.

On account of this there ought to be somebody on the board who is "above board."

Fortunately enough the Dutch have invited us to Holland for the next Congress.

In this way we have gained at least 2 years of indecision over against Germany.

It is also imperative that there is a person of authority present at this meeting of delegates, because I shall propose new elections.

This is partially due to the fact that I want to withdraw as an international president and partially to the fact that it will be necessary to take the wind out of the sails of the opposition to which I am no persona grata but rather a persona suspecta.

Cordially yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 271-272

http://munksroll.rcplondon.ac.uk/Biography/Details/1071

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

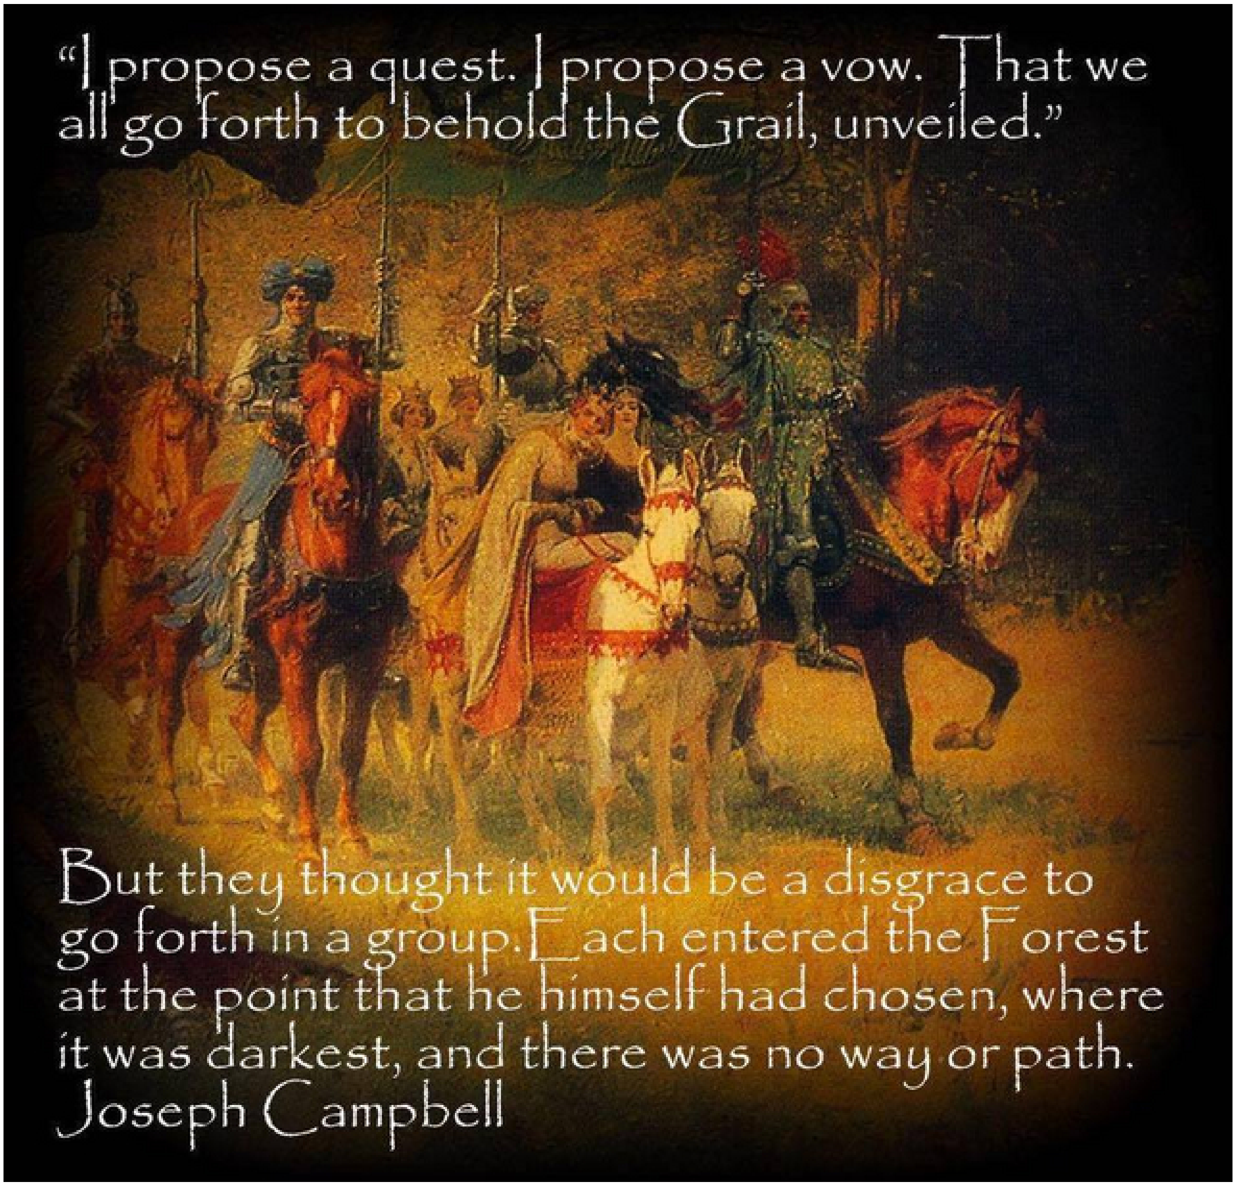
Great Sites to visit:

1. Jenna Lilla's Path of the Soul http://jennalilla.org/
2. Steve Jung-Hearted Parker's Jung Currents http://jungcurrents.com/
3. Frith Luton's Jungian Dream Analysis and Psychotherapy: http://frithluton.com/articles/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/ddf87-182bcrighton.jpg`

Joseph Campbell: The idea is to find your own pathway to bliss. (2019-11-09 04:35)

[1]



"I propose a quest. I propose a vow. That we all go forth to behold the Grail, unveiled."
But they thought it would be a disgrace to go forth in a group. Each entered the Forest at the point that he himself had chosen, where it was darkest, and there was no way or path.
Joseph Campbell

Finally, Gawain, Arthur's nephew, stood up and said, "I propose a vow to this company, that we all go in quest of that Grail to behold it unveiled."

Now we come to the text that interested me.

The text reads, "They thought it would be a disgrace to go forth in a group. Each entered the Forest Adventurous at that point which he himself had chosen, where it was darkest and there was no path."

You enter the forest at the darkest point, where there is no path.

Where there's a way or a path, it is someone else's path; each human being is a unique phenomenon.

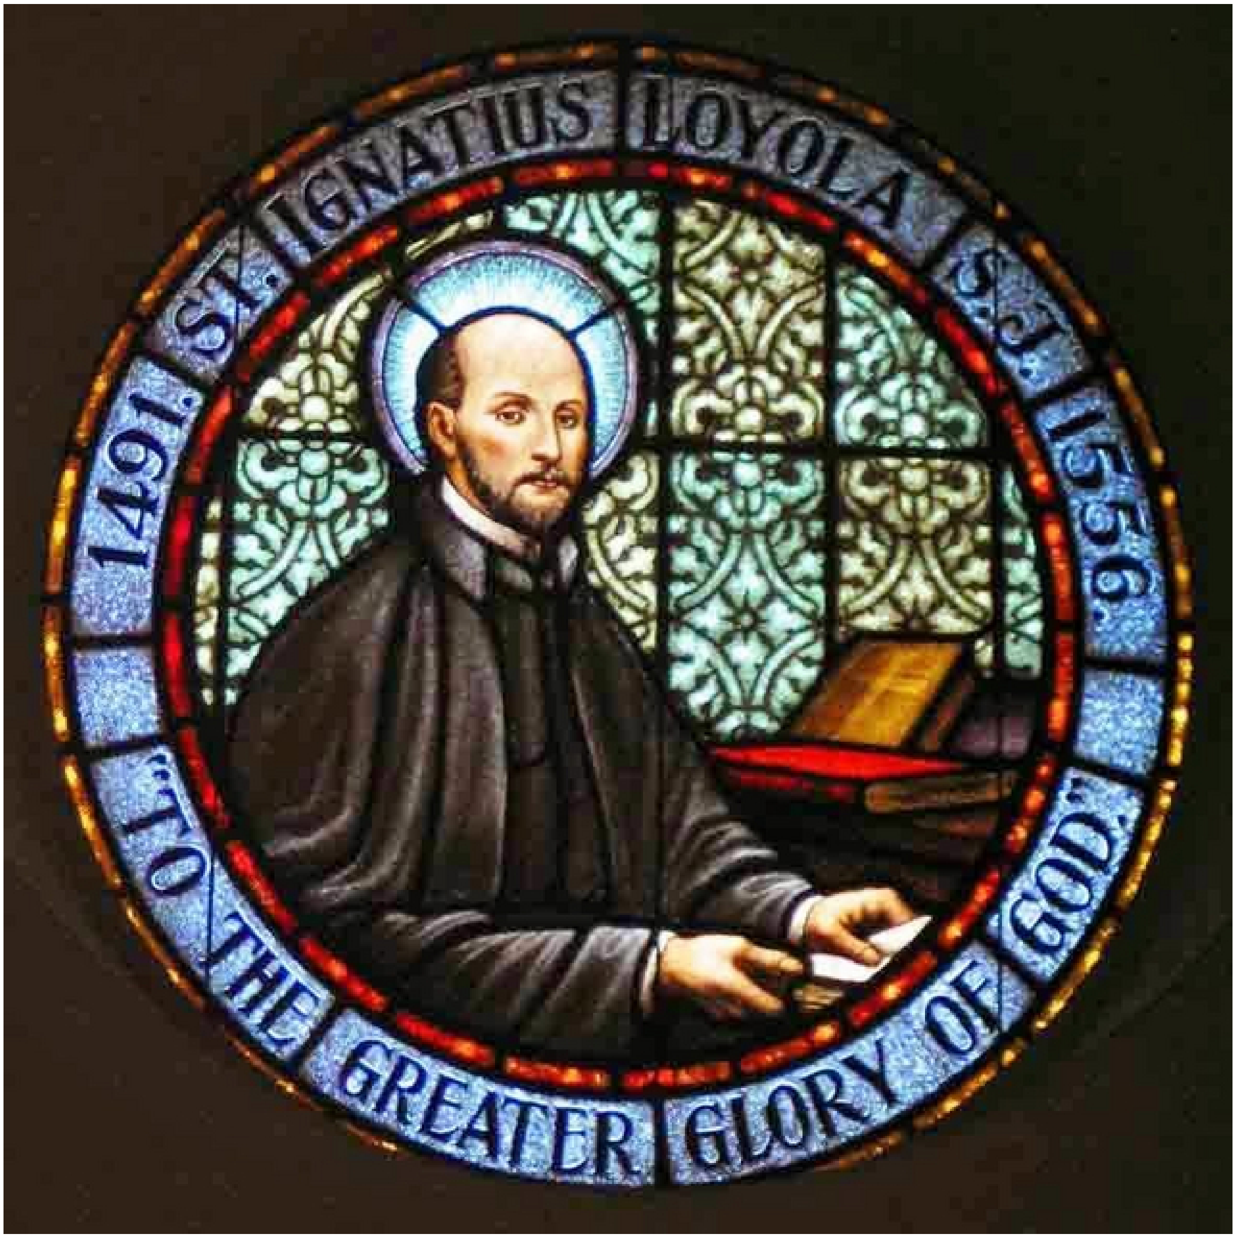
The idea is to find your own pathway to bliss.

Joseph Campbell, Pathways to Bliss, pp.xxv-xxvi

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/400ad-1grail.jpg`

Carl Jung on the Spiritual Exercises of the West (2019-11-09 04:56)

[1]



1491. ST. IGNATIUS LOYOLA S.J. 1556.
"TO THE GREATER GLORY OF GOD."

[Carl Jung on the Spiritual Exercises of the West]

Dear Pastor van Dijk, 25 February 1946

The question of meditation is really a problem of the first order.

I have read your brochure and gather that you want to put spiritual exercises on a Protestant basis.

Two different ways have developed in the West.

One is historical and probably originates in Benedictine contemplation Benedictine mysticism, the Victorines, and in particular the Itinerarium of St. Bonaventura .

Then we have the exercises of Loyola, stemming from Islam.

All these various Christian methods of contemplation and meditation have one thing in common : the image to be meditated upon as well as the kind of meditation are presented to the candidate from outside.

This meditation can do no more than merely fill out the image given.

If you want to compare the technique of modern psychotherapy with these old methods, you could understand it as something similar, since here too certain contents are reflected upon and observed though the system is different. In psychotherapy, dreams are subjected to meditative observation for the purpose of restoring the broken connection between consciousness and the unconscious or integrating the latter's contents.

In this case, of course, no external object is prescribed for conscious meditation, it is always provided by the unconscious.

This kind of psychic experience goes back historically to philosophical alchemy, and in ecclesiastical tradition has superficial connections with the sects of the Free Spirit (13th cent.)

The two Christian trends have a considerably deeper connection with the psychology of Origen.

But the real source is to be found outside and prior to Christianity in those peculiar psychic processes reported by Apuleius in his Metamorphoses/ and in the Mithras Liturgy, the Acts of Thomas and of John.

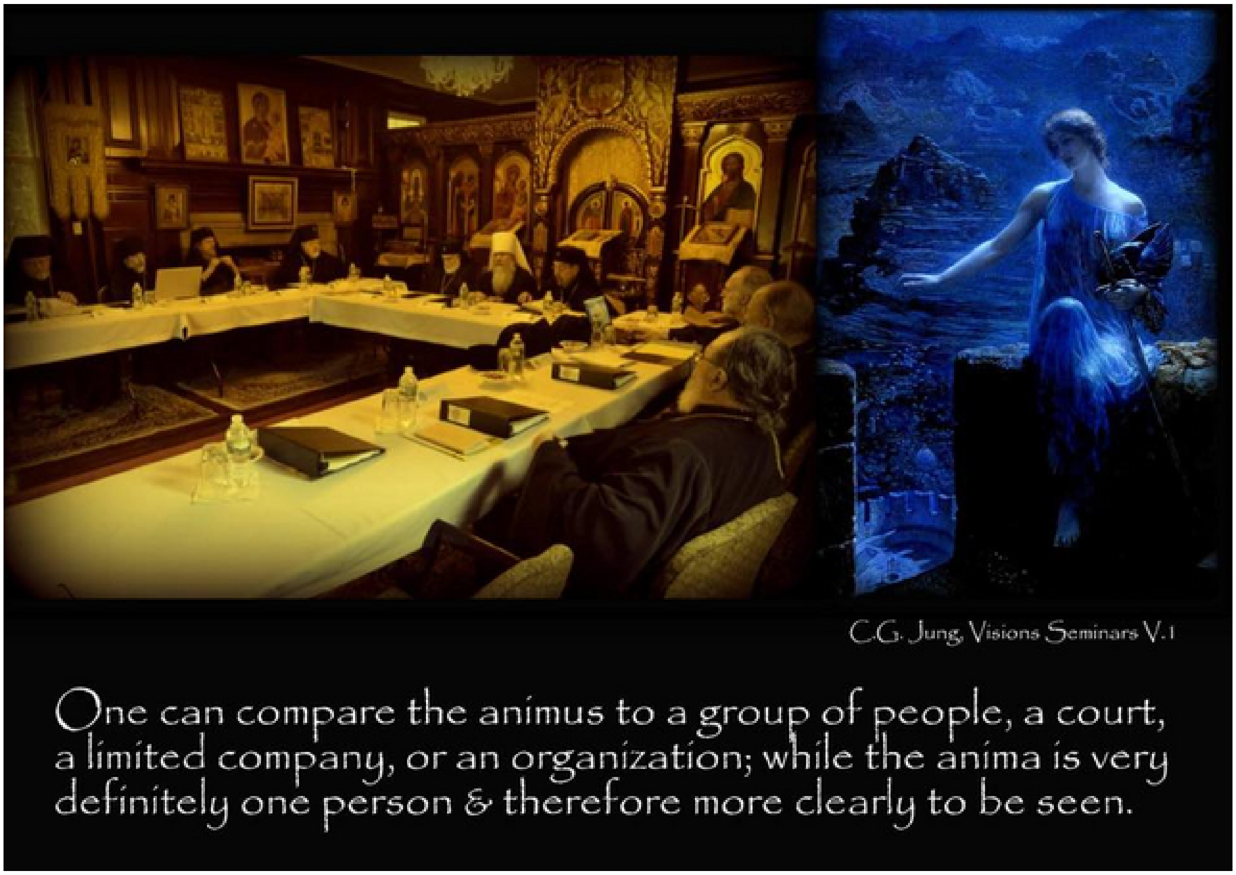
With best thanks for your brochure,

Yours sincerely, C.G. Jung Letters Vol. 1, Pages 415-416.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/2fe11-loyola.jpg`

Carl Jung: The animus is in this respect rather difficult to deal with because it is a plurality. (2019-11-10 04:30)

[1]



C.G. Jung, Visions Seminars V.1
One can compare the animus to a group of people, a court, a limited company, or an organization; while the anima is very definitely one person & therefore more clearly to be seen.

The animus is in this respect rather difficult to deal with because it is a plurality.

One can compare the animus, as I have said, to a group of people, a court, or a limited company, or an organization; while the anima is very definitely one person and therefore more clearly to be seen.

The anima behaves exactly like a definite person, yet she is also a function, her true function being the connection between the conscious and the unconscious; there the anima is in her right place.

That is, she is not in between myself and my audience, but in between myself and my unconscious audience, a mirror reflex of this world, the collective unconscious.

There again, those people who think of the unconscious as being a psychological tissue contained in one's head are completely bewildered, for they can hardly form an idea of a tissue standing in one's head.

That is indeed a very wrong idea.

You should think of the collective unconscious in a very primitive way, then you are about right, at all events much nearer to the facts than when you think of it in psychological terms.

You should think of it in the terms of primitive man, as the ghost land, all the invisible dead people amongst us.

Or a good idea of the collective unconscious is that it is a sort of unknown or unconscious reality, the unknown in everything and in everybody.

For instance, the unknown and invisible nature of this chair.

Of course, any person of ordinary mind would deny emphatically that there was anything unknown in this chair.

If they don't know what is in the chair they simply tear it open and see that there is hair or some other kind of stuffing in it, and the wood can be examined to see whether there is anything inside that, and they know about the maple tree from which it is made, so everything is perfectly normal.

Yet they entirely forget that they have not penetrated the secret of cellulose, nor the secret of the atoms of which the chair is composed.

There is an absolutely cosmic secret, an existing thing in the chair, and you see that forms the collective unconscious. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Pages 204-205

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/02d3d-22banimus.jpg`

Carl Jung: The dynamic principle of fantasy is play... (2019-11-10 04:30)

The dynamic principle of fantasy is play, a characteristic also of the child, and as such it appears inconsistent with the principle of serious work. But without this playing with fantasy any creative work has ever yet come to birth. The debt we owe to the play of imagination is incalculable. It is therefore short-sighted to treat fantasy, on account of its risky or unacceptable nature, as a thing of little worth. Carl Jung; Psychological Types Ch. 1; Page 82.

Fantasy is the creative function—the living form is a result of fantasy. Fantasy is a pre-stage of the symbol, but it is an essential characteristic of the symbol that it is not mere fantasy. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 11

Everything you do here, all this, everything, was fantasy to begin with, and fantasy has a proper reality. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 22.

That is not to be forgotten; fantasy is not nothing. It is, of course, not a tangible object; but it is a fact nevertheless. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 22.

Fantasy is, you see, a form of energy, despite the fact that we can't measure it. It is a manifestation of something, and that is a reality. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 22.

Passive fantasy [...] is always in need of conscious criticism [...] whereas active fantasy [„,] does not require criticism so much as understanding. Carl Jung, CW 6, Par. 714.

Going back to the question of fantasizing, if once the resistance to free contact with the unconscious can be overcome, and one can develop the power of sticking to the fantasy, then the play of the images can be watched. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 38.

Besides the obvious personal sources, creative fantasy also draws upon the forgotten and long buried primitive mind with its host of images, which are to be found in the mythologies of all ages and all peoples. Carl Jung, CW

5, Pages xxiv-xxv

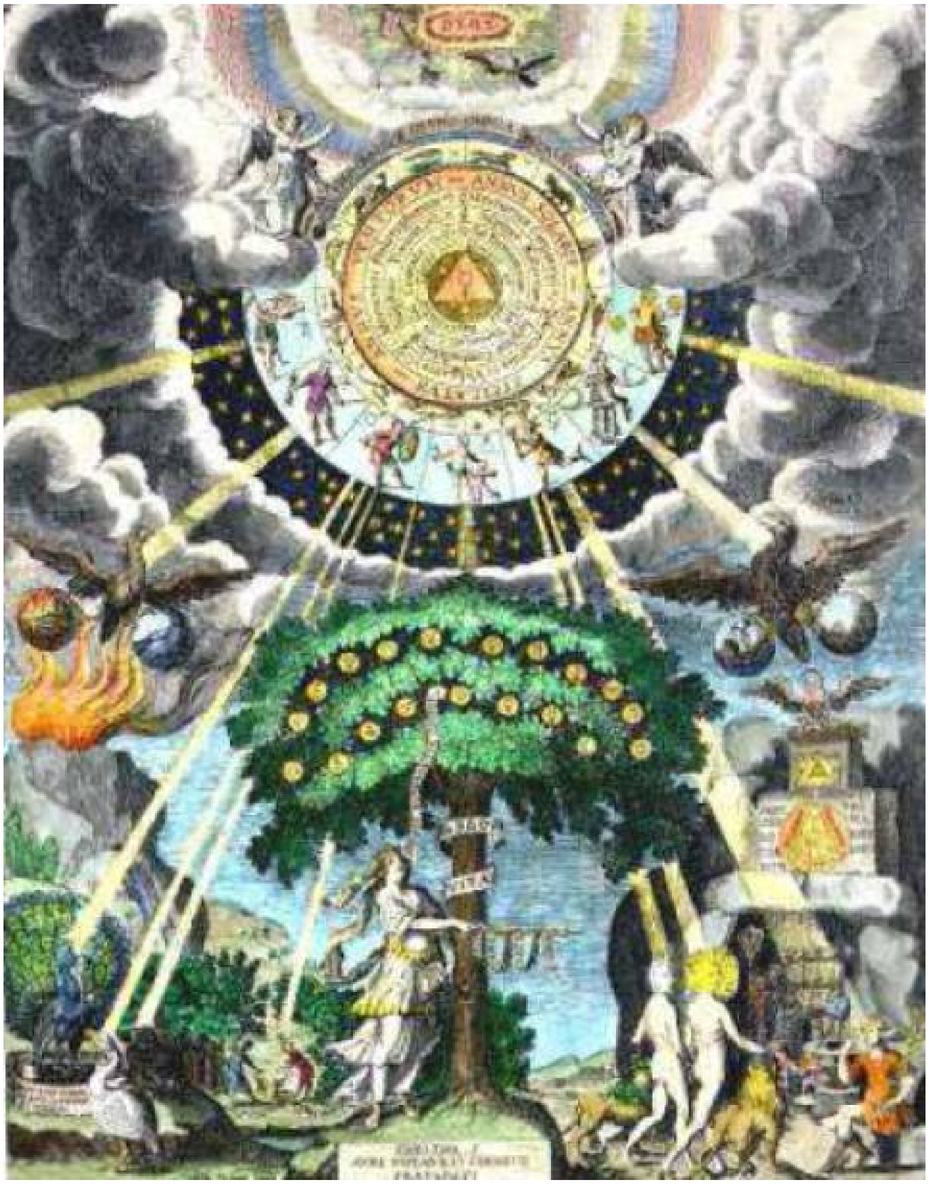
Christianity, like every closed system of religion, has an undoubted tendency to suppress the unconscious in the individualas much as possible, thus paralyzing his fantasy activity. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 80

Wherever we can observe a religion being born, we see how the doctrinal figures flow into the founder himself as revelations, inother words, as concretizations of his unconscious fantasy. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 80

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/990ca-12bmuppet.jpg`

All opposites are of God.......... (2019-11-10 04:33)

[1]



Our aim is to create a wider personality whose center of gravity does not necessarily coincide with the ego, but which, on the contrary, may even thwart the ego-tendencies. Like a magnet, the new center attracts to itself that which is proper to it, the ’signs of the Father’, namely everything that pertains to the original and unalterable character of the individual ground-plan.

The same knowledge, formulated differently to suit the age they lived in, was possessed by the Gnostics. ...Man’s consciousness was created to the end that it may recognize its descent from a higher unity; pay due and careful regard to this source; execute its commands intelligently and responsibly; and thereby afford the psyche as a whole the optimum degree of life and development. I am addressing myself to those many people for whom the light has gone out, the mystery has faded, and God is dead. To gain an understanding of religious matters,...that is left us today as the psychological approach. ...All opposites are of God, therefore man must bend to this burden; and in so doing he finds that God in his ’oppositeness’ has taken possession of him, incarnated himself in him. He has become a vessel filled with God and with Divine conflict. Carl Jung

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/11/e9822-gnostics.jpg`

Esther Harding Books [Jungian] (2019-11-10 04:37)

[1]

[2]

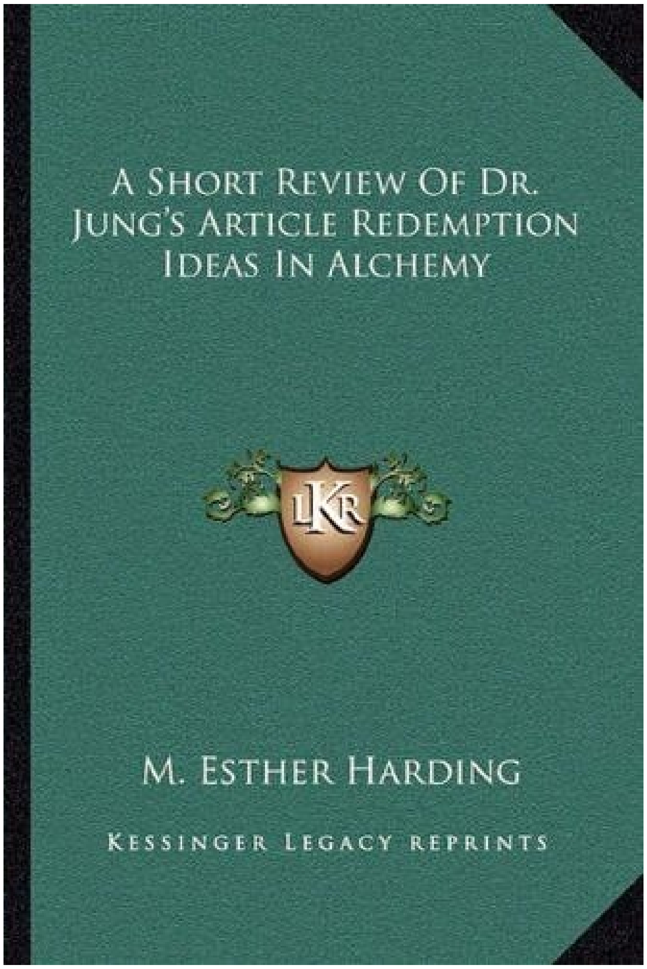
PSYCHIC ENERGY

ITS SOURCE AND GOAL

M. ESTHER HARDING
C. G. JUNG

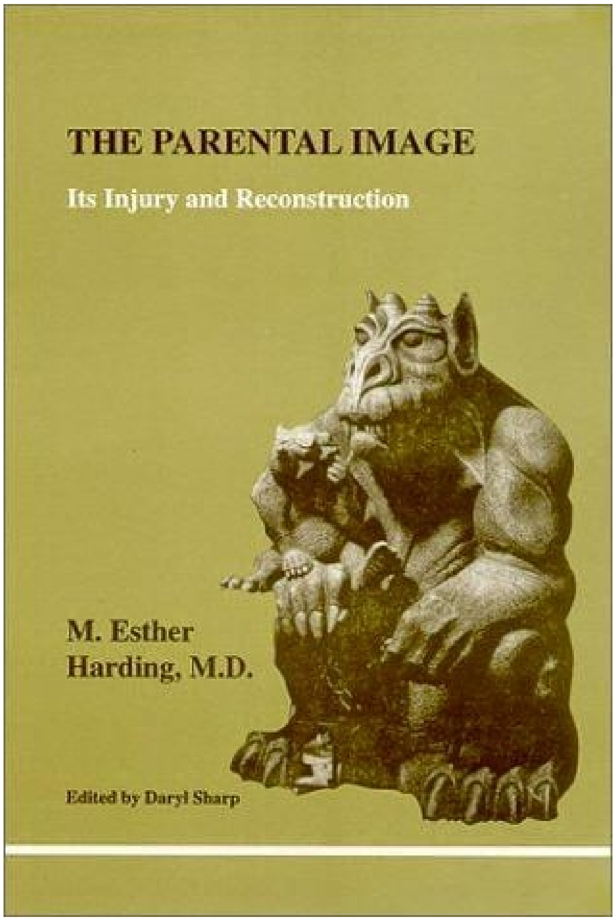
[3]Buy at Amazon here

[4]



[5]Buy at Amazon here

[6]



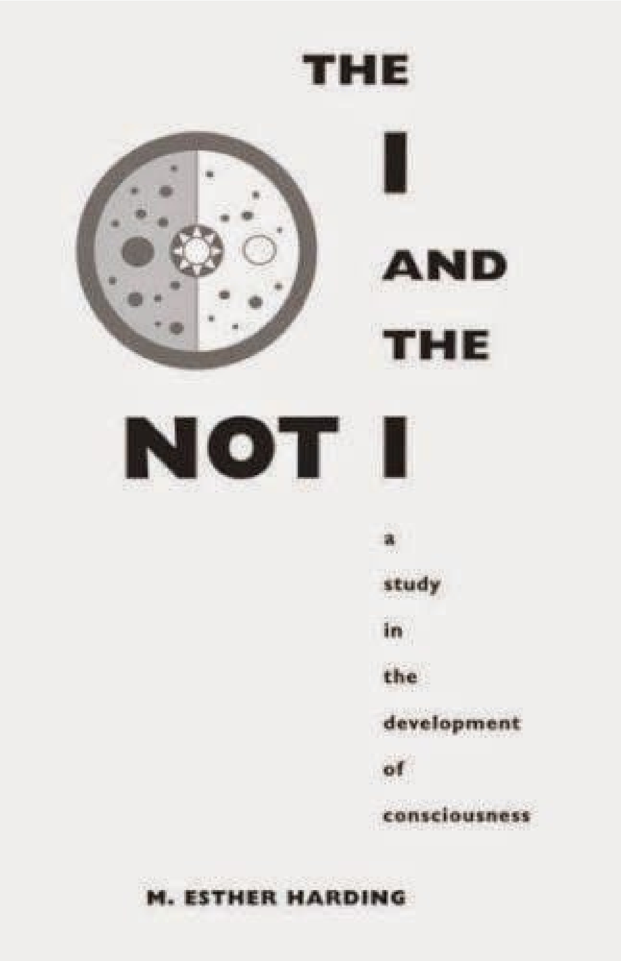
THE PARENTAL IMAGE

Its Injury and Reconstruction

M. Esther Harding, M.D.

Edited by Daryl Sharp

[7]Buy at Amazon here



THE
I
AND
THE NOT I

a study in
the development
of consciousness

M. ESTHER HARDING

Buy at Amazon here

[10]

Copyrighted Material
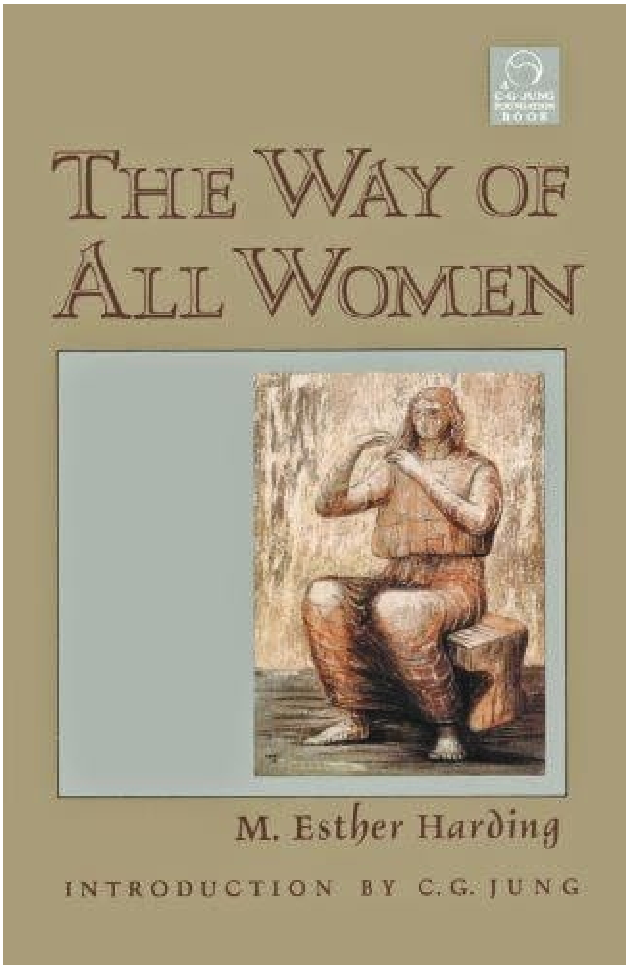
M. ESTHER HARDING
PSYCHIC ENERGY
Its Source and Its Transformation
With a Foreword by C.G. JUNG

[11]Buy at Amazon here

[12]



A C.G. JUNG FOUNDATION BOOK

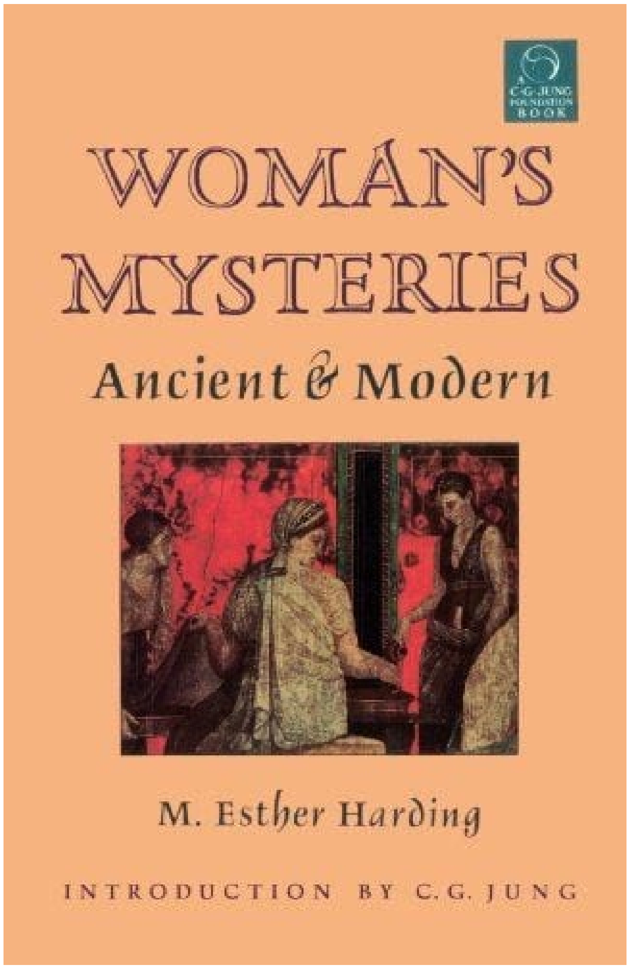
THE WAY OF ALL WOMEN

M. Esther Harding

INTRODUCTION BY C.G. JUNG

[13]Buy at Amazon here

[14]



A C·G·JUNG FOUNDATION BOOK
WOMAN'S MYSTERIES
Ancient & Modern
M. Esther Harding
INTRODUCTION BY C.G. JUNG

[15]Buy at Amazon here

[16]Esther Harding Books

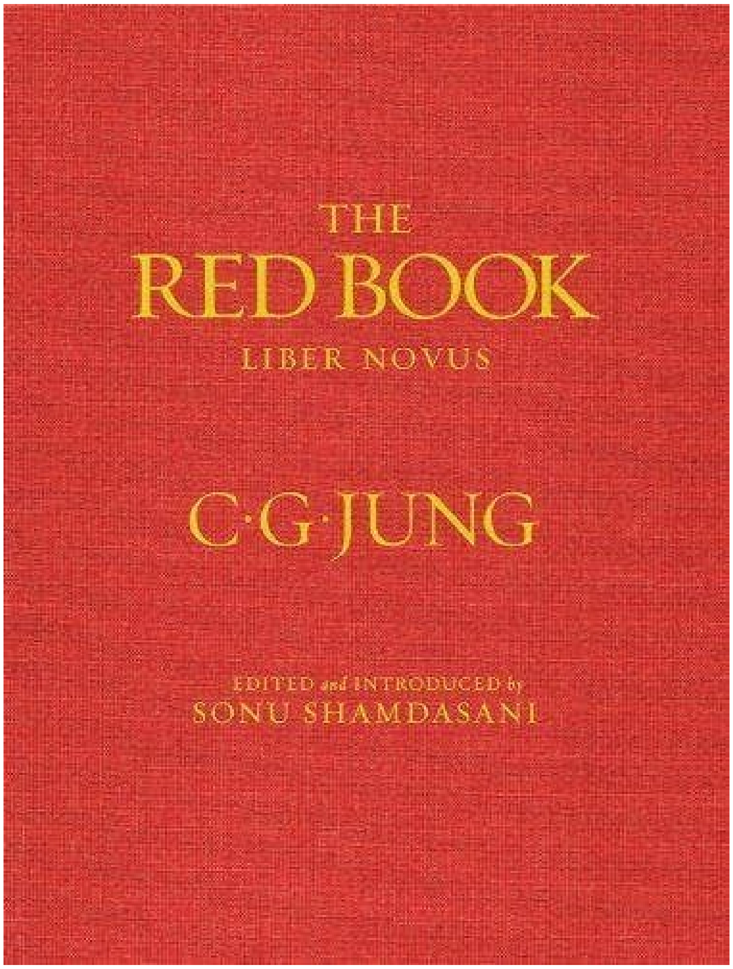
1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/ff899-eeeeee.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/fa184-1.jpg`
3. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/1258117606/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Bpsyub0H02VTA`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/011bc-2.jpg`
5. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/1163151513/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_apsyub1AC2P8N`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b52be-3.jpg`
7. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/1894574079/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Rosyub0P3M369`

8. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/30c5e-4.jpg
9. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691017964/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Cosyub0BT3PKB
10. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/4a97e-5.jpg
11. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691017905/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_nosyub0FV87RB
12. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/a72cf-6.jpg
13. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1570626278/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Knsyub1GPPE8K
14. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/42098-7.jpg
15. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1570626294/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_7nsyub18QRWRD
16. http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/esther-harding-books-jungian.html

---

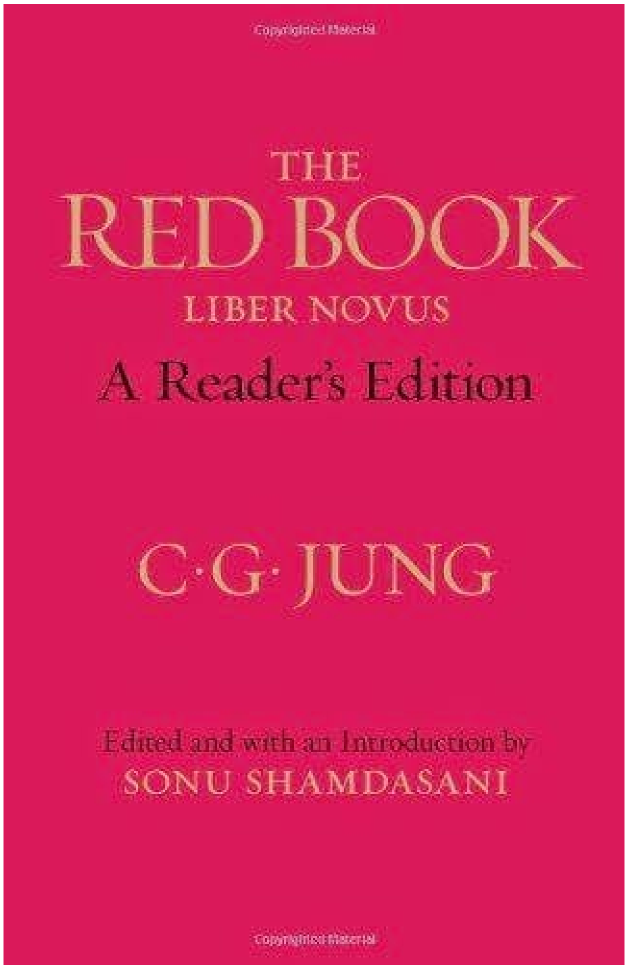
Carl Jung Books (2019-11-10 04:41)

[1]



<a href="[2]Buy at Amazon here

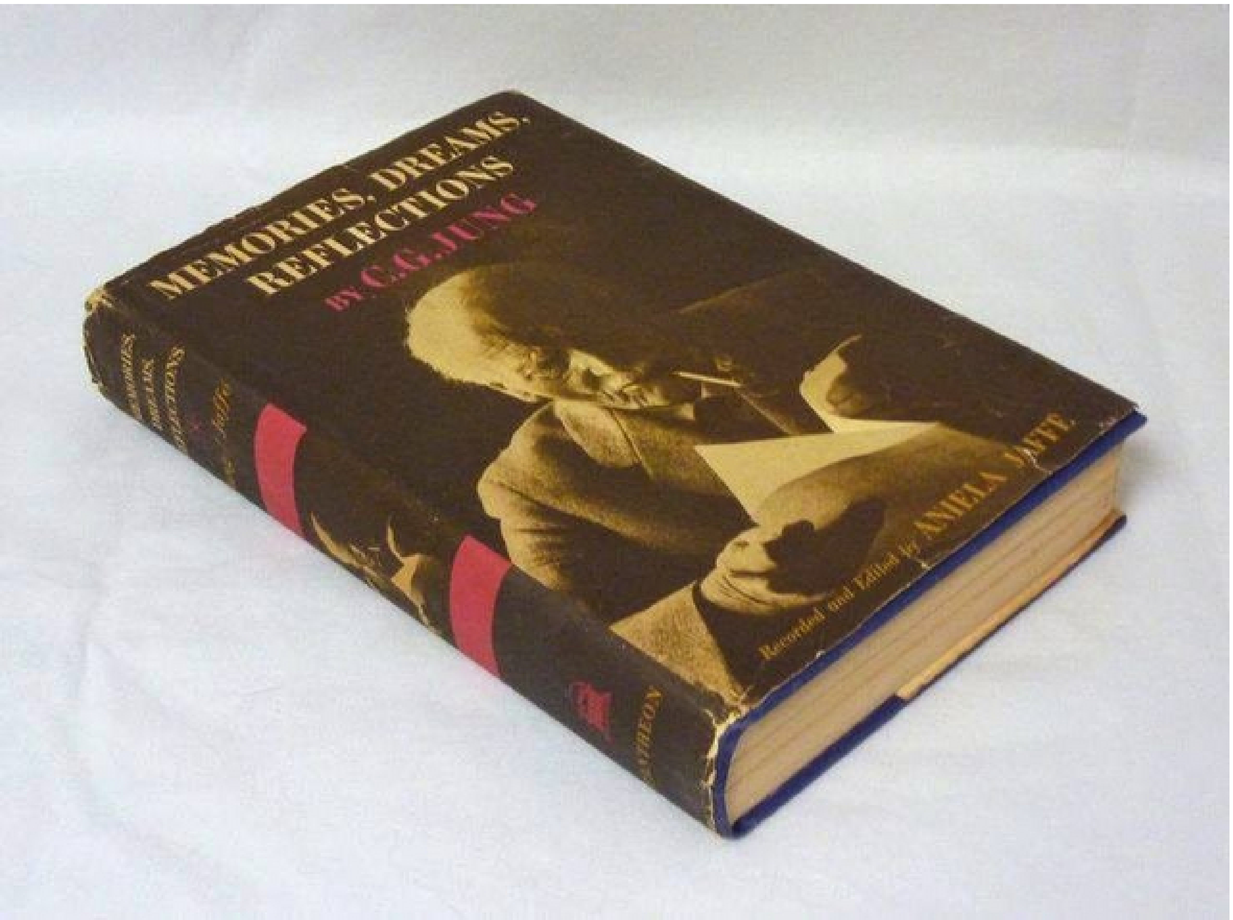
[3]



Copyrighted Material
THE
RED BOOK
LIBER NOVUS
A Reader's Edition
C·G· JUNG
Edited and with an Introduction by
SONU SHAMDASANI
Copyrighted Material

[4]Buy at Amazon here leather bound

[5]



MEMORIES, DREAMS, REFLECTIONS
BY C.G. JUNG
Recorded and Edited by ANIELA JAFFE
MEMORIES, DREAMS, REFLECTIONS
Jaffe
PANTHEON

[6]Buy at Amazon here

[7]

The JUNG-WHITE
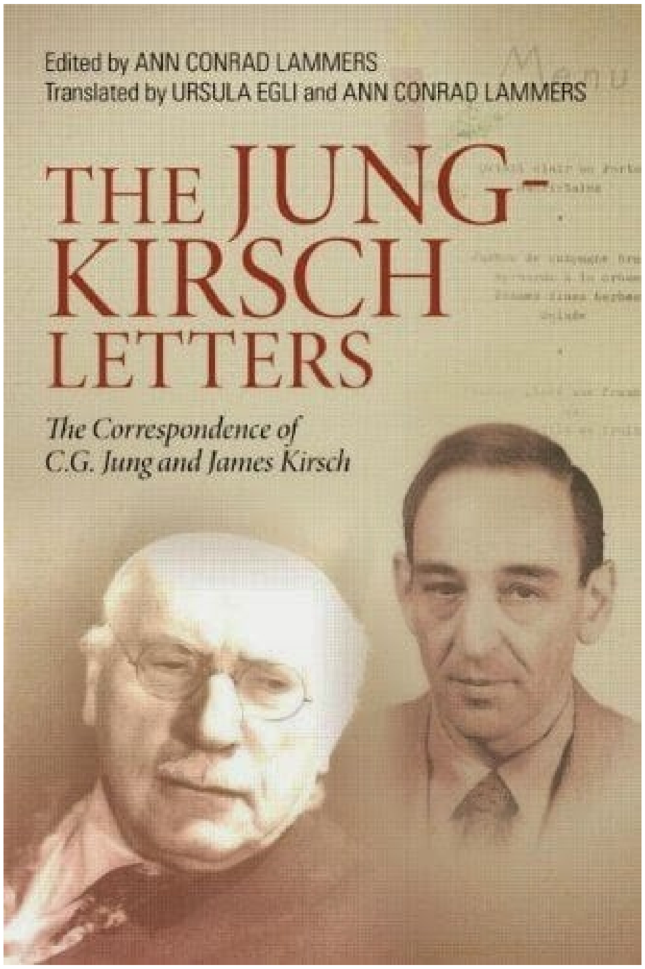
LETTERS

EDITED BY ANN CONRAD LAMMERS
AND ADRIAN CUNNINGHAM

CONSULTING EDITOR MURRAY STEIN

[8]Buy at Amazon here

[9]



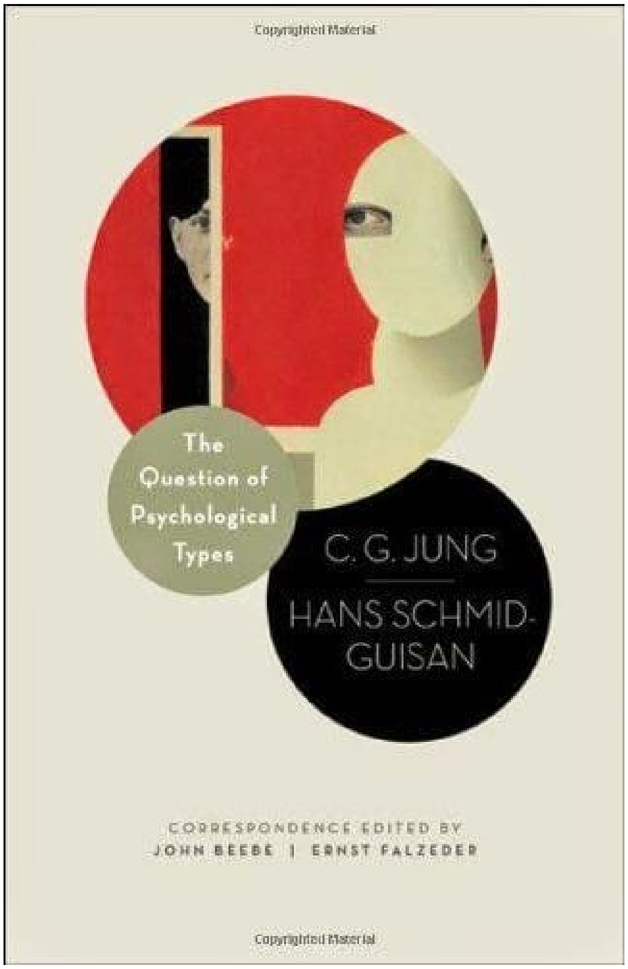
Edited by ANN CONRAD LAMMERS
Translated by URSULA EGLI and ANN CONRAD LAMMERS

THE JUNG-KIRSCH LETTERS

The Correspondence of C.G. Jung and James Kirsch

[10]Buy at Amazon here

[11]



Copyrighted Material
The Question of Psychological Types
C. G. JUNG
HANS SCHMID-GUISAN
CORRESPONDENCE EDITED BY
JOHN BEEBE | ERNST FALZEDER
Copyrighted Material

[12]Buy at Amazon here

[13] Copyrighted Material
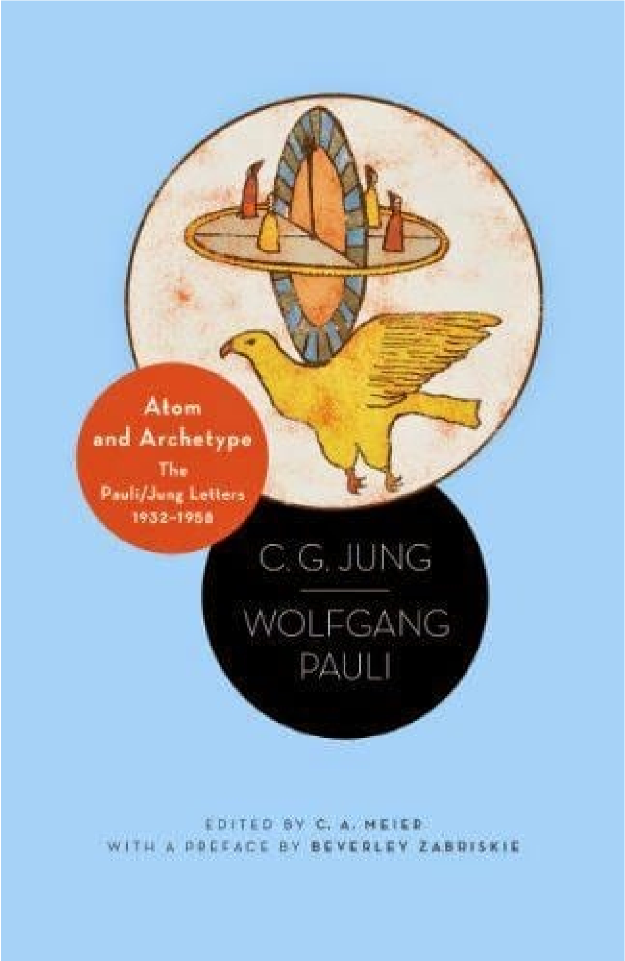
The Freud/Jung Letters
Edited by William McGuire
ABRIDGED EDITION
Copyrighted Material

[14]Buy at Amazon here

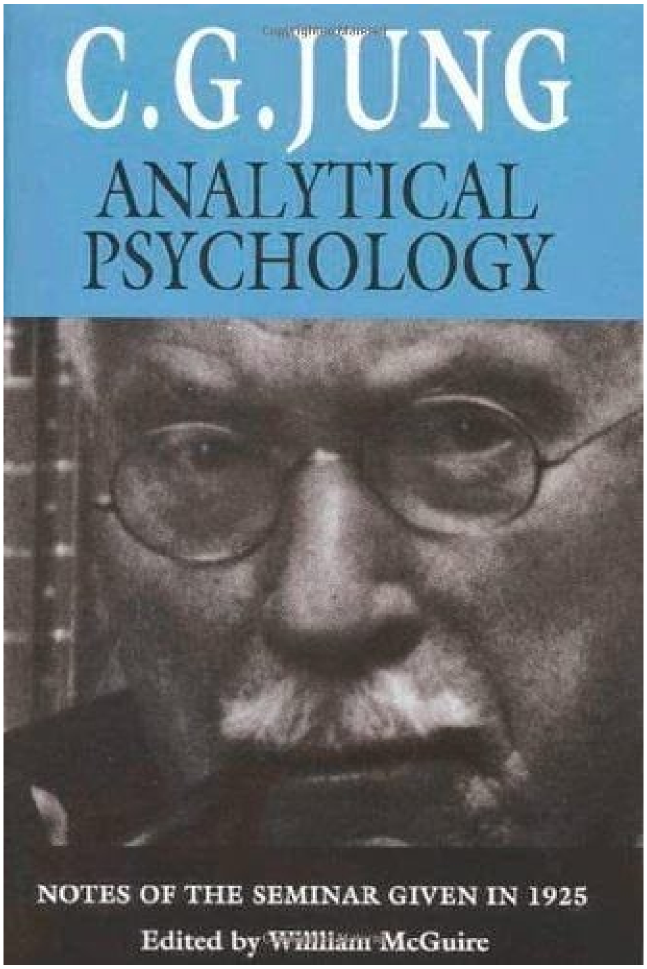
[15]



Atom and Archetype
The Pauli/Jung Letters 1932–1958
C. G. JUNG
WOLFGANG PAULI
EDITED BY C. A. MEIER
WITH A PREFACE BY BEVERLEY ZABRISKIE

[16]Buy at Amazon here

[17]

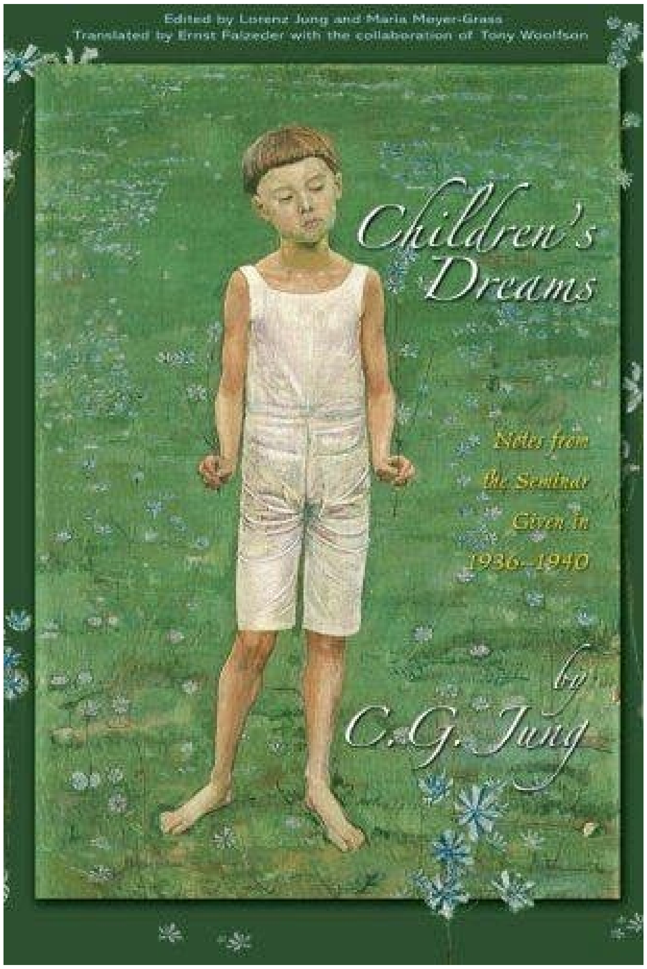


C.G.JUNG
ANALYTICAL PSYCHOLOGY
NOTES OF THE SEMINAR GIVEN IN 1925
Edited by William McGuire

[18]Buy at Amazon here hardcover

[19]Buy at Amazon here paperback

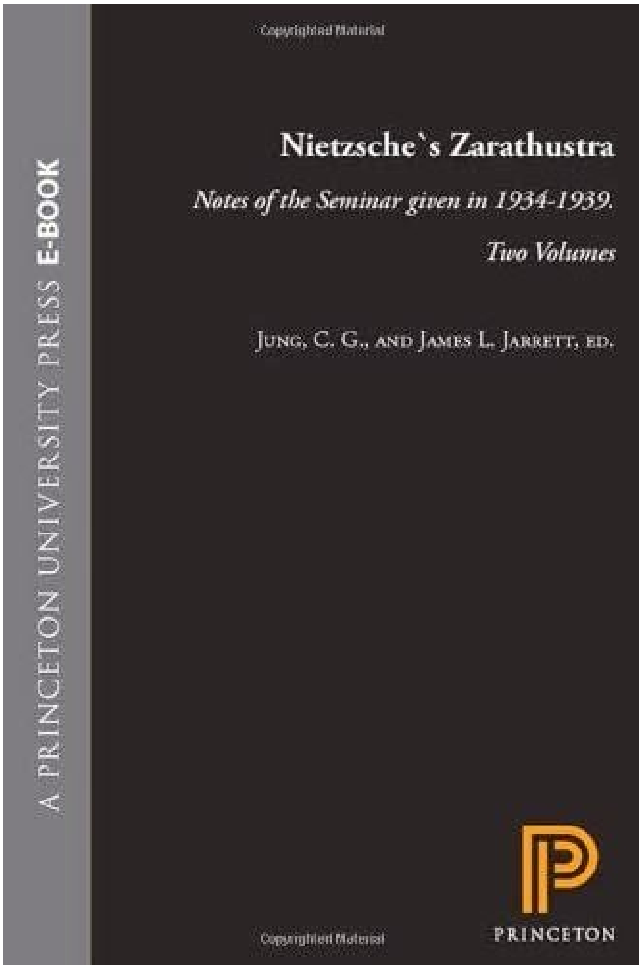
[20]



Edited by Lorenz Jung and Maria Meyer-Grass
Translated by Ernst Falzeder with the collaboration of Tony Woolfson
Children's Dreams
Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936–1940
by C.G. Jung

[21]Buy at Amazon here

[22]



Copyrighted Material

A PRINCETON UNIVERSITY PRESS E-BOOK

Nietzsche`s Zarathustra

Notes of the Seminar given in 1934-1939.

Two Volumes

Jung, C. G., and James L. Jarrett, ed.

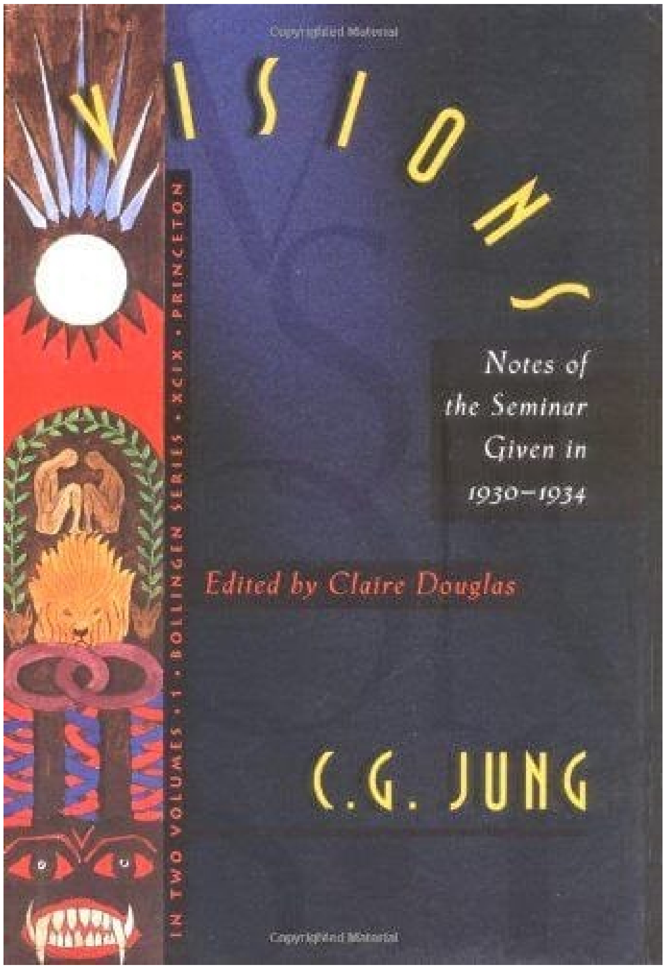
PRINCETON

Copyrighted Material

[23]Buy at Amazon here hardcover

[24]Buy at Amazon here Paperback

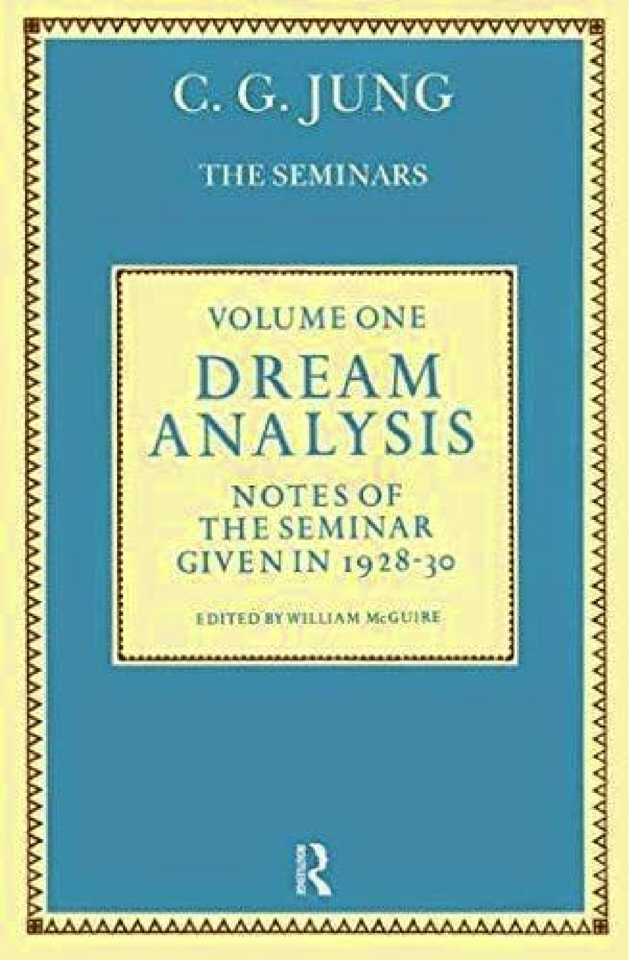
[25]



VISIONS
Notes of the Seminar Given in 1930–1934
Edited by Claire Douglas
C.G. JUNG
IN TWO VOLUMES • 1 • BOLLINGEN SERIES • XCIX • PRINCETON
Copyrighted Material

[26]Buy at Amazon here

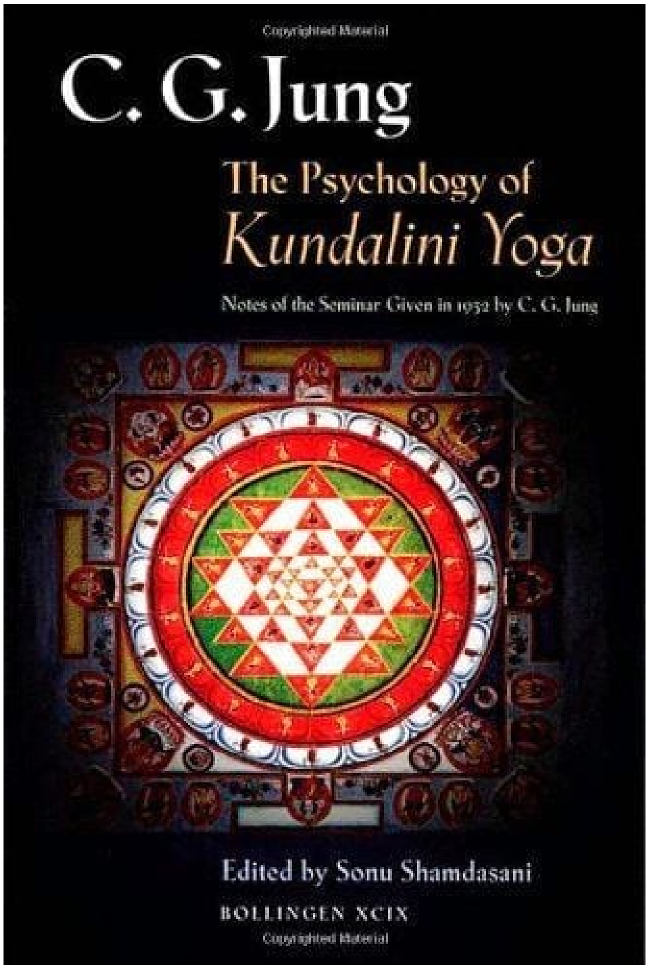
[27]



C. G. JUNG
THE SEMINARS
VOLUME ONE
DREAM ANALYSIS
NOTES OF THE SEMINAR GIVEN IN 1928-30
EDITED BY WILLIAM McGUIRE

[28]Buy at Amazon here

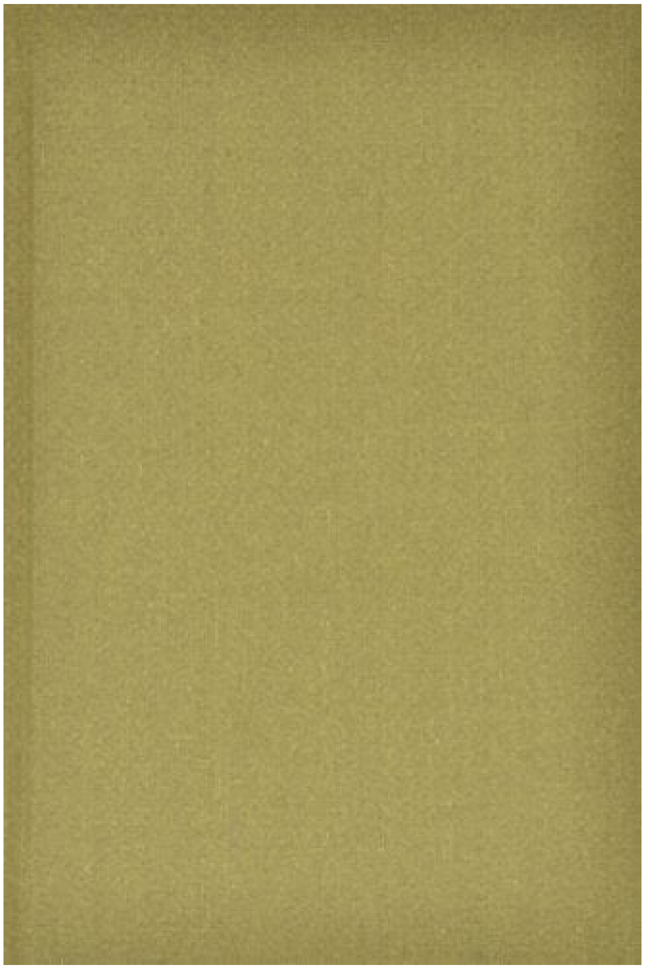
[29]



Copyrighted Material
C. G. Jung
The Psychology of
Kundalini Yoga
Notes of the Seminar Given in 1932 by C. G. Jung
Edited by Sonu Shamdasani
BOLLINGEN XCIX
Copyrighted Material

[30]Buy at Amazon here hardcover

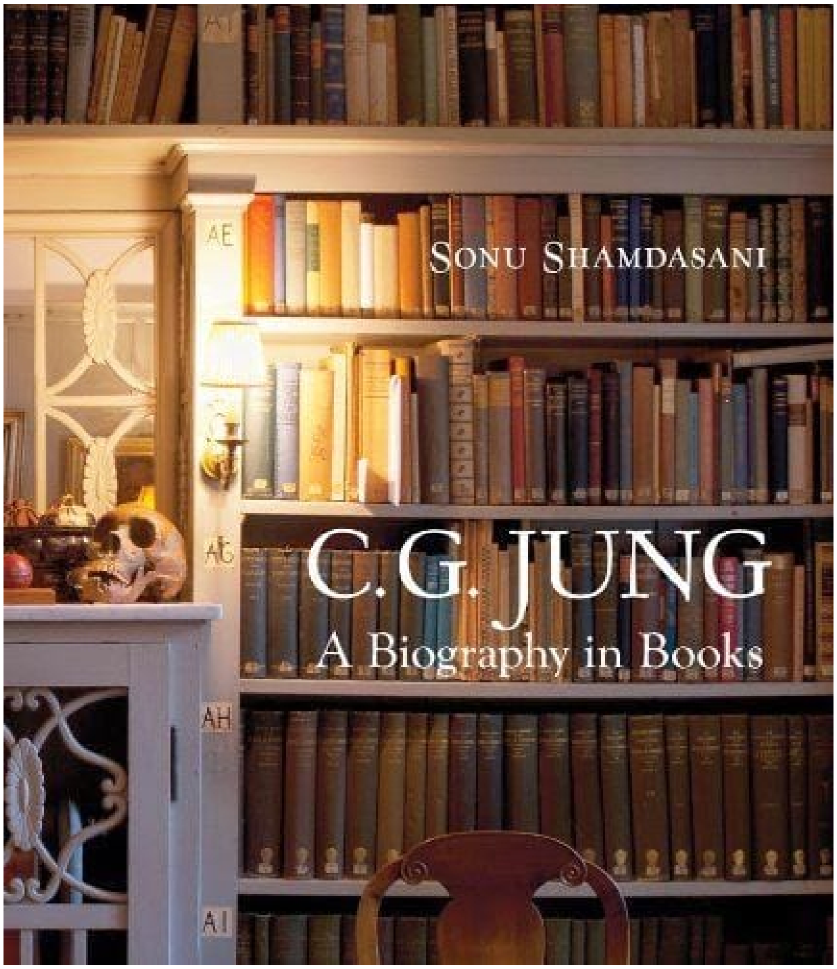
[31]Buy at Amazon here paperback



[33]Buy at Amazon here

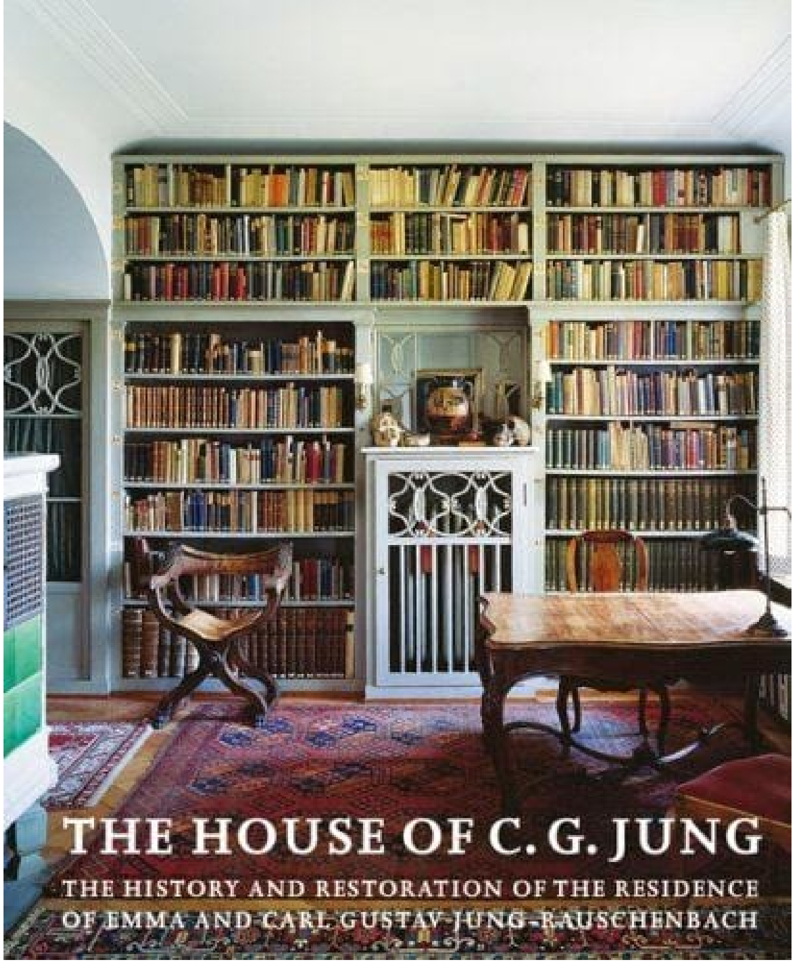
[34]
[35]Buy at Amazon here

[36]



Sonu Shamdasani
C.G. JUNG
A Biography in Books

[37]Buy at Amazon here



THE HOUSE OF C. G. JUNG
THE HISTORY AND RESTORATION OF THE RESIDENCE OF EMMA AND CARL GUSTAV JUNG-RAUSCHENBACH

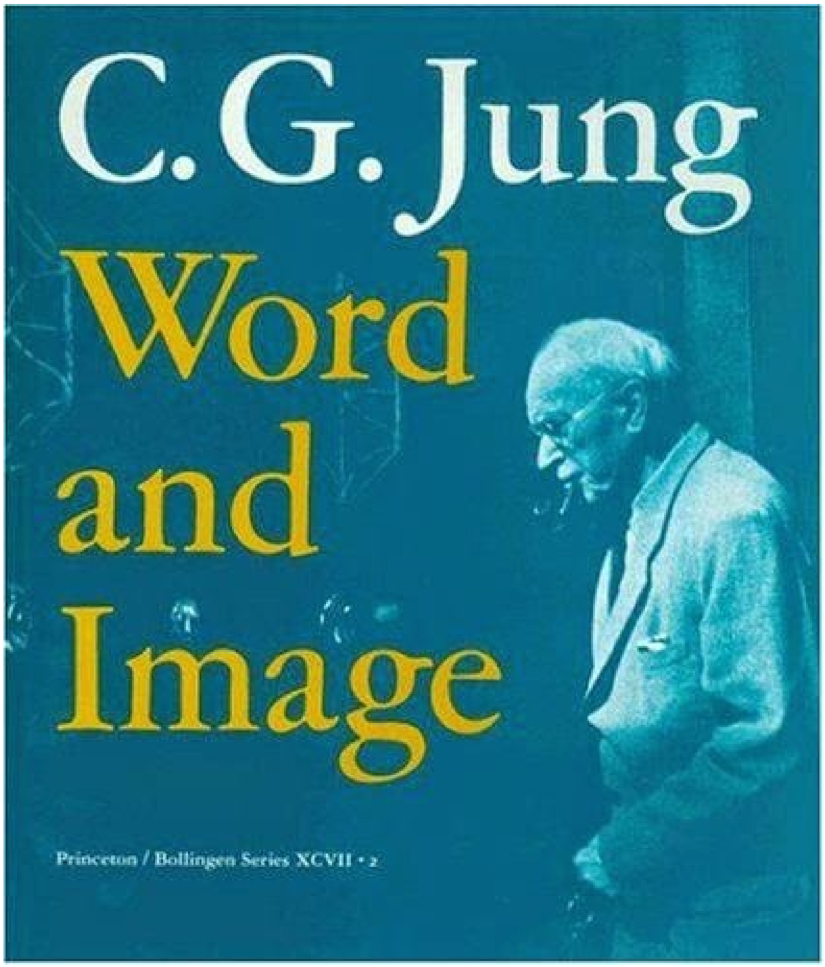
[39]Buy at Amazon here

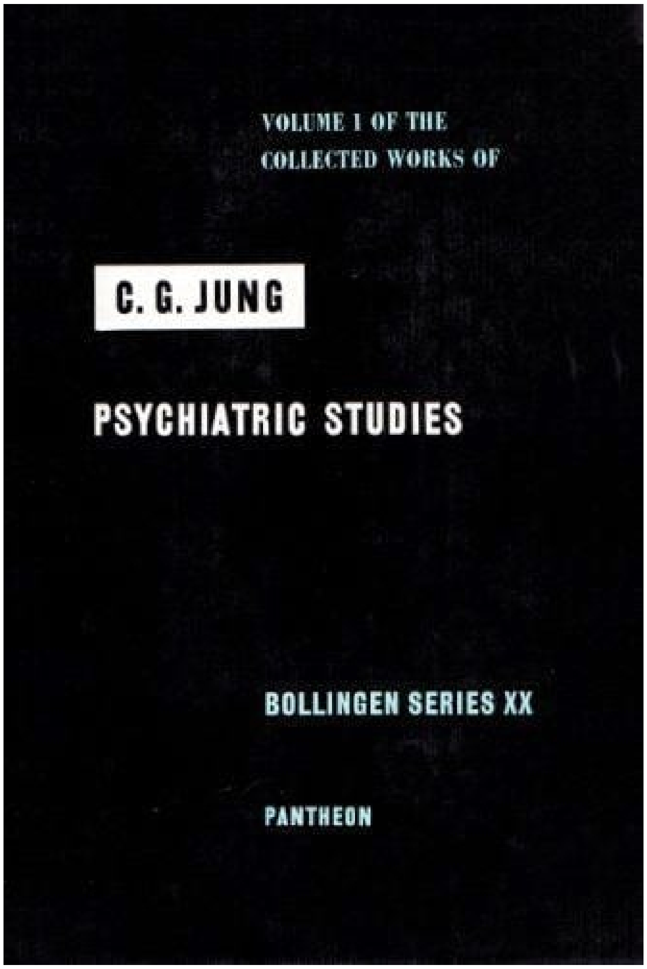
[40]



C.G. Jung
Word and Image
Princeton / Bollingen Series XCVII • 2

[41]Buy at Amazon here

[42]



VOLUME I OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF

C. G. JUNG

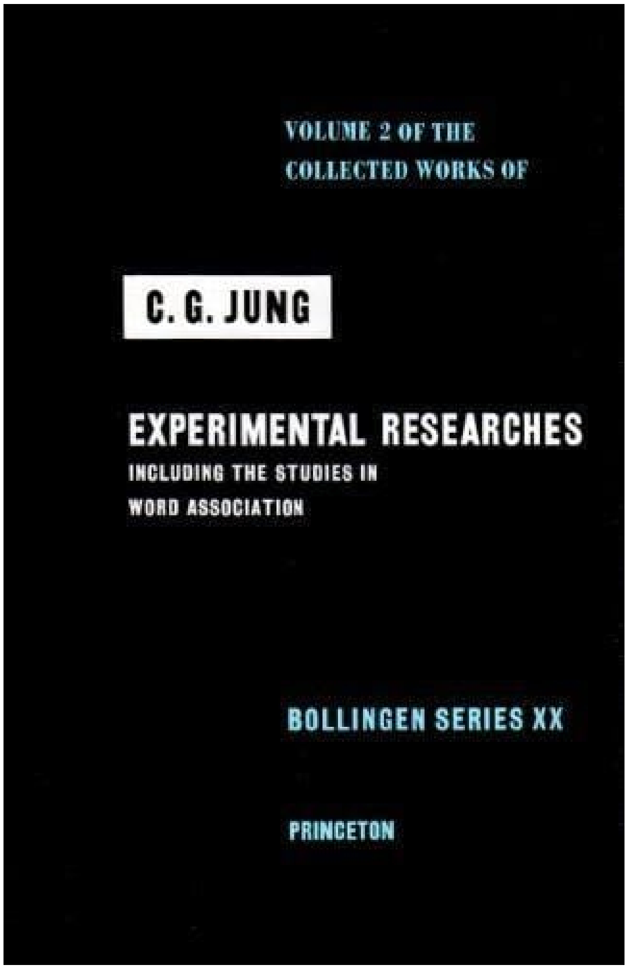
PSYCHIATRIC STUDIES

BOLLINGEN SERIES XX

PANTHEON

[43]Buy at Amazon here hardcover

[44]



VOLUME 2 OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF
C. G. JUNG
EXPERIMENTAL RESEARCHES INCLUDING THE STUDIES IN WORD ASSOCIATION
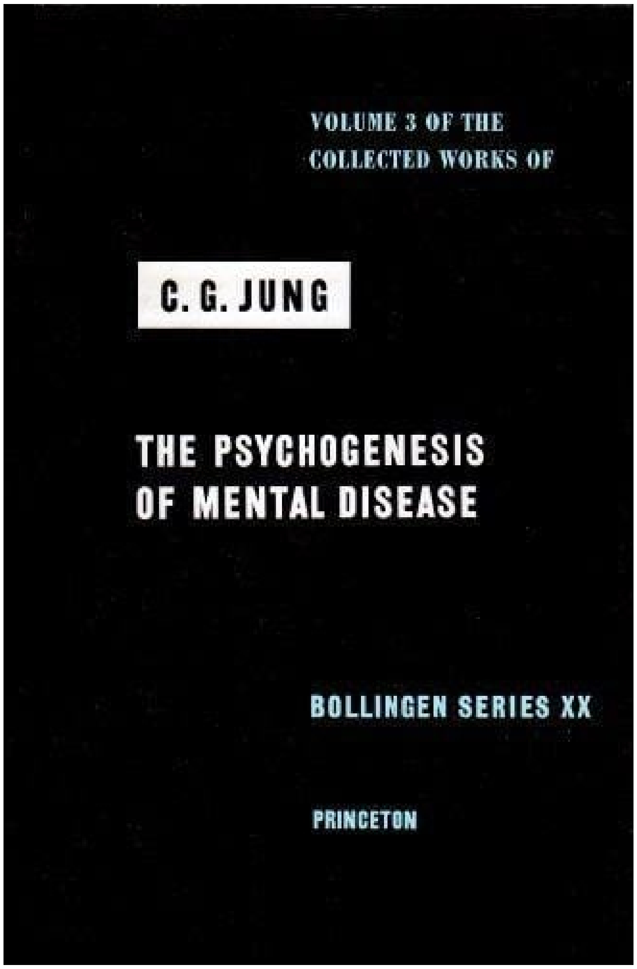
BOLLINGEN SERIES XX
PRINCETON

[45]Buy at Amazon here hardcover

[46]



VOLUME 3 OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF
C. G. JUNG
THE PSYCHOGENESIS OF MENTAL DISEASE
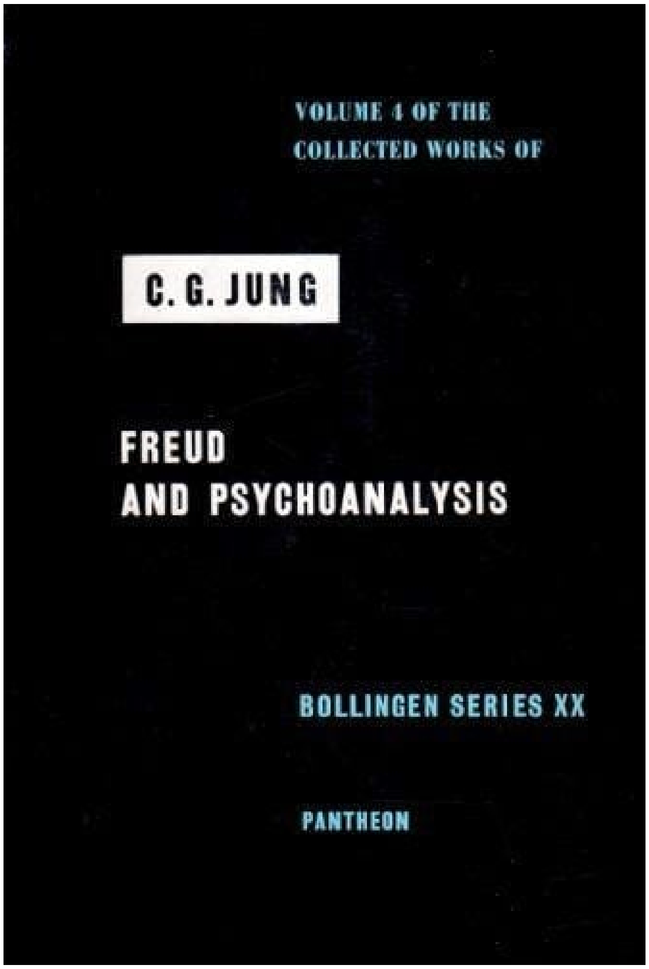
BOLLINGEN SERIES XX
PRINCETON

[47]Buy at Amazon here hardcover



VOLUME 4 OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF

C. G. JUNG

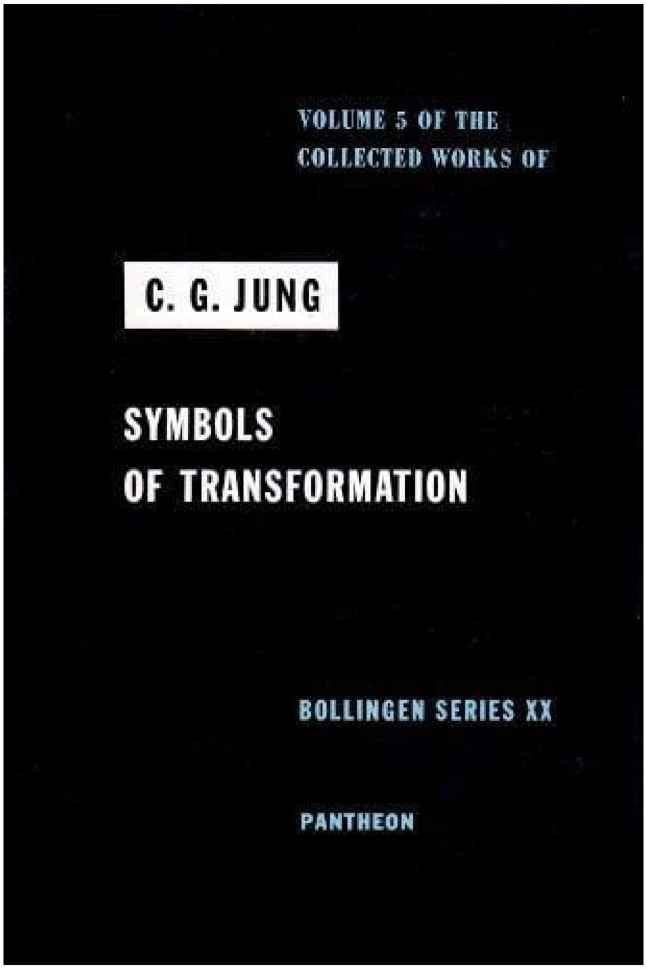
FREUD
AND PSYCHOANALYSIS

BOLLINGEN SERIES XX

PANTHEON

[49]Buy at Amazon here hardcover

[50]



VOLUME 5 OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF

C. G. JUNG

SYMBOLS OF TRANSFORMATION

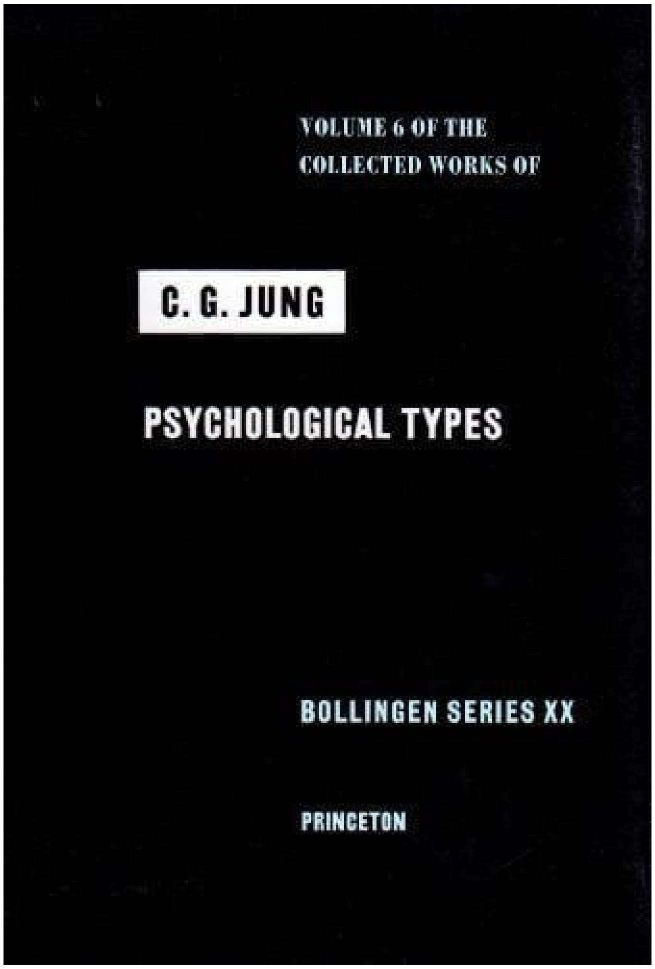
BOLLINGEN SERIES XX

PANTHEON

[51]Buy at Amazon here hardcover

[52]

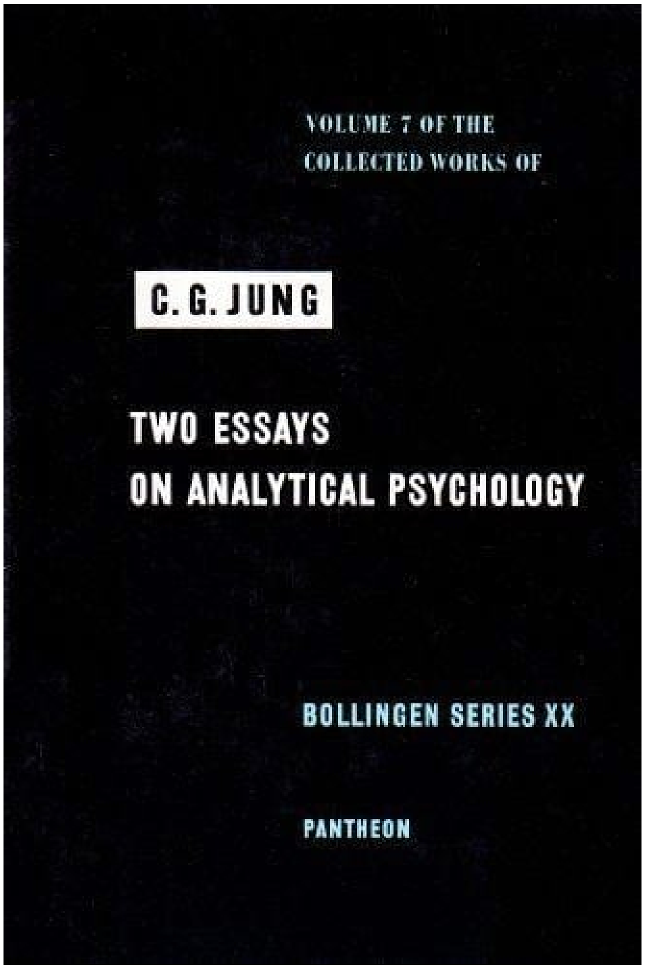


VOLUME 6 OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF
C. G. JUNG
PSYCHOLOGICAL TYPES
BOLLINGEN SERIES XX
PRINCETON

[53]Buy at Amazon here Hardcover

[54]Buy at Amazon here Paperback

[55]



VOLUME 7 OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF

C. G. JUNG

TWO ESSAYS ON ANALYTICAL PSYCHOLOGY

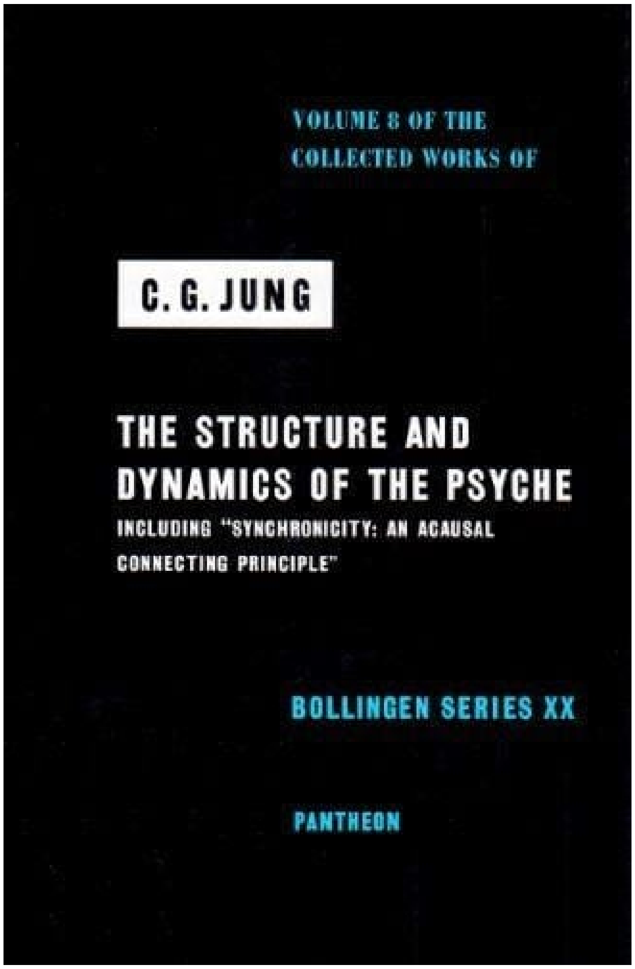
BOLLINGEN SERIES XX

PANTHEON

[56]Buy at Amazon here hardcover

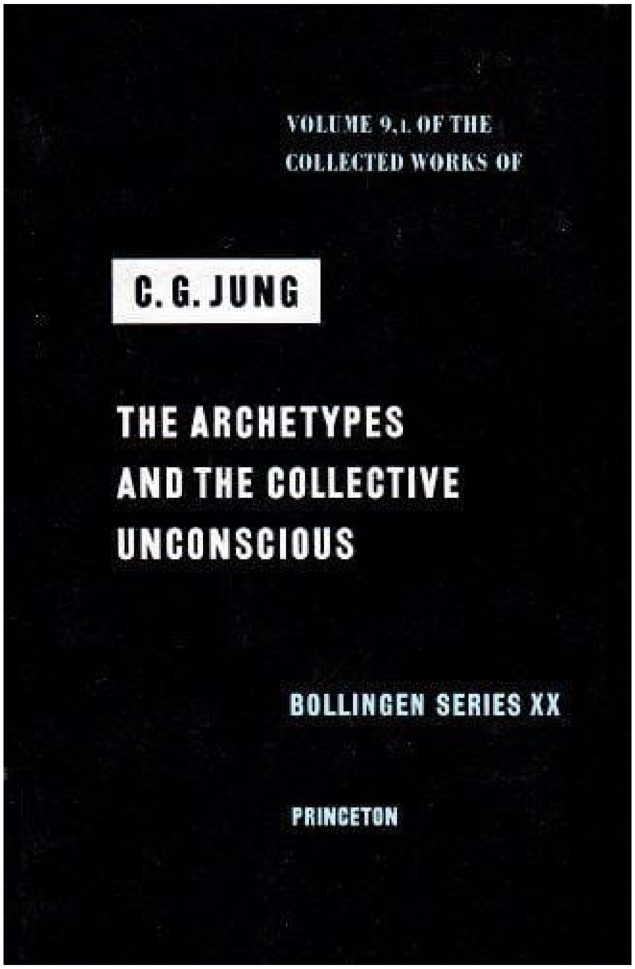
[57]Buy at Amazon here paperback

[58]



VOLUME 8 OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF
C. G. JUNG
THE STRUCTURE AND DYNAMICS OF THE PSYCHE
INCLUDING "SYNCHRONICITY: AN ACAUSAL CONNECTING PRINCIPLE"
BOLLINGEN SERIES XX
PANTHEON

[59]Buy at Amazon here hardcover



VOLUME 9,i. OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF
C. G. JUNG
THE ARCHETYPES
AND THE COLLECTIVE UNCONSCIOUS
BOLLINGEN SERIES XX
PRINCETON

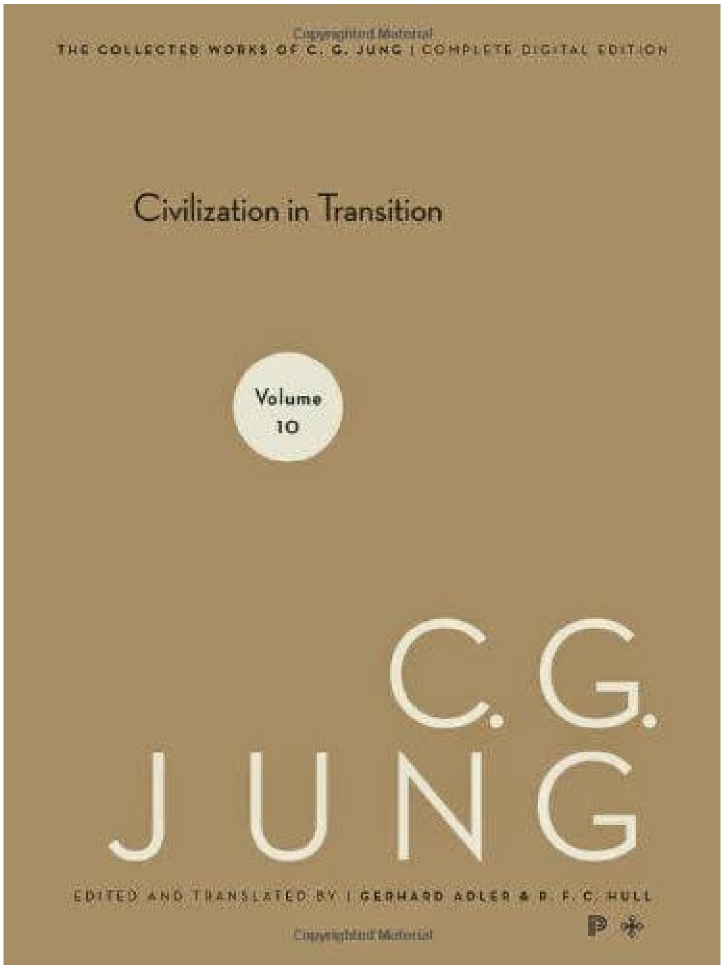
[61]Buy at Amazon here hardcover

[62]Buy at Amazon here paperback

[63]
[64]Buy from Amazon here hardcover

[65]Buy from Amazon here paperback

[66]



Copyrighted Material
THE COLLECTED WORKS OF C. G. JUNG | COMPLETE DIGITAL EDITION
Civilization in Transition
Volume 10
C.G. JUNG
EDITED AND TRANSLATED BY | GERHARD ADLER & R. F. C. HULL
Copyrighted Material

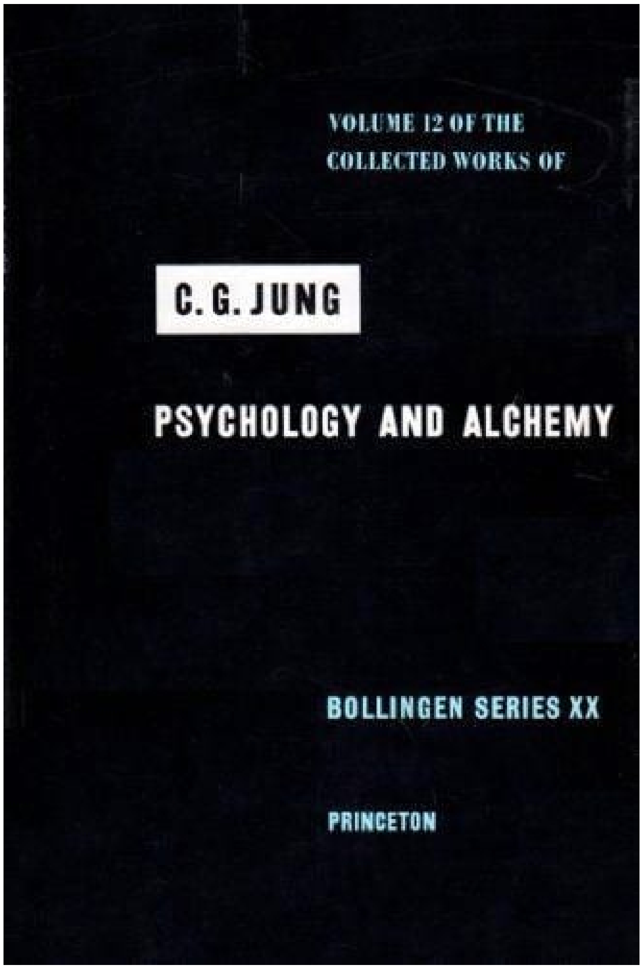
[67]Buy at Amazon here hardcover

[68]
Copyrighted Material
THE COLLECTED WORKS OF C. G. JUNG | COMPLETE DIGITAL EDITION
Psychology and Religion: West and East
Volume 11
C.G. JUNG
EDITED AND TRANSLATED BY | GERHARD ADLER & R. F. C. HULL
Copyrighted Material

[69]Buy at Amazon here hardcover

[70]Buy at Amazon here paperback

[71]

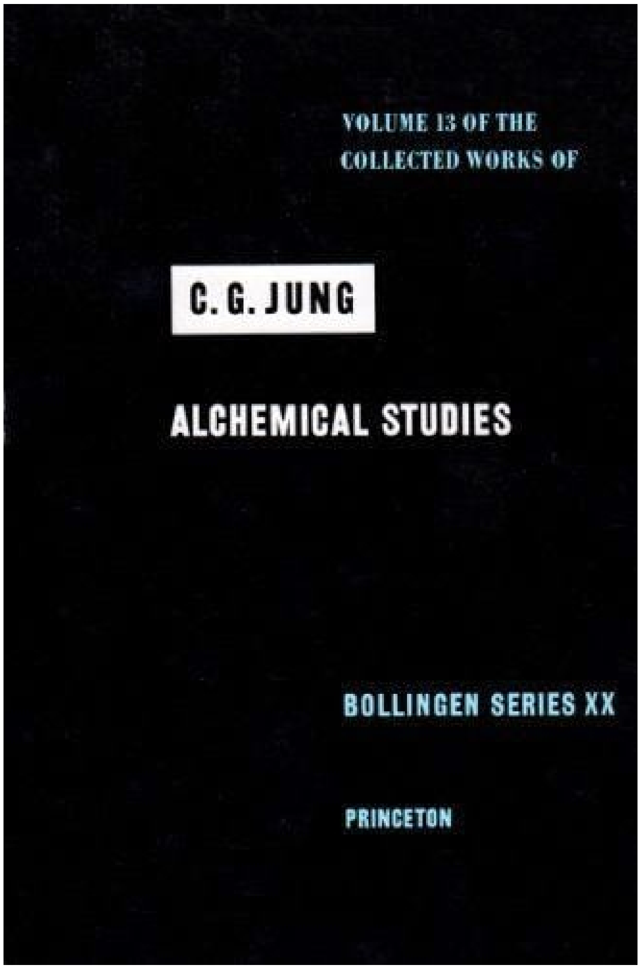


VOLUME 12 OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF
C. G. JUNG
PSYCHOLOGY AND ALCHEMY
BOLLINGEN SERIES XX
PRINCETON

[72]Buy at Amazon here hardcover

[73]Buy at Amazon here paperback

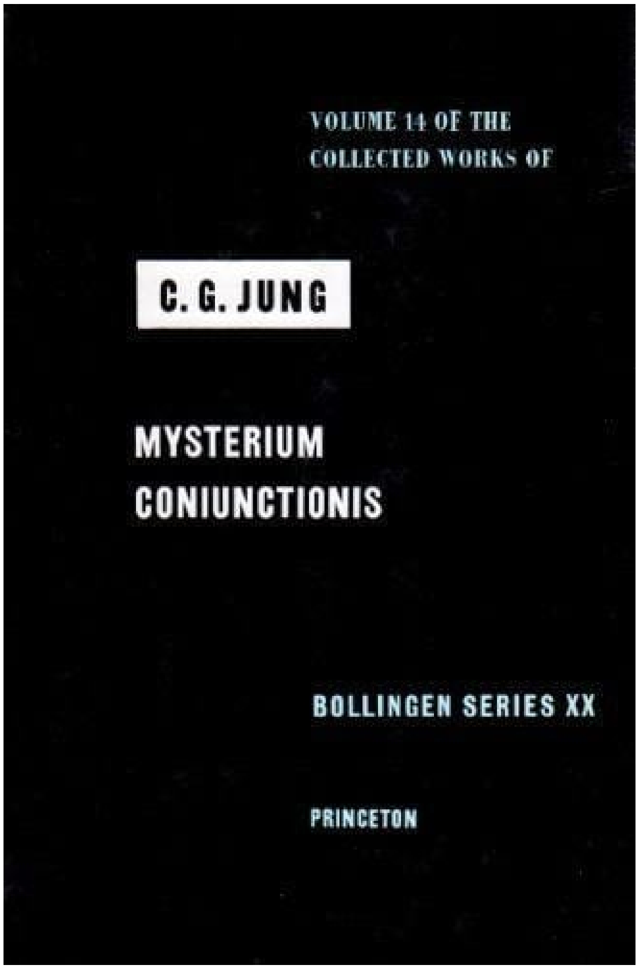
[74]



VOLUME 13 OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF
C. G. JUNG
ALCHEMICAL STUDIES
BOLLINGEN SERIES XX
PRINCETON

[75]Buy from Amazon here hardcover

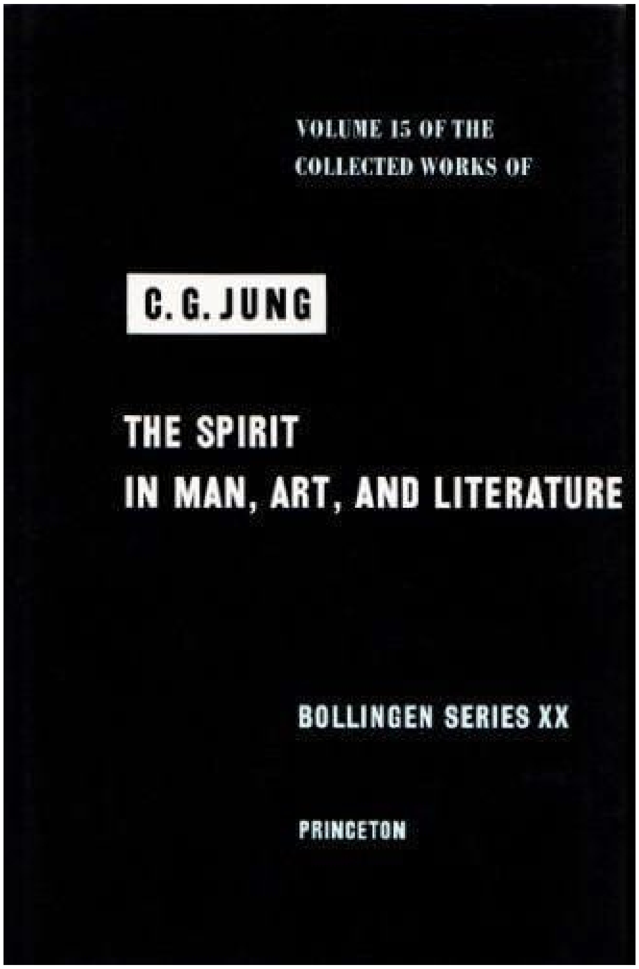
[76]Buy at Amazon here paperback



VOLUME 14 OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF
C. G. JUNG
MYSTERIUM
CONIUNCTIONIS
BOLLINGEN SERIES XX
PRINCETON

[78]Buy at Amazon here hardcover

[79]Buy at Amazon here paperback



VOLUME 15 OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF

C. G. JUNG

THE SPIRIT
IN MAN, ART, AND LITERATURE

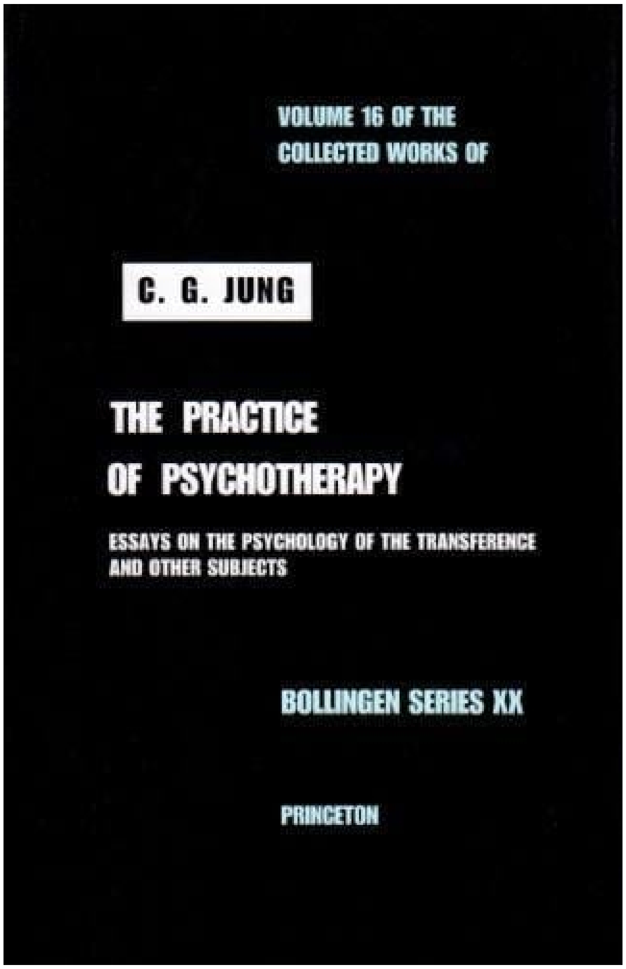
BOLLINGEN SERIES XX

PRINCETON

[81]Buy from Amazon here hardcover

[82]Buy from Amazon here paperback

[83]



VOLUME 16 OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF

C. G. JUNG

THE PRACTICE OF PSYCHOTHERAPY

ESSAYS ON THE PSYCHOLOGY OF THE TRANSFERENCE AND OTHER SUBJECTS

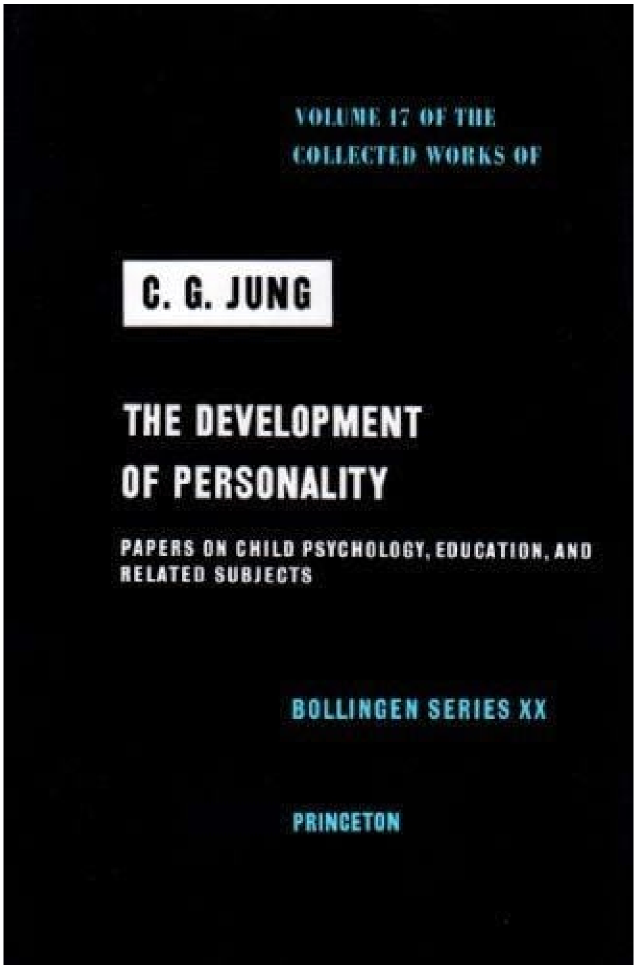
BOLLINGEN SERIES XX

PRINCETON

[84]Buy from Amazon here hardcover

[85]Buy from Amazon here paperback

[86]



VOLUME 17 OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF
C. G. JUNG
THE DEVELOPMENT OF PERSONALITY
PAPERS ON CHILD PSYCHOLOGY, EDUCATION, AND RELATED SUBJECTS
BOLLINGEN SERIES XX
PRINCETON

[87]Buy at Amazon here hard cover

[88]Buy from Amazon here paperback

[89] VOLUME 18 OF THE
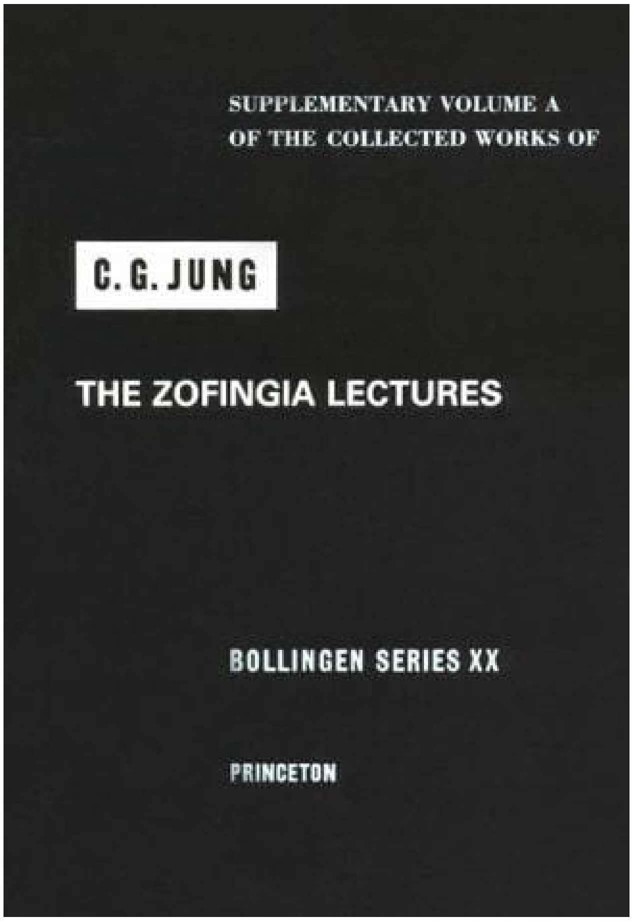
COLLECTED WORKS OF
C. G. JUNG
THE SYMBOLIC LIFE
MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS
BOLLINGEN SERIES XX
PRINCETON

[90]Buy from Amazon here hardcover

[91]



SUPPLEMENTARY VOLUME A
OF THE COLLECTED WORKS OF

C. G. JUNG

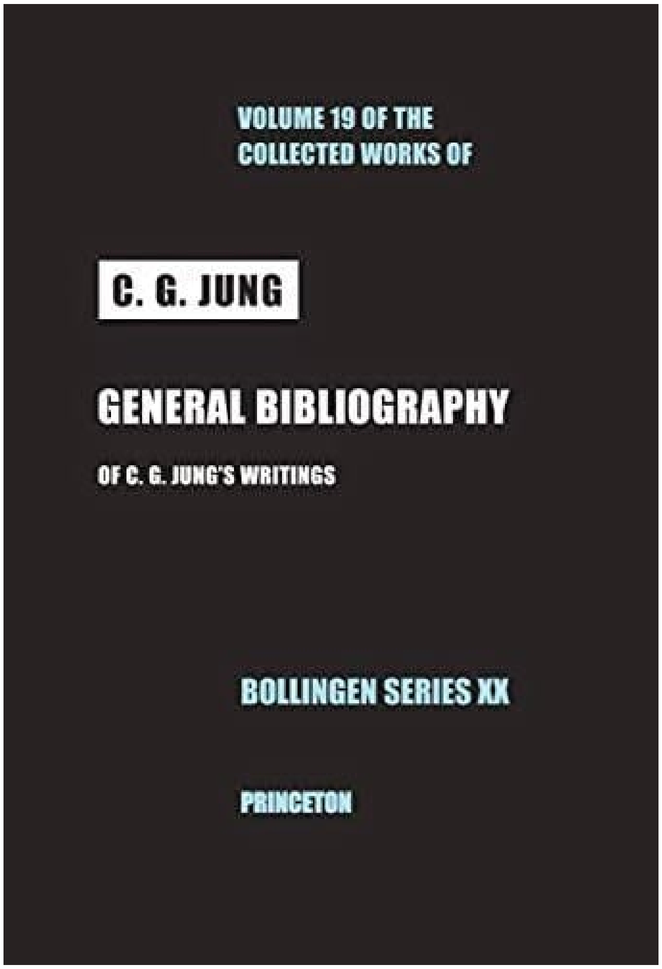
THE ZOFINGIA LECTURES

BOLLINGEN SERIES XX

PRINCETON

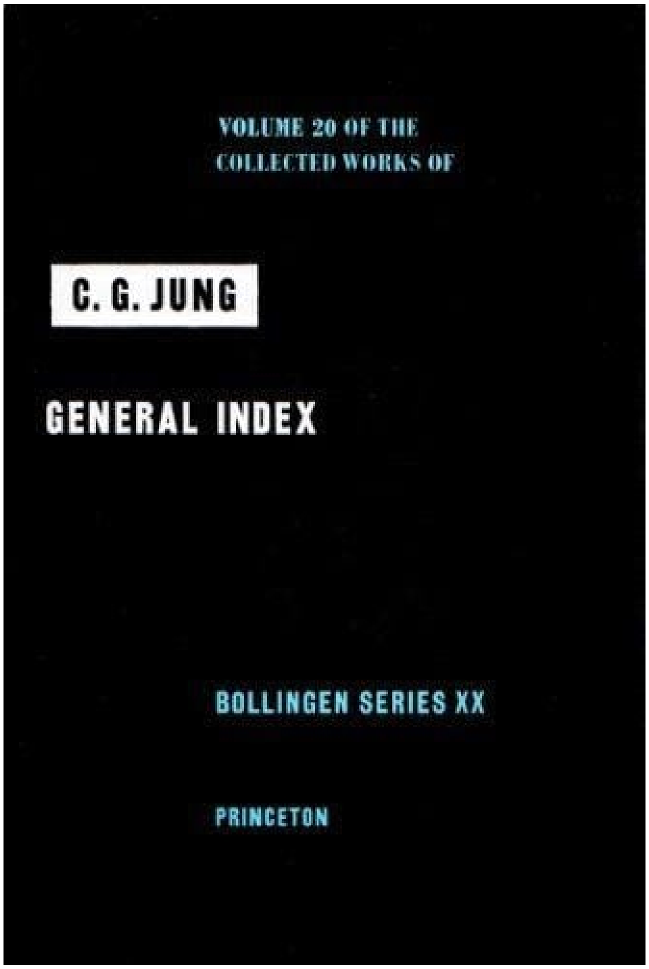
[92]Buy from Amazon here hardcover

[93]



VOLUME 19 OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF
C. G. JUNG
GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY
OF C. G. JUNG'S WRITINGS
BOLLINGEN SERIES XX
PRINCETON

[94]Buy from Amazon here



VOLUME 20 OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF
C. G. JUNG
GENERAL INDEX
BOLLINGEN SERIES XX
PRINCETON

[96]Buy at Amazon here

[97]
Copyrighted Material

C. G. JUNG
SPEAKING

Interviews and Encounters

EDITED BY WILLIAM McGUIRE AND
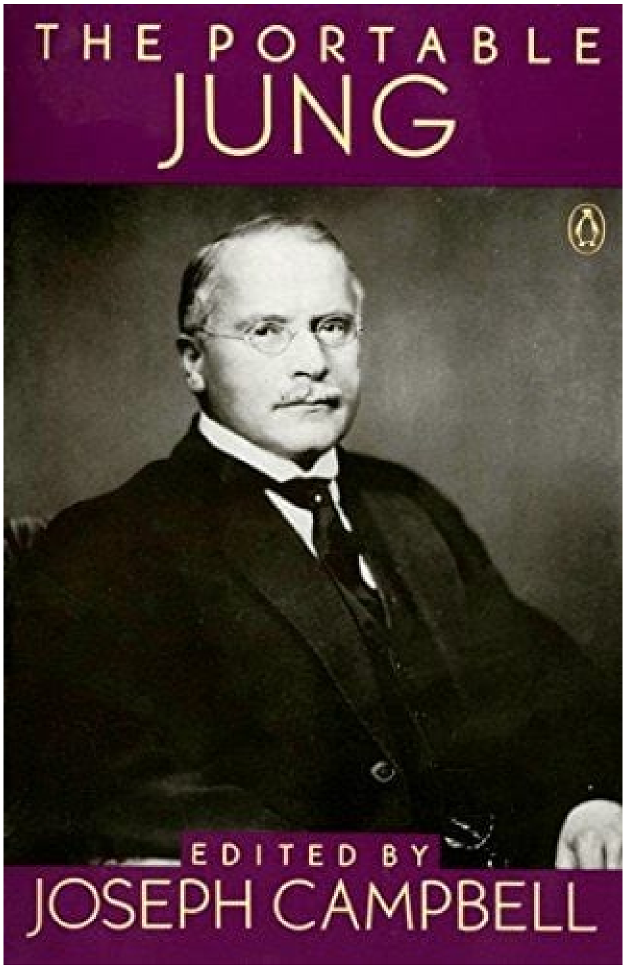
R. F. C. HULL

BOLLINGEN SERIES
PRINCETON UNIVERSITY PRESS

Copyrighted Material

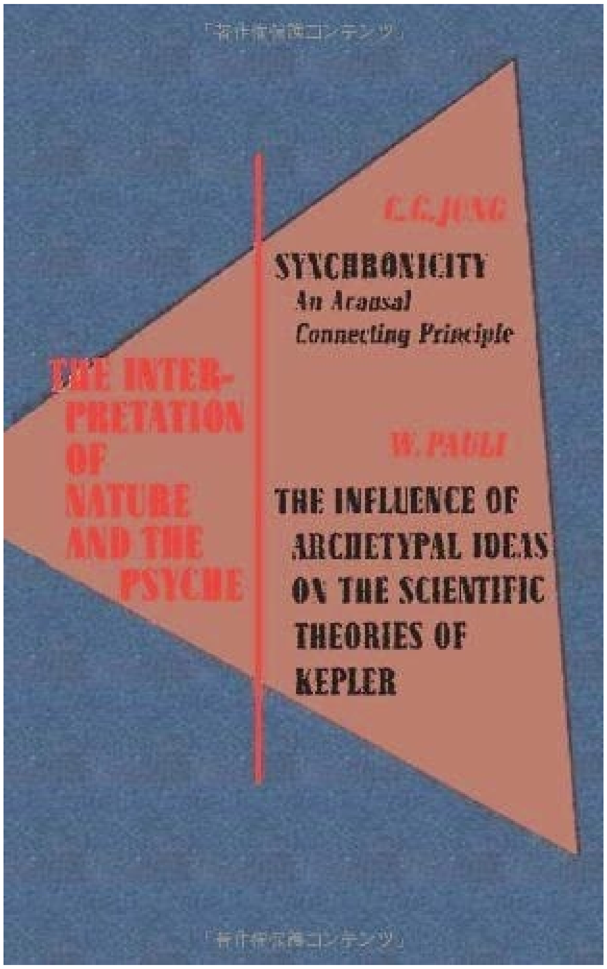
[98]Buy at Amazon here

[99]



THE PORTABLE
JUNG
EDITED BY
JOSEPH CAMPBELL

[100]Buy at Amazon here



「著作権保護コンテンツ」
C. G. JUNG
SYNCHRONICITY
An Acausal Connecting Principle
THE INTERPRETATION OF NATURE AND THE PSYCHE
W. PAULI
THE INFLUENCE OF ARCHETYPAL IDEAS ON THE SCIENTIFIC THEORIES OF KEPLER
「著作権保護コンテンツ」

[102]Buy at Amazon here

[103] C. G. JUNG
PSYCHOLOGY OF THE UNCONSCIOUS
A STUDY OF THE TRANSFORMATIONS AND SYMBOLISM OF THE LIBIDO

[104]Buy at Amazon here hardcover

[105]Buy at Amazon here at paperback

[106] "Straightforward to read and rich in suggestion"
—John Barkham, Saturday Review Syndicate
MAN AND HIS SYMBOLS
edited, with an introduction, by
CARL G. JUNG
Profusely Illustrated
LAUREL

[107]Buy at Amazon here

[108] THE I CHING
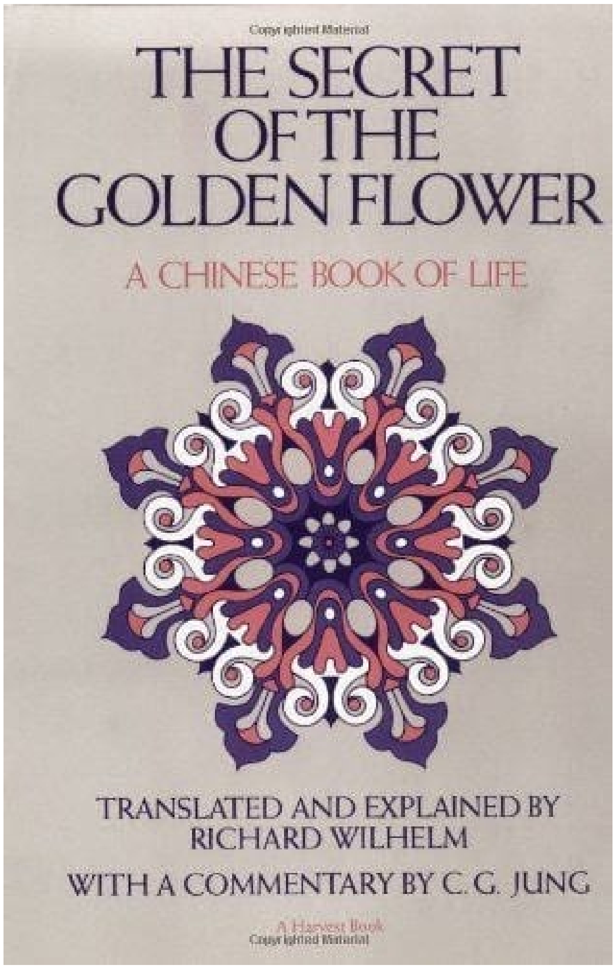
OR BOOK OF CHANGES
WILHELM/BAYNES
BOLLINGEN SERIES XIX
PRINCETON UNIVERSITY PRESS

[109]Buy at Amazon here

[110]



Copyrighted Material

THE SECRET
OF THE
GOLDEN FLOWER

A CHINESE BOOK OF LIFE

TRANSLATED AND EXPLAINED BY RICHARD WILHELM

WITH A COMMENTARY BY C. G. JUNG

A Harvest Book
Copyrighted Material

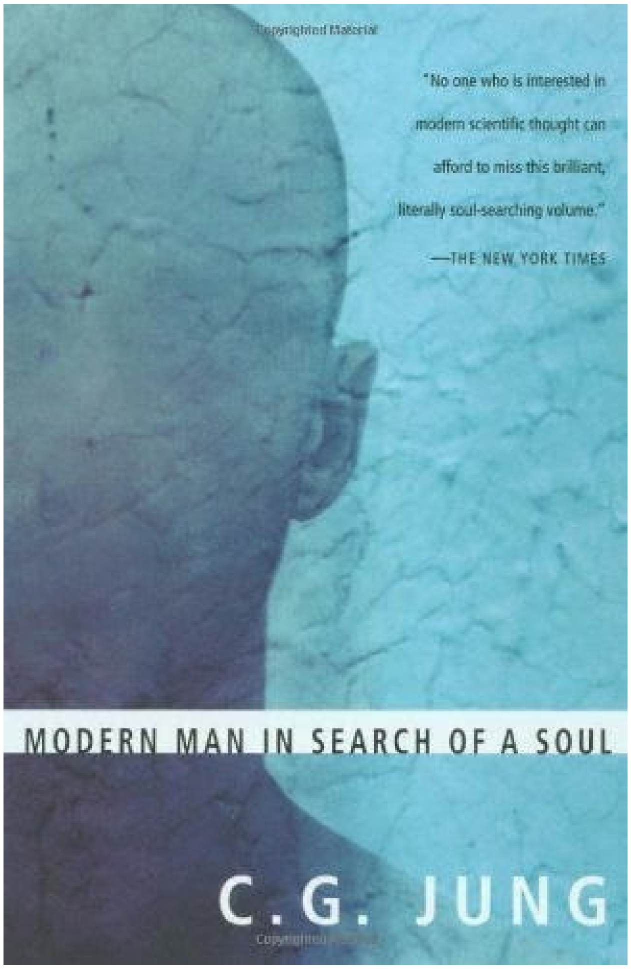
[111]Buy at Amazon here

[112]



Copyrighted Material
"No one who is interested in modern scientific thought can afford to miss this brilliant, literally soul-searching volume."
—THE NEW YORK TIMES
MODERN MAN IN SEARCH OF A SOUL
C.G. JUNG
Copyrighted Material

[113]Buy at Amazon here

[114]

CONVERSATIONS with
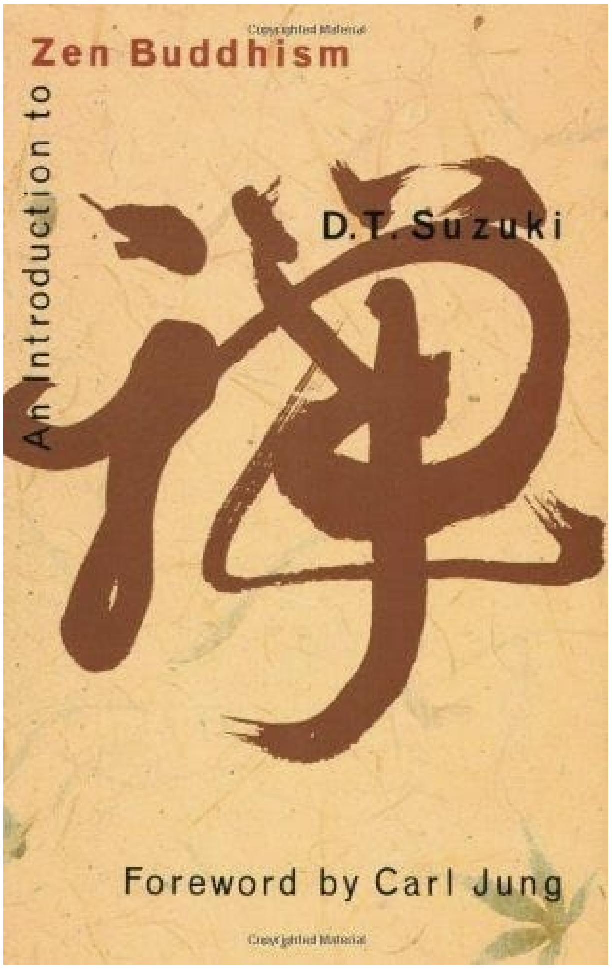
CARL JUNG
and Reactions from
ERNEST JONES
By RICHARD I. EVANS
AN INSIGHT BOOK BY VAN NOSTRAND
$1.75

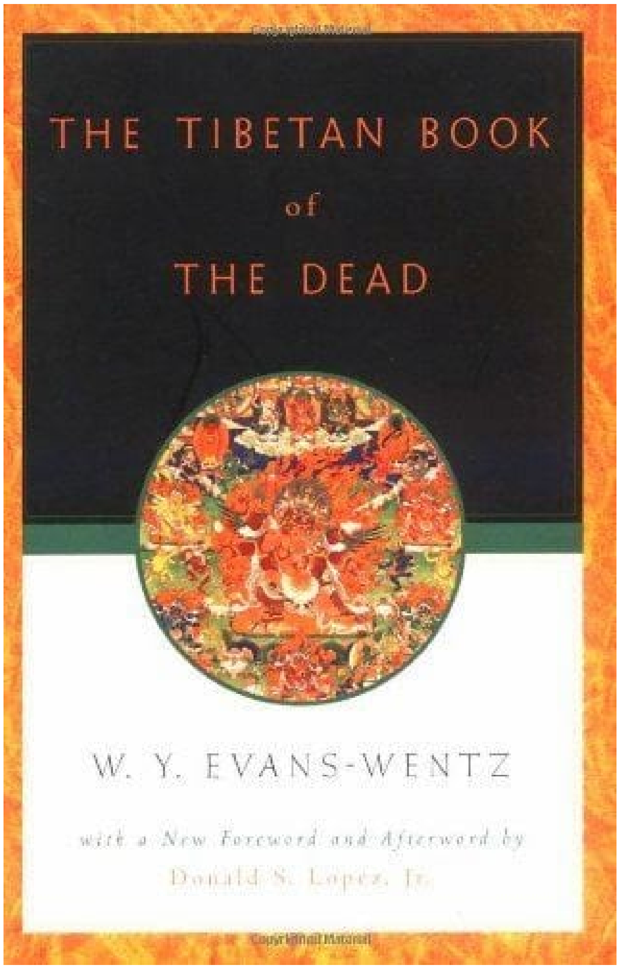
[115]Buy at Amazon here

[116]



Copyrighted Material
Zen Buddhism
An Introduction to
D.T. Suzuki
Foreword by Carl Jung
Copyrighted Material

[117]Buy at Amazon here



THE TIBETAN BOOK
of
THE DEAD
W. Y. EVANS-WENTZ with a New Foreword and Afterword by Donald S. Lopez, Jr.

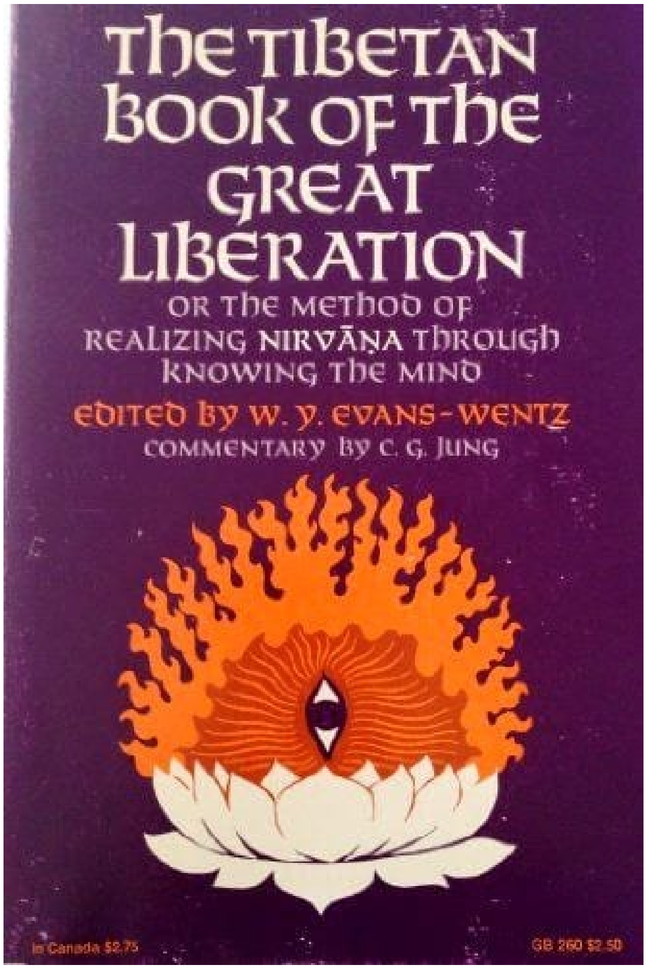
[119]Buy at Amazon here

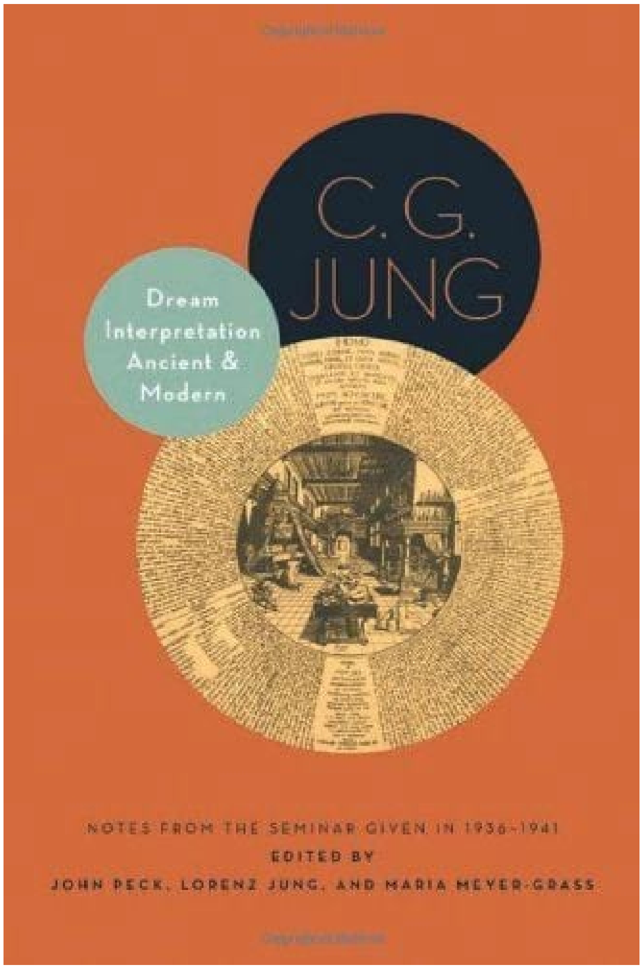
[120]



THE TIBETAN BOOK OF THE GREAT LIBERATION
OR THE METHOD OF REALIZING NIRVĀṆA THROUGH KNOWING THE MIND
EDITED BY W. Y. EVANS-WENTZ
COMMENTARY BY C. G. JUNG
In Canada $2.75
GB 260 $2.50

[121]Buy at Amazon here

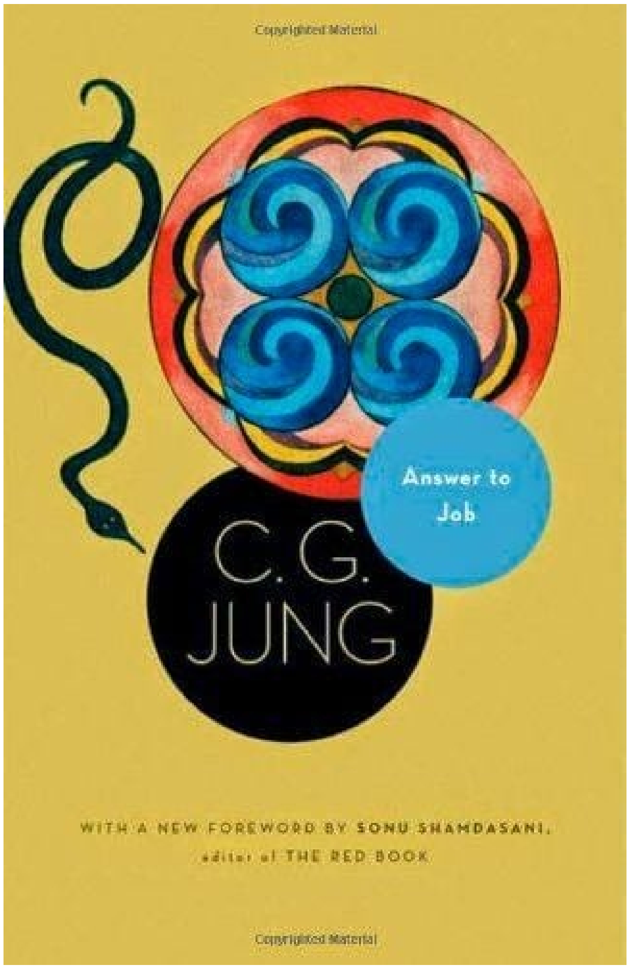
[122]



C.G. JUNG
Dream Interpretation Ancient & Modern
NOTES FROM THE SEMINAR GIVEN IN 1936–1941
EDITED BY
JOHN PECK, LORENZ JUNG, AND MARIA MEYER-GRASS

[123]Buy at Amazon here

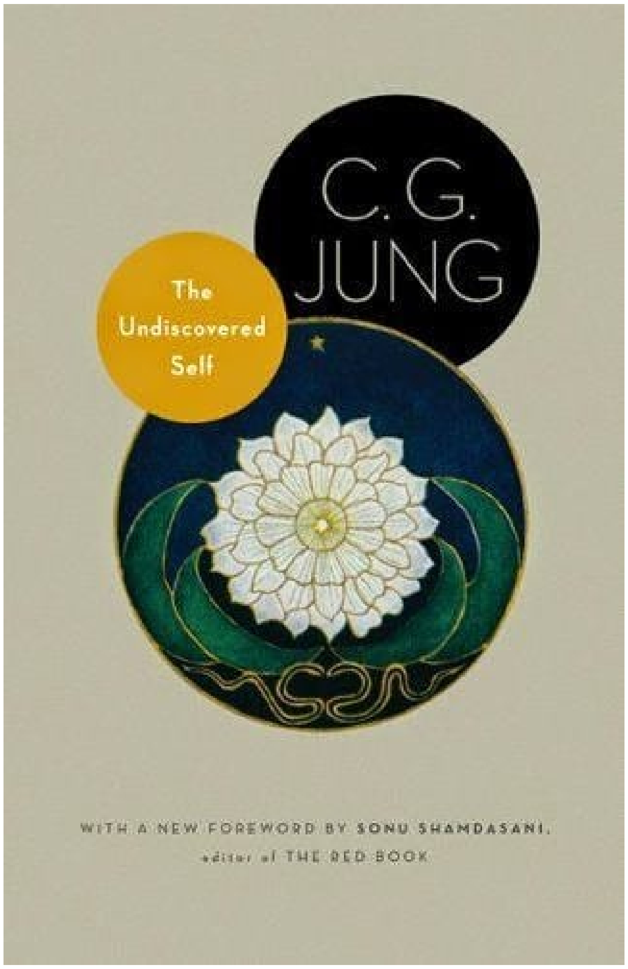
[124]



Copyrighted Material
Answer to Job
C. G. JUNG
WITH A NEW FOREWORD BY SONU SHAMDASANI, editor of THE RED BOOK
Copyrighted Material

[125]Buy at Amazon here

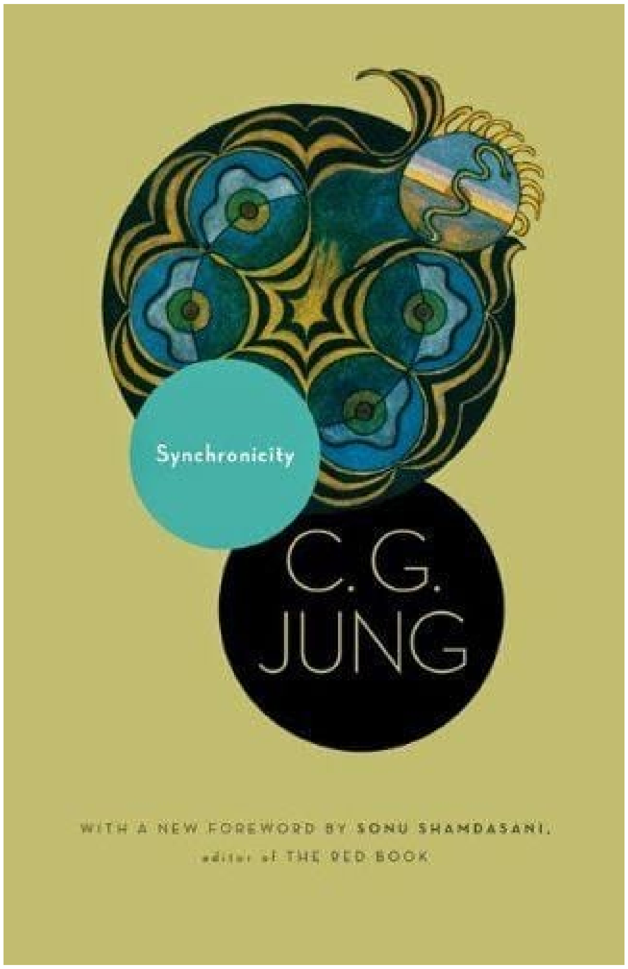
[126]



C.G. JUNG
The Undiscovered Self
WITH A NEW FOREWORD BY SONU SHAMDASANI,
editor of THE RED BOOK

[127]Order at Amazon here

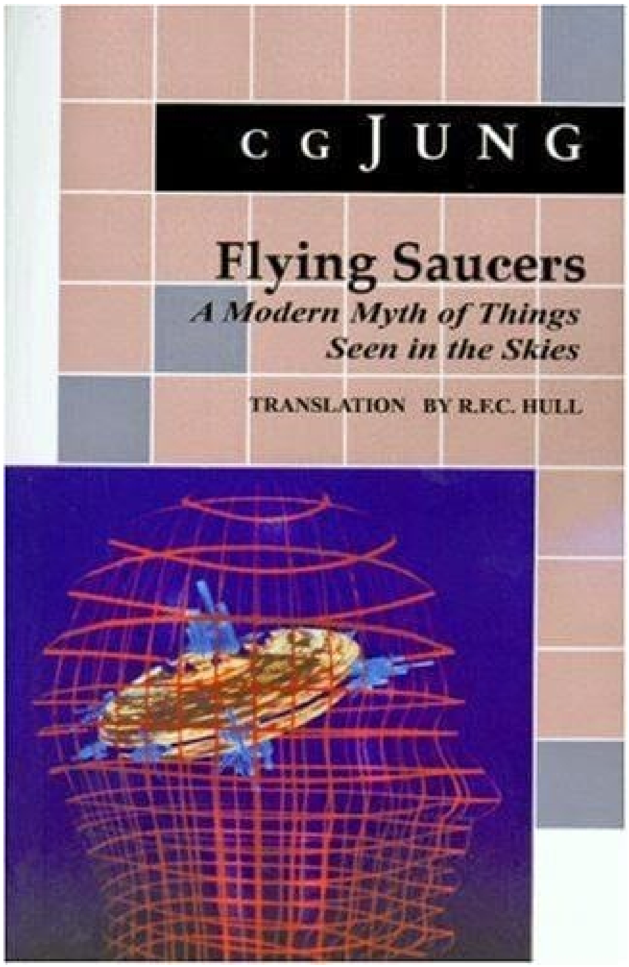
[128]



Synchronicity
C.G.
JUNG
WITH A NEW FOREWORD BY SONU SHAMDASANI,
editor of THE RED BOOK

[129]Order at Amazon here

[130]



C G JUNG

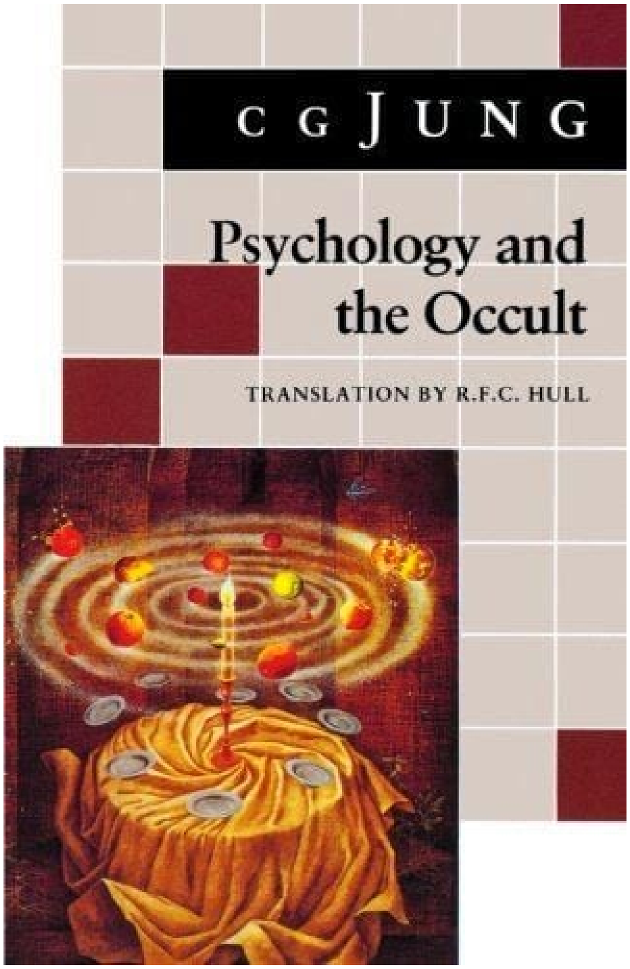
Flying Saucers

A Modern Myth of Things Seen in the Skies

TRANSLATION BY R.F.C. HULL

[131]Order from Amazon here

[132]



[133]Buy at Amazon here

[134] ENCOUNTERING
Jung
Jung on ACTIVE IMAGINATION
Edited and with an Introduction by Joan Chodorow

[135]Buy at Amazon here

[136] C G JUNG
The Psychology of the Transference
TRANSLATION BY R.F.C. HULL

[137]Buy at Amazon here

[138] C G JUNG
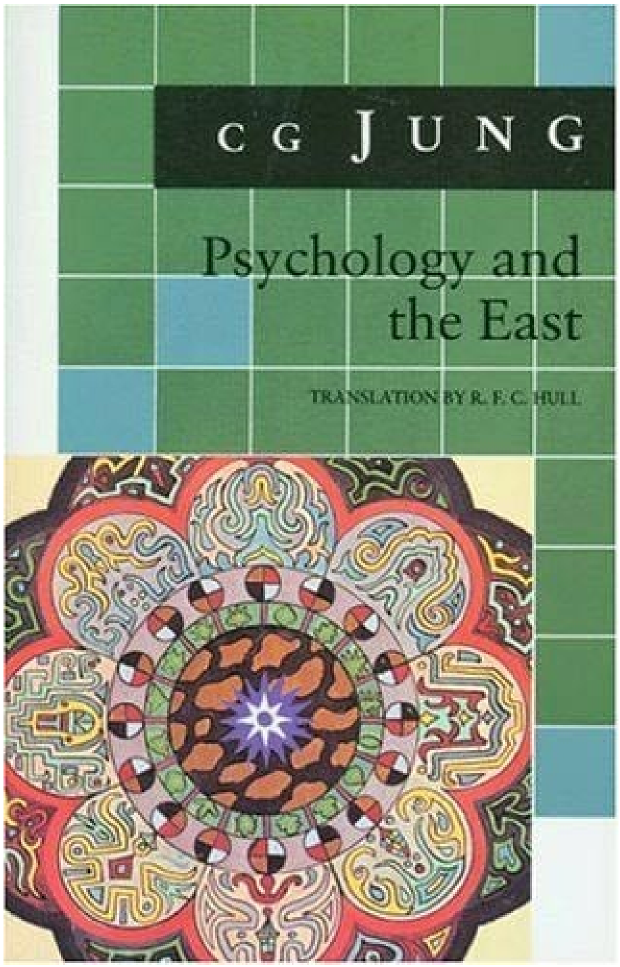
Psychology and Western Religion
TRANSLATION BY R. F. C. HULL

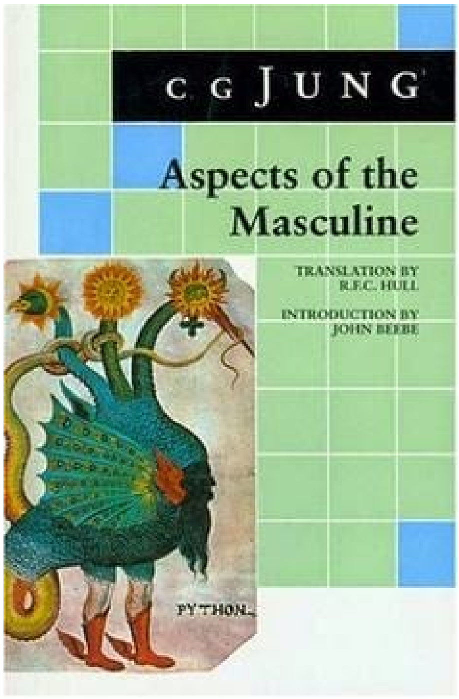
[139]Buy at Amazon here

[140]



C G JUNG
Psychology and the East
TRANSLATION BY R. F. C. HULL

[141]Buy at Amazon here



C G JUNG
Aspects of the Masculine
TRANSLATION BY R.F.C. HULL
INTRODUCTION BY JOHN BEEBE PYTHON.

[142]

[143]Order from Amazon here

[144] C G JUNG
Aspects of the Feminine
TRANSLATION BY R.F.C. HULL

[145]Order from Amazon here

[146] Mandala Symbolism
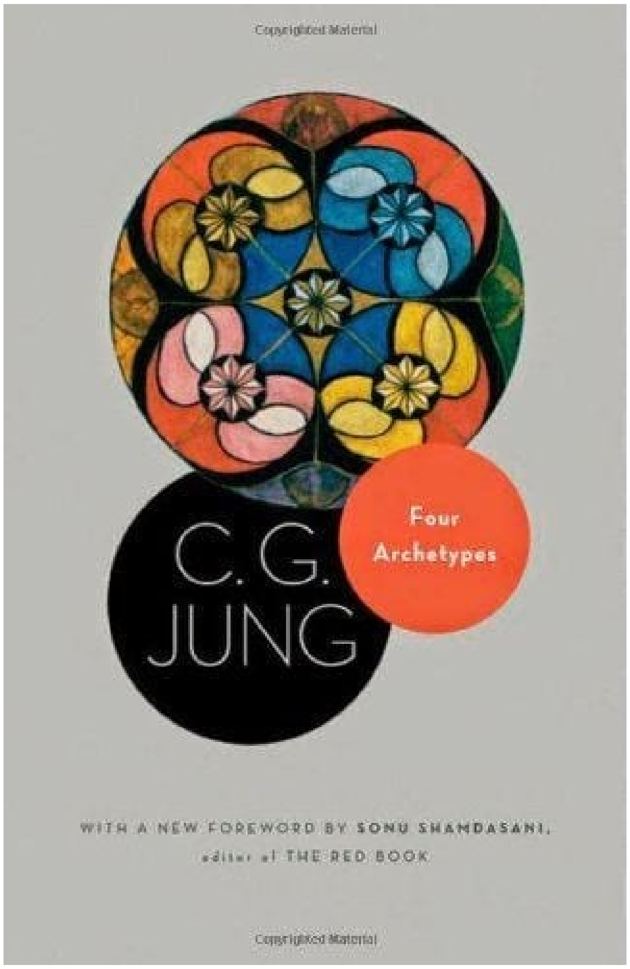
C.G. JUNG

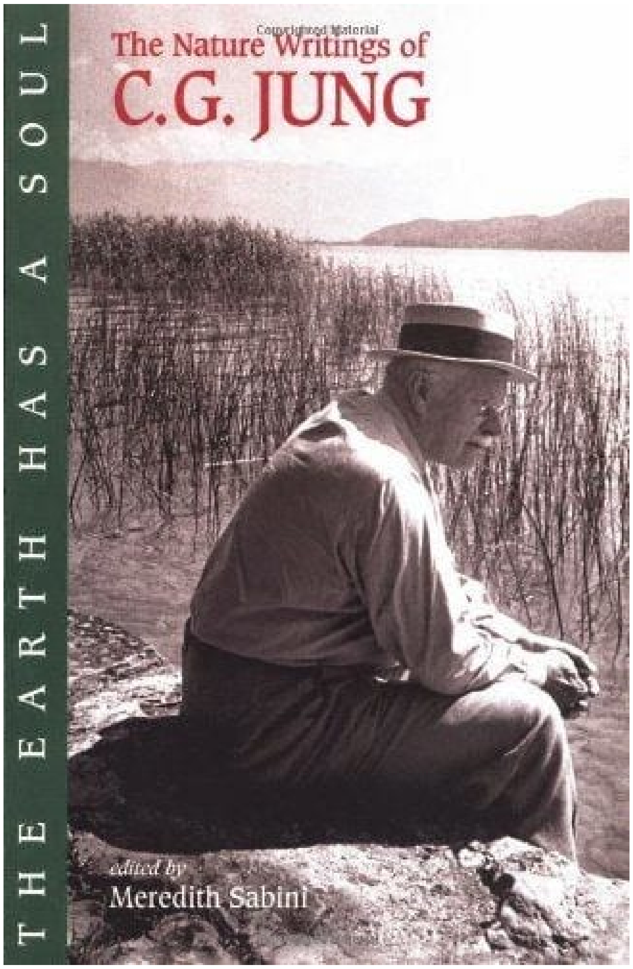
[147]Order from Amazon here

[148]



Copyrighted Material
C. G. JUNG
Four Archetypes
WITH A NEW FOREWORD BY SONU SHAMDASANI, editor of THE RED BOOK
Copyrighted Material

[149]Order at Amazon here



The Nature Writings of
C.G. JUNG
THE EARTH HAS A SOUL
edited by
Meredith Sabini

[151]Order from Amazon here

[152]Books by Carl Jung

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/ced96-1.jpg
2. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0679723951/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_.36xub0KPA4X0
3. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/8c154-2.jpg
4. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0393089088/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_aJPwub197M4CY
5. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/2d737-3.jpg
6. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0679723951/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_oKjyub10Q96WP
7. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/00032-4.jpg
8. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1583911944/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_FKbwub1D4MKAC
9. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/a3c1e-kirsch.jpg
10. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0415419212/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_uF9vub1FM4P6B

11. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/916f9-01.jpg
12. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691155615/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_qv7xub0BP92T3
13. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/fee51-1.jpg
14. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691036438/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_SXjyub1A0906Y
15. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/658ab-3.jpg
16. http://www.amazon.com/dp/069116147X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_D0jyub0V7H2RK
17. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/4e065-1.jpg
18. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691019185/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_3H9vub0YJN1YG
19. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0394708628/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_q1myub0PDWA92
20. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/16d55-4.jpg
21. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691148074/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_fQ8vub0FD10CT
22. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/c9136-5.jpg
23. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691099537/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_2a9vub1TMXX05
24. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691017387/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_l8jyub04PS9AF
25. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/43183-1.jpg
26. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691099715/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Pj9vub102P6ZD
27. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/f7bd5-2.jpg
28. http://www.amazon.com/dp/071009518X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_768vub170F3GQ
29. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/23217-3.jpg
30. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691099537/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Tdkyub1Z0JQPZ
31. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691006768/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_0b9vub1CHDSA5
32. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/809fe-1.jpg
33. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691098956/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_HlMxub0C5X4F9
34. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/a173a-2.jpg
35. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097240/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_5M8vub0NJP7ED
36. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/1ffe6-1.jpg
37. http://www.amazon.com/dp/039307367X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_rO8vub0JN24JN
38. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/f5dd8-2.jpg
39. http://www.amazon.com/dp/3905681412/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_dr9vub0JMF24J
40. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b6c00-3.jpg
41. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691018472/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_W2-vub15HTMW0
42. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/41195-1.jpg
43. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097682/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_fk-xub1H7MVNE
44. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/8f250-2.jpg
45. http://www.amazon.com/dp/069109764X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_xm-xub035Q197
46. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/eed5e-1.jpg
47. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097690/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Kn-xub05B6CJ9
48. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/ac58d-9.jpg
49. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097658/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_.A9vub1ZMB4E0
50. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/9a028-10.jpg
51. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097755/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Fs-xub0VHQC2D
52. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/c66c5-11.jpg
53. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097704/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Et-xub16GWV3W
54. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691018138/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_vQkyub1ZMN4GB
55. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/d9712-12.jpg
56. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097763/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_hv-xub07RFG5C
57. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691017824/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_oXkyub1EE3QPC
58. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/97b48-13.jpg
59. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097747/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_8v-xub18NBNX8
60. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b7fa6-1.jpg

61. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097615/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_14kyub07BAPAC
62. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691018332/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_D5kyub1BSPYC0
63. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/4eeae-2.jpg
64. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0415045290/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_l6kyub048QVQJ
65. http://www.amazon.com/dp/069101826X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_M6kyub1KBFKQY
66. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/9834a-1.jpg
67. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097623/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_q7kyub1RATB9F
68. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/6e242-2.jpg
69. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097720/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_p8kyub1Z2JPTY
70. http://www.amazon.com/dp/B0026YNBAY/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_08kyub1D38RHV
71. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/d62c7-4.jpg
72. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097712/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_p9kyub1C2AR5K
73. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097712/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_p9kyub1C2AR5K
74. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/57f1f-7.jpg
75. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097607/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_b-kyub1B2F8HQ
76. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691018499/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_w-kyub14XK75P
77. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/862d5-1.jpg
78. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097666/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_.rlyub1HVVF32
79. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691018162/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_vrlyub1T5EQTZ
80. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/e6ace-9.jpg
81. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097739/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Lslyub1W04WRR
82. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691017751/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_uslyub0AEK6TC
83. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/51fd4-11.jpg
84. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097674/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_2tlyub0F4D5XE
85. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691018707/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_hulyub0G7SCSP
86. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/88522-13.jpg
87. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691097631/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_6ulyub1CZ645B
88. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691018383/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Gulyub13WBQE9
89. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/4e920-15.jpg
90. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691098921/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_xvlyub1PEVKWK
91. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/9bfb5-16.jpg
92. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691098999/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_6F9vub0KPNV1S
93. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b999f-17.jpg
94. http://www.amazon.com/dp/069109893X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Py9vub0EFPSAZ
95. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/de4a7-18.jpg
96. http://http//www.amazon.com/dp/0691098670/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_mw9vub0BSVHHN
97. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b6835-3.jpg
98. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691018715/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_kG9vub0QF2QPB
99. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/13075-4.jpg
100. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0140150706/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_pg9vub0W5H2CH
101. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/045a3-5.jpg
102. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0140150706/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_pg9vub0W5H2CH
103. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/69cb3-1a.jpg
104. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691099731/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_5inyub1H4ZFZN
105. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0486424995/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_co.vub1TPX9GE
106. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/f5298-1.jpg
107. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0440351839/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_D-8vub0SESXA5
108. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/39e25-2.jpg
109. http://www.amazon.com/dp/069109750X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_0n9vub014JNCP
110. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/ce820-3.jpg

111. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0156799804/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Co9vub0DJSJMD
112. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/14b72-4.jpg
113. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0156612062/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_ft9vub0DV5HEP
114. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/bfcf8-6.jpg
115. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0442098723/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Nwawub1064W28
116. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/33e3f-7.jpg
117. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0802130550/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Jpawub1NVX8JF
118. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/d4097-1.jpg
119. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0195133129/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_rSnyub0PRSVSZ
120. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/ba309-2.jpg
121. http://www.amazon.com/dp/B0058E8L90/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_mp9vub183Z1B3
122. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/3c2a8-01.jpg
123. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691159459/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_RU-vub1VBBES6
124. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/cfb8b-1.jpg
125. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691150478/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_b98vub0YBXAG3
126. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/74a45-2.jpg
127. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691150516/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_b-8vub0YMF64K
128. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/ef750-3.jpg
129. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691150508/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_N.8vub0YT39VM
130. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/63ade-4.jpg
131. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691018227/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_3xswub1JS65XR
132. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/7095f-1.jpg
133. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691017913/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Pq-vub1PW4JZ8
134. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/5e608-2.jpg
135. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691015767/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_npawub1DACVZY
136. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/f6419-3.jpg
137. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691017522/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Urawub0C9K1WX
138. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/c0385-4.jpg
139. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691018626/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Ak9vub1EQAZHD
140. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b79c1-5.jpg
141. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691018065/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_I48vub1R7YMC1
142. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/3922a-1.jpg
143. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691018847/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Zm9vub0R33CPN
144. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/0d886-2.jpg
145. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691018456/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Pc9vub16Q1YPD
146. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/7368a-3.jpg
147. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691017816/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_K78vub1VP1KMA
148. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/39808-4.jpg
149. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691150494/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_ze9vub0HQVEY7
150. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/5bd7b-5.jpg
151. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1556433794/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Md9vub11EDNPW
152. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0486424995/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_co.vub1TPX9GE

Carl Jung: It was as if my diaphragm were made of iron and were becoming red-hot-a glowing vault. (2019-11-10 04:54)

Sigmund Freud
(1856 - 1939)
Carl Gustav Jung
(1875 - 1961)

While Freud was going on this way, I had a curious sensation.

It was as if my diaphragm were made of iron and were becoming red-hot-a glowing vault.

At that moment there was such a loud report in the bookcase, which stood right next to us, that we both started up in alarm, fearing the thing was about to topple over on us.

I said to Freud: "There, that is an example of a so-called catalytic exteriorization phenomenon."

"Oh come," he exclaimed. "That is sheer bosh."

"It is not," I replied. "You are mistaken, Herr Professor.

And to prove my point I now predict that in a moment there will be another such loud report!"

Sure enough, no sooner had I said the words than the same detonation went off in the bookcase.

To this day I do not know what gave me this certainty.

But I knew beyond all doubt that the report would come again. Freud only stared aghast at me. Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 36.

Carl Jung: It is a desire, an ardent longing and even greed for God; I would not call it love. (2019-11-10 04:57)

[1]

Northern India is characterized by the fact that it is part of the immense Asiatic continent.

I noticed a frequent note of harshness in the way the people talked to each other, recalling harassed camel-drivers or irritable horse-dealers.

The variety of Asiatic costumes here supersedes the immaculate whiteness of the mild plant-eaters.

Women’s dresses are gay and provocative.

The many Pathans, proud, unconcerned, and ruthless, and the bearded Sikhs, with their contradictory character—over-masculine brutality combined with melting sentimentality—give a strong Asiatic tinge to the appearance of the masses.

The architecture shows clearly how much the Hindu element has succumbed to the predominating Asiatic influence.

Even the temples of Benares are small and not very impressive, if it were not for their noisiness and dirt.

Shiva, the destroyer, and the bloodthirsty and blood-curdling Kali seem to be in the foreground.

The fat, elephant-headed Ganesha is also much in demand to bring good luck.

In comparison, Islam seems to be a superior, more spiritual, and more advanced religion.

Its mosques are pure and beautiful, and of course wholly Asiatic.

There is not much mind about it, but a great deal of feeling.

The cult is one wailing outcry for the All-Merciful.

It is a desire, an ardent longing and even greed for God; I would not call it love.

But there is love, the most poetic, most exquisite love of beauty in these old Moguls.

In a world of tyranny and cruelty, a heavenly dream crystallized in stone: the Taj Mahal.

I cannot conceal my unmitigated admiration for this supreme flower, for this jewel beyond price, and I marvel at that love which discovered the genius of Shah Jehan and used it as an instrument of self-realization.

This is the one place in the world where the—alas—all too invisible and all too jealously guarded beauty of the Islamic Eros has been revealed by a well-nigh divine miracle.

It is the delicate secret of the rose gardens of Shiraz and of the silent patios of Arabian palaces, torn out of the heart of a great lover by a cruel and incurable loss.

The mosques of the Moguls and their tombs may be pure and austere, their divans, or audience halls, may be of impeccable beauty, but the Taj Mahal is a revelation.

It is thoroughly un-Indian.

It is more like a plant that could thrive and flower in the rich Indian earth as it could nowhere else.

It is Eros in its purest form; there is nothing mysterious, nothing symbolic about it.

It is the sublime expression of human love for a human being. Carl Jung, Civilization in Transition, Pages 519-520

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/0aefe-taj.jpg`

Carl Jung: The fish is an old symbol for Christ. (2019-11-10 05:02)

Jung’s book Aion (1951) can, depending on one’s standpoint, be regarded either as an astrological treatise or as the proof of a synchronistic phenomenon of cosmic proportions.

It is, in part, an account of the meaningful coincidence of the Platonic month of Pisces-which started two thousand years ago with the birth of Christ and, as we have said, is now passing into the Platonic month of Aquarius-with the spiritual development of Christianity during this period.

The fish is an old symbol for Christ.

The parallelism between the cosmic event-the progression of the spring-point through the double sign of the Fishes-and the spiritual and historical events is exceedingly impressive.

The turn of the first millennium, just about the time when the spring-point reached the beginning of the second Fish, witnessed the rise of the heretical movements that compensated and also undermined Christianity-the Cathars, Waldenses, Albigenses, the Holy Ghost Movement of Joachim of Flora, and other sects.

Although the year 1000 did not mark the expected end of the world, it secretly initiated the "kingdom of the second Fish" -traditionally interpreted as the age of Antichrist-whose culmination, no one will deny, we are experiencing in the present century. Aniela Jaffe, Jung’s Last Years, Page 33

Barbara Hannah: "The Frontier Opens 1919-1925 (2019-11-10 05:07)

The Frontiers Open 1919–1925

It was a good thing for Jung that the frontiers of Switzerland were relatively closed during the war.

He had the largest capacity for work I have ever seen in anyone, but even he could hardly have managed to cope with a large practice during the time of the "confrontation with the unconscious."

The only other work he ever did that could even compare with the latter was finding his way through the unknown jungle of alchemistic texts, and at that time had to cut down his practice to two or three days a week.

His other writing was all done during holidays. He always took longer holidays than most analysts and I can testify that these were an advantage to his analysands, rather than the reverse.

It is good for everyone to test from time to time how far he can be independent, and long holidays prevent either analyst or analysand from going stale.

But the longest holidays are too short when it comes to exploring the hitherto completely unknown.

Although just before the war came to an end Jung had completed the "confrontation with the unconscious," he still felt that something more was needed.

He had kept a record in writing of all he had experienced and had painted a great many pictures of the contents of the unconscious which he had seen, but he still had the feeling that things recorded only on paper did not yet have a real enough form.

He felt:

"I had to achieve a kind of representation in stone of my innermost thoughts and of the knowledge I had acquired. Or, to put it another way, I had to make a confession of faith in stone. That was the beginning of the 'Tower,' the house which I built for myself at Bollingen."

This feeling, though strong and persistent, was still rather vague when the war came to an end, and it took a few more years before he could realize it in concrete reality.

Besides, the frontiers were hardly open before numbers of foreigners descended on Jung.

They came from many countries, but it was at this time that the Anglo-Saxons began to predominate, as they were fated to do throughout the years between the two world wars, so that Jung gave most of his seminars in Zürich also in English.

Of course, the frontiers were never again crossed with the complete freedom which had prevailed before the war.

We now not only had to accustom ourselves to passports, but for some time after the frontiers reopened there were considerable formalities at all consulates, to obtain a visa for this or that country.

These activities settled down remarkably quickly, however, or else people became so accustomed to them they were no longer bothered by them.

One of the first English doctors to come to Jung in Zürich was Godwin Baynes (always called Peter), who soon realized the value of Jungian psychology and, in spite of a rather checkered career, devoted his whole life to it, until his death during World War II.

He was a tall man, even a few inches taller than Jung, a university "rowing blue," and outstanding in sport and games.

He came to Jung originally because his first marriage had run on the rocks while he was in service abroad.

One of the first tasks he undertook was the translation of Psychological Types into English, so that it was able to appear in 1923, soon after the first German publication, in 1920.

Since Peter Baynes did not, at that time, know German very well, his translation of this volume has the advantage of being the only translation of any of Jung's books into any language that Jung himself went through word for word.

Peter Baynes was an extravert and an exceedingly friendly person; he very soon made himself at home in Zürich. Emma Jung and Toni Wolff were particularly fond of him, and before long he began his first term as Jung's assistant.

In many ways he was the best assistant Jung ever had, for he was singularly free of a certain jealousy and a sense of inferiority that working with an outstanding man like Jung unfortunately seems to breed in other men, even those considerably younger.

Baynes was a medical doctor but free of the usual medical prejudices and limitations.

He never for a moment wanted to go "beyond Jung," a phrase one hears too often nowadays, though almost always from young men who are still far from beginning to understand where Jung stood or who he was.

This period as assistant was the first of several during all of which Peter Baynes was able to be of great aid to Jung in his overburdened practice.

Peter Baynes once told me that beyond doubt his true vocation was to be Jung's assistant, but his extraverted, open nature constantly involved him in other plans.

As a result, he was always tom between England and Switzerland, and even spent some time in America.

His spells as Jung's assistant were therefore never of very long duration, so in the autumn of 1922, he went back to England.

He had meanwhile met and fallen in Jove with Hilda Davidson (niece of the then Archbishop of Canterbury) and had married her some time before returning to England.

Two years earlier, in the summer of 1920, Jung had held his first seminar in England.

As far as Esther Harding remembered the seminar was arranged by Constance Long probably assisted by Peter Baynes.

It was held at Sennen Cove in Cornwall and its subject was a book called Peter Blobb's Dreams, but as far as I know no written record of the seminar exists.

The attendance was small, only about twelve people, which must have been extremely pleasant for Jung.

He always loved small groups and much regretted the fact that his seminars inevitably increased in size as time went on.

Apparently everyone stayed in one boarding house at Sennen Cove and Jung gave analytical hours as well as his seminar.

Such seminars and free social contact with Jung continued, with variations, until long after the Second World War, and were almost as helpful to the development of his patients as was analysis itself.

This first seminar in Cornwall brought another doctor to Zürich who was destined to devote her life to Jungian psychology and to play a leading role in its development in the United States.

Eleanor Bertined was one of the first women doctors at Bellevue Hospital in New York.

Later, while in general practice, she discovered Jung through his books.

In 1920 she went to London to work with Constance Long, and thus came to attend the seminar at Sennen Cove.

Directly afterward she went to Zürich for about a year to study with Jung and, when he was on holiday, at his suggestion, she and Peter Baynes analyzed each other's dreams.

It was while she was in Zürich for the second time, in 1922, that she met the English doctor Esther Harding, and these two, together with Dr. Bertine's old friend Kristine Mann, later founded the first Jungian group in New York.

This was uphill work, for publicly the Freudians were much the first in the analytic field.

Eleanor Bertine told me once that she always warned all the young people who came for analysis and wanted to become professional psychologists that they must hope for no outer support in their careers, for she was not in a position to give it.

This had an enormous advantage, for none of the early patients of these doctors stayed with them for reasons of career or ambition, and they were therefore able to found a group that relied entirely on the inner way and on self-knowledge.

Even today, when Jungian psychology has become so much better known and therefore, unfortunately, far more attractive to purely ambitious people, one feels the beneficial effects of this early training in New York.

In the summer of 1968, the late Franz Riklin Jr., Marie-Louise von Franz, and I were invited from Zürich to give lectures at the celebrations for Esther Harding's eightieth birthday on Bailey Island in Maine.

I have never taken part in a congress where the atmosphere was more relaxed and related and where there was such freedom from personal ambition and intrigues.

I realized then—even more than before—how much the American group owed to the genuinely Jungian approach of Eleanor Bertine and Esther Harding.

And I should like to record that shortly before his death, Jung mentioned with the greatest appreciation how well both of them had done.

Even before the first (1920) English seminar in Cornwall, Jung was able to go where he "had longed to be: in a non-European country where no European language was spoken and no Christian conceptions prevailed, where a different race lived and a different historical tradition and philosophy had set its stamp upon the face of the crowd."

He continued: "I had often wished to be able for once to see the European from outside, his image reflected back at him by an altogether foreign milieu."

He described this journey to North Africa in Memories, so I will draw attention to only a few points from this unforgettable experience of which I often heard Jung speak.

Actually he spoke much more often of his longer and still more interesting stay in East Africa in 1925 but, having spent six months myself in Tunisia, I was especially interested in his impressions of that country, for it had also made an unforgettable impression on me and left me with a great many unanswered questions.

The African trip was the first of the journeys Jung took for the chief purpose of gaining a point de repère outside his own civilization and in order to understand totally different cultures.

It was the only trip on which the language barrier was almost complete.

Only in the hotels and big towns could some few Arabs speak French, and Jung knew no Arabic at all.

He once told me it was the only language he entirely failed to learn and he attributed this curious circumstance to the fact that his father knew the language well.

At all events, it gave him a different approach from that of his later journeys on which he could talk to people and ask questions.

The Arab cafés off the beaten track are particularly fascinating in Tunisia—you seem to be literally in another world—and Jung spent many hours in such cafés, listening to conversations of which he did not understand a word, but acutely observant of gestures and the emotions they were evidently expressing.

He soon learned that what Europeans regard as “Oriental calm and apathy” is really only a mask.

What interested him most was the subtle change in their features when North Africans were speaking to a European, and thus he “learned to see to some extent with different eyes and to know the white man outside his own environment.”

Jung went to North Africa in the spring of 1920 with Hermann Sigg, a Swiss friend, who had to go on a business trip.

They landed in Algiers, then traveled by train along the coast for thirty hours to Tunis.

He gave a vivid account of this journey and of his first impressions of Africa in a letter to his wife (part of which is published in Appendix III3 to Memories).

He told her that he was still completely bewildered and that though he knew Africa was speaking to him, he had as yet no idea of what it was saying.

After Tunis the two men went South to Sousse, where Jung left Sigg to transact his business while he went on alone into the desert, to Tozeur, from where he rode with his dragoman on swift mules to the oasis of Nefta.

The desert and its oases are a world apart from the African cities, but it was the people who interested Jung most.

He said that he “felt cast back many centuries to an infinitely more naïve world of adolescents who were preparing, with the aid of a slender knowledge of the Koran, to emerge from their original state of twilight consciousness, in which they had existed from time immemorial, and to become aware of their own existence, in self-defence against the forces threatening them from the North.”

One vast cultural difference between the Moslem and Christian world dawned on Jung only some twenty years later when he visited the Taj Mahal in India.

The incredible height of the Himalayas and the Taj Mahal were two of the most vivid impressions he brought back from India.

The beautiful Taj Mahal—built in A.D. 1632 by the Emperor Shah Jahan as the mausoleum of his favorite wife and in which he also was later buried—struck Jung as the most perfect temple of love ever erected.

As he sat, letting it speak to him, he realized that the Moslem religion is founded on the Eros principle, that is, the feminine principle of relationship, whereas Christianity, indeed, all the other great religions, are founded on the Logos principle, that is, the masculine principle of discrimination.

In his last long book, the Mysterium Coniunctionis, Jung presented his most pictorial description of these two principles.

He wrote:

Logos and Eros are intellectually formulated intuitive equivalents of the archetypal images of Sol and Luna. In my view the two luminaries are so descriptive and so superlatively graphic in their implications that I would prefer them to the more pedestrian terms Logos and Eros, although the latter do pin down certain psychological peculiarities more aptly than the rather indefinite "Sol and Luna."

Shortly before this passage, Jung had made clear that in the bright light of the sun everything can be seen and discriminated, and that the sun therefore represents a much lighter consciousness, whereas the mild light of the moon merges things together rather than separates them:

It does not show up objects in all their pitiless discreteness and separateness, like the harsh, glaring light of day, but blends in a deceptive shimmer the near and the far, magically transforming little things into big things, high into low, softening all colour into a bluish haze, and blending the nocturnal landscape into an unsuspected unity.

Jung described Logos and Eros as gods in the Swanage seminar of 1925.

He pointed out that if we had lived in the time of Sophocles we would have realized "the great god Eros, god of relatedness" and also "Logos, the god of form."

He explained that the principle of Logos does not produce logical or intellectual thinking, for Logos is an experience, a revelation.

Saint Paul and the Gnostics still thought according to the laws of Logos (one thinks of the former's revelation on the way to persecute the Christians at Damascus, for example).

So we may assume from Jung's experience in the Taj Mahal (as the most perfect temple of love which has ever been built) that an experience of the god Eros led to the foundation of the Moslem religion, whereas the god Logos was the determining force in the case of all the other great religions.

We can even prove this in the case of the Christian religion, for the beginning of Saint John's gospel equates Christ himself with the Logos.

The foregoing provides some idea of the difference between these two principles and indicates how his realization of this difference in the Taj Mahal answered questions that had remained unanswered with Jung through all the previous years.

He did indeed have a dream on the last night in Tunis which "summed up the whole experience" in Africa and which helped him to digest his overabundant impressions and ideas.

He gave this dream and its interpretation in considerable detail in Memories, but since It not only was the climax of his journey but contained almost unbelievably much of the future in which these two principles and the dark and light opposites found their place, I will remind the reader of its main line.

In his dream, Jung was in an Arab city, walled and with four gates, therefore a mandala.

In the center was a citadel, a casbah, in itself typically North African, but surrounded by a moat, like a European medieval castle.

The gate beyond the wooden bridge was open, and, eager to see more, Jung began to cross the bridge, but the young Arab prince to whom the citadel belonged met him halfway and tried to knock him down.

They wrestled wildly, crashed into the railing, and fell together into the moat.

The prince then tried to force Jung's head under the water in order to drown him, but the latter succeeded in getting the prince's head under instead, not to kill him, for he felt great admiration for him, but to save his own life and to subdue the prince.

Jung evidently succeeded in this for they were then sitting together in a large octagonal room in the center of the citadel and he was forcing the unwilling prince "with paternal kindness and patience" to read a magnificent book in the "Uigurian script of West Turkestan."

This nevertheless was Jung's book and had been written by him.

To read this book was absolutely essential and, just as the dream ended, the prince yielded.

Royal and aristocratic figures in dreams always refer to the Self; therefore, as Jung pointed out, although on account of his dusky complexion the prince was clearly a shadow, he could be no personal shadow, but rather represented a so-far-unknown shadow of the Self.

If we look back, we remember that the No. 2 personality, that representative of the Self in Jung's childhood, always turned out to be positive, and we can say the same of the "confrontation with the unconscious," where this figure appeared first as Elijah, turning later into the helpful Philemon.

But as a symbol of the totality, this figure must be negative as well as positive, and now its other side appeared and even tried to extinguish life.

In Memories Jung reminded the reader of Jacob's struggle with the angel of the Lord, Jehovah's own dark side which does not know men and so tries to kill them.

At the time, Jung realized that this dream was a result of the terrific impact of North Africa; five years later, on his next visit to Africa, he further comprehended that he had been in danger of being submerged, for the dream was the first hint of "going black under the skin," a danger which, as he pointed out, is too little acknowledged by Europeans in Africa.

Jung also pointed out that when he went to Africa to find a psychic observation post outside Europe, he had been unconsciously motivated by a wish: "to find that part of my personality which had become invisible under the pressure of being European."

Until then, since this part of him was in opposition to his conscious personality, he had tried to suppress it, but now it had burst forth to become fully visible for the first time, for these apparently "alien and wholly different Arab surroundings" had awakened an archetypal memory.

This was one of the dreams which Jung at the time could content himself only with "noting the phenomenon and hoping that the future, or further investigation, will reveal the significance of this clash with the shadow of the Self."

The revelation of all that it meant was indeed far in the future, for it was only when he was studying alchemy, nearly twenty years later, that its full significance must have dawned on him.

Marie-Louise von Franz drew my attention to an extraordinarily close parallel which Jung quoted much later in his paper "Arbor Philosophica,"[8] from the Arabic Book of Ostanes.

In this text there is a description of the alchemistic lapis (the Self) which represents it as a tree which grows on the tops of the mountains, as a young man born in Egypt, and as a prince from Andalusia, who torments the adepts who are searching for the lapis, and even kills their leaders.

On the next page, Jung quoted another text which says literally: "Unless thy stone be thine enemy, thou will not attain to thy desire."

We see clearly from these two alchemistic parallels that had Jung not met this dark side of the Self, his "confrontation with the unconscious" would not have been adequate or complete.

This dream, then, the outcome of his first visit to Africa, can be called the first epilogue to that confrontation.

When I pointed out that his work on the unconscious never had to be repeated, I meant that by far the major part of his confrontation had been successfully carried through and brought to a close, but there were still constant additions to it, epilogues that really continued all his life, for no human being can ever exhaust the infinite extent of the collective unconscious.

It is interesting that although the anima appeared first in her negative aspect (as is usual with most figures that represent some aspect of the unconscious) until now the Self had always appeared in a beneficent form to Jung.

This is a Just-So Story which cannot be explained, but it almost seems as if the unconscious itself wanted to be made conscious.

Therefore, as Jung was the pioneer in this field, apparently his No. 2 personality encouraged his investigations and reserved the revelation of its dark and destructive side until Jung was fully and finally convinced of the reality and efficacy of the unconscious.

He had already experienced the dark side of God in his childhood, both in his early phallus dream and when he was forced to think the blasphemous thought to the end at the age of eleven, so the idea was not by any means entirely new to him.

Jung ended his account of this first visit to Africa with the words:

I did not at the time have any glimmering of the nature of this archetypal experience, and knew still less about the historical parallels. Yet though I did not then grasp the full meaning of the dream, it lingered in my memory, along with the liveliest wish to go to Africa again at the next opportunity. That wish was not to be fulfilled for another five years.

When Jung returned to Zürich in the spring of 1920, he was obliged, by all the patients and pupils who flocked to him and by the invitations for lectures and seminars abroad that poured in on him, to live a much more extraverted life than he had been used to during the war.

Jung always gave himself wholeheartedly to whatever he was doing, but by temperament and nature he had a great longing for introversion.

He met this need by his rather long holidays. But Jung was always ready, even during his holidays, to see anyone who was in genuine need.

Later he frequently came down to Küsnacht from time to time during the holidays for at least one whole day's work.

During the years we are considering in this chapter (1919–25), it was the need for a really introverted refuge which struck Jung more and more.

There was an island off Schmerikon, at the end of the upper Lake of Zürich, on which he had spent a number of camping holidays and he was much taken with the idea of buying this island and building on it a stone representation of his "innermost thoughts and knowledge."

At the time, the island indeed had enormous advantages.

It was a really introverted refuge where no one could get to him except by boat or by an exceptionally long swim.

Yet it was only about twenty miles from Küsnacht, so that he could always be reached for real emergencies.

He was disappointed when his efforts to buy this island failed.

Many years afterward, he used to point to it and say that it reminded him of how fortunate it was that one so often is prevented from getting one's heart's desire.

It would obviously have been impracticable for an old man, whereas his Tower at Bollingen remained his greatest pleasure to the end of his life.

It was not easy, however, to find the right site.

He remained true to the upper Lake of Zürich, which even now has remained real country with few houses on its shores.

It proved so difficult to find the right piece of land that he even thought of buying some land above Bollingen which had a magnificent view of the lake and mountains, quite near the spot where Marie-Louise von Franz, at his advice, built her tower over thirty years later.

But he never really meant to build anywhere but on the shore of the lake for, as he said in Memories, "It was settled from the start that I would build near the water."

At last, in 1922, this ideal site became available.

He was able to buy a large piece of land— large by Swiss standards, for there is a great scarcity of land in Switzerland—with a long frontage on the lake.

It was secluded and yet accessible, for it was only just over a mile from Bollingen station, from which there were infrequent but direct trains to Küsnacht.

Indeed, the railroad line which formed the boundary of Jung's property on the land side turned out to be a curious protection to his privacy.

It was not near enough to the Tower to be a noisy disturbance, but it formedi a dangerous crossing, particularly later, in the days of the automobile.

There was a primitive approach, two heavy poles forming the two gates, and it was necessarily near a bend in the line so that one was aware of the approach of a train only at the last minute.

It always struck us as singularly suitable that Jung's Tower should be guarded by a dangerous approach.

Jung did not take to a car until seven years after he bought this land.

One of its great advantages was that, whenever he had time, he could reach one of his houses from the other by sailboat.

This was his favorite way of transportation and he always felt it to be particularly suitable, because he was thus between the water (chief symbol for the unconscious) and the air (with a view of the outer, conscious world).

He still much favored a bicycle as a means of getting about, though in the early days he usually used the railroad and walked from Bollingen station.

Jung was always patient with the train journey, although it was slow and dawdley in those days, since he had extraordinary powers of concentration.

Jung described the building of the Tower and the additions that were made to it in Memories.

He began the first building in 1923 and did a great deal of the actual construction of the original Tower with his own hands.

One wonders how he had time, for it was a particularly busy year. Peter Baynes had gone back to England in the autumn of 1922, leaving him without a male assistant.

Toni Wolff was proving herself to be an able woman assistant, but one analyst can never quite replace another, particularly since some patients need a woman analyst and others must work with a man.

Moreover, Toni was not a doctor, and—as she told me—Jung at first was anything but delighted at the idea of her becoming an analyst and discouraged it for some time.

By the beginning of 1929 however, when I came to Zürich, Jung had accepted her completely as an assistant, and sent a lot of people to her, though he was always careful—as indeed he was with all his assistants—to send her only those people who were suited to her.

In fact, if he felt at all doubtful, he would ask them to come back and tell him if it did not go well.

Within these limits, however, she did excellent work and was of great assistance to him in his overburdened practice, as well as to the analysands themselves.

I once asked him why he had at first been so much against Toni's becoming an analyst.

He replied that since he believed her to have an unusual literary ability, he had been keen for her to devote herself to creative work.

He was afraid if she became an analyst she would do little writing. That turned out to be the case: she did write some excellent papers and lectures but they were few.

I was reminded of what Jung had said when she was writing the longest of these papers for the Festschrift for his sixtieth birthday, on July 26, 1935.

Her other papers usually started as lectures for the Psychological Club, sometimes slightly enlarged and revised later.

But when she wrote her long Festschrift paper, for the only time in her life she drastically reduced or even cancelled her analytical hours as far as she could.

On the other hand, she wrote with enthusiasm and seemed to feel great satisfaction in the work during the one or two years she devoted to it.

I asked her near the end of her life whether she ever regretted not having written more.

She replied she would rather have spent her lifetime helping other people than as an author; I cannot say that she altogether convinced me. It was a pity she could not combine the two forms of work.

She would indeed have been most unusually qualified to write a full-length book, and I cannot help regretting that she never did.

In July, 1923, Jung again went to England to give another seminar, this time at Polzeath in Cornwall.

The occasion was organized by Peter Baynes and Esther Harding, and twenty-nine people attended, including Emma Jung and Toni Wolff.

Mrs. Jung told me later that, though she had enjoyed it very much, she had been puzzled then and for some years afterward by the English.

They struck her as much more extraverted and scattered in their affections than the Swiss.

She had yet to experience America and to learn what a really extraverted life is like.

She did not visit the United States until 1936, and then she came back positively breathless.

Although the Polzeath seminar had been given nearly six years before I came to Zürich, all of Jung's pupils who had attended it were still constantly talking about it, most especially Esther Harding, on whom it had made a deep impression.

Since several of the things he spoke of then, which he had noticed in the dreams of individuals, have become worldwide threats today, I often find myself thinking of what Esther Harding and others told me about that 1923 seminar.

Jung already saw then that, with the decline of the influence of the Church, man's impersonal ideas, which he later called "archetypal images," were floating in the air, so to speak, for our present Weltanschauungj is completely deficient in receptacles for it.

This energy thus falls into the unconscious from whence it returns in archaic and very unacceptable forms.

A good example —then ten years in the future, after the Polzeath seminar—is the way the old wanderer, Wotan, came to life in Germany when the Nazis came into power.

Such archaic contents had already given Jung much trouble, for they would suddenly erupt and disturb a smooth and harmonious relationship in the so-called transference.

Although Jung agreed with Freud as to the importance of the transference, he took a very different view of its content.

Freud took all the projections of the patient to be personal, whereas Jung thought that only the upper layer had a personal origin.

Therefore he did not think that remaining bound by the transference, after all the personal projections had been worked out, was necessarily infantile, but was more usually caused by impersonal contents which no longer find their place in our religion.

How this works out in practical analysis is shown most clearly in a case which Jung gave in his essay "The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious," in which the factor that caused such a prolonged transference turned out to be the image of the patient's lost god.

Of course, in such cases it is fatal to break off the analysis prematurely.

Jung gave four chief causes for the repressions which had already sent the impersonal elements into the unconscious.

These points made a deep impression upon me, because I had suffered from all of them in my early connection with the Church.

The first of these tendencies was the way the Church increasingly excluded nature.

But it must be emphasized that Jung always pointed out the difference between Christ's original teachings and what the Church has made of them.

Christ himself evidently had an excellent relation to nature.

I will quote only one logion as evidence of this: "Wheresoever there are (two, they are not without) God: and where there is one alone I say I am with him. Lift up the stone and there thou shalt find me: cleave the wood and I am there."

Outer developments since 1923 reinforce Jung's conclusion.

Art has almost entirely abandoned nature, in favor of all kinds of abstractions.

Builders no longer seem to take any notice of the landscape in which their buildings are set.

The most beautiful old medieval cities are surrounded by great boxlike apartment houses, each more hideous than the last.

The waters of our rivers and lakes are increasingly polluted for the sake of great industries.

The younger generation of farmers seems to have lost all feeling for nature and flocks to the cities.

If we go on as we have been doing for the last fifty years, there will soon be no nature left in the overpopulated countries.

On the other hand, nature is coming back into the consciousness of quite a number of people.

Natural science arose in the nineteenth century, and for the first time the real miracles of nature were investigated as a science.

There is also a general tendency to make expeditions into nature, to seek it again, as it were, and national trusts have arisen to protect particularly beautiful country sides from building, and so on.

But unfortunately, in spite of anti-litter campaigns, there is a growing and deplorable tendency on the part of the public to ruin such places with orange peels, empty bottles, cigarette butts and the like, for nature has been neglected too long and this neglect is too deeply written in the blood of “Christian” man.

The second point Jung made was that the Church increasingly excluded animals.

But again, here it was the Church and not Christ himself, for from the apocryphal (Oxyrhynchus) sayings we learn that the disciples asked him:

“Who are they that draw us to the kingdom that is in heaven? Jesus answered: The fowls of the heaven, whatsoever is under the earth, the fishes of the sea, and these are they that draw you and the kingdom is within you.”

Appreciation of the animal kingdom could hardly go further; evidently Christ himself thought that grace could be found most directly through the birds and fishes.

This attitude of the Church has, more than anything else, alienated man from his own as well as from the larger impersonal instincts and has since produced a deplorable state of affairs all over the world.

As naturalists like Gerald Durrell, Bernard Grzimek, and Konrad Lorenz always emphasize, many species of animals are in danger of being entirely exterminated.

Everywhere, man is their greatest danger, killing them recklessly for his own profit and regarding them as of no account except for profit.

As far as the Christian world is concerned—and it is the people brought up in Christian countries who are the worst sinners in this respect—this could never have happened had the Church not excluded nature and animals.

But again there is also a countermovement, and animals are also appreciated today as never before.

Laws are made for their protection, most countries have a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, and never were more animals kept as valued pets.

But this is only of recent years, and unfortunately it seems to have made little difference to the exploitation or even to the extermination of animals where "Christian" man thinks there is a profit to be made.

The third exclusion is perhaps the worst from the psychological point of view, because it has prevented man from recognizing his own shadow.

It consists in the exclusion of the inferior man.

The latter was condemned as sinful and had to be completely repressed.

He was very largely equated with sexuality, which was permitted only for the purpose of propagation.

The fact that the church bells were even rung in South America to remind man of his duty to produce more souls for the Church's flock has always remained in my mind.

Jung always used to say that sexuality had two aspects: reproduction, which is carnal sexuality, but it can also be used to worship, so to speak, the god Eros, that is, relationship.

It was the latter aspect that the Church condemned as sinful.

The outer results of this repression have become so obvious that it is hardly necessary to enumerate them: overpopulation—which Jung regarded as a greater danger to mankind in the long run than even the atom bomb—is an ominous threat all over the world.

Youth indulges far too much (as an enantiodromia from the too little of the Church) in carnal sexuality and hardly knows any longer that real relationship between the sexes exists or that it has anything to do with sexuality.

The so-called inferior, or rather—as he is now called—the underdeveloped, man is a burning problem everywhere, though perhaps principally in Africa.

The black and white problem is one of the worst that the United States has had to face, and very soon England will have exactly the same problem.

These phenomena would never have developed so negatively had the Church not excluded the inferior man, so that the problem of our own shadow, which alone would qualify us to deal with what we call the inferior or underdeveloped man outside, has never been dealt with.

But again one must not forget the opposite movement; slavery was abolished only in the nineteenth century and only quite recently have we begun to study the customs of primitive man with the idea that we might learn something from them; before that ethnology was the study of a curio.

Moreover, outwardly at any rate, we have begun to do something about the so-called inferior man among us. (Deplorably though, only the very few do anything about him in themselves.)

We have now begun a sort of science of human weakness and have changed our attitude to it radically.

The fourth repression was of creative fantasy.

If fantasy is given full freedom it will probably lead the individual to find a divine spark in himself, his own No. 2 personality, to use that much later formulation.

Such individual production of symbols would have undermined the authority of the Church, which is what it wanted to avoid at all costs.

But this led to our lamentable lack of an impersonal attitude and to the suppression of many creative people through the centuries.

The Church indeed has apparently little influence nowadays, yet—as suggested before—these long repressions are written, as it were, in man’s blood and continue to function in quite other areas.

Industry, for instance, has taken over the repression of creative fantasy, in the soul killing repetitive work it demands from the great majority of its employees.

Many of these workers have small creative forces within themselves, and while they worked independently, or in small businesses, they had ample scope to employ them while using some initiative and choice in their work.

In the old building or carpentry trades, for instance, there was scope for creative fantasy, but in the modern factory there is none, only a deadly repetition of just the same work day after day.

It is this monotony and mechanical treadmill that is largely to blame for the industrial troubles all over the world.

Naturally, the workers long for more change and fantasy in their lives and hope vainly to be able to buy it with higher wages.

A few attempts have been made by certain farsighted employers to introduce more change into the work and this has met with most encouraging success.

But centuries of the repression of creative fantasy by the Church are very difficult to repair.

Perhaps it is in this fourth category that the most damage of all has been done.

I hope that enough of the content of this seminar has been recalled to show how early Jung became aware of these dangers that are threatening our very existence today.

Shortly before his death he wrote much more about them, for he was always very mindful of what a danger man had become to himself.

We must now return to the Tower which, for Jung himself, was by far the most important acquisition of this year.

The form in which he had to represent his innermost thoughts in stone was not planned ahead, but grew gradually, as he recalled in Memories, “following the concrete needs of the moment.”

It was only later, after several additions to the original 1923 Tower, stretching from 1927 to 1956, that he could see “how all the parts fitted together and that a meaningful form had resulted: a symbol of psychic wholeness.”

But the first Tower was in its roundness already a perfect, simple mandala, which was for Jung an expression of the Self, the ultimate that he could attain.

Over the door of the original round Tower he chiseled the following words into the stone: “Sanctuary of Philemon, penitence of Faust.”

Later, when, in making additions to the house, this inscription had to be walled in, he repeated it above the inner door to his “retiring room,” which he built in 1934.

The Tower was built primarily as a place where Jung could be “reborn in stone,” and where he could be entirely himself, “a place of spiritual contemplation.”

There were also “concrete needs of the moment” from the very beginning.

He could never forget the part that Toni Wolff had played in his “confrontation with the unconscious,” when her sympathy and courage had contributed so much to the successful outcome of those difficult years, thus enabling him to make his “confession in stone” of the deepest insights which he had then gained.

And the Tower also profited Toni, for she loved being there. Not that she appreciated it at first.

Jung was very amusing about her initial reactions, for such a primitive way of life—doing everything for themselves, “all the simple acts that make man simple,” as Jung purposely intended—was completely outside Toni Wolff’s previous experience.

They cut their own wood, drew their own water, at first filtering lake water, for it was only in 1931 that Jung got a water diviner and discovered his own excellent spring, which still, however, needed to be pumped by hand; and of course they did all their own cooking, cleaning, and dusting.

“Toni’s hair literally stood on end whenever we got a new pot,” he said, and still laughed when he told me about it, around 1934.

But Toni soon learned to love the simple life and to reckon the time she might be in Bollingen as by far the happiest part of the year.

I never heard Jung complain of noise, not even after a bathing beach had been opened next to his garden at Küsnacht, but one can well understand his growing need for a secluded place entirely his own.

Although at times he shared it with his family or his friends (for instance, Hermann Sigg, at whose instigation he had undertaken his first journey to North Africa, often sailed up with him for a day or two at the Tower), Bollingen was primarily a place where he could be quite alone and where even his nearest and dearest could not “drop in” on him while he was working, and he loved it more than anything else from the beginning to the end.

Only about two years before his death, I was sitting with him one day as he was chopping wood beside the lake.

We were speaking of the Buddhist belief in reincarnation.

I remarked that I hoped that, if that were how things were, this would be the last time I had to reincarnate! Jung began to agree with me warmly, as he always had before in such discussions, but he suddenly stopped and looked all around him in silence. Then he said: "No, I am wrong. If I might have Bollingen, I would be willing to come again."

Jung emphasized in Memories that Bollingen was primarily the home of his No. 2 personality, that timeless or eternal figure in man which yet needs the No. 1 personality to experience three-dimensional reality and the here and now in this moment of time.

He said:

At Bollingen I am in the midst of my true life, I am most deeply myself. Here I am, as it were, the "age-old son of the mother." That is how alchemy puts it, very wisely, for the "old man," the "ancient," whom I had already experienced as a child, is personality No. 2, who has always been and always will be. He exists outside time and is the son of the maternal unconscious. In my fantasies he took the form of Philemon, and he comes to life again at Bollingen.

I do not know whether it has anything to do with the fact that Jung's land and much of the surrounding country is the so-called area of St. Meinrad and is old church land, but Bollingen certainly has a special quality.

You feel far more in yourself there than elsewhere and after any illness it has a singularly healing quality.

I first realized this fully from something Jung once said.

Even before Marie-Louise von Franz bought her land there, we were a good deal at Bollingen.

At first I used to stay with my old friends, Hans and Linda Fierz, and after their deaths, Linda most kindly bequeathed to M.-L. von Franz and myself a Gastrechtl in their house, which was close to Jung's.

While I was staying in Bollingen, if I used the privilege sparingly and tactfully, I was allowed to look in at the Tower from time to time.

But once, when I was down at Küsnacht for my whole vacation, I asked Jung if I might occasionally drop in from Küsnacht, providing I was prepared to go at once should the moment not be propitious, as was always the arrangement when I was in Bollingen.

I at once met with an unqualified refusal.

He explained later that when I was staying for some time in Bollingen, I did not upset him, but if I came up from Küsnacht, I would bring quite a different atmosphere and that would inevitably be a disturbance.

I had from the first visit felt a most special quality in the Tower, in its view over the lake, above all in Jung himself, but it was only when I was meditating on Jung's refusal that I got my first dim idea of what this quality was.

Jung was, as it were, completely in his No. 2 personality at Bollingen, and that, or something in the place itself, stopped one worrying about the thousand and one trifles with which the No. 1 personality is always concerned.

To a certain extent, I suppose, one also got into one's own No. 2 personality there and was therefore no disturbance to Jung.

But this was not so when one came up from Küsnacht; one was automatically an upsetting influence then, so one just had to learn to keep away.

This, of course, does not mean that Jung never invited people from the world of No. 1 to visit him in Bollingen.

He did often, but then he knew they were coming and was prepared for them.

It was the unexpected "dropper in" from an alien atmosphere who had to be discouraged, or Jung found his time being wasted with having to find his way back into the world of No. 2.

One also felt the presence of his No. 2 personality in Küsnacht or wherever one met Jung in the outside world. But he wore the No. 1 personality, the persona of Prof. Dr. C. G. Jung, over it.

At Bollingen that was not the case, except when he was prepared to meet people from the outside world.

His very clothes were those of No. 2, in the sense that they had nothing to do with the prevailing fashion but were old comfortable clothes, eminently suitable for the simple life he led at Bollingen, chopping wood, cooking, and so on.

As the No. 2 personality was so entirely constellated at Bollingen, it is natural that the most important part of his creative work was also done there.

When he first got there from the outside world, he always spent some days acclimatizing himself to the place, doing all those jobs that have to be done in the simple life there or even just staring at the lake.

Then, when he was thoroughly in tune with the world of No. 2, his best ideas came to him, and he wrote as No. 2 wished, although of course No. 1 did the actual writing, translating ideas too strange into language that could be understood.

He also wrote a great deal at Küsnacht, especially later, when he had more time, but the most creative part was always done at Bollingen.

From the beginning, Jung was alone a great deal at Bollingen.

He wrote in Memories of some curious visions or psychic events that came to him in his solitude and he also gave many of the reasons that made his Tower a suitable residence for No. 2. It was built—mostly at four-year intervals—from 1923 to 1956, the beginning dating from two months after his mother's death, the last part being built some months after his wife's death in 1955.

Therefore, as he pointed out, the Tower was a place that "was connected with the dead."

Jung's mother died unexpectedly in January, 1923, while he was staying in the Tessin.

He described in Memories the terrifying dream he had the night before and his surprising journey back to Zürich when two opposite emotions so strangely made place for each other.

These two emotions about death are indeed an archetypal motif; I mention only the example of Saint Augustine's interpretation of Christ's death as a hieros gamos (sacred marriage) with the mother, therefore as a cause for mourning and rejoicing.

He said: Like a bridegroom Christ went forth from his chamber, he went out with a presage of his nuptials into the field of the world. He came to the marriage-bed of the cross, and there, in mounting it, he consummated his marriage. And when he perceived the sighs of the creature, he lovingly gave himself up to the torment in place of his bride, and he joined himself to the woman (matrona) for ever.

Jung had indeed had a dream where his father questioned him about marital psychology about two months before, which he thought afterward might have warned him, but at the time it never occurred to him that it could refer to his mother's death.

Jung's mother had moved, with her daughter, to Küsnacht some years before, in order to be near her son and her grandchildren, whom she adored.

Emma Jung once told me that the children often stopped in to see their grandmother on their way home from school, and that this had solved a problem which might otherwise have been difficult.

Neither Emma Jung nor her husband attended church, yet they were quite sure that children should be brought up with a religious background.

Emma Jung told me that, while the children were still very young, old Mrs. Jung was an ideal solution, for she still believed, or at any rate thought she believed, the Christian creed implicitly and was delighted to teach it to her grandchildren.

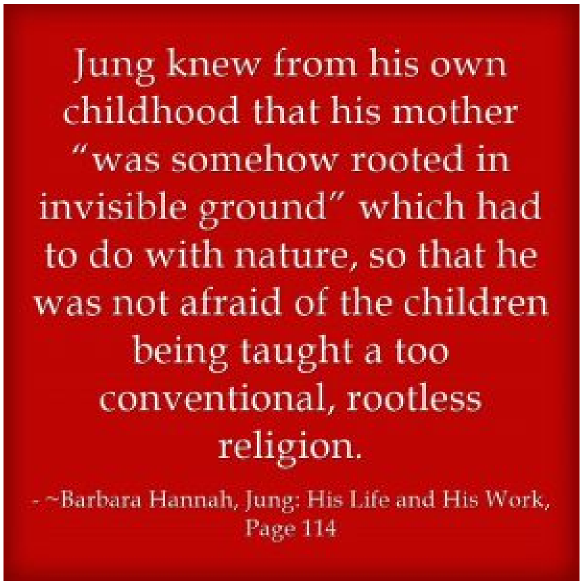
Jung knew from his own childhood that his mother "was somehow rooted in invisible ground" which had to do with nature, so that he was not afraid of the children being taught a too conventional, rootless religion.

Altogether, from all I have heard, especially from her great-nephew, Franz Riklin Jr., it must have been a great loss when she died; she was seventy-five years old.

The year 1923 was a very eventful one for Jung, crowded with impressions.

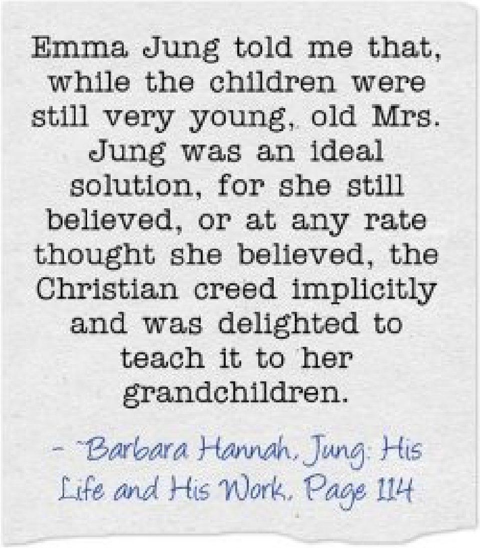
As far as I know, 1924 was a comparatively quiet year, but 1925 again must have been one of the most eventful and crowded years of his life.

He was in America at the beginning of the year, and in January undertook his productive journey to the Pueblo Indians with three American men. Barbara Hannah, Carl Jung: His Life and His Work, Pages 102-114



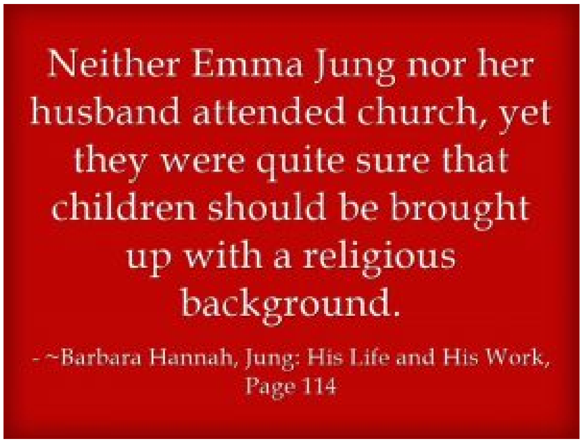
Jung knew from his own childhood that his mother "was somehow rooted in invisible ground" which had to do with nature, so that he was not afraid of the children being taught a too conventional, rootless religion.

- ~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 114



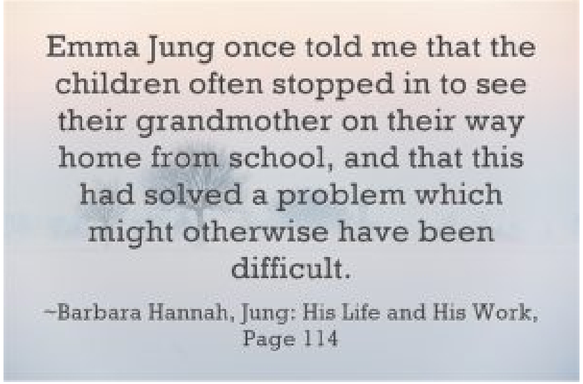
Emma Jung told me that, while the children were still very young, old Mrs. Jung was an ideal solution, for she still believed, or at any rate thought she believed, the Christian creed implicitly and was delighted to teach it to her grandchildren.

- ~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 114



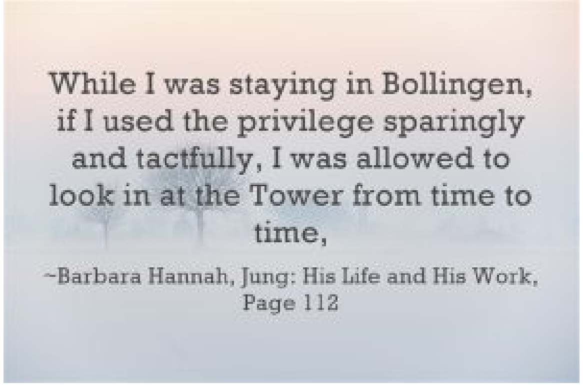
Neither Emma Jung nor her husband attended church, yet they were quite sure that children should be brought up with a religious background.

- ~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 114



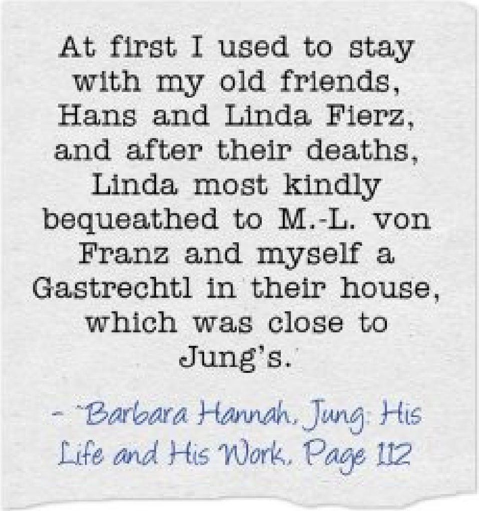
Emma Jung once told me that the children often stopped in to see their grandmother on their way home from school, and that this had solved a problem which might otherwise have been difficult.

~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 114



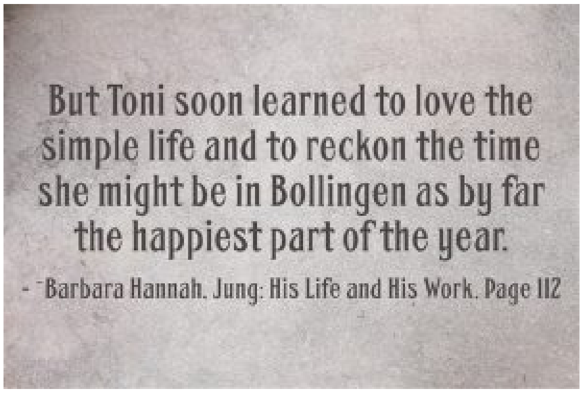
While I was staying in Bollingen, if I used the privilege sparingly and tactfully, I was allowed to look in at the Tower from time to time,

~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 112



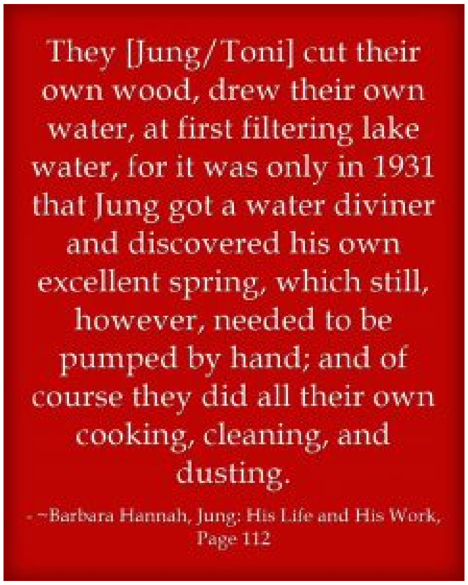
At first I used to stay with my old friends, Hans and Linda Fierz, and after their deaths, Linda most kindly bequeathed to M.-L. von Franz and myself a Gastrechtl in their house, which was close to Jung's.

- ~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 112



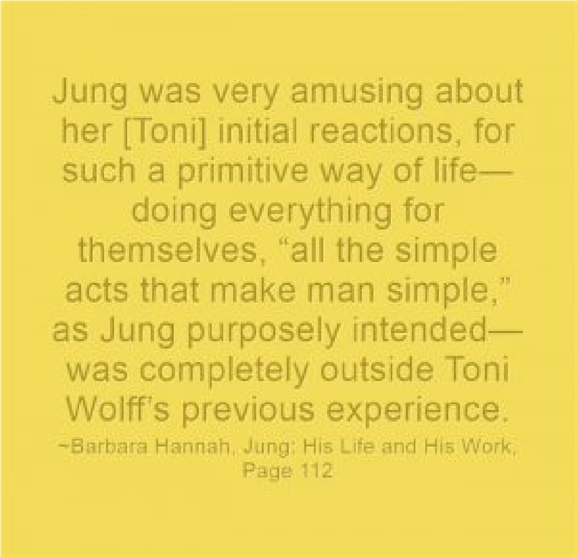
But Toni soon learned to love the simple life and to reckon the time she might be in Bollingen as by far the happiest part of the year.

- ~Barbara Hannah. Jung: His Life and His Work. Page 112



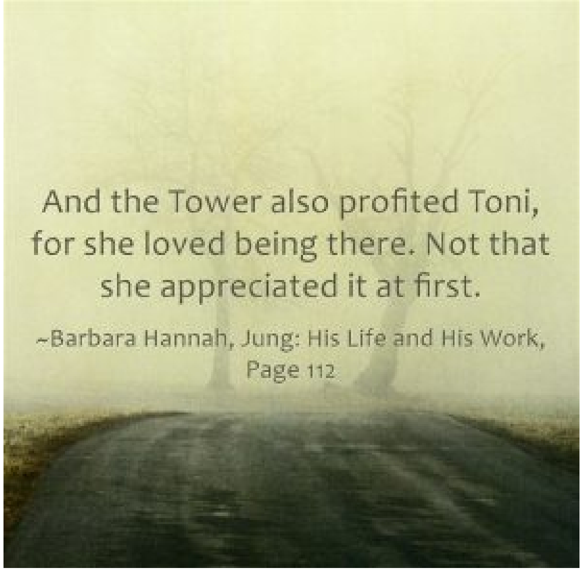
They [Jung/Toni] cut their own wood, drew their own water, at first filtering lake water, for it was only in 1931 that Jung got a water diviner and discovered his own excellent spring, which still, however, needed to be pumped by hand; and of course they did all their own cooking, cleaning, and dusting.

- ~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 112



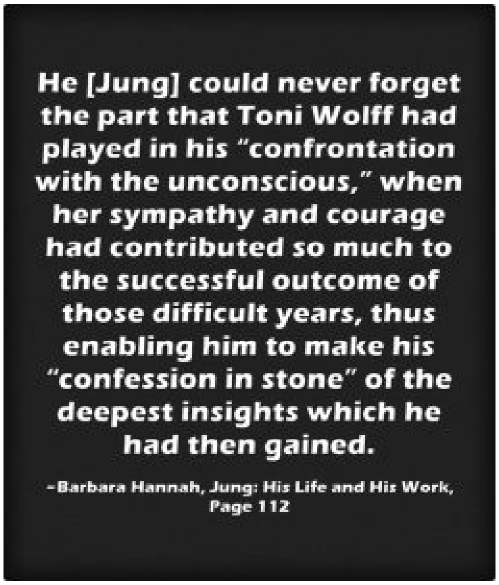
Jung was very amusing about her [Toni] initial reactions, for such a primitive way of life—doing everything for themselves, "all the simple acts that make man simple," as Jung purposely intended—was completely outside Toni Wolff's previous experience.

~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 112



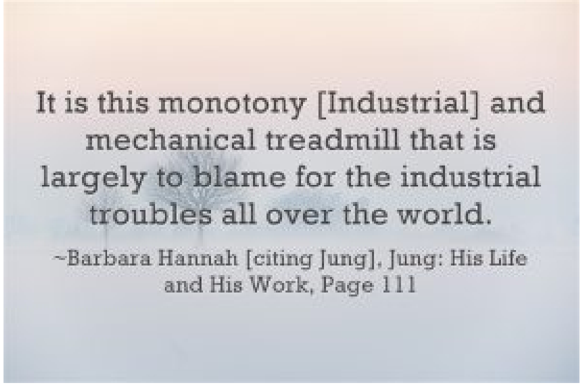
And the Tower also profited Toni, for she loved being there. Not that she appreciated it at first.

~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 112



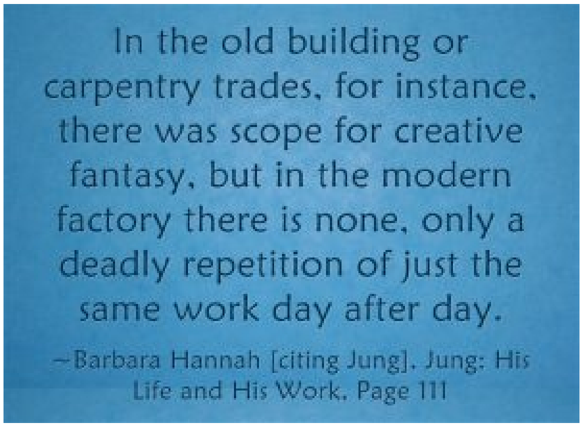
He [Jung] could never forget the part that Toni Wolff had played in his "confrontation with the unconscious," when her sympathy and courage had contributed so much to the successful outcome of those difficult years, thus enabling him to make his "confession in stone" of the deepest insights which he had then gained.

~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 112



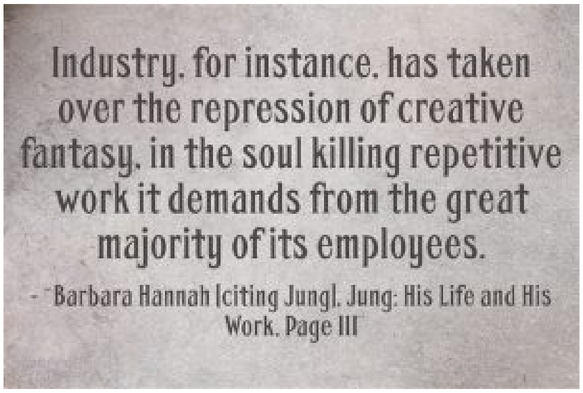
It is this monotony [Industrial] and mechanical treadmill that is largely to blame for the industrial troubles all over the world.

~Barbara Hannah [citing Jung], Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 111



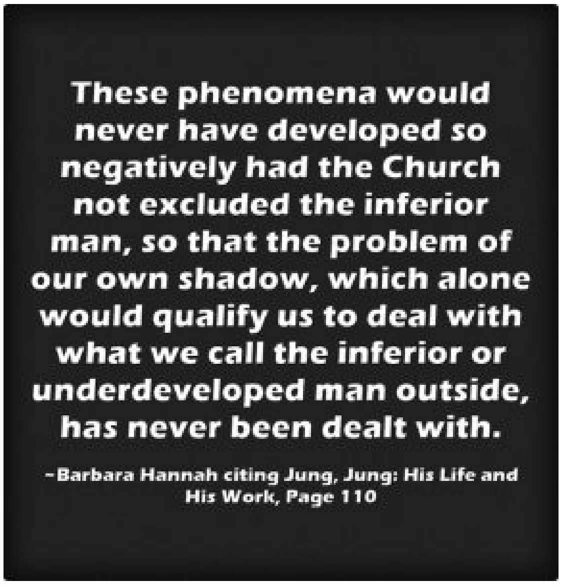
In the old building or carpentry trades, for instance, there was scope for creative fantasy, but in the modern factory there is none, only a deadly repetition of just the same work day after day.

~Barbara Hannah [citing Jung], Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 111



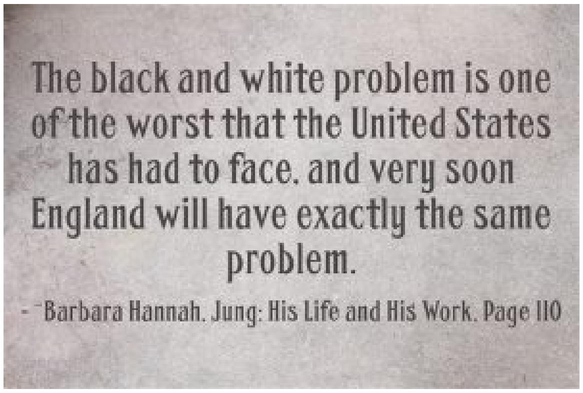
Industry, for instance, has taken over the repression of creative fantasy, in the soul killing repetitive work it demands from the great majority of its employees.

- ~Barbara Hannah [citing Jung], Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 111



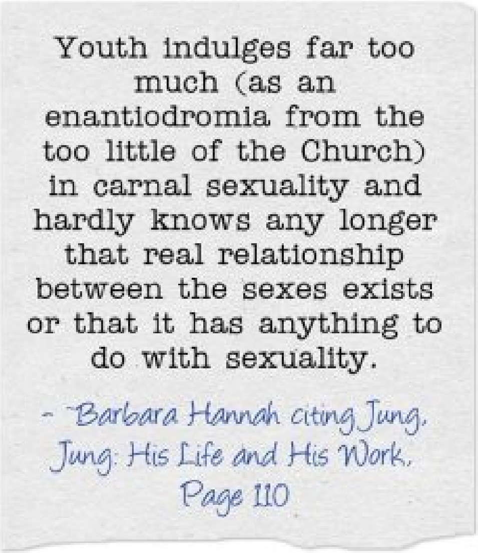
These phenomena would never have developed so negatively had the Church not excluded the inferior man, so that the problem of our own shadow, which alone would qualify us to deal with what we call the inferior or underdeveloped man outside, has never been dealt with.

~Barbara Hannah citing Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 110



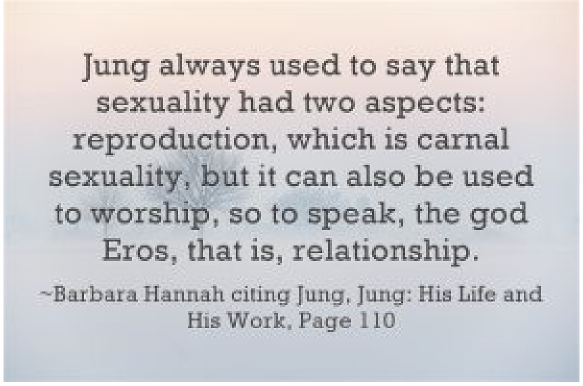
The black and white problem is one of the worst that the United States has had to face, and very soon England will have exactly the same problem.

- ~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 110



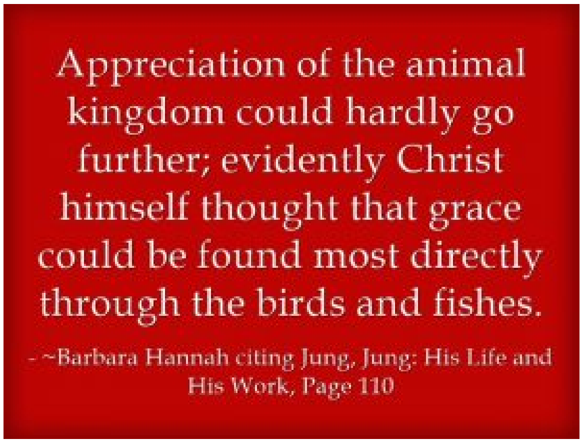
Youth indulges far too much (as an enantiodromia from the too little of the Church) in carnal sexuality and hardly knows any longer that real relationship between the sexes exists or that it has anything to do with sexuality.

- ~Barbara Hannah citing Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 110



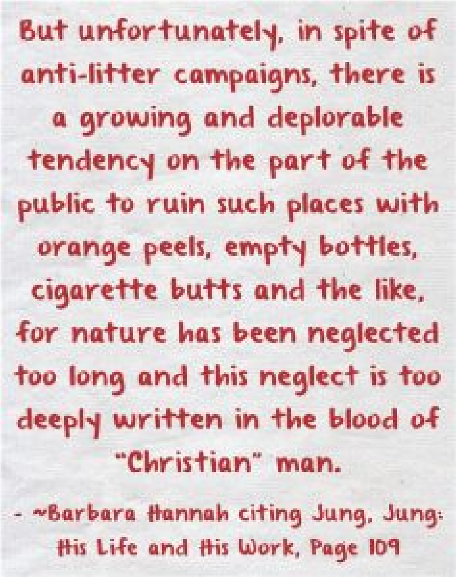
Jung always used to say that sexuality had two aspects: reproduction, which is carnal sexuality, but it can also be used to worship, so to speak, the god Eros, that is, relationship.

~Barbara Hannah citing Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 110



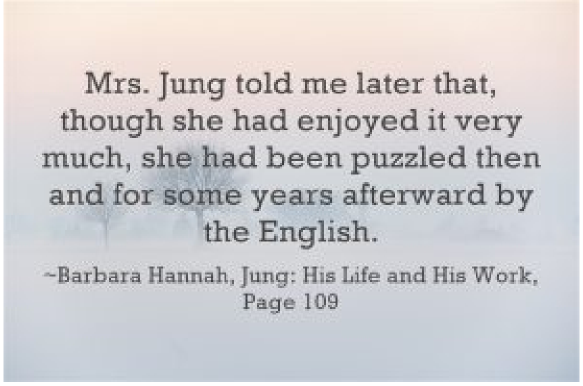
Appreciation of the animal kingdom could hardly go further; evidently Christ himself thought that grace could be found most directly through the birds and fishes.

- ~Barbara Hannah citing Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 110



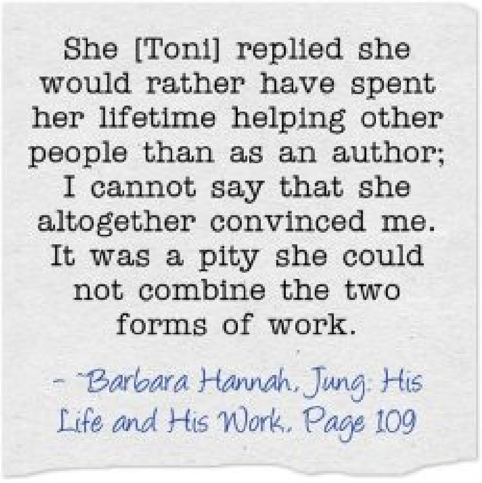
But unfortunately, in spite of anti-litter campaigns, there is a growing and deplorable tendency on the part of the public to ruin such places with orange peels, empty bottles, cigarette butts and the like, for nature has been neglected too long and this neglect is too deeply written in the blood of "Christian" man.

- ~Barbara Hannah citing Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 109



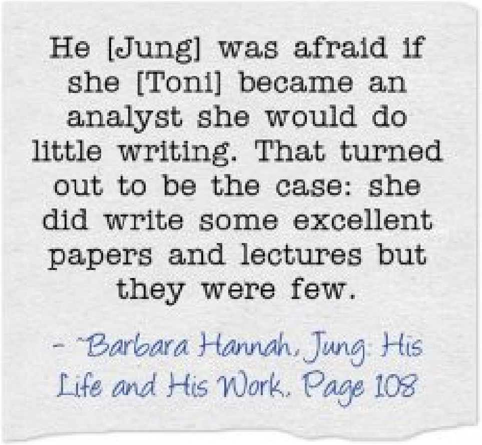
Mrs. Jung told me later that, though she had enjoyed it very much, she had been puzzled then and for some years afterward by the English.

~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 109



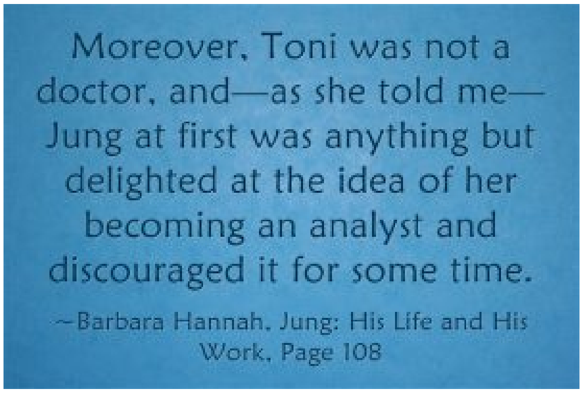
She [Toni] replied she would rather have spent her lifetime helping other people than as an author; I cannot say that she altogether convinced me. It was a pity she could not combine the two forms of work.

– ~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 109



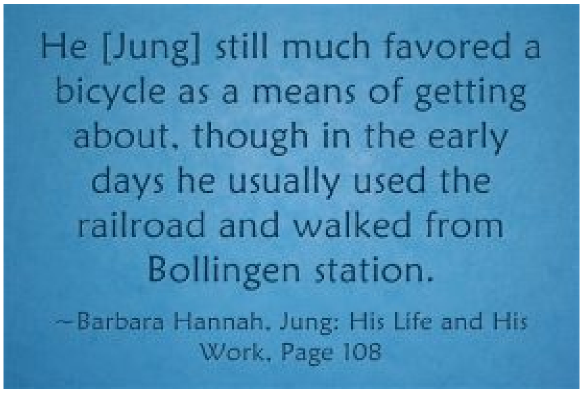
He [Jung] was afraid if she [Toni] became an analyst she would do little writing. That turned out to be the case: she did write some excellent papers and lectures but they were few.

– ~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 108



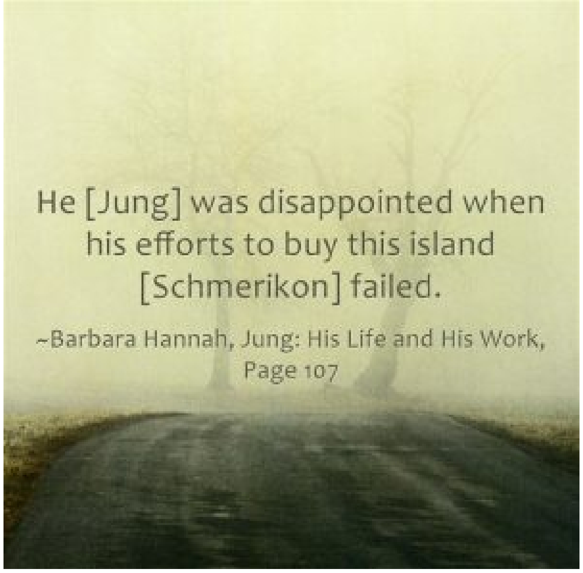
Moreover, Toni was not a doctor, and—as she told me—Jung at first was anything but delighted at the idea of her becoming an analyst and discouraged it for some time.

~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 108



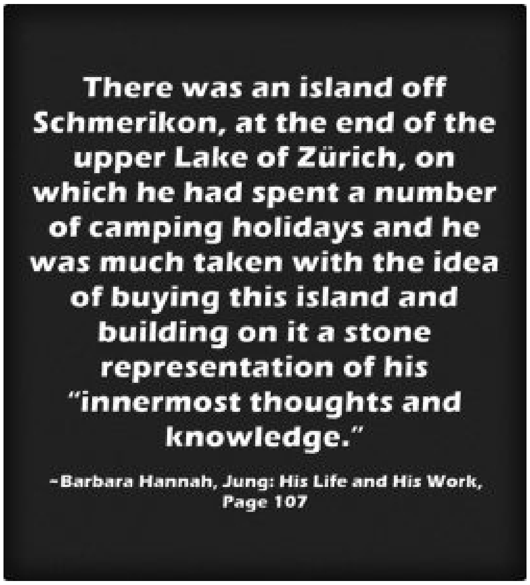
He [Jung] still much favored a bicycle as a means of getting about, though in the early days he usually used the railroad and walked from Bollingen station.

~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 108



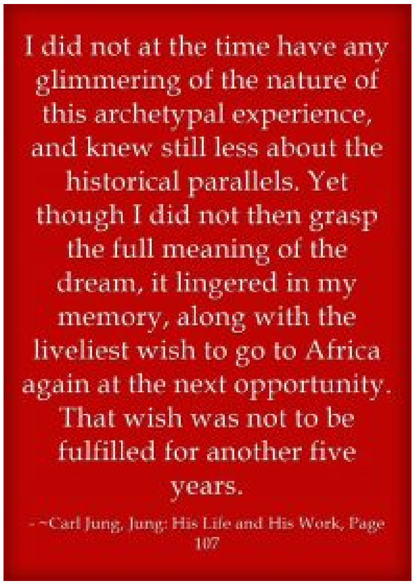
He [Jung] was disappointed when his efforts to buy this island [Schmerikon] failed.

~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 107



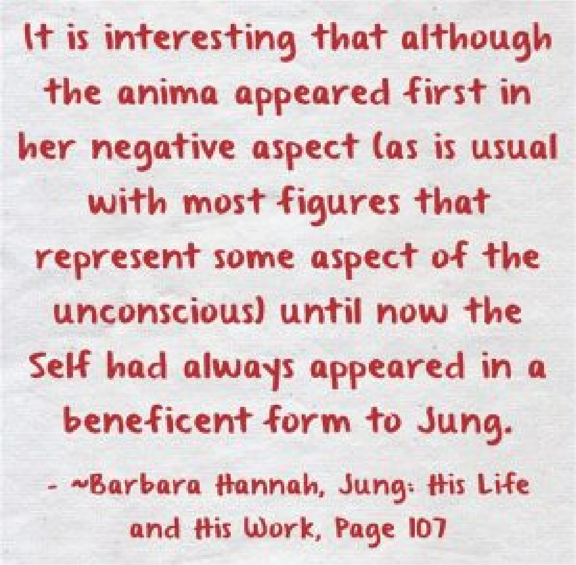
There was an island off Schmerikon, at the end of the upper Lake of Zürich, on which he had spent a number of camping holidays and he was much taken with the idea of buying this island and building on it a stone representation of his "innermost thoughts and knowledge."

~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 107



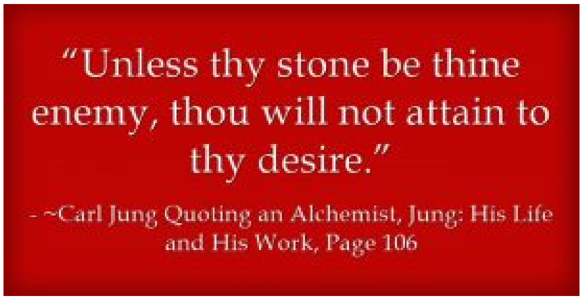
I did not at the time have any glimmering of the nature of this archetypal experience, and knew still less about the historical parallels. Yet though I did not then grasp the full meaning of the dream, it lingered in my memory, along with the liveliest wish to go to Africa again at the next opportunity. That wish was not to be fulfilled for another five years.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 107



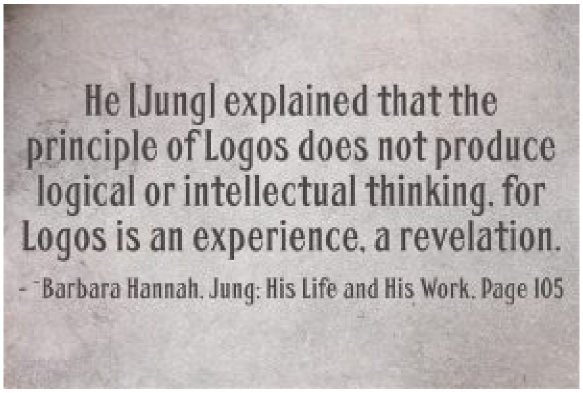
It is interesting that although the anima appeared first in her negative aspect (as is usual with most figures that represent some aspect of the unconscious) until now the Self had always appeared in a beneficent form to Jung.

- ~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 107



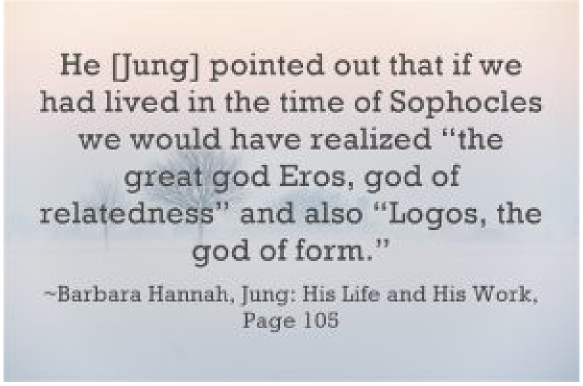
"Unless thy stone be thine enemy, thou will not attain to thy desire."

- ~Carl Jung Quoting an Alchemist, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 106



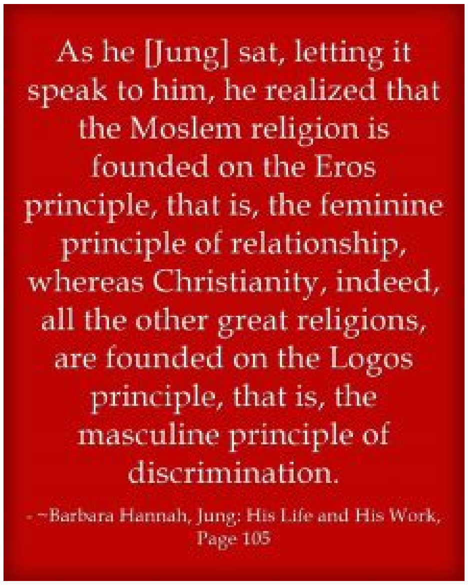
He [Jung] explained that the principle of Logos does not produce logical or intellectual thinking. for Logos is an experience. a revelation.

- ~Barbara Hannah. Jung: His Life and His Work. Page 105



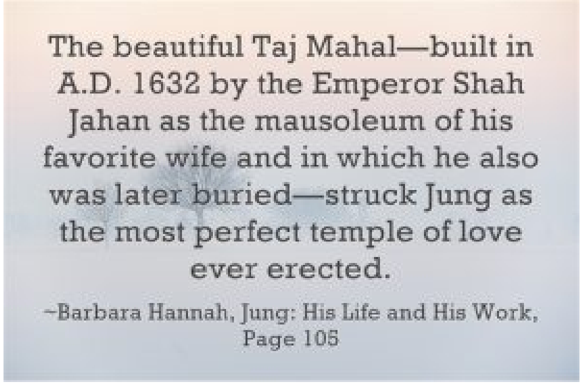
He [Jung] pointed out that if we had lived in the time of Sophocles we would have realized "the great god Eros, god of relatedness" and also "Logos, the god of form."

~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 105



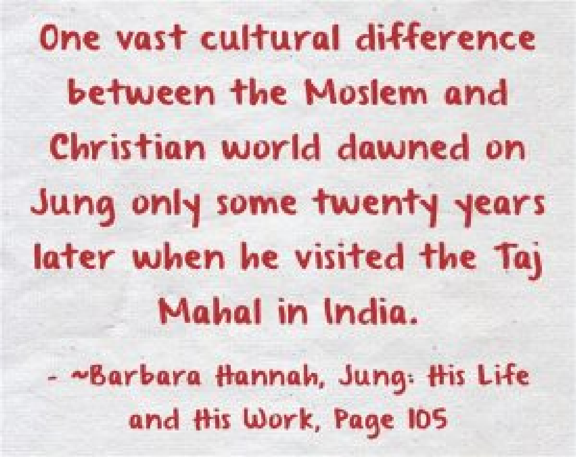
As he [Jung] sat, letting it speak to him, he realized that the Moslem religion is founded on the Eros principle, that is, the feminine principle of relationship, whereas Christianity, indeed, all the other great religions, are founded on the Logos principle, that is, the masculine principle of discrimination.

- ~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 105



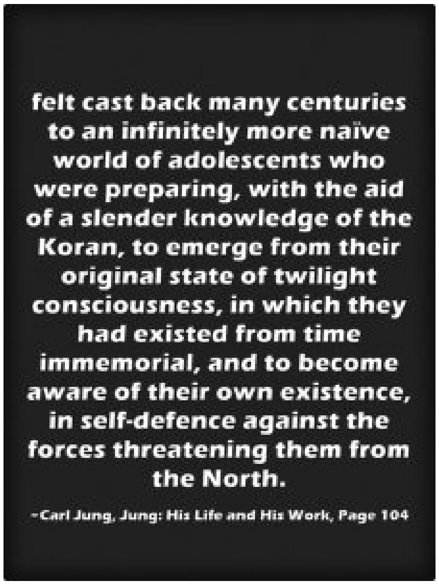
The beautiful Taj Mahal—built in A.D. 1632 by the Emperor Shah Jahan as the mausoleum of his favorite wife and in which he also was later buried—struck Jung as the most perfect temple of love ever erected.

~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 105



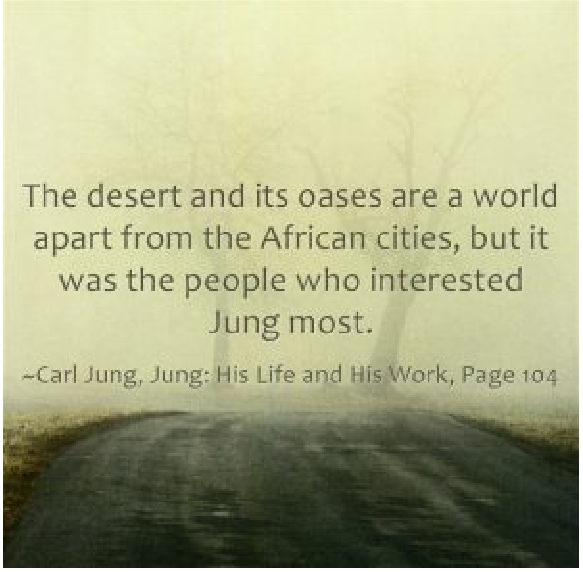
One vast cultural difference between the Moslem and Christian world dawned on Jung only some twenty years later when he visited the Taj Mahal in India.

- ~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 105



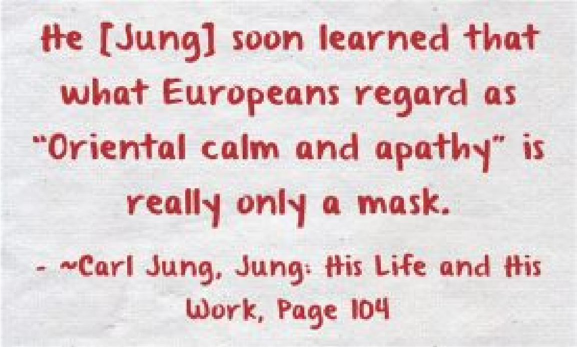
felt cast back many centuries to an infinitely more naïve world of adolescents who were preparing, with the aid of a slender knowledge of the Koran, to emerge from their original state of twilight consciousness, in which they had existed from time immemorial, and to become aware of their own existence, in self-defence against the forces threatening them from the North.

~Carl Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 104



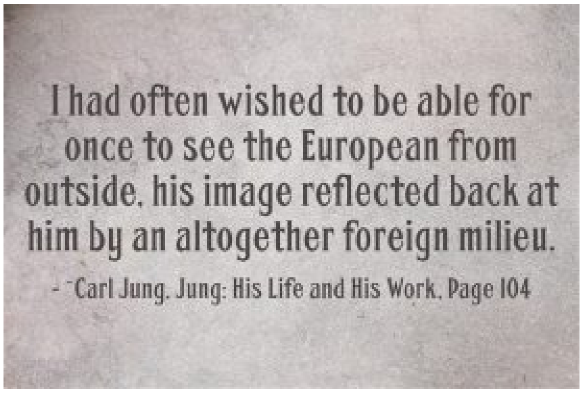
The desert and its oases are a world apart from the African cities, but it was the people who interested Jung most.

~Carl Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 104



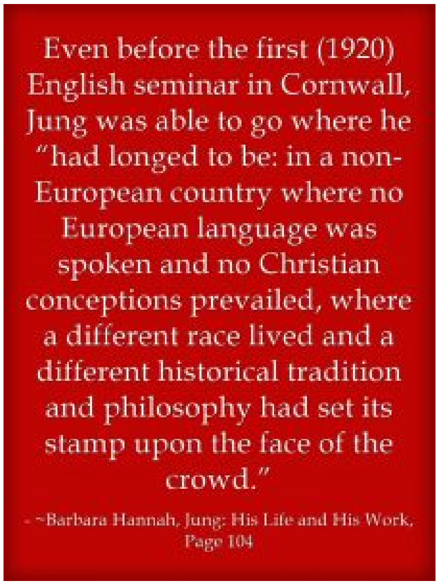
He [Jung] soon learned that what Europeans regard as "Oriental calm and apathy" is really only a mask.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 104



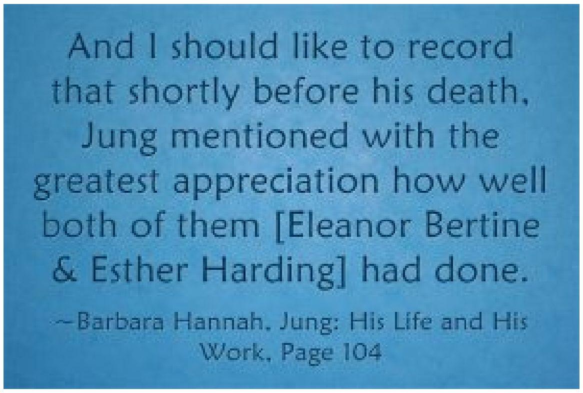
I had often wished to be able for once to see the European from outside, his image reflected back at him by an altogether foreign milieu.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 104



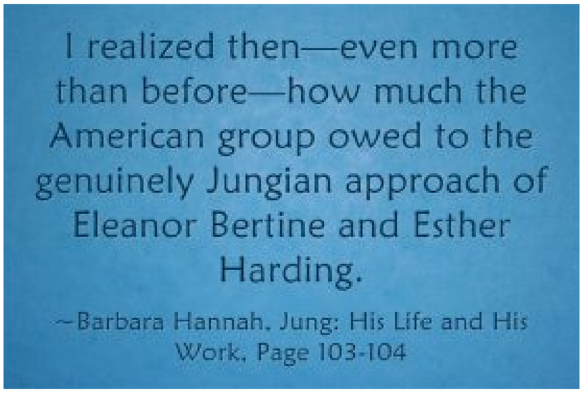
Even before the first (1920) English seminar in Cornwall, Jung was able to go where he "had longed to be: in a non-European country where no European language was spoken and no Christian conceptions prevailed, where a different race lived and a different historical tradition and philosophy had set its stamp upon the face of the crowd."

- ~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 104



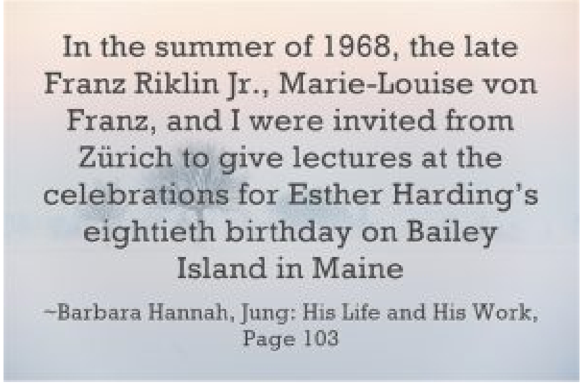
And I should like to record that shortly before his death, Jung mentioned with the greatest appreciation how well both of them [Eleanor Bertine & Esther Harding] had done.

~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 104



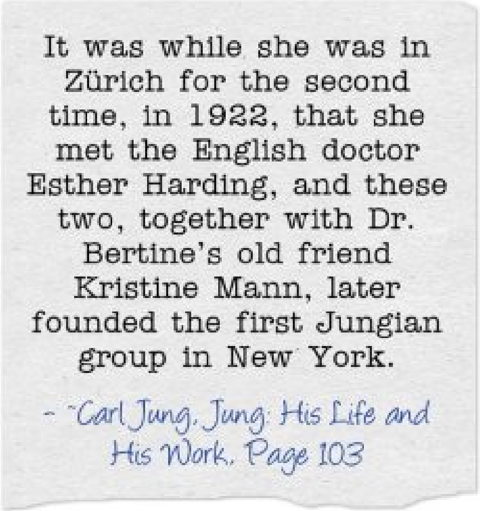
I realized then—even more than before—how much the American group owed to the genuinely Jungian approach of Eleanor Bertine and Esther Harding.

~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 103-104



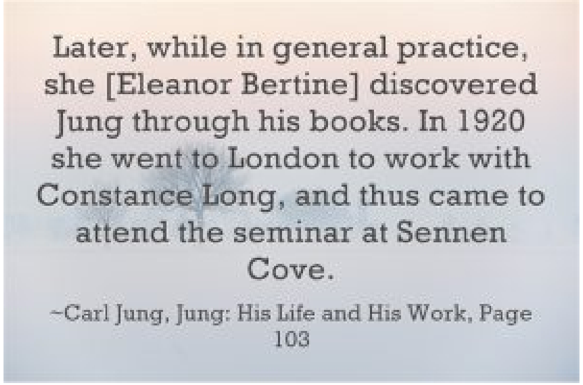
In the summer of 1968, the late Franz Riklin Jr., Marie-Louise von Franz, and I were invited from Zürich to give lectures at the celebrations for Esther Harding's eightieth birthday on Bailey Island in Maine

~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 103



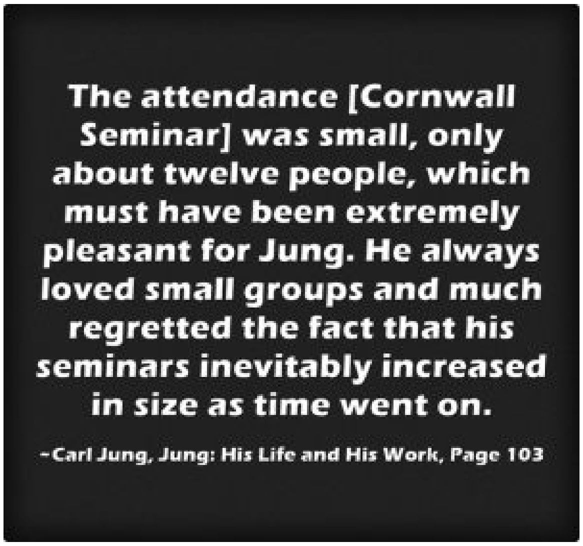
It was while she was in Zürich for the second time, in 1922, that she met the English doctor Esther Harding, and these two, together with Dr. Bertine's old friend Kristine Mann, later founded the first Jungian group in New York.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 103



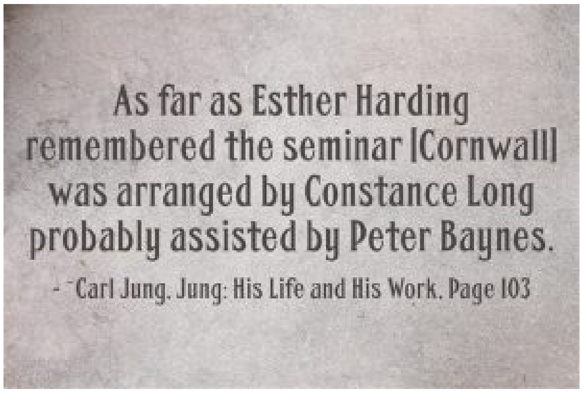
Later, while in general practice, she [Eleanor Bertine] discovered Jung through his books. In 1920 she went to London to work with Constance Long, and thus came to attend the seminar at Sennen Cove.

~Carl Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 103



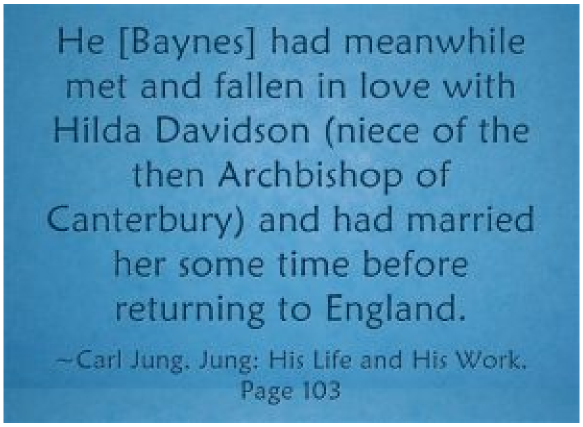
The attendance [Cornwall Seminar] was small, only about twelve people, which must have been extremely pleasant for Jung. He always loved small groups and much regretted the fact that his seminars inevitably increased in size as time went on.

~Carl Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 103



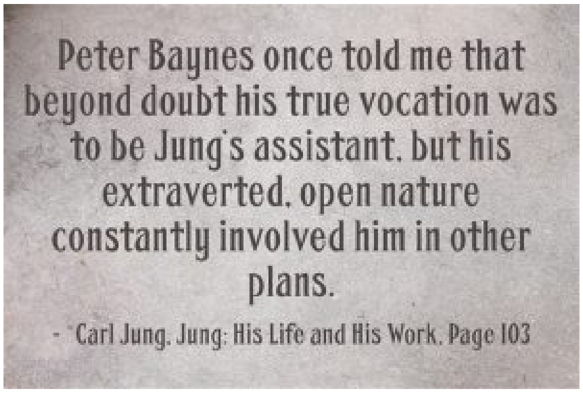
As far as Esther Harding remembered the seminar [Cornwall] was arranged by Constance Long probably assisted by Peter Baynes.

~Carl Jung. Jung: His Life and His Work. Page 103



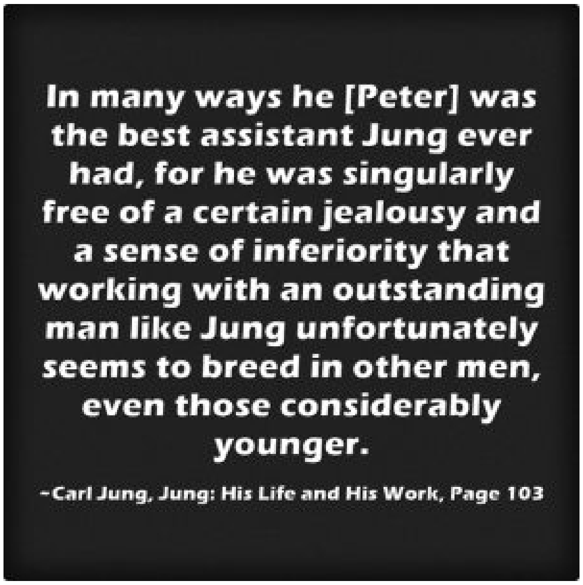
He [Baynes] had meanwhile met and fallen in love with Hilda Davidson (niece of the then Archbishop of Canterbury) and had married her some time before returning to England.

~Carl Jung. Jung: His Life and His Work. Page 103



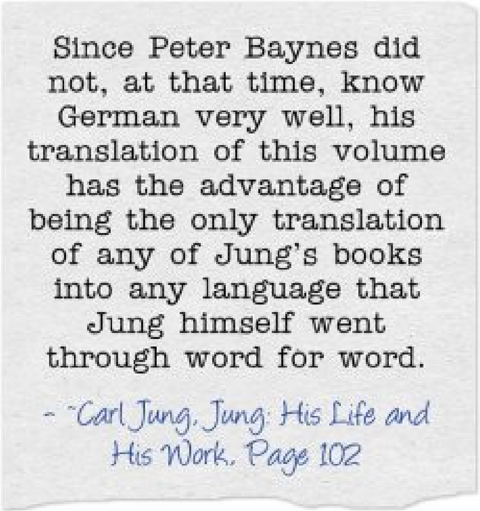
Peter Baynes once told me that beyond doubt his true vocation was to be Jung's assistant, but his extraverted, open nature constantly involved him in other plans.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 103



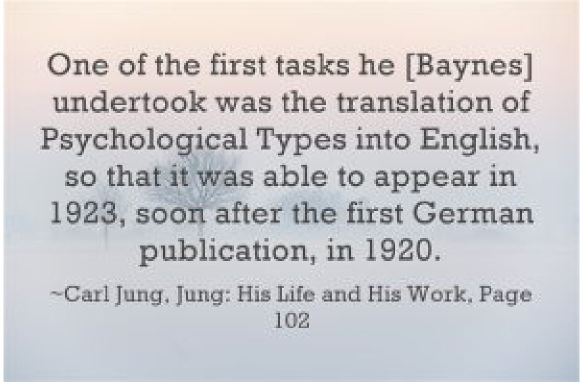
In many ways he [Peter] was the best assistant Jung ever had, for he was singularly free of a certain jealousy and a sense of inferiority that working with an outstanding man like Jung unfortunately seems to breed in other men, even those considerably younger.

~Carl Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 103



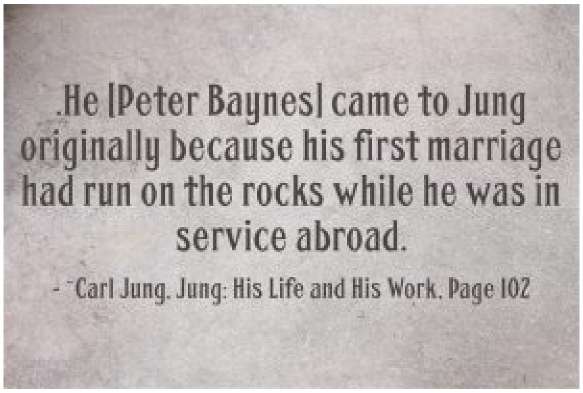
Since Peter Baynes did not, at that time, know German very well, his translation of this volume has the advantage of being the only translation of any of Jung's books into any language that Jung himself went through word for word.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 102



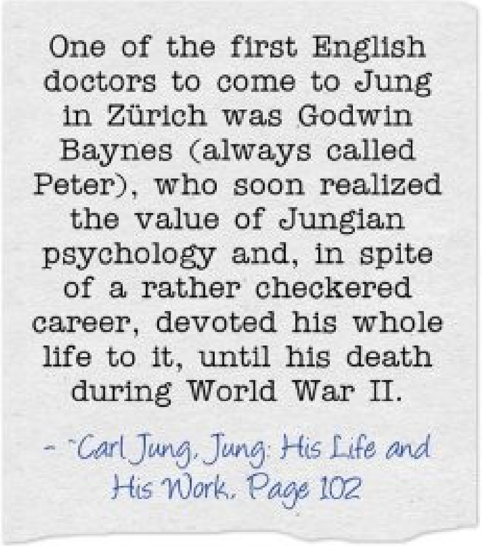
One of the first tasks he [Baynes] undertook was the translation of Psychological Types into English, so that it was able to appear in 1923, soon after the first German publication, in 1920.

~Carl Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 102



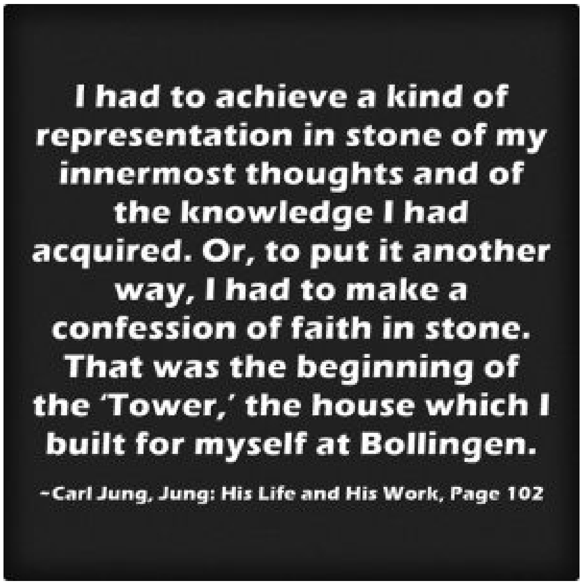
.He [Peter Baynes] came to Jung originally because his first marriage had run on the rocks while he was in service abroad.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 102



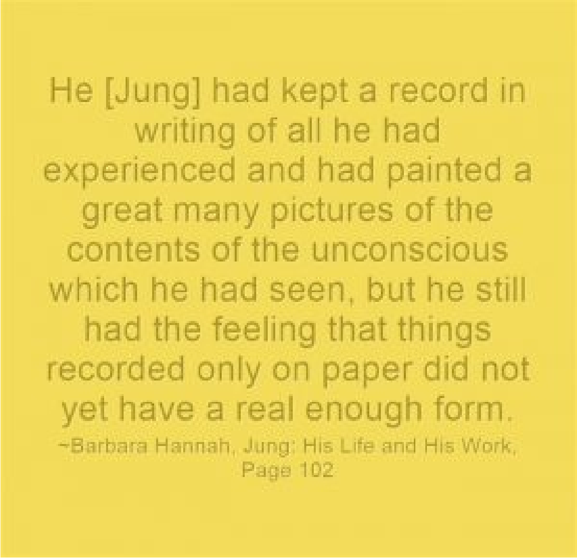
One of the first English doctors to come to Jung in Zürich was Godwin Baynes (always called Peter), who soon realized the value of Jungian psychology and, in spite of a rather checkered career, devoted his whole life to it, until his death during World War II.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 102



I had to achieve a kind of representation in stone of my innermost thoughts and of the knowledge I had acquired. Or, to put it another way, I had to make a confession of faith in stone. That was the beginning of the 'Tower,' the house which I built for myself at Bollingen.

~Carl Jung, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 102



He [Jung] had kept a record in writing of all he had experienced and had painted a great many pictures of the contents of the unconscious which he had seen, but he still had the feeling that things recorded only on paper did not yet have a real enough form.

~Barbara Hannah, Jung: His Life and His Work, Page 102

The dichotomy of God into divinity and humanity (2019-11-10 05:08)

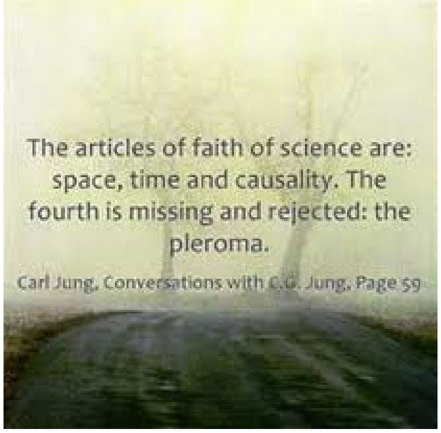
[1]

The dichotomy of God into divinity and humanity and his return to himself in the sacrificial act hold out the comforting doctrine that in man's own darkness there is hidden a light that shall once again return to its source, and that this light actually wanted to descend into the darkness in order to deliver the Enchained One who languishes there, and lead him to light everlasting. Carl Jung

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/11/31bd8-mass2bin2bthe2bgrotto2bof2bthe2bannunciation252c2bnazareth.jpg`

Carl Jung: Everything that happens, however, happens in the same "one world" and is part of it. (2019-11-10 05:10)



The articles of faith of science are: space, time and causality. The fourth is missing and rejected: the pleroma.

Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 59

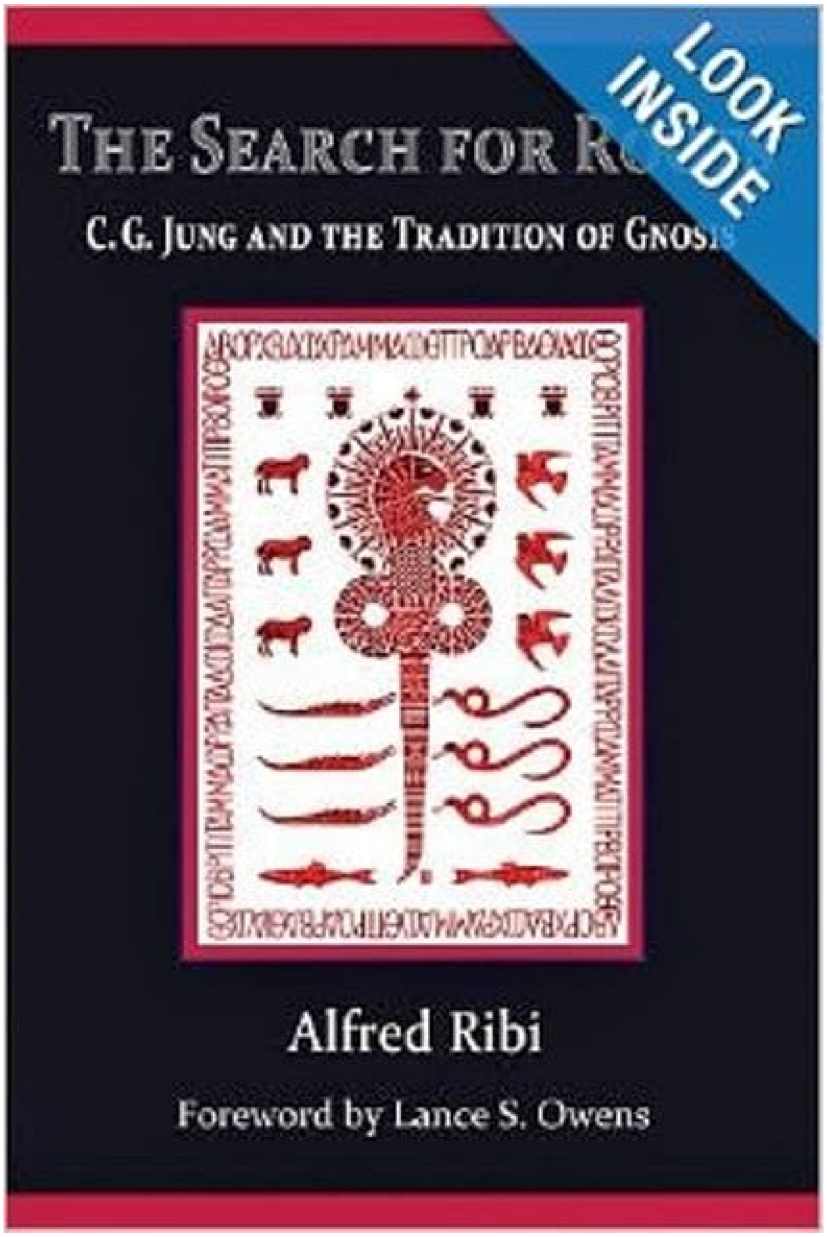
The causalism that underlies our scientific picture of the world breaks everything down into individual processes which it punctiliously tries to isolate from all other parallel processes.

This tendency is absolutely necessary if we are to gain a reliable knowledge of the world; but philosophically it has the disadvantage of breaking up, or obscuring, the universal interrelationship of events so that a recognition of the greater relationship, i.e., the unity of the world, becomes more and more difficult.

Everything that happens, however, happens in the same "one world" and is part of it.

For this reason events must have an a priori aspect of unity. Carl Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, Para 663

In The Search for Roots: C.G. Jung and the Tradition of Gnosis by Alfred Ribi (2019-11-10 05:31)



LOOK INSIDE
THE SEARCH FOR R
C. G. JUNG AND THE TRADITION OF GNOSI
Alfred Ribi
Foreword by Lance S. Owens

The publication in 2009 of C. G. Jung's The Red Book: Liber Novus has initiated a broad reassessment of Jung's place in cultural history. Among many revelations, the visionary events recorded in the Red Book reveal the foundation of Jung's complex association with the Western tradition of Gnosis.

In The Search for Roots, Alfred Ribi closely examines Jung's life-long association with Gnostic tradition. Dr. Ribi knows C. G. Jung and his tradition from the ground up.

He began his analytical training with Marie-Louise von Franz in 1963, and continued working closely with Dr. von Franz for the next 30 years. For over four decades he has been an analyst, lecturer and examiner of the C. G. Jung Institute in Zurich, where he also served as the Director of Studies.

But even more importantly, early in his studies Dr. Ribi noted Jung's underlying roots in Gnostic tradition, and he carefully followed those roots to their source. Alfred Ribi is unique in the Jungian analytical community for the careful scholarship and intellectual rigor he has brought to the study Gnosticism.

In The Search for Roots, Ribi shows how a dialogue between Jungian and Gnostic studies can open new perspectives on the experiential nature of Gnosis, both ancient and modern. Creative engagement with Gnostic tradition broadens the imaginative scope of modern depth psychology and adds an essential context for understanding the voice of the soul emerging in our modern age.

A Foreword by Lance Owens supplements this volume with a discussion of Jung's encounter with Gnostic tradition while composing his Red Book (Liber Novus).

Dr. Owens delivers a fascinating and historically well-documented account of how Gnostic mythology entered into Jung's personal mythology in the Red Book.

Gnostic mythology thereafter became for Jung a prototypical image of his individuation. Owens offers this conclusion:

"In 1916 Jung had seemingly found the root of his myth and it was the myth of Gnosis. I see no evidence that this ever changed. Over the next forty years, he would proceed to construct an interpretive reading of the Gnostic tradition's occult course across the Christian aeon: in Hermeticism, alchemy, Kabbalah, and Christian mysticism.

In this vast hermeneutic enterprise, Jung was building a bridge across time, leading back to the foundation stone of classical Gnosticism. The bridge that led forward toward a new and coming aeon was footed on the stone rejected by the builders two thousand years ago."

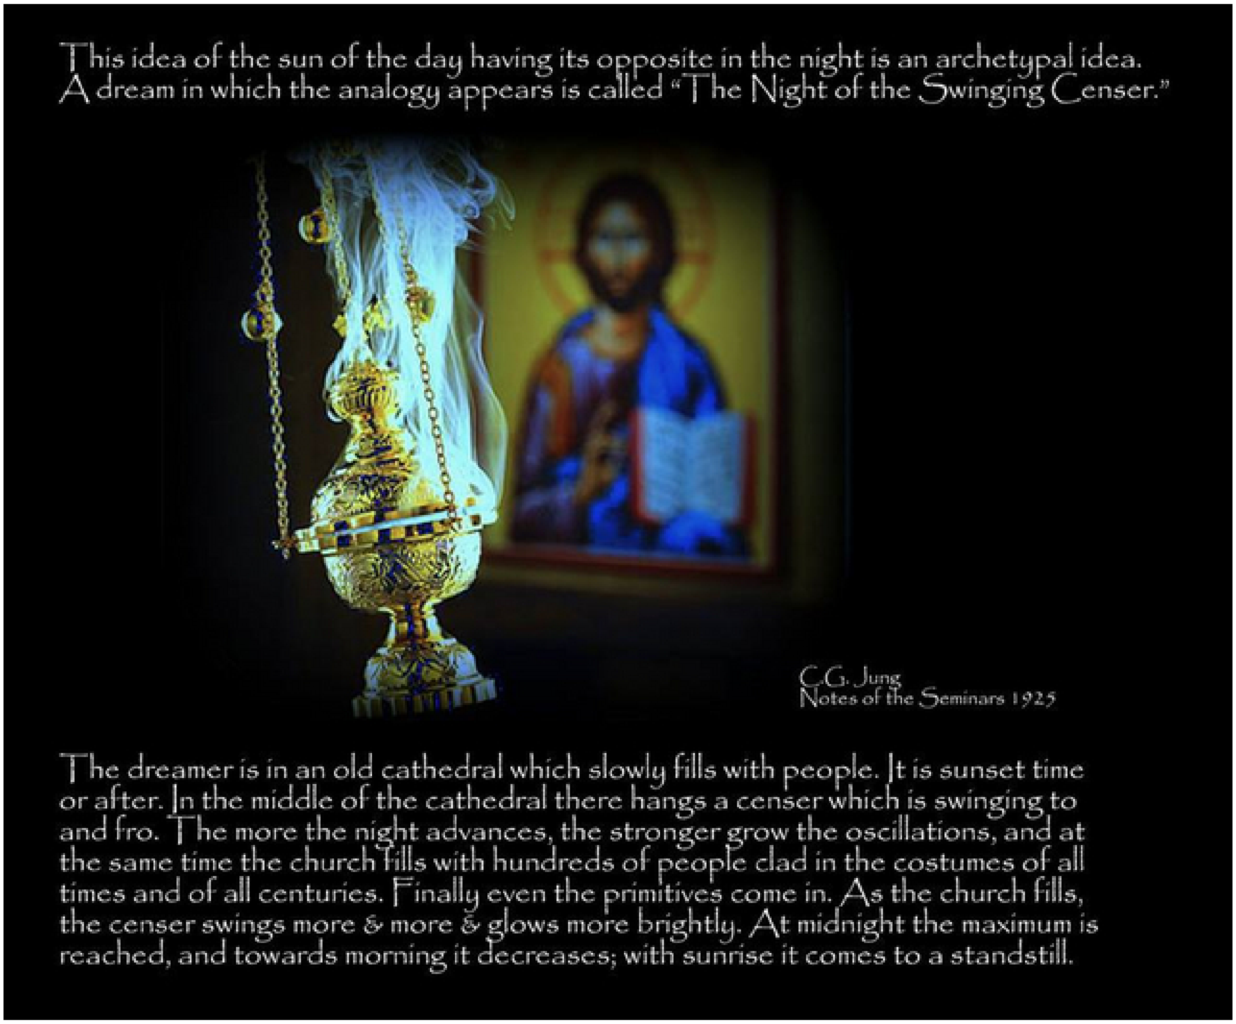
Alfred Ribi's examination of Jung's relationship with Gnostic tradition comes at an important time. Initially authored prior to the publication of Jung's Red Book, current release of this English edition offers a bridge between the past and the forthcoming understanding of Jung's Gnostic roots.

http://www.amazon.com/The-Search-Roots-Tradition-Gnosis/dp/0615850626/ref=tmm _pap _title _0?ie=UTF8 &qid=1384002764 &sr=1-1

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/62829-gnosis.jpg`

Carl Jung: Pythagoras, for example, thought that the earth had a twin. (2019-11-10 05:37)

[1]



This idea of the sun of the day having its opposite in the night is an archetypal idea.
A dream in which the analogy appears is called “The Night of the Swinging Censer.”

C.G. Jung
Notes of the Seminars 1925

The dreamer is in an old cathedral which slowly fills with people. It is sunset time or after. In the middle of the cathedral there hangs a censer which is swinging to and fro. The more the night advances, the stronger grow the oscillations, and at the same time the church fills with hundreds of people clad in the costumes of all times and of all centuries. Finally even the primitives come in. As the church fills, the censer swings more & more & glows more brightly. At midnight the maximum is reached, and towards morning it decreases; with sunrise it comes to a standstill.

This idea of the sun of the day having its opposite in the night is an archetypal idea.

Pythagoras, for example, thought that the earth had a twin.

The idea also comes out in an anonymous book that was published during the war.

This book was called Peter Blobbs—Real Dreams, and the first dream, the one in which the midnight sun analogy appears, is called “The Night of the Swinging Censer.”

The dreamer is in an old cathedral which slowly fills with people.

It is sunset time or after.

In the middle of the cathedral there hangs a censer which is swinging to and fro.

The more the night advances, the stronger grow the oscillations, and at the same time the church fills with hundreds of people clad in the costumes of all times and of all centuries.

Finally even the primitives come in.

As the church fills, the censer swings more and more and glows more brightly.

At midnight the maximum is reached, and towards morning it decreases; with sunrise it comes to a standstill.
Carl Jung, Seminar 1925, Page 67.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http://www.blogger.com/home

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

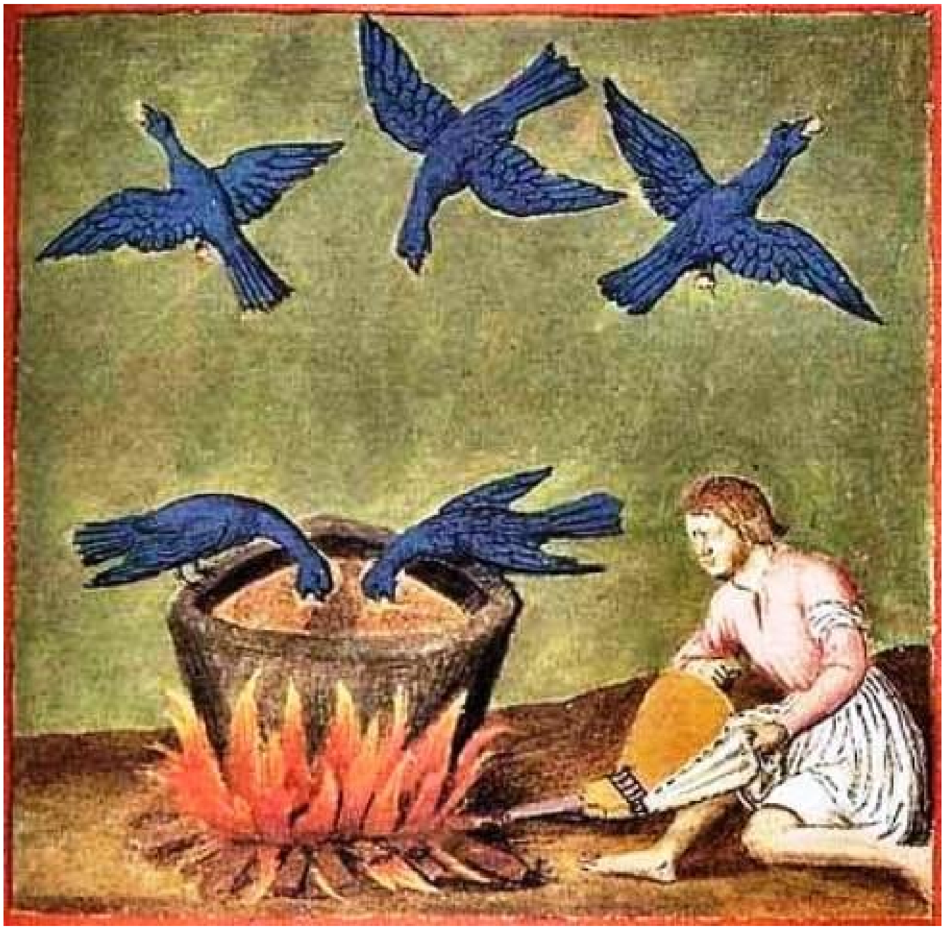
Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/b52c3-cathedral.jpg`

Birds in Alchemy… (2019-11-10 05:38)

[1]



Continuing with Alchemical processes: sublimatio and birds

" The essential thing about birds is that they, having as their domain the air element, mediate between the earthly realm and the heaven world. The alchemist in observing the flight of birds, recognized in them a picture of the human soul undergoing spiritual development. "

Adam McLean "Birds in Alchemy"

http://www.levity.com/alchemy/alcbirds.html

"In alchemical writings we meet a seemingly bewildering multiplicity of animal symbols - red lions, white eagles, stags, unicorns, winged dragons and snakes. Although at first glance all this complex mass of symbolism seems tortured and confused there is an inner coherence to these symbols, which the ancient alchemists used in specific ways reflecting their esoteric content.

In this article I wish to consider a particularly tight knit group of these animal symbols, the birds of alchemy - the Black Crow, White Swan, Peacock, Pelican, and Phoenix - which are descriptive of certain stages of the alchemical process. Of course it would be wrong to suggest that there are fixed rigid meanings with regard to these symbols.

The alchemists always integrated the symbols they used, so that one has to look at the total context, the background against which they stand, but when the birds appear in this sequence it is almost certain that the following interpretation can be applied.

Firstly, let us look at the symbols in general. What did the alchemists wish to symbolize by birds? The essential thing about birds is that they, having as their domain the air element, mediate between the earthly realm and the heaven world.

The alchemist in observing the flight of birds, recognized in them a picture of the human soul undergoing spiritual development. The soul, aspiring upwards, flying free of the restraints of the earth bound body seeking the heavenly light, only to have to return to the earthly consciousness again after the meditation, the alchemist symbolized by the bird.

Thus the bird symbols, in alchemy, reflect the inner experiences of soul alchemy, the soaring of the soul free from the earth bound body and the physical senses. The soul, in the meditations of soul alchemy, touches upon the spiritual world, and brings something of this back into the outer life again.

The birds as symbols mediate between the physical and spiritual worlds, they reflect certain archetypal experiences encountered by the soul in its development through the alchemical process.

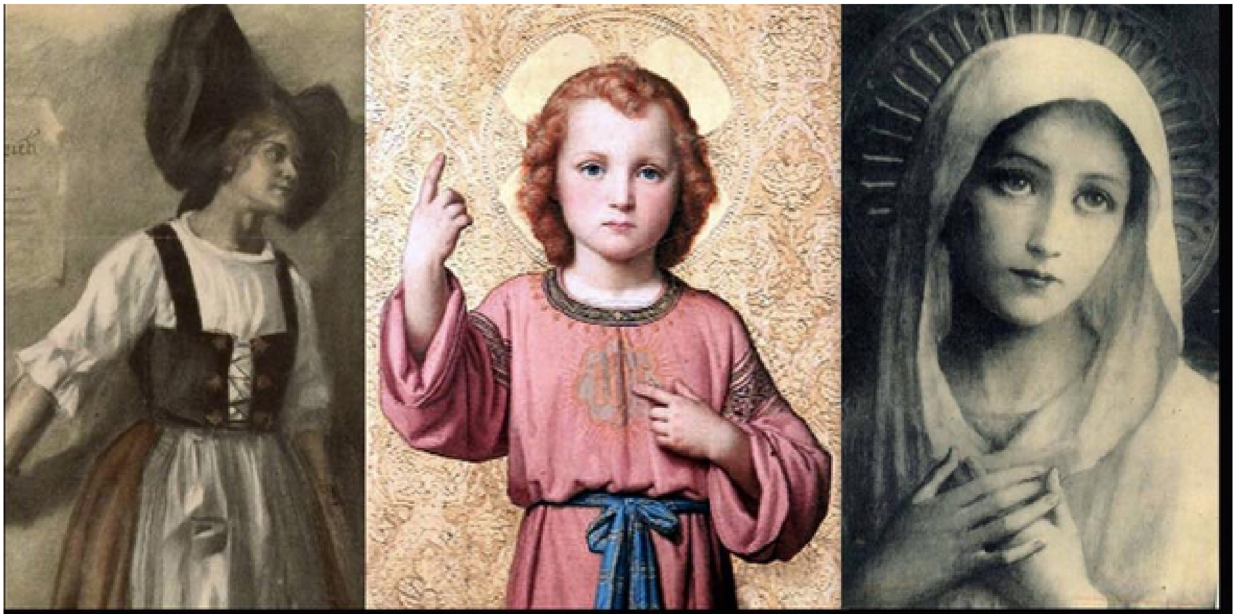
These symbols were used in two ways. Firstly, as a description in a text of one aspect of the process. Thus the alchemist might indicate a certain process as the Pelican stage, and describe certain facets of this by using perhaps other symbols, Secondly, these bird symbols could be used as a subject matter for a meditation, and by inwardly building such a symbol, one connected in soul with the essential experience of the particular stage of the alchemical-soul process.

Now us will look at these in detail. I would like to consider them in the following sequence, one which occurs in various sources: Black Crow - White Swan - Peacock - Pelican - Phoenix - as these correspond to a developing inner experience which involves a progressively deepening encounter with the inner spiritual dimension of our being.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/bb0db-birds.jpg`

Carl Jung on Ignatius and Prayer (2019-11-10 06:22)

[1]



"An Alsatian market woman stopped at a chapel on her way to the Basel market and prayed to the Virgin for good sales, 'so that I can buy greens, bread and perhaps a little meat.' Then she heard the Christ Child say, 'And anything else?' She replied, 'Hold your tongue boy, I am talking to your mother!'"

C.G. Jung, ETH, 07/07/1939

To return to the biography of Ignatius: from Manresa he went to Barcelona and in 1523 he made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land.

He took no money with him but begged his way.

He was only a few days in Jerusalem, because his zeal had offended some fanatical Turks and the Franciscan monks, who resided in Jerusalem, threatened Ignatius with excommunication if he remained.

He returned to Barcelona where he realised that his education as an officer was very insufficient for his present need.

He began to learn Latin but was held up by the verb amare.

Each time he began to conjugate this verb he fell into a condition of being in love with God which was not very helpful to his Latin.

But in time he overcame this difficulty, and went on to study philosophy.

During these studies he already talked with people he met and began the original form of the exercises.

This led to some trouble with the Inquisition, which was no joke in those days.

There were trials in Alcala and Salamanca.

The people, largely women with whom he had practised the exercises, had to give evidence.

Bernhard Hegardt says :

"One of the women who were implicated gave the following information before the examining judge on May 10th, 1527.

She had begged Ignatius to teach her how she could serve God.

And Inigo had answered her that during a month she should speak with him frequently and that during this month she should confess and partake of the sacrament every eight days .

He added that the first time she would feel happy, without knowing why, that the second week she would be sad, but that he trusted in God that she would derive great benefit . . .

He said also that he would explain to her the exercise of the three spiritual powers.

He also showed her the merit that may be acquired through temptation; he spoke of the venial sin and how it can develop into a mortal sin ; and of the ten commandments and of the circumstances governing mortal sins, and of the five senses . . .

He told her that if she entered the service of God the temptations of the evil one would plague her.

He taught her self-examination which she should practise twice a day, once after the midday meal and the second time after the evening meal when she should kneel down and say:

'My God, my Father, my Creator! I thank Thee and praise Thee for all the manifold favours which Thou hast shown me, and which I hope Thou wilt still show me'."

This last prayer is typical of the western attitude.

We thank God for favours received and make this a reason for demanding more.

We do not notice this because it sounds well and we are used to the familiar words of our prayers but, as a matter of fact, religion in the West largely consists of shameless demands for what we want.

It reminds one of a rather broad Basel story about an Alsatian market woman.

She stopped at a chapel on her way to the Basel market and prayed to the Virgin for good sales, "so that I can buy greens, bread and perhaps a little meat ".

Then she heard the Christ Child say: "And anything else?"

And she replied: "Hold your tongue boy, I am talking to your Mother! "

This story is fifty years old, but the whole psychology of begging God and the Saints for favours belongs to primitive psychology in any time.

The Saints were metaphorically beaten in the Middle Ages if they failed to produce the right weather.   Carl

Jung, ETH Lecture, 7 July 1939

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http://www.blogger.com/home

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/4f844-1prayer.jpg`

Tina Keller: “My Religious Development” (2019-11-10 09:37)

Essay 1: “My Religious Development”

My Religion has always been essential to me.

I would define it as the possibility of the small human being to make contact with "divine" suprapersonal forces.

Very early in life I felt intuitively an "invisible world" around me and I imagined I belonged to it.

I tried to take refuge in this imagination when I was uncomfortable in the so-called reality.

Gradually the vast background which my intuition sensed was identified with what I was told about God and Jesus.

My parents were not "religious" people.

They had a humanist and rational philosophy, but they were very sincere in acting on what they believed in.

They said religion meant "doing right."

This did not satisfy me.

As I was a fear-ridden child, I knew that I needed help from some suprahuman power, as I could not overcome fear by my own strength.

I had a governess who would pray with me when I was so afraid at night; I could feel how real religion was to her.

By comparison, the little verses we were taught as prayers seemed quite artificial.

So I felt different from my parents at an early age and I became more and more separated from them because I felt they could never understand me in my religious need and feeling.

Yet I am extremely grateful for their integrity, the sincere efforts they made to educate their children in the best way they knew.

They would sacrifice any personal pleasure to their ideals, but I missed the joy of seeing them as happy people.

My father took great pride in me, his eldest, and he expected much of me.

I am sure that this attitude made me self-sure and confident that I would always be liked and succeed.

Growing up in the atmosphere of a Victorian home I fled into imagination and felt at home in a mysterious invisible world.

I missed companions as we had private lessons.

Sunday school was a treat because of meeting other children and I loved the singing.

The village pastor had much the same attitude as my parents, so his teaching had no impact on me.

When I was about 12 years old, we lived for over a year in England and I was sent to an English boarding school where I was the only foreigner amongst 40 English girls.

I had been well prepared by the governess and spoke and wrote English fluently.

Though I was shy and homesick, it was a delight to learn with other girls.

I loved the lessons and was much liked by the teachers, as I had a better preparation than most of the others.

But the strongest impact was religious. We went to the Episcopal Church every Sunday and this corresponded to my need.

There, with the ritual, the participation of the parish, and the music, my religious feeling was satisfied as never before. I wished I could have belonged to that church!

Then there was the headmistress to whose religious instruction I responded; I felt how real religion was to her.

But we moved back to Switzerland and I was more a stranger than ever.

I was confirmed, as was the custom, at about 16 in the village church and I believe I substituted through my imagination that which I missed in outer reality.

I was then supposed to be grown up; it was still the time when most girls did not get the same education as boys.

Life was boring and I was full of curiosity and had energies that would have needed to be used.

I was unhappy but somehow did not see clearly enough what I wanted to be able to fight for it.

I was about 18 when my father wanted my younger sister to go to an excellent college for girls in England.

So I asked him to let me go also, to which he agreed.

In spite of having sustained financial losses, he felt education was the best capital he could give to his children.

Yet he did not know that such a year in an English college needed a follow-up if it were to lead to a practical goal.

He did not think of a career for his daughters; marriage was the goal of a woman as he saw it and I did not see clearer.

You can imagine how often when I later studied medicine I wondered about those "wasted" years.

If I had then wanted to study medicine and felt the certainty that came later, my father could easily have been persuaded.

Now looking back, I see that I needed those many years of latency.

I needed the escape into imagination, where everything was fluid and "wings" were growing that might be a hindrance from the practical point of view, but that kept me from ever being satisfied with the realistic aspect of things.

I was not meant to study medicine; if so, I would have done it before marriage.

I had a vocation and the experience as a nurse, then as wife and mother, that was as much part of it as the medical studies and psychology.

From the objective standpoint, I was not a good student when I studied in later years, but because of the experience I had already acquired, I was aware of many other problems and I learned just what I needed for the work I was meant to do.

So I must be grateful that my eyes were not yet open and that I could not see and find the opportunities I was not yet ripe for.

The year in the English college was certainly a strong and very beneficial influence on me.

There were women who belonged to the modern world, where I felt to belong also.

I was treated as a grownup person and my horizons widened.

There were excellent teachers and many of the girls were preparing for careers.

When we left college we joined "the guild of old girls," who were expected to continue to educate themselves by reading and to make their lives, in whatever way, serve not only personal interests, but society.

Again religion played a primary role and I was happy to be able again to go regularly to the Episcopal Church.

We had regular prayers at the college, which no one liked to miss, and the short addresses given were impressive and to the point.

Here again I met women whose religion was very real.

On coming back to my home I knew I wanted to serve and I had decided to learn nursing.

This seemed a feminine profession and I wanted to be feminine.

I thought of marriage, but only if I met the "right" man; never would I look for him.

I trusted God would send him at the right time.

I went out to dances, but the young men I met there were not to my liking.

Now and then an English friend of my mother had parties with foreign students where there I felt much freer.

At last when I was past 20, I could enter a hospital and try out whether I had the necessary health and strength for the strenuous work as a nurse.

My parents thought I would soon be disappointed and glad to return to a more comfortable life.

But I was very happy; now life seemed worthwhile.

To the astonishment of my parents, I thrived in this hard work because I was so satisfied.

I wanted to continue to go to a regular nursing school where I would pass examinations and earn a diploma.

Now I took the necessary initiatives to find the training I wanted and got my parents to agree.

The first hospital was run by a protestant religious order; here nursing was part of service to God.

I was never tempted to become part of the order because I was much too attached to the world, but all I did was done in a religious spirit and my preoccupation was a religious one.

I felt I had a vocation; I wondered whether that meant that I could not marry. Was it not more important to love God than to love a man?

I was a nurse for about 2 years; before completing the training and receiving my diploma I met my future husband and got engaged.

I had no doubt that this was the "right" man God had sent to me and this conviction lasted through all the 51 years of marriage and beyond.

Even when marriage presented many difficulties and even when I was unhappy, I still knew that this was the "right" man for me.

I was incredibly happy when my husband led me out of the narrow restrictions of my home into a life with wide horizons.

My husband came from a peasant family.

They had known poverty, but they radiated contentment and happiness as I had not known in my home.

How glad I was that my husband did not belong to the sophisticated society like the young men I had met at dances!

My husband was dose to nature; everything was natural including the way he led me into sexuality.

I who had grown up in a Victorian home whose mother felt sex to be a "duty" and who repressed all expressions of exuberance.

I came to experience sex as an "ecstasy" and I just "knew" that this was a religious sacrament. Joy, including the body and its pleasure, became for me part of religion.

My husband was a minister and I disliked this profession.

How could any man believe he knew what God’s message to man was?

It seemed arrogant that any man would assume he could interpret God to man!

But I loved this man and so I accepted his profession although I was very glad when later he gave up the ministry to be secretary of an international organization for the relief of the churches that had suffered through the first world war.

I saw the artist in my husband.

He was very musical and when he played the piano he spoke to my heart.

This meant more than any words.

Also in the way he lived, he seemed like an artist; he did not drive himself as I did, but was just absorbed in a project and then able to relax again.

Work never seemed to tire him because his interest was so fully in it; when he felt disinclined he did not force himself and worked with new zest the next day.

I felt him to be deeply religious, not because of what he said, but because of his life.

He was never afraid, wherever he went; he felt "safe in the everlasting arms."

I who knew fear, I felt fearlessness to be the proof of real faith.

My husband also considered that it was his religious belief that gave him such confidence.

But gradually I came to another theory.

I think his harmonious nature, the fact that his parents were not such opposite characters as mine were, meant that he was not torn inside and did not have to fight such internal battles.

He had absorbed his mother’s child-like faith and he grew up in the country where the rhythm of nature is part of religion.

It seems to me that up to his death he had this harmonious relatedness to all life.

For years I believed with him that his harmony was due to his "faith." He was sure that if I would just have "faith" I would feel safe as he did.

I tried very hard to identify with the beliefs he expressed, but my fears did not lessen.

In fact during the time I was a nurse I had almost lost fear and now, happily married, fear was worse than ever.

I wonder whether the independent and strong attitude I assumed during my professional work made me feel free, while now I was much more passive, almost a "clinging vine."

My husband said he could and would not have a "neurotic" wife, and I think it was healthy that he thus prevented me from making him my psychotherapist.

Because of my fears, which irritated my husband, I eventually became a patient of Dr. Jung's, who was a friend of his.

I had heard Dr. Jung speak and was fascinated, but I did not like him as a man; he was so sarcastic and he said terrible things when he made fun of people.

It was good for me to go to someone so different in attitude to my husband. He attacked my pseudo faith, which I now defended with my husband's arguments against Dr. Jung's cynicism.

He spoke to me, the minister's wife, in the vein he later wrote about in his book Answer to Job,2 attacking the belief in a "good father God" and challenging my unconscious doubts.

It was awful and I fought desperately for the Christian faith I stood for.

I certainly gained strength in that fight! I stood between my husband’s and Dr. Jung’s ideas.

Both men were absolutely sincere, yet each saw the world with different eyes.

Dr. Jung maintained if religion is to be alive for a person, it must be a real inner experience.

My husband said that in Christ God had sent his message to humanity once and for all; that was enough, we must only believe it.

It seemed that my husband saw faith as something one could acquire by will, by prayer or by submission, although he could not say how.

But Dr. Jung recognized that some people simply cannot believe without a real inner experience and he also knew that sometimes a crisis brought the conditions that brought such an experience.

If I was so tormented by fear it proved that my faith was not real.

At length I was defeated and had nothing to hold on to.

I do not remember how long this desperate feeling lasted, it may have been one or several weeks.

Then one night I woke up and had a real living religious experience.

It was nothing spectacular, no vision or special light, but it brought an inner certainty.

Next day I was so elated, I expected that now life would be different.

But it was only a "seed" which needed time to grow.

Still, from this small beginning, a real faith, rather an "inner knowing," has continued to grow.

For a long time I could still think within the framework of traditional religion.

I went to church and as we moved to Geneva, I went regularly to the English or the American Episcopal Church. I was later confirmed in the latter.

I had meanwhile become a practicing psychotherapist and, just as in my childhood, I knew that only with the help of higher invisible powers could I do my work well.

A religious attitude continued to be essential for me and for all I did.

In 1948, after 20 years in Geneva, we moved back to Zurich and I built up my practice there.

I was very well received by the doctors, some of whom had been students with me at the beginning of our medical training.

In Geneva I had been more of an outsider among the doctors.

In Zurich I learned to speak to groups and began to write articles; I was much appreciated, but remained outside the Jungian group.

I had for many years been interested in body awareness and had experienced myself the beneficial results of movement lessons.

This non-verbal approach had helped me more in many respects than psychotherapy, where so often words did bring insights to the mind, but did not reach my total person.

Through movement lessons I had been changed and helped toward more harmony.

More and more I realize how regular practice in body awareness and movement, as well as lessons with excellent artist-teachers has been the means of inner development of my whole person.

I have a gratitude to some of these teachers that I cannot feel for the psychotherapists who worked with me, except perhaps for Miss Toni Wolff.

I increasingly realize how the one-sided development of reason and intellect which was certainly a necessary step, gradually led to man’s alienation from the body and therefore also from contact with the environment.

The body is our only instrument to make such contact.

Other psychotherapists are also stressing the same need; movement groups and training courses in body-awareness are springing up on all sides.

As I understand through my own work we are still a long way from finding that naturalness of being "at home" in the body without losing the values some generations before us have struggled for.

Here again the religious attitude is essential.

When I said sex had been for me an ecstatic religious experience this was certainly so because I had never "experimented" before, never "played" with what seemed to me to express my deepest and fullest reality.

I agree with those psychologists who believe that if our whole body were again as in childhood or in primitives alert to the multitudes of sensory stimulation, sex would not play the exaggerated role it does in modern life.

Modern man is not happy and lacks basic satisfactions.

I do not believe that this lack is to be sought in any individual factor, but rather in the alienation that does not allow the body to draw the necessary satisfactions from the environment.

I had very strongly felt the difference between my husband's body and also the children's and my lack and rigidity.

If we artificially separate nature from spirit, our religion, our reaching out for contact with a greater and higher world, automatically becomes one-sided, excluding physical reality.

It was most important for me that in my healing experience through "the Earthmother," my religious imagery ceased to be one-sided.

Yet I still catch myself having inhibitions here and there because of the habit of logic and "patriarchal" imagery.

I was leading a sober and useful life in Zurich and expected to continue in this routine when an entirely new adventure opened.

I was led out of my restricted surroundings to the wide horizons of California.

My elder son was established there.

He had emigrated when a youth of 19 and I had not seen him since.

I had always felt that in some way his rebellion was related to mine, that he had felt my unrest as a boy and my unused energies that pushed toward expression.

While I was fighting my inner battles my boy was trying out his strength in a country of wide possibilities and hard realities.

Now his father who was spending the winter in the sunny climate, fell ill and I came to join him.

The way I was helped to overcome fear, the way I was guided in every respect, was in itself a deep religious experience.

All parts of my varied life seemed to fit into a design of which this new phase and the meeting with my son in his manhood was an integral part.

I began to write my autobiography in the new and vast environment where I had much time alone.

I needed to turn inward.

I gave up my home in Switzerland and put my things in storage doing away with much that I had clung to.

All this was part of the necessary detachment and the effort to come to essentials.

At first I meant my writing as a continuation of my therapeutic work; I thought of writing to an audience.

Then I found that what I wrote was in the first place important for myself.

There was much in my life I had not come to terms with, particularly my analysis with Dr. Jung.

His image stood there like an enormous block hindering me from going on my way.

Formerly I had admired beyond all reason and become a follower without real discrimination.

Then I had become more and more critical and angry, emotionally rejecting and still not having a clear standpoint of my own.

So I entered a long and heated inner battle, reading, thinking, evaluating.

Of course my religious attitude played a primary role in this.

I could not identify with Jung’s psychology, which he seemed to confuse with religion.

Psychology calls itself a science and is therefore based on reason.

I felt that this was too narrow a premise because religion has other dimensions.

Religion means stepping out of our reasonable everyday perception, where we measure and compare and because of our logical language are confronted with opposites that seem to exclude each other.

In our everyday existence in the here and now these conditions exist as the consequence of the limitation of human brains and consciousness.

Yet as one reads religious writings, the New Testament or Zen for instance, one finds contradictory statements which, because of another, wider state of consciousness are not exclusive but complementary.

All mystics describe their experiences in paradoxes.

I suddenly thought of my ecstatic experience of sex, which had been at the same time the greatest fulfillment of self and selflessness, a total giving and a total receiving at the same time.

In religious experience we somehow reach another level.

When I passed from the psychological into a level of wider dimensions, I realized that I had stepped beyond the limitation of the reasoning brain into another quality of experience.

I then also remembered my impression of Dr. Jung, when I had visited him in hospital, as he was recovering from a serious illness that had brought him close to death.

He spoke of his "visions" and how their reality had so captured him that he did not want to return to the restricted earth existence.

As he spoke, I felt another dimension that was not psychology.

I regret that later Dr. Jung tried to fit also these experiences into his psychological theories, saying that his concept of the "collective unconscious" contained everything we do not know, identifying it with religion.

I recognized more and more the limitation of the attempt to express all experience in psychological terms; it is like a two dimensional picture of a many dimensional reality.

I was then reading widely, psychological books and also books attempting to go beyond psychology.

With an intense relief I was able to step into a place of wider dimensions.

At that point I met Dr. and Mrs. Bendit, who were lecturing in the United States and living for a time in California.

Both had had Jungian analysis and had written books separately and together.

With them I found much understanding; they shared my views and were trying to express experience in a much wider context.

They knew, as I did, that some patients are troubled by parapsychological classification.

Psychology cannot help such people, but they need someone who knows that such experiences exist and to whom they can speak openly.

I never could believe that finding the causes of our troubles would produce a solution; for me, understanding a problem was a far cry from being able to tackle it.

It also seems to me quite ineffectual to try to change outer behaviour unless a new basic attitude can be found.

When a person’s attitude changes fundamentally, he then emanates another "atmosphere," so that what he does or says has another connotation.

The same words or deeds then have a totally different effect.

But a fundamental change of attitude can only happen when a person begins to feel differently, when depression and anxiety change to joy and confidence, when the person experiences self value and anticipates happiness.

This is the result of a true religious experience of being in contact with the source of life and feeling in some ways what is described as being "a child of God."

Psychology cannot bring about this change of attitude, yet it may help to eliminate some of the blocks on the way.

I knew that to be really effective to help people I must learn to make contact with the healing powers.

Dr. Jung was right when he kept insisting that the therapist's own personal development was the most important factor.

I had worked at my development and I knew I was growing, but I am very aware how much is lacking.

I can see how many sources of error there are when trying to help people and sometimes one wonders whether often people would not do better to struggle alone; the danger of dependency is very great and people are too passive.

Sometimes I feel as if I stood at a new beginning, almost as when I was a child in the vast unlmown.

As I tolerate this situation I begin to orient myself and it is as when in a dark place gradually the eyes begin to distinguish some contours.

Even as a child I felt I belonged to that invisible world, and now also there is something in me that "knows" and "belongs."

I am convinced there is another kind of knowledge accessible to us, which is beyond the senses and beyond reason.

We have latent faculties which can develop and give access to new knowledge.

I have found it helpful to read about the discoveries of modern science.

A whole revolution has taken place in view of the world as modern science sees it, a change of outlook as great as the one implied by the discovery of the earth as a globe revolving around the sun.

As a result of the discoveries of Einstein and Planck and others, matter and energy are seen as different aspects of one unknown reality.

Time and space are found to be relative, part of a four dimensional aspect of the world.

Where formerly it was believed that man was on the way to more and more knowledge, modern science shows how restricted the human senses are, so that there is a limit to the possibilities of new discoveries, even with more perfected instruments.

Only a tiny fraction of the realities around us can ever reach the senses.

Ancient peoples acquired knowledge through intuition in a way that is lost to us.

Parapsychology is showing that most people have extrasensory faculties that maybe can be developed.

Orientals have developed training systems that give astonishing results.

When we Westerners no more place so much value on material and scientific development, we may also discover new inner powers that can enrich the lives of men.

Many men have in special moments experienced a more inclusive consciousness.

As we cultivate the inner life such wider consciousness can become more frequent and produce a lasting change of attitude, so that we may grow toward a condition of wholeness and fulfillment.   Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Pages 113-123

Joseph B. Wheelwright: An Attempt at Appreciation (2019-11-10 10:03)

I first met Jung in 1931

At that time I was far more conversant with Freud.

In fact, the only thing of Jung's that I had read was his article in Keyserling's symposium on marriage.

But after a few minutes with him it was apparent to me that he was the man with whom I wanted to work.

Like many of the analysts of my age, I originally started work for therapy, not training.

It was only later that the notion of being an analyst myself emerged (Jung always felt, I thing, that one's personal analysis was the most essential part of training.)

From that time on he became the most important man in my life.

His effect upon me was not so much his ideas as it was his quality as a man and his generosity in letting me experience this quality in relation to him.

In my subsequent work with him it was not his interpretations that helped me to find myself and my own way.

Rather, it was his values and attitudes that carried the greatest impact.

Of these, two not unconnected values stand out.

The first was his extraordinary ability to catalyze the health and to favor the growth of the people he worked with.

He made one feel authentic.

The second was his flexibility and tolerance-his relativist position.

In my second or third interview he asked me if I was in the right place.

This rather unnerved me, because I thought at first that it was the prelude to dismissal.

I found, however, that he was exploring the appropriateness of himself for me, rather than that of Freud or Adler, who were the other two giants in the field at that time.

He said none of them had the whole truth; if they had, the other two would be withering on the vine.

On the contrary, he said, they all seemed to be flourishing.

He said, ’We each have our own truth, which seems sympathetic and meaningful to a surprisingly large number of people.

After all, though our work is carefully documented, our concepts are essentially a generalization and an abstraction of our own psychology.

In the last analysis, it is impossible for a man to transcend himself.

This essentially non-doctrinaire attitude of Jung’s has permitted me to feel perfectly free to move around in all sorts of psychological climates.

This has been a great boon, and has helped me to synthesize various ideas and to find my own style as an analyst.

Paradoxically, I have come to feel more Jungian because of it; he never withdrew his sanction because of my apparent eclecticism.

In sum, then, Jung conferred the gifts of authenticity and freedom on those who were lucky enough to work with him.

I cannot imagine a more significant contribution.   Joseph Wheelwright, Contact with Jung, Pages 224-225

Tina Keller-Jenny’s “Letter to her Children” (2019-11-11 04:34)

Tina Keller-Jenny’s “Letter to her Children”

"I have dedicated this autobiography to you, with my love and prayers.

Some of you will remember the difficult times, where your mother seemed preoccupied, in trouble, when no one could help.

As I wrote this, much has clarified and I recommend warmly, that anyone who feels certain parts of his life to be still weighing on him, like undigested food, that he write out the experiences and wrestle with them, till he feels at peace.

There were all the mistakes I had committed and I was regretful or angry about.

Gradually I learnt, that there is nothing to regret, ignorance and errors made new learning possible.

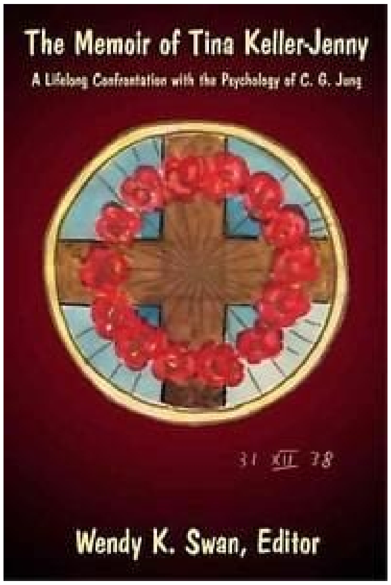
I had a very difficult, but rich life and I am very grateful.

One of the strongest motivations in my struggles was the conviction that what I left undone out of negligence would become a burden for my children.

Dr. Jung was very insistent that as parents follow their own paths of development, children become free for their own growth.

So I believe that by doing the best I could to solve my own problems, I was doing the best I could for my children.

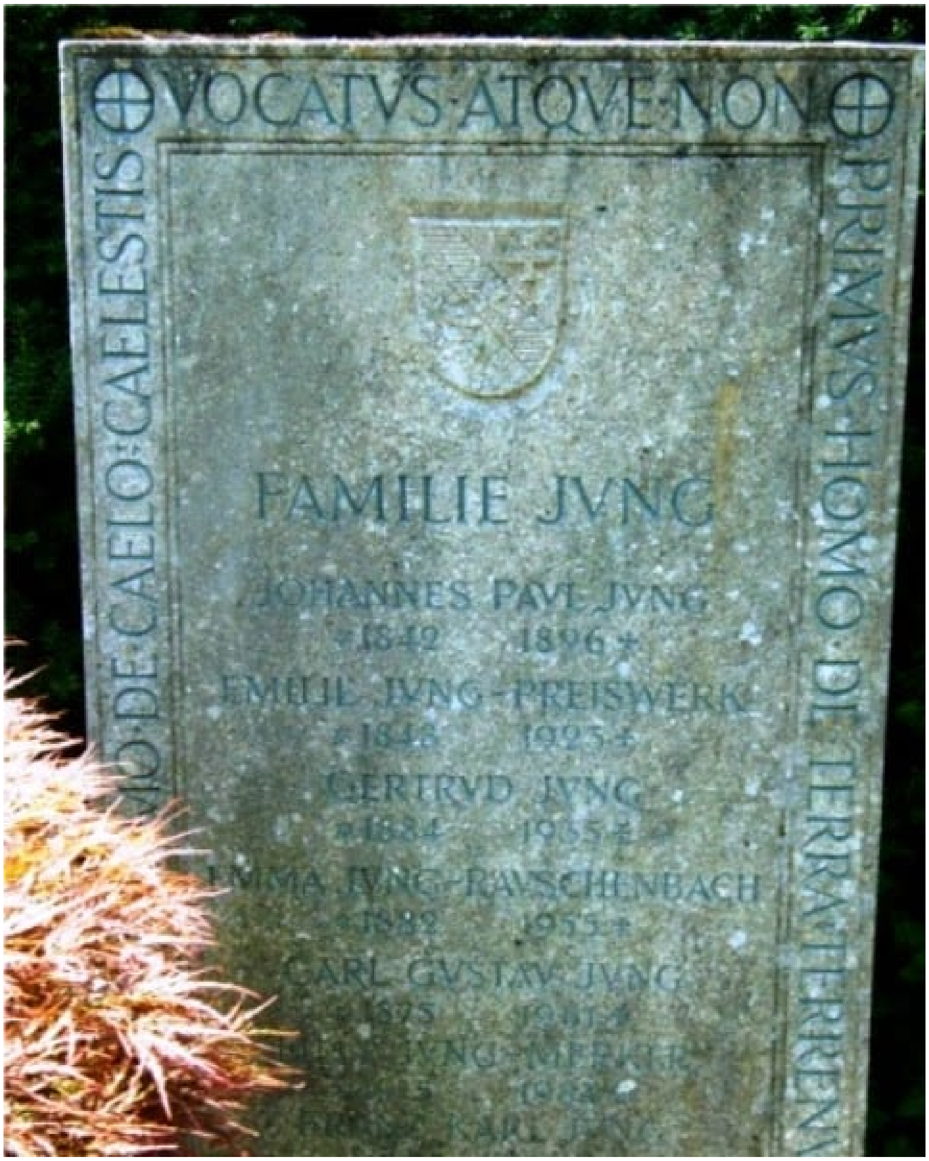
May it bring them blessings!" Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoir, Page 138.



The Memoir of Tina Keller-Jenny
A Lifelong Confrontation with the Psychology of C. G. Jung
31 XII 38
Wendy K. Swan, Editor

Carl Jung's Epitaph (2019-11-11 04:44)

[1]



VOCATVS·ATQVE·NON
PRIMVS·HOMO·DE·TERRA·TERREN
DE·CAELO·CAELESTIS
FAMILIE JVNG
JOHANNES PAVL JVNG
1842 1896
EMILIE JVNG-PREISWERK
1848 1923
GERTRVD JVNG
1884 1935
EMMA JVNG-RAVSCHENBACH
1882 1955
CARL GVSTAV JVNG
1875 1961
JVNG-MERKER
KARL JVNG

[Carl Jung’s Epitaph]

PRIMUS
HOMO
DE TERRA
TERRENUS
"The first man comes from the earth and is of the earth;" [Left Side Panel]

VOCATUS ATQUE
NON VOCATUS
DEUS ADERIT
"Invoked or not invoked, the god is present." [Center Panel]

SECUNDUS
HOMO DE
CAELO
CAELESTIS
"The second man comes from heaven and is of heaven." [Right Side Panel]

Image: Jung’s family grave at the Protestant Church Graveyard in Kusnacht. The gravestone bears the arms of the Jung family, and beneath this the names of father, mother, sister Gertrud, wife Emma Jung-Rauschenbach, and C.G. Jung.

The top and bottom borders repeat in Latin the motto he chose for his house "Vocatus atque non vocatus deus aderit" (Called or not called, God will be present)

(photo courtesy of David Tacey)

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/9e30b-grave.jpg`

Carl Jung on the Shattered Knife (2019-11-11 04:47)

[1]

During the summer holidays, however, something happened that was destined to influence me profoundly. One day I was sitting in my room, studying my textbooks. In the adjoining room, the door to which stood ajar, my mother was knitting.

That was our dining room, where the round walnut dining table stood. The table had come from the dowry of my paternal grandmother, and was at this time about seventy years old. My mother was sitting by the window, about a yard away from the table.

My sister was at school and our maid in the kitchen. Suddenly there sounded a report like a pistol shot. I jumped up and rushed into the room from which the noise of the explosion had come. My mother was sitting flabbergasted in her armchair, the knitting fallen from her hands. She stammered out, "W-w-what’s happened? It was right beside mel" and stared at the table.

Following her eyes, I saw what had happened. The table top had split from the rim to beyond the center, and not along any joint; the split ran right through the solid wood. I was thunderstruck.

How could such a thing happen? A table of solid walnut that had dried out for seventy years–how could it split on a summer day in the relatively high degree of humidity characteristic of our climate? If it had stood next to a heated stove on a cold, dry winter day, then it might have been conceivable.

What in the world could have caused such an explosion? "There certainly are curious accidents," I thought. My mother nodded darkly. "Yes, yes," she said in her No. 2 voice, "that means something." Against my will I was impressed and annoyed with myself for not finding anything to say.

Some two weeks later I came home at six o’clock in the evening and found the household–my mother, my fourteen-year–old sister, and the maid–in a great state of agitation. About an hour earlier there had been another deafening report.

This time it was not the already damaged table; the noise had come from the direction of the sideboard, a heavy piece of furniture dating from the early nineteenth century. They had already looked all over it, but had found no trace of a split. I immediately began examining the sideboard and the entire surrounding area, but just as fruitlessly.

Then I began on the interior of the sideboard. In the cupboard containing the bread basket I found a loaf of bread, and, beside it, the bread knife. The greater part of the blade had snapped off in several pieces. The handle lay in one corner of the rectangular basket, and in each of the other corners lay a piece of the blade.

The knife had been used shortly before, at four-o’clock tea, and afterward put away. Since then no one had gone to the sideboard. The next day I took the shattered knife to one of the best cutlers in the town. He examined the fractures with a magnifying glass, and shook his head. "This knife is perfectly sound," he said. "There is no fault in the steel. Someone must have deliberately broken it piece by piece.

It could be done, for instance, by sticking the blade into the crack of the drawer and - breaking off a piece at a time. Or else it might have been dropped on stone from a great height. But good steel can’t explode. Someone has been pulling your leg." I have carefully kept the pieces of the knife to this day. My mother and my sister had been in the room when the sudden report made them jump.

My mother’s No. 2 looked at me meaningfully, but I could find nothing to say. I was completely at a loss and could offer no explanation of what had happened, and this was all the more annoying as I had to admit that I was profoundly impressed. Why and how had the table split and the knife shattered?

The hypothesis that it was just a coincidence went much too far. It seemed highly improbable to me that the Rhine would flow backward just once, by mere chance–and all other possible explanations were automatically ruled out. So what was it?

A few weeks later I heard of certain relatives who had been engaged for some time in table-turning, and also had a medium, a young girl of fifteen and a half. The group had been thinking of having me meet the medium, who produced somnambulistic states and spiritualistic phenomena.

When I heard this, I immediately thought of the strange manifestations in our house, and I conjectured that they might be somehow connected with this medium. I therefore began attending the regular seances which my relatives held every Saturday evening. We had results in the form of communications and tapping noises from the walls and the table.

Movements of the table independently of the medium were questionable, and I soon found out that limiting conditions imposed on the experiment generally had an obstructive effect. I therefore accepted the obvious autonomy of the tapping noises and turned my attention to the content of the communications. I set forth the results of these observations in my doctoral thesis. After about two years of experimentation we all became rather weary of it.

I caught the medium trying to produce phenomena by trickery, and this made me break off the experiments–very much to my regret, for I had learned from this example how a No. 2 personality is formed, how it enters into a child's consciousness and finally integrates it into itself.

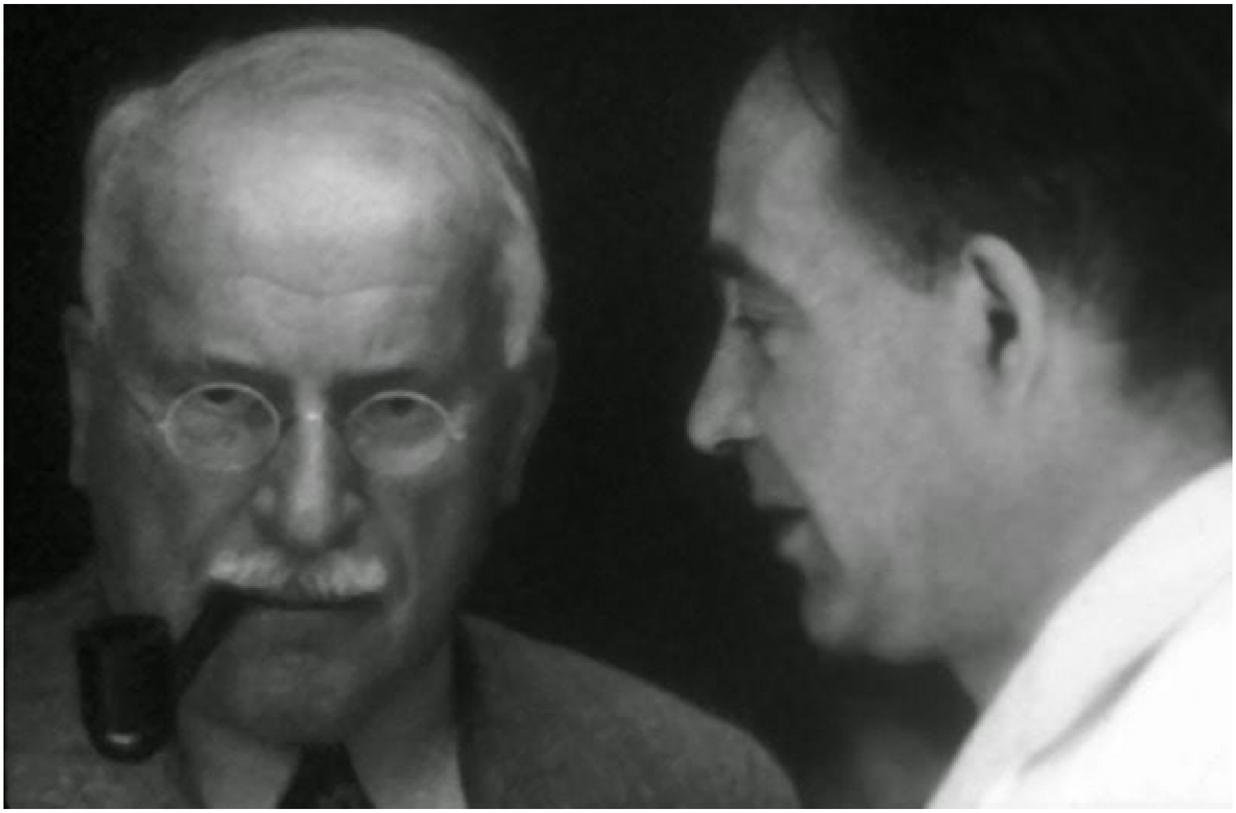
She was one of these precociously matured personalities, and she died of tuberculosis at the age of twenty-six. I saw her once again, when she was twenty-four, and received a lasting impression of the independence and maturity of her personality. After her death I learned from her family that during the last months of her life her character disintegrated bit by bit, and that ultimately she returned to the state of a two-year-old child, in which condition she fell into her last sleep.

All in all, this was the one great experience which wiped out all my earlier philosophy and made it possible for me to achieve a psychological point of view. I had discovered some objective facts about the human psyche. Yet the nature of the experience was such that once again I was unable to speak of it. I knew no one to whom I could have told the whole story. Once more I had to lay aside an unfinished problem. It was not until two years later that my dissertation appeared. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections.

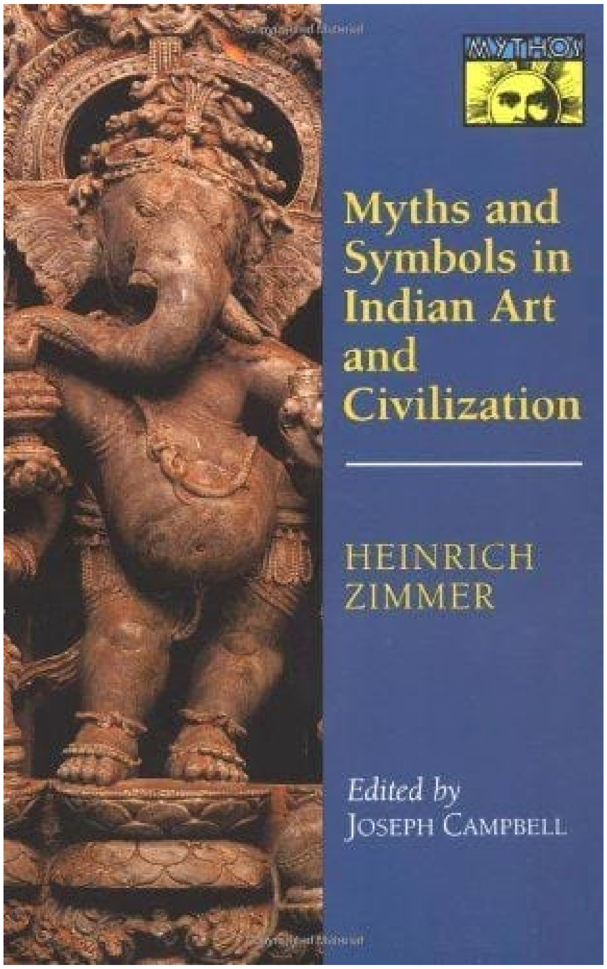
1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/c121f-knife.jpg`

Heinrich Zimmer Books [Jungian] (2019-11-11 04:49)

[1]



[2]



[3]Buy Book at Amazon here

[4] Philosophies of India
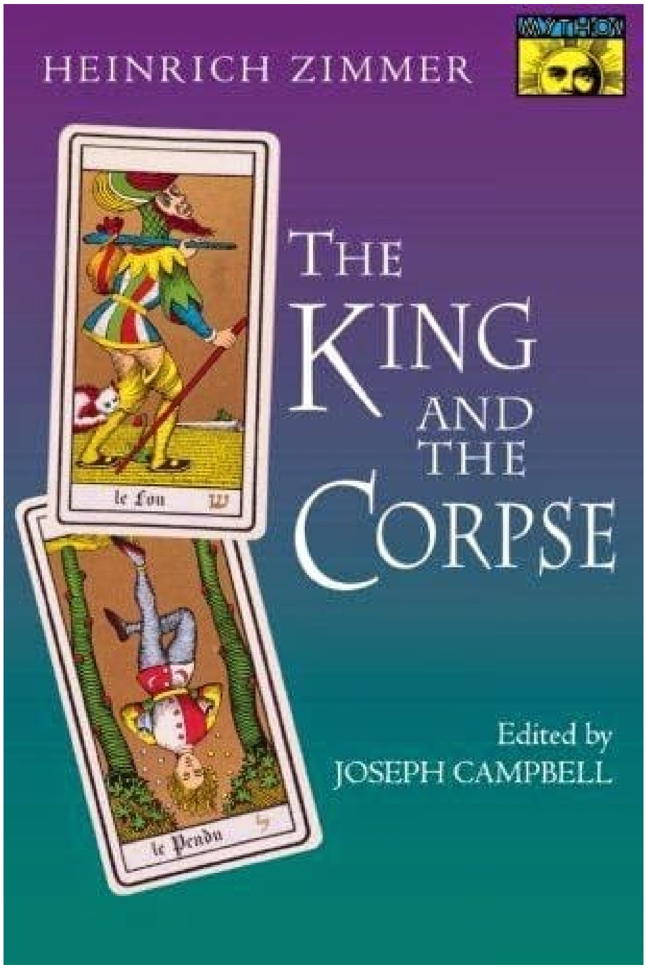
BY HEINRICH ZIMMER
EDITED BY JOSEPH CAMPBELL
BOLLINGEN SERIES / PRINCETON

[5]Buy book at Amazon here

[6]



HEINRICH ZIMMER
MYTHOS
THE KING AND THE CORPSE le Fou
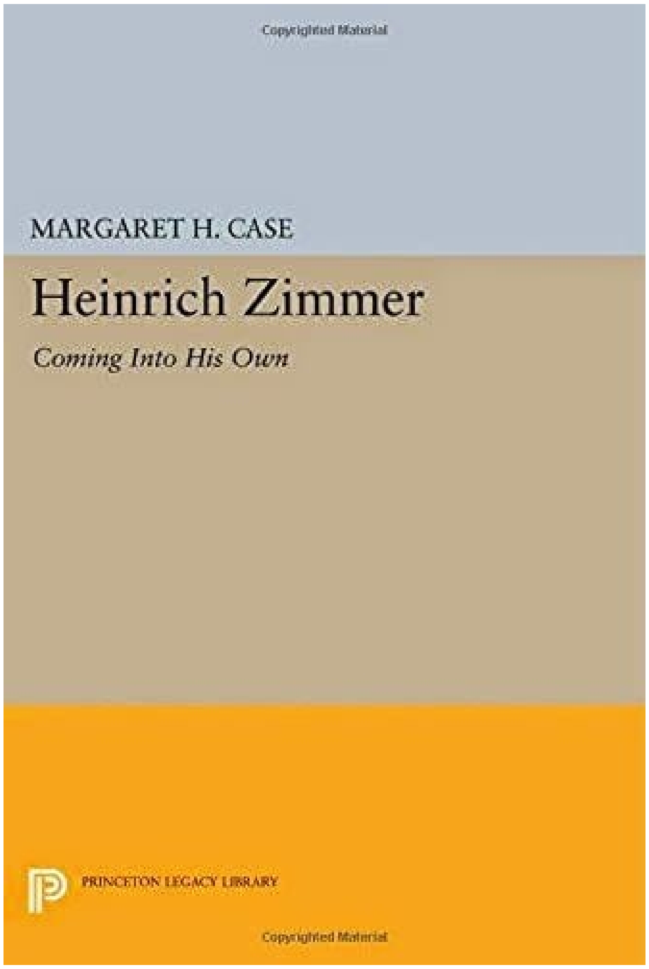
le Pendu
Edited by
JOSEPH CAMPBELL

[7]Buy at Amazon here

[8]



Copyrighted Material

MARGARET H. CASE

Heinrich Zimmer

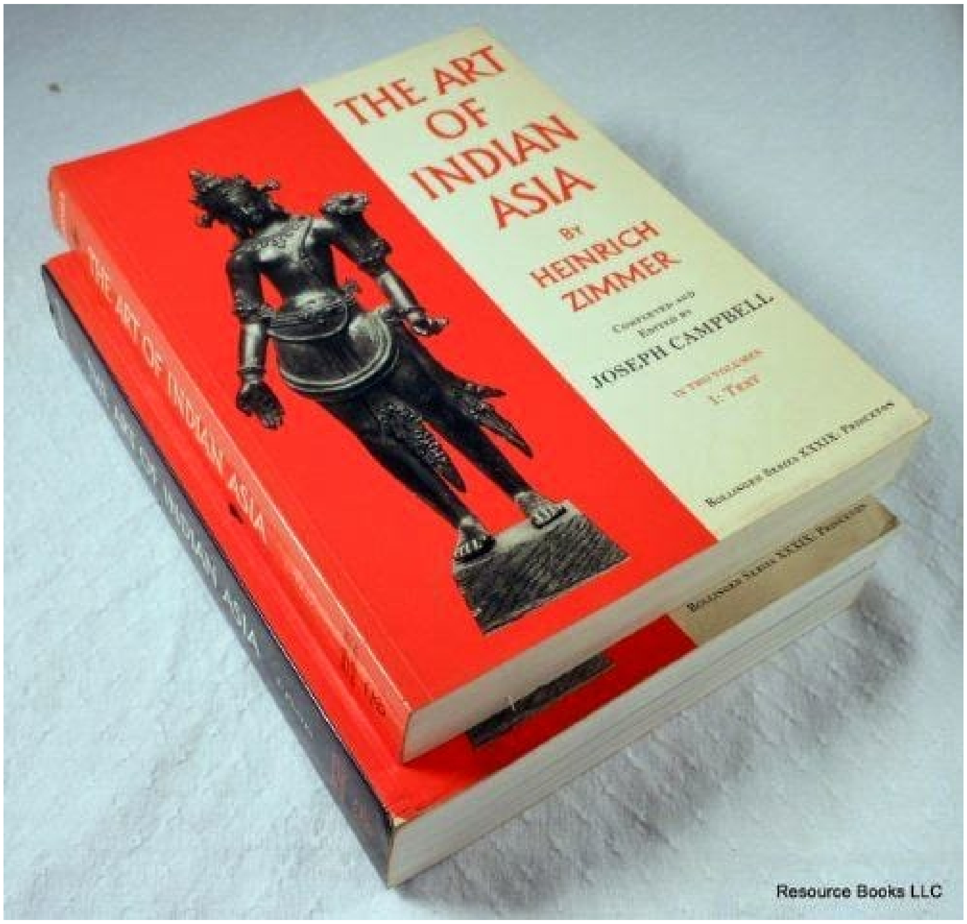
Coming Into His Own

PRINCETON LEGACY LIBRARY

Copyrighted Material

[9]Buy at Amazon here

[10]



THE ART OF INDIAN ASIA
BY
HEINRICH ZIMMER
COMPLETED AND EDITED BY
JOSEPH CAMPBELL
IN TWO VOLUMES
I: TEXT
BOLLINGEN SERIES XXXIX · PRINCETON
Resource Books LLC

[11]Buy at Amazon here

[12]Books by Heinrich Zimmer

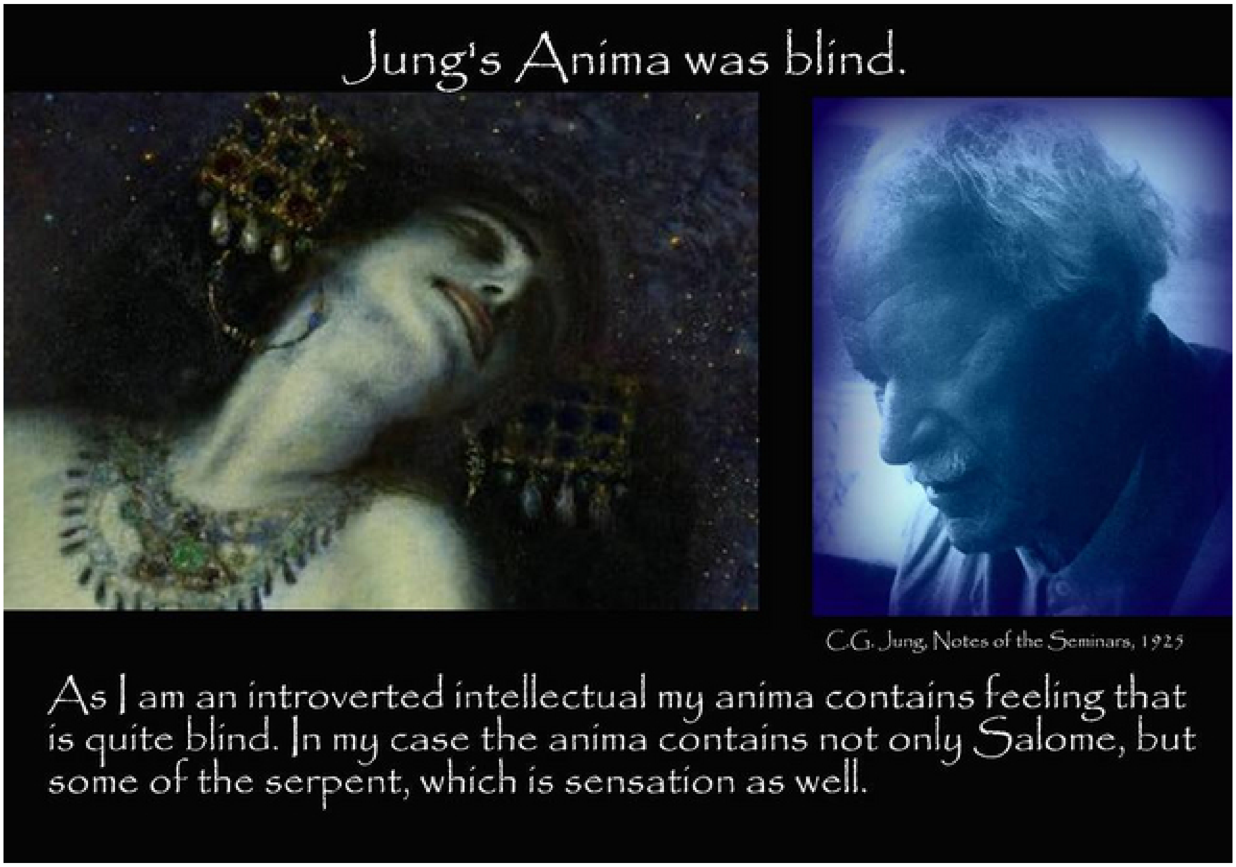
1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/18bb9-4.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b4ef6-1.jpg`
3. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691017786/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_aLuyub1J581HH`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/debab-2.jpg`
5. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691017581/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_QKuyub0SVS6FZ`

6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/691b3-3.jpg`
7. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/069101776X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_rKuyub171MQ30`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/c72d7-4.jpg`
9. `file://www.amazon.com/dp/0691604029/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_WLuyub1PXPH6W`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/0e5a4-5.jpg`
11. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691018464/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_ELuyub13VAN24`
12. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/heinrich-zimmer-books-jungian.html`

Carl Jung: As I am an introverted intellectual my anima contains feeling [that is] quite blind.

(2019-11-11 04:53)

[1]



Jung's Anima was blind.

C.G. Jung, Notes of the Seminars, 1925

As I am an introverted intellectual my anima contains feeling that is quite blind. In my case the anima contains not only Salome, but some of the serpent, which is sensation as well.

We like to think that with moral ideas we can direct our lives, but these things do not catch; if they did we would have been all right long ago.

Moral views do not touch the collective unconscious.

Within the realm of willpower we have choice, but beyond that no choice at all.

The black serpent symbolizes the introverting libido.

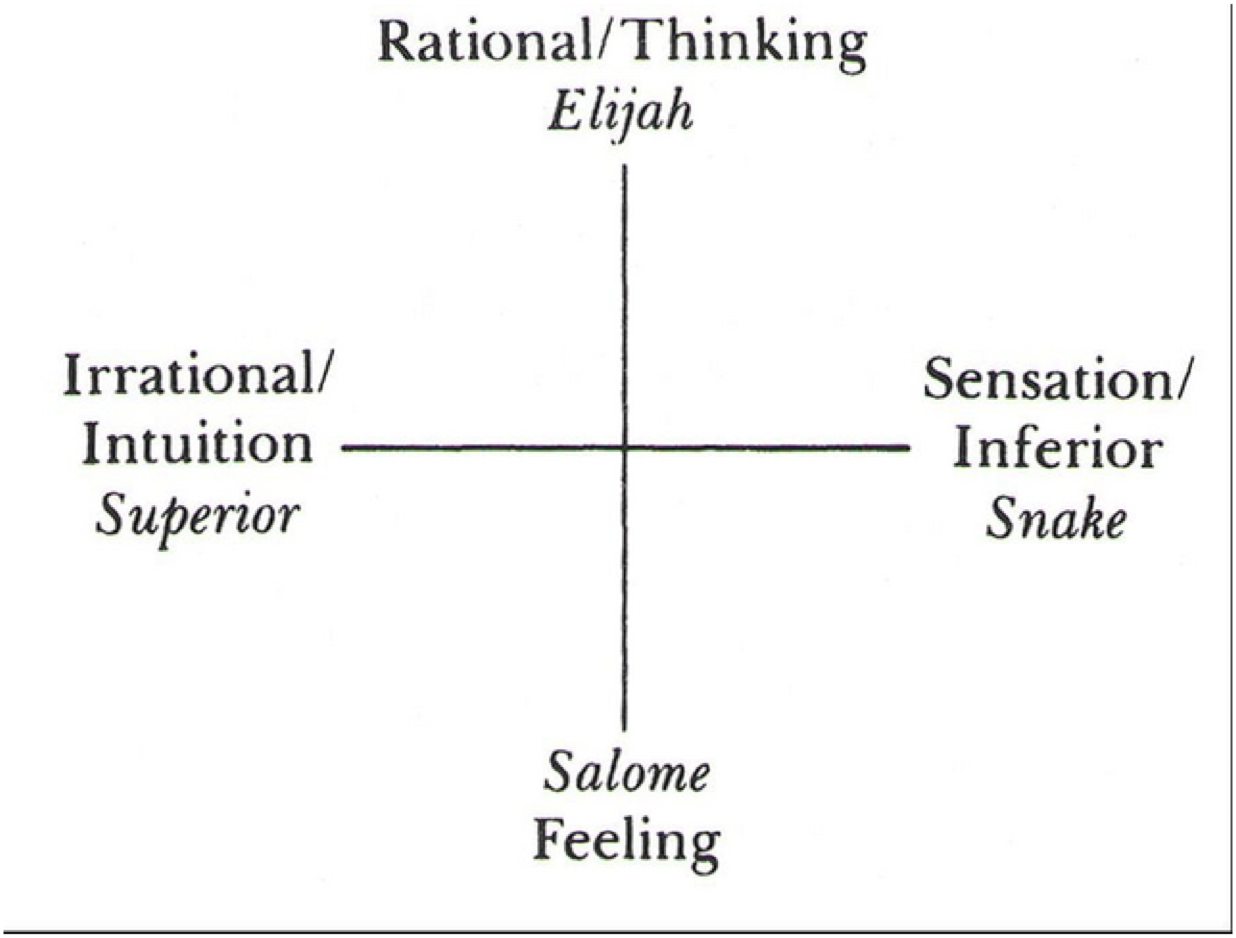
Salome is the anima and Elijah the wise old man. Salome, being instinctive and quite blind, needs the fore-seeing eyes of wisdom that Elijah possesses.

The figure of the prophet is compensatory to that of the blind anima.

As I am an introverted intellectual my anima contains feeling [that is] quite blind.

In my case the anima contains not only Salome, but some of the serpent, which is sensation as well.

[2]



Rational/Thinking
Elijah Irrational/Intuition
Superior
Sensation/Inferior
Snake
Salome
Feeling

As you remember, the real Salome was involved in incestuous relations with Herod, her stepfather, and it was because of the latter’s love for her that she was able to get the head of John the Baptist. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 99-100.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http://www.blogger.com/home

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

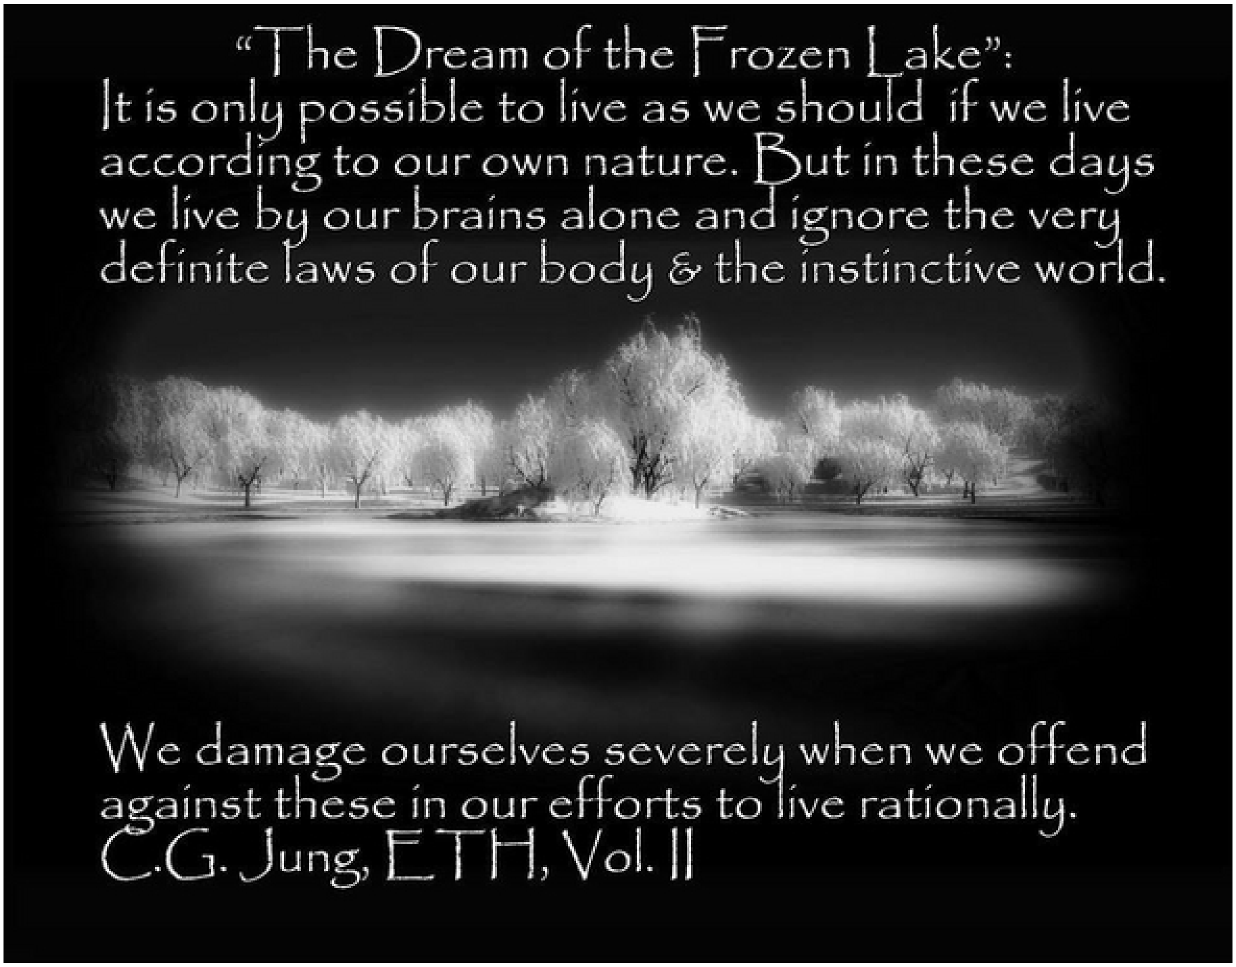
Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/b01b2-1anima2bblind.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/eb9bf-1salomee.jpg`

Carl Jung: It is only possible to live as we should if we live according to our own nature. (2019-11-11 04:55)

[1]



"The Dream of the Frozen Lake":
It is only possible to live as we should if we live according to our own nature. But in these days we live by our brains alone and ignore the very definite laws of our body & the instinctive world.

We damage ourselves severely when we offend against these in our efforts to live rationally.
C.G. Jung, ETH, Vol. II

Our starting point is the lake which is a mirroring surface hiding the unconscious.

We come to a lake or a pond in almost every journey to the underworld.

There are many mediaeval examples of this, lakes and forests are both symbols for secret depths where unknown beings live.

Francesco Colonna, a monk of the 13th century, wrote Hypnerotomachia, which means the dreamlove-conflict; it is written in dream form and contains a descent into the underworld of the psyche.

Hypnerotomachia opens in the Black Forest and a famous example of the same theme is to be found in Dante's Divine Comedy which also opens in a wood.

Animals appear in both but whereas the wolf leads the way in Hypnerotomachia, in the Divine Comedy Dante is afraid of the animals.

The animal which appears in our phantasy is a black snake, a sufficiently alarming sight but our patient is not afraid for she regards it as a "mere phantasy and therefore quite harmless".

If she had remained an onlooker it would have been as if Dante had watched the animals in the wood remarking: "Oh, there are some animals walking about" in which case there would have been no Divine Comedy.

But at this point the patient fortunately remembered that I had told her she should be in the phantasies herself.

She had, it is true, a quite remarkable talent for keeping life away from herself, so now she looked away from the snake, out over the lake which was, appropriately, frozen.

The snake has the character of the underworld par excellence, it is chthonic, peculiarly of the earth, sinister and alarming.

Her psyche is pointing out to her that something which is exceedingly unpleasant to her can approach from her own unconscious.

We constantly forget how far we have got from our own inner law and this revenges itself upon us with a neurosis, or digestive disturbances, which should make clear to us that "we have made out the bill without the host".

It is only possible to live as we should if we live according to our own nature.

But in these days we live by our brains alone and ignore the very definite laws of our body and the instinctive world.

We damage ourselves severely when we offend against these, and this is what our patient has done in her efforts to live rationally. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture, 7 June 1935.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http://www.blogger.com/home

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/d96d7-1frozen.jpg`

C.G. Jung’s Preface to Proposed English Edition to Tina Keller’s Keller-Jenny’s “L’Ame et les Nerfi”

(2019-11-11 05:13)

C.G. Jung’s Preface to Proposed English Edition to Tina Keller’s Keller-Jenny’s “L’Ame et les Nerfi”

"Mrs. Keller’s book is an unpretentious introduction to the understanding of nervous disorders.

A ceaseless and limitless talk about psychology has inundated the world in the last 20 years, but it has not as yet produced a noticeable improvement of the psychological outlook and attitude.

Laymen, as well as scientists, are bewildered by the luxuriant growth of theoretical standpoints, and by a maze of unbalanced propositions.

This state of things is not particularly helpful, although one cannot see how it could be avoided. It complicates things, instead of making them simpler, whereas simplicity is the very root of human understanding.

Simplicity of mind prevents fatal deviations from the instinctual pattern, and makes it possible to keep aloof from the temptation of intellectual escapades.

As there are no mental safeguards against going astray in the chaos of psychological possibilities, one has to depend upon the sound functioning of one’s instincts.

But such functioning demands simplicity, particularly when it comes to practical issues, such as education and psychotherapy.

Scientific books about psychology are relatively good for the psychological expert, but they are harmful to the layman, who is more in need of a psychological attitude than of theories.

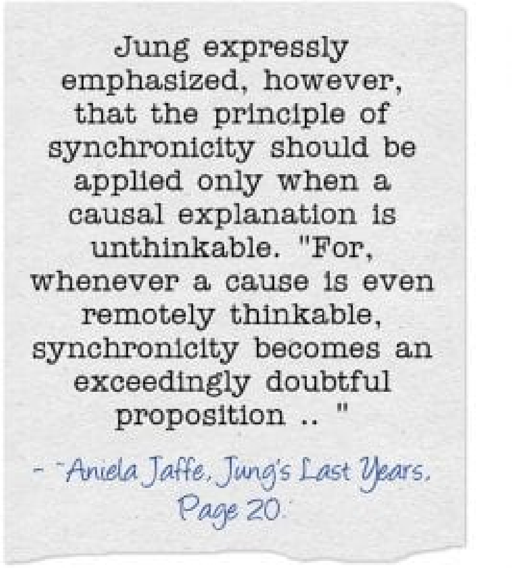
There are not too many books, which try to confer the psychological turn of mind rather than so-called scientific knowledge.

It is the most destructive thing, in practical situations, to depend upon "scientific" statements and to look up your case in the psychological text-book.

But you need your instincts and all the simplicity of mind and heart you can afford.

In that respect the public needs some education; and I hope that Mrs. Keller’s book will provide its readers with impressions that will help them in discovering the mood, attitude or atmosphere of psychological perception and decision. C. G. Jung, Tina Keller Memoirs, Pages 140-141

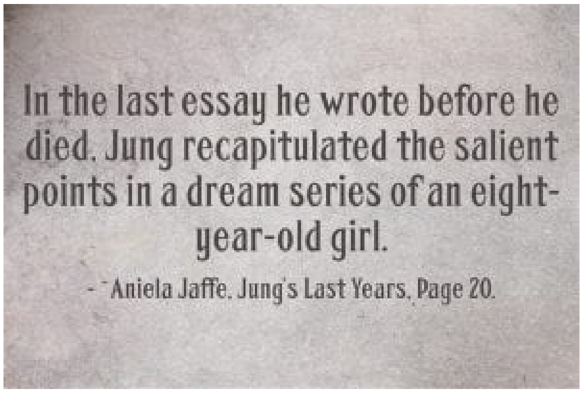
Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-11-11 05:21)



Jung expressly emphasized, however, that the principle of synchronicity should be applied only when a causal explanation is unthinkable. "For, whenever a cause is even remotely thinkable, synchronicity becomes an exceedingly doubtful proposition .. "

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 20.

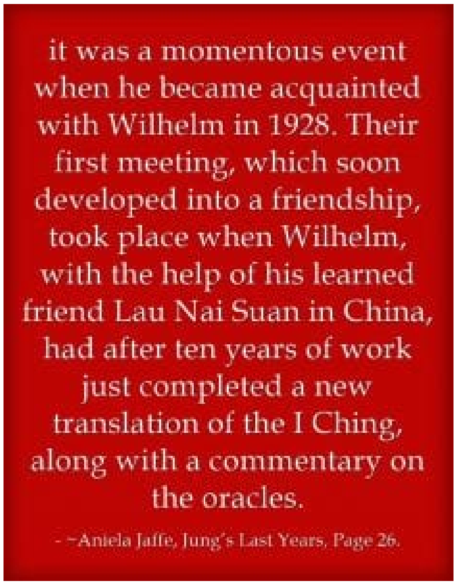
Jung expressly emphasized, however, that the principle of synchronicity should be applied only when a causal explanation is unthinkable. "For, whenever a cause is even remotely thinkable, synchronicity becomes an exceedingly doubtful proposition .. " Aniela Jaffe, Jung’s Last Years, Page 20.



In the last essay he wrote before he died, Jung recapitulated the salient points in a dream series of an eight-year-old girl.

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 20.

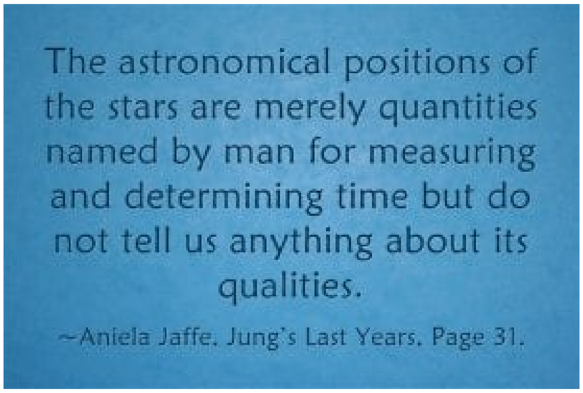
In the last essay he wrote before he died, Jung recapitulated the salient points in a dream series of an eight-year-old girl. Aniela Jaffe, Jung’s Last Years, Page 20.



it was a momentous event when he became acquainted with Wilhelm in 1928. Their first meeting, which soon developed into a friendship, took place when Wilhelm, with the help of his learned friend Lau Nai Suan in China, had after ten years of work just completed a new translation of the I Ching, along with a commentary on the oracles.

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 26.

it was a momentous event when he became acquainted with Wilhelm in 1928. Their first meeting, which soon developed into a friendship, took place when Wilhelm, with the help of his learned friend Lau Nai Suan in China, had after ten years of work just completed a new translation of the I Ching, along with a commentary on the oracles. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 26.



The astronomical positions of the stars are merely quantities named by man for measuring and determining time but do not tell us anything about its qualities.

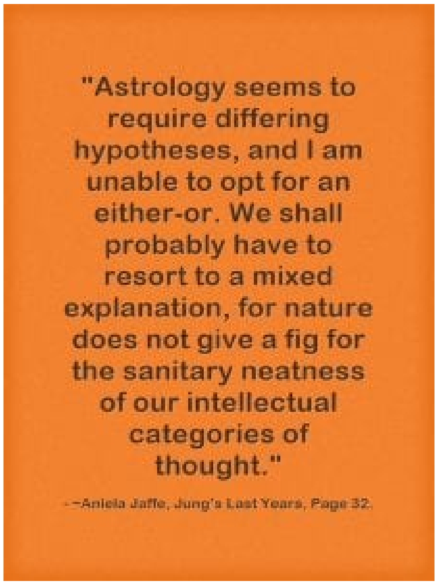
~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 31.

The astronomical positions of the stars are merely quantities named by man for measuring and determining time but do not tell us anything about its qualities. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 31.

He [Jung] pointed out that the proton radiation from the sun is influenced to such a degree by the conjunctions, oppositions, and quartile aspects of the planets that the occurrence of electromagnetic storms (sunspot periods) can be predicted with a fair amount of probability. The astronomical positions of the stars are merely quantities named by man for measuring and determining time but do not tell us anything about its qualities.

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 32.

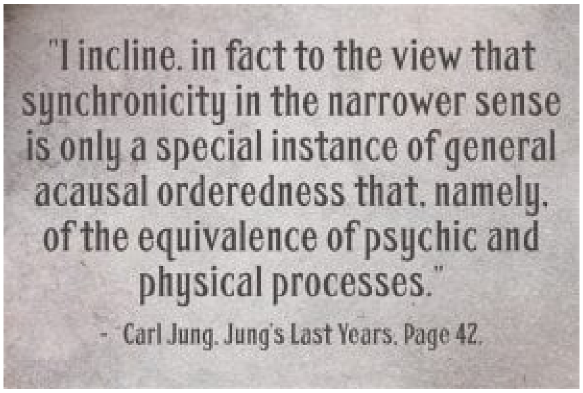
He [Jung] pointed out that the proton radiation from the sun is influenced to such a degree by the conjunctions, oppositions, and quartile aspects of the planets that the occurrence of electromagnetic storms (sunspot periods) can be predicted with a fair amount of probability. The astronomical positions of the stars are merely quantities named by man for measuring and determining time but do not tell us anything about its qualities. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 32.



"Astrology seems to require differing hypotheses, and I am unable to opt for an either-or. We shall probably have to resort to a mixed explanation, for nature does not give a fig for the sanitary neatness of our intellectual categories of thought."

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 32.

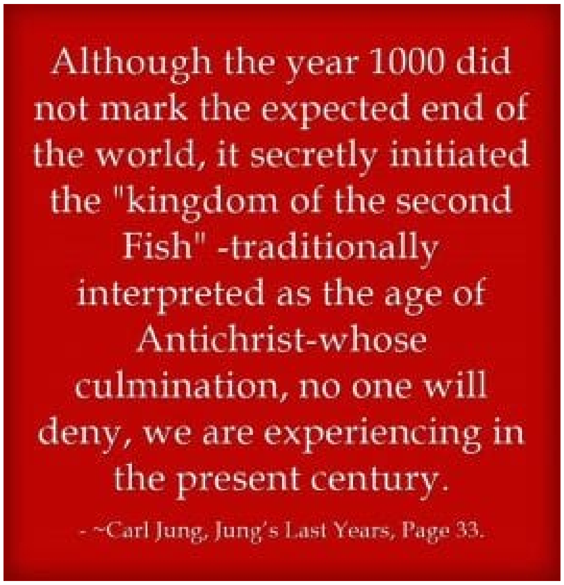
"Astrology seems to require differing hypotheses, and I am unable to opt for an either-or. We shall probably have to resort to a mixed explanation, for nature does not give a fig for the sanitary neatness of our intellectual categories of thought." Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 32.



"I incline. in fact to the view that synchronicity in the narrower sense is only a special instance of general acausal orderedness that. namely. of the equivalence of psychic and physical processes."

- Carl Jung. Jung's Last Years. Page 42.

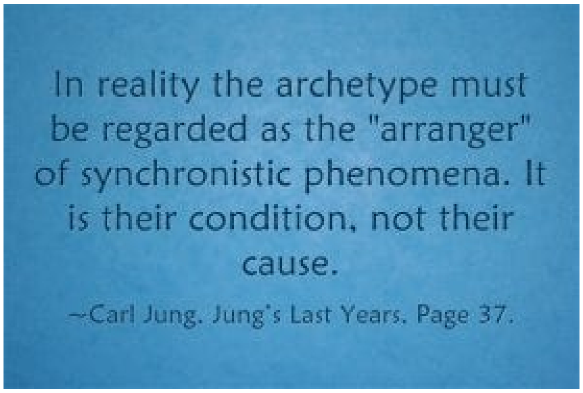
"I incline. in fact to the view that synchronicity in the narrower sense is only a special instance of general acausal orderedness that, namely, of the equivalence of psychic and physical processes." Carl Jung, Jung’s Last Years, Page 42.



Although the year 1000 did not mark the expected end of the world, it secretly initiated the "kingdom of the second Fish" -traditionally interpreted as the age of Antichrist-whose culmination, no one will deny, we are experiencing in the present century.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 33.

Although the year 1000 did not mark the expected end of the world, it secretly initiated the "kingdom of the second Fish" -traditionally interpreted as the age of Antichrist-whose culmination, no one will deny, we are experiencing in the present century. Aniela Jaffe, Jung’s Last Years, Page 33



In reality the archetype must be regarded as the "arranger" of synchronistic phenomena. It is their condition. not their cause.

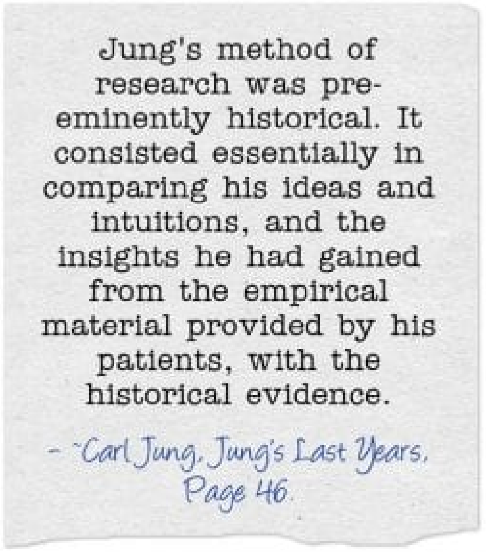
~Carl Jung. Jung's Last Years. Page 37.

In reality the archetype must be regarded as the "arranger" of synchronistic phenomena. It is their condition, not their cause. Aniela Jaffe, Jung’s Last Years, Page 37.

Even in apparently banal synchronistic events it is possible in most cases to uncover the organizing archetype.

~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 38.

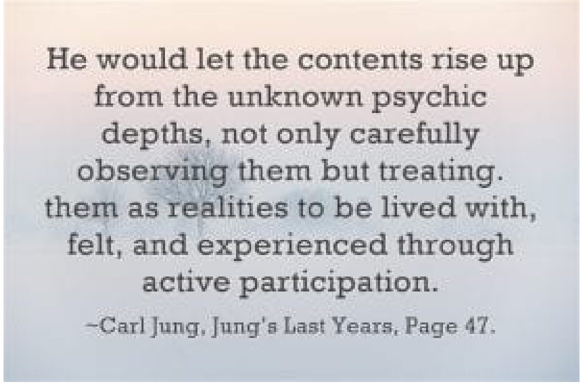
Even in apparently banal synchronistic events it is possible in most cases to uncover the organizing archetype. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 38.



Jung's method of research was pre-eminently historical. It consisted essentially in comparing his ideas and intuitions, and the insights he had gained from the empirical material provided by his patients, with the historical evidence.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 46.

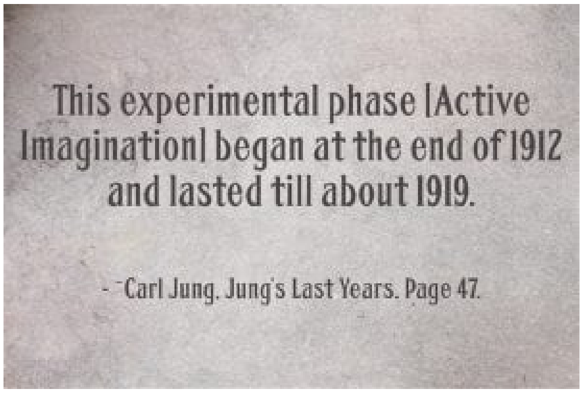
Jung's method of research was pre-eminently historical. It consisted essentially in comparing his ideas and intuitions, and the insights he had gained from the empirical material provided by his patients, with the historical evidence. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 46.



He would let the contents rise up from the unknown psychic depths, not only carefully observing them but treating. them as realities to be lived with, felt, and experienced through active participation.

~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 47.

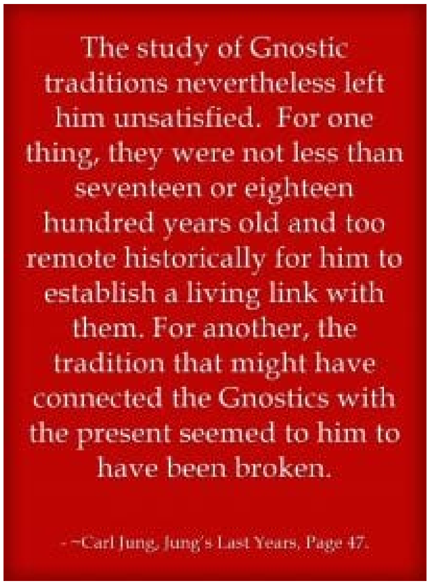
He would let the contents rise up from the unknown psychic depths, not only carefully observing them but treating. them as realities to be lived with, felt, and experienced through active participation. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 47.



This experimental phase [Active Imagination] began at the end of 1912 and lasted till about 1919.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years. Page 47.

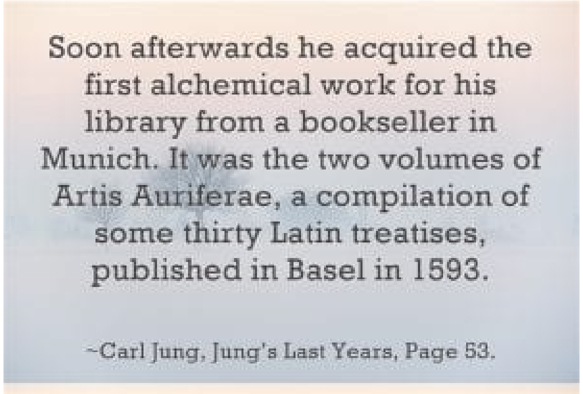
This experimental phase began at the end of 1912 and lasted till about 1919. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 47.



The study of Gnostic traditions nevertheless left him unsatisfied. For one thing, they were not less than seventeen or eighteen hundred years old and too remote historically for him to establish a living link with them. For another, the tradition that might have connected the Gnostics with the present seemed to him to have been broken.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 47.

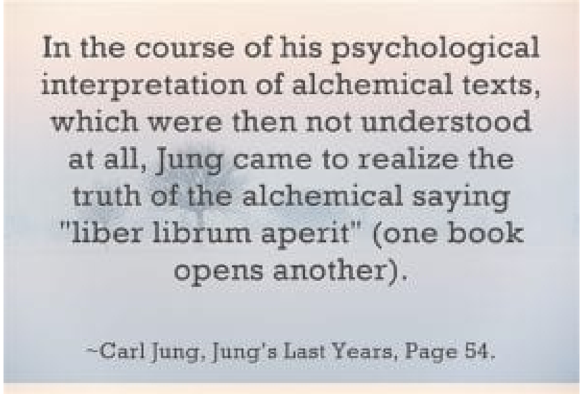
The study of Gnostic traditions nevertheless left him unsatisfied. For one thing, they were not less than seventeen or eighteen hundred years old and too remote historically for him to establish a living link with them. For another, the tradition that might have connected the Gnostics with the present seemed to him to have been broken. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 47.



Soon afterwards he acquired the first alchemical work for his library from a bookseller in Munich. It was the two volumes of Artis Auriferae, a compilation of some thirty Latin treatises, published in Basel in 1593.

~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 53.

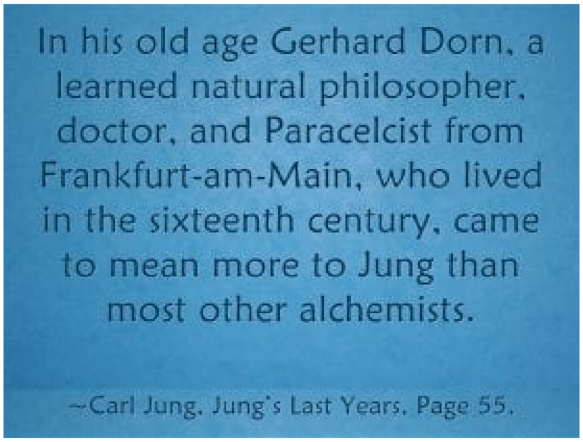
Soon afterwards he acquired the first alchemical work for his library from a bookseller in Munich. It was the two volumes of Artis Auriferae, a compilation of some thirty Latin treatises, published in Basel in 1593. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 53.



In the course of his psychological interpretation of alchemical texts, which were then not understood at all, Jung came to realize the truth of the alchemical saying "liber librum aperit" (one book opens another).

~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 54.

In the course of his psychological interpretation of alchemical texts, which were then not understood at all, Jung came to realize the truth of the alchemical saying "liber librum aperit" (one book opens another). Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 54.



In his old age Gerhard Dorn, a learned natural philosopher, doctor, and Paracelcist from Frankfurt-am-Main, who lived in the sixteenth century, came to mean more to Jung than most other alchemists.

~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 55.

In his old age Gerhard Dorn, a learned natural philosopher, doctor, and Paracelcist from Frankfurt-am-Main, who lived in the sixteenth century, came to mean more to Jung than most other alchemists. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 55.

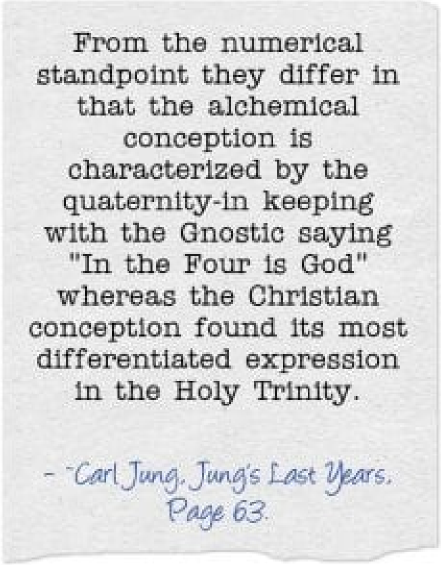
The Book of Krates (ninth century) presents the whole alchemical doctrine in the form of a dream.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 58.

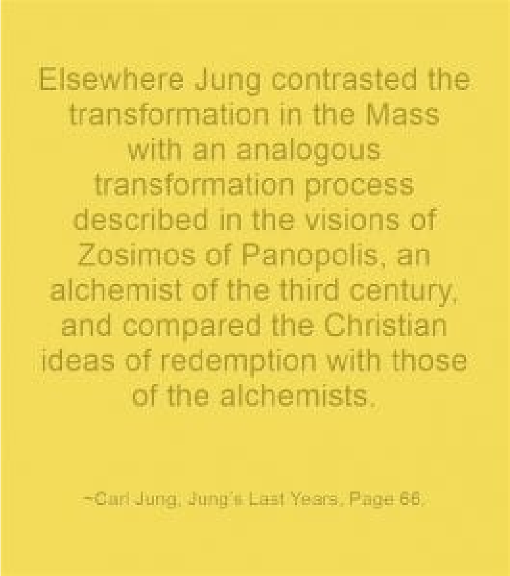
The Book of Krates (ninth century) presents the whole alchemical doctrine in the form of a dream. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 58.



From the numerical standpoint they differ in that the alchemical conception is characterized by the quaternity-in keeping with the Gnostic saying "In the Four is God" whereas the Christian conception found its most differentiated expression in the Holy Trinity.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 63.

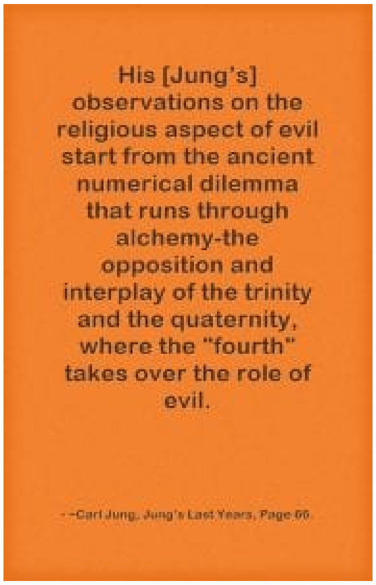
From the numerical standpoint they differ in that the alchemical conception is characterized by the quaternity-in keeping with the Gnostic saying "In the Four is God" whereas the Christian conception found its most differentiated expression in the Holy Trinity. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 63.



Elsewhere Jung contrasted the transformation in the Mass with an analogous transformation process described in the visions of Zosimos of Panopolis, an alchemist of the third century, and compared the Christian ideas of redemption with those of the alchemists.

~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 66.

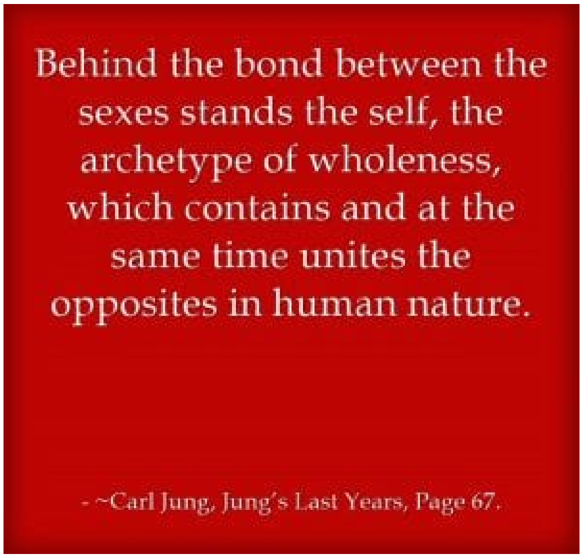
Elsewhere Jung contrasted the transformation in the Mass with an analogous transformation process described in the visions of Zosimos of Panopolis, an alchemist of the third century, and compared the Christian ideas of redemption with those of the alchemists. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 66.



His [Jung's] observations on the religious aspect of evil start from the ancient numerical dilemma that runs through alchemy-the opposition and interplay of the trinity and the quaternity, where the "fourth" takes over the role of evil.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 66.

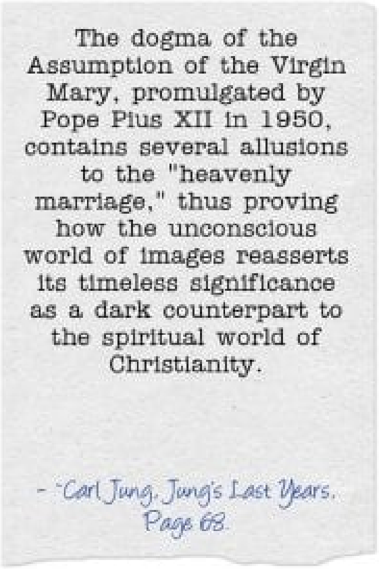
His [Jung's] observations on the religious aspect of evil start from the ancient numerical dilemma that runs through alchemy-the opposition and interplay of the trinity and the quaternity, where the "fourth" takes over the role of evil. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 66.



Behind the bond between the sexes stands the self, the archetype of wholeness, which contains and at the same time unites the opposites in human nature.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 67.

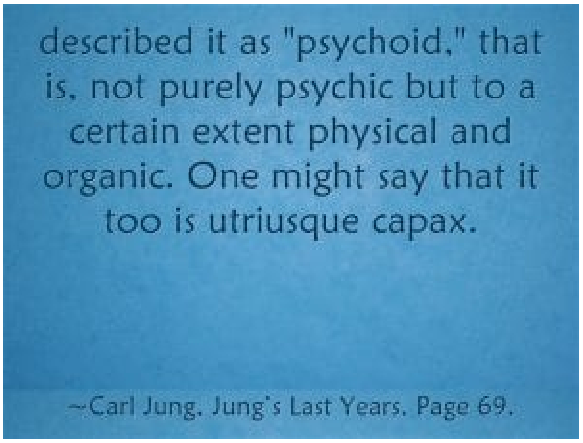
Behind the bond between the sexes stands the self, the archetype of wholeness, which contains and at the same time unites the opposites in human nature. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 67.



The dogma of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, promulgated by Pope Pius XII in 1950, contains several allusions to the "heavenly marriage," thus proving how the unconscious world of images reasserts its timeless significance as a dark counterpart to the spiritual world of Christianity.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 68.

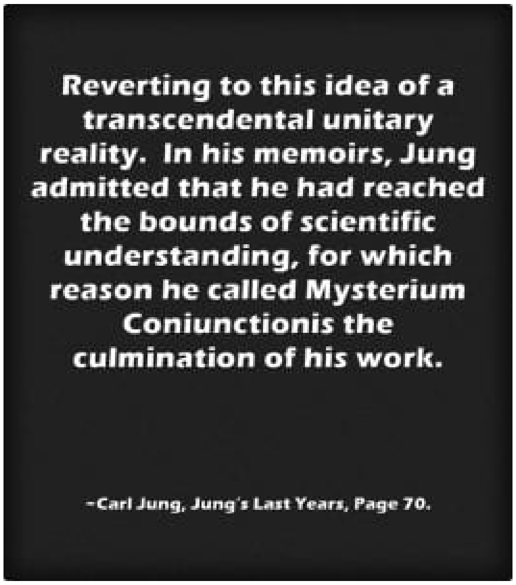
The dogma of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, promulgated by Pope Pius XII in 1950, contains several allusions to the "heavenly marriage," thus proving how the unconscious world of images reasserts its timeless significance as a dark counterpart to the spiritual world of Christianity. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 68.



described it as "psychoid," that is, not purely psychic but to a certain extent physical and organic. One might say that it too is utriusque capax.

~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 69.

He described it as "psychoid," that is, not purely psychic but to a certain extent physical and organic. One might say that it too is utriusque capax. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 69.



Reverting to this idea of a transcendental unitary reality. In his memoirs, Jung admitted that he had reached the bounds of scientific understanding, for which reason he called Mysterium Coniunctionis the culmination of his work.

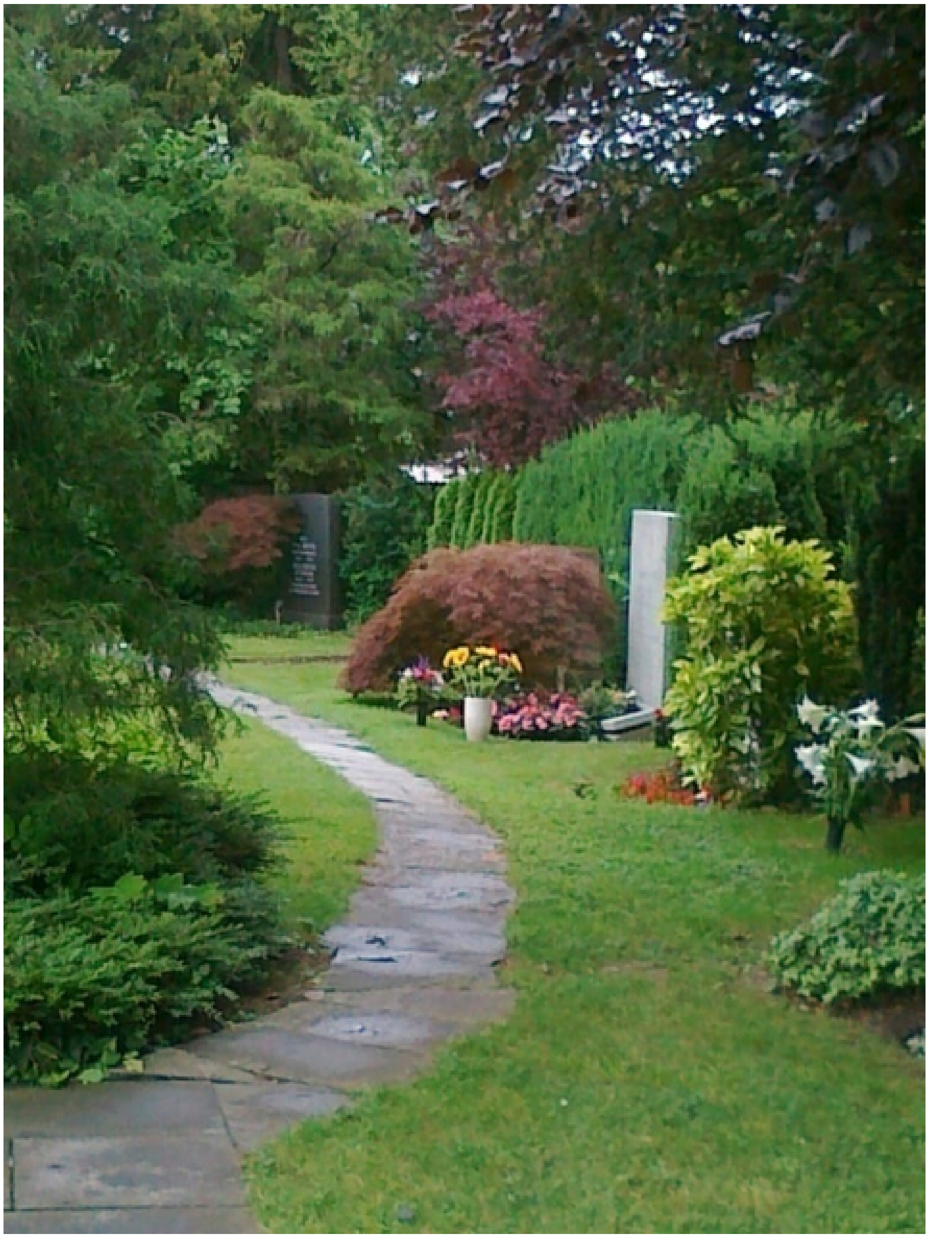
~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 70.

Reverting to this idea of a transcendental unitary reality. In his memoirs, Jung admitted that he had reached the bounds of scientific understanding, for which reason he called Mysterium Coniunctionis the culmination of his work. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 70.

Carl Jung's Gravesite (2019-11-11 05:34)

Image 1: - the resting place of the ashes, in the family grave, the headstone of which includes the arms of the Jung family; included are the ashes of father, mother, sister Gertrud, and Emma Jung-Rauschenbach; decorated with flowers on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of Jung's passing, 2011.

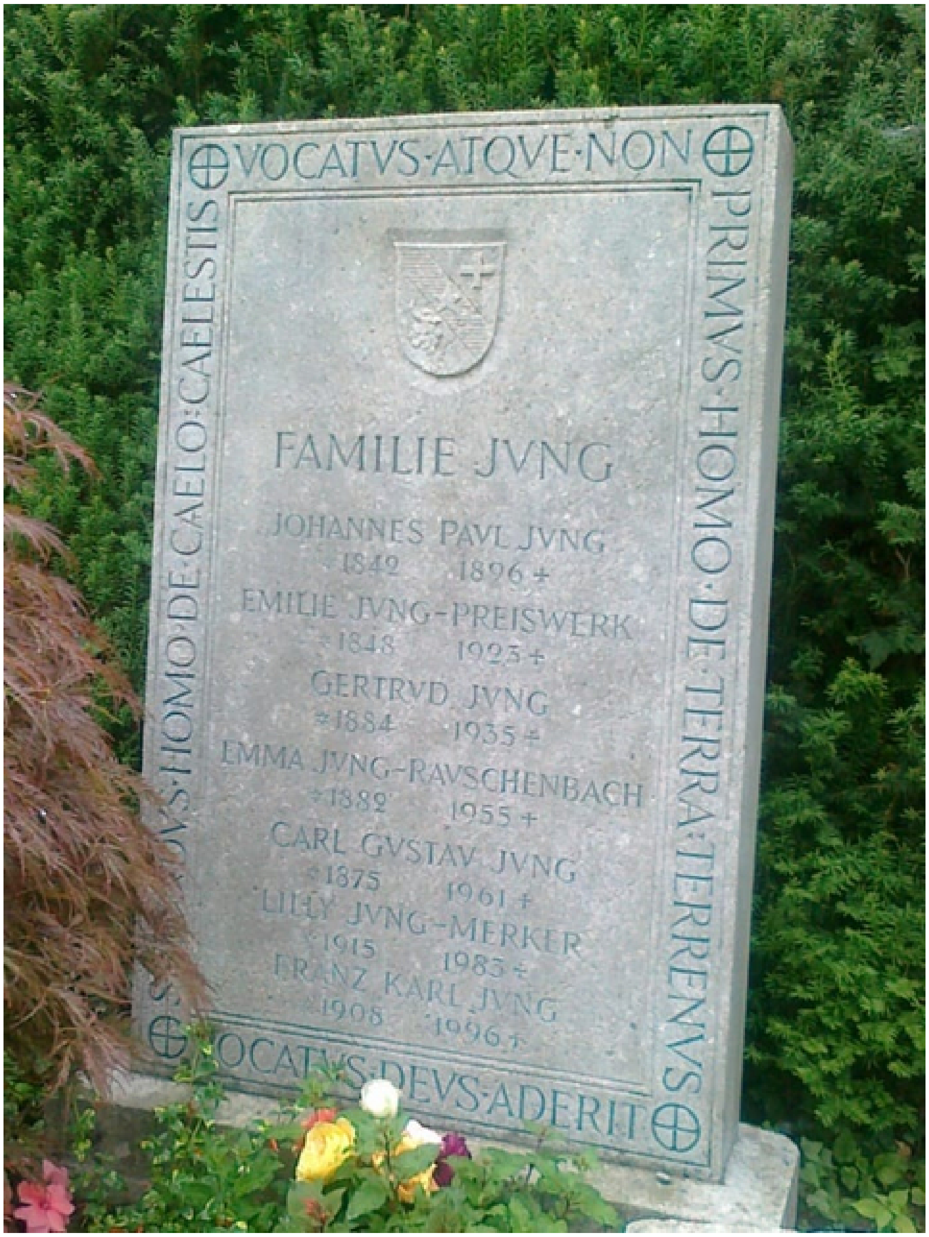
[1]



Images 2 + 3: 'Vocatus atque non vocatus dues aderit' (Called or not, the god will be present) was inscribed on the tomb, linking his house, library and grave. This Delphic oracle is included in Erasmus. Jung had acquired a copy of the 1563 edition of Erasmus's Collectaneas adagiorum, a compilation of analects from classical authors, when he was 19 years old.

[2]

VOCATVS ATQVE NON
PRIMVS HOMO DE TERRA TERRENVS
HOMO DE CAELO CAELESTIS
FAMILIE JVNG



VOCATVS·ATQVE·NON
PRIMVS·HOMO·DE·TERRA·TERRENVS
VOCATVS·DEVS·ADERIT
HOMO·DE·CAELO:CAELESTIS
FAMILIE JVNG
JOHANNES PAVL JVNG
1842 1896
EMILIE JVNG-PREISWERK
1848 1923
GERTRVD JVNG
1884 1935
EMMA JVNG-RAVSCHENBACH
1882 1955
CARL GVSTAV JVNG
1875 1961
LILLY JVNG-MERKER
1915 1983
FRANZ KARL JVNG
1908 1996

Image 4: back view: where the lightning struck a poplar tree on the night of Jung’s death.

Compiled, and photos by Maxwell Ketels: Secretary / Librarian C G Jung Society of Melbourne; June 2013

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http://www.blogger.com/home

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/10546-1grave.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/7ab61-2grave.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/6bde3-3grave.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/bf1b6-4poplar.jpg`

Clare Thompson Jung’s Contribution From the Point of View of a Psychologist (2019-11-11 09:41)

[1]Clara Thompson

Although my relationship to Jung is once removed, I have been asked to write for this volume because of my presence at the birth of the Association of Analytical Clinical Psychologists in San Francisco.

It seems to me to be very important for American psychology as a whole that well-trained clinical psychologists in this country can be recognized as analytical psychologists, but not as psycho-analysts.

Although, like Jung, Freud was himself a doctor of medicine, he was heartily in favor of lay analysis and denounced the practice of the American psycho-analytic group of turning this into a medical specialty.

Knowing this, I searched for what, then, accounts for the differences in attitude between the two groups in the United States.

The answer to this I found, to my satisfaction at least, in the relation between Jung and his students.

Freud seems to have been able to be comfortable only in the role of the father, to have been able to accept contributions from his students only when these extended or elaborated his own ideas, never when they were genuinely new.

In contrast, it seems likely that, had the occasion arisen, Jung would have echoed Pacheco's 'I do not esteem it discreditable that the pupil should surpass the master'.

His students seem to have enjoyed both freedom to explore for themselves and security in his affection.

Given this freedom and security, they have been able to accept that analytical practice does not rest on a single discipline.

Why, then, an association of clinical psychologists, instead of one encompassing all non-medical disciplines?

As it happens, such a more catholic association was the original conception which I was asked to help to execute.

It soon became clear to me that it was impossible, for me at least, to set standards for people in terms of what they are not.

Standards for a non-medical society began to seem like non-standards.

It seemed to me also that a non-medical society violated the very value which had first taken me into analytical psychology.

As a woman, I both resented intellectually and found sterile emotionally the Freudian definition of a woman in terms of what she is not, that woman is a non-man.

Jung respected my right to be a woman and defined me in terms of what I am. Similarly, as a clinical psychologist, I can define myself and my colleagues in terms of what we are.

This is currently the principal function of A.A.C.P. In the San Francisco area, both A.A.C.P. and the Medical Society of Analytical Psychologists function together in a plenary organization, but each society sets standards for its own discipline and passes separately on the thoroughness with which a given candidate has met these standards within his discipline.

Psychologists in the United States are trying with increasing frequency to set up their own centers for training in psychoanalysis.

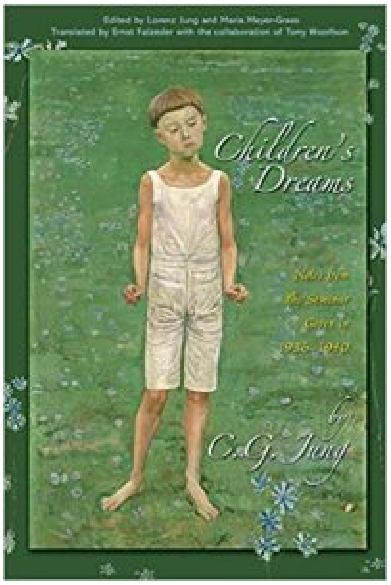
The unfortunate fact is that in many localities the psycho-analysts who could offer them most are prohibited from doing so, if not by their own prejudice, then because it would violate the dicta of their psycho-analytic associations.

Training in analytical psychology, on the other hand, is offered to clinical psychologists on the same basis as it is offered to psychiatrists, and has the added advantage that each gets to know the other in a situation of genuine equality.

That this is directly traceable to Jung, and that it is of value for the whole field of clinical psychology in the United States, seem to me to be indisputable. Clare Thompson, Contact with Jung, Pages 212-213

1. `https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Clara_Thompson`

A Dream of a Four-Year-Old Girl (2019-11-11 10:11)



Edited by Lorenz Jung and Maria Meyer-Grass
Translated by Ernst Falzeder with the collaboration of Tony Woolfson
Children's Dreams
by C.G. Jung

Dreams of a Four-Year-Old Girl of the Wedding: Carriage and the Little Angel Presented by Cornelia Brunner

Text: 1. “The shutter of the one window very gently rises, and I see a wedding carriage on the gravel path in the garden, turning round the corner of the house.

A wedding couple is sitting in the carriage, with the devil on the box as coachman.

All of a sudden the carriage is ablaze, and disappears in the rising flames. I am very scared.”

1. The dreamer stands in the bathroom of her parents’ house and looks at herself in the mirror.

In the mirror image she sees that, very slowly, wings grow out of her shoulders, so that she looks like a little angel.

Mrs. Brunner: It seems that the two dreams belong together in a double sense: in a way, the second dream of the little angel shows the lysis of the first one, but at the same time it could also be the first dream’s starting point and cause—opposite motifs are radiating from their shared center, and there is the possibility of a sudden change from one pole to the other.

The question arises whether the disappearance of the carriage may be interpreted as lysis, or whether—because of the anxiety interrupting the dream process—this is a dream without lysis. We can structure the dream as follows:

Locale: Situation of the dream: in the sleeping room.
Situation of the action: in the garden of the parental house.
Dramatis personae: wedding couple, devil.
Exposition: Entry of the carriage.
Peripateia: Burning of the carriage.
Lysis: Disappearance of the carriage in the rising flames.

Let us now have a look at the individual symbols.

The wedding carriage:

a carriage is a man-made means to move things or persons from one place to another. Its wheels go back to the sun wheel, thus to a mandala. We use a carriage when we have to cover long distances, or when an important transition, as for instance a marriage or a burial, is approaching. We find remnants of a ritual carriage procession in the Sechseläuten, or in the carnival parade.

The wedding couple:

Tacitus relates the journey of Nerthus: each year in winter a priest leads the goddess Nerthus—Mother Earth—to the humans in a carriage drawn by cows.

Then come peaceful times and happy days. Nerthus is the Ur-mother of humankind.

In Sweden, the god Frey takes her place, called the “light one” in the Edda.

In winter he drives through the country in a wagon with his priestess. People believed that he was being married to her.

The wagon journey and the marriage of the divine couple anticipate, in the form of a ritual, future events.

In Nerthus’s case, the fertility of the approaching spring should be furthered; in Frey’s case, the return of the light.

The high-spirited frenzy, reigning in winter and spring festivals up to this day, is meant to call on life, frozen in ice, to new procreation.

One of these festivals is the Walpurgis night, in which (according to De Coster) King Lenz (King Lucifer), together with his sweet and fair wife, frees life from the bonds of the winter giant.

This leads us to the devil: our concept of the devil has developed out of the Old Testament, the New Testament, and, above all, the later Christian dogma.

In the Old Testament, the devil pales beside the almighty Yahweh.

In the Book of Job he is still listed among the "sons of God."

By his association with the Persian Ahriman he acquires Persian traits.

Ahriman is the antagonist of light; he means darkness and death; he comes from heaven in the form of a serpent.

Philo was the first, following the Persian view, to make the serpent of the Hebrew Fall of Man the Satan and the image of evil lust.

In the New Testament, the devil fights, as the lord of this world, against the kingdom of God. Consequently, he not only becomes the master of all evil, but also of what could have endangered the spread of the Church's power: the Church saw Gnosis and Reformation as temptations by the devil.

In the Gnosis, several pairs of gods, none of whom assume a material form, stem from the highest god. From Sophia, the divine wisdom, a relatively ignorant being is born, the Demiurge, who creates the world.

Later, the Church Father Irenæus replaces the Demiurge with Satan, the fallen angel of pride.

The notion of the fallen Lucifer means that a being of the light has fallen under the law of gravity, that it has assumed a material body.

In Dante's Divine Comedy, Lucifer, with his three heads in the earth's deepest abyss, is the counterpart to the Holy Trinity.

In the New Testament, the devil is still rather shapeless.

He became the devil incarnate only through ideas introduced by non-Jewish converted and subjugated peoples, whose gods had been degraded to devils by Christianity.

To the saints, the devil appears in his incarnate form, so, for example, to St. Simeon in the form of the man on the cherub carriage telling him: "Come, get on the carriage, so that you may receive your crown."

To St. Paternian the devil appears in the form of a girl.

When his voluptuousness is aroused by this, he recognizes the Tempter and remembers that all who soil themselves with wantonness will be punished in the fire.

In the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, the belief in the devil reached its climax.

Misfortune, illness, blasphemy, passion—all these were attributed to the devil and his sorcery.

Pagan magic and rituals were revived in the belief in witches, particularly in its feminine and natural aspects.

In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, belief in the devil decreased.

The devil was rationalized and depersonalized.

He was no longer the evil power at whose mercy mortals lived, but he became the evil instinct within man's heart—egotism.

The vital symbol was reduced to a pale allegory.

Let us summarize the most important characteristics of the devil concept: the devil is the black one, the opposite of light.

When he appears red, he is of a fiery, that is, passionate nature, and causes wantonness, hate, or unruly love.

As the "green one" he is related to vegetation and nature.

He appears as a goat, snake, cat, or poodle; he is seen with a cloven hoof, filthy and with a tail.

He is living in the earth, and represents the earth power of the Titans and man's being bound to the earth.

He stands for our animal nature.

As a wild hunter and heir to Wotan, he is the spirit of eternal unrest, who storms through the skies on his horse.

His wings point to his relation to the thinking function.

As Mephistopheles, he is arrogant, egomaniacal, cunning, and eager to draw man into dust and matter.

Finally, as Lucifer, true to his name, he is the bearer of the spark of light, who descended through the planetary spheres from the highest light down into matter, seeking to liberate it as a work of salvation.

Filthy and rough like a tomcat below, but more brilliant than the sun above—that's how a judge of the witch trials described him.

He who becomes slave to the devil has to burn in the fire.

For those who have not been redeemed by Christ on the cross, the fire of hell will be eternal agony.

As Purgatory, it has the effect of purification by which man attains sight of the face of God.

Frazer offers a great deal of evidence for fire's power to purify and to promote light and fertility.

In all cultures, fires were, and still are, lit on the eve of great feasts and great changes, as in the Walpurgis night, at midsummer celebrations, at Easter, and so on.

The old god, or his earthly representative, is burned in the new fires. Cremation should enable rebirth in the next world.

The prophet Elijah went into heaven on a fiery wagon.

According to Heraclitus, the world was created in fire, and will perish in fire. His fire is the power of God.

Similarly, Simon Magus sees the dynamis of the fire at the origin of the cosmos.

It is logos; it is the primeval unity and it is the root of the cosmos.

Fire has a double nature, a hidden and a visible side.

In the hidden fire above heaven, all things are preserved.

Through fire, which consumes the material form, the soul becomes the pure image, godlike and immortal.

In alchemy it says: In this fire, which God created in the earth, just as he created the Purgatory in hell, God Himself is glowing in divine love.

And Jesus Christ says, according to an apocryphal word of the Lord: "He who is near me, is near the fire." So the savior is of a fiery nature.

In the Krishna legend, however, the savior is born to a parental couple, at whose wedding the carriage is steered by evil demons. Children's Dreams Seminars, Pages 172-176

Tina Keller: “The Radiant One” (2019-11-11 10:56)

Tina Keller: “The Radiant One”

Message One morning as I awoke there was an incredible joy in me because the message "you are children of God" had taken on full reality.

This truth transformed everything.

It means that there is in me and in others a divine heredity.

We are not only creatures slowly evolving from our animal ancestors, but to be human means that in some way divine power, that which we call "God," has planted a seed in us that has in it divine potentials.

It is not so important what I do, but it matters that I furnish in my life the best conditions for the divine seed to grow.

I have been feeling for some time that a growth process is taking place in me, even during my sleep.

There were mornings when I woke feeling that a conflict had been going on in my sleep but that it was not as yet resolved.

I felt tired and unsatisfied.

On other mornings I would awaken feeling satisfied and at peace, as if something had been accomplished.

Then came this special morning with the radiant message and its reality.

What can I do to follow up the radiant message?

To my great regret, the full radiance is gradually getting lost, but I cherish its memory and I want to follow up its implications.

I see how my orientation must change and I recognize how one-sided my thinking was.

The opposites belong together, but by habit I still want to separate them.

We learned to think by comparison and opposition.

My reason is offended at the very idea of the combination of opposites.

A recent dream reminded me how as a child I had had an experience of a combination of opposites.

I was around eleven or twelve years old when I was to have my tonsils out.

I was terribly afraid of the operation and of being put to sleep.

In despair I cried out, "I cannot."

There was a very competent nurse who put her arm firmly around me and with great kindness but unshakable firmness gave me the necessary confidence.

My recent dream showed a similar situation giving me confidence that I will be similarly helped in my present difficulties as I am preparing for death.

At once I "see" the masculine figure who appeared in my imagination and who has stayed with me these many years.

"Leonard" would help me in the new orientation as he is bringing to me those necessary qualities that my one-sided education had repressed.

If I had been asked what it meant for me to be good I would probably have answered that it meant pleasing people.

In my upbringing, obedience and adjustment were required while self-assurance, independence and the ability to say "no" were repressed.

"Leonard" brings up these qualities and I am gradually assimilating them.

By the new orientation as I try for more self knowledge, "Leonard" showed me my tendency to leave things vague and how in this way I was escaping reality.

I must face reality.

I must want to know myself and for this "Leonard" keeps at me.

Getting a general impression of myself I first saw how there were endless beginnings that lacked continuation.

I am getting a demonstration of this as I look through my books and papers.

There is so very much I have forgotten, read so superficially that when I re-read, it is a new discovery.

In many ways I was superficial, but that also helped me achieve, not hesitate before big tasks.

I needed this superficiality for my studies where otherwise I would have gotten too discouraged.

I have spoken of feeling a process of growth going on.

Of course such a process includes losing and gaining.

There were constant new beginnings and endings.

Sometimes painful partings led to joyful openings.

When we had to move to Geneva from Zurich I was torn away from my close association with the Jungian circle.

Yet very quickly I felt the wider atmosphere of Geneva and its international organizations.

After a long time of intensive preoccupation with my inner development, it was very enriching to come in contact with world wide concerns.

I had a most enriching contact with a Quaker group that asked me to speak to them about Jungian psychology.

The children had left home and were all married, living their own independent lives.

My marriage ended when my husband died.

It was not easy when he fell ill in California, where our elder son lives, to leave my practice and my belongings for immigration to a foreign country.

Yet my years in California were a new opening and a great enrichment.

In all these experiences I had a feeling of this being my destiny.

In each change some inner feeling of destiny led me on; I did not have to force myself.

Even now in the decision to return from California to live in Switzerland and the decision to enter an old age home, which are restrictions, I feel guided by "my destiny."

The radiant message about being "children of God" transcends psychology.

1. G. Jung had shown how from the unconscious new elements constantly flow into the conscious.

He had shown me the reality of the inner life and it is thanks to C. G. Jung’s teaching that my association with "Leonard" has been an enrichment, not a disturbance.

But it is most important that I discuss with him and do not let him rule me.

"Leonard" brings the elements I need for wholeness, but I must bring my part also.

I feel as if I were being transformed, as if even my consciousness were changing.

I can only accept the process which is a religious process, although it has nothing to do with theology.

Very gradually I learned that my naive childhood religion that had continued far into adulthood was expressed in out-dated rational and one-sided terms.

I had clung to orthodox formulations trying to believe, but suffering from anxiety.

I then realized that anything we try to formulate in this area is inadequate, because what we call "God" belongs to another reality, which goes quite beyond our understanding.

So I no more try to understand, but gradually inside me there grew a feeling of confidence in some unknowable power to whom I am related.

I object to the way churches insist on our being miserable sinners.

It discourages people and brings resignation.

I know evil is a reality, but it is also a mystery and in the teaching about sin, there are many misunderstandings.

For my part, I can only say that when I hear and feel the radiant message about being children of God, I am awed and have a great desire to be worthy.

There seems to be a false idea about man having to achieve.

As children of God, something greater is taking hold of us.

In psychotherapy one meets persons who are caught in some negative tendency.

It looks as if they should be able to correct it, yet there is a strange incapacity.

Gradually the person may come to the insight that something in her or him dings to this situation, is afraid of becoming normal.

When we look at ourselves closely we can see how often we are unable to put into practice our best intentions.

We need to become aware of our limitations and respect these.

We may then turn inward and pray for help.

It is much more important what kind of attitude one has than what one does.

It is the inner attitude of a person that makes the same action good or bad.

Two teachers may punish their pupils and it will have a quite different effect.

The one who loves children is felt as just and not resented; the other, who is full of personal bitterness and resentment, is felt as cruel and unjust.

In fact to become loving one needs to experience love; it is happy people who bring happiness to others.

The radiant message would bring us happiness.

There exist persons who seem to have been taken over by some greater power and are able to mediate this in their lives.

It is inspiring to read about such persons.

It is most visible in those we call artists.

We stand before some mystery which however shows us a reality.

In small ways I can feel such a reality.

When I accepted that I am before an "unknowable God" gradually there grew inside me a confidence and a knowledge quite beyond words.

Also the feeling that my life was guided by a destiny.

Of course I tried to obey that destiny, to follow the signs I could notice and as I tried to follow a greater design, life became meaningful and satisfying.

Of course achievement is important.

As the artist has to work hard at his technique, so also we have to work hard toward acquiring the knowledge and the qualities we need for what we are meant to be.

I believe that every person can, as he or she sincerely asks himself, find what he really is meant to do and enjoys doing.

There have been many false ideas about going against one's wishes.

I think that which one is really fitted for is also what one enjoys doing and continues to enjoy. In something one enjoys one is most likely to be creative.

But achievement is not the ultimate goal.

We need to come in contact with another dimension.

We need help by superhuman forces which we cannot command, only pray for.

So we need also the opposite of achievement, times of non-doing and receptivity, where we are fully open to what may come. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, 133-137

E.A. Bennett Books [Jungian] (2019-11-11 13:38)

[1]

Image: E.A. Bennett and Carl Jung at lakeside Bollingen 1957.

[2] Meetings with Jung
E.A. Bennet

[3]Buy at Amazon here

[4] C.G.JUNG
ANALYTICAL PSYCHOLOGY
Its Theory & Practice

[5]Buy at Amazon here

[6] WHAT JUNG REALLY SAID
With an Introduction by Anthony Storr
E. A. Bennet

[7]Buy at Amazon here

[8]Books by E.A. Bennett

---

1. `file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-_jELacD4UAw/VGJCo0PcgeI/AAAAAAAAMEg/HWveEZt-gFE/s1600/1.jpg`
2. `file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-Vgxv6oP5Svk/VGJGOC2diXI/AAAAAAAAMEs/9louauPR0mQ/s1600/3.jpg`
3. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0805210466/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_tCKyub0AX476H`

4. `file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-ao16DLKnglM/VGJHzKi5HpI/AAAAAAAAME4/L77_g6-bsrw/s1600/2.jpg`
5. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/B001QR791E/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_fCKyub1XKRADT`
6. `file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-aqnAhU8_DAA/VGJJA61CxoI/AAAAAAAAMFE/BfgY2ZU1MjY/s1600/3.jpg`
7. `file://www.amazon.com/dp/0805210466/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_tCKyub0AX476H`
8. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/ea-bennett-books-jungian.html`

Books by Wolfgang Pauli [Jungian] (2019-11-12 03:24)

[1]

[2] C. G. JUNG
SYNCHRONICITY
An Acausal Connecting Principle
THE INTERPRETATION OF NATURE AND THE PSYCHE
W. PAULI
THE INFLUENCE OF ARCHETYPAL IDEAS ON THE SCIENTIFIC THEORIES OF KEPLER

[3]Buy at Amazon here

[4] Atom and Archetype
The Pauli/Jung Letters
1932-1958
C. G. JUNG
WOLFGANG PAULI
EDITED BY C. A. MEIER
WITH A PREFACE BY BEVERLEY ZABRISKIE

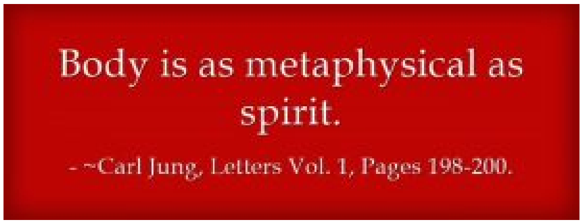
[5]Buy at Amazon here

[6]Books by Wolfgang Pauli

[7]Books by Wolfgang Pauli

1. `file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-I4W9PosR5Xw/VGPdC6CNaRI/AAAAAAAAMOA/QcF-q9Tmcqo/s1600/1.jpg`
2. `file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-BOkU1Ip8lyc/VGPdbpwhQpI/AAAAAAAAMOI/9n0iidkXQVQ/s1600/2.jpg`
3. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/4871877132/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_XT0yub0G33J57`
4. `file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-lZY4qO4kFgw/VGPduLC_2HI/AAAAAAAAMOQ/TCKuXjO9Huw/s1600/3.jpg`
5. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/4871877132/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_XT0yub0G33J57`
6. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/book-by-wolfgang-pauli-jungian.html`
7. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/book-by-wolfgang-pauli-jungian.html`

Body and spirit are to me mere aspects of the reality of the psyche. ~Carl Jung (2019-11-12 03:29)



Body is as metaphysical as spirit.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 198-200.

Body and spirit are to me mere aspects of the reality of the psyche. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 198-200.

[1]
Ask the modern physicist what body is, they are coming fast across to the recognition of the reality of the psyche.

C.G. Jung ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 198-200.

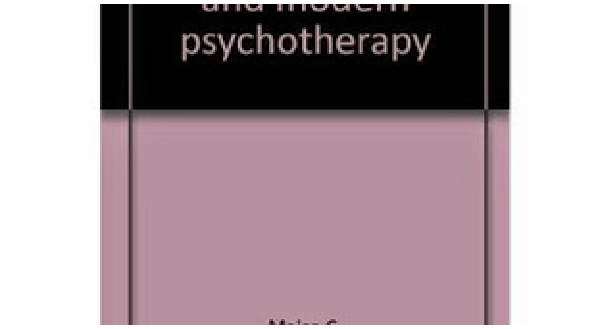
Ask the modern physicist what body is, they are coming fast across to the recognition of the reality of the psyche. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 198-200.

1. `file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-z5GT1zt0cIE/VGPs2UG9Y6I/AAAAAAAAMPE/hcfIYqPYrPw/s1600/iii.jpg`

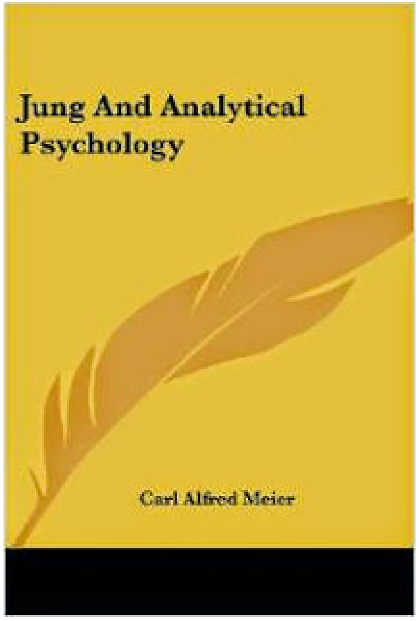
Books by C.A. Meier "Jungian" (2019-11-12 03:38)

Books by C.A. Meier

[1]
[2]



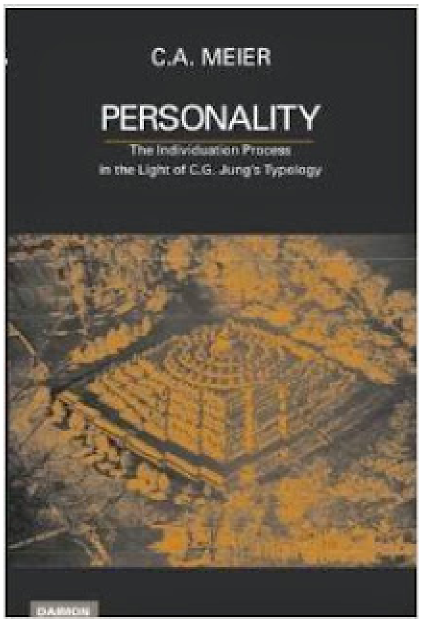
[3]Buy at Amazon here



Jung And Analytical Psychology
Carl Alfred Meier

[4]

[5]Buy at Amazon here



C.A. MEIER
PERSONALITY
The Individuation Process
in the Light of C.G. Jung's Typology
DAIMON

[6]

[7]Buy at Amazon here

[8] A Testament to the Wilderness
Ten Essays on an Address by C.A. Meier
Daimon Verlag The Lapis Press

[9]Buy at Amazon here

[10] C.A. MEIER
HEALING DREAM AND RITUAL
DAIMON

[11]Buy at Amazon here

[12]Books by C.A. Meier

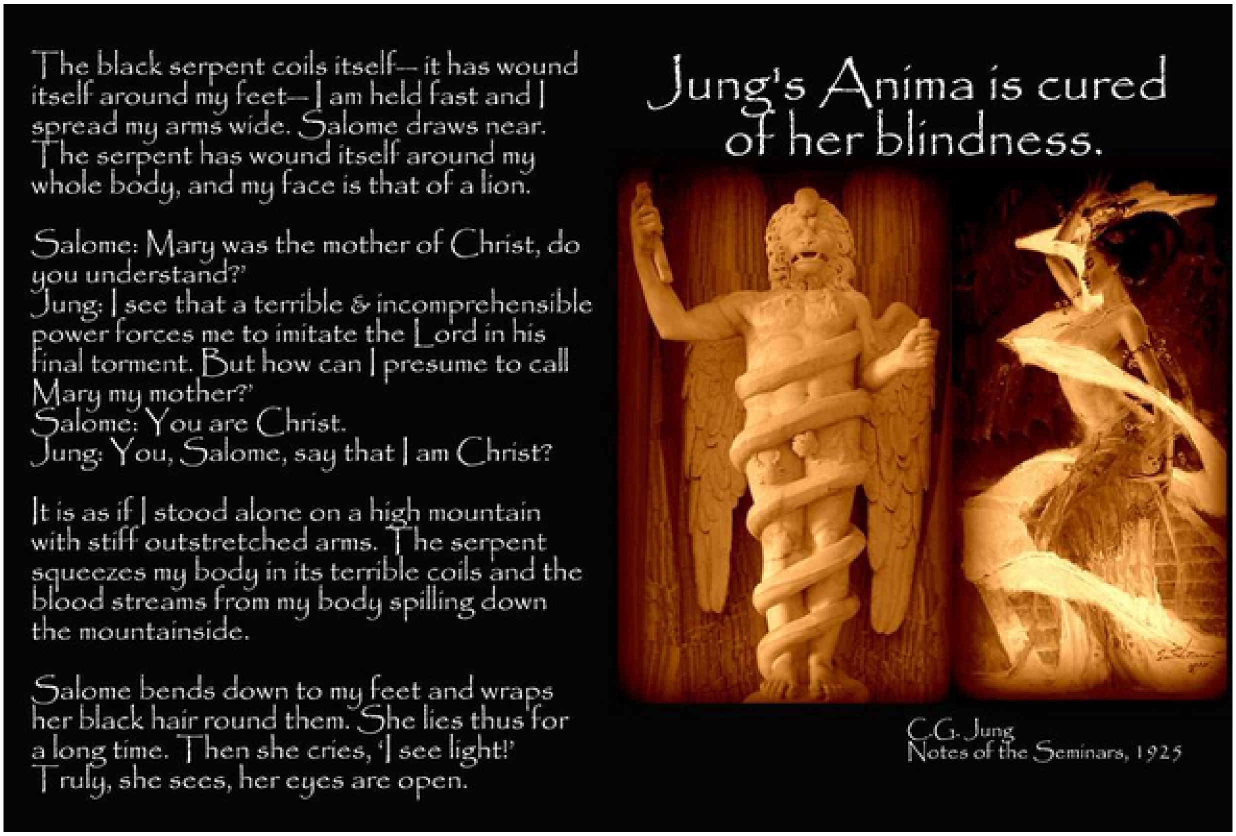
1. `file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-lRegvOsGqrA/VGO1mx1P5VI/AAAAAAAAMMo/M5F3knb5PA4/s1600/1.jpg`
2. `file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-1PiJ-mRXHMY/VGO1ve5tRGI/AAAAAAAAMMw/eWwv36zLEtg/s1600/2.jpg`
3. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/B0007DSWQE/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_5-Zyub1NC23G1`
4. `file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-79oOfkV2qRU/VGO2GzUJeGI/AAAAAAAAMM4/HdS6CqLOAXw/s1600/3.jpg`

5. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1425483615/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_C-Zyub1B35MH8
6. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-UXEW_1l6k7M/VGO2WVa4rII/AAAAAAAAMNE/xCqdzjXGRKw/s1600/4.jpg
7. http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856305491/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_f9Zyub1DPW106
8. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-kj2QuYN1FcY/VGO2nh3qLuI/AAAAAAAAMNM/omIxGVJBPTE/s1600/5.jpg
9. http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856305033/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_E8Zyub1MGWEW7
10. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-N0KJ350sH_E/VGO24M3aKYI/AAAAAAAAMNY/Tf3QdleTiVE/s1600/6.jpg
11. http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856305033/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_E8Zyub1MGWEW7
12. http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-ca-meier-jungian.html

---

Carl Jung: Then I saw the snake approach me. (2019-11-12 03:53)

[1]



The black serpent coils itself— it has wound itself around my feet— I am held fast and I spread my arms wide. Salome draws near. The serpent has wound itself around my whole body, and my face is that of a lion.

Salome: Mary was the mother of Christ, do you understand?'
Jung: I see that a terrible & incomprehensible power forces me to imitate the Lord in his final torment. But how can I presume to call Mary my mother?'
Salome: You are Christ.
Jung: You, Salome, say that I am Christ?

It is as if I stood alone on a high mountain with stiff outstretched arms. The serpent squeezes my body in its terrible coils and the blood streams from my body spilling down the mountainside.

Salome bends down to my feet and wraps her black hair round them. She lies thus for a long time. Then she cries, 'I see light!' Truly, she sees, her eyes are open.

Jung's Anima is cured of her blindness.

C.G. Jung
Notes of the Seminars, 1925

Then a most disagreeable thing happened. Salome became very interested in me, and she assumed that I could cure her blindness.

She began to worship me.

I said, “Why do you worship me?”

She replied, “You are Christ.” In spite of my objections she maintained this.

I said, “This is madness,” and became filled with skeptical resistance.

Then I saw the snake approach me.

She came close and began to encircle me and press me in her coils.

The coils reached up to my heart.

I realized as I struggled, that I had assumed the attitude of the Crucifixion.

In the agony and the struggle, I sweated so profusely that the water flowed down on all sides of me.

Then Salome rose, and she could see. While the snake was pressing me, I felt that my face had taken on the face of an animal of prey, a lion or a tiger. [Footnote 10] Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 104-105.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http://www.blogger.com/home

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

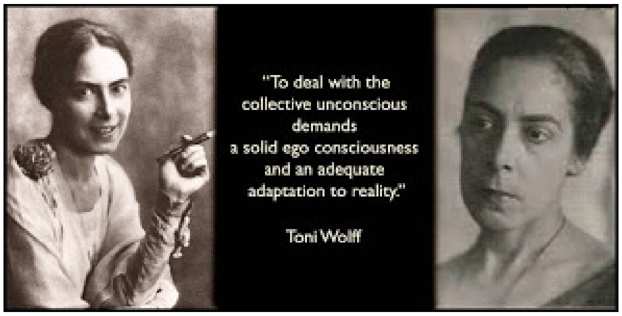
WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/c914f-1animus.jpg`

Books by Toni Wolff [Jungian] (2019-11-12 03:59)

Sadly some of the works by Toni Wolff have not been translated into English. This is a tragedy.

[1]



"To deal with the collective unconscious demands a solid ego consciousness and an adequate adaptation to reality."
Toni Wolff

[2]

[3]

[4]

ANTONIA WOLFF
1883–1953

Books by Toni Wolff

[5] TONI WOLFF
Essays on Analytical Psychology
DAIMON

[6]Buy at Amazon here

[7]
THE GUILD OF
PASTORAL PSYCHOLOGY
GUILD LECTURE No. 42

Christianity Within

by
TONI WOLFF

Delivered May 10, 1946

[8]Buy at Amazon here

[9]Books by Toni Wolff

1. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-KpJGFWZcKBE/VG0rjbCAquI/AAAAAAAAMLk/cpo8A_8Lw_0/s1600/1.jpg
2. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-ssPCamOwStE/VG0rjNp4eQI/AAAAAAAAMLM/HreVCx6rCLo/s1600/2.jpg
3. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-JtoaQYrbOKo/VG0rjQdvr0I/AAAAAAAAMLQ/zq28SbL7lGo/s1600/3.jpg

4. `file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-HeKJP5fDrqE/VGOrjOHGhwI/AAAAAAAAMLU/Gj-VLZsZ1sE/s1600/4.jpg`
5. `file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-0JivHiTEhMs/VGOsxdxPT7I/AAAAAAAAMLw/1G8Gn0jOKCE/s1600/5.jpg`
6. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856306234/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_NP6yub07G80BW`
7. `file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-FgJoNVnhvoo/VGOtB3X-J7I/AAAAAAAAML4/VaW1WNIwVNA/s1600/6.jpg`
8. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0852661045/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_9P6yub15ZREYG`
9. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-toni-wolff-jungian.html`

Carl Jung on the Ego and the Unconscious (2019-11-12 04:01)

[1]

To W. Y. Evans-Wentz

My dear Mr. Evans-Wentz, 8 December 1938

I shall try to comply with your wishes as much as possible with reference to Book II which I shall make the chief subject of my inquiries.

The Eastern idea which Mr. Sturdy seems to share is that what I call the unconscious is consciousness, even super-consciousness.

This is a metaphysical assumption of course.

I remain within our ordinary Western consciousness, the only kind of consciousness I know.

The nature of that psyche which reaches beyond my consciousness is essentially unknown to me.

Therefore one aptly calls it the unconscious.

Of course I wouldn't know of it if there were not parts of it that reach my consciousness, but the main body of this psyche is essentially unconscious to me, as its origins are equally unknown to me.

We know of no consciousness that is not the relation between images and an ego.

But unfortunately we have no means to ascertain that every living organism is equipped with what we call an ego.

We even know of dim states of consciousness where our own ego becomes equally dimmed, yet the state is definitely psychic.

From such an experience we may conclude that there is an enormous mass of psychic functioning which is not exactly conscious to an ego, or which is altogether without an ego.

The latter condition would be utterly "dark," i.e., deprived of the light of consciousness.

To speak of consciousness in a cell is to me a highly metaphysical assertion for which we have no evidence whatsoever.

On the other hand it is easy to assume that each living organism has probably something like a psychic function.

All psychic functioning without an ego has peculiar characteristics that adhere to every psychic fragment which is not the result of conscious functioning.

Dreams, for instance, are not the result of conscious functioning in the main.

They have therefore a peculiar character which we call unconscious.

If the Indians would call sublime psychic experience "psyche" or something equivalent to it, I would agree with them, but to call it consciousness cannot be substantiated by any evidence.

If the highest psychic condition is Sunyata, then it cannot be consciousness, because consciousness is by definition the relationship between the subject and a representation.

One is conscious of something.

As long as you are conscious of Sunyata it is not Sunyata, because there is still a subject that is conscious of something.

Void is even the void of consciousness, and there l completely agree with the East.

I hope to be able to do the promised bit of work in my winter vacations.

Hoping you are always in good health,

I remain,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 2, Pages 248-250.

1. `file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-JFFisY8rPr4/VGO8RgKG1eI/AAAAAAAAMNw/HwX18hQzSo8/s1600/wentz.jpg`

Carl Jung on the dream of Wilhelm Laiblin (2019-11-12 04:06)

[1]

[Carl Jung on the dream of Wilhelm Laiblin]

Dear Herr Laiblin, 19 March 1934

Best thanks for your letter, which interested me very much.

Also for your two open letters to the bishop.

As to your dream, I entirely agree with you that the falling stars and moons refer to the collapse of a whole world of ideas that has become obsolescent.

I think we may also hazard the conjecture that the three moons refer to the Trinity concept.

The second part of the dream unquestionably refers to the anima, who offers you food and drink at an exorbitant price.

There is nothing in the dream to indicate that there is any necessity, or a personal reason, to take up an attitude in public.

The stars are falling anyway, one cannot and need not accelerate their fall.

I think I can understand why the bishop has not replied to your letters.

Anyone who has to run a church under these circumstances cannot concern himself with problems that cast doubt on the validity of this same church.

The meaning of the dream is only that when the churches keep silent the psyche gives you food and drink.

I certainly understand that in the present atmosphere, which strives for collective solutions, it was obvious that you should speak out for yourself.

We are in fact not absolutely dependent on the unconscious but can and should on occasion act on our environment at our own discretion.

For my part I would have looked at the dream in another light.

It would have occurred to me that the unconscious, in a very unchristian manner, was urging me to go home and nourish myself in silence and bear the costs of such an undertaking.

So long as the Church does not practice restraint of conscience, it can safely be kept alive for all those, the weak ones, to whom no offence should be given.

I am therefore extremely conservative and reserved in these matters, for I am convinced that the Catholic as well as the Protestant form of faith have not by any means lost their raison d’etre.

A renewal of religious beliefs has no form at present, so that the weak and those who are dependent on forms should not be prematurely precipitated into formlessness.

I am naturally in complete agreement with the content of your letters.

If one says it at all, then one has to say it like that.

I only ask myself whether it is the right time to say such things now.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Pages 153-154.

1. `file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-bCt4tn_fR4o/VGN3IXzTH6I/AAAAAAAAMKs/TABogL1Ds4I/s1600/dream.jpg`

Gershom Scholem’s Letter to Aniela Jaffe (2019-11-12 04:14)

Dear Mrs. Jaffe: Jerusalem 7 May 1963

As you are so interested in the story of Baeck and Jung, I will write it down for your benefit and have no objection to being cited by you in this matter.

In the summer of 194 7 Leo Baeck was in Jerusalem.

I had then just received for the first time an invitation to the Eranos meeting in Ascona, evidently at Jung’s suggestion, and I asked Baeck whether I should accept it, as I had heard and read many protests about Jung’s behavior in the Nazi period.

Baeck said: "You must go, absolutely!" and in the course of our conversation told me the following story.

He too had been put off by Jung’s reputation resulting from those well-known articles in the years 1933-34, precisely because he knew Jung very well from the Darmstadt meetings of the School of Wisdom and would never have credited him with any Nazi and anti-Semitic sentiments.

When, after his release from Theresienstadt, he returned to Switzerland for the first time (I think it was 1946), he therefore did not call on Jung in Zurich.

But it came to Jung’s ears that he was in the city and Jung sent a message begging him to visit him, which he, Baeck, declined because of those happenings.

Whereupon Jung came to his hotel and they had an extremely lively talk lasting two hours, during which Baeck reproached him with all the things he had heard.

Jung defended himself by an appeal to the special conditions in Germany but at the same time confessed to him: "Well, I slipped up"-probably referring to the Nazis and his expectation that something great might after all emerge.

This remark, "I slipped up," which Baeck repeated to me several times, remains vividly in my memory.

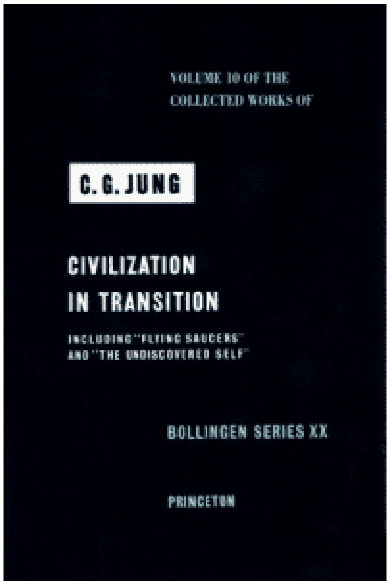
Baeck said that in this talk they cleared up everything that had come between them and that they parted from one another reconciled again.

Because of this explanation of Baeck’s I accepted the invitation to Eranos when it came a second time.

Yours sincerely,

G. Scholem Jung’s Last Years, Pages 97-98.

Carl Jung: "A Rejoinder to Dr. Bally" [A response to charges of Anti-Semitism] (2019-11-12 04:22)



VOLUME 10 OF THE
COLLECTED WORKS OF

C. G. JUNG

CIVILIZATION
IN TRANSITION

INCLUDING "FLYING SAUCERS"
AND "THE UNDISCOVERED SELF"

BOLLINGEN SERIES XX

PRINCETON

A REJOINDER TO DR. BALLY

1016 1 wish to discuss no surmises with Dr. Bally, but prefer to report the facts which led me to take over the editorship of the Zentralblatt filr Psychotherapie.

About three years ago I was elected honorary [vice-] president of the General Medical Society for Psychotherapy.

When, owing to the political upheaval, Professor Kretschmer resigned from the presidency, and the Society like so many other scientific organizations in Germany received a profound shock, some leading members pressed me—I may say, fervently—to take the chair.

This, I would expressly emphasize, was the presidency not of the German but of the International Society, as is stated in the issue from which Dr. Bally quotes.

Thus a moral conflict arose for me as it would for any decent man in this situation.

Should I, as a prudent neutral, withdraw into security this side of the frontier and wash my hands in innocence, or should I—as I was well aware—risk my skin and expose myself to the inevitable misunderstandings which no one escapes who, from higher necessity, has to make a pact with the existing political powers in Germany?

Should I sacrifice the interests of science, loyalty to colleagues, the friendship which attaches me to some German physicians, and the living link with the humanities afforded by a common language—sacrifice all this to egotistic comfort and my different political sentiments?

I have seen too much of the distress of the German middle class, learned too much about the boundless misery that often marks the life of a German doctor today, know too much about the general spiritual wretchedness to be able to evade my plain human duty under the shabby cloak of political subterfuge.

Consequently no other course remained for me but to answer for my friends with the weight of my name and independent position.

As conditions then were, a single stroke of the pen in high places would have sufficed to sweep all psychotherapy under the table.

That had to be prevented at all costs for the sake of suffering humanity, doctors, and—last but not least—science and civilization.

1018 Anybody who has the least notion about present-day Germany knows that no newspaper, no society, nothing, absolutely nothing can exist unless it has been gleichgeschaltet (conformed) by the government.

Consequently the organization of a journal or a society is an affair that has two sides.

I can wish, but whether things will turn out as I wish is another question, the decision for which rests neither with me nor with my colleagues.

Anyone who has to deal with Germany today knows how rapidly things can alter, how one unforeseen decree follows another, and how the political scene changes like lightning.

It is quite impossible to keep abreast of events from abroad, when even inside Germany people are unable, with the best will in the world, to get the political authorities to adopt a clear and binding attitude.

Since the German section of the International Society has to be gleichgeschaltet, and since, moreover, the Zentralblatt is published in Germany, there naturally arose so many difficulties that more than once we doubted the possibility of a reorganization.

One of these concerned the oath of allegiance and the "purity of political sentiment" required of the German Society.

We in Switzerland can hardly understand such a thing, but we are immediately in the picture if we transport ourselves back three or four centuries to a time when the Church had totalitarian presumptions.

Barbed wire had not been invented then, so there were probably no concentration camps; instead, the Church used large quantities of faggots.

The "modernist" oath of today is a pale and feeble offshoot of an earlier, much more robust and palpable Gleichschaltung.

As the authority of the Church fades, the State becomes the Church, since the totalitarian claim is bound to come out somewhere.

First it was Socialism that entered into the Catholic heritage and again is experimenting with the crassest kind of Gleichschaltung—not, indeed, with a view to buttressing up the kingdom of heaven but to producing an equally millenarian state of bliss (or its substitute) on earth.

Russian Communism has therefore, quite logically, become the totalitarian Church, where even the poorest mouse emits the Bolshevist squeak.

No wonder National Socialism makes the same claims!

It is only consistent with the logic of history that after an age of clerical Gleichschaltung the turn should come for one practised by the secular State.

But even in such an age the spirit is at work in science, in art, philosophy, and religious experience, heedless of whether the contemporary situation be favourable or unfavourable, for there is something in man that is of divine nature and is not condemned to its own treadmill and imprisoned in its own structure.

This spirit wants to live—which is why old Galileo, when they had done torturing him, recanted, and afterwards, so the story goes, said "But it does move"—only very softly, I'll wager.

Martyrdom is a singular calling for which one must have a special gift.

Therefore it seems to me at least as intelligent not to worry the high inquisition for a while with the exciting news that one has discovered the moons of Jupiter without the authorization of Aristotle.

Galileo had the childlike eyes of the great discoverer and was not at all wise to his gleichgeschaltet age.

Were he alive today he could sun himself on the beach at Los Angeles in company with Einstein and would be a made man, since a liberal age worships God in the form of science.

But the "metamorphosis of the gods" rolls rumbling on and the State becomes lord of this world: more than half Europe is already swallowed up.

Science and every healing art get seven fat years, then come the seven lean.

They must learn to adapt themselves.

To protest is ridiculous—how protest against an avalanche?

It is better to look out.

Science has no interest in calling down avalanches; it must preserve its intellectual heritage even under the changed conditions.

That is how things stand today.

Neither I nor my German colleagues are responsible for them.

If the German section of the Society wants to exist at all the oath of allegiance is inescapable, as any reasonable person will understand.

It was therefore planned that the managing editor of the Zentralblatt, Dr. Cimbal of Hamburg, would bring out a special issue with statements by leading German psychotherapists, together with a signed introductory statement by the president of the German Society, Professor Goring of Elberfeld, for exclusive circulation in Germany.

Such, too, were the instructions which I gave to the managing editor.

To my great surprise and disappointment Professor Goring's political manifesto was suddenly printed in the current issue of the Zentralblatt [VI 13].

I do not doubt that there were inside political reasons for this, but it was one of those lamentable tactical gaffes which were the bane of German foreign policy even in the Wilhelm era.

In this way my name unexpectedly appeared over a National Socialist manifesto, which to me personally was anything but agreeable.

And yet after all what is help or friendship that costs nothing? The incident is naturally so incriminating as to put my editorship seriously in question.

In Germany everything must be "German" at present if it is to survive.

Even the healing art must be "German," and this for political reasons.

From the standpoint of medicine itself, it is unimportant whether it is called "German" or "French," but it is extremely important that it should live, even if under undeniably difficult conditions, as I know only too well.

It is a cheap jibe to ridicule "Germanic psychotherapy," but a very different thing to have to rescue medicine for humanity's sake from the seething chaos of revolution.

It is easy to stand by and be funny when the main point is to get a young and insecure science into a place of safety during an earthquake, and that was my aim in helping to reorganize the psychotherapeutic movement in Germany.

Medicine has nothing to do with politics—I only wish it had!—and therefore it can and should be practiced for the good of suffering humanity under all governments.

If the doctors of Petersburg [sic] or Moscow had sought my help I would have acceded without hesitation, because I am concerned with human beings and not with Bolsheviks—and if I was then inevitably branded a Bolshevik it would have bothered me just as little.

Man after all still has a soul and is not just an ox fatted for political slaughter.

If I am called into the arena for the sake of the soul I shall follow the call wherever it may be.

This naïve belief of mine in the human soul may, from the Olympian standpoint of a hypertrophied intellect or of partisan blindness, appear laughable, suspect, unpatriotic, and God knows what.

I do not pride myself on being a good Christian, but I do believe in the saying, "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar’s, and unto God the things that are God’s."

The doctor who, in wartime, gives his help to the wounded of the other side will surely not be held a traitor to his country.

There is no sense in us doctors facing the National Socialist regime as if we were a party.

As doctors we are first and foremost men who serve our fellows, if necessary under all the aggravations of a given political situation.

We are neither obliged nor called upon to make protests from a sudden access of untimely political zeal and thus gravely to endanger our medical activity.

My support of the German doctors has nothing to do with any political attitude.

If it is interpreted politically—which has doubtless happened already or soon will—the interpretations are a reflection on those who make them.

I have never been in a position to stop the formation of myths.

024 Admittedly I was incautious, so incautious as to do the very thing most open to misunderstanding at the present moment: I have tabled the Jewish question.

This I did deliberately.

My esteemed critic appears to have forgotten that the first rule of psychotherapy is to talk in the greatest detail about all the things that are the most ticklish and dangerous, and the most misunderstood.

The Jewish problem is a regular complex, a festering wound, and no responsible doctor could bring himself to apply methods of medical hush-hush in this matter.

As to the difference between Jewish and "Aryan-Germanic-Christian-European" psychology, it can of course hardly be seen in the individual products of science as a whole.

But we are not so much concerned with these as with the fundamental fact that in psychology the object of knowledge is at the same time the organ of knowledge, which is true of no other science.

It has therefore been doubted in all sincerity whether psychology is possible as a science at all.

In keeping with this doubt I suggested years ago that every psychological theory should be criticized in the first instance as a subjective confession.

For, if the organ of knowledge is its own object, we have every reason to examine the nature of that organ very closely indeed, since the subjective premise is at once the object of knowledge which is therefore limited from the start.

This subjective premise is identical with our psychic idiosyncrasy.

The idiosyncrasy is conditioned (1) by the individual, (2) by the family, (3) by the nation, race, climate, locality, and history.

1 have in my time been accused of "Swiss wooden-headedness."

Not that I have anything against possessing the national vices of the Swiss; I am also quite ready to suppose that I am a bigoted Swiss in every respect.

I am perfectly content to let my psychological confession, my so-called "theories," be criticized as a product of Swiss wooden-headedness or queer-headedness, as betraying the sinister influence of my theological and medical forbears, and, in general, of our Christian and German heritage, as exemplified for instance by Schiller and Meister Eckhart.

I am not affronted when people call me "Teutonically confused," "mystical," "moralistic," etc.

I am proud of my subjective premises, I love the Swiss earth in them, I am grateful to my theological forbears for having passed on to me the Christian premise, and I also admit my so-called "father complex": I do not want to knuckle under to any "fathers" and never shall (see "queer-headedness").

1027 May it not therefore be said that there is a Jewish psychology too, which admits the prejudice of its blood and its history?

And may it not be asked wherein lie the peculiar differences between an essentially Jewish and an essentially Christian outlook?

Can it really be maintained that I alone among psychologists have a special organ of knowledge with a subjective bias, whereas the Jew is apparently insulted to the core if one assumes him to be.

Presumably he would not have one assume that his insights are the products of a mere cipher, or that his brain emerged only today from the featureless ocean of non-history.

I must confess my total inability to understand why it should be a crime to speak of "Jewish" psychology.

If 1 were in the position—as Dr. Bally supposes me to be—of not being able to point to a single difference between the two psychologies, it would amount to exactly the same thing as not being able to make plausible the difference between the peculiarities of the English and the Americans, or the French and the Germans.

I have not invented these differences; you can read about them in innumerable books and newspapers; as jokes they are on everybody’s tongue, and anyone who fails to see that there are one or two psychological differences between Frenchmen and Germans must have come from the back of beyond and know nothing about our European madhouse.

Are we really to believe that a tribe which has wandered through history for several thousand years as "God's chosen people" was not put up to such an idea by some quite special psychological peculiarity?

If no differences exist, how do we recognize Jews at all?

1029 Psychological differences obtain between all nations and races, and even between the inhabitants of Zurich, Basel, and Bern. (Where else would all the good jokes come from?)

There are in fact differences between families and between individuals.

That is why I attack every levelling psychology when it raises a claim to universal validity, as for instance the Freudian and the Adlerian.

All levelling produces hatred and venom in the suppressed and misjudged; it prevents any broad human understanding.

All branches of mankind unite in one stem—yes, but what is a stem without separate branches?

Why this ridiculous touchiness when anybody dares to say anything about the psychological difference between Jews and Christians? Every child knows that differences exist.

103° It seems to be generally assumed that in tabling the discussion of ethnological differences my sole purpose was to blurt out my "notorious" anti-Semitism.

Apparently no one believes that I—and others—might also have something good and appreciative to say.

Whatever it be, and however critical it be, I would never have the audacity to maintain that "ten tribes are accursed and two alone holy."

That saying comes from no Christian.

My criticism and appreciation will always keep well outside this glaring contrast, and will contain nothing that cannot be discussed civilly.

I express no value-judgments, nor do I intend any veiled ones.

I have been engaged for many years on the problem of imponderable differences which everybody knows and nobody can really define.

They are among the most difficult problems of psychology and probably for that reason are a taboo area which none may enter on pain of death.

To many people it is an insult if one credits them with a special psychological idiosyncrasy, and in dealing with parties and nations one must be even more careful.

That is why any investigation of these imponderables is so extraordinarily difficult, because, as well as doing his work, the investigator has to perform a grotesque egg-balancing dance around highly charged sensibilities.

It is high time the practicing psychologist understood more about these psychic imponderabilia, because from them arise a good half of the things that go wrong in the world.

Anyone who could define the nature of these imponderable differences would truly have gazed deep into the mystery of the human soul.

For my part, I do not belong to those savants who concern themselves exclusively with what is known already—an extremely useful activity, no doubt—but prefer to sniff around territories where nothing is yet known.

103 2 Consequently I am amused to find myself cast in the role of the nitwit who is unable to spot a single difference between Jews and Christians.

It is, in spite of Bally, an undoubted fact that the difference exists, just as water existed before the chemist discovered H20; but it cannot be grasped as yet, because all the views that have been put forward so far are unsatisfactory.

These purely cognitive difficulties have, however, nothing to do with the question of whether the imponderables exist.

I intend shortly to publish a few no doubt very inadequate and arguable apergus on this subject.

I am as little capable as anybody else of putting forward anything final, but I shall be content if I succeed in provoking discussion.

I would like to bring the parties together round a conference-table, so that they could at last get to know and acknowledge their differences.

Very often this sort of knowledge is the way to understanding. I wish I could do the same for the brothers in enmity on the left and right of the Rhine.

Naturally nothing like this can be attempted without inviting the kicks of both sides.

Would the cure be successful? The possibility of defeat in a good cause has never alarmed me.

But, my public will object, why raise the Jewish problem today of all days and in Germany of all places?

Pardon me, I raised it long ago, as anybody knows who is acquainted with the literature.

I did not speak about it only since the revolution; I have been officially campaigning for criticism of subjective psychological premises as a necessary reform in psychology ever since 1913.

This has nothing to do with the form of the German state.

If I am to be exploited for political ends, there’s nothing I can do to stop it.

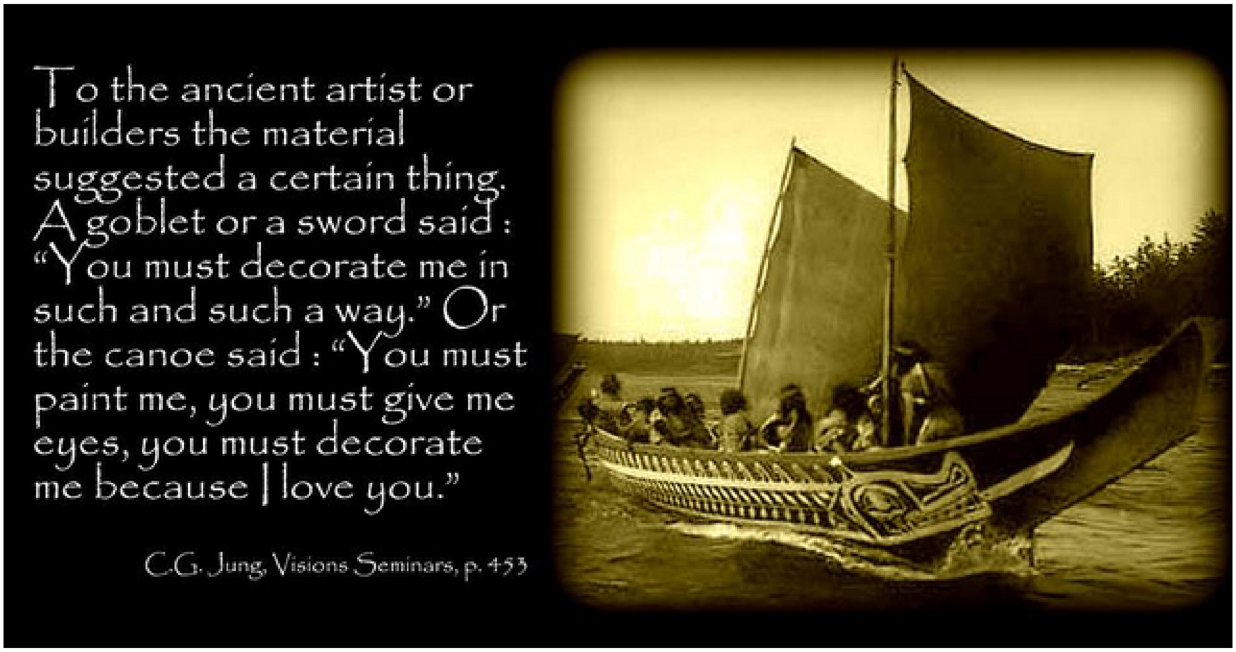
Or can anyone stop anything he pleases in Germany? It is rather late in the day for my critical attitude to attract attention only now, and it is, alas, characteristic that it should be construed in such a way as to suggest that Nazism alone has lent wings to my criticism.

It is, I frankly admit, a highly unfortunate and disconcerting coincidence that my scientific programme should, without any assistance of mine and against my express wish, have been lined up with a political manifesto.

But an event of this kind, although regrettable in itself, often has the consequence of ventilating problems which would otherwise be sedulously avoided. Carl Jung, CW 10, Pages 535-544

Carl Jung: The Gothic style is also in a way hysterical... (2019-11-12 04:30)

[1]



To the ancient artist or builders the material suggested a certain thing. A goblet or a sword said : "You must decorate me in such and such a way." Or the canoe said : "You must paint me, you must give me eyes, you must decorate me because I love you."

C.G. Jung, Visions Seminars, p. 453

This story makes one understand the extraordinary feeling for the material in old Chinese sculpture: the material spoke to them.

And it seems as if the marble in old Greek sculpture told the artist what the figure or the column should be like that he was about to make, what the marble wanted to become.

Do you remember, for instance, the two figures of the barbarian slaves in the Boboli gardens in Florence?

I advise you, the next time you are in Florence, to go first to the tomb of the Medici and look at Michelangelo's marbles there, and then take a taxi,don't look out of the window, but drive straight to the Boboli gardens, and there you will see the difference.

Those two figures of the barbarians are suggested by the stone, the stone speaks, it is really the stone; while in Michelangelo’s figures the stone has just nothing to say; you get an hysterical impression, you feel that he did something with the stone which never should have been done.

I had a feeling of nausea; I said, "Now this is hysteria."

It is the beginning of the Baroque style, and that was certainly not suggested by the stone.

The Gothic style is also in a way hysterical because it is not true to the nature of the stone; the builders suggested wood into the stone, and therefore they made buildings which are like plants.

And in antiquity they made the living ornament, like ivy, clutching the stone, not being the stone itself.

We have got very far away from the antique activity of the stone, when the spirit was still in the object and the object could suggest itself to the artists.

To the ancient artists or builders the material suggested a certain thing.

A goblet or a sword said: "You must decorate me in such and such a way."

Or the canoe said: "You must paint me, you must give me eyes, you must decorate me because I love you."

That was the relation, because the antiqueman was under the spell of the object. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Pages 452-453

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/12644-12bancient2bartist.jpg`

Self-Reflection (2019-11-12 04:34)

[1]

REFL
SELF REFLECTION

Self-Reflection:

Mental activity that concentrates on a particular content of consciousness, an instinct encompassing religion and the search for meaning.

Ordinarily we do not think of "reflection" as ever having been instinctive, but associate it with a conscious state of mind. Reflexio means "bending back" and, used psychologically, would denote the fact that the reflex which carries the stimulus over into its instinctive discharge is interfered with by psychization. . . . Thus in place of the compulsive act there appears a certain degree of freedom, and in place of predictability a relative unpredictability as to the effect of the impulse.["Psychological Factors in Human Behaviour," CW 8, par. 241.]

In Jung's view, the richness of the human psyche and its essential character are determined by the reflective instinct.

Reflection is the cultural instinct par excellence, and its strength is shown in the power of culture to maintain itself in the face of untamed nature.[Ibid., par. 243.]

Self-reflection, or – what comes to the same thing – the urge to individuation, gathers together what is scattered and multifarious and exalts it to the original of the One, the Primordial Man.

In this way our existence as separate beings, our former ego nature, is abolished, the circle of consciousness is widened, and because the paradoxes have been made conscious, the sources of conflict are dried up. Carl Jung;

Collected Works 11; Transformation Symbolism in the Mass; par. 401

To concern ourselves with dreams is a way of reflecting on ourselves-a way of self-reflection. It is not our ego-consciousness reflecting on itself; rather, it turns its attention to the objective actuality of the dream as a communication or message from the unconscious, unitary soul of humanity. It reflects not on the ego but on the self; it recollects that strange self, alien to the ego, which was ours from the beginning, the trunk from which the ego grew. It is alien to us because we have estranged ourselves from it through the aberrations of the conscious mind. "The Meaning of Psychology for Modern Man" (1933). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. pg. 318

If we do not fashion for ourselves a picture of the world, we do not see ourselves either, who are the faithful reflections of that world. Only when mirrored in our picture of the world can we see ourselves in the round? Only in our creative acts do we step forth into the light and see ourselves whole and complete. Never shall we put any face on the world other than our own, and we have to do this precisely in order to find ourselves. For higher than science or art as an end in itself stands man, the creator of his instruments. "Analytical Psychology and Weltanschauung" (1928). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.737

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/11/ffc00-self-reflection.jpg`

Carl Jung on Symbolic Love. (2019-11-12 04:36)

[1]
Dear Fraulein Kaufmann, 30 April 1936

I cannot possibly answer your question in a letter.

I think you would do best to take the whole problem of love as a miracu lum per gratiam Dei which nobody really understands.

It is always fate, whose ultimate roots we shall never dig out.

One shouldn’t let oneself be upset by God’s doings. The sublime nonsense or nonsensical sublimity of love may invite us to philosophic wonder.

The symbolic form of love (animus-anima) shrinks from nothing, least of all from sexual union.

There is a "real" partner only if you make him real.

Reality is an anthropomorphism.

You really ought to have asked this question when you were here.

Volumes could be written about it, which I shall on no account do, however.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Pages 213-214.

1. `file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-HbwMRYAcvRo/VGN-L5CltKI/AAAAAAAAMK8/HA3UGOefLmc/s1600/eros.jpg`

Carl Jung on the “Objective Psyche.” (2019-11-12 04:50)

[1]

Carl Jung and Jolandi Jacobi

[2]

Michael Fordham

[Carl Jung on the “Objective Psyche.”]

Dear Dr. Jacobi, 15 April 1948

I understand what Fordham means but it doesn’t agree at all with my view of the objective psyche.

We also speak of the "objective world," by which we do not mean that this objective world is the one we are conscious of.

There is no object of which we are totally conscious.

So, too, the collective unconscious becomes conscious in part and to the at extent it is then a conscious object.

But over and above that it is still present unconsciously, though it can be discovered.

It behaves exactly like the world of things, which is partly known, partly unknown, the unknown being just as objectively real as that which is known to me.

I chose the term "objective psyche" in contradistinction to "subjective psyche" because the subjective psyche coincides with consciousness, whereas the objective psyche does not always do so by any means.

I wanted to let you know my exact position so that you can make use of this definition if necessary.

With friendly greetings,

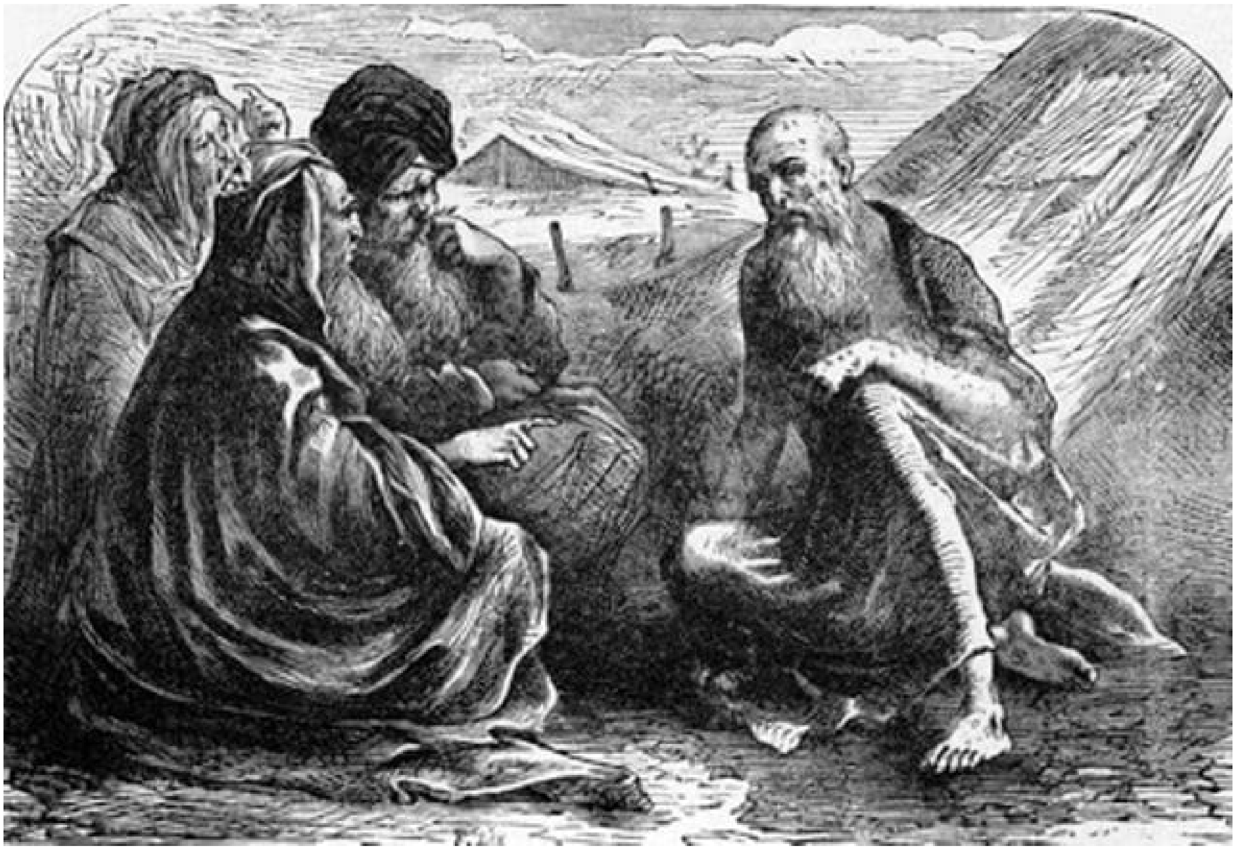
Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 497.

1. `file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-9cvuYQsOPps/VGM66K3CXKI/AAAAAAAAMIQ/cV8Fv889QiU/s1600/jolande.jpg`
2. `file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-mUAsrBu4eE4/VGM7GuFsh6I/AAAAAAAAMIY/8D1YR3CZ-tA/s1600/2.png`

How many will God break? (2019-11-12 04:54)

[1]



I must say this, not with reference to the opinions of the ancients or this or that authority; but because I have experienced it. It has happened thus in me. And it certainly happened in a way that I neither expected nor wished for. The experience of the God in this form was unexpected and unwanted. I wish I could say it was a deception and only too willingly would I disown this experience. But I cannot deny that it has seized me beyond all measure and steadily goes on working in me. So if it is a deception, then deception is my God. Moreover, the God is in the deception.

And if this were already the greatest bitterness that could happen to me, I would have to confess to this experience and recognize the God in it. No insight or objection is so strong that it could surpass the strength of this experience. And even if the God had revealed himself in a meaningless abomination, I could only avow that I have experienced the God in it. I even know that it is not too difficult to cite a theory that would sufficiently explain my experience and join it to the already known. I could furnish this theory myself and be satisfied in intellectual terms, and yet this theory would be unable to remove even the smallest part of the knowledge that I have experienced the God. I recognize the God by the unshakeableness of the experience. I cannot help but recognize him by the experience. I do not want to believe it, I do not need to believe it, nor could I believe it. How can one believe such? My mind would need to be totally confused to believe such things. Given their nature, they are most improbable.

Not only improbable but also impossible for our understanding. Only a sick brain could produce such deceptions. I am like those sick persons who have been overcome by delusion and sensory deception. But I must say that the God makes us sick. I experience the God in sickness. A living God afflicts our reason like a sickness. He fills the soul with intoxication. He fills us with reeling chaos. How many will the God break? Carl Jung; Red Book

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/11/02a8b-affliction2bof2bjob.jpg`

Tina Keller: “Man’s Powers” (2019-11-12 05:02)

Tina Keller: “Man’s Powers”

In spite of the importance of becoming really conscious of our human limitations and accepting these, there is something in us that powerfully denies them and wants to transcend them.

Paradoxically, it is when we are most aware of our human incapacity that something in us stirs, as if knowing that latent powers of another quality could awaken and lead us toward a new kind of experience.

I believe, with Teilhard de Chardin and others that man is in a process of further evolution; he is not yet what he was meant to be!

Most of us have experiences of special moments where we seem to be more than we are in our routine everyday life.

Some of us have known moments where we could feel a union of the opposites or a feeling of being outside time.

I remember times when I seemed to be in touch with greater powers.

When I fell in love for the first time at about 15, it was as if something opened in me. I felt as if I had not lived before.

My small self was enlarged; I was part of something bigger and stronger, yet intensely myself.

I had a self-assurance and a generosity different than before. I seemed capable of things I would not have imagined, something stronger was carrying me along.

But when disappointment came, I fell into a corresponding low, a feeling of emptiness took over.

Where before I had overflowed with love for everyone, now I was separated and seemed unable to come dose to anyone.

These opposite conditions showed me that I had been seized by a wave of life energy that lifted me in exaltation and then dropped me into a depression proving that both conditions were beyond my normal limits.

Again and again through life such experiences have repeated themselves.

Enthusiasm took hold of me, in particular in my work, where my imagination showed me new possibilities and an emotional wave lifted me beyond myself, so that at times I could accomplish things I would otherwise not have attempted.

When I was successful, I often forgot that this was not due to my limited person and so I became unrealistic and then had an unexpected setback.

The unconscious forces which at times increase our possibilities, come in waves and, while they allow us to be lifted beyond our ordinary boundaries at times, we need to remember their rhythm and prepare for a low to follow each high.

When I entered marriage I experienced our love relationship as a sacrament.

This image came to me spontaneously and I do not connect it with the fact that our marriage was consecrated in church.

I would have felt the same if we had not been married.

Imagination played an important part; both I and my husband seemed through imagination to be lifted out of ourselves.

There were always new discoveries that touched the mythological, such as when he said, "you let me experience something of Woman, the Unknown."

In such moments, I clearly felt the union of the opposites. I was truly myself as I was the focus of his affection.

But as I could fully give myself and let go, I seemed to melt into the great cosmic ocean.

I am reminded of the special conditions of an artist who, after trembling as a shy person before going on stage, when once there feels himself invested with a new quality where he or she can transmit something that is a gift beyond the small individual person.

Our personal lives thus in small ways carry echoes of the vast currents of life in general, and as we are struggling with our personal difficulties, we are in our small way also confronting world problems.

As we seek to solve our personal problems in a positive way, we are making our individual contribution to the general problem.

From the many individual tentative solutions, gradually new patterns will emerge.

I here think of the chief of a primitive tribe, who by his dreams and inner vision was able to guide his people across unknown land to a new place, where they could again find food.

Since such a time, when a chief was unconsciously so part of his small tribe that he could dream for them, everything has grown to such proportions that there is seldom someone so identified with the troubles of one specific small group that he would dream as if he were that group.

Groups are too large, problems too complex and the age of reason has built such strong barriers that the hopes of receiving answers from inside are almost nonexistent.

Those who carry such hope see it in rational terms and are mostly disappointed. Because of the strong barriers and the great distance between rational and irrational, finding the inner connection that could bring helpful answers is a long and arduous process.

Yet more and more, in very different places and under very different circumstances, modern persons are becoming increasingly open to inner promptings, urges, or even voices.

1. G. Jung's teachings and the attempts toward reaching psychological balance help toward discrimination of such inner messages.

Here and there a person gets in contact with a more general problem, when he himself becomes personally involved.

In this way Alexander Ziegler wrote a book called Consequence that calls attention to certain abuses and harms of prison life, because he was himself so deeply touched by the fate of a dose friend.

As he expresses his own pain and indignation, he stirs the emotions of others by his book, which to a great extent is autobiographical.

The psychologist Erikson has shown in his books Young Man Luther and Gandhi's Truth how at different times, when a man was personally deeply affected by a problem of his time and place, his personal solution had a decisive effect on many.

His individual emotional involvement gave him access to latent powers that lifted him beyond the personal.

It is emotion that seems to lift us into a condition where our ordinary limits are transcended.

All through the ages there have been persons whose interest and feeling reached out beyond their everyday preoccupations, while others around them seemed to see and feel only what immediately concerned themselves and their family.

A few seemed conscious of conditions around them.

They could not be happy while others were suffering and felt the tensions that were in the air and some were able, while suffering from the trouble and dilemma of their group, to find a new way, speak a word that showed a new truth, becoming pathfinders in an impasse.

In Luther's case, for instance, many people were troubled by the abuses that had crept into the church at that time.

Traveling monks had come from Rome and sold bonds promising the church's absolution from various sins.

The church’s pardon could be bought for money! Most people remained unconscious of what was at stake.

something an institution decrees is generally considered

"legitimate."

When should a member of an organization criticize and stand up against its decisions?

Such questions are becoming more and more acute today.

Many people obey blindly, many do the things that are most profitable for their personal interests.

Others feel uncomfortable; they feel "something should be done about it," but they themselves remain inactive.

The young man Luther was in such inner turmoil.

It was as if in his personal conscience there were acted out a whole battle between good and bad forces.

That which was really happening in the unconscious collective background, as a battle between spiritual reality and worldly tendencies toward power and riches, was played out in the emotions of that man, who became the mouthpiece for many.

In our present time C. G. Jung was one of the persons whose personal problem was also the problem of our age.

He seemed already as a child to have had intuitions and dreams of a collective nature.

As a very introverted and also a lonely child, fantasies had free play.

In his confrontation with the unconscious he was faced with the dissolution of outdated values and the flood of tentative new beginnings that stir in the collective unconscious and cause the present confusion in people.

He felt in danger of insanity and as he was able to give form and verbalize the irrational emotions, he brought insights to many and became a pioneer for dealing with non-rational powers.

Following his ideas gradually new ways may be found to channel the irrational as helpful powers.

While repressed, they had been threatening.

Dr. Jung often said how we were only at the very beginning in dealing with the unconscious and that our knowledge was quite inadequate as yet.

I heard him challenge his pupils to go on searching.

The English author Colin Wilson, in his book The Occult, tells of his deep search as to man’s latent powers.

He has no doubt that man is in an intermediate stage; he is not what he was meant to be.

There are latent potentials that he does not use, but that Colin Wilson finds exemplified here and there through the ages in various places.

Often persons having special gifts lacked the vision or the qualities of character needed to put such gifts to adequate use for the good of others.

Wilson deplores the passivity of people and how the majority have no wider interest beyond their personal concerns.

Few people find their life meaningful and fulfilled.

These questions become acute in our time because for the first time there is for most people more leisure.

Attention is no more primarily focused on survival, nor does the basic work for everyday necessities occupy all the time available.

But it would seem that when outer necessities do not oblige people to act, inertia takes over.

Yet there are always some who feel a motivation from within that gives their whole life incentive and meaning.

So the question arises: could not more people find motivation from within and thus escape boredom and find meaning for their lives?

The reporter and author Allen Spraggett who wrote the well known book The Unexplained, made a very careful study of Kathryn Kuhlman's healing missions in a book that carries her name and adds, "the woman who believes in miracles."

It is fascinating to read the description of this woman who combines living as a natural human being fully conscious of her limitations but who, when she goes on her mission, is invested with greater powers.

While she was just another evangelist preaching in many different places of the American Midwest, one day a woman announced that she had been healed.

During a sermon of Kathryn, she had had a strange sensation in her body and she "knew" she had been healed of a tumor.

Next day she had gone to her doctor who confirmed the healing. Kathryn Kuhlman felt this event as "the coming of the Power."

It divided her life into two phases and when asked about her life before, she said she had the feeling that the former Kathryn Kuhlman really is dead and a new person had taken her place in the healing services.

She told Allen Spraggett that she had had a great sorrow, a heartbreak, and it was then that she totally surrendered to God, giving him everything.

She said it was then that Kathryn Kuhlman died and then God, the Holy Spirit, came in.

According to Spraggett, she said that in the miracle services, when she walks out on that platform, she dies a thousand deaths.

She told him: "I walk so fast because I can hardly wait for the anointing of the Holy Spirit to come upon me."

Then Spraggett adds: "This is the altered state of consciousness in which Kathryn Kuhlman is caught up in mystic rapture. This is the ecstasy in which I have seen her."

Kathryn Kuhlman said to Mr. Spraggett: 'Tm glad I am stupid. I'm just as amazed as anybody else in the auditorium at what's happening and I know that I have nothing to do with it."

The latent powers in man seem to be neutral energies like nature forces, neither good nor bad.

It is here that man must awaken to his responsibility and that his insight, motivation, and discrimination are essential.

But as yet we can only see that certain persons are spontaneously invested with special powers.

We ask how could we come in contact with this latent source?

The question remains how the individual could contact and use his latent powers, be carried by them and yet direct them?

One can think of a rider who is able to tame a wild horse that becomes his friend and carries him, while the rider is in control and directs the course.

Colin Wilson speaks of Jung’s technique of active imagination as a way of contacting latent powers.

In active imagination Jung could see his emotions as images. Psychic forces became personified and he entered into dialogue with them.

Jung insisted that the ego must remain active and must never identify with any of the imaginary figures he "saw."

I have earlier described my own experience with active imagination,, where it was crucial when I refused to lend my voice to the "dark man" who addressed me.

I believe my example shows clearly how important the firm position of the ego is.

I can today gratefully testify to the help "Leonard" gives me as I visualize him during therapy sessions and he often brings up just what is needed, sometimes in my mind, but quite often in what comes up in the patient and is then expressed by him.

If you re-read Jung's "confrontation with the unconscious" as it is recorded in Memories, Dreams, Reflections, there stands out the idea that strong emotions could become images and some of these could become personified.

Through meaningful dialogue irrational elements could enter our life and bring helpful suggestion that brings about real change.

Jung wrote in the same book, in a later chapter, how all his life work was an elaboration of the emotional upheaval and its manifestations of the confrontation with the unconscious.

We cannot know details of what happened, except that emotions became images.

We know that Jung wrote and painted and carefully elaborated what had come to him.

We are also told of the figure called Philemon and of the dialogues Jung had with this figure walking in his garden.

There is not a recipe anyone could follow, for such inner experiences are different for each individual.

I know we need help for such encounters and I have tried to show how Toni Wolff gave me such help and I know that she gave such help to Dr. Jung and to others also.

Such encounters can be dangerous, probably more so, because the age of reason has so long and so fiercely repressed the irrational.

So the translation and discrimination is a long and arduous task and is probably only for those who feel definitely called to it.

There needs to be a real spirit of consecration and prayer for such confrontation to give positive results.

Yet I believe that many persons who feel inner tensions are in some way participating in the strong currents of changes that are in the air.

Instead of trying to discharge the modern psychological methods as advertised, such persons might consider letting the tensions become images by letting the hands model in clay, or draw or paint, or by letting the whole body express itself in "dance."

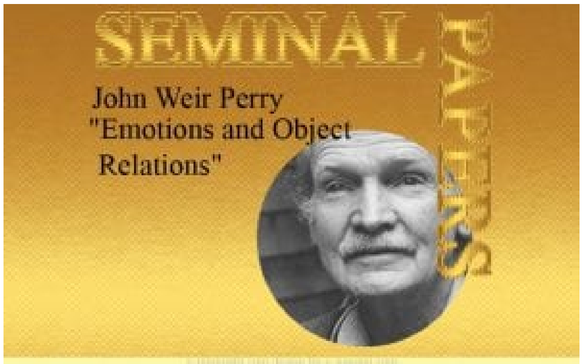
If one has no technique, it is all the better, because expression is then more spontaneous.

I am more and more convinced that much of our inner tension, perhaps even troubles which we attribute to sickness, are an inner need for expression and a way to articulate things we could not say in words, but that are realities we cannot as yet grasp.

Anyone can wait and ask "what does this trouble want to say to me?"

There is much to be discovered that cannot be taught. Tina Keller, Tina Keller Memoirs, Pages -125-132

John W. Perry: Jung's Influence On my Life and Work (2019-11-12 09:34)



My first encounter with Jung arose out of one of those auspicious blendings of circumstance which seem so often to mark the turning-points in one’s psychic life.

On behalf of my intent to embark upon the field of psychology and religion, my father arranged to meet Jung when in Zurich, and persuaded him to return the visit when attending the Harvard Tercentenary.

Since I was seeking a new and revitalized experience of religion, and my parent was a Bishop I can imagine this crisis in father figures might have appealed to Jung. However, the occasion found me young and innocent of the world, especially of the psychic one, and he did the only thing he could for my benefit-he talked almost steadily for two days, filling my head with a rich flow of psychic nourishment that took me several years to incorporate and digest.

Many of my Boston acquaintances were far better equipped than I to benefit by such a colloquy, and it bore heavily on me; only in retrospect can I look upon those days and feel justification in knowing that not many could have been so touched in the wordless deeps as to find the rest of their lives given shape by them.

I could not assent at the time to what Jung was telling me, though I found it strangely fascinating; the psyche I had been studying in classes and books had quite a different cast, and I felt an obligation to cleave to the scientific view and not wander away into what seemed to me to be bucolic pastures of European scholarship and erudition.

My analytic reading began shortly after with Freud’s works, which I devoured with avid enthusiasm and in which I thought I was finding the answer to all things human; I set about applying it all mercilessly to family and friends.

It was so satisfying to have an explanation for hidden things!

Dutifully I moved ahead in my reading program over the years, toward Jung and Adler and the rest.

The Psychology of the Unconscious, which I had already glanced through like a college text as a measure to ’brush up on Jung’ before seeing him, and had taken as a sort of code of symbols, I now greeted with different eyes, perhaps because by this time I had been in love and was no longer all closed up inside.

This new encounter with Jung was like emerging out of a tunnel into a broad and noble terrain, a real world, one of heights and depths, of living beings with an historical heritage and a future to strive toward.

The Secret of the Golden Flower lit up little flames in the interior recesses which have been glowing ever since.

The Jung of those earlier days in Providence came to life again and began to speak to my condition, and I began to sense that peculiar gratitude to him which most of us know so well.

During the war I received a second infusion of psychic nourishment which I could not fully digest, a rich inpouring of ways and views of the other side of the world, the Chinese Interior, and more than ever felt the need to find the way to assimilate it; for I was tempted, as happens with large experiences, to find my life in it rather than the harder alternative of finding it in my life.

Of several foundations I requested to send me to Zurich to prepare for the field of psychology and religion, the Rockefeller wrote back with alacrity to say they had for some while been wanting such a request and had been holding a special nest egg for the purpose.

At Zurich I had the good fortune to see the first beginnings of the germinating Institute, which was starting to embody the differentiation of one man's vision into its many facets to be developed by many individuals with their special gifts; it was heroic work on the part of that Curatorium to meet the many tribulations and establish a workable order.

I have since realized what a piece of good fortune it is to be able to immerse oneself in that psychic world for a solid block of time, which in the usual course of training in other areas one cannot do.

The heart that pulsed through that organism, of course, was Jung himself; for me his helping hand slipped into the opus from point to point to steer it on its course.

In the many talks we had on religion, while I was still naive enough, all that I heard seemed natural and more or less understandable, lighting up those obscure levels bit by bit.

What really hit me amidships and shook my timbers was a thrust in the other direction.

I was having that upside-down kind of growth that begins somewhere down in the psychic basement and reaches for the light of day.

I found that what I really wanted to hear, because it threw me into a new dimension of experience, was his comment on how and where religious content connects with everyday life.

Perhaps it was made particularly moving by the circumstance that he, in his late age v.: 1th its inward turning and its appetite for exploring the depths in their historical perspective, was reaching over that long span to my predicament of young years and was striking the keynote to which I could resonate.

When with his penetrating intuition Jung would point out these principles, he flung doors open to right and left for me, and with great intensity I retraced my way through the imagery of my dreams and discovered anew the vital connections between them and the emotional episodes which had been bearing me along as on a mountain torrent.

Here my quite active religious psyche was implanting itself in events and relationships, and, though it required struggling to reclaim it, at least it then came clothed in the warm colors of experience.

It was what I wanted of a religion, one that I had known at first hand in China, that sprang out of depths, but that entered into the life of everyday, into love, work, social issues, and concerns.

My efforts since then have been directed toward exploring the vital point of connection between the religious dynamisms and the outward life, where the archetype slips into the emotional setting, and thus where the supra-personal is one with the personal.

There has been no break in this as a religious quest, but I have felt it to be turned onto its course more than once by the hand of this man who was so well acquainted with the uncharted waters; yet it has come full circle around into psychiatry proper, where I can explore in mental disturbances that vital point of articulation (of joining) and learn how to restore to persons the personalness of their psychic life.

I need hardly enlarge on the point of this impression of Jung.

The vastness of his mind and vision, the dimensions illuminated by him, were for me gentle and serene in quality as :flooding sunlight; but what moved me like the grandeur of a storm was the genius of his hold on life and of his seeing into life, for perceiving the deepest operations of the psyche equally in the slumbering world of the night and the turbulence of the welter of the life of the day. John W. Perry, Contact with Jung, Pages 214-217

Carl Jung on the causality of fantasy (2019-11-13 02:27)

[1]

"The dream is the small hidden door in the deepest and most intimate sanctum of the soul...."
Carl Jung
www.jungquotes.com

To Henry A. Murray

My dear Dr. Murray, 10 September 1935

Thank you for your interesting letter.

I think going to Samoa is a very wonderful plan, but nothing for myself as I'm fettered to all sorts of obligations in Zurich.

Next summer I'm going to Harvard University,! as you probably will have heard, which is adventurous enough.

I'm sorry that I will not be able to see you, as you just then sail for the happy isles.

Look out that the paradise doesn't eat the bottom out of your soul.

It is dangerous ground, all the more so as one is not aware of it.

While writing this letter I received your second one.

I'm sorry for the delay of my answer, but I'm so overburdened with work that I'm really often quite unable to answer or even to read long letters.

My plans for summer 1936 are not yet fixed at all except that, as I say, I'm going to Harvard to endure a tercentenary. I don't know exactly what that means, but I imagine all sorts of tiresome things.

I'm also certain that many of my friends and acquaintances want to see me.

A bit of nature, I admit, would be rather heaven-sent, but it shouldn't be too far away and not too adventurous, as my wife is probably accompanying me.

Airplanes and such devilish inventions ought to be avoided.

To write the book you suggest would be a very difficult and expensive enterprise.

Concerning your trouble with the question of the causality of fantasy images, I want to say that it is certainly true that external conditions are the cause of inner reactions, but the external cause is only one condition of the reaction, the other condition is always the quality of the thing that reacts.

One cannot assume that at any time the thing that reacts has been a thing without quality.

In other words, the psyche as an inherent quality of the living body always had its peculiar and specific quality which is not equal to the nature of the external things.

A psychic image is, as you know, by no means identical with the external object itself.

It would be an unjustified assertion to assume that the psyche wholly derives from the influences of external facts, as it would be to assume that all external objects are nothing but projected images of the mind.

When you carefully study the primitive mind, you will see that primitives are in no way concerned with their personalities, but their personalities are very much concerned with themselves.

So the unconscious in them produces actions and images without their consciousness, as is the case in our dreams.

These images are surely answers to external facts and conditions, but they are the answers of the psyche and therefore produce accurate pictures of the psychic facts.

If you compare the sun myth to the actual experience of the senses, then you see the whole difference.

The conscious mind perceives the sun as a round celestial body, the unconscious produces a myth which in its imagery has nothing but a very faint relation with the actual perception of the senses.

If the Freudians say that this is nothing but infantile, then they are right in so far as these images begin to become actual already in childhood.

But they are all based upon the inherent qualities of the inherited psyche.

That’s the reason why with children you not too rarely find dreams that are anything but childish.

If one holds that the images the child produces always were childish impressions in the history of mankind, one only repeats what has been said before, namely that the peculiar reactions of the psyche already begin to manifest themselves in early childhood.

It is certainly a very great error to assume that the psyche is without qualities except those that are insinuated or suggested by external objects.

If that were the case, then our unconscious would only produce exact replicas of external facts, which is by no means the case.

I’m chiefly concerned with the psyche itself, therefore I’m leaving out body and spirit.

Philosophy and theology know all about spirit.

Physiology and medicine know all about the body, but I’m a humble psychologist whose particular metier is to investigate the peculiar nature of the psyche.

Body and spirit are to me mere aspects of the reality of the psyche.

Psychic experience is the only immediate experience.

Body is as metaphysical as spirit.

Ask the modern physicist what body is, they are coming fast across to the recognition of the reality of the psyche.

Sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 198-200.

1. `file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-UGgj5oohpUQ/VGRPFmCOitI/AAAAAAAAMPU/8d9sXC6XzTU/s1600/dream.jpg`

Books by Irene Champernowne [Jungian] (2019-11-13 04:03)

[1] A Memoir of
Toni Wolff
by Irene Champernowne

[2]Books by Irene Champernowne

[3]
The one
and only me
Champernowne, Irene

[4]Buy at Amazon here

[5]Books by Irene Champernowne

1. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-DAwjARvTTJs/VGTHpLJJzYI/AAAAAAAAMTE/Ol64ARy2Fpo/s1600/2.jpg
2. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0932630014/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_aymzub1DGZ47A
3. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-ffLcgB833rQ/VGTIM8sk4tI/AAAAAAAAMTM/zWlHNWQkChE/s1600/1.jpg
4. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0913592404/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_qxmzub0T65HR2
5. http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-irene-champernowne-jungian.html

---

Books by Linda Fierz-David (2019-11-13 04:07)

[1]

[2]

[3]Buy at Amazon here

[4] DREAMING IN RED
READING THE WOMEN'S DIONYSIAN INITIATION CHAMBER IN POMPEII
NOR HALL
LINDA FIERZ-DAVID

[5]Buy at Amazon here

[6] THE DREAM OF POLIPHILO
The Soul in Love
LINDA FIERZ-DAVID

[7]Buy at Amazon here

[8]
Women's Dionysian Initiation : The Villa of Mysteries in Pompeii

Fierz-David, Linda

Note: This is not the actual book cover

[9]Buy at Amazon here

[10]Books by Linda David-Fierz

1. `file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-uTb4UfEymHA/VGR_XnhFoCI/AAAAAAAAMPw/ujbePz3oolQ/s1600/5.jpg`
2. `file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-NzTBV937G_I/VGR_rY_gZgI/AAAAAAAAMP4/5XPqhEC9hd4/s1600/1.jpg`
3. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/088214510X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_VZhzub1MZB2Z4`
4. `file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-JRi4GcUplTY/VGSAPzAPdzI/AAAAAAAAMQE/2LwZnpNid4o/s1600/2.jpg`
5. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0882145517/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_s0hzub0ZFS9AP`
6. `file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-UrFMjbceW4A/VGSA_u1S_fI/AAAAAAAAMQM/4Jg3faTymYc/s1600/3.jpg`
7. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/088214507X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Q0hzub034J76K`
8. `file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-yF0mh6GOLV8/VGSB_giNZSI/AAAAAAAAMQY/j7JF0DsYVug/s1600/4.jpg`
9. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0882143379/ref=cm`
10. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-linda-fierz-david.html`

Books by Ann Ulanov [Jungian] (2019-11-13 04:10)

[1]
[2]
KNOTS AND THEIR UNTYING
ESSAYS ON PSYCHOLOGICAL DILEMMAS
ANN BELFORD ULANOV

[3]Buy Book here

[4] Ann and Barry Ulanov
The Healing IMAGINATION
The Meeting of Psyche and Soul
DAIMON

[5]Buy at Amazon here

[6] Madness & Creativity
ANN BELFORD ULANOV
Foreword by David H. Rosen

[7]Buy at Amazon here

[8] A psychology of prayer
PRIMARY
SPEECH
ANN & BARRY ULANOV

[9]Buy at Amazon here

[10] ANN BELFORD
ULANOV
The Unshuttered
HEART
Opening Aliveness / Deadness in the Self

[11]Buy at Amazon here

[12]The Feminine
in Jungian Psychology and in Christian Theology
Ann Belford Ulanov

[13]Buy at Amazon here

[14]CINDERELLA
& HER SISTERS
THE ENVIED
AND
THE ENVYING
ANN & BARRY ULANOV

[15]Buy at Amazon here

[16] Ann Belford Ulanov finding space
Winnicott, God, and
Psychic Reality

[17]Buy at Amazon here

[18] Transforming Sexuality
The Archetypal World of Anima and Animus
Ann & Barry Ulanov

[19]Buy at Amazon here

[20] ATTACKED
by POISON IVY
A Psychological Understanding
ANN BELFORD ULANOV

[21]Buy at Amazon here

[22]
The Witch and the Clown
Two Archetypes of Human Sexuality
ANN and BARRY ULANOV

[23]Buy at Amazon here

[24]Ann Belford Ulanov
Spiritual Aspects of Clinical Work
DAIMON

[25]Buy at Amazon here

[26]THE LIVING GOD AND OUR LIVING PSYCHE
WHAT CHRISTIANS CAN LEARN FROM
CARL JUNG
ANN BELFORD ULANOV AND ALVIN DUECK

[27]Buy at Amazon here

[28] Ann Belford Ulanov
Picturing God
DAIMON

[29]Buy at Amazon here

[30] RELIGION and the UNCONSCIOUS
Ann and Barry Ulanov

[31]Buy at Amazon here

[32]
RECEIVING
WOMAN
Studies in the Psychology and Theology of the Feminine
ANN BELFORD
ULANOV

[33]Buy at Amazon here

[34] THE
FEMALE ANCESTORS
OF CHRIST
ANN BELFORD ULANOV

[35]Buy at Amazon here

[36] Ann Belford Ulanov
The Wizards' Gate
Picturing Consciousness
DAIMON

[37]Buy at Amazon here

[38] Ann Belford Ulanov
Spirit in Jung
DAIMON

[39]Buy at Amazon here

[40] The Wisdom of the Psyche
Ann Belford Ulanov

[41]Buy at Amazon here

[42] The Functioning Transcendent
A Study in Analytical Psychology
Ann Belford Ulanov

[43]Buy at Amazon here

[44]Books by Ann Ulanov

1. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-3PL2kf0JaWA/VGTodSxuZGI/AAAAAAAAMTw/d_KyF6FEDjA/s1600/1.jpg
2. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-sAkCzYs2vd8/VGTonRkhvRI/AAAAAAAAMT4/_3IjUnZw9TE/s1600/4.jpg
3. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1935528637/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_cnozub19CKEE0
4. file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-ZNqh9wHLRig/VGTpRtxQvBI/AAAAAAAAMUE/-A6GSC4RAdI/s1600/5.jpg
5. http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856307214/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_0nozub0KPQVHV
6. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-0vV1OtQvlNs/VGTp0NDHojI/AAAAAAAAMUM/4dVO9WLJOkE/s1600/6.jpg
7. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1603449493/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_boozub1MJRNCA
8. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-4sxsalgetM4/VGTqRkVDFEI/AAAAAAAAMUU/XhirUmeWMQs/s1600/7.jpg
9. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0804211345/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_yoozub0M735MA
10. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-dnJtrqzrhw8/VGTqwysMYHI/AAAAAAAAMUc/1E97EUG2Hvs/s1600/8.jpg
11. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0687494664/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_2oozub1FNN594
12. file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-2_qUNOdFT5g/VGTrSUjxYWI/AAAAAAAAMUo/Li-OGPVRrTE/s1600/9.jpg
13. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0810103516/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Epozub0NS3H55
14. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-aLxIcpcXJ1A/VGTrvBgk6fI/AAAAAAAAMUw/WPnNNSB654I/s1600/10.jpg
15. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0664244823/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Xpozub0VG02PT
16. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-jB98-x8iOC4/VGTsTL8uIaI/AAAAAAAAMU4/HRaJcST7Qp8/s1600/11.jpg
17. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0664230504/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_pqozub09PSBHD
18. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-pCBJd5gzD70/VGTsuT0eeUI/AAAAAAAAMVA/bgG-jIWQMZg/s1600/12.jpg
19. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0877739862/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Lqozub1FB2DXQ
20. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-dgjdDbCzsQ4/VGTtJMru7XI/AAAAAAAAMVM/aLVu_0VFyZ4/s1600/13.jpg
21. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0892540583/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_.qozub1WPDKFH
22. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-1ZviMCSC5po/VGTtkwBchnI/AAAAAAAAMVU/W-oG52fRd68/s1600/14.jpg
23. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0933029071/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_srozub0472WSE
24. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-0pZR6NnrHc8/VGTuD7rGZOI/AAAAAAAAMVk/PAsdPGfqkHA/s1600/15.jpg
25. http://www.amazon.com/dp/385630634X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Qrozub12626VE
26. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-lyoJXKyqAOk/VGTucZ8tQ9I/AAAAAAAAMVw/FXSNHaE2PR8/s1600/16.jpg
27. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0802824676/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_dsozub031X8VD
28. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-D2a-Ua1lHMQ/VGTuyucD-uI/AAAAAAAAMV4/K_8ejyl9KdU/s1600/17.jpg
29. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0802824676/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_dsozub031X8VD
30. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-8uNtUfz-yTc/VGTvWRmDLvI/AAAAAAAAMWE/kgqs9nhDwYs/s1600/18.jpg
31. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0664246575/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_0uozub0HFD6R4
32. file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-HkSdiHV8UNw/VGTv2_xmg4I/AAAAAAAAMWM/yopSysG0oQo/s1600/19.jpg
33. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0664243606/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_rvozub12H301P
34. file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-kf-gFtKeoBg/VGTwSAr0ztI/AAAAAAAAMWY/FeaiV83l67Y/s1600/21.jpg
35. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0877739390/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_5vozub1PQ1C4M
36. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-KJwtzjFEwx8/VGTxAMYfVSI/AAAAAAAAMWo/s-6XTheVmV4/s1600/22.jpg
37. http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856305394/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Pwozub0ZFF561
38. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-2pVIAfUWULc/VGTxZ2qzlmI/AAAAAAAAMWw/fEOcWnhkBYU/s1600/23.jpg
39. http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856306986/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_.wozub0FYDAAA
40. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-RBUEJXFetE0/VGTxx7ry_cI/AAAAAAAAMW4/9x-no2cN-R4/s1600/24.jpg
41. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0936384611/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_vxozub04GG69H
42. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-1Mh-GPuZhYw/VGTyJjZzE-I/AAAAAAAAMXA/qkDKdsZ5Akw/s1600/25.jpg

43. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0933029993/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_1xozub1H3MKPX`

44. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-ann-ulanov-jungian.html`

Carl Jung: Something like a careful shaping of images, such as many patients paint or carve in wood or stone. (2019-11-13 04:30)

[1]

To Dr. S.

Dear Colleague, 10 May 1938

In the confrontation with the unconscious there are indeed a considerable number of arid patches to be worked through.

They cannot be circumvented.

At such time it is a good thing to have some occupation which has the character of an opus divinum.

Something like a careful shaping of images, such as many patients paint or carve in wood or stone.

These primitive methods have the great advantage that the unconscious continues to work on these patterns, is enthralled and transformed by them.

Naturally I can't go into further details as you have to take your own material for a starting-point.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 245

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

Great Sites to visit:

1. Jenna Lilla's Path of the Soul http://jennalilla.org/
2. Steve Jung-Hearted Parker's Jung Currents http://jungcurrents.com/
3. Frith Luton's Jungian Dream Analysis and Psychotherapy: http://frithluton.com/articles/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/bbbfd-222bdr-2bs.jpg`

Carl Jung: " Music certainly has to do with the collective unconscious..." (2019-11-13 04:32)

[1]

[Carl Jung on Music and the Collective Unconscious]

To Serge Moreux

Dear M. Moreux, 20 January 1950

While I thank you for your kind letter, I must tell you that unfortunately I am obliged to limit my activity for reasons of age and health, and so it will not be possible for me to write an article for the projected number of Polyphonie.

Music certainly has to do with the collective unconscious-as the drama does too; this is evident in Wagner, for example.

Music expresses, in some way, the movement of the feelings (or emotional values) that cling to the unconscious processes.

The nature of what happens in the collective unconscious is archetypal, and archetypes always have a numinous quality that expresses itself in emotional stress.

Music expresses in sounds what fantasies and visions express in visual images.

I am not a musician and would not be able to develop these ideas for you in detail.

I can only draw your attention to the fact that music represents the movement, development, and transformation of motifs of the collective unconscious.

In Wagner this is very clear and also in Beethoven, but one finds it equally in Bach's "Kunst der Fuge."

The circular character of the unconscious processes is expressed in the musical form; as for example in the sonata's four movements, or the perfect circular arrangement of the "Kunst der Fuge," etc.

I am with best regards,

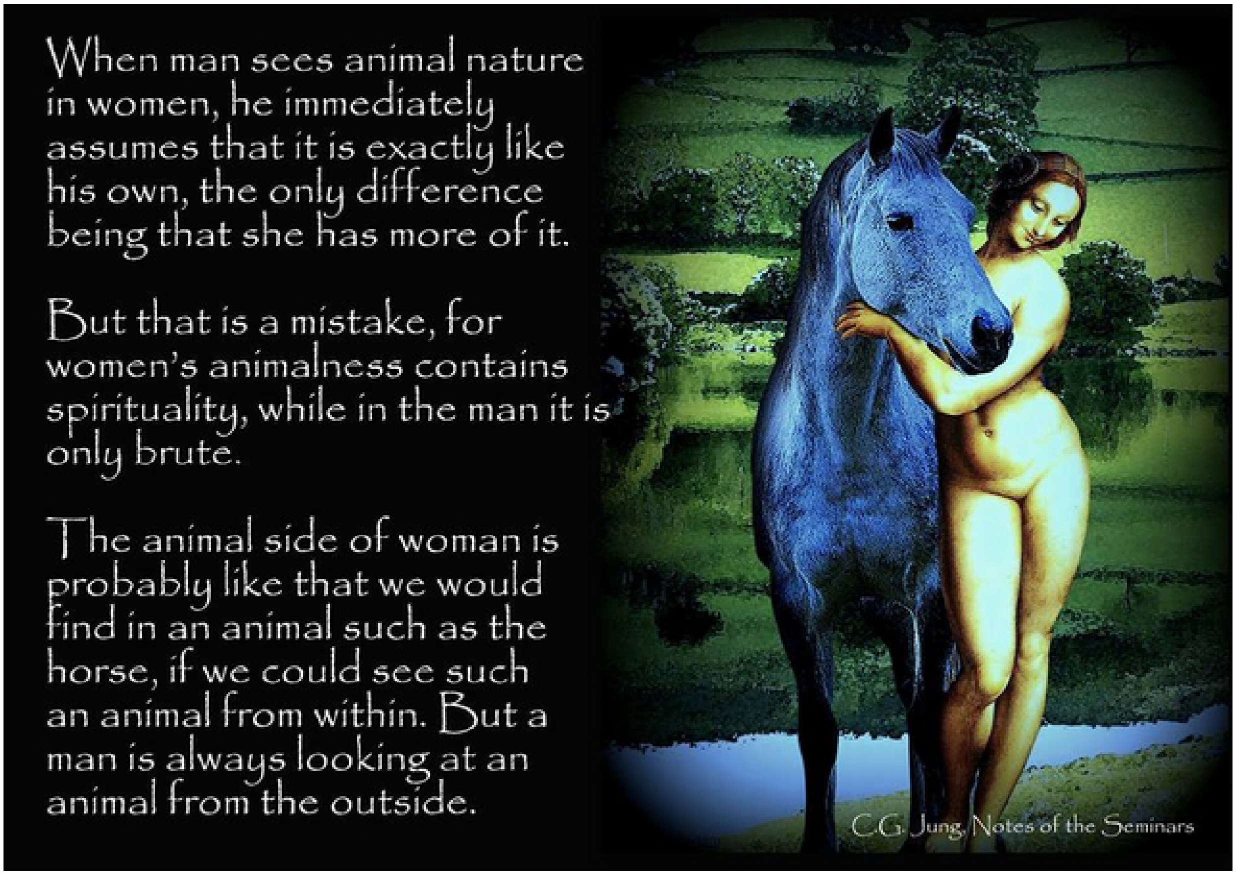
Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 542.

1. `file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-38hAS8T180M/VGTc5ALqUeI/AAAAAAAAMTg/RUQjdeayAwU/s1600/music.jpg`

Carl Jung: I would like now to try to present to you something about the psychology of women.. (2019-11-13 04:48)

[1]



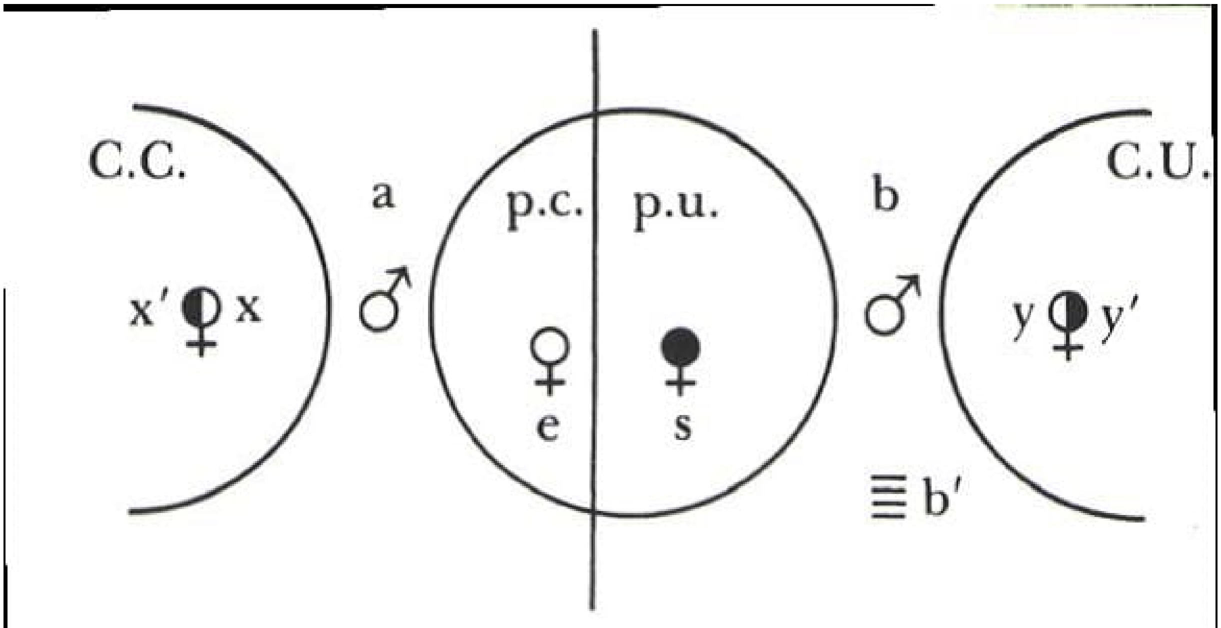
When man sees animal nature in women, he immediately assumes that it is exactly like his own, the only difference being that she has more of it.

But that is a mistake, for women's animalness contains spirituality, while in the man it is only brute.

The animal side of woman is probably like that we would find in an animal such as the horse, if we could see such an animal from within. But a man is always looking at an animal from the outside.

C.G. Jung, Notes of the Seminars

"I would like now to try to present to you something about the psychology of women, using this same diagram, with a few changes (see Diagram 4 in comments).



The symbols C.C., p.c., p.u., and C.U. remain the same as in Diagram 3.

x′x = Fused dual aspect of the Collective Conscious.
yy′ = Fused dual aspect of the Collective Unconscious.
a = Real man or absolute object.
b = Animus.
b′ = Plurality of animuses.

We may say that the real man is seen by the woman on his bright side, and that her relationship to the real man is a comparatively exclusive one— that in this respect, it is just the opposite of the average relation of a man to the real woman. In a man this relationship is not exclusive.

When the average man permits comparison of his wife with other women he says, “She is my wife among women.”

To the woman, though, the object that personifies the world to her (a in our diagram) is my husband, my children, in the midst of a relatively uninteresting world.

This “unique” husband has a shadow side for the wife, just as we saw in the case of the man in relation to the real woman.

Similarly the animus has a bright and a dark side, but balancing the unique man in the conscious, we have in the unconscious of woman a multitude of animus figures.

Man understands his relation to his anima as being a highly emotional affair, while woman’s relation to her animus is more in the Logos field.

When a man is possessed by his anima, he is under peculiar feelings, he cannot control his emotions, but is controlled by them.

A woman dominated by her animus is one who is possessed by opinions. Nor is she too discriminating about these opinions.

She can easily say, “In nineteen hundred and so and so, Papa said this to me,” or, “Some years ago a man with a white beard told me this was true,” and so it remains true for her into eternity. It is felt as a silent prejudice by a man who meets this phenomenon in a woman.

It is something exceedingly baffling to him, and irritating to a degree through its power and invisibility. Now then we come to the woman’s relation to the collective conscious.

Since I have not a woman’s feelings, I am perhaps not competent to throw much light on what that relationship is, but inasmuch as the family seems the real basis of a woman’s life, perhaps it would be fair to say that her attitude toward the world of the conscious is that of a mother.

A woman too has a peculiar attitude toward nature, much more trusting than that of a man.

She is always saying, “Oh, well that will come out all right,” just when a man is ready to explode with anxiety.

There must be something like this to account for the fact that there are three times more suicides among men than among women.

But we can always find that, though there is not the marked split in the woman’s relation to the collective conscious that occurs in man, still there is enough of duality to permit us to make a symbol such as x’x.

In other words, the woman sees that the dear old god who is going to make everything come out all right has moods of his own, so one must not be too trusting.

This is the element of skepticism, the shadow side. Men tend to separate x and x’. Women tend to take them together.

If you listen to an argument between men you can always hear them keeping the negative and the positive aspects of the subject distinct; they may discuss now the one, now the other.

But begin an argument with a woman in which the premise carries in it this principle of discrimination, and in about two minutes she has shot through your whole logical structure by bringing the positive right into the middle field of the negative aspect and vice versa.

Nor can you ever persuade her that she has thus destroyed the logic of the discussion.

To her way of thinking, the two belong very close together.

This struggle for a principle of unity runs through all her psychological processes, just as the opposite principle, that of discrimination, runs through those of man.

Now when it comes to the unconscious of the woman, the picture becomes obscure indeed.

I think there again is to be found the figure of a mother, and again she has a dual aspect, but in a peculiar way.

As we saw with man, he has the definite division into good and bad, Cosmos and Chaos, but in woman's collective unconscious it is a fusion of the human with the animal.

I have been tremendously impressed with the animal character of the unconscious of woman, and I have reason to think that her relation to the Dionysian element is a very strong one.

It looks to me as if man were really further away from the animal than the woman—not that he has not a strong animal likeness in him, but it is not so psychological as in women.

It is as though in men the animal likeness stopped at the spinal cord while in women it extends into the lower strata of the brain, or that man keeps the animal kingdom in him below the diaphragm, while in women it extends throughout her being.

When man sees this fact in women, he immediately assumes that the animal nature of women is exactly like his own, the only difference being that she has more of it.

But that is altogether a mistake, for their animalness contains spirituality, while in the man it is only brute.

The animal side of woman is probably like that we would find in any such an animal as the horse, if we could see such an animal from within itself instead of just from the outside as we do see it.

If we were viewing the psychic life of a horse from within, it would appear very strange to us.

But a man is always looking at an animal from the outside—he has not the psychic animalness in his unconscious that a woman has in hers. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 121 -124

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http://www.blogger.com/home

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/591d9-1horse.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/641a9-1diagram2b4.jpg`

Joseph B. Wheelwright Jung’s Influence on the American Scene (2019-11-13 05:36)

Jung’s influence on the American psychiatric scene is diffuse and obscure-but not inconsiderable.

And for the most part it is unacknowledged.

Neo-Freudian schools have extensively developed two of Jung’s early concerns.

I refer to the ego-psychologists and the Sullivan school of interpersonal processes.

It has become usual for Jungians to focus on the collective unconscious-on the second half of life.

This is important in a country that identifies with youth, like America. But the collective demand has been for clarification of the problems of the first half of life.

Traditionally, the Freudians have assessed man in terms of the first five years of life.

Also, Freud tended to pass over the ego, except in terms of its defensive function.

So it is an advance that they are now concerned with its affirmative aspects.

The outstanding contributor in this increasingly prominent field is Erik Erikson, who is essentially oriented to health and growth in a way that is by no means incompatible with early Jung.

Sullivan based his approach on a concept of participant observation.

His work was greatly furthered by Frieda Fromm Reichmann, who knew how and when to express feeling for her patients. She was also notable for her quiet pride in being a woman and in being Jewish.

These qualities are more frequently found in Jungian than Freudian circles, though she always thought of herself as a psycho-analyst.

But the keystone of this school-the notion of participant-observation-was presaged by Jung before Sullivan appeared.

I am referring to Jung's statement that the analyst Jung's Influence on the American Scene found himself in a strange position-that he was at the same time the subject and the object of the therapeutic transaction.

Fromm Reichmam and I agreed that these formulations were equivalent.

Two groups of psychologists have been using Jung's types as adjuncts in recent projects.

One of these has been a study on creativity by the Institute of Personality Assessment and Research at the University of California.

The other group is the Educational Testing Service in Princeton.

They are investigating several colleges to find out the qualities each place thinks desirable, as compared with the qualities actually found, in the students.

The number of Jungian analysts in America is very small probably in the ratio of about I to 25, as compared with the Freudians.

There are three modest training centers located in New York, Los Angeles, and San Francisco.

The latter group has about twenty members, fourteen of whom are M.D.s, five are Ph.D.s in clinical psychology, and one is an accredited lay analyst.

There are ten to twelve candidates in training.

The San Francisco group is active in medical and psychological circles, so that some of us have had a good deal of friendly and rewarding interaction with the Freudians and psychologists of other schools. Each year one or two psychiatric residents come into our program.

I have lectured on Jung at many of the psychoanalytic training centers across the country.

There has usually been a warm reception and lively discussion, and evidence of aroused curiosity.

Though we are a very small voice in the medical and psychological worlds, most of us have more patient applications than we can handle.

So there seem to be many people who need what we have to offer.

Also, they are attracted to our lack of authoritarianism and our willingness to relate to them humanly attitudes that were so characteristic of Jung.

Jung had a horror of over-organization.

He was well aware that rigidity in institutions is a constant danger and that a man who is identified with an orthodoxy is inaccessible.

One cannot communicate with an institution.

He once told me that he supposed an organization was necessary, but that he thought it should be as disorganized as possible.

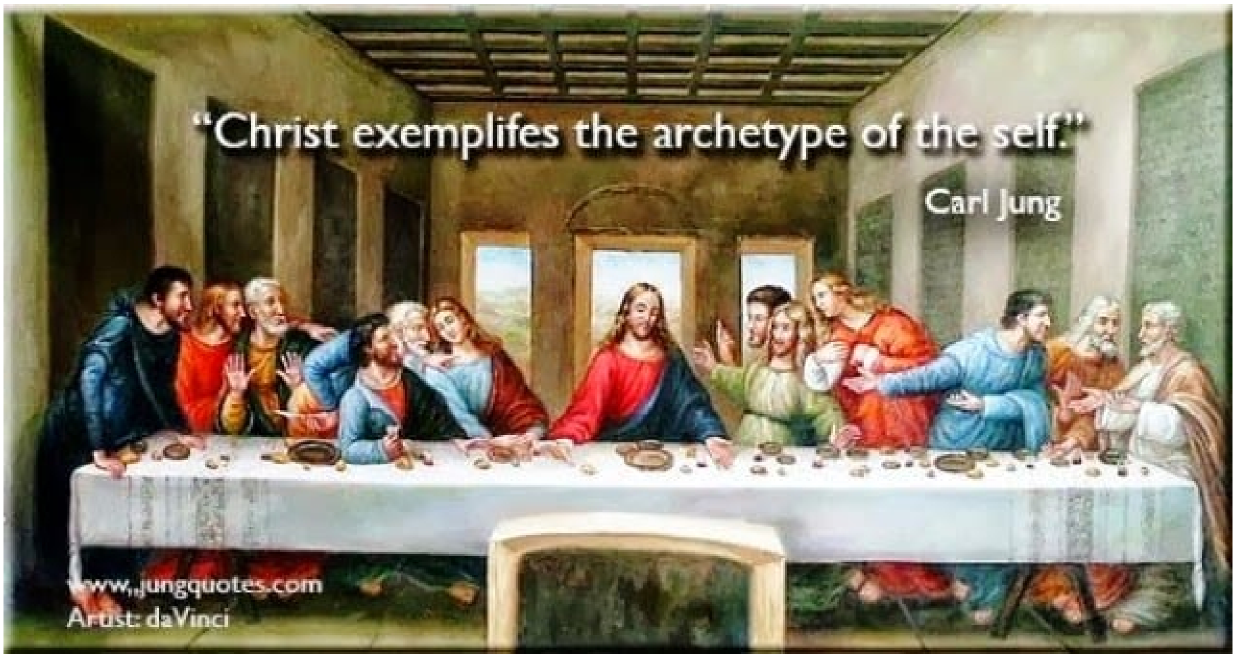
I think we have followed the spirit, if not the letter, of this attitude.

It will probably keep our groups small, but most of us welcome this.

And, because of it, paradoxically, I think we shall be more effective. Joseph Wheelwright, Contact with Jung, Pages 210-211

Carl Jung on the Archetype of the Self (2019-11-14 04:06)

[1]



[Carl Jung on the Archetype of the Self]

To Bernhard Milt

Dear Colleague, 13 April 1 946

Very tardily I am at last getting down to answering your kind letter of 28 November 45 •

By way of excuse I can only plead that I have not yet regained my former working capacity.

I beg you, therefore, to pardon my negligence.

You raise in your letter the question of the archetype of the self.

As you rightly suppose, this archetype is not so much a working hypothesis as something that is found.

There are, as I have shown for instance in Psychology and Alchemy with the help of empirical material, typical symbols in dreams which, faute de mieux, I have called symbols of wholeness or of the self.

I have also gone into the reasons for this nomenclature.

I have often asked myself whether the term "archetype" (primordial image) is a happy one.

In general I find it most disadvantageous to let neologisms run riot in any science.

The science then becomes too specialized in an unjustifiable way and loses contact with the world.

I therefore prefer to use terms that are also current in other fields, at the risk of provoking occasional misunderstandings.

For instance, Jakob Burckhardt applied the term "primordial image" to Faust and with every conceivable psychological justification.

Equally, I believe, the word "archetype" is thoroughly characteristic of the structural forms that underlie consciousness as the crystal lattice underlies the crystallization process.

I must leave it to the philosopher to hypostatize the archetype as the Platonic eidos.

He wouldn't be so far from the truth anyway.

The expression is much older than Augustine.

It is found with a philosophical stamp as far back as the Corpus Hermeticum, where God is called the "archetypal light."

In Augustine, who was still a Platonist, the archetype has absolutely the connotation of a primordial image, and so far as it is meant Platonically it does not agree at all badly with the psychological version.

The old Platonic term differs from the psychological one only in that it was hypostatized, whereas our "hypostatization" is simply an empirical statement of fact without any metaphysical colouring.

Frischknecht is wrangling with me badly.

I get a letter from him from time to time. Recently I had to spell it out to him that the theologian looks at the world through the good Lord's eyes, but the scientist only through human eyes.

In his essay on Brother Klaus he has not even noticed that he has tacitly imputed to me Freud's personalistic standpoint, without remarking that this is just what I have been criticizing Freud for these last 30 years.

Basically I have every sympathy with the difficulties of the theologian.

It is no small matter to have to admit that in the end all dogmatic assertions are human statements-with, as I always emphasize, quite definite psychic experiences underlying them .

Considering the extraordinary difficulty of epistemological self-limitation it is really not surprising that any number of misunderstandings come about.

I am quite sure that if I had chosen any other term for the archetype, misunderstandings of another colour would have cropped up, but they would have cropped up anyhow.

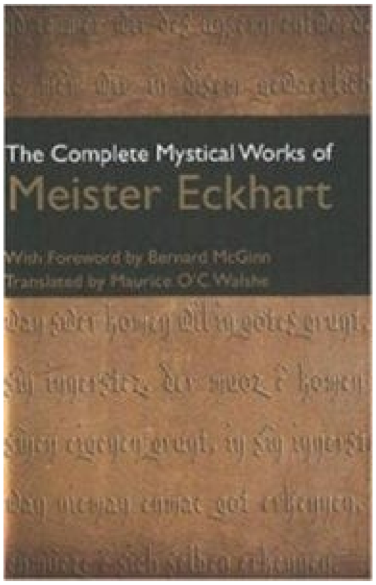
With collegial regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Page

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/8b719-self.jpg`

Meister Eckhart: Sermon I (2019-11-14 04:08)



SERMON ONE (Pf 1, Q 1 0 1 , QT 57)

DUM MEDIUM SI LENTIUM TENERENT OMNIA ET NOX IN SUO CURSU MEDIUM ITER HABERET, ETC. (Wisdom 18:14)

Here, in time, we are celebrating the eternal birth which God the Father bore and bears unceasingly in eternity, because this same birth is now born in time, in human nature.

St. Augustine says, 'What does it avail me that this birth is always happening, if it does not happen in me?

That it should happen in me is what matters.'

We shall therefore speak of this birth, of how it may take place in us and be consummated in the virtuous soul, whenever God the Father speaks His eternal Word in the perfect soul.

For what I say here is to be understood of the good and perfected man who has walked and is still walking in the ways of God; not of the natural, undisciplined man, for he is entirely remote from, and totally ignorant of this birth.

There is a saying of the wise man, "When all things lay in the midst of silence, then there descended down into me from on high, from the royal throne, a secret word."

This sermon is about that Word.

Three things are to be noted here.

The first is, where in the soul God the Father speaks His Word, where this birth takes place and where she is receptive of this act, for that can only be in the very purest, loftiest, subtlest part that the soul is capable of.

In very truth, if God the Father in His omnipotence could endow the soul with anything more noble, and if the soul could have received from Him anything nobler, then the Father would have had to delay the birth for the coming of this greater excellence.

Therefore the soul in which this birth is to take place must keep absolutely pure and must live in noble fashion, quite collected and turned entirely inward, not running out through the five senses into the multiplicity of creatures, but all in turned and collected and in the purest part -there is His place; He disdains anything less.

The second part of this sermon has to do with man's conduct in relation to this act, to God's speaking of this Word within, to this birth: whether it is more profitable for man to co-operate with it, so that it may come to pass in him through his own exertion and merit by a man's creating in himself a mental image in his thoughts and disciplining himself that way by reflecting that God is wise, omnipotent, eternal, or whatever else he can imagine about God – whether this is more profitable and conducive to this birth from the Father; or whether one should shun and free oneself from all thoughts, words, and deeds and from all images created by the understanding, maintaining a wholly God-receptive attitude, such that one's own self is idle, letting God work within one.

Which conduct conduces best to this birth?

The third point is the profit, and how great it is, which accrues from this birth.

Note in the first place that in what I am about to say I shall make use of natural proofs, so that you yourselves can grasp that it is so, for though I put more faith in the scriptures than in myself, yet it is easier and better for you to learn by means of arguments that can be verified.

First we will take the words, 'In the midst of silence there was spoken within me a secret word.' - 'But sir where is the silence, and where is the place where the word is spoken?' - As I said just now, it is in the purest thing that the soul is capable of, in the noblest part, the ground8 - indeed, in the very essence of the soul which is the soul's most secret part.

There is the silent 'middle,' for no creature ever entered there and no image, nor has the soul there either activity or understanding; therefore she is not aware there of any image, whether of herself or of any other creature.

Whatever the soul effects, she effects with her powers.

What she understands, she understands with the intellect.

What she remembers, she does with memory; if she would love, she does that with the will, and thus she works with her powers and not with her essence.

Every external act is linked with some means.

The power of sight works only through the eyes; otherwise it can neither employ nor bestow vision, and so it is with all the other senses.

The soul's every external act is effected by some means.

But in the soul's essence there is no activity, for the powers she works with emanate from the ground of being.

Yet in that ground is the silent 'middle': here nothing but rest and celebration for this birth, this act, that God the Father may speak His word there, for this part is by nature receptive to nothing save only the divine essence, without mediation.

Here God enters the soul with His all, not merely with a part. God enters here the ground of the soul.

None can touch the ground of the soul but God alone.

No creature can enter the soul's ground, but must stop outside, in the 'powers.' Within, the soul sees clearly the image whereby the creature has been drawn in and taken lodging.

For whenever the powers of the soul make contact with a creature, they set to work and make an image and likeness of the creature, which they absorb.

That is how they know the creature.

No creature can come closer to the soul than this, and the soul never approaches a creature without having first voluntarily taken an image of it into herself.

Through this presented image, the soul approaches creatures - an image being something that the soul makes of (external) objects with her own powers.

Whether it is a stone, a horse, a man, or anything else that she wants to know, she gets out the image of it that she has already taken in, and is thus enabled to unite herself with it.

But for a man to receive an image in this way, it must of necessity enter from without through the senses.

In consequence, there is nothing so unknown to the soul as herself.

Accordingly, one master says that the soul can neither create nor obtain an image of herself.

Therefore she has no way of knowing herself, for images all enter through the senses, and hence she can have no image of herself.

And so she knows all other things, but not herself.

Of nothing does she know so little as of herself, for want of mediation.

And you must know too that inwardly the soul is free and void of all means and all images - which is why God can freely unite with her without form or likeness.

Whatever power you ascribe to any master, you cannot but ascribe that power to God without limit.

The more skilled and powerful the master, the more immediately is his work effected, and the simpler it is.

Man requires many means for his external works; much preparation of the material is needed before he can produce them as he has imagined them.

But the sun in its sovereign mastery performs its task (which is to give light) very swiftly: the instant its radiance is poured forth, the ends of the earth are full of light. More exalted is the angel, who needs still less means for his work and has fewer images.

The highest Seraph has but a single image: he seizes as a unity all that his inferiors regard as manifold.

But God needs no image and has no image: without any means, likeness, or image God operates in the soul - right in the ground where no image ever got in, but only

He Himself with His own being.

This nocreature can do.

’How does God the Father give birth to His Son in the soul – like creatures, in images and likenesses?’

No, by my faith, but just as He gives birth to him in eternity – no more, no less.

’Well, but how does He give birth to him then?’

Now see: God the Father has a perfect insight into Himself, profound and thorough knowledge of Himself by Himself, and not through any image.

And thus God the Father gives birth to His Son in the true unity of the divine nature.

See, it is like this and in no other way that God the Father gives birth to the Son in the ground and essence of the soul, and thus unites Himself with her.

For if any image were present there would be no real union, and in that real union lies the soul’s whole beatitude.

Now, you might say, there is by nature nothing in the soul but images. Not at all!

If that were so, the soul could never become blessed, for God cannot make any creature from which you can receive perfect blessedness - otherwise God would not be the highest blessing and the final goal, whereas it is His nature to be this, and it is His will to be the alpha and omega of all things.

No creature can constitute your blessedness, nor can it be your perfection here on earth, for the perfection of this life - which is the sum of all the virtues - is followed by the perfection of the life to come.

Therefore you have to be and dwell in the essence and in the ground, and there God will touch you with His simple essence without the intervention of any image.

No image represents and signifies itself: it always aims and points to that of which it is the image.

And, since you have no image but of what is outside yourself (which is drawn in through the senses and continually points to that of which it is the image), therefore it is impossible for you to be beatified by any image whatsoever.

And therefore there must be a silence and a stillness, and the Father must speak in that, and give birth to His Son, and perform His works free from all images.

The second point is, what must a man contribute by his own actions, in order to procure and deserve the occurrence and the consummation of this birth in himself?

Is it better to do something toward this, to imagine and think about God? - or should he keep still and silent in peace and quiet and let God speak and work in him, merely waiting for God to act?

Now I say, as I said before, that these words and this act are only for the good and perfected people, who have so absorbed and assimilated the essence of all virtues that these virtues emanate from them naturally, without their seeking; and above all there must dwell in them the worthy life and lofty teachings of our Lord Jesus Christ.

They must know that the very best and noblest attainment in this life is to be silent and let God work and speak within.

When the powers have been completely withdrawn from all their works and images, then the Word is spoken.

Therefore he said, ’In the midst of the silence the secret word was spoken unto me.’

And so, the more completely you are able to draw in your powers to a unity and forget all those things and their images which you have absorbed, and the further you can get from creatures and their images, the nearer you are to this and the readier to receive it.

If only you could suddenly be unaware of all things, then you could pass into an oblivion of your own body as St. Paul did, when he said, "Whether in the body I cannot tell, or out of the body I cannot tell;
God knows it" (2 Cor.12:2).

In this case the spirit had so entirely absorbed the powers that it had forgotten the body: memory no longer functioned, nor understanding, nor the senses, nor the powers that should function so as to govern and grace the body; vital warmth and body-heat were suspended, so that the body did not waste during the three days when he neither ate nor drank.

Thus too Moses fared, when he fasted for forty days on the mountain and was none the worse for it, for on the last day he was as strong as on the first.

In this way a man should flee his senses, turn his powers inward and sink into an oblivion of all things and himself.

Concerning this a master addressed the soul thus: ’Withdraw from the unrest of external activities, then flee away and hide from the turmoil of inward thoughts, for they but create discord.’ And so, if God is to speak His Word in the soul, she must be at rest and at peace, and then He will speak His Word, and Himself, in the soul - no image, but Himself!

Dionysius says, ’God has no image or likeness of Himself, for He is intrinsically all goodness, truth and being.’ God performs all His works, whether within Himself or outside of Himself, in a flash.

Do not imagine that God, when He made heaven and earth and all things, made one thing one day and another the next. Moses describes it like that, but he really knew better: he did so for the sake of people who could not conceive or grasp it any other way.

All God did was this: He willed, He spoke, and they were!

God works without means and without images, and the freer you are from images, the more receptive you are for His inward working, and the more introverted and self-forgetful, the nearer you are to this.

Dionysius exhorted his pupil Timothy in this sense saying, ’Dear son Timothy, do you with untroubled mind soar above yourself and all your powers, above ratiocination and reasoning, above works, above all modes and existence, into the secret still darkness, that you may come to the knowledge of the unknown super-divine God.’

There must be a withdrawal from all things.

God scorns to work through images.

Now you might say, ’What does God do without images in the ground and essence?’

That I cannot know, because my soul-powers receive only in images; they have to know and lay hold of each thing in its appropriate image.

They cannot recognize a horse when presented with the image of a man; and since all things enter from without, that knowledge is hidden from my soul - which is to her great advantage.

This not-knowing makes her wonder and leads her to eager pursuit, for she perceives clearly that it is, but does not know how or what it is.

Whenever a man knows the causes of things, then he at once tires of them and seeks to know something different.

Always clamoring to know things, is forever inconstant.

And so this unknown-knowing keeps the soul constant and yet spurs her on to pursuit.

About this, the wise man said, "In the middle of the night when all things were in a quiet silence, there was spoken to me a hidden word.

It came like a thief by stealth" (Wisd. 18:14-15).

Why does he call it a word, when it was hidden ?

The nature of a word is to reveal what is hidden. It revealed itself to me and shone forth before me, declaring something to me and making God known to me, and therefore it is called a Word.

Yet what it was, remained hidden from me.

That was its stealthy coming in a whispering stillness to reveal itself.

See, just because it is hidden one must and should always pursue it.

It shone forth and yet was hidden: we are meant to yearn and sigh for it.

St. Paul exhorts us to pursue this until we espy it, and not to stop until we grasp it.

After he had been caught up into the third heaven where God was made known to him and he beheld all things, when he returned he had forgotten nothing, but it was so deep down in his ground that his intellect could not reach it; it was veiled from him.

He therefore had to pursue it and search for it in himself and not outside.

It is all within, not outside, but wholly within.

And knowing this full well, he said, ’For I am persuaded that neither death nor any affliction can separate me from what I find within me" (Rom. 8:38-39) .

There i s a fine saying o f one pagan master to another about this.

He said, ’I am aware of something in me which shines in my understanding; I can clearly perceive that it is something, but what it may be I cannot grasp.

Yet I think if I could only seize it I should know all truth.’

To which the other master replied, ’Follow it boldly! For if you could seize it you would possess the sum total of all good and have eternal life ! ’

St. Augustine1 5 spoke in the same sense: ’I am aware of something within me that gleams and flashes before my soul; were this perfected and fully established in me, that would surely be eternal life ! ’

It hides, yet shows itself; it comes, but like a thief with intent to take and steal all things from the soul.

But by emerging and showing itself a little it aims to lure the soul and draw her toward itself, to rob her and deprive her of herself.

About this, the prophet says, ’Lord, take from them their spirit and give them instead thy spirit’ (Ps. 103:29-30).

This too was meant by the loving soul when she said, "

My soul dissolved and melted away when Love spoke his word" (Song 5:6) .

When he entered, I had to fall away. And Christ meant this by his words, "Whoever abandons anything for my sake shall be repaid a hundredfold, and whoever would possess me must deny himself and all things, and whoever will serve me must follow me and not go any more after his own " (Mark 10:29, etc.)

But now you might say, ’But, good sir, you want to change the natural course of the soul and go against her nature!

It is her nature to take things in through the senses in images.

Would you upset this ordering?

No!

But how do you know what nobility God has bestowed on human nature, not yet fully described, and still unrevealed ?

For those who have written of the soul’s nobility have gone no further than their natural intelligence could carry them; they had never entered her ground, so that much remained obscure and unknown to them.

So the prophet said, "I will sit in silence and hearken to what God speaks within me" (Ps.84:9).

Because it is so secret, this Word came in the night and in darkness. St. John says, "The light shone in the darkness, it came into its own, and as many as received it became in authority sons of God; to them was given power to become God’s sons" (John 1:5, 11-12).

Now observe the use and the fruit of this secret Word and this darkness.

The Son of the heavenly Father is not born alone in this darkness, which is his own: you too can be born a child of the same heavenly Father and of none other, and to you too He will give power.

Now observe how great the use is! For all the truth learned by all the masters by their own intellect and understanding, or ever to be learned till Doomsday, they never had the slightest inkling of this knowledge and this ground.

Though it may be called a nescience, an unknowing, yet there is in it more than in all knowing and understanding without it, for this unknowing lures and attracts you from all understood things, and from yourself as well.

This is what Christ meant when he said, "Whoever will not deny himself and will not leave his father and mother, and is not estranged from all these, is not worthy of me" (Matt. 10:37), as though he were to say, he who does not abandon creaturely externals can be neither conceived nor born in this divine birth. But divesting yourself of yourself and of everything external does truly give it to you.

And in very truth I believe, nay, I am sure, that the man who is established in this cannot in any way ever be separated from God. I say he can in no way lapse into mortal sin.

He would rather suffer the most shameful death, as the saints have done before him, than commit the least of mortal sins.

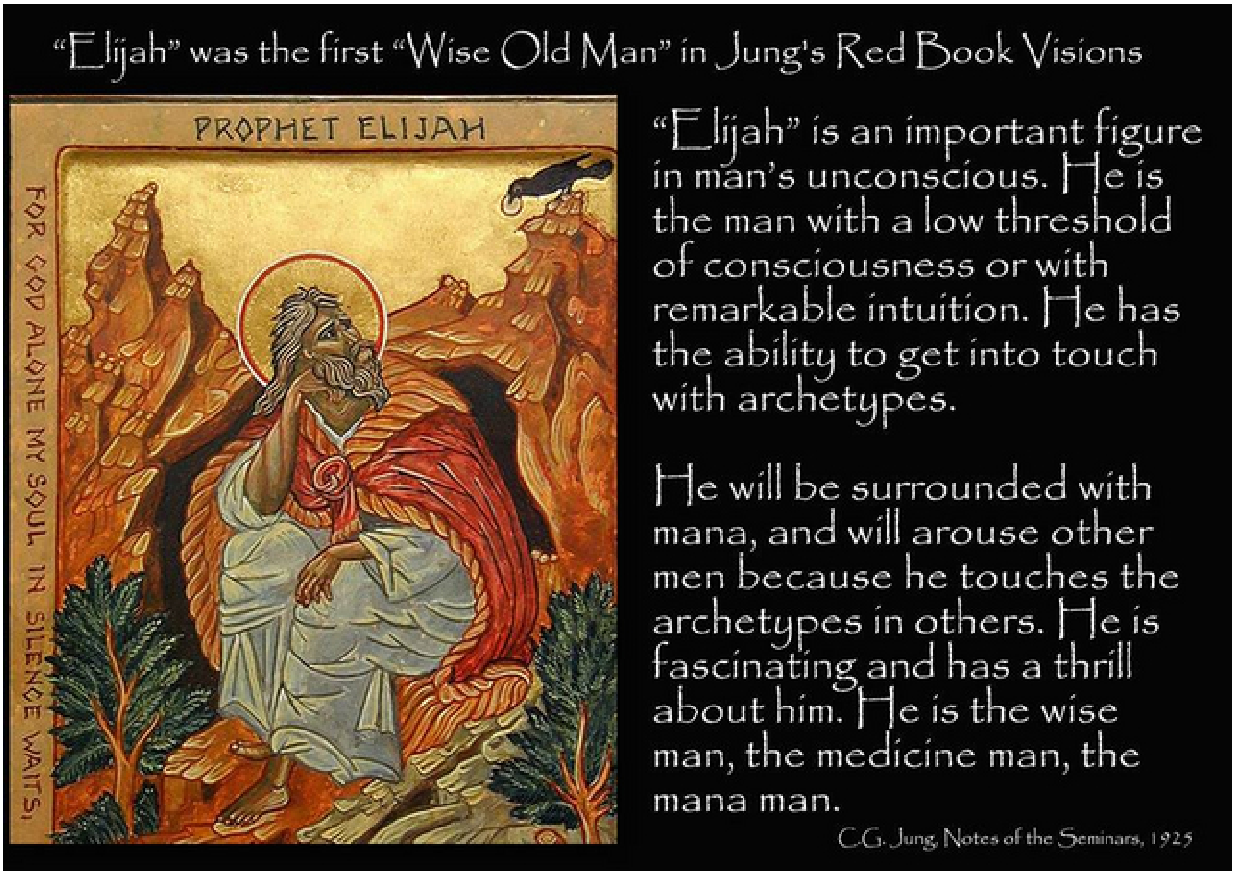
I say such people cannot willingly commit or consent to even a venial sin in themselves or in others if they can stop it.

So strongly are they lured and drawn and accustomed to that, that they can never turn to any other way; to this way are directed all their senses, all their powers.

May the God who has been born again as man assist us to this birth, eternally helping us, weak men, to be born in him again as God. Amen. Meister Eckhart; The Complete Mystical Works; Pages 29-37

Carl Jung: Elijah and Salome are together because they are pairs of opposites. (2019-11-14 04:15)

[1]



“Elijah” was the first “Wise Old Man” in Jung's Red Book Visions

“Elijah” is an important figure in man’s unconscious. He is the man with a low threshold of consciousness or with remarkable intuition. He has the ability to get into touch with archetypes.

He will be surrounded with mana, and will arouse other men because he touches the archetypes in others. He is fascinating and has a thrill about him. He is the wise man, the medicine man, the mana man.

C.G. Jung, Notes of the Seminars, 1925

This atmosphere was around Salome, and to hear Elijah declare that he was always in that company shocked me profoundly.

Elijah and Salome are together because they are pairs of opposites.

Elijah is an important figure in man’s unconscious, not in woman’s.

He is the man with prestige, the man with a low threshold of consciousness or with remarkable intuition.

In higher society he would be the wise man; compare Lao-tse.

He has the ability to get into touch with archetypes.

He will be surrounded with mana, and will arouse other men because he touches the archetypes in others.

He is fascinating and has a thrill about him. He is the wise man, the medicine man, the mana man.

Later on in evolution, this wise man becomes a spiritual image, a god, "the old one from the mountains" (compare Moses coming down from the mountain as lawgiver), the sorcerer of the tribe.

He is the legislator.

Even Christ was in company with Moses and Elijah in his transfiguration.

All great lawgivers and masters of the past, such as for example the Mahatmas of theosophical teaching, are thought of by theosophists as spiritual factors still in existence.

Thus the Dalai Lama is supposed by theosophists to be such a figure.

In the history of Gnosis, this figure plays a great role, and every sect claims to have been founded by such a one.

Christ is not quite suitable; he is too young to be the Mahatma.

The great man has to be given another role.

John the Baptist was the great wise man, teacher, and initiator, but he has been depotentiated.

The same archetype reappears in Goethe as Faust and as Zarathustra in Nietzsche, where Zarathustra came as a visitation.

Nietzsche has been gripped by the sudden animation of the great wise man.

This plays an important role in man's psychology, as I have said, but unfortunately a less important part than that played by the anima. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http://www.blogger.com/home

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/20178-1elijah.jpg`

Books by Helen Luke [Jungian] (2019-11-14 04:26)

[1] A Portrait of Helen M. Luke
A Sense of the Sacred
Thomas Moore

[2] Old Age
Journey into Simplicity
Helen M. Luke

[3]Order from Amazon here

[4] Dark Wood to White Rose Journey and Transformation in Dante's Divine Comedy
by
Helen M. Luke

[5]Order from Amazon here

[6] helen m. luke
the way of woman
Awakening the Perennial Feminine foreword by marion woodman

[7]Buy at Amazon here

[8] WOMAN
EARTH AND SPIRIT
The Feminine in Symbol and Myth
Helen M. Luke

[9]Buy at Amazon here

[10] THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY AND JOURNALS OF HELEN M. LUKE
Such Stuff as Dreams Are Made On
HELEN M. LUKE

[11]Buy at Amazon here

[12]
THE VOICE WITHIN
Love and Virtue in the Age of the Spirit
Helen M. Luke

[13]Buy at Amazon here

[14]

Laughter at the Heart of Things

[15]Buy at Amazon here

[16]

Kaleidoscope
The Way of Woman
and Other Essays
BY HELEN M. LUKE

[17]Buy at Amazon here

[18]Books by Helen Luke

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/16593-3.jpg
2. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/be1d8-4.jpg
3. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1584200790/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_dYLzub02MGBYR
4. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/56a2f-5.jpg
5. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0930407288/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_zYLzub12DHT8Q
6. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/01540-6.jpg
7. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0385485743/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_ZYLzub1JPSSZ5
8. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/e00a4-7.jpg
9. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0824506332/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_BZLzub0NW7JY6
10. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/3b05e-8.jpg
11. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0609805894/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_YZLzub04MXCT6
12. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/55531-9.jpg
13. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0824506596/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_k0Lzub065C677
14. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/32da1-11.jpg
15. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0930407520/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_M0Lzub01175M6
16. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/bdc7c-12.jpg
17. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0930407520/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_M0Lzub01175M6
18. http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-helen-luke-jungian.html

---

Carl Jung: The dream you report, of a patient looking through a microscope at a lot of little worms that cause her illness, (2019-11-14 04:30)

[1]

To Erich Neumann

Dear Colleague, 4 April 1938

While sending you best thanks for your friendly letter of last July I must apologize for not having answered it until now.

It arrived just before my departure for America, 1 where I had to give lectures at Yale University.

On my return I had to leave almost at once for India, where I was invited to the 25th anniversary of the Indian Science Congress Association in Calcutta.

I got back only a short while ago.

The dream you report, of a patient looking through a microscope at a lot of little worms that cause her illness, means a disturbance in the sympathetic system, an abnormal charge by which its smallest parts (worms) have been autonomized to an abnormal degree.

As we know from experience, it is a question of contents which are unconscious on this level but, theoretically at least, are capable of synthesis because of their creative character.

Whether it will come to that depends on the patient's fate and endowments and equally on an expertly guided inner development.

I have a1ways found that in such cases drawing and painting yield particularly good results.

In a dream like this the problem is still in a bodily, organic state and cannot be distinguished from it.

Only if the worms join together into a snake, for instance, is there any prospect of conscious realization.

Parallel symbols are bacteria, small insects, etc.

When I compare the contents of your letter with what the papers say about Palestine I can easily imagine what a fantastic tension of opposites there must be in you.

But such a tension is highly beneficial for the progress of your inner development as it brings out the Meaning with particular clarity.

I have heard from Frau Dr. Braband whom you probably know, that attempts are being made to bring together all those who are interested in analytical psychology.

In support of these efforts, I have sent some of my own books and writings to the University Library in Jerusalem.

I was very glad to hear that you have so much to do.

Let's hope it goes on in this style.

With best greetings and wishes,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 243

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

Great Sites to visit:

1. Jenna Lilla’s Path of the Soul http://jennalilla.org/
2. Steve Jung-Hearted Parker’s Jung Currents http://jungcurrents.com/
3. Frith Luton’s Jungian Dream Analysis and Psychotherapy: http://frithluton.com/articles/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/86bec-232berich.jpg`

To be fully Conscious is Possible~Carl Jung (2019-11-14 04:44)

[1]

Dr. Jung: To be fully conscious is quite possible.

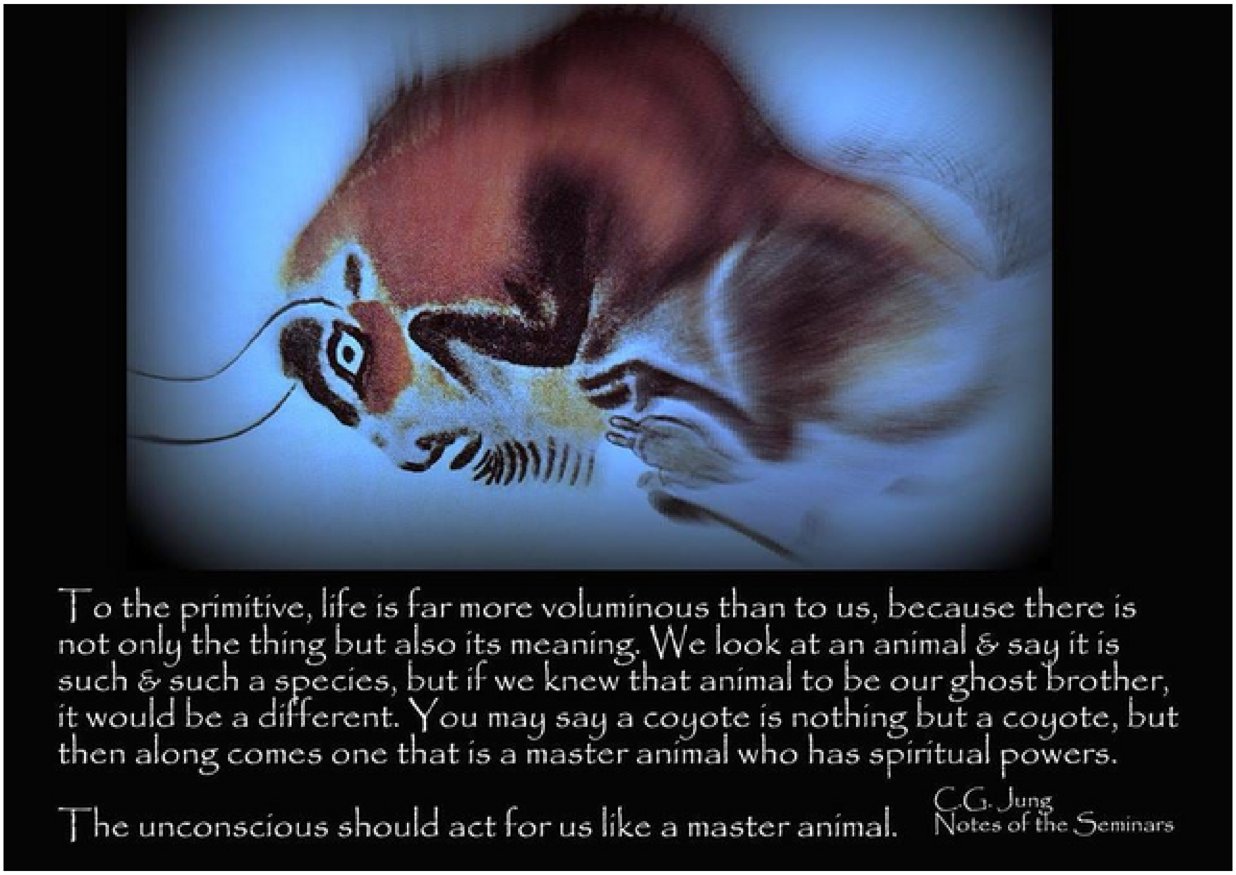
Mrs. Crowley: But what I do not understand is the idea of that complete self identity, identity just with yourself, because it seems to me that you are simply in another layer where you are completely surrounded by another stream-only on another level–so that you cannot but disidentify. You are still an instrument or part of the stream, you are still part of a vast layer of non-understanding.

Dr. Jung: Naturally. You must always be, otherwise you would be God himself. The point is that you should assimilate yourself and not project half of yourself into other people or institutions. Of course you are far from being perfect, or perfectly conscious. When you are integrated you are perhaps as unconscious as you ever were, only you no longer project yourself; that is the difference. One should never think that man can reach perfection, he can only aim at completion–not to be perfect but to be complete. That would be the necessity and the indispensable condition if there were any question of perfection at all. For how can you perfect a thing if it is not complete? Make it complete first and see what it is then. But to make it complete is already a mountain of a task, and by the time you arrive at absolute completion, you find that you are already dead, so you never even reach that preliminary condition for perfection yourself. Completion is not perfection: to make a building perfect one must first construct it, and a thing which is not even half finished cannot be perfected. First make it complete: then polish it up if you have time and breath left. But usually one's whole life is eaten up on the effort at completion. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 589-590

1. `http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/thumb/0/0e/Rembrandt-Belsazar.jpg/300px-Rembrandt-Belsazar.jpg`

Carl Jung: For it is a fact that, to the primitive, life is far more voluminous than to us... (2019-11-14 05:09)

[1]



To the primitive, life is far more voluminous than to us, because there is not only the thing but also its meaning. We look at an animal & say it is such & such a species, but if we knew that animal to be our ghost brother, it would be a different. You may say a coyote is nothing but a coyote, but then along comes one that is a master animal who has spiritual powers.

The unconscious should act for us like a master animal.

C.G. Jung
Notes of the Seminars

This freeing of the unconscious of elements that really belong to the conscious is greatly aided by all the old mystery practices.

All who go through the initiation ceremonies in the right spirit find a magic quality in them, which is simply due to the effect they have had upon the unconscious.

One can develop astonishing insights through the release that comes to the unconscious in this way.

One can even come to clairvoyance; but when such a gift as the latter is developed, it makes the person permeable to all sorts of atmospheric conditions that may result in his misery.

When life becomes unbearably impoverished, people reach out for such extensions of powers, only to curse fate often when they have achieved them; but when one has fire, one welcomes the insight.

Those of you who heard Dr. Radin's last lecture remember the zigzag road that was encountered after the fourth lodge in the Medicine Dance had been passed.

At the end of the fourth lodge the initiate has been given high honors and has won great increase of powers, and now the road becomes full of appalling obstacles.

So when you relieve the unconscious of non-realized contents, you release it for its own special functioning, and it will go ahead like an animal.

You will have the zigzag road with all the fears of the primitive to be met on it, but also you will have all the wealth of his experience.

For it is a fact that, to the primitive, life is far more voluminous than to us, because there is not only the thing but also its meaning.

We look at an animal and say it is such and such a species, but if we knew that animal to be our ghost brother, it would be a different situation for us.

Or, we sit in the woods and a beetle drops down on someone's head.

"What a nuisance," is all the comment it elicits, but to the primitive there is meaning in that event.

Sometimes I have met this primitive reaction in my patients—an extraordinary sense of the meaningfulness of apparently trivial things in nature.

After all, an animal is not just a thing with fur on it; it is a complete being.

You may say a coyote is nothing but a coyote, but then along comes one that is Dr. Coyote, a super-animal who has mana and spiritual powers.

So says the primitive. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 115.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http://www.blogger.com/home

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/d9913-1primitive.jpg`

Carl Jung and dream of the “Arab.” (2019-11-14 05:13)

[1]

To Alice Lewisohn Crowley

My dear Mrs. Crowley, 20 July 1942

Your dream of June 26th-the Arab-has anticipated several of my dreams this month, in which I was in Africa, I myself wearing a long shoka (something like a long white shirt.)

This figure refers to Mercurius, for I first dreamt of Mercury as a young Arab prince whom I had to push under water.

This is what happens to Mercury!

Your dream of July 6th is also to the point.

I dreamt of an Eastern prophet, followed by a woman who was almost hypnotized by his prophetic stammerings.

Clearly my anima being completely fascinated by my shadow, who in his place is seized by the spirit of life (Mercury!) .

"Being naked" often means "accessible to all influences."

Having no persona is a state of self-being regardless of the world of conditioned relations.

I am awfully busy on my Mercury material and I had to live it, i.e., it caught hold of me, played the transformation of Mercury on my own human system and gave me incidentally a remarkably miserable fortnight.5 Your dreams have caught some of it.

I am all right again, but not yet through with my material.

Yours cordially,

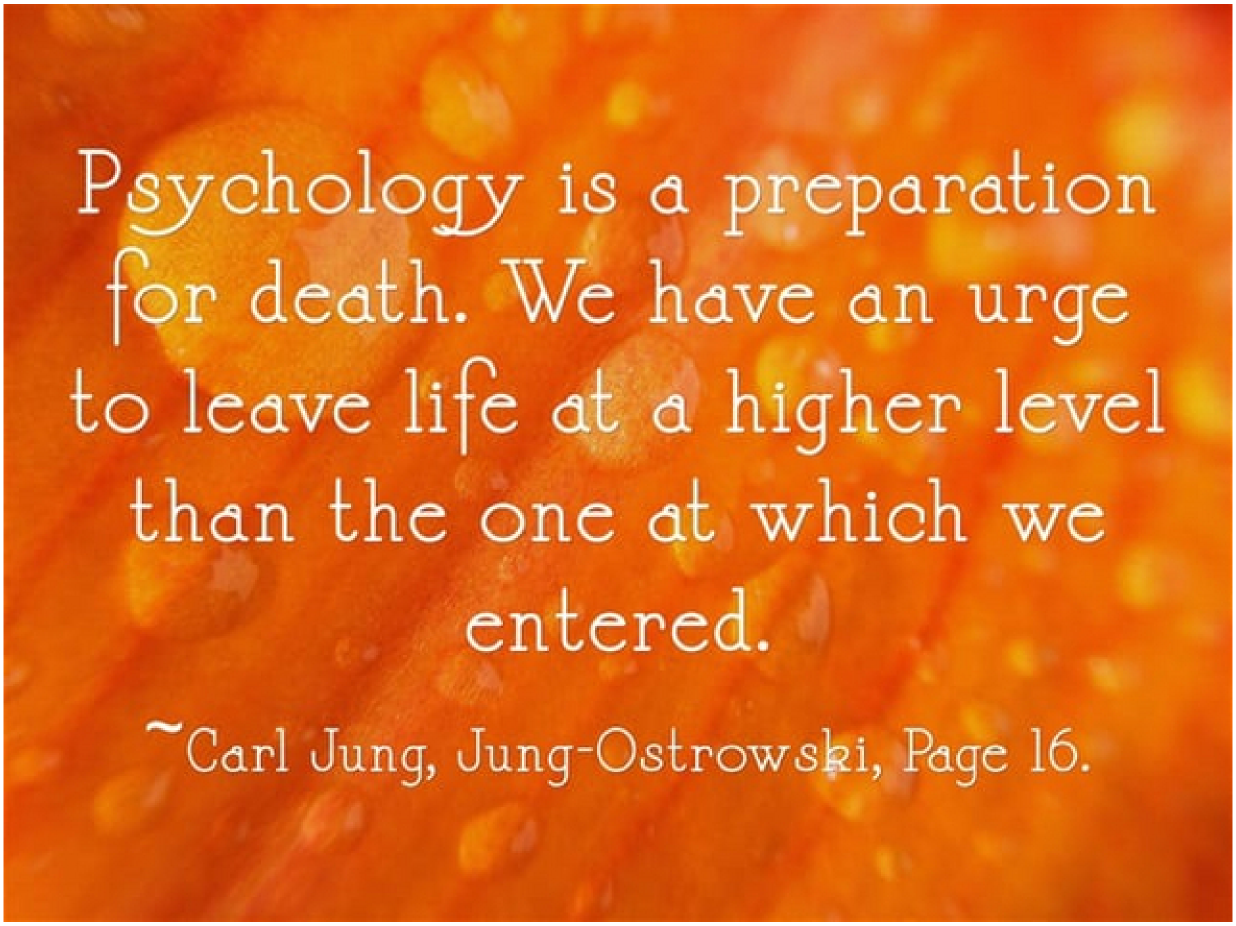
C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Page 319.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/76d18-arab.jpg`

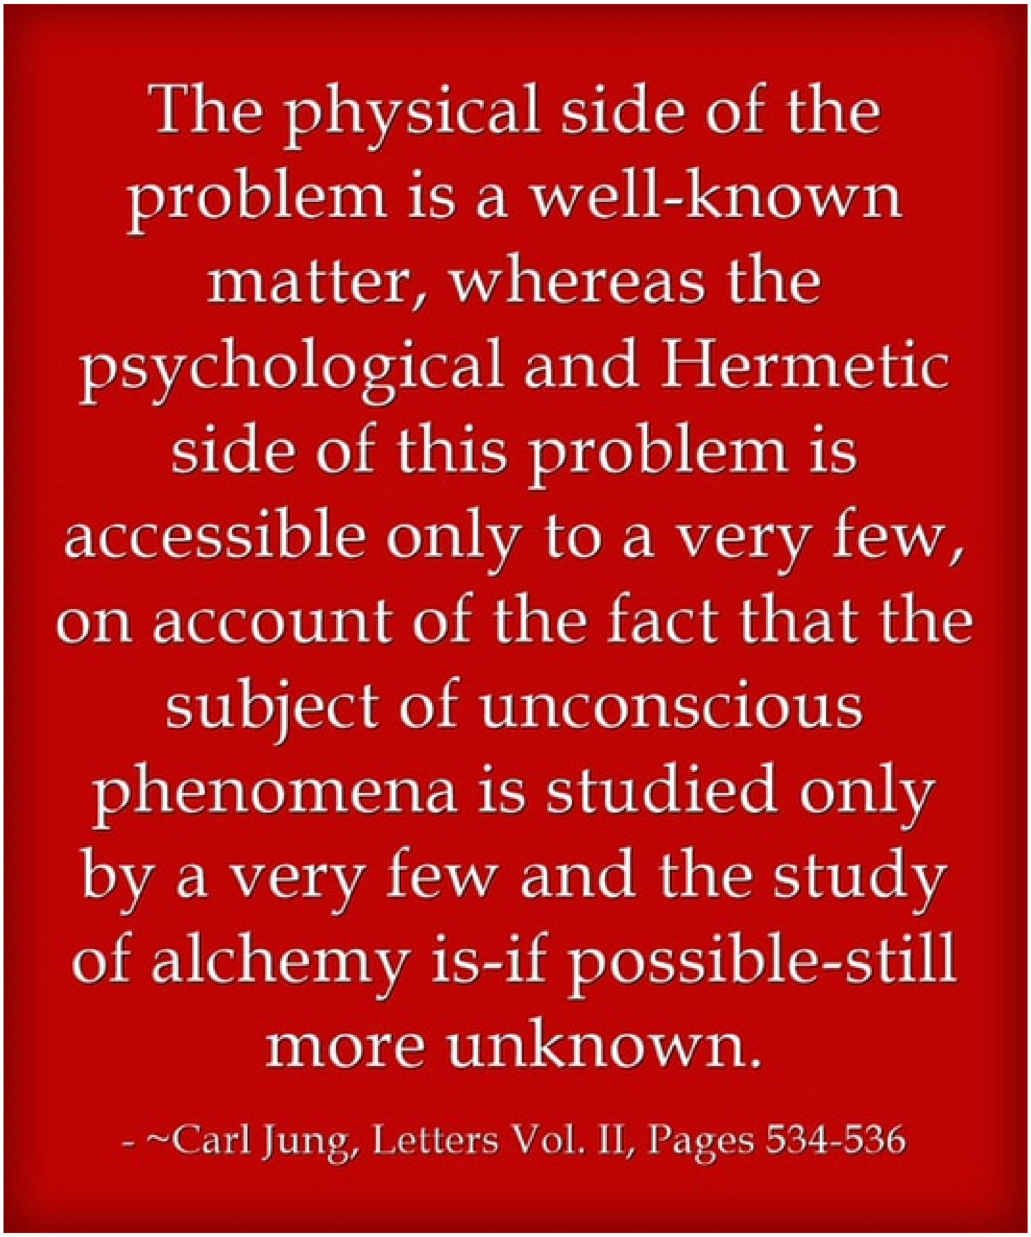
Some Carl Jung Quotations VIII (2019-11-14 05:30)

[1]



Psychology is a preparation for death. We have an urge to leave life at a higher level than the one at which we entered.
~Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 16.

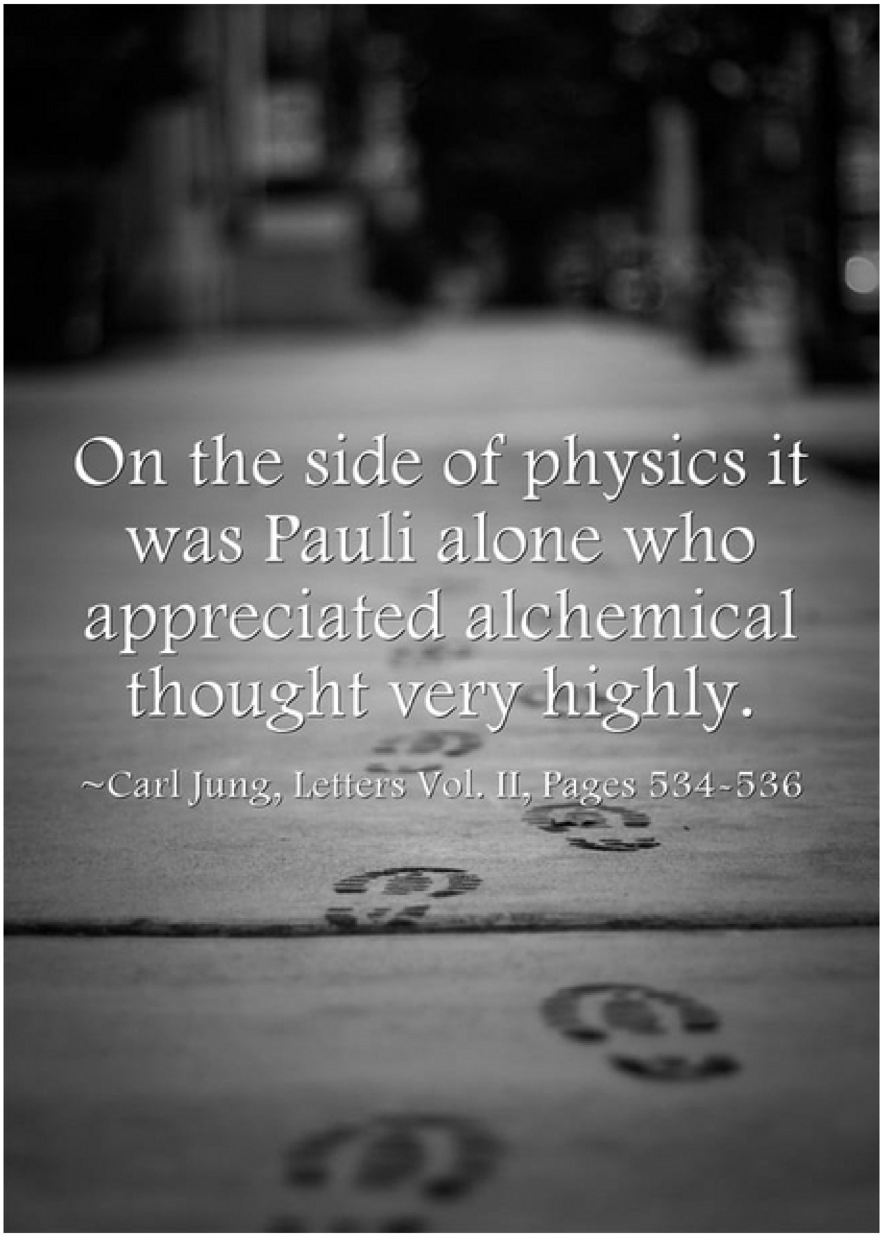
Psychology is a preparation for death. We have an urge to leave life at a higher level than the one at which we entered. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 16.



The physical side of the problem is a well-known matter, whereas the psychological and Hermetic side of this problem is accessible only to a very few, on account of the fact that the subject of unconscious phenomena is studied only by a very few and the study of alchemy is-if possible-still more unknown.

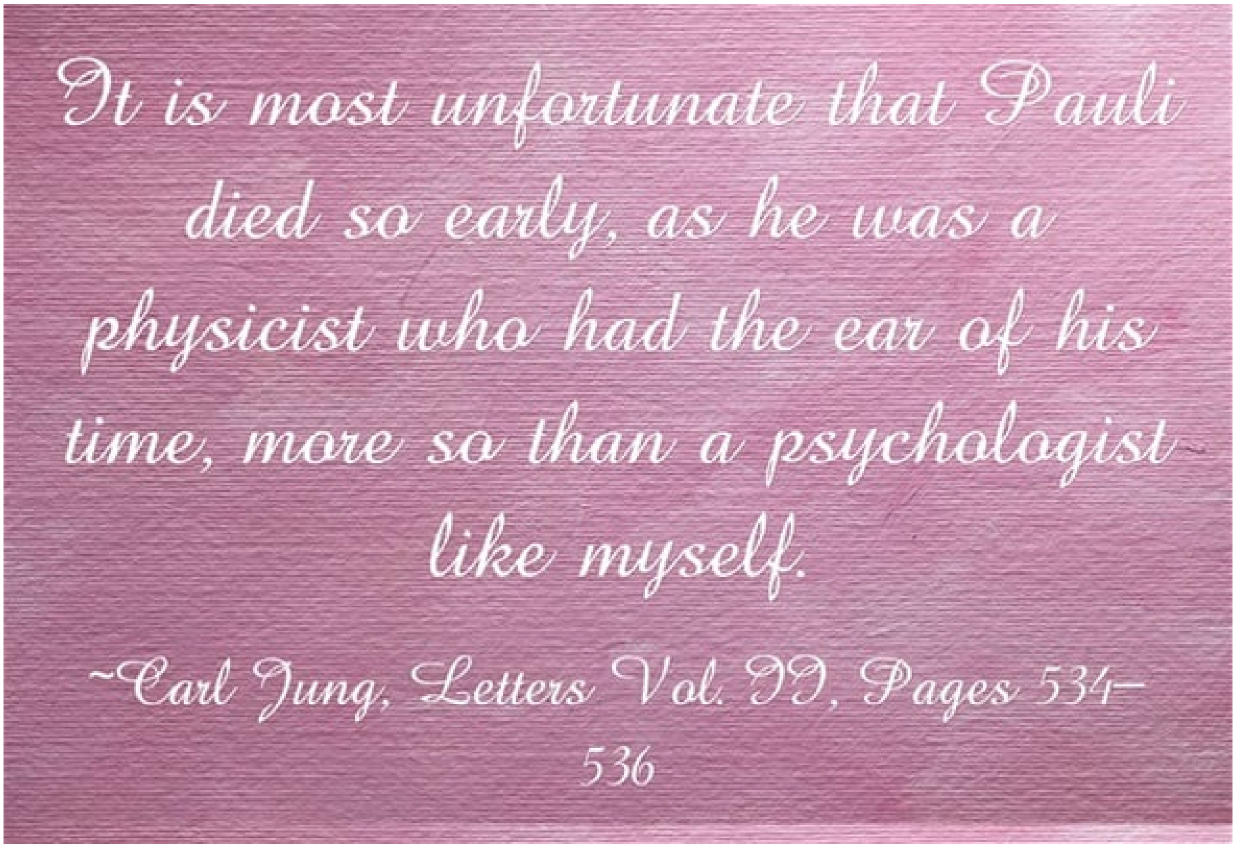
- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 534-536

The physical side of the problem is a well-known matter, whereas the psychological and Hermetic side of this problem is accessible only to a very few, on account of the fact that the subject of unconscious phenomena is studied only by a very few and the study of alchemy is-if possible-still more unknown. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 534-536



On the side of physics it was Pauli alone who appreciated alchemical thought very highly.
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 534-536

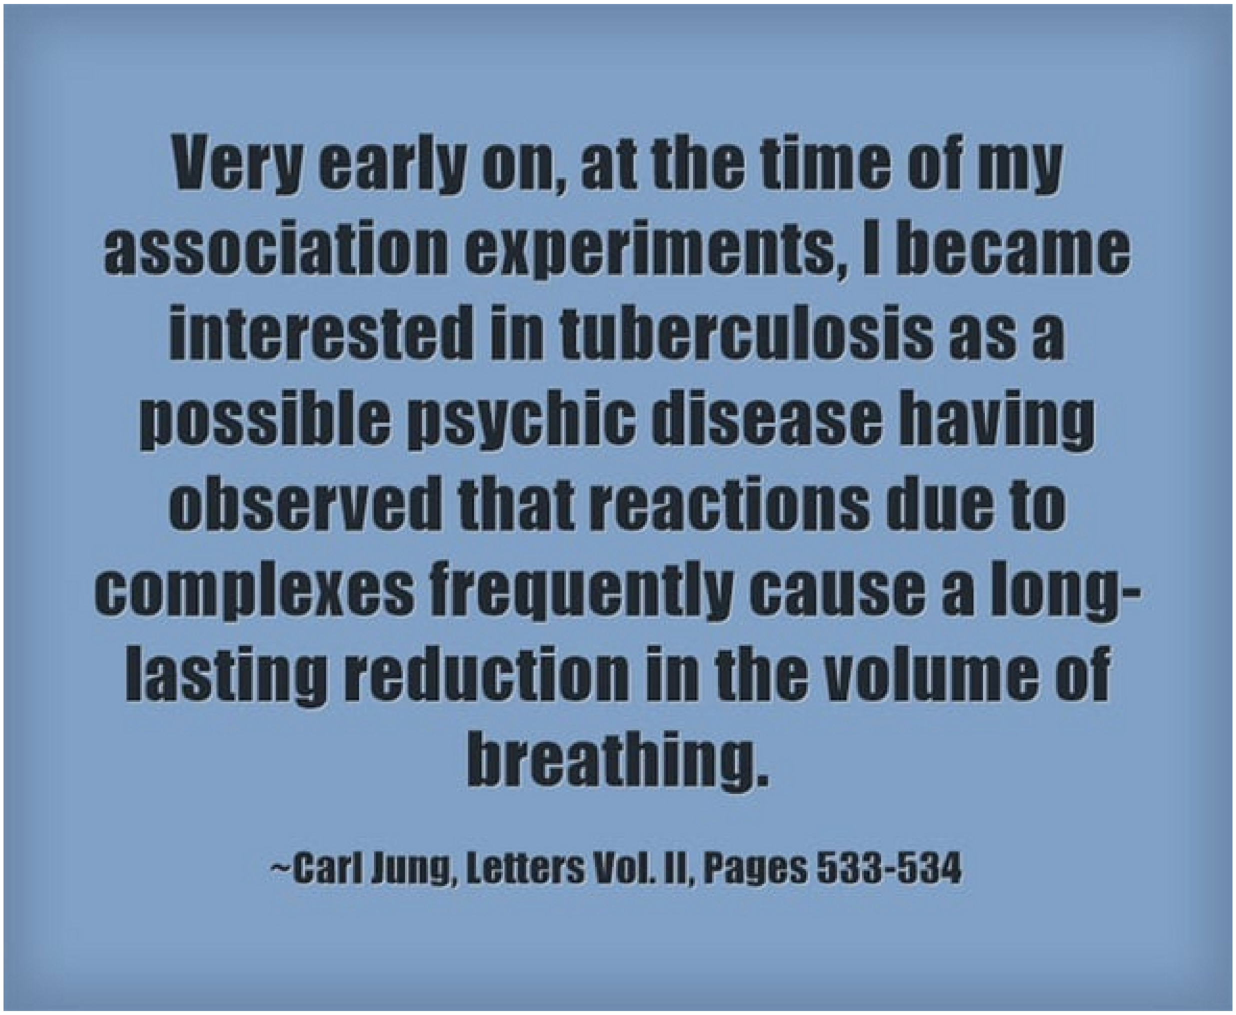
On the side of physics it was Pauli alone who appreciated alchemical thought very highly. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 534-536



It is most unfortunate that Pauli died so early, as he was a physicist who had the ear of his time, more so than a psychologist like myself.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 534-536

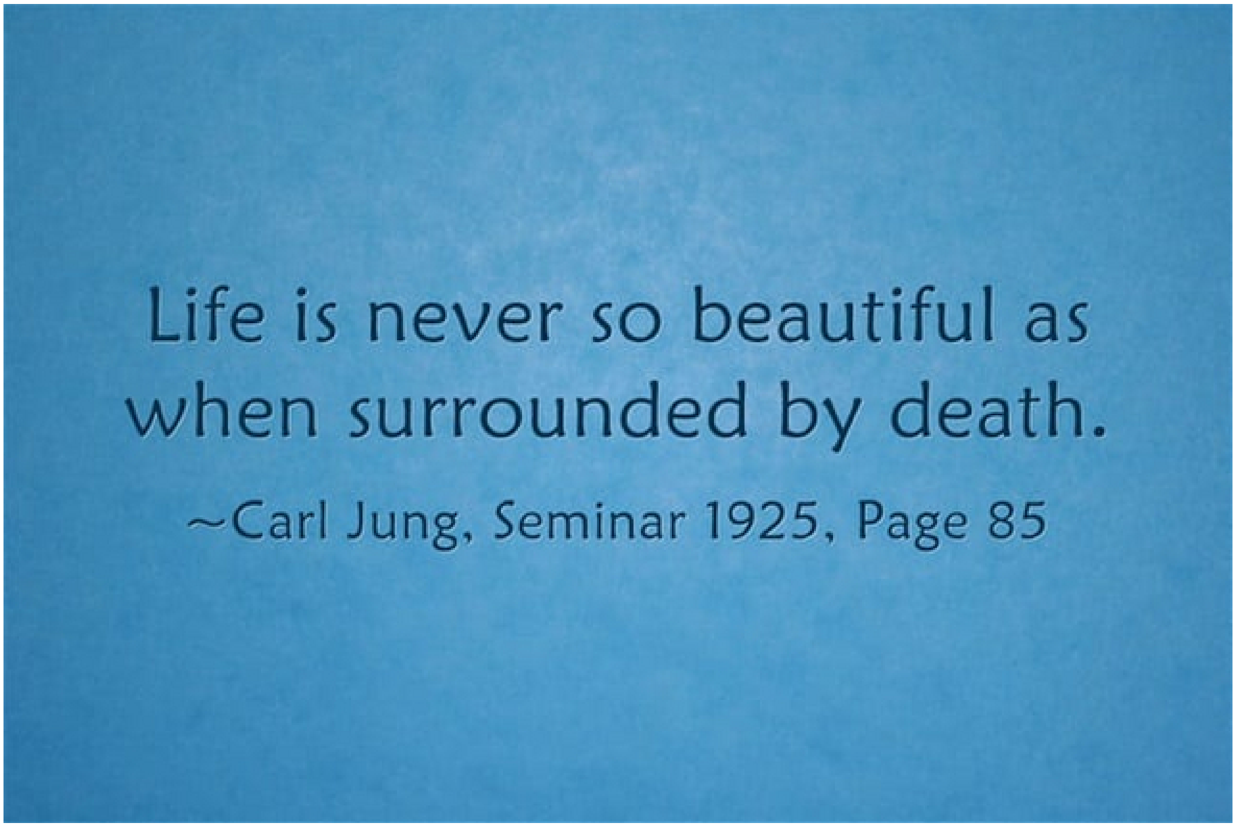
It is most unfortunate that Pauli died so early, as he was a physicist who had the ear of his time, more so than a psychologist like myself. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 534-536



Very early on, at the time of my association experiments, I became interested in tuberculosis as a possible psychic disease having observed that reactions due to complexes frequently cause a long-lasting reduction in the volume of breathing.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 533-534

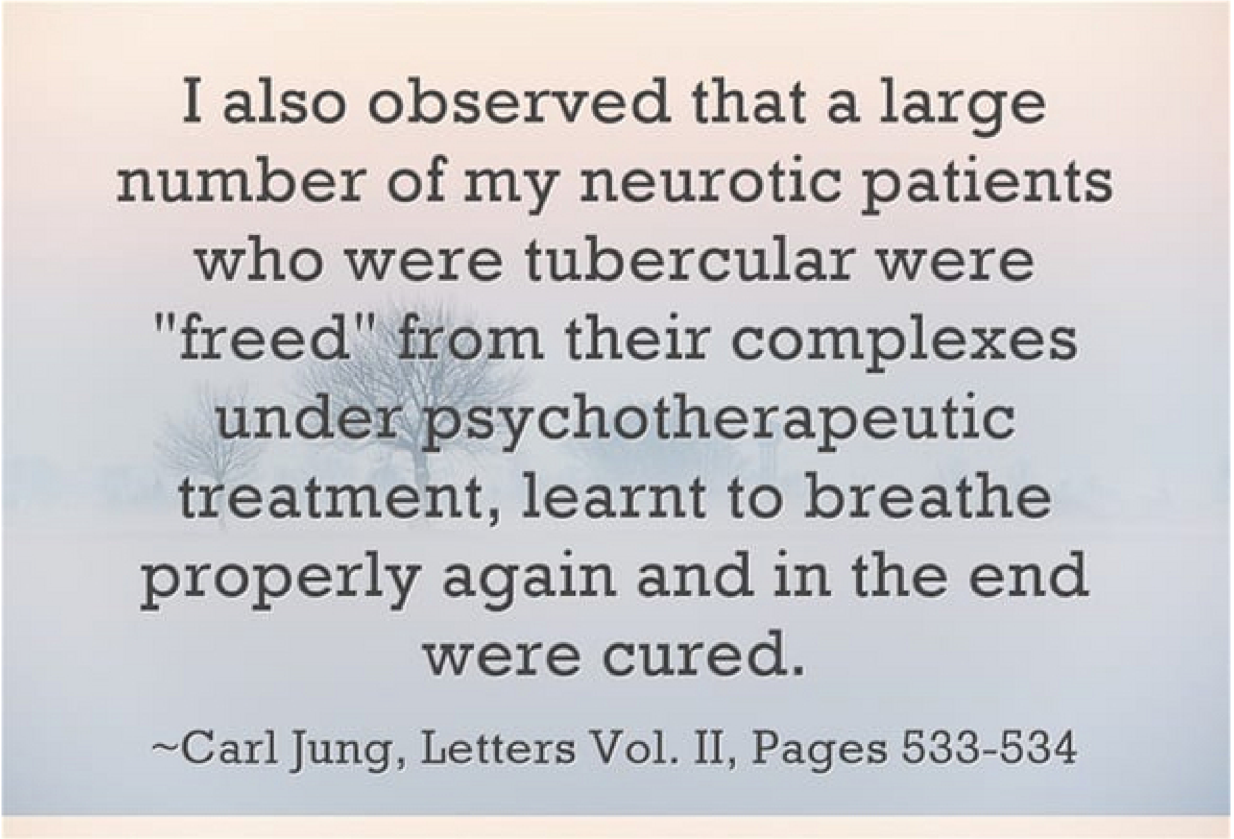
Very early on, at the time of my association experiments, I became interested in tuberculosis as a possible psychic disease having observed that reactions due to complexes frequently cause a long-lasting reduction in the volume of breathing. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 533-534



Life is never so beautiful as when surrounded by death.

~Carl Jung, Seminar 1925, Page 85

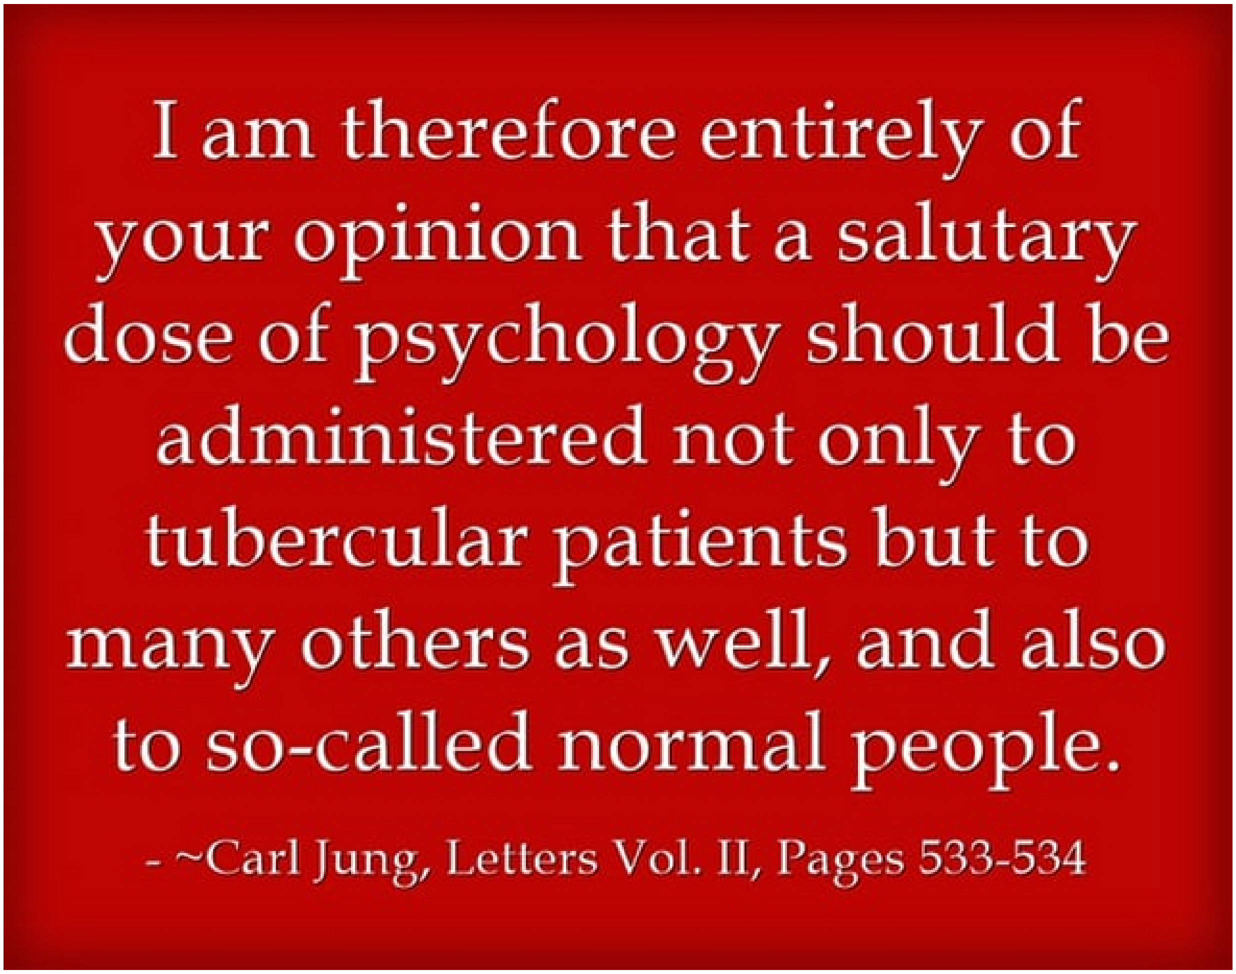
Life is never so beautiful as when surrounded by death. Carl Jung, Seminar 1925, Page 85



I also observed that a large number of my neurotic patients who were tubercular were "freed" from their complexes under psychotherapeutic treatment, learnt to breathe properly again and in the end were cured.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 533-534

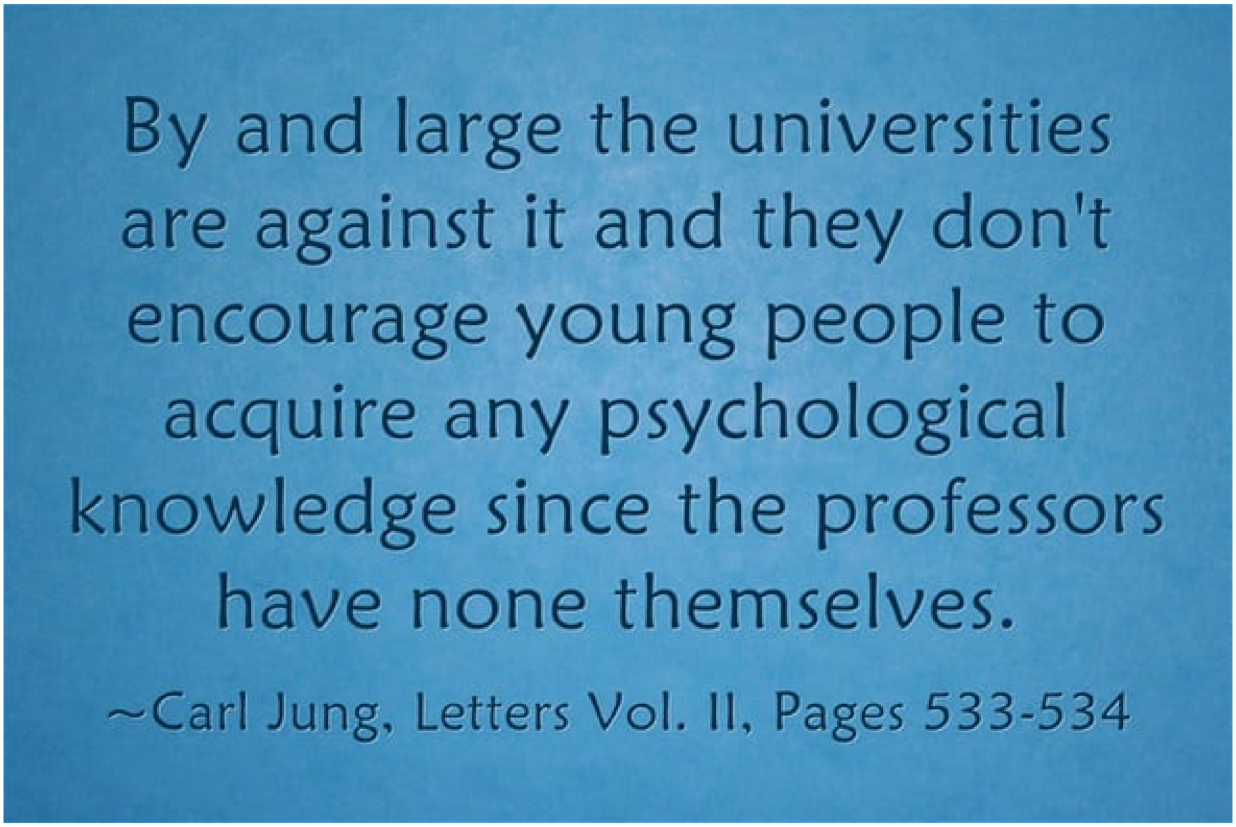
I also observed that a large number of my neurotic patients who were tubercular were "freed" from their complexes under psychotherapeutic treatment, learnt to breathe properly again and in the end were cured. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 533-534



I am therefore entirely of your opinion that a salutary dose of psychology should be administered not only to tubercular patients but to many others as well, and also to so-called normal people.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 533-534

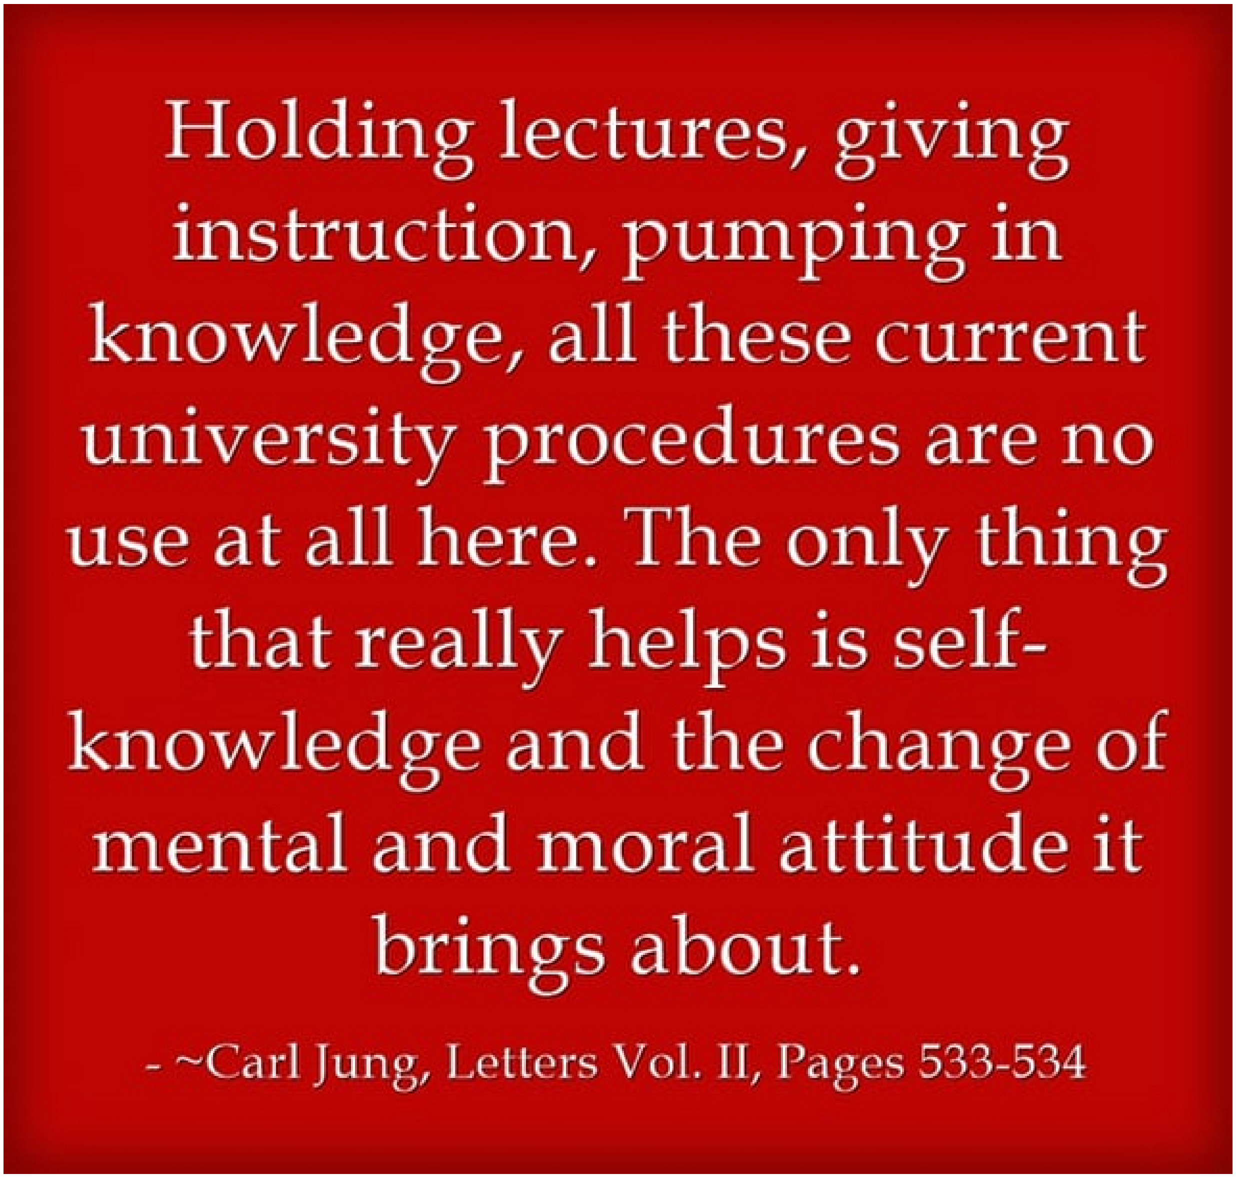
I am therefore entirely of your opinion that a salutary dose of psychology should be administered not only to tubercular patients but to many others as well, and also to so-called normal people. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 533-534



By and large the universities are against it and they don't encourage young people to acquire any psychological knowledge since the professors have none themselves.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 533-534

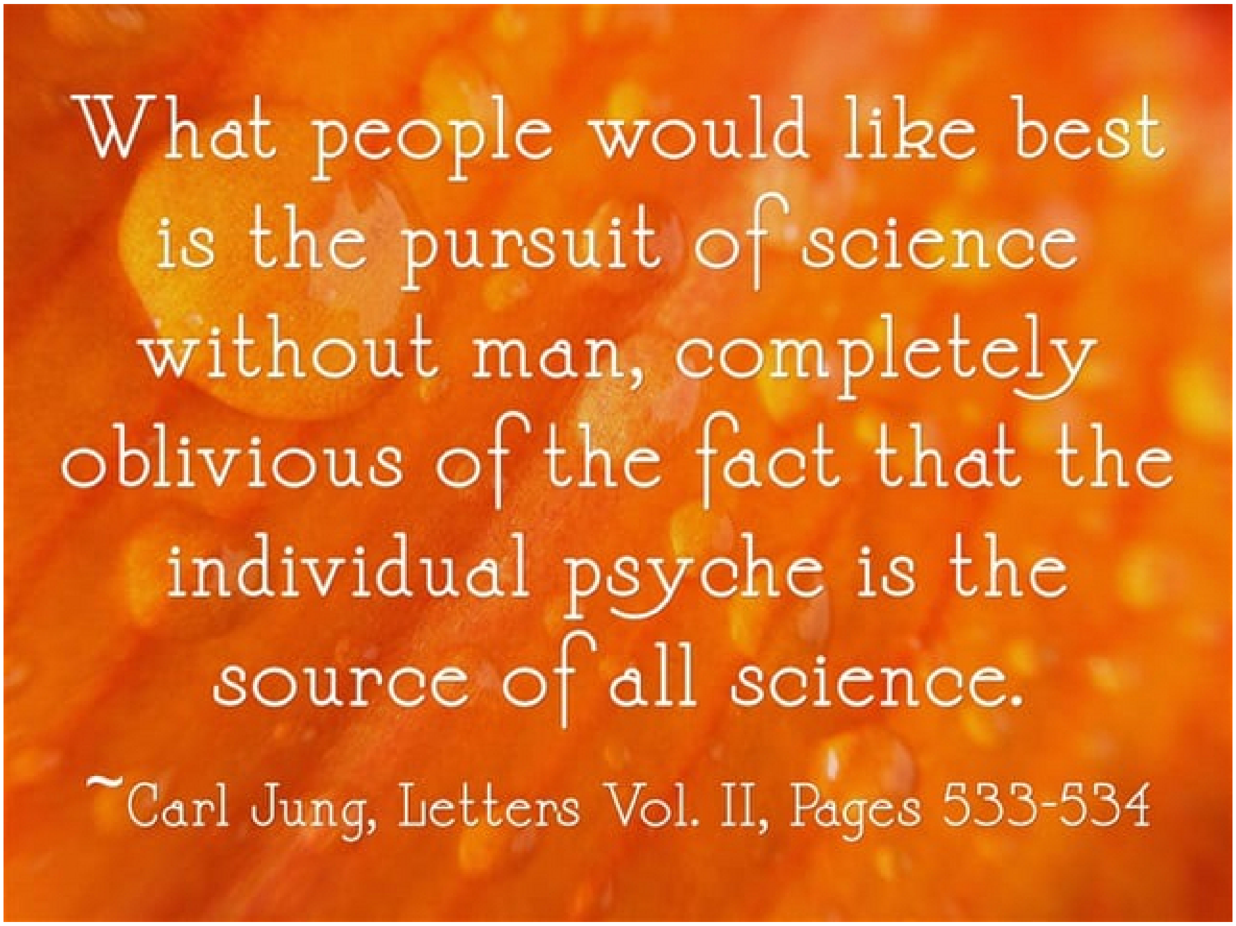
By and large the universities are against it and they don’t encourage young people to acquire any psychological knowledge since the professors have none themselves. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 533-534



Holding lectures, giving instruction, pumping in knowledge, all these current university procedures are no use at all here. The only thing that really helps is self-knowledge and the change of mental and moral attitude it brings about.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 533-534

Holding lectures, giving instruction, pumping in knowledge, all these current university procedures are no use at all here. The only thing that really helps is self-knowledge and the change of mental and moral attitude it brings about. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 533-534



What people would like best is the pursuit of science without man, completely oblivious of the fact that the individual psyche is the source of all science. ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 533-534

What people would like best is the pursuit of science without man, completely oblivious of the fact that the individual psyche is the source of all science. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 533-534

Let us hope that by the Grace of God and the aid of a human physician the ordeal of his passing away will be mitigated.
- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 536-537

Let us hope that by the Grace of God and the aid of a human physician the ordeal of his passing away will be mitigated. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 536-537

As there are so few men capable of understanding the deeper Implications of our psychology, I had nursed the apparently vain hope that Father
Victor would carry on the opus magnum.
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 536-537

As there are so few men capable of understanding the deeper Implications of our psychology, I had nursed the apparently vain hope that Father Victor would carry on the opus magnum. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 536-537

But it is the curious fact that most of the intelligent men I became acquainted with and who began to develop an uncommon understanding have come to an unexpected, early end.

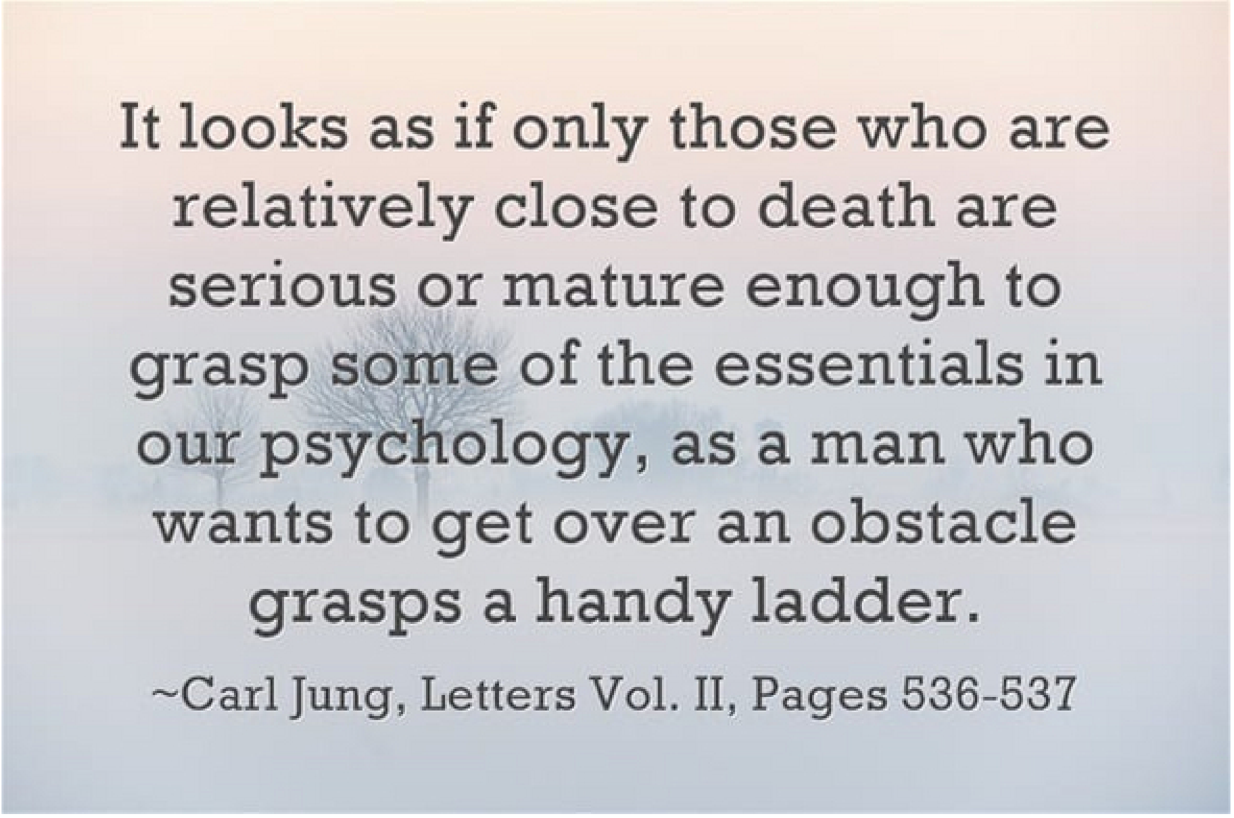
- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II,
Pages 536-537

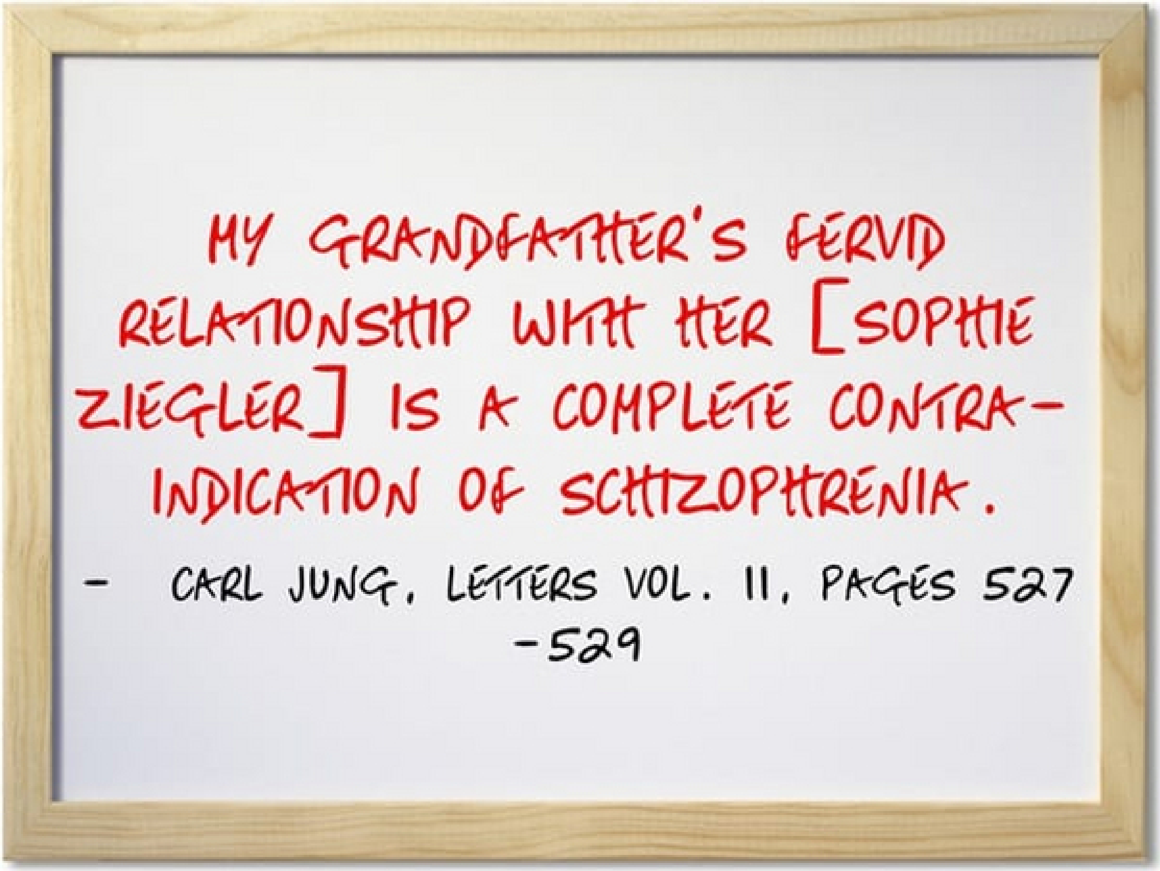
But it is the curious fact that most of the intelligent men I became acquainted with and who began to develop an uncommon understanding have come to an unexpected, early end. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 536-537



It looks as if only those who are relatively close to death are serious or mature enough to grasp some of the essentials in our psychology, as a man who wants to get over an obstacle grasps a handy ladder.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 536-537

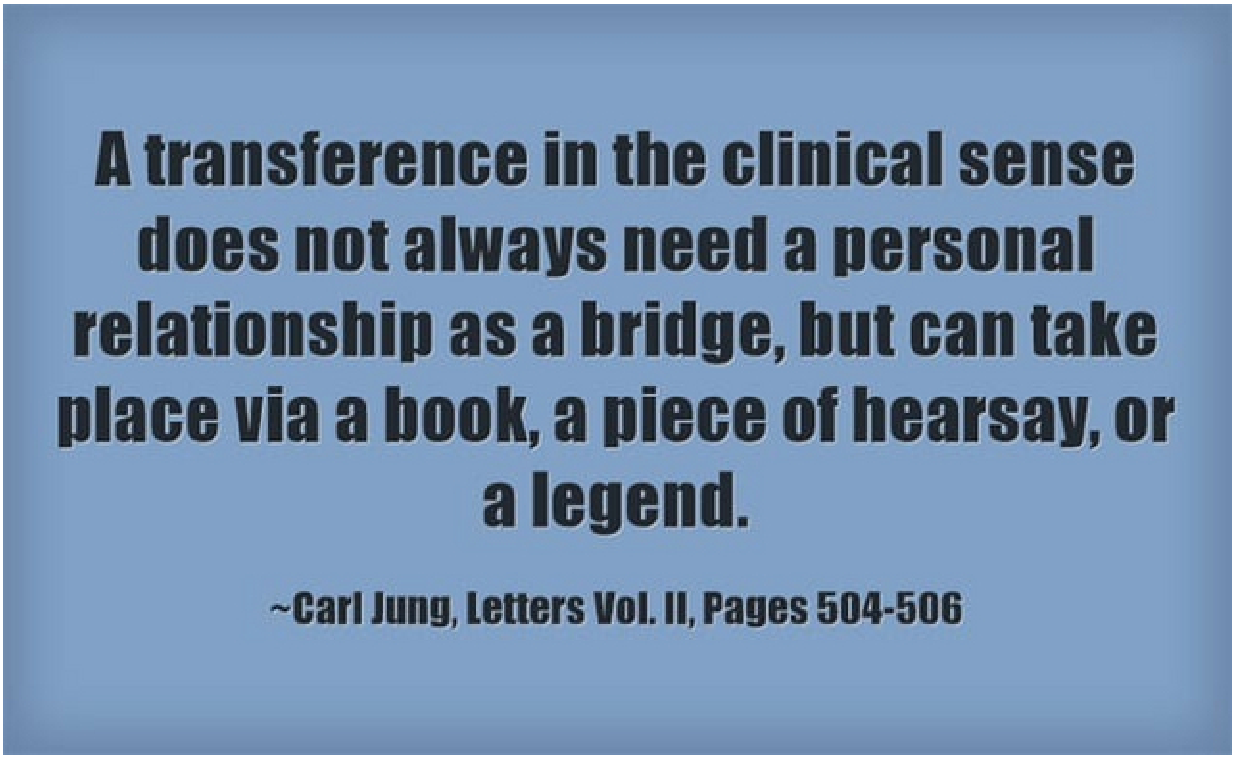
It looks as if only those who are relatively close to death are serious or mature enough to grasp some of the essentials in our psychology, as a man who wants to get over an obstacle grasps a handy ladder. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 536-537



MY GRANDFATHER'S FERVID RELATIONSHIP WITH HER [SOPHIE ZIEGLER] IS A COMPLETE CONTRA-INDICATION OF SCHIZOPHRENIA.

- CARL JUNG, LETTERS VOL. II, PAGES 527 -529

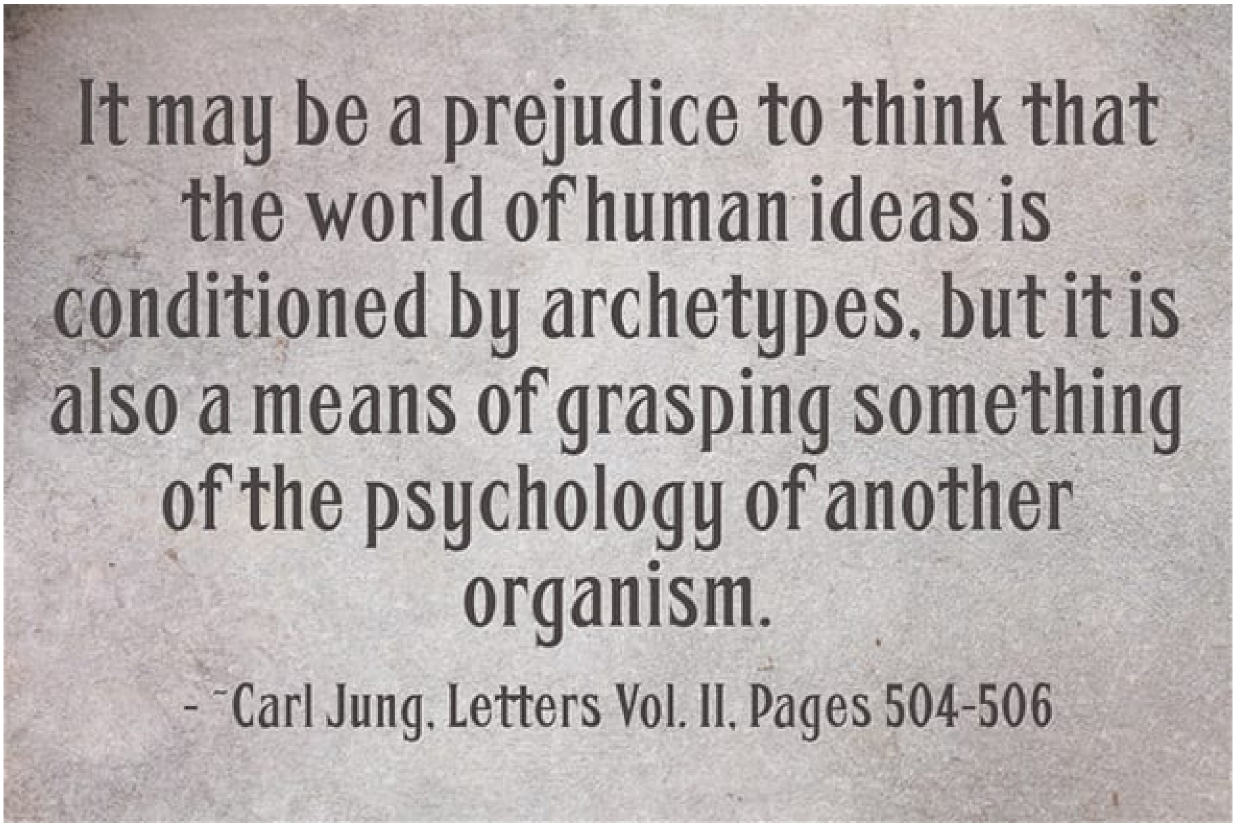
My grandfather's fervid relationship with her [Sophie Ziegler] is a complete contra-indication of schizophrenia.
Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 527-529



A transference in the clinical sense does not always need a personal relationship as a bridge, but can take place via a book, a piece of hearsay, or a legend.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

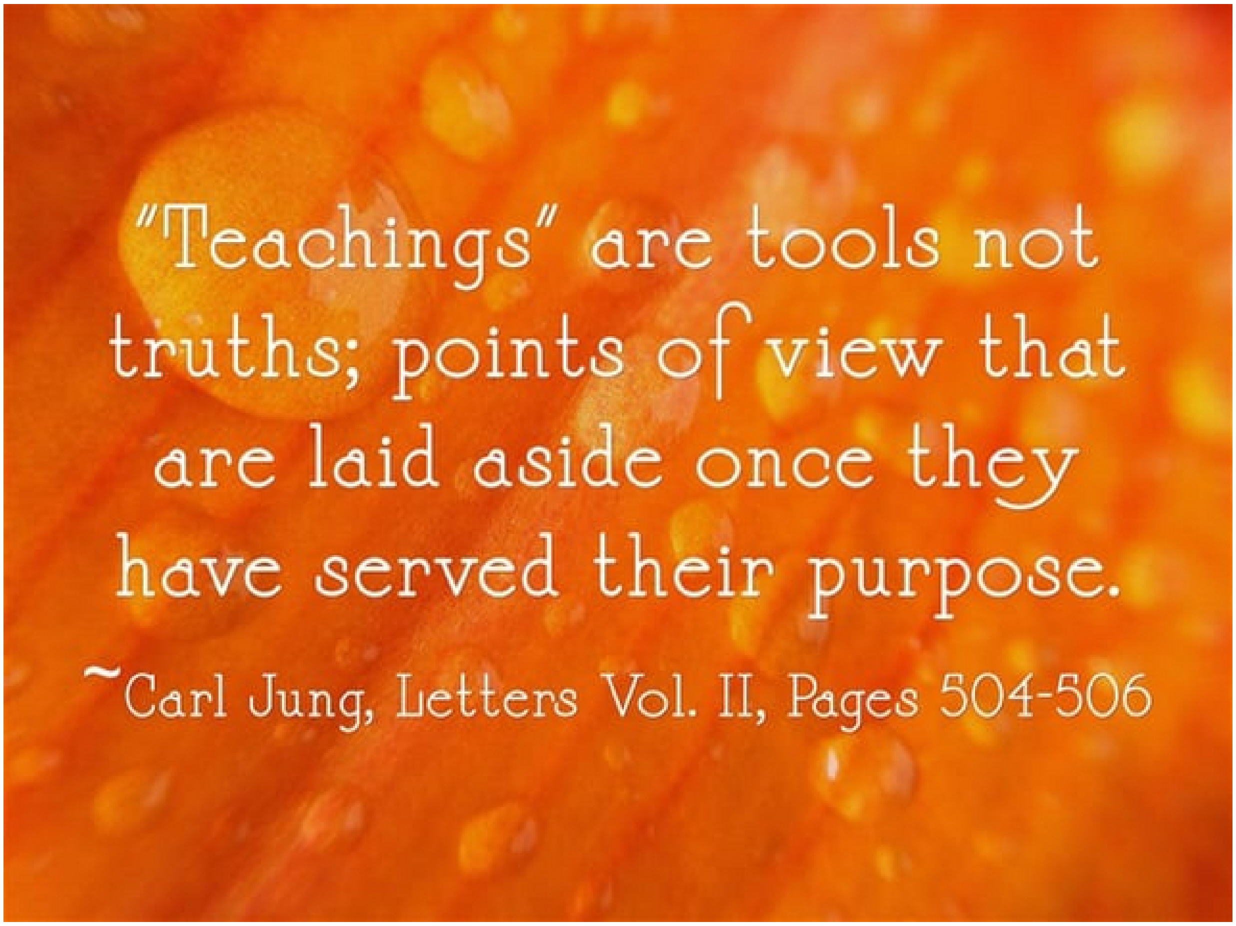
A transference in the clinical sense does not always need a personal relationship as a bridge, but can take place via a book, a piece of hearsay, or a legend. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506



It may be a prejudice to think that the world of human ideas is conditioned by archetypes, but it is also a means of grasping something of the psychology of another organism.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

It may be a prejudice to think that the world of human ideas is conditioned by archetypes, but it is also a means of grasping something of the psychology of another organism. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

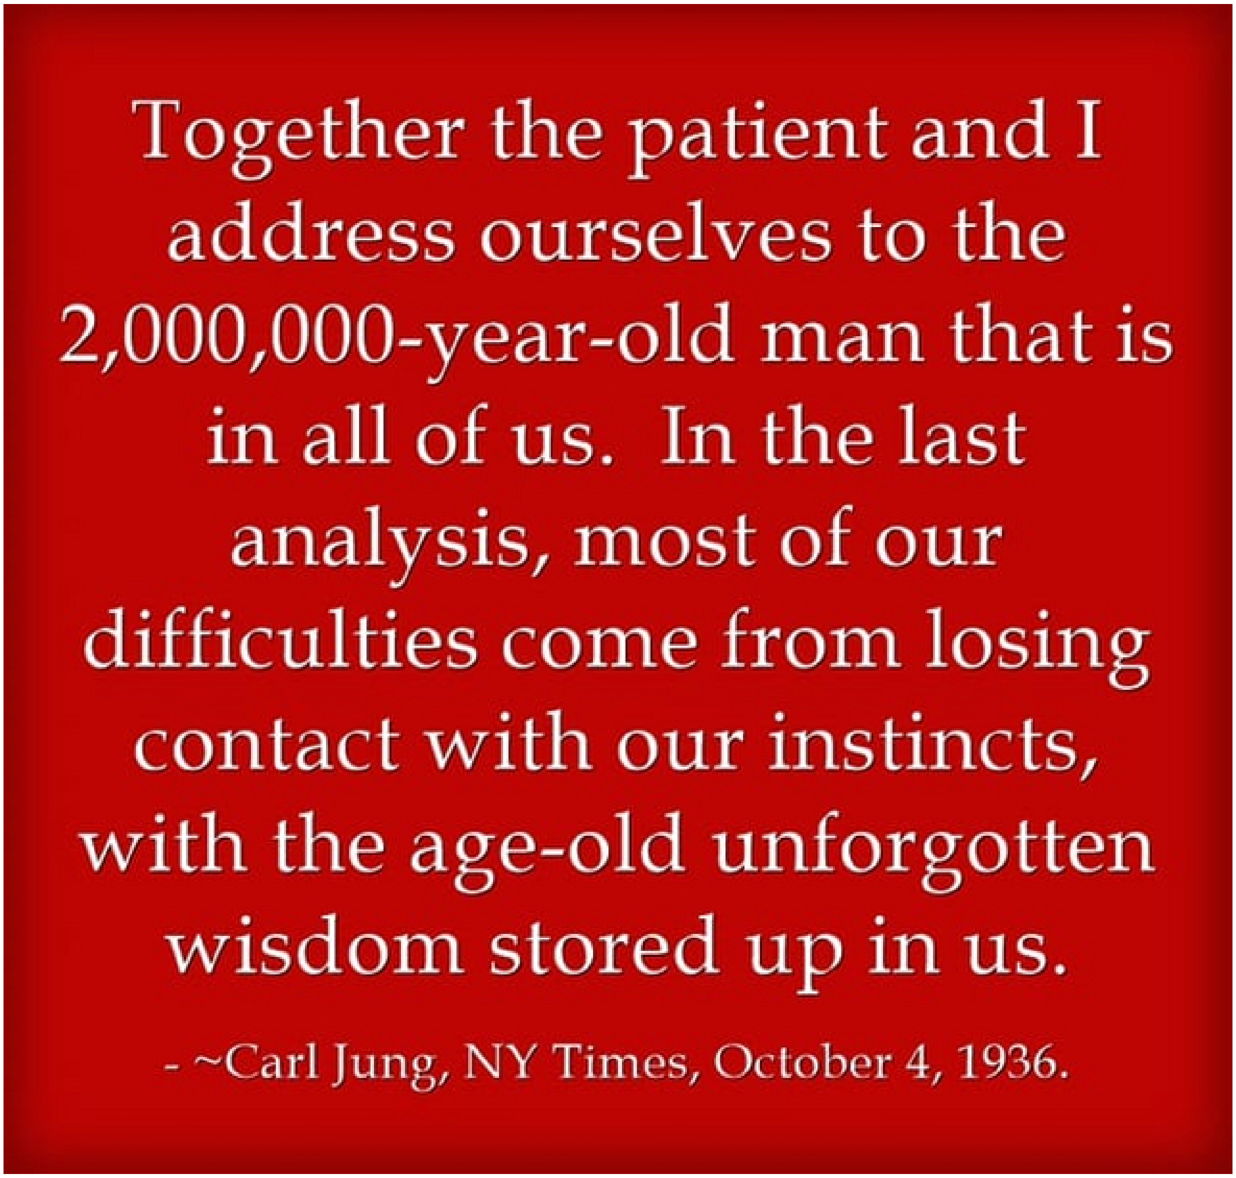


"Teachings" are tools not truths; points of view that are laid aside once they have served their purpose.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

"Teachings" are tools not truths; points of view that are laid aside once they have served their purpose. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

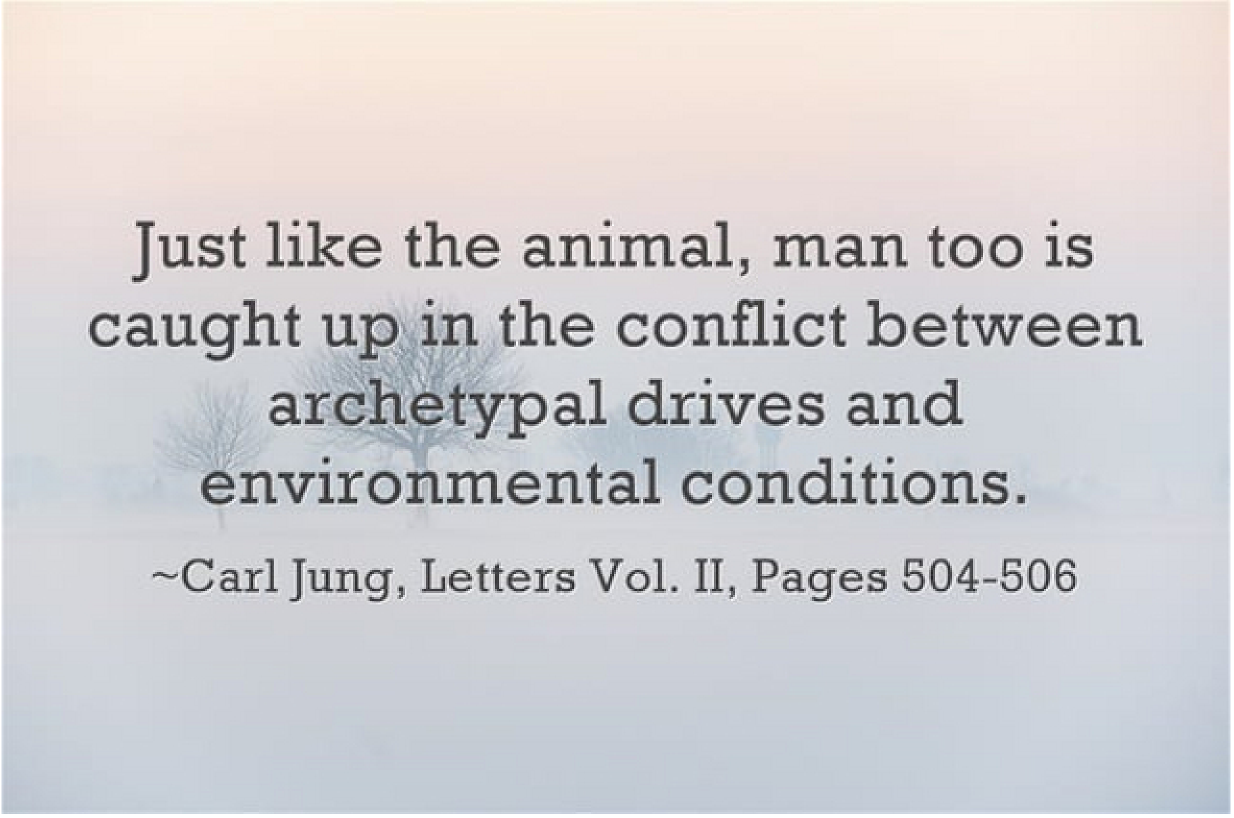
[20]



Together the patient and I address ourselves to the 2,000,000-year-old man that is in all of us. In the last analysis, most of our difficulties come from losing contact with our instincts, with the age-old unforgotten wisdom stored up in us.

- ~Carl Jung, NY Times, October 4, 1936.

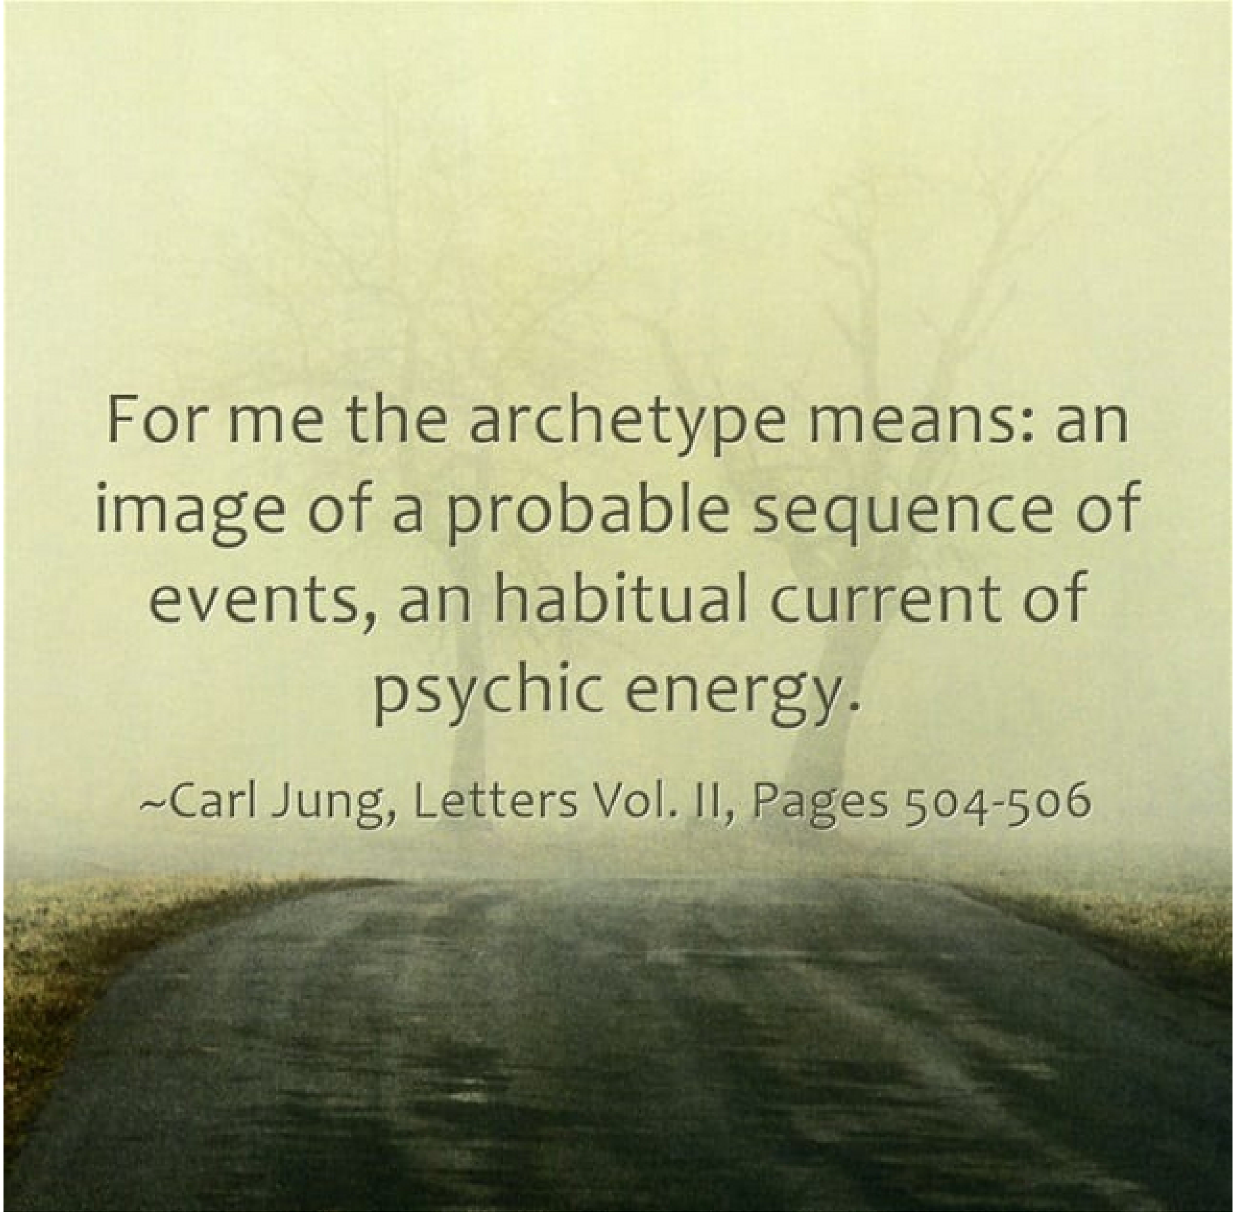
Thus the environment delivers us from the power of the archetypes, and the archetypes deliver us from the crushing influence of the environment. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506



Just like the animal, man too is caught up in the conflict between archetypal drives and environmental conditions.

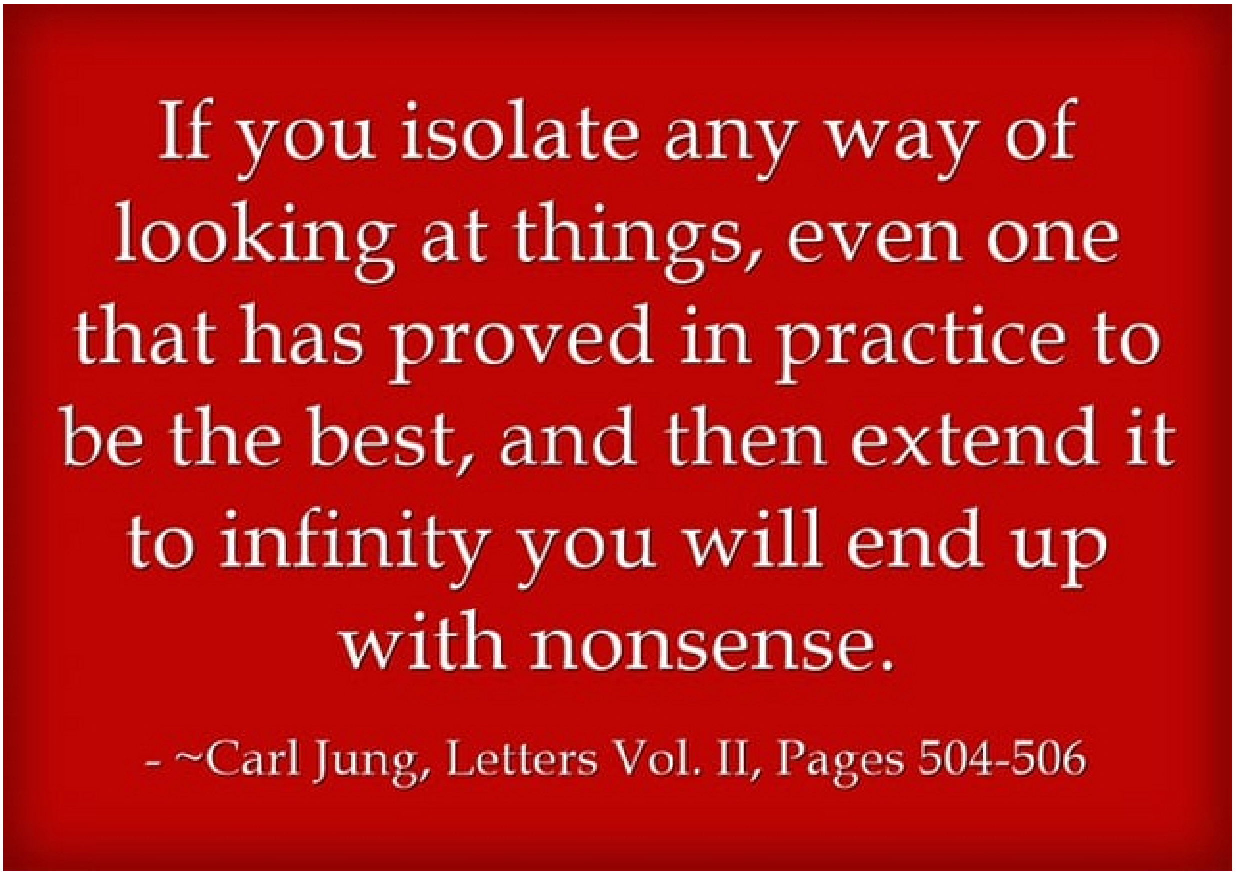
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

Just like the animal, man too is caught up in the conflict between archetypal drives and environmental conditions. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506



For me the archetype means: an image of a probable sequence of events, an habitual current of psychic energy.
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

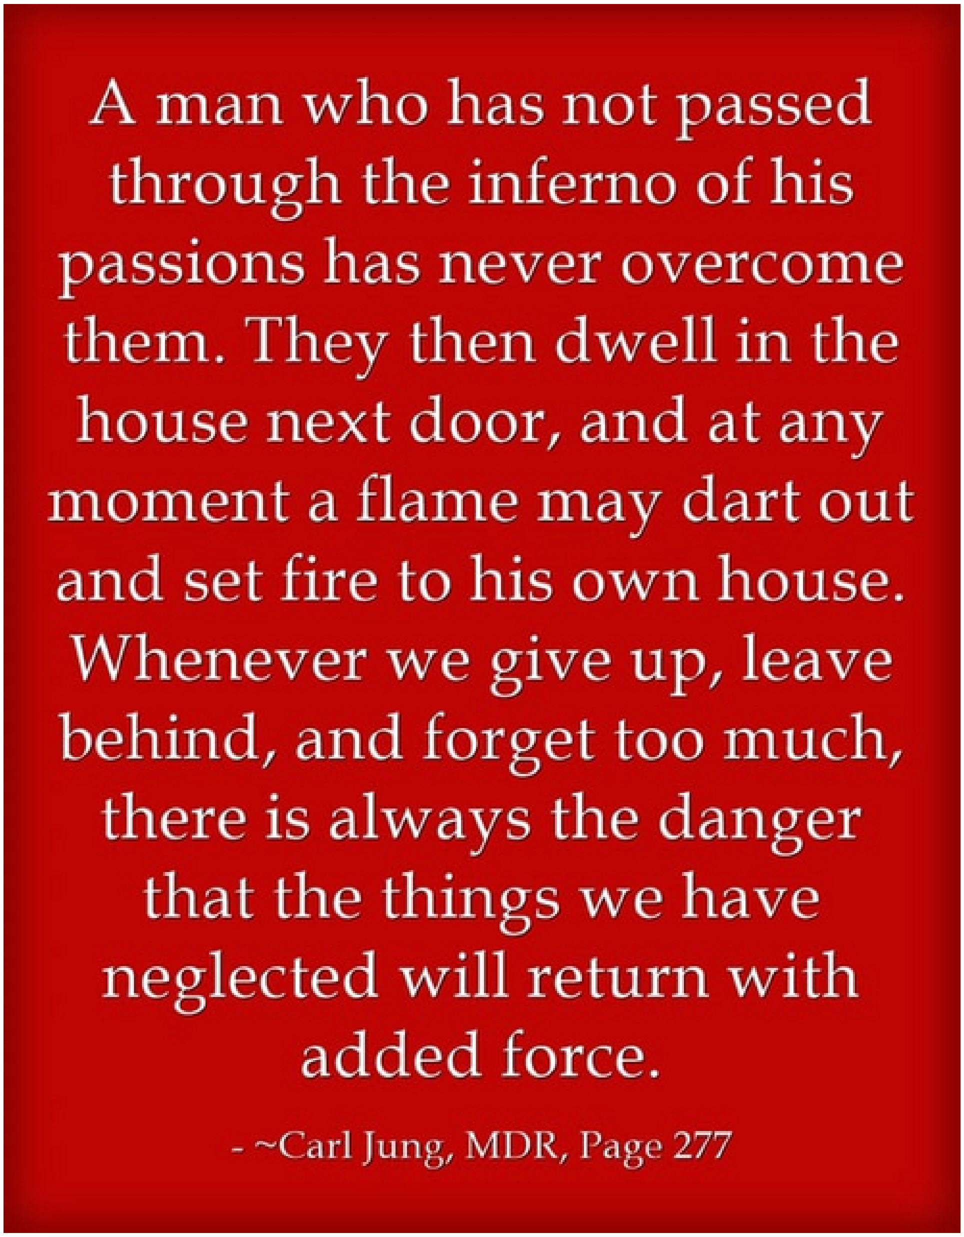
For me the archetype means: an image of a probable sequence of events, an habitual current of psychic energy. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506



If you isolate any way of looking at things, even one that has proved in practice to be the best, and then extend it to infinity you will end up with nonsense.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

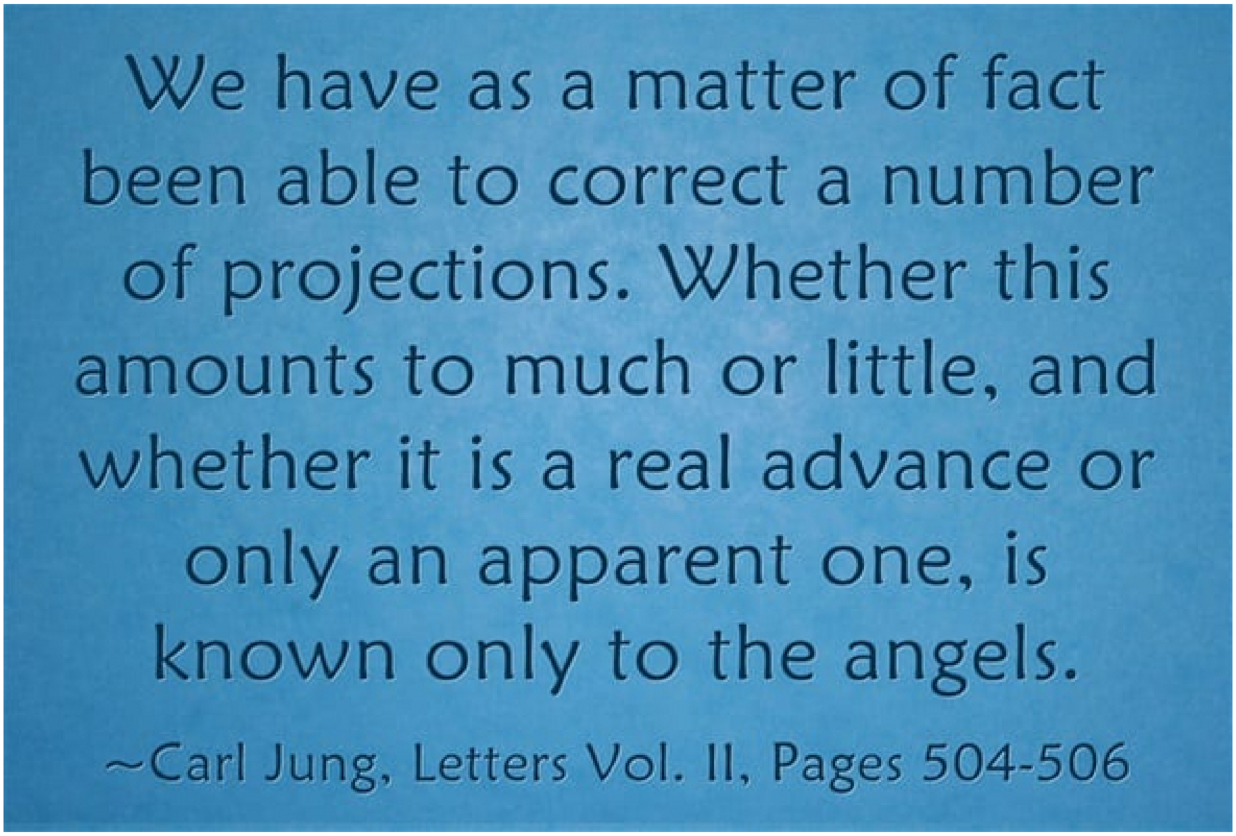
If you isolate any way of looking at things, even one that has proved in practice to be the best, and then extend it to infinity you will end up with nonsense. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506



A man who has not passed through the inferno of his passions has never overcome them. They then dwell in the house next door, and at any moment a flame may dart out and set fire to his own house. Whenever we give up, leave behind, and forget too much, there is always the danger that the things we have neglected will return with added force.

- ~Carl Jung, MDR, Page 277

A man who has not passed through the inferno of his passions has never overcome them. They then dwell in the house next door, and at any moment a flame may dart out and set fire to his own house. Whenever we give up, leave behind, and forget too much, there is always the danger that the things we have neglected will return with added force. Carl Jung, MDR, Page 277



We have as a matter of fact been able to correct a number of projections. Whether this amounts to much or little, and whether it is a real advance or only an apparent one, is known only to the angels.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

We have as a matter of fact been able to correct a number of projections. Whether this amounts to much or little, and whether it is a real advance or only an apparent one, is known only to the angels. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http://www.blogger.com/home

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/8750b-aaa.jpg
2. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/51493-bbb.jpg
3. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/f0d80-ccc.jpg
4. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/eed3a-ddd.jpg
5. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/c0d46-eee.jpg
6. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/5b74f-fff.jpg
7. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/020d6-ggg.jpg
8. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/94e0f-hhh.jpg
9. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/22c9d-iii.jpg
10. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/1dc04-kkk.jpg
11. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/5cf1b-lll.jpg
12. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/01c9b-mmm.jpg
13. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/a49fd-nnn.jpg
14. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/2c88b-ooo.jpg
15. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/46c8c-ppp.jpg
16. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/7f0c6-qqq.jpg
17. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/83ba2-rrr.jpg
18. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/de0e0-sss.jpg
19. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/82921-ttt.jpg
20. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/43c17-uuu.jpg
21. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/36ebe-vvv2b252822529.jpg
22. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/50820-www2b252822529.jpg
23. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/0d6a1-xxx2b252822529.jpg
24. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/23ed6-yyy.jpg
25. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/ade9b-zzz.jpg

---

Carl Jung on “Psychic Reality” and “Self-Liberation.” (2019-11-14 05:36)

[1]

[Carl Jung on “Psychic Reality” and “Self-Liberation.”]

"Psychic reality" is a controversial concept, like "psyche" or "mind." By the latter terms some understand consciousness and its contents, others allow the existence of "dark" or "subconscious" representations.

Some include instincts in the psychic realm, others exclude them. The vast majority consider the psyche to be a result of biochemical processes in the brain cells.

A few conjecture that it is the psyche that makes the cortical cells function. Some identify "life" with psyche. But only an insignificant minority regards the psychic phenomenon as a category of existence per se and draws the necessary conclusions.

It is indeed paradoxical that the category of existence, the indispensable “sine qua non” of all existence, namely the psyche, should be treated as if it were only semi-existent.

Psychic existence is the only category of existence of which we have immediate knowledge, since nothing can be known unless it first appears as a psychic image. Only psychic existence is immediately verifiable.

To the extent that the world does not assume the form of a psychic image, it is virtually non-existent. This is a fact which, with few exceptions as for instance in Schopenhauer’s philosophy the West has not yet fully realized.

But Schopenhauer was influenced by Buddhism and by the Upanishads.

Even a superficial acquaintance with Eastern thought is sufficient to show that a fundamental difference divides East and West. The East bases itself upon psychic reality, that is, upon the psyche as the main and unique condition of existence. It seems as if this Eastern recognition were a psychological or temperamental fact rather than a result of philosophical reasoning.

It is a typically introverted point of view, contrasted with the equally typical extraverted point of view of the West Introversion and extraversion are known to be temperamental or even constitutional attitudes which are never intentionally adopted in normal circumstances.

In exceptional cases they may be produced at will, but only under very special conditions. Introversion is, if one may so express it, the "style" of the East, an habitual and collective attitude, just as extraversion is the "style" of the West. Introversion is felt here as something abnormal, morbid, or otherwise objectionable.

Freud identifies it with an autoerotic, "narcissistic" attitude of mind. He shares his negative position with the National Socialist philosophy of modern Germany, which accuses introversion of being an offence against community feeling.

In the East, however, our cherished extraversion is depreciated as illusory desirousness, as existence in the samsara, the very essence of the nidana-chain which culminates in the sum of the world's sufferings.

Anyone with practical knowledge of the mutual depreciation of values between introvert and extravert will understand the emotional conflict between the Eastern and the Western standpoint.

For those who know something of the history of European philosophy the bitter wrangling about "universals" which began with Plato will provide an instructive example, I do not wish to go into all the ramifications of this conflict between introversion and extraversion, but I must mention the religious aspects of the problem.

The Christian West considers man to be wholly dependent upon the grace of God, or at least upon the Church as the exclusive and divinely sanctioned earthly instrument of man's redemption. The East, however, insists that man is the sole cause of his higher development, for it believes in "self- liberation."

Footnote 2: I am purposely leaving out of account the modernized East.

Carl Jung, Psychology and Religion, Pages 480-482, Paragraphs 769-770.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/10/b53e7-reality.jpg`

Carl Jung on “not-knowing" (2019-11-14 05:40)

[1]

To Claire Kaufmann

Dear Fraulein Kaufmann, 29 October 1935

You are quite right that on the philosophical level the concept is always a symbol even though it is an expression for something known.

I absolutely agree with you when you understand knowing at the same time as not-knowing, but one must go pretty far before one finds people who admit that this is so.

Your view fully accords with the standpoint of St. Paul that thinking opens the way to God.

"For the spirit," as Paul says, "searcheth . . . the deep things of God." [1 Cor. 2:10.]

What you say about the theoretical development of my empirical views is also very true.

I found long ago that further building needed to be done. But I am still working on the foundations.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung, Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 202.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/7df61-jung.jpg`

Books by June Singer [Jungian] (2019-11-14 05:44)

June Singer

[1]

[2] NEW AND REVISED
"Certainly the very best introduction to Jung around..."
—Joseph Campbell
boundaries of the SOUL
the practice of JUNG'S psychology
JUNE SINGER

[3]Buy at Amazon here

[4] BLAKE,
JUNG, and the Collective Unconscious
The Conflict between Reason and Imagination
JUNE SINGER
Introduction by M. Esther Harding

[5]Buy at Amazon here

[6] Androgyny
the opposites within
JUNE SINGER

[7]Buy at Amazon here

[8] MODERN WOMAN
in search of SOUL
A Jungian Guide
to the Visible and Invisible Worlds
JUNE SINGER
author of Boundaries of the Soul

[9]Buy at Amazon here

[10] THE
POWER
OF LOVE
to Transform Our Lives and Our World
JUNE SINGER

[11]Buy at Amazon here

[12] JUNG
AND THE LOST
GOSPELS
Insights into The Dead Sea Scrolls
and the Nag Hammadi Library
STEPHAN A. HOELLER
Foreword by June Singer

[13]Buy at Amazon here

[14] June Singer
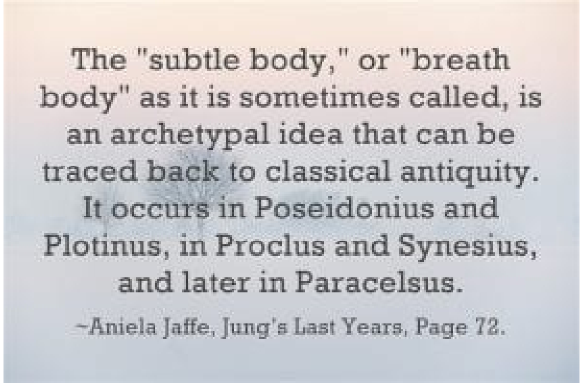
KNOWLEDGE OF THE HEART
GNOSTIC SECRETS OF INNER WISDOM
FOREWORD BY CLARISSA PINKOLA ESTÉS Ph.D.
Author of Women Who Run With the Wolves

[15]Buy at Amazon here

[16]Books by June Singer

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/02e75-june.jpg
2. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/ba1b2-2.jpg
3. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0385475292/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_CLzzub1SY35M3
4. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/03557-3.jpg
5. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0892540516/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_-Lzzub1D0D01R
6. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/7036e-4.jpg
7. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0892540508/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_vMzzub1R4T9DE
8. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/d621e-7.jpg
9. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0892540419/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_pNzzub1NSQM2Z
10. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/bf1c4-8.jpg
11. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0892540524/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_4Nzzub1E586GP
12. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/909f9-9.jpg
13. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0835606465/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_AOzzub0K1PV4B
14. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/1ff2a-10.jpg
15. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1862045399/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_mPzzub1E76A5J
16. http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-june-singer-jungian.html

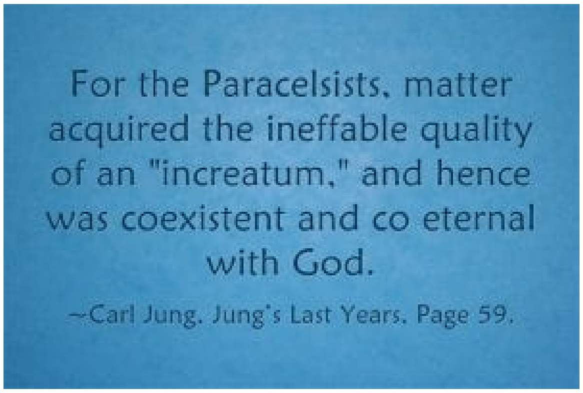
Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-11-14 05:51)



The "subtle body," or "breath body" as it is sometimes called, is an archetypal idea that can be traced back to classical antiquity. It occurs in Poseidonius and Plotinus, in Proclus and Synesius, and later in Paracelsus.

~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 72.

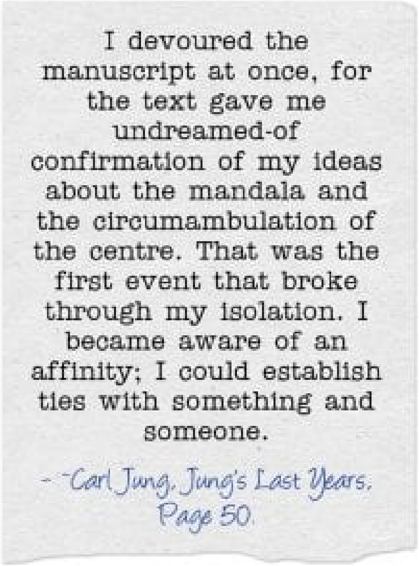
The "subtle body," or "breath body" as it is sometimes called, is an archetypal idea that can be traced back to classical antiquity. It occurs in Poseidonius and Plotinus, in Proclus and Synesius, and later in Paracelsus. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 72.



For the Paracelsists, matter acquired the ineffable quality of an "increatum," and hence was coexistent and co eternal with God.

~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 59.

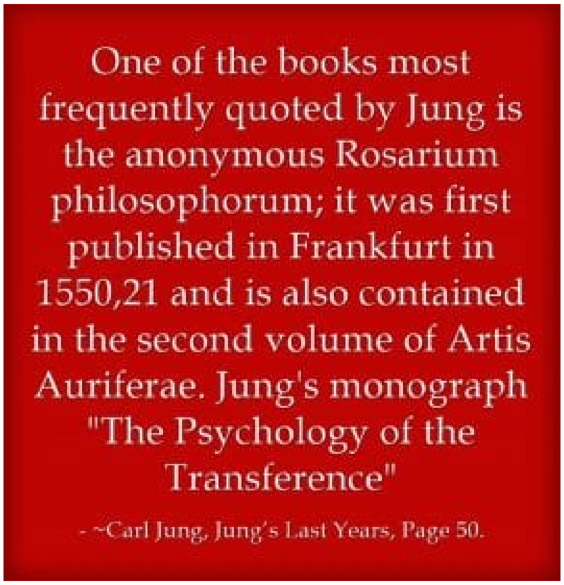
For the Paracelsists, matter acquired the ineffable quality of an "increatum," and hence was coexistent and co eternal with God. Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 59.



I devoured the manuscript at once, for the text gave me undreamed-of confirmation of my ideas about the mandala and the circumambulation of the centre. That was the first event that broke through my isolation. I became aware of an affinity; I could establish ties with something and someone.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 50.

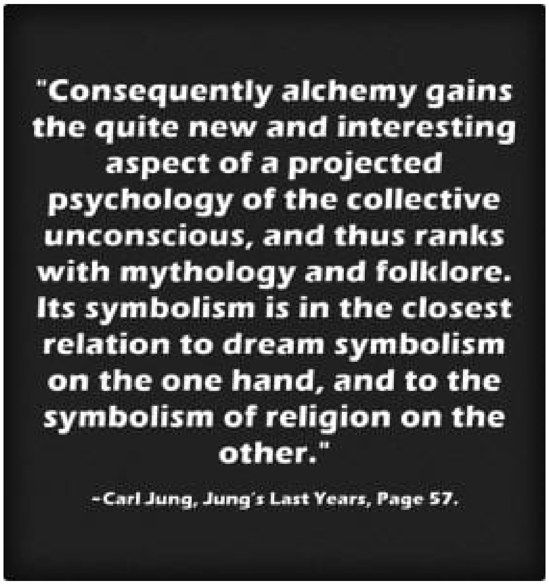
I devoured the manuscript at once, for the text gave me undreamed-of confirmation of my ideas about the mandala and the circumambulation of the centre. That was the first event that broke through my isolation. I became aware of an affinity; I could establish ties with something and someone. Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 50.



One of the books most frequently quoted by Jung is the anonymous Rosarium philosophorum; it was first published in Frankfurt in 1550,21 and is also contained in the second volume of Artis Auriferae. Jung's monograph "The Psychology of the Transference"

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 50.

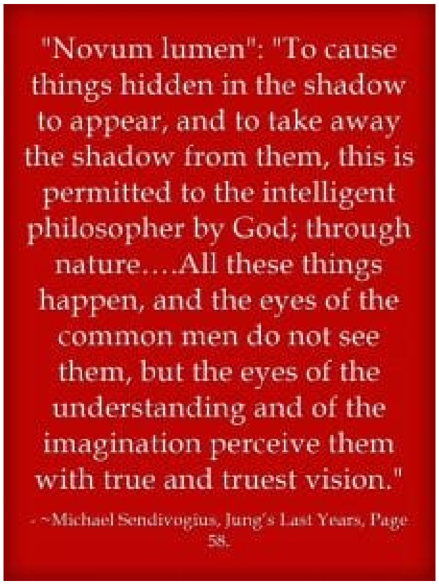
One of the books most frequently quoted by Jung is the anonymous Rosarium philosophorum; it was first published in Frankfurt in 1550, and is also contained in the second volume of Artis Auriferae. Jung's monograph "The Psychology of the Transference" Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 50.



"Consequently alchemy gains the quite new and interesting aspect of a projected psychology of the collective unconscious, and thus ranks with mythology and folklore. Its symbolism is in the closest relation to dream symbolism on the one hand, and to the symbolism of religion on the other."

-Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 57.

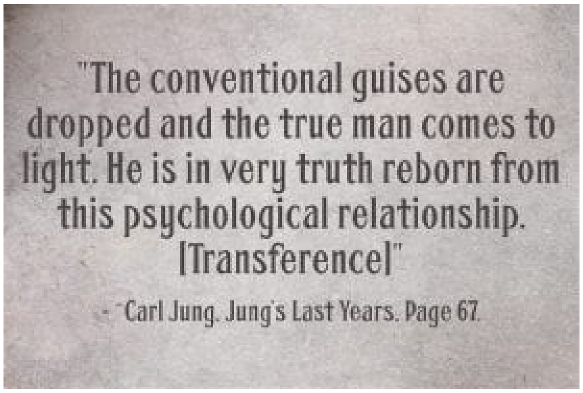
"Consequently alchemy gains the quite new and interesting aspect of a projected psychology of the collective unconscious, and thus ranks with mythology and folklore. Its symbolism is in the closest relation to dream symbolism on the one hand, and to the symbolism of religion on the other." Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 57.



"Novum lumen": "To cause things hidden in the shadow to appear, and to take away the shadow from them, this is permitted to the intelligent philosopher by God; through nature….All these things happen, and the eyes of the common men do not see them, but the eyes of the understanding and of the imagination perceive them with true and truest vision."

- ~Michael Sendivogius, Jung's Last Years, Page 58.

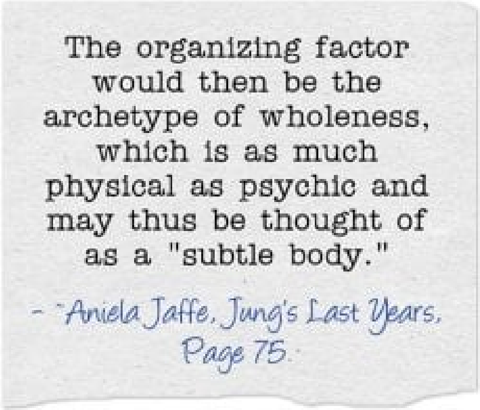
"Novum lumen": "To cause things hidden in the shadow to appear, and to take away the shadow from them, this is permitted to the intelligent philosopher by God; through nature….All these things happen, and the eyes of the common men do not see them, but the eyes of the understanding and of the imagination perceive them with true and truest vision." Michael Sendivogius, Jung's Last Years, Page 58.



"The conventional guises are dropped and the true man comes to light. He is in very truth reborn from this psychological relationship. [Transference]"

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 67.

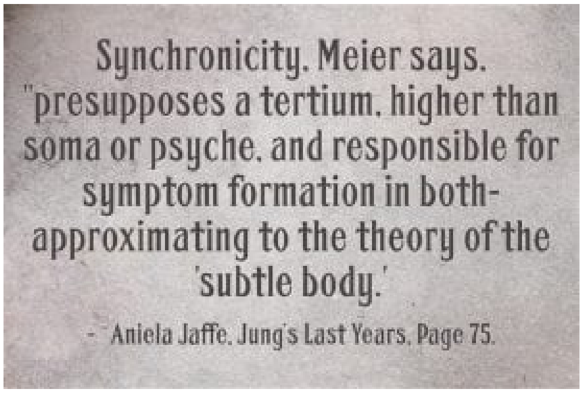
"The conventional guises are dropped and the true man comes to light. He is in very truth reborn from this psychological relationship. [Transference]" Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 67.



The organizing factor would then be the archetype of wholeness, which is as much physical as psychic and may thus be thought of as a "subtle body."

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 75.

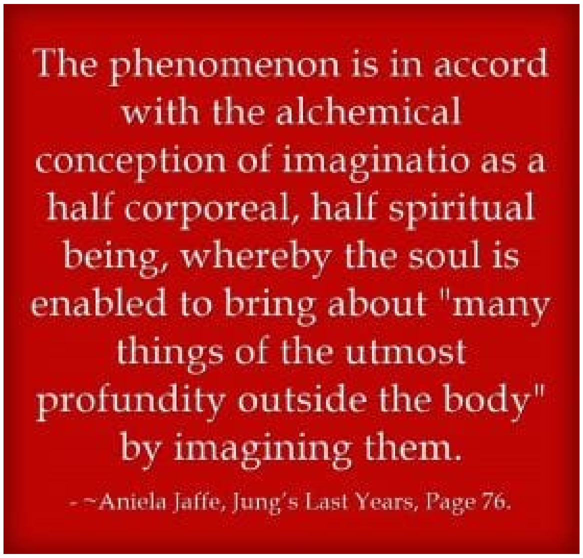
The organizing factor would then be the archetype of wholeness, which is as much physical as psychic and may thus be thought of as a "subtle body." Aniela Jaffe, Jung’s Last Years, Page 75.



Synchronicity, Meier says, "presupposes a tertium, higher than soma or psyche, and responsible for symptom formation in both-approximating to the theory of the 'subtle body.'

- Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 75.

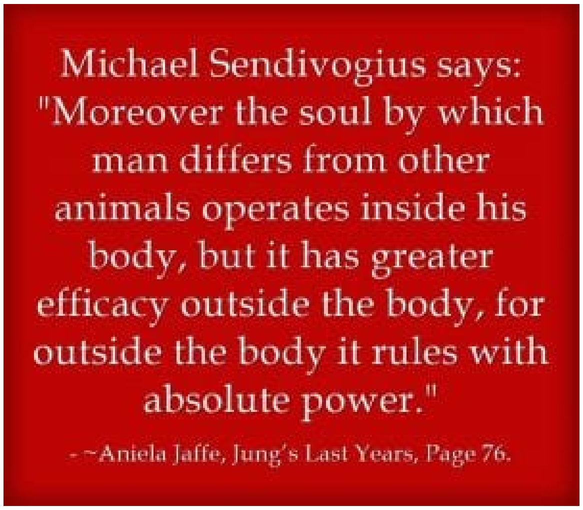
Synchronicity, Meier says, "presupposes a tertium, higher than soma or psyche, and responsible for symptom formation in both-approximating to the theory of the ’subtle body.’ Aniela Jaffe, Jung’s Last Years, Page 75.



The phenomenon is in accord with the alchemical conception of imaginatio as a half corporeal, half spiritual being, whereby the soul is enabled to bring about "many things of the utmost profundity outside the body" by imagining them.

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 76.

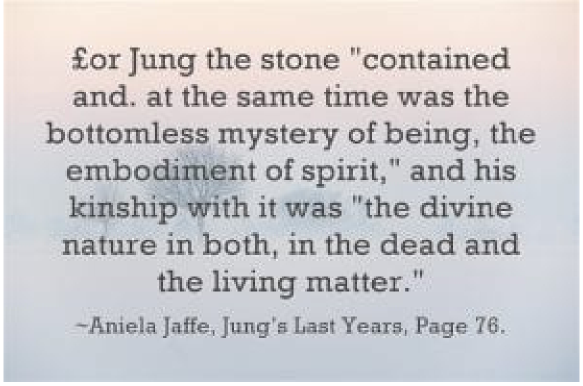
The phenomenon is in accord with the alchemical conception of imaginatio as a half corporeal, half spiritual being, whereby the soul is enabled to bring about "many things of the utmost profundity outside the body" by imagining them. Aniela Jaffe, Jung’s Last Years, Page 76.



Michael Sendivogius says: "Moreover the soul by which man differs from other animals operates inside his body, but it has greater efficacy outside the body, for outside the body it rules with absolute power."

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 76.

Michael Sendivogius says: "Moreover the soul by which man differs from other animals operates inside his body, but it has greater efficacy outside the body, for outside the body it rules with absolute power." Aniela Jaffe, Jung’s Last Years, Page 76.



£or Jung the stone "contained and. at the same time was the bottomless mystery of being, the embodiment of spirit," and his kinship with it was "the divine nature in both, in the dead and the living matter."

~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 76.

For Jung the stone "contained and. at the same time was the bottomless mystery of being, the embodiment of spirit," and his kinship with it was "the divine nature in both, in the dead and the living matter." Aniela Jaffe, Jung’s Last Years, Page 76.

"The experiences of the alchemists were, in a sense, my experiences, and their world was my world. "

~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 76.

"The experiences of the alchemists were, in a sense, my experiences, and their world was my world. " Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 76.

Yet, unlike the alchemists, what fascinated Jung his life long was not Matter, but Psyche. For the scientist in him she was the object of rigorous empirical research; as a physician he succored her with deepest understanding; as a man he was the master and servant of her transformations.

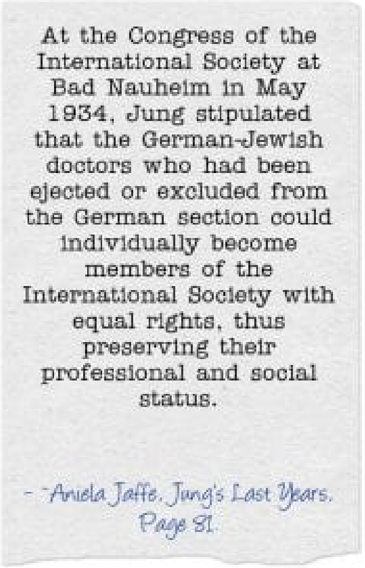
- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 77.

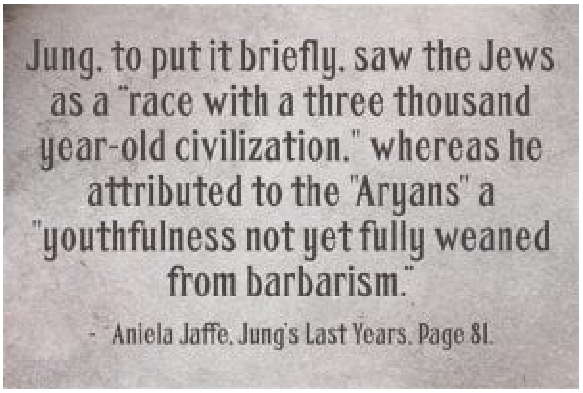
Yet, unlike the alchemists, what fascinated Jung his life long was not Matter, but Psyche. For the scientist in him she was the object of rigorous empirical research; as a physician he succored her with deepest understanding; as a man he was the master and servant of her transformations. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 77.



At the Congress of the International Society at Bad Nauheim in May 1934, Jung stipulated that the German-Jewish doctors who had been ejected or excluded from the German section could individually become members of the International Society with equal rights, thus preserving their professional and social status.

- Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 81.

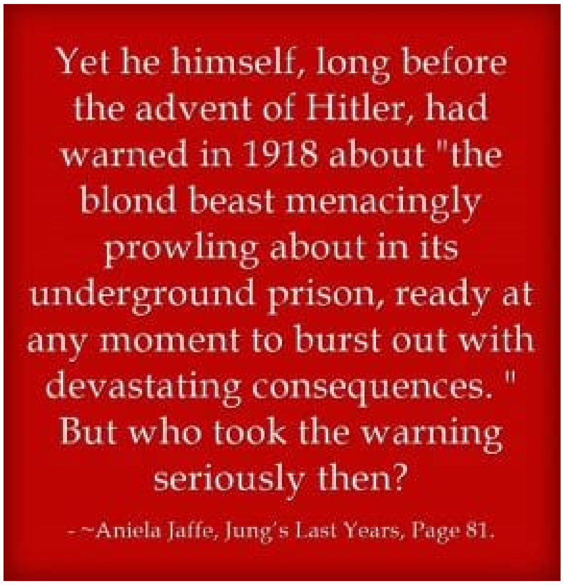
At the Congress of the International Society at Bad Nauheim in May 1934, Jung stipulated that the German-Jewish doctors who had been ejected or excluded from the German section could individually become members of the International Society with equal rights, thus preserving their professional and social status. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 81.



Jung, to put it briefly, saw the Jews as a "race with a three thousand year-old civilization," whereas he attributed to the "Aryans" a "youthfulness not yet fully weaned from barbarism."

- Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 81.

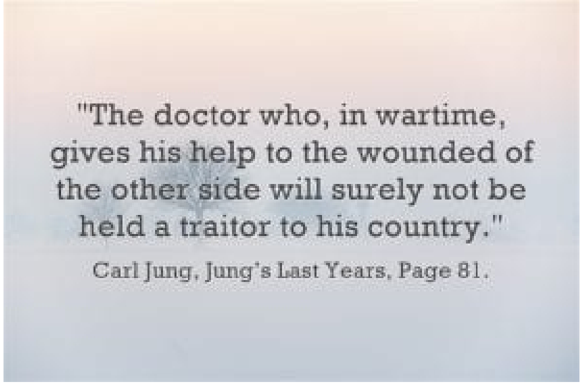
Jung, to put it briefly, saw the Jews as a "race with a three thousand year-old civilization," whereas he attributed to the "Aryans" a "youthfulness not yet fully weaned from barbarism." Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 81.



Yet he himself, long before the advent of Hitler, had warned in 1918 about "the blond beast menacingly prowling about in its underground prison, ready at any moment to burst out with devastating consequences. " But who took the warning seriously then?

- ~Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 81.

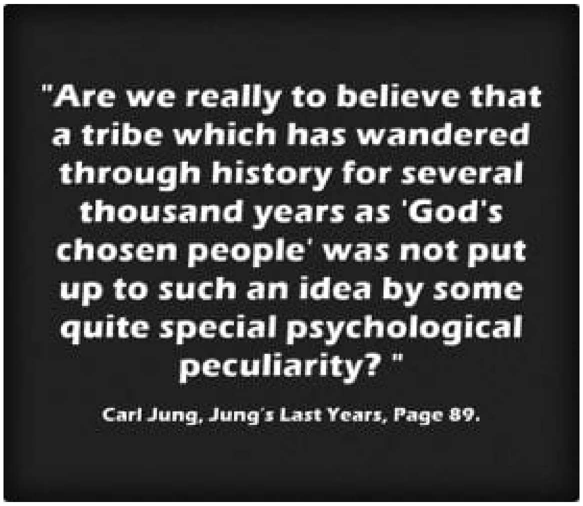
Yet he [Jung] himself, long before the advent of Hitler, had warned in 1918 about "the blond beast menacingly prowling about in its underground prison, ready at any moment to burst out with devastating consequences. " But who took the warning seriously then? Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 91.



"The doctor who, in wartime, gives his help to the wounded of the other side will surely not be held a traitor to his country."

Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 81.

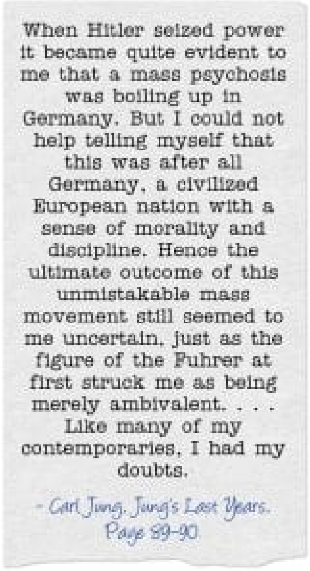
"The doctor who, in wartime, gives his help to the wounded of the other side will surely not be held a traitor to his country." Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 81.



"Are we really to believe that a tribe which has wandered through history for several thousand years as 'God's chosen people' was not put up to such an idea by some quite special psychological peculiarity? "

Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 89.

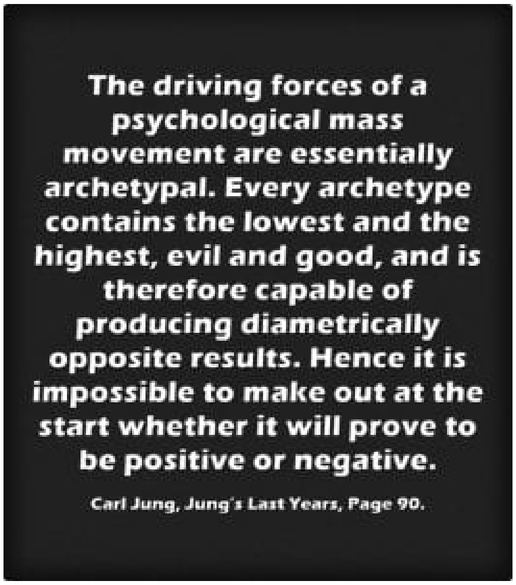
"Are we really to believe that a tribe which has wandered through history for several thousand years as 'God's chosen people' was not put up to such an idea by some quite special psychological peculiarity? " Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 89.



When Hitler seized power it became quite evident to me that a mass psychosis was boiling up in Germany. But I could not help telling myself that this was after all Germany, a civilized European nation with a sense of morality and discipline. Hence the ultimate outcome of this unmistakable mass movement still seemed to me uncertain, just as the figure of the Fuhrer at first struck me as being merely ambivalent. . . . Like many of my contemporaries, I had my doubts.

- Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 89-90

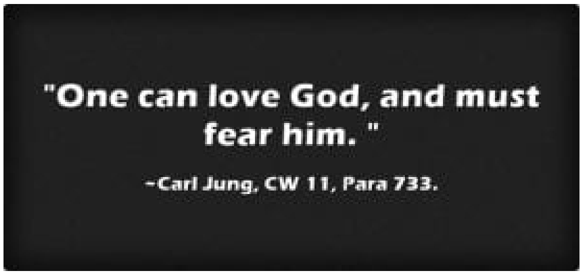
When Hitler seized power it became quite evident to me that a mass psychosis was boiling up in Germany. But I could not help telling myself that this was after all Germany, a civilized European nation with a sense of morality and discipline. Hence the ultimate outcome of this unmistakable mass movement still seemed to me uncertain, just as the figure of the Fuhrer at first struck me as being merely ambivalent. . . . Like many of my contemporaries, I had my doubts. Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 89-90.



The driving forces of a psychological mass movement are essentially archetypal. Every archetype contains the lowest and the highest, evil and good, and is therefore capable of producing diametrically opposite results. Hence it is impossible to make out at the start whether it will prove to be positive or negative.

Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 90.

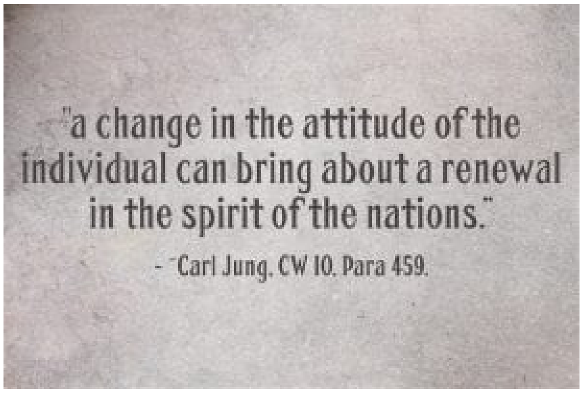
The driving forces of a psychological mass movement are essentially archetypal. Every archetype contains the lowest and the highest, evil and good, and is therefore capable of producing diametrically opposite results. Hence it is impossible to make out at the start whether it will prove to be positive or negative. Carl Jung, Jung's Last Years, Page 90.



"One can love God, and must fear him. "

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 733.

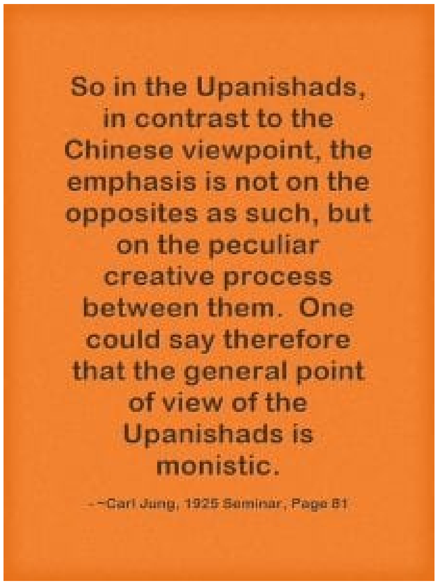
"One can love God, and must fear him. " Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 733.



"a change in the attitude of the individual can bring about a renewal in the spirit of the nations."

- Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 459.

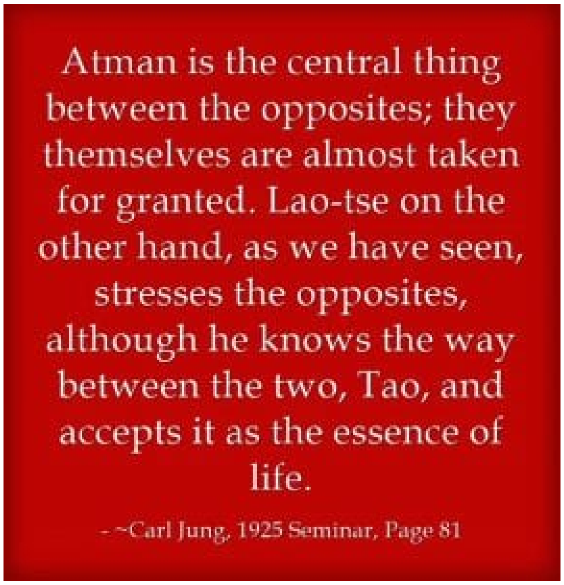
"a change in the attitude of the individual can bring about a renewal in the spirit of the nations."   Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 459.



So in the Upanishads, in contrast to the Chinese viewpoint, the emphasis is not on the opposites as such, but on the peculiar creative process between them. One could say therefore that the general point of view of the Upanishads is monistic.

--Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 81

So in the Upanishads, in contrast to the Chinese viewpoint, the emphasis is not on the opposites as such, but on the peculiar creative process between them. One could say therefore that the general point of view of the Upanishads is monistic. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 81



Atman is the central thing between the opposites; they themselves are almost taken for granted. Lao-tse on the other hand, as we have seen, stresses the opposites, although he knows the way between the two, Tao, and accepts it as the essence of life.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 81

Atman is the central thing between the opposites; they themselves are almost taken for granted. Lao-tse on the other hand, as we have seen, stresses the opposites, although he knows the way between the two, Tao, and accepts it as the essence of life. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 81

THE UPANISHADS APPEAL TO PEOPLE WHO ARE BEYOND THE PAIRS OF OPPOSITES.

- CARL JUNG, 1925 SEMINAR, PAGE 82

The Upanishads appeal to people who are beyond the pairs of opposites. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 82

Carl Jung on the Mandala as a collective phenomenon (2019-11-14 12:51)

If the motif of the mandala is an archetype it ought to be a collective phenomenon, i.e., theoretically it should appear in everyone.

In practice, however, it is to be met with in distinct form in relatively few cases, though this does not prevent it from functioning as a concealed pole round which everything ultimately revolves.

In the last analysis every life is the realization of a whole, that is, of a self, for which reason this realization can also be called "individuation."

All life is bound to individual carriers who realize it, and it is simply inconceivable without them.

But every carrier is charged with an individual destiny and destination, and the realization of these alone makes sense of life.

True, the "sense" is often something that could just as well be called "nonsense," for there is a certain incommensurability between the mystery of existence and human understanding.

"Sense" and "nonsense" are merely man-made labels which serve to give us a reasonably valid sense of direction. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 222, Para 330.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/8aae0-mandala.jpg`

Books by Daryl Sharp (2019-11-15 03:31)

Books by Daryl Sharp

[1]

[2]PERSONALITY TYPES
Jung's Model of Typology
DARYL SHARP

[3]Buy at Amazon here

[4]C.G. JUNG Lexicon
A Primer of Terms & Concepts
DARYL SHARP
Author of Personality Types: Jung's Model of Typology

[5]Buy at Amazon here

[6] Jungian
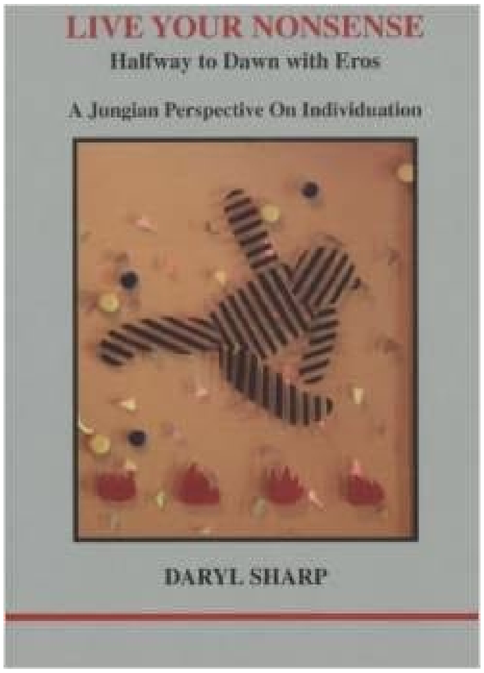
Psychology
Unplugged
My Life
As an Elephant
DARYL SHARP

[7]Buy at Amazon here

[8]
Digesting Jung
Food for the Journey
Daryl Sharp

[9]Buy at Amazon here

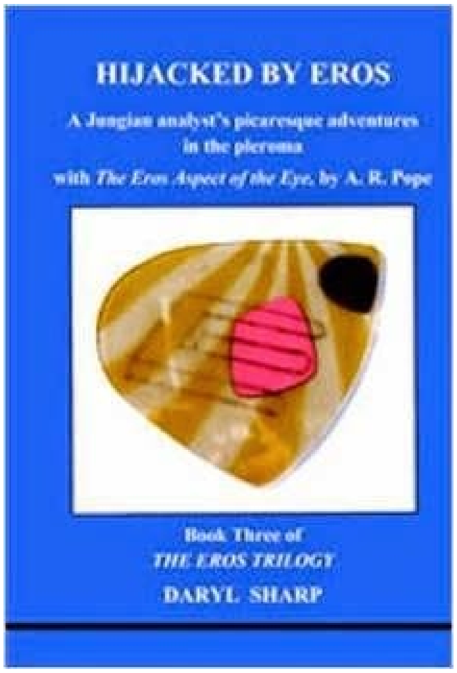
[10]



LIVE YOUR NONSENSE
Halfway to Dawn with Eros
A Jungian Perspective On Individuation
DARYL SHARP

[11]Buy at Amazon here

[12]



HIJACKED BY EROS
A Jungian analyst's picaresque adventures in the pleroma
with The Eros Aspect of the Eye, by A. R. Pope Book Three of
THE EROS TRILOGY
DARYL SHARP

[13]Buy at Amazon here

[14]Trampled to Death by Geese
More Eros, and a Lot More Nonsense
A Jungian analyst's whimsical perspective on the inner life
DARYL SHARP

[15]Buy at Amazon here

[16]The Survival Papers
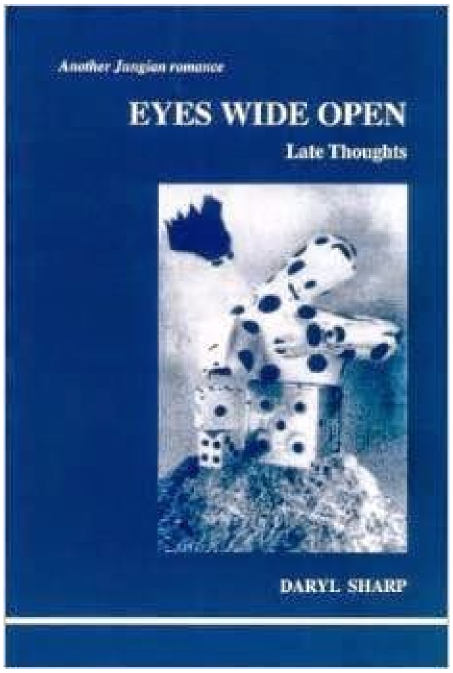
Anatomy of a Midlife Crisis
Daryl Sharp

[17]Buy at Amazon here

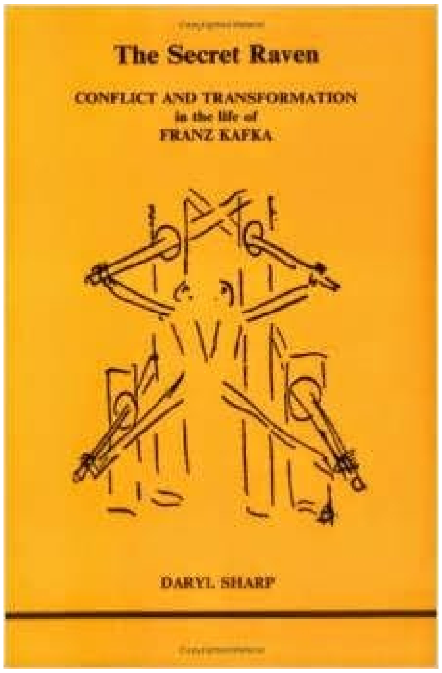
[18]



Another Jungian romance
EYES WIDE OPEN
Late Thoughts
DARYL SHARP

[19]Buy at Amazon here

[20]



The Secret Raven
CONFLICT AND TRANSFORMATION
in the life of
FRANZ KAFKA
DARYL SHARP

[21]Buy at Amazon here

[22] THE PARENTAL IMAGE
Its Injury and Reconstruction
M. Esther
Harding, M.D.
Edited by Daryl Sharp

[23]Buy at Amazon here

[24] Miles To Go Before I Sleep
Growing Up Puer
Another Jungian Romance
DARYL SHARP

[25]Buy at Amazon here

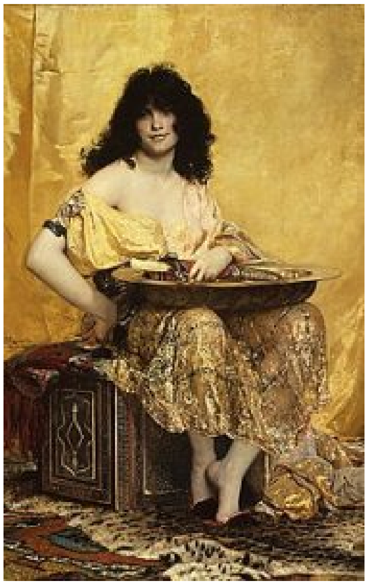
[26]
[27]Buy at Amazon here

[28]Books by Daryl Sharp

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/837ed-1.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/71b61-2.jpg`
3. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123309/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_mKMzub1MT0JV8`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/cfd75-3.jpg`
5. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123481/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_JKMzub1F9YKYH`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/1ed6d-4.jpg`
7. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123813/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_iLMzub0JFHCMS`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b0e6c-5.jpg`
9. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123961/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_ALMzub1HNCSHE`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/fc560-6.jpg`
11. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/1894574311/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_VLMzub1MPYSKM`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/33c2c-7.jpg`
13. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/1894574354/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_lMMzub0Q5SA8Z`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/175c2-8.jpg`
15. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/1894574346/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_DMMzub01RXDG2`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/595d1-9.jpg`
17. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123341/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_XMMzub1XA7NCK`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/e9063-12.jpg`
19. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/1894574184/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_tNMzub0P8D60V`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/e65e2-13.jpg`

21. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123007/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_1NMzub140A0TA`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/4b61a-14.jpg`
23. `http:///`
24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/7f91c-15.jpg`
25. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/1894574362/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_QOMzub1YVA8ZD`
26. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/648a8-16.jpg`
27. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123732/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_9OMzub0PX5EN0`
28. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-daryl-sharp.html`

Shield Men From Her ~Carl Jung (2019-11-15 03:40)



Salomé, by Henri Regnault (1870).

"Shield men from her, and her from men. Listen to what she wails and sings in prison but don’t let her escape, as she will immediately turn whore. As her husband you are blessed through her, and therefore cursed. She belongs to the daimonic race of the Tom Thumbs and giants, and is only distantly related to humankind. If you seek to grasp her in human terms you will be beside yourself The excess of your rage, your doubt, and your love belong to her, but only the excess. If you give her this excess, humanity will be saved from the nightmare. For if you do not see your soul, you see her in fellow men and this will drive you mad, since this devilish mystery and hellish spook can hardly be seen through. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Pages 343-344.

"Look at man, the weal(one in his wretchedness and torment, whom the Gods have singled out as their quarry-tear to pieces the bloody veil that the lost soul has woven around man, the cruel nets woven by the death-bringing, and take hold of the divine whore who still cannot recover from her fall from grace and craves filth and power in raving blindness. Lock her up like a lecherous bitch who would like to mingle her blood with every dirty cur. Capture her, may enough at last be enough. Let her for once taste your torment so that she will get to feel man and his hammer, which he has wrested from the Gods.

"May man rule in the human world. May his laws be valid. But treat the souls, daimons, and Gods in their way; offering what is demanded. But burden no man, demand and expect nothing from him, with what your devil-souls and God-souls lead you to believe, but endure and remain silent and do piously what befits your kind. You should act not on the other but on yourself unless the other asks for your help or opinion. Do you understand what the other does? Never-how should you? Does the other understand what you do? Whence do you take the right to think about the other and act on him? You have neglected yourself your garden is full of weeds, and you want to teach your neighbor about order and provide evidence for his shortcomings.

"Why should you keep silent about the others? Because there would be plenty to discuss concerning your own daimons. But if you act on and think about the other without him soliciting your opinion or advice, you do so because you cannot distinguish yourself from your soul.

Therefore you fall victim to her presumption and help her into whoring. Or do you believe that you must lend your human power to the soul or the Gods, or even that it will be useful and pious work if you want to bring the Gods to bear on others? Blinded one, that is Christian presumptuousness. The Gods don't need your help, you laughable idolater, who seem to yourself like a God and want to form, improve, rebuke, educate, and create men. Are you perfect yourself?-therefore remain silent, mind your business, and behold your inadequacy every day. You are most in need of your own help; you should keep your opinions and good advice ready for yourself and not run to others like a whore with understanding and the desire to help.

You don't need to play God. What are daimons, who don't act out of themselves? So let them go to work, but not through you, or else you yourself will become a daimon to others; leave them to themselves and don't preempt them with awkward love, concern, care, advice, and other presumptions. Otherwise you would be doing the work of the daimons; you yourself would become a daimon and therefore go into a frenzy. But the daimons are pleased at the raving of helpless men advising and striving to help others.So stay quiet, fulfill the cursed work of redemption on yourself for then the daimons must torment themselves and in the same way all your fellow men, who do not distinguish themselves from their souls and let themselves be mocked by daimons. Is it cruel to leave your blinded fellow human beings to their own devices? It would be cruel if you could open their eyes. But you could open their eyes only if they solicited your opinion and help. Yet if they do not, they do not need your help. If you force your help on them nonetheless, you become their daimon and increase their blindness, since you set a bad example. Draw the coat of patience and silence over your head, sit down, and leave the daimon to accomplish his work. If he brings something about, he will work wonders. Thus will you sit under fruit-bearing trees.

"Know that the daimons would like to inflame you to embrace their work, which is not yours. And, you fool, you believe that it is you and that it is your work. Why? Because you can't distinguish yourself from your soul. But you are distinct from her, and you should not pursue whoring with other souls as if you yourself were a soul, but instead you are a powerless man who needs all his force for his own completion. Why do you look to the other? What you see in him lies neglected in yourself You should be the guard before the prison of your soul. You are your soul's eunuch, who protects her from Gods and men, or protects the Gods and men from her. Power is given to the weak man, a poison that paralyzes even the Gods, like a poison sting bestowed upon the little bee whose force is far inferior to yours. Your soul could seize this poison and thereby endanger even the Gods. So put the soul under wraps, distinguish yourself from her, since not only your fellow men but also the Gods must live."

When Philemon had finished, I turned to my soul, who had come nearer from above during Philemon's speech, and spoke to her:

"Have you heard what Philemon has been saying? How does this tone strike you? Is his advice good?"

But she said, "Do not mock, or else you strike yourself Do not forget to love me."

"It is difficult for me to unite hate and love," I replied.

"I understand," she said, "yet you know that it is the same. Hate and love mean the same to me. Like all women of my kind, form matters less to me than that everything belong to me or else to no one. I am also jealous of the hate you give others. I want everything, since I need everything for the great journey that I intend to begin after your disappearance. I must prepare in good time. Until then I must make timely provision and much is still lacking. "

”And do you agree that I throw you into prison" I asked.

"Of course," she answered, "there I have peace and can collect myself Your human world makes me drunk-so much human blood-I could get intoxicated on it to the point of madness. Doors of iron, walls of stone, cold darkness and the rations of penance-that is the bliss of redemption. You do not suspect my torment when the bloody intoxication seizes me, hurls me again and again into living matter from a dark fearful creative urge that formerly brought me close to the lifeless and ignited the terrible lust for procreation in me. Remove me from conceiving matter, the rutting feminine of yawning emptiness. Force me into confinement where I can find resistance and my own law. Where I can think about the journey, the rising sun the dead one spoke o£ and the buzzing, melodious golden wings. Be thankful-don’t you want to thank me? You are blinded. You deserve my highest thanks."

Filled with delight at these words, I cried:"How divinely beautiful you are!" And at the same time fury seized me:

"Oh bitterness! You have dragged me through sheer and utter Hell, you have tormented me nearly to death -and I long for your thanks. Yes, I am moved that you thank me. The hound's nature lies in my blood. Therefore I am bitter-for my sake, since how does it move you! You are divine and devilishly great, wherever and howsoever you are. As yet I am only your eunuch doorkeeper, no less imprisoned than you. Speak, you concubine of Heaven, you divine monster! Have I not fished you from the swamp? How do you like the black hole? Speak without blood, sing from your own force, you have gorged yourself on men."

Then my soul writhed and like a downtrodden worm turned and cried out, "Pity, have compassion."

"Compassion? Have you ever had compassion for me? You brute bestial tormentor! You've never gotten past compassionate moods. You lived on human food and drank my blood. Has it made you fat? Will you learn to revere the torment of the human animal? What would you souls and Gods want without man? Why do you long for him? Speak, whore!"

She sobbed, "My speech stops. I'm horrified at your accusation."

"Are you going to get serious? Are you going to have second thoughts? Are you going to learn modesty or perhaps even some other human virtue, you soulless soul-being? Yes, you have no soul, because you are the thing itself you fiend. Would you like a human soul? Should I perhaps become your earthly soul so that you will have a soul? You see, I've gone to your school. I've learned how one behaves as a soul, perfectly ambiguous, mysteriously untruthful and hypocritical." Carl Jung, The Red Book, Pages 343-344.

[1] THE
RED BOOK
LIBER NOVUS
C·G·JUNG
EDITED and INTRODUCED by
SONU SHAMDASANI

---

1. `http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/thumb/d/d8/The_Red_Book_by_Carl_Jung%2C_2009.jpg/200px-The_Red_Book_by_Carl_Jung%2C_2009.jpg`

Carl Jung on "Archetypes" and "Patterns of Behavior." (2019-11-15 04:00)

[1]

To Henri Flournoy

Dear Colleague, 29 March 1949

I have just read your sympathetic report of my work with particular pleasure.

Thank you for the interest you have been good enough to take in the objective exposition of my ideas.

It interested me very much, however, to find in your epilogue a few references to the archetypes which seem to me to contain some misunderstandings.

I do not deny the existence of facts whose existence Freud has proved. I do not believe in theories and have no intention at all of replacing his theory with another.

What I intend is to demonstrate new facts-the existence of archetypes, for example-whose existence, moreover, has already been accepted by other sciences: in ethnology as representations collectives (Levy-Bruhl); in biology (Alverdes); in history (Toynbee); in comparative mythology (Kerenyi, Tucci, Wilhelm, and Zimmer, representing ancient Greece, Tibet, China, and India); and in folklore as "motifs."

The well-known idea of the "behaviour pattern" in biology is synonymous with that of the archetype in psychology.

As the term "archetypus" clearly shows, the idea is not even original; this notion is found with the same significance as early as in Philo Judaeus, in the Corpus Hermeticum, and in Dionysius the Areopagite.

My inventiveness consists in nothing but the fact that I believe I have proved that archetypes do not appear only in the "migration of symbols" but in the individual unconscious fantasies of everyone without exception.

I have furnished proof of this in several large volumes which unfortunately have not yet been published in French.

As I see it, the idea of a psychic "pattern of behaviour" is not at all astonishing, since the similarity of autochthonous psychic products was admitted to be a fact even by Freud.

His is the honour of having discovered the first archetype, the Oedipus complex.

That is a mythological and a psychological motif simultaneously.

But obviously it is no more than a single archetype, the one representing the son’s relationship to his parents.

So there must be others, since there is still the daughter’s relationship to the parents, the parents’ relationship to the children, the relationships between man and woman, brother and sister, etc.

Very probably there are also "patterns" representing the different ages of man, birth, death, etc.

There are any number of typical situations, each represented by a certain innate form that forces the individual to function in a specifically human way.

These are the same as the forms that force the birds to build their nests in a certain way.

Instinct takes a specific form, even in man.

That form is the archetype, so named because unconscious thought expresses itself mythologically (vide Oedipus).

I am only continuing what Freud began and I often regret that the Freudian school have not known how to develop their master’s fortunate discovery.

In reading your epilogue, I asked myself whether you mistrust my qualifications or my scientific competence as the Freudians generally do.

There is undoubtedly a basis for your criticism, but unfortunately I do not know the reasons for it, and it would be most useful to me to know them.

No one has yet been able to prove my hypothesis false.

Freud himself certainly did not think it necessary to know Greek mythology in order to have an Oedipus complex (and neither do I, for that matter).

Obviously the existence of an archetype-that is to say, the possibility of developing an Oedipus complex-does not depend on historical mythologems.

What is the logical error in this reasoning?

I have never been able to discover the slightest difference between incestuous Greek fantasy and modern fantasy.

Undoubtedly incestuous fantasy is pretty universal and obviously it is not unique in being able to express itself through a mythologem.

What more natural conclusion can we draw than that we are dealing here with a generally human disposition, which is instinctive and innate, as instinct is with all animals?

How else can we explain identical or analogous products among tribes and individuals who could not have known of the existence of parallel creations?

Do you really believe that every chick invents its own way of breaking out of the egg? Or that every eel makes an individual decision to start for the Bermudas, as though the idea were entirely novel?

Why don't people take into account the thoroughly documented facts that I present in my alchemical studies?

But they don't read those books, and they are satisfied with quite puerile prejudices, like the one that I mean inherited ideas, and other nonsensical things!

So-while I admire the conscientious way you presented my essays I admit that I cannot help being somewhat sorry that you could not avoid making such a derogatory reference without the slightest proof or explanation.

After your fine attempt to be strictly objective, a confession of your Freudian faith would perhaps have been enough to ease your conscience.

But it seems to me you could have done that without disqualifying the heretic.

I do not habitually write letters of this sort.

But I thought I should make this exception in view of the personal esteem which has always characterized my relations with both your father and yourself.

I am, dear colleague,

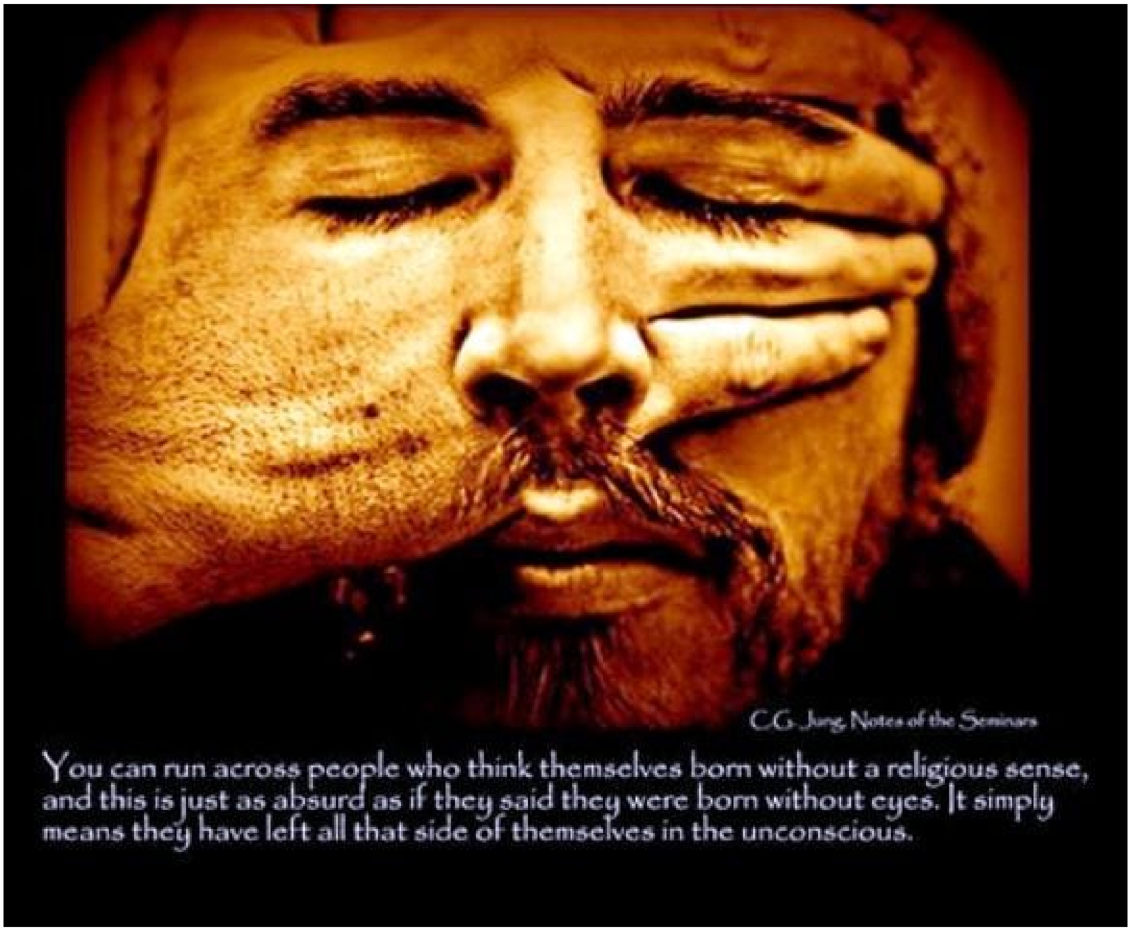
Yours with best regards,

C.G. Jung [Letters Volume 1, Pages 524-527]

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/07/1d6c5-ashe.jpg`

Carl Jung: There is a tendency among some people to make the unconscious carry what properly belongs to the conscious... (2019-11-15 04:17)

[1]



C.G. Jung, Notes of the Seminars
You can run across people who think themselves born without a religious sense, and this is just as absurd as if they said they were born without eyes. It simply means they have left all that side of themselves in the unconscious.

Dr. Jung: But even if all four functions are in operation, there are things that are forgotten, and the unconscious contains these and this always upsets the functioning of the unconscious.

Such people could remove much both from the personal and from the collective unconscious, and so free the unconscious to function more normally.

For example, you can run across people who think themselves born without a religious sense, and this is just as absurd as if they said they were born without eyes.

It simply means they have left all that side of themselves in the unconscious.

If you get these things out of the unconscious into the conscious, then, as I said, the unconscious functions are helped.

As another example, one is always hearing persons who have had some experience of analysis saying, “I won’t make up my mind about that, I’ll see what my dreams say.”

But there are hosts of things which call for decisions from the conscious, and about which it is idiotic to “put it up” to the unconscious for a decision. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 114.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/ca456-1religious2bsense.jpg`

Carl Jung on Catholicism and Protestantism (2019-11-15 04:21)

[1]

To Pastor Paul Metraux

Dear Pastor Metraux, 23 May 1945

Protestantism is above all a religion for adults-if it is understood.

The Catholic Church is a mother, but the role played by Protestantism is more that of the father.

Protestantism makes the child into a man, and every man has a different point of view.

Therefore the fact that Protestantism is divided seems to me to be precisely the guarantee of its vitality.

I consider this dissociation a sign of life with nothing basically alarming about it.

I am convinced that Protestantism answers a fundamental human need, because Catholicism puts too much church between God and man, whereas-for the weak Protestantism does not put enough between God and man.

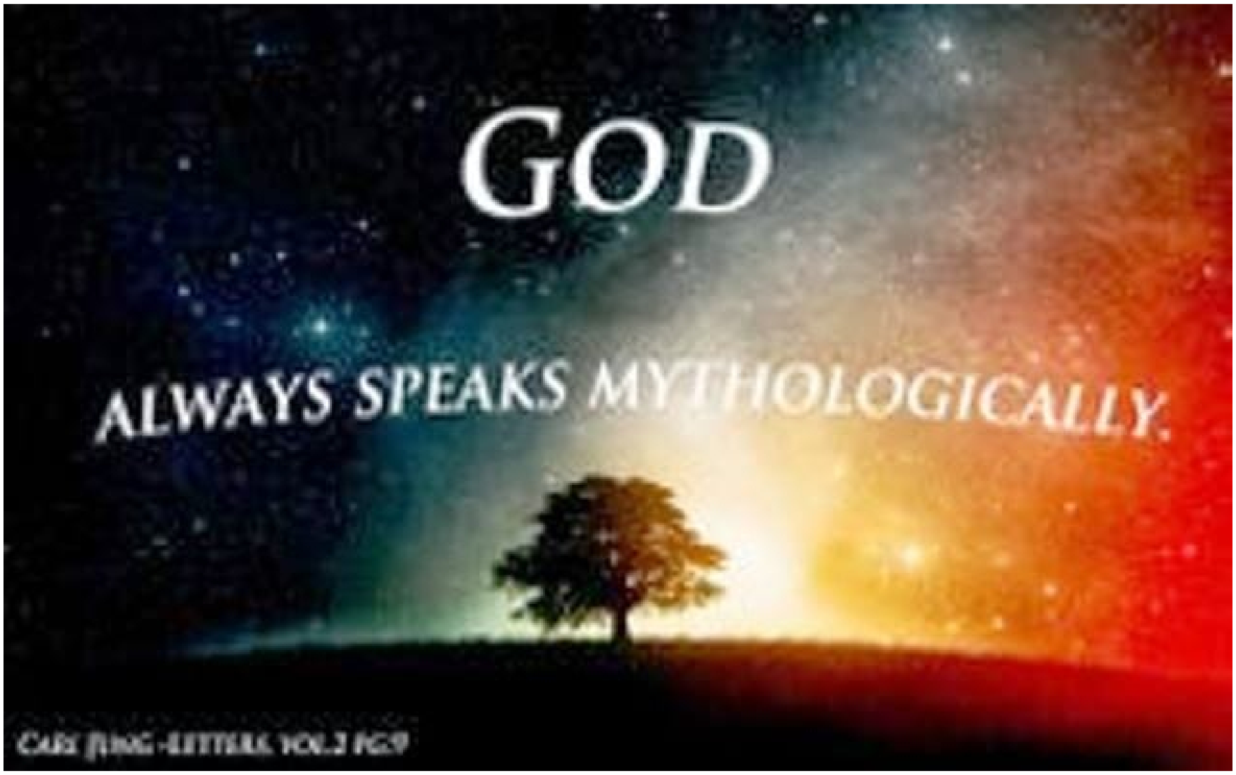
As far back as the Old Testament we can see that most courageous men were only just able to bear the presence of God.

Yours sincerely, C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 368.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/fec4a-catholic.jpg`

Carl Jung on the empirical element in religious experiences: revelation (2019-11-15 04:26)

[1]



[Carl Jung on the empirical element in religious experiences: revelation.]

To W. E. Hocking

My dear Professor Hocking, 5 May 1939

Thank you very much for your kind letter. It is pure pleasure to answer it.

I emphatically agree with your standpoint concerning the empirical element in religious experiences, viz. revelation.

But I realize on the other hand the tremendous complication which arises from such a recognition for all forms of creeds with the sole exception of some Indian religions.

The Vishnu religion, for instance, could assimilate Christ as an avatar/ but Buddhism would concede only a mild interest to Christ.

For Christianity particularly it is true that it is altogether of the papal standpoint: Sit ut est aut non sit.

If the Christian truth is not supreme and solely valid, then it believes it has lost its raison d’ etre and, if I may express my humble opinion, it would have lost it. It would instantly have to turn into a sort of philosophical syncretism.

I think that this is a most serious point.

I hope that my book Psychology and Religion has been forwarded to you.

I have discussed there the question of "individual revelation" at length.

It is a point that is of daily concern to myself, since time and again I have to deal with patients whose fundamental problem is how to assimilate a religious experience that contradicts or modifies the traditional Christian truth.

I take the liberty of sending you an offprint of a little paper I wrote about the Beatus Niklaus, a Swiss saint who for the mere lack of money has not been canonized yet, but he is on the list.

His is a typical case of a non-dogmatic religious experience.

St. Francis is another more famous example.

Hoping you are always in good health, I remain,

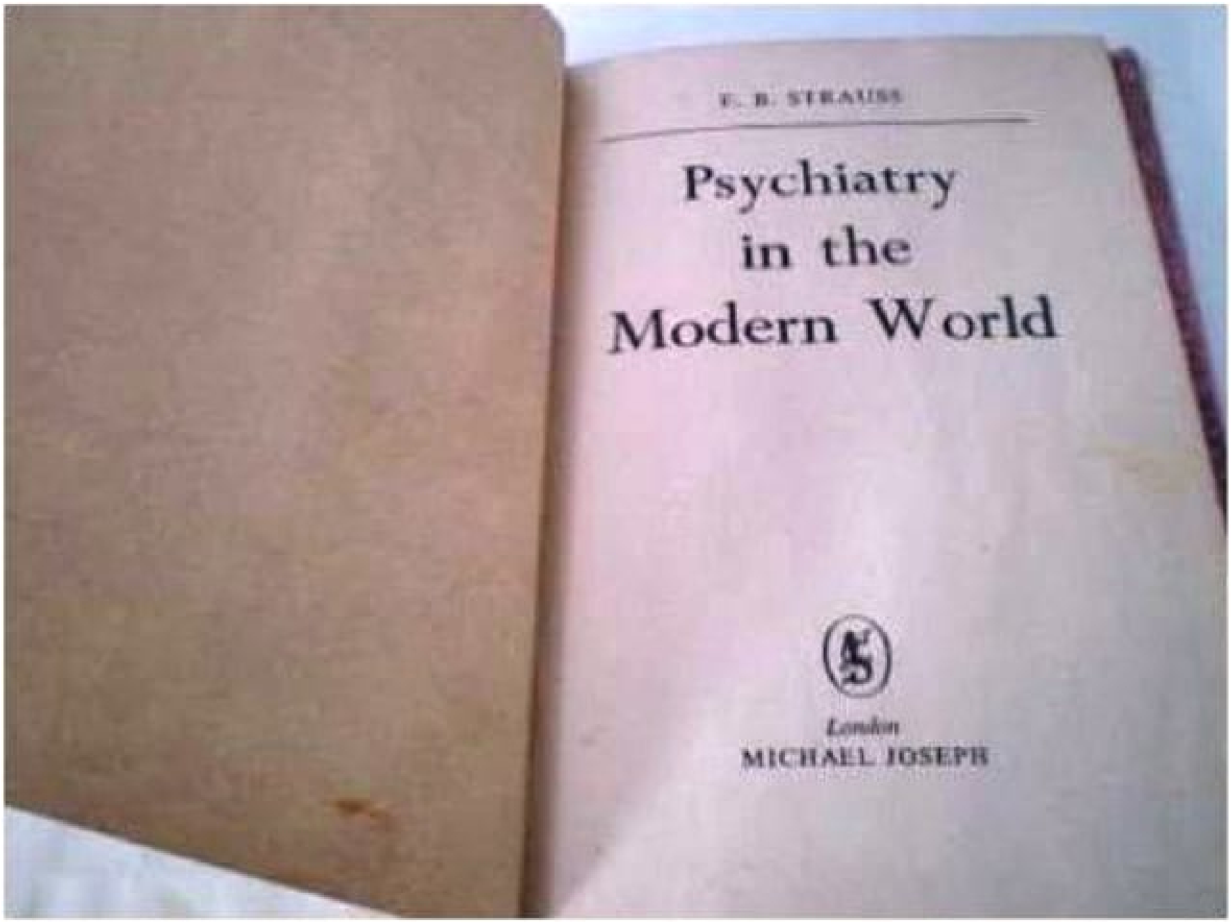
Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 269-279

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/91fef-always.jpg`

Carl Jung: I cannot and shall not exclude non-Aryan speakers. (2019-11-15 04:30)

[1]



E. B. STRAUSS

Psychiatry in the Modern World

London
MICHAEL JOSEPH

To Eric Benjamin Strauss

Dear Dr. Strauss, 26 March 1938

Thank you for your letter.

I shall answer it more fully when I have Professor Goring’s reply.

As you know pars. 2, 3, and 4 of our regulations allows the participation of everyone, quite apart from his political or religious convictions.

The question of race is not mentioned at all.

I should be much obliged if you could give me the list of those names which have aroused the discussion.

1 cannot and shall not exclude non-Aryan speakers.

The only condition on which I insist is that everybody, Aryan or non-Aryan, refrains from making remarks apt to arouse the political psychosis of our days.

If a speaker should trespass this limit, I should stop him right away.

A scientific Congress is not the place to indulge in political follies.

Sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 243

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

Great Sites to visit:

1. Jenna Lilla’s Path of the Soul http://jennalilla.org/
2. Steve Jung-Hearted Parker’s Jung Currents http://jungcurrents.com/
3. Frith Luton’s Jungian Dream Analysis and Psychotherapy: http://frithluton.com/articles/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/e59cb-242bstrauss.jpg`

Carl Jung: It is my fate however, not my choice, and I had to fulfill this unbecoming role. (2019-11-15 05:36)

[1]

12058. IRISH SPINNING WHEEL

To Father Victor White

My dear Victor, 30 April 1960

I have heard of your illness and I should have liked to come to England to see you, but I have to be careful with my own health and I must avoid all exertions.

As I am completing my 85th year, I am really old and my forces are definitely limited. In February

I had a bit of a heart embolism and my doctor is strict.

I have to thank you for the kind gift of your book Soul and Psyche.

It is certainly a theme worthy of a lengthy discussion in the "Auseinandersetzung" between theology and psychology.

I just began to read it. I had to finish first the book Psychotherapie und Religion by Dr. Josef Rudin, S.J.

The bit I have read in your book is most interesting and promising and I certainly shall go on studying it carefully.

In the meantime I hope you don't worry about my letter.

I want to assure you of my loyal friendship.

I shall not forget all the useful things I have learned through our many talks and through your forbearance with me.

I was often sorry to be a petra scandali.

It is my fate however, not my choice, and I had to fulfill this unbecoming role.

Things had to be moved in the great crisis of our time.

New wine needs new skins.

We need no further outbursts on a grand scale or so it seems to me.

The "iron curtain" is quite sufficient to me to demonstrate the enormous split in the "soul" of modern man, but we are mostly asleep . It needs some noise to wake the sleepers.

Many greetings and cordial wishes!

Yours ever,

C.G . Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 554-555

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http://www.blogger.com/home

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/10/76d94-1fate.jpg`

Books by Alice O. Howell [Jungian] (2019-11-16 03:25)

Alice O. Howell

[1]

[2] JUNGIAN
SYNCHRONICITY
in Astrological
Signs and Ages
Alice O. Howell
A Sequel to Jungian Symbolism in Astrology

[3]Buy at Amazon here

[4] Alice O. Howell
The Dove in the Stone
Finding the Sacred in the Commonplace

[5]Buy at Amazon here

[6] "A remarkable feat." — Roger J. Woolger
THE HEAVENS DECLARE
Astrological Ages and the Evolution of Consciousness
ALICE O. HOWELL

[7]Buy at Amazon here

[8] Copyrighted Material
JUNGIAN SYMBOLISM IN ASTROLOGY
Alice O. Howell
Copyrighted Material

[9]Buy at Amazon here

[10]
[11]Buy at Amazon here

[12]Books by Alice O. Howell

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b2cc4-1.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/5b977-2.jpg`
3. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0835606538/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_528zub0YKHNG7`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/96108-3.jpg`
5. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0835606392/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_x28zub0NFAKQ9`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/bffe0-4.jpg`
7. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0835608352/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_l28zub0STBDWD`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/0c2fd-5.jpg`
9. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/083560618X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_318zub1X7AVH5`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/d3a0f-6.jpg`
11. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0880105054/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_R18zub0Y53SB7`
12. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-alice-o-howell-jungian.html`

Books by Lance S. Owens [Jungian] (2019-11-16 03:27)

Books by Lance S. Owens

[1]

[2] THE SEARCH FOR ROOTS
C. G. JUNG AND THE TRADITION OF GNOSIS
Alfred Ribi
Foreword by Lance S. Owens

[3]Buy at Amazon here

[4] The Gnostic 3
A Journal of Gnosticism, Western Esotericism and Spirituality

[5]Buy at Amazon here

[6]Books by Lance S. Owens

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/0878c-3.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/74f31-1.jpg`
3. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0615850626/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_F5qAub13RTQY4`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/028f5-2.jpg`
5. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/1906834040/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_L6qAub0H581PZ`
6. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-lance-s-owens-jungian.html`

Books by Eleanor Bertine [Jungian] (2019-11-16 03:41)

Books by Eleanor Bertine

[1]
[2]Buy at Amazon here

[3] Human Relationships

[4]Buy at Amazon here

[5] A MAGAZINE OF JUNGIAN THOUGHT
1960
SPRING

[6]Buy at Amazon here

[7]Books by Eleanor Bertine

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/4f0ef-5.jpg`
2. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/B000P21XJA/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_rtnAub07TBMHC`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/a70c3-6.jpg`
4. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/B0029MOYOK/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_PtnAub0F76026`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/e9c2a-7.jpg`
6. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/B001U5TFQY/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_XunAub04YN198`
7. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-eleanor-bertine-jungian.html`

Book by Suzanne Gieser [Jungian] (2019-11-16 03:42)

Book by Suzanne Gieser

[1] Suzanne Gieser
The Innermost Kernel
DEPTH PSYCHOLOGY AND QUANTUM PHYSICS. WOLFGANG PAULI'S DIALOGUE WITH C.G. JUNG Springer

[2]Buy at Amazon here

[3]Books by Suzanne Gieser

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/074c5-1.jpg`
2. `file://www.amazon.com/dp/3540208569/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_BVqAub0VCTS2M`
3. `file://www.amazon.com/dp/3540208569/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_BVqAub0VCTS2M`

Book by Hans Schmid-Guisan [Jungian] (2019-11-16 03:42)

Book by Hans Schmid-Guisan and Carl jUng

[1] The Question of Psychological Types
C. G. JUNG
HANS SCHMID-GUISAN
CORRESPONDENCE EDITED BY
JOHN BEEBE | ERNST FALZEDER

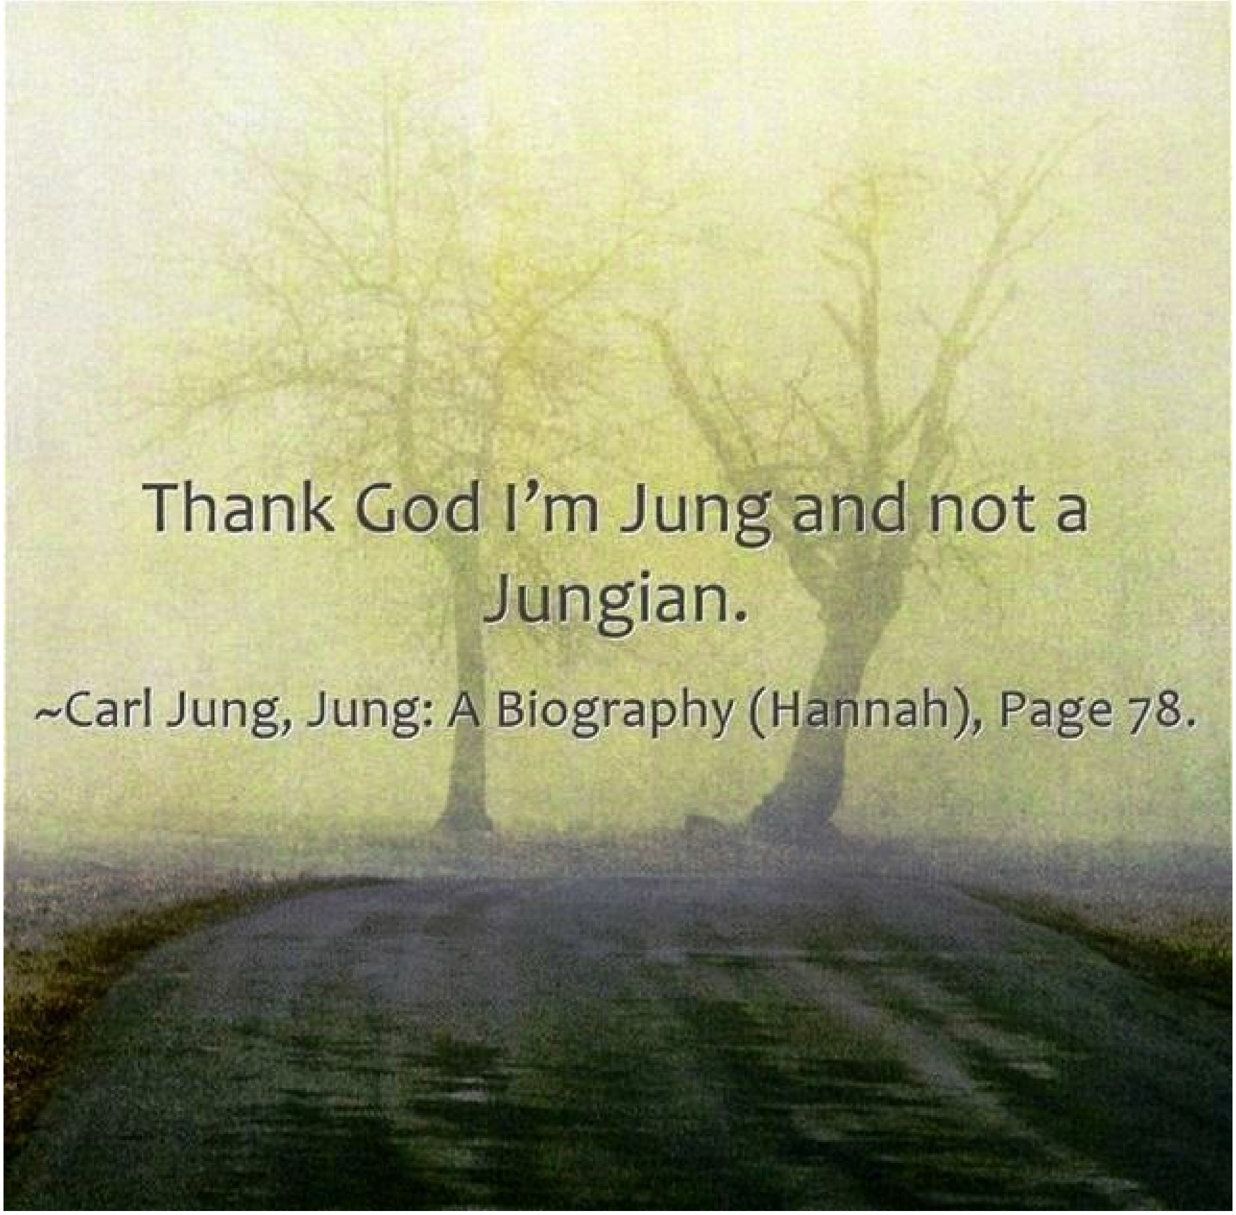
[2]Buy at Amazon here

[3]Books by Hans Schmid-Guisan

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/2adfc-1.jpg`
2. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691155615/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_rnnAub12ZPV20`
3. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/book-by-hans-schmid-guisan-jungian.html`

Books by Authors about the Life and Work of Carl Jung. [Jungians] (2019-11-16 03:46)

[1]



Thank God I'm Jung and not a Jungian.
~Carl Jung, Jung: A Biography (Hannah), Page 78.

Books by Claire Dunne:

[2]

[3] CARL JUNG:
WOUNDED
HEALER
OF THE SOUL
An Illustrated Biography
CLAIRE DUNNE
JEAN HOUSTON

[4]Buy at Amazon here

[5]
Books by Frances G. Wickes

[6]

[7]Buy at Amazon here

[8] CLASSIC REPRINT SERIES STORIES TO ACT
by Frances G. Wickes
Forgotten Books

[9]Buy at Amazon here

[10] Frances G. Wickes
The Inner World of Choice

[11]Buy at Amazon here

[12] The Inner World of Childhood a Study in Analytical Psychology
Frances G. Wickes and Carl G. Jung

[13]Buy at Amazon here

[14] Frances G. Wickes
The Inner World of Choice

[15]Buy at Amazon here

Books by C.A. Maier

[16]
[17] C.A. MEIER
HEALING DREAM AND RITUAL
DAIMON

[18]Buy at Amazon here

[19]
A Testament to the Wilderness
Ten Essays on an Address by C.A. Meier
Daimon Verlag The Lapis Press

[20]Buy at Amazon here

[21]
C.A. MEIER
PERSONALITY
The Individuation Process
in the Light of C.G. Jung's Typology
DAIMON

[22]Buy at Amazon here

[23]
Jung And Analytical Psychology

Carl Alfred Meier

[24]Buy at Amazon here

[25]
Ancient incubation and modern psychotherapy

Meier, C.

Note: This is not the actual book cover

[26]Buy at Amazon now

Books by Wolfgang Pauli

[27]

[28] Atom and Archetype
The Pauli/Jung Letters 1932–1958
C. G. JUNG
WOLFGANG PAULI
EDITED BY C. A. MEIER
WITH A PREFACE BY BEVERLEY ZABRISKIE

[29]Buy at Amazon here

[30] C. G. JUNG
SYNCHRONICITY
An Acausal Connecting Principle
THE INTERPRETATION OF NATURE AND THE PSYCHE
W. PAULI
THE INFLUENCE OF ARCHETYPAL IDEAS ON THE SCIENTIFIC THEORIES OF KEPLER

[31]Buy at Amazon here

Books by Toni Wolff

[32]

[33] TONI WOLFF
Essays on Analytical Psychology
DAIMON

[34]Buy at Amazon here

[35] THE GUILD OF
PASTORAL PSYCHOLOGY
GUILD LECTURE No. 42
Christianity Within
by
TONI WOLFF
Delivered May 10, 1946

[36]Buy at Amazon here

Books by Linda Fierz-David

[37]

[38]

[39]Buy at Amazon here

[40] DREAMING IN RED
READING THE WOMEN'S DIONYSIAN INITIATION CHAMBER IN POMPEII
NOR HALL
LINDA FIERZ-DAVID

[41]Buy at Amazon here

[42] THE DREAM OF POLIPHILO
The Soul in Love
LINDA FIERZ-DAVID

[43]Buy at Amazon here

[44] Women's Dionysian Initiation : The Villa of Mysteries in Pompeii
Fierz-David, Linda
Note: This is not the actual book cover

[45]Buy at Amazon here

[46] A Memoir of Toni Wolff
by Irene Champernowne

[47]Books by Irene Champernowne

[48]

The one
and only me

Champernowne, Irene

[49]Buy at Amazon here

Books by Ann Ulanov

[50]

[51]
KNOTS AND THEIR UNTYING
ESSAYS ON PSYCHOLOGICAL DILEMMAS
ANN BELFORD ULANOV

[52]Buy Book here

[53] Ann and Barry Ulanov
The Healing IMAGINATION
The Meeting of Psyche and Soul
DAIMON

[54]Buy at Amazon here

[55]
Madness & Creativity
ANN BELFORD ULANOV
Foreword by David H. Rosen

[56]Buy at Amazon here

[57]
A psychology of prayer
PRIMARY
SPEECH
ANN & BARRY ULANOV

[58]Buy at Amazon here

[59] ANN BELFORD ULANOV
The Unshuttered HEART
Opening Aliveness / Deadness in the Self

[60]Buy at Amazon here

[61] The Feminine in Jungian Psychology and in Christian Theology
Ann Belford Ulanov

[62]Buy at Amazon here

[63] CINDERELLA
& HER SISTERS
THE ENVIED
AND
THE ENVYING
ANN & BARRY ULANOV

[64]Buy at Amazon here

[65] Ann Belford Ulanov finding space
Winnicott, God, and
Psychic Reality

[66]Buy at Amazon here

[67] Transforming Sexuality
The Archetypal World of Anima and Animus
Ann & Barry Ulanov

[68]Buy at Amazon here

[69] ATTACKED by POISON IVY
A Psychological Understanding
ANN BELFORD ULANOV

[70]Buy at Amazon here

[71] The Witch and the Clown
Two Archetypes of Human Sexuality
ANN and BARRY ULANOV

[72]Buy at Amazon here

[73] Ann Belford Ulanov
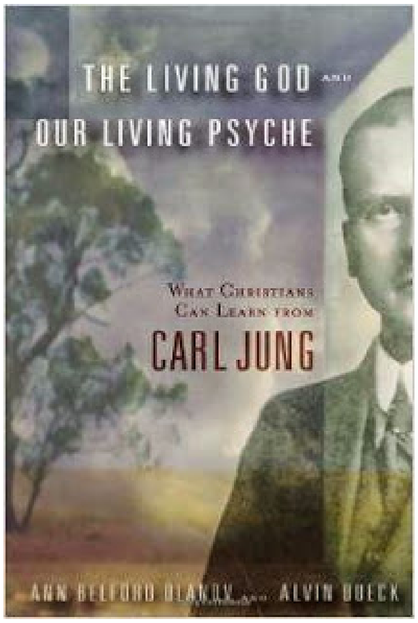
Spiritual Aspects of Clinical Work
DAIMON

[74]Buy at Amazon here

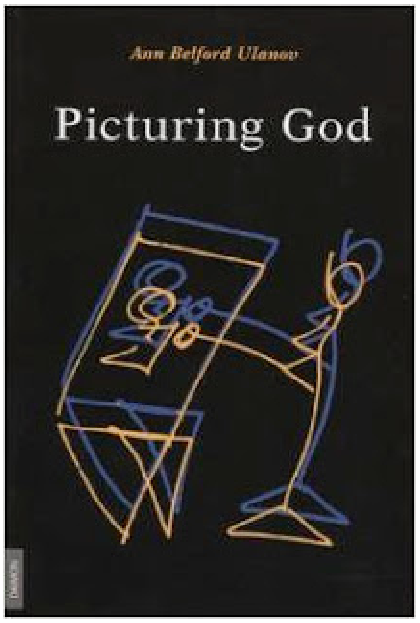
[75]



THE LIVING GOD AND
OUR LIVING PSYCHE
WHAT CHRISTIANS CAN LEARN FROM
CARL JUNG
ANN BELFORD ULANOV AND ALVIN DUECK

[76]Buy at Amazon here

[77]



Ann Belford Ulanov
Picturing God

[78]Buy at Amazon here

[79]RELIGION and the UNCONSCIOUS
Ann and Barry Ulanov

[80]Buy at Amazon here

[81]RECEIVING WOMAN
Studies in the Psychology and Theology of the Feminine
ANN BELFORD ULANOV

[82]Buy at Amazon here

[83] THE
FEMALE ANCESTORS
OF CHRIST
ANN BELFORD ULANOV

[84]Buy at Amazon here

[85] Ann Belford Ulanov
The Wizards' Gate
Picturing Consciousness
DAIMON

[86]Buy at Amazon here

[87] Ann Belford Ulanov
Spirit in Jung
DAIMON

[88]Buy at Amazon here

[89] Ann Belford Ulanov
The Wisdom of the Psyche

[90]Buy at Amazon here

[91] THE FUNCTIONING TRANSCENDENT
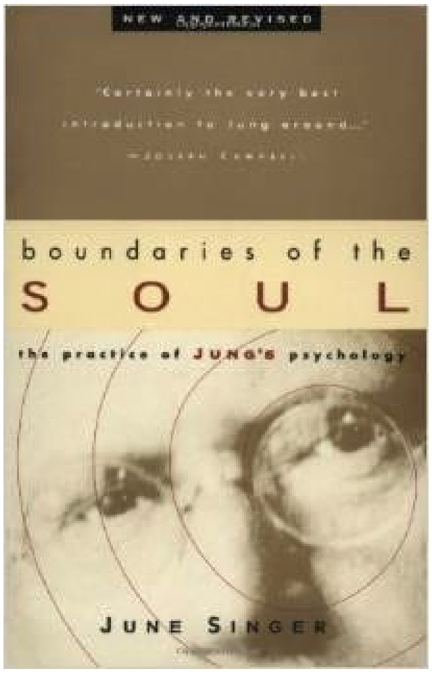
A STUDY IN ANALYTICAL PSYCHOLOGY
ANN BELFORD ULANOV

[92]Buy at Amazon here

Books by June Singer

[93]

[94]



NEW AND REVISED
"Certainly the very best introduction to Jung around..."
—Joseph Campbell
boundaries of the SOUL
the practice of JUNG'S psychology
JUNE SINGER

[95]Buy at Amazon here

[96]
BLAKE, JUNG, and the Collective Unconscious
The Conflict between Reason and Imagination
JUNE SINGER
Introduction by M. Esther Harding

[97]Buy at Amazon here

[98] Androgyny
the opposites within
JUNE SINGER

[99]Buy at Amazon here

[100] MODERN WOMAN
in search of
SOUL
A Jungian Guide
to the Visible and Invisible Worlds
JUNE SINGER
author of Boundaries of the Soul

[101]Buy at Amazon here

[102] THE POWER OF LOVE
to Transform Our Lives and Our World
JUNE SINGER

[103]Buy at Amazon here

[104] JUNG
AND THE LOST
GOSPELS
Insights into The Dead Sea Scrolls
and the Nag Hammadi Library
STEPHAN A. HOELLER
Foreword by June Singer

[105]Buy at Amazon here

[106] June Singer
KNOWLEDGE OF THE HEART
GNOSTIC SECRETS OF INNER WISDOM
FOREWORD BY CLARISSA PINKOLA ESTÉS Ph.D.
Author of Women Who Run With the Wolves

[107]Buy at Amazon here

Books by Daryl Sharp

[108]

[109] PERSONALITY TYPES
Jung's Model of Typology
DARYL SHARP

[110]Buy at Amazon here

[111] C.G. JUNG Lexicon
A Primer of Terms & Concepts
DARYL SHARP
Author of Personality Types: Jung's Model of Typology

[112]Buy at Amazon here

[113] Jungian Psychology Unplugged
My Life As an Elephant
DARYL SHARP

[114]Buy at Amazon here

[115]
DIGESTING JUNG
FOOD FOR THE JOURNEY
DARYL SHARP

[116]Buy at Amazon here

[117] LIVE YOUR NONSENSE
Halfway to Dawn with Eros
A Jungian Perspective On Individuation
DARYL SHARP

[118]Buy at Amazon here

[119] HIJACKED BY EROS
A Jungian analyst's picaresque adventures in the pleroma
with The Eros Aspect of the Eye, by A. R. Pope
Book Three of THE EROS TRILOGY
DARYL SHARP

[120]Buy at Amazon here

[121] Trampled to Death by Geese
More Eros, and a Lot More Nonsense
A Jungian analyst's whimsical perspective on the inner life
DARYL SHARP

[122]Buy at Amazon here

[123] The Survival Papers
Anatomy of a Midlife Crisis
Daryl Sharp

[124]Buy at Amazon here

[125] Another Jungian romance
EYES WIDE OPEN
Late Thoughts
DARYL SHARP

[126]Buy at Amazon here

[127] The Secret Raven
CONFLICT AND TRANSFORMATION
in the life of
FRANZ KAFKA
DARYL SHARP

[128]Buy at Amazon here

[129]THE PARENTAL IMAGE
Its Injury and Reconstruction
M. Esther
Harding, M.D.
Edited by Daryl Sharp

[130]Buy at Amazon here

[131]Miles To Go Before I Sleep
Growing Up Puer
Another Jungian Romance
DARYL SHARP

[132]Buy at Amazon here

[133] Living Jung
The Good and the Better
Daryl Sharp

[134]Buy at Amazon here

[135]Books by Daryl Sharp

Books by Alice O. Howell

[136]

[137] JUNGIAN SYNCHRONICITY in Astrological Signs and Ages
Alice O. Howell
A Sequel to Jungian Symbolism in Astrology

[138]Buy at Amazon here

[139] Alice O. Howell
The Dove in the Stone
Finding the Sacred in the Commonplace

[140]Buy at Amazon here

[141] "A remarkable feat." —Roger J. Woolger
THE HEAVENS DECLARE
Astrological Ages and the Evolution of Consciousness
ALICE O. HOWELL

[142]Buy at Amazon here

[143] Copyrighted Material
JUNGIAN SYMBOLISM IN ASTROLOGY
Alice O. Howell
Copyrighted Material

[144]Buy at Amazon here

[145] the BEEJUM BOOK
ALICE O. HOWELL

[146]Buy at Amazon here

[147]Books by Alice O. Howell

Books by Eleanor Bertine

[148]
[149]Buy at Amazon here

[150] Human Relationships

[151]Buy at Amazon here

[152] A MAGAZINE OF JUNGIAN THOUGHT
1960
SPRING

[153]Buy at Amazon here

[154]Books by Eleanor Bertine

Books by Iona Miller

[155]

[156]THE MODERN ALCHEMIST
A Guide to Personal Transformation
RICHARD AND IONA MILLER
With Illustrations by Joel Radcliffe

[157]Buy at Amazon here

[158]
JCER
Journal of Consciousness Exploration & Research
Volume 3 Issue 3
March 2012
Holographic Archetypes
Featuring Iona Miller's Work
Brought to You by:
QuantumDream, Inc.

[159]Buy at Amazon here

[160] THE MAGICAL AND RITUAL USE OF PERFUMES
Richard Alan Miller and Iona Miller

[161]Buy at Amazon here

<a href="http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-iona-mille r-jungian.html Book by Hans Schmid-Guisan and Carl Jung

[162] The Question of Psychological Types
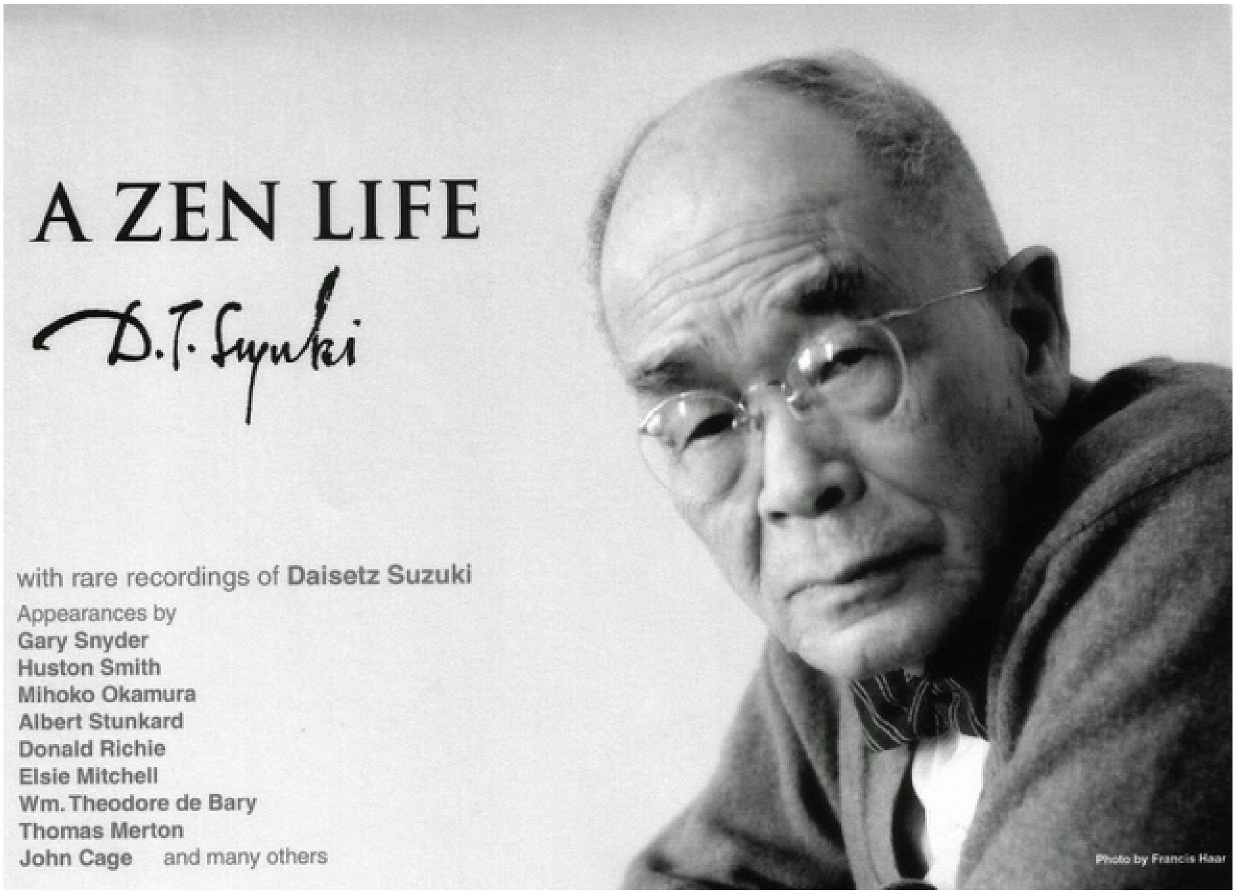
C. G. JUNG
HANS SCHMID-GUISAN
CORRESPONDENCE EDITED BY
JOHN BEEBE | ERNST FALZEDER

[163]Buy at Amazon here

[164]Books by Hans Schmid-Guisan

Book by D.T. Suzuki

[165]



A ZEN LIFE

D.T. Suzuki

with rare recordings of Daisetz Suzuki

Appearances by Gary Snyder
Huston Smith
Mihoko Okamura
Albert Stunkard
Donald Richie
Elsie Mitchell
Wm. Theodore de Bary
Thomas Merton
John Cage and many others

Photo by Francis Haar

[166] An Introduction to
Zen Buddhism
D.T. Suzuki
禪
Foreword by Carl Jung

[167]Buy at Amazon here

[168]Books by D.T. Suzuki

Books by Lance S. Owens

[169]

[170] THE SEARCH FOR ROOTS
C. G. JUNG AND THE TRADITION OF GNOSIS
Alfred Ribi
Foreword by Lance S. Owens

[171]Buy at Amazon here

[172] The Gnostic 3
A Journal of Gnosticism, Western Esotericism and Spirituality

[173]Buy at Amazon here

[174]Books by Lance S. Owens

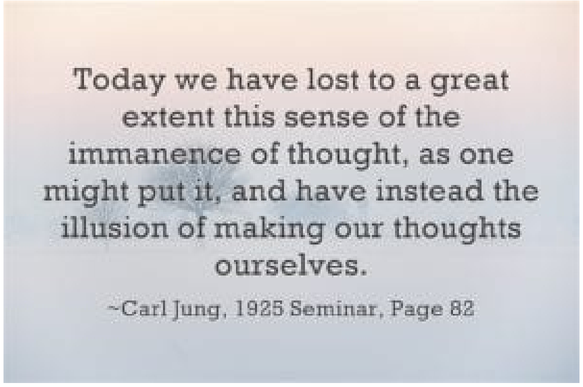
1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/a1739-agod.jpg
2. file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-ALfIL2YI4m0/VGJt2MGvlwI/AAAAAAAAMGs/lXTKMPYIbt0/s1600/1%2B(2).jpg
3. file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-yPL3JYm_3Pw/VGJudjf1SmI/AAAAAAAAMG8/RNEKhZk58p0/s1600/3.jpg
4. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0930407504/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_LuMyub1HADPN9
5. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-nCrERpna4wQ/VGJsJ2jKT0I/AAAAAAAAMGg/s6udZDU5Rck/s1600/7.jpg
6. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-LdJXgri0A_4/VGJp69LvF8I/AAAAAAAAMF4/A1-qbDUdT6A/s1600/2.jpg
7. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0938434349/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_.CMyub004GNK9
8. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-pe5ayFbJs1c/VGJqWHcq82I/AAAAAAAAMGA/0o3AwQr3kHA/s1600/4.jpg
9. http://www.amazon.com/dp/B008WFMTM2/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_XDMyub0RBR8C7
10. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-WsG8vsyX-Ww/VGJwXs8InbI/AAAAAAAAMHI/0TkqCGvF-vA/s1600/1.jpg
11. http://www.amazon.com/dp/B008WFMTM2/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_XDMyub0RBR8C7
12. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-rRBoDYuAGPA/VGJq5qQdwbI/AAAAAAAAMGM/l4QxUBfAk_I/s1600/5.jpg
13. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1417939354/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_iFMyub066SBGD
14. file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-NoHVPOf9Now/VGJxXdLYKrI/AAAAAAAAMHU/ULd6AtqSCxs/s1600/1.jpg
15. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0938434357/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_eeNyub107DEYM
16. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-KLuTk70OO2g/VGNGxbKbdxI/AAAAAAAAMJ8/lvM8SeWxkUE/s1600/6.jpg
17. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-w5-2wim7spA/VGNCHCfL6GI/AAAAAAAAMIw/8FrX9GXlruU/s1600/1.jpg
18. http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856307273/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_P7Zyub0ETWQTF
19. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-FL_UxS2tdJE/VGNCho9onpI/AAAAAAAAMI4/bIspG5u5lpU/s1600/2.jpg
20. http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856305033/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_E8Zyub1MGWEW7
21. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-aK-BFhCjPU0/VGNDG35xhNI/AAAAAAAAMJA/Jw1AKZT4q0w/s1600/3.jpg
22. http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856305033/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_E8Zyub1MGWEW7
23. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-ZUwi6D1Ak2o/VGNDodECUaI/AAAAAAAAMJI/vpNaMjA06_0/s1600/4.jpg
24. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1425483615/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_C-Zyub1B35MH8
25. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-oHTxslmrgP4/VGNEll0qX8I/AAAAAAAAMJg/uJMbIXpZIDA/s1600/5.jpg
26. http://www.amazon.com/dp/B0007DSWQE/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_5-Zyub1NC23G1
27. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-ywnnZ9-kZSU/VGNOJe7Nf5I/AAAAAAAAMKM/nOERP1QeZ1E/s1600/1.jpg
28. file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-3Sj1QWZbugQ/VGNOx9DLpuI/AAAAAAAAMKU/kG6DFCgRgU0/s1600/2.jpg
29. http://www.amazon.com/dp/069116147X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_lTOyub1Y25E2H
30. file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-CDuTsZN-FtA/VGNPBX9GE8I/AAAAAAAAMKc/xsNDiqinKcg/s1600/3.jpg
31. http://www.amazon.com/dp/4871877132/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_XTOyub0G33J57
32. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-FPe_jgW9c_Y/VGOvwc5AeMI/AAAAAAAAMME/0l595Iyt3O0/s1600/3.jpg
33. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-A0yLSmhdEdM/VGOv1taoRpI/AAAAAAAAMMM/8_wg7emzgA0/s1600/5.jpg
34. http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856306234/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_NP6yub07G80BW
35. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-twTUP_Mq9-4/VGOwFLy9DXI/AAAAAAAAMMU/QKgaeXLrYGY/s1600/6.jpg
36. http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856306234/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_NP6yub07G80BW
37. file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-uTb4UfEymHA/VGR_XnhFoCI/AAAAAAAAMPw/ujbePz3oolQ/s1600/5.jpg
38. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-NzTBV937G_I/VGR_rY_gZgI/AAAAAAAAMP4/5XPqhEC9hd4/s1600/1.jpg
39. http://www.amazon.com/dp/088214510X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_VZhzub1MZB2Z4
40. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-JRi4GcUplTY/VGSAPzAPdzI/AAAAAAAAMQE/2LwZnpNid4o/s1600/2.jpg
41. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0882145517/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_s0hzub0ZFS9AP
42. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-UrFMjbceW4A/VGSA_u1S_fI/AAAAAAAAMQM/4Jg3faTymYc/s1600/3.jpg
43. http://www.amazon.com/dp/088214507X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Q0hzub034J76K
44. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-yF0mh6GOLV8/VGSB_giNZSI/AAAAAAAAMQY/j7JF0DsYVug/s1600/4.jpg
45. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0882143379/ref=cm
46. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-DAwjARvTTJs/VGTHpLJJzYI/AAAAAAAAMTE/0l64ARy2Fpo/s1600/2.jpg
47. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0932630014/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_aymzub1DGZ47A
48. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-ffLcgB833rQ/VGTIM8sk4tI/AAAAAAAAMTM/zWlHNWQkChE/s1600/1.jpg
49. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0913592404/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_qxmzub0T65HR2
50. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-T3y6A-7KoaM/VGTzeeaODVI/AAAAAAAAMXQ/nuXL6gPlDuA/s1600/1.jpg

51. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-sAkCzYs2vd8/VGTonRkhvRI/AAAAAAAAMT4/_3IjUnZw9TE/s1600/4.jpg
52. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1935528637/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_cnozub19CKEE0
53. file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-ZNqh9wHLRig/VGTpRtxQvBI/AAAAAAAAMUE/-A6GSC4RAdI/s1600/5.jpg
54. http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856307214/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Onozub0KPQVHV
55. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-0vV1OtQvlNs/VGTp0NDHojI/AAAAAAAAMUM/4dVO9WLJOkE/s1600/6.jpg
56. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1603449493/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_boozub1MJRNCA
57. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-4sxsalgetM4/VGTqRkVDFEI/AAAAAAAAMUU/XhirUmeWMQs/s1600/7.jpg
58. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0804211345/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_yoozub0M735MA
59. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-dnJtrqzrhw8/VGTqwysMYHI/AAAAAAAAMUc/1E97EUG2Hvs/s1600/8.jpg
60. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0687494664/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_2oozub1FNN594
61. file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-2_qUNOdFT5g/VGTrSUjxYWI/AAAAAAAAMUo/Li-OGPVRrTE/s1600/9.jpg
62. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0810103516/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Epozub0NS3H55
63. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-aLxIcpcXJ1A/VGTrvBgk6fI/AAAAAAAAMUw/WPnNNSB654I/s1600/10.jpg
64. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0664244823/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Xpozub0VG02PT
65. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-jB98-x8iOC4/VGTsTL8uIaI/AAAAAAAAMU4/HRaJcST7Qp8/s1600/11.jpg
66. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0664230504/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_pqozub09PSBHD
67. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-pCBJd5gzD70/VGTsuT0eeUI/AAAAAAAAMVA/bgG-jIWQMZg/s1600/12.jpg
68. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0877739862/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Lqozub1FB2DXQ
69. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-dgjdDbCzsQ4/VGTtJMru7XI/AAAAAAAAMVM/aLVu_0VFyZ4/s1600/13.jpg
70. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0892540583/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_.qozub1WPDKFH
71. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-1ZviMCSC5po/VGTtkwBchnI/AAAAAAAAMVU/W-oG52fRd68/s1600/14.jpg
72. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0933029071/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_srozub0472WSE
73. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-0pZR6NnrHc8/VGTuD7rGZOI/AAAAAAAAMVk/PAsdPGfqkHA/s1600/15.jpg
74. http://www.amazon.com/dp/385630634X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Qrozub12626VE
75. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-lyoJXKyqAOk/VGTucZ8tQ9I/AAAAAAAAMVw/FXSNHaE2PR8/s1600/16.jpg
76. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0802824676/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_dsozub031X8VD
77. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-D2a-Ua1lHMQ/VGTuyucD-uI/AAAAAAAAMV4/K_8ejyl9KdU/s1600/17.jpg
78. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0802824676/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_dsozub031X8VD
79. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-8uNtUfz-yTc/VGTvWRmDLvI/AAAAAAAAMWE/kgqs9nhDwYs/s1600/18.jpg
80. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0664246575/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_0uozub0HFD6R4
81. file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-HkSdiHV8UNw/VGTv2_xmg4I/AAAAAAAAMWM/yopSysG0oQo/s1600/19.jpg
82. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0664243606/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_rvozub12H301P
83. file://2.bp.blogspot.com/-kf-gFtKeoBg/VGTwSArOztI/AAAAAAAAMWY/FeaiV83l67Y/s1600/21.jpg
84. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0877739390/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_5vozub1PQ1C4M
85. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-KJwtzjFEwx8/VGTxAMYfVSI/AAAAAAAAMWo/s-6XTheVmV4/s1600/22.jpg
86. http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856305394/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_Pwozub0ZFF561
87. file://4.bp.blogspot.com/-2pVIAfUWULc/VGTxZ2qzlmI/AAAAAAAAMWw/fEOcWnhkBYU/s1600/23.jpg
88. http://www.amazon.com/dp/3856306986/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_.wozub0FYDAAA
89. file://1.bp.blogspot.com/-RBUEJXFetE0/VGTxx7ry_cI/AAAAAAAAMW4/9x-no2cN-R4/s1600/24.jpg
90. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0936384611/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_vxozub04GG69H
91. file://3.bp.blogspot.com/-1Mh-GPuZhYw/VGTyJjZzE-I/AAAAAAAAMXA/qkDKdsZ5Akw/s1600/25.jpg
92. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0933029993/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_1xozub1H3MKPX
93. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/02e75-june.jpg
94. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/ba1b2-2.jpg
95. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0385475292/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_CLzzub1SY35M3
96. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/03557-3.jpg
97. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0892540516/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_-Lzzub1D0D01R
98. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/7036e-4.jpg
99. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0892540508/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_vMzzub1R4T9DE
100. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/d621e-7.jpg

101. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0892540419/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_pNzzub1NSQM2Z
102. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/bf1c4-8.jpg
103. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0892540524/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_4Nzzub1E586GP
104. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/909f9-9.jpg
105. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0835606465/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_AOzzub0K1PV4B
106. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/1ff2a-10.jpg
107. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1862045399/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_mPzzub1E76A5J
108. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/837ed-1.jpg
109. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/71b61-2.jpg
110. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123309/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_mKMzub1MT0JV8
111. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/cfd75-3.jpg
112. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123481/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_JKMzub1F9YKYH
113. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/1ed6d-4.jpg
114. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123813/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_iLMzub0JFHCMS
115. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b0e6c-5.jpg
116. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123961/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_ALMzub1HNCSHE
117. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/fc560-6.jpg
118. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1894574311/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_VLMzub1MPYSKM
119. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/33c2c-7.jpg
120. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1894574354/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_lMMzub0Q5SA8Z
121. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/175c2-8.jpg
122. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1894574346/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_DMMzub01RXDG2
123. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/595d1-9.jpg
124. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123341/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_XMMzub1XA7NCK
125. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/e9063-12.jpg
126. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1894574184/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_tNMzub0P8D60V
127. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/e65e2-13.jpg
128. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123007/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_1NMzub140A0TA
129. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/4b61a-14.jpg
130. http:///
131. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/7f91c-15.jpg
132. http://www.amazon.com/dp/1894574362/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_QOMzub1YVA8ZD
133. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/bc5b8-16.jpg
134. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0919123732/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_9OMzub0PX5EN0
135. http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-daryl-sharp.html
136. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b2cc4-1.jpg
137. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/5b977-2.jpg
138. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0835606538/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_528zub0YKHNG7
139. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/96108-3.jpg
140. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0835606392/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_x28zub0NFAKQ9
141. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/bffe0-4.jpg
142. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0835608352/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_l28zub0STBDWD
143. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/0c2fd-5.jpg
144. http://www.amazon.com/dp/083560618X/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_318zub1X7AVH5
145. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/d3a0f-6.jpg
146. http://www.amazon.com/dp/0880105054/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_R18zub0Y53SB7
147. http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-alice-o-howell-jungian.html
148. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/4f0ef-5.jpg
149. http://www.amazon.com/dp/B000P21XJA/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_rtnAub07TBMHC
150. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/a70c3-6.jpg

151. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/B0029MOYOK/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_PtnAub0F76026`
152. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/e9c2a-7.jpg`
153. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/B001U5TFQY/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_XunAub04YN198`
154. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-eleanor-bertine-jungian.html`
155. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/c9042-iona.jpg`
156. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b3988-2.jpg`
157. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0933999372/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_4onAub0BAKEPT`
158. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/e238d-3.jpg`
159. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/1475133464/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_zpnAub04CT1C2`
160. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/60679-4.jpg`
161. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0892812109/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_YpnAub1460VWR`
162. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/2adfc-1.jpg`
163. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691155615/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_rnnAub12ZPV20`
164. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/book-by-hans-schmid-guisan-jungian.html`
165. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/4886f-dt.jpg`
166. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/122e1-1.jpg`
167. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0802130550/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_g7HAub1PCT0KY`
168. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/book-by-dt-suzuki-jungian-foreword-by.html`
169. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/0878c-3.jpg`
170. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/74f31-1.jpg`
171. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0615850626/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_F5qAub13RTQY4`
172. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/028f5-2.jpg`
173. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/1906834040/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_L6qAub0H581PZ`
174. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/books-by-lance-s-owens-jungian.html`

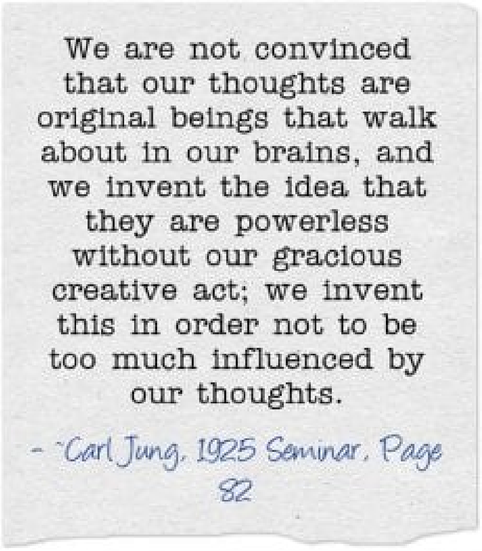
Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-11-16 03:55)



Today we have lost to a great extent this sense of the immanence of thought, as one might put it, and have instead the illusion of making our thoughts ourselves.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 82

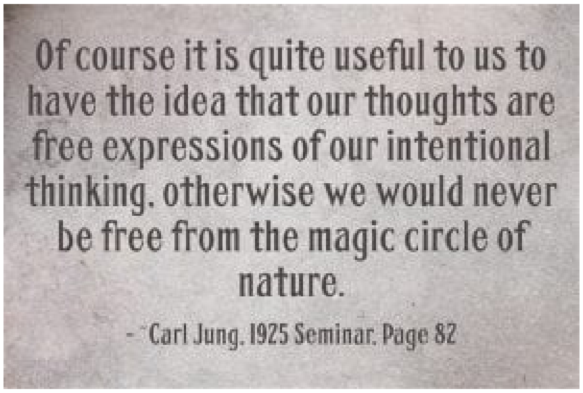
Today we have lost to a great extent this sense of the immanence of thought, as one might put it, and have instead the illusion of making our thoughts ourselves. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 82



We are not convinced that our thoughts are original beings that walk about in our brains, and we invent the idea that they are powerless without our gracious creative act; we invent this in order not to be too much influenced by our thoughts.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 82

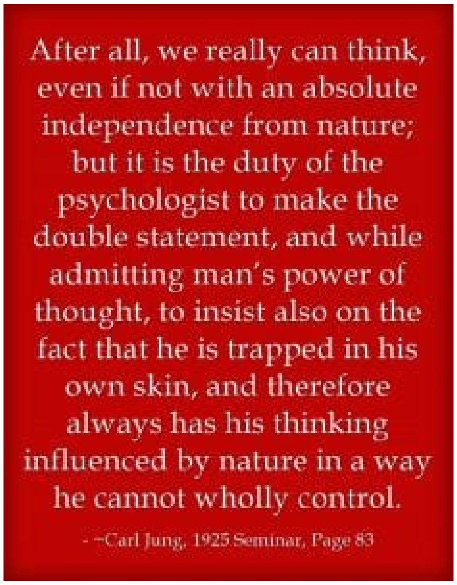
We are not convinced that our thoughts are original beings that walk about in our brains, and we invent the idea that they are powerless without our gracious creative act; we invent this in order not to be too much influenced by our thoughts. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 82



Of course it is quite useful to us to have the idea that our thoughts are free expressions of our intentional thinking, otherwise we would never be free from the magic circle of nature.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 82

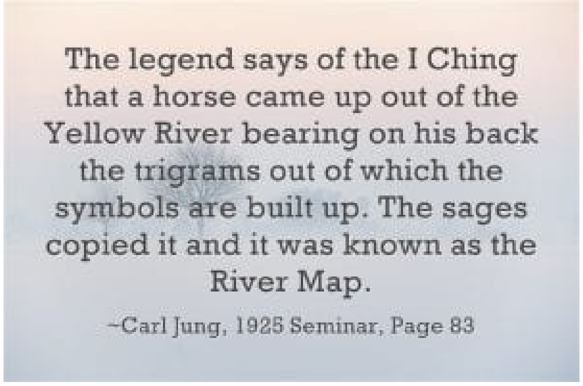
Of course it is quite useful to us to have the idea that our thoughts are free expressions of our intentional thinking, otherwise we would never be free from the magic circle of nature. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 82



After all, we really can think, even if not with an absolute independence from nature; but it is the duty of the psychologist to make the double statement, and while admitting man's power of thought, to insist also on the fact that he is trapped in his own skin, and therefore always has his thinking influenced by nature in a way he cannot wholly control.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 83

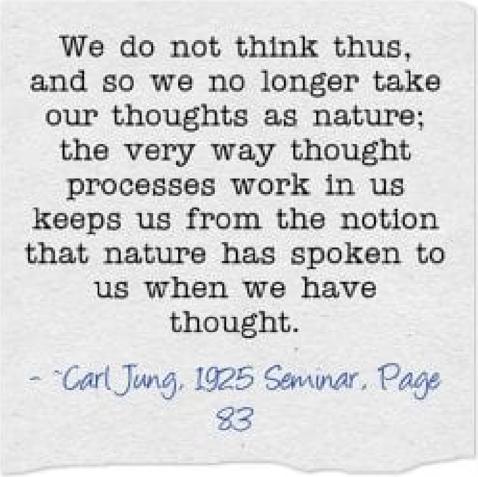
After all, we really can think, even if not with an absolute independence from nature; but it is the duty of the psychologist to make the double statement, and while admitting man's power of thought, to insist also on the fact that he is trapped in his own skin, and therefore always has his thinking influenced by nature in a way he cannot wholly control. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 83



The legend says of the I Ching that a horse came up out of the Yellow River bearing on his back the trigrams out of which the symbols are built up. The sages copied it and it was known as the River Map.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 83

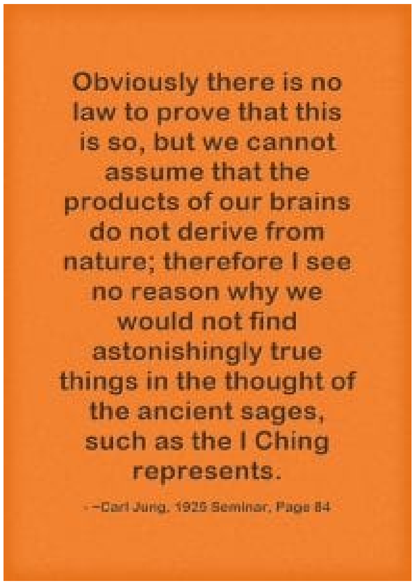
The legend says of the I Ching that a horse came up out of the Yellow River bearing on his back the trigrams out of which the symbols are built up. The sages copied it and it was known as the River Map. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 83



We do not think thus, and so we no longer take our thoughts as nature; the very way thought processes work in us keeps us from the notion that nature has spoken to us when we have thought.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 83

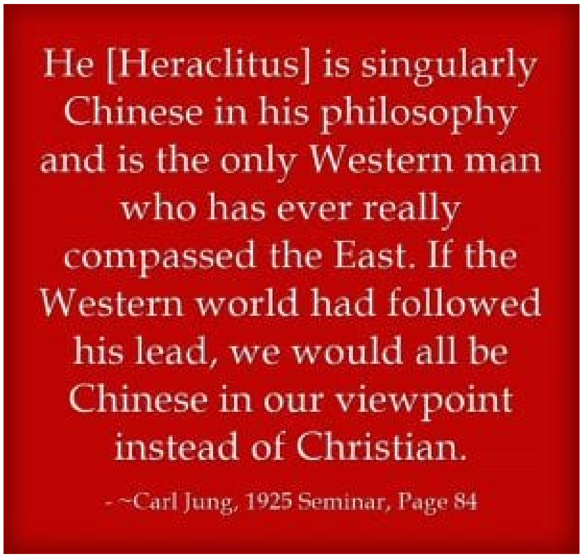
We do not think thus, and so we no longer take our thoughts as nature; the very way thought processes work in us keeps us from the notion that nature has spoken to us when we have thought. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 83



Obviously there is no law to prove that this is so, but we cannot assume that the products of our brains do not derive from nature; therefore I see no reason why we would not find astonishingly true things in the thought of the ancient sages, such as the I Ching represents.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 84

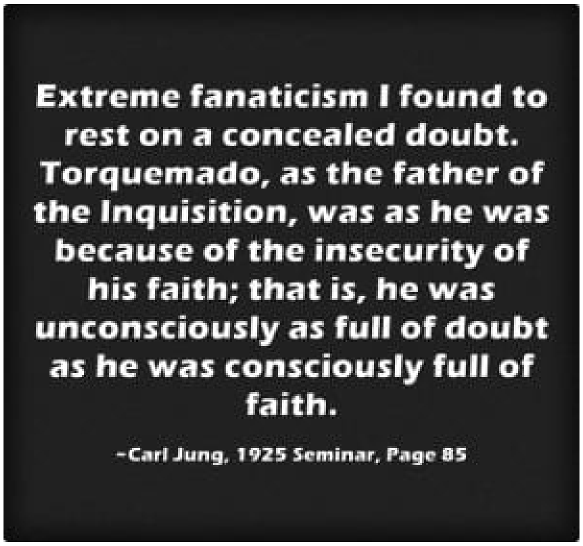
Obviously there is no law to prove that this is so, but we cannot assume that the products of our brains do not derive from nature; therefore I see no reason why we would not find astonishingly true things in the thought of the ancient sages, such as the I Ching represents. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 84



He [Heraclitus] is singularly Chinese in his philosophy and is the only Western man who has ever really compassed the East. If the Western world had followed his lead, we would all be Chinese in our viewpoint instead of Christian.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 84

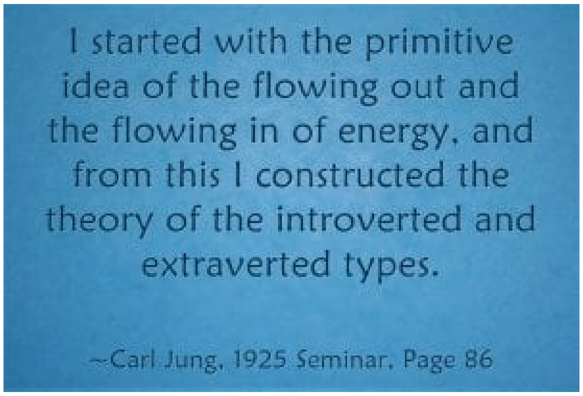
He [Heraclitus] is singularly Chinese in his philosophy and is the only Western man who has ever really compassed the East. If the Western world had followed his lead, we would all be Chinese in our viewpoint instead of Christian. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 84



Extreme fanaticism I found to rest on a concealed doubt. Torquemado, as the father of the Inquisition, was as he was because of the insecurity of his faith; that is, he was unconsciously as full of doubt as he was consciously full of faith.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 85

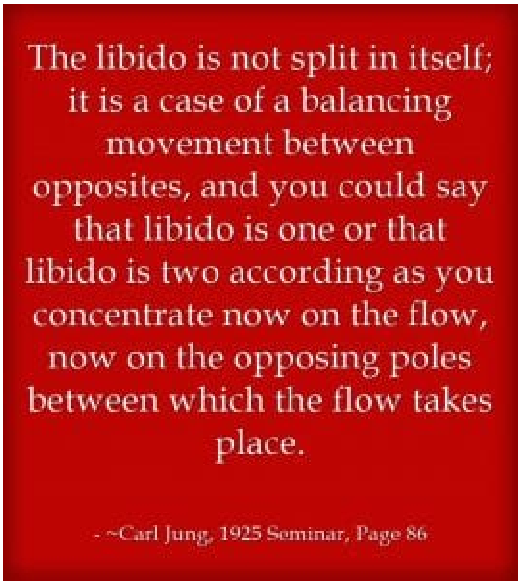
Extreme fanaticism I found to rest on a concealed doubt. Torquemado, as the father of the Inquisition, was as he was because of the insecurity of his faith; that is, he was unconsciously as full of doubt as he was consciously full of faith. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 85



I started with the primitive idea of the flowing out and the flowing in of energy, and from this I constructed the theory of the introverted and extraverted types.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86

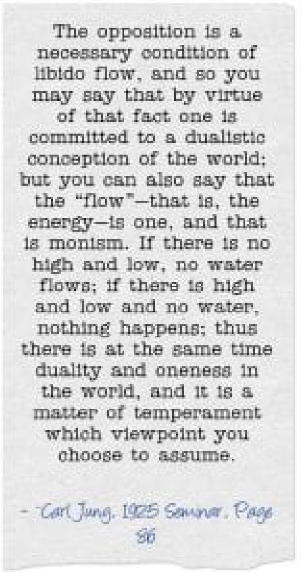
I started with the primitive idea of the flowing out and the flowing in of energy, and from this I constructed the theory of the introverted and extraverted types. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86



The libido is not split in itself; it is a case of a balancing movement between opposites, and you could say that libido is one or that libido is two according as you concentrate now on the flow, now on the opposing poles between which the flow takes place.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86

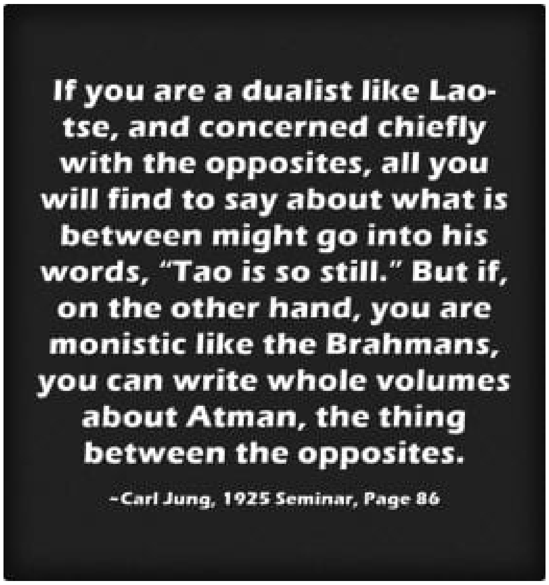
The libido is not split in itself; it is a case of a balancing movement between opposites, and you could say that libido is one or that libido is two according as you concentrate now on the flow, now on the opposing poles between which the flow takes place. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86



The opposition is a necessary condition of libido flow, and so you may say that by virtue of that fact one is committed to a dualistic conception of the world; but you can also say that the “flow”—that is, the energy—is one, and that is monism. If there is no high and low, no water flows; if there is high and low and no water, nothing happens; thus there is at the same time duality and oneness in the world, and it is a matter of temperament which viewpoint you choose to assume.

- Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86

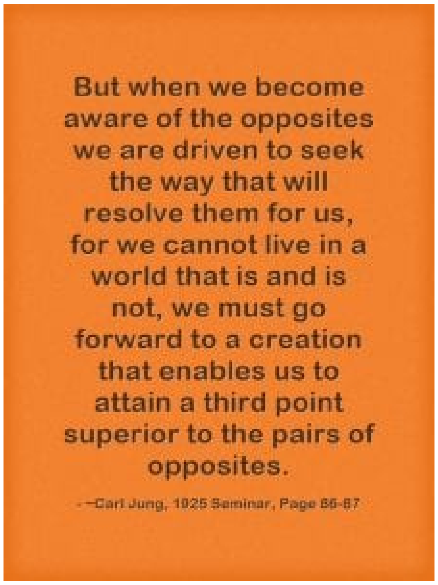
The opposition is a necessary condition of libido flow, and so you may say that by virtue of that fact one is committed to a dualistic conception of the world; but you can also say that the “flow”—that is, the energy—is one, and that is monism. If there is no high and low, no water flows; if there is high and low and no water, nothing happens; thus there is at the same time duality and oneness in the world, and it is a matter of temperament which viewpoint you choose to assume. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86



If you are a dualist like Lao-tse, and concerned chiefly with the opposites, all you will find to say about what is between might go into his words, “Tao is so still.” But if, on the other hand, you are monistic like the Brahmans, you can write whole volumes about Atman, the thing between the opposites.

–Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86

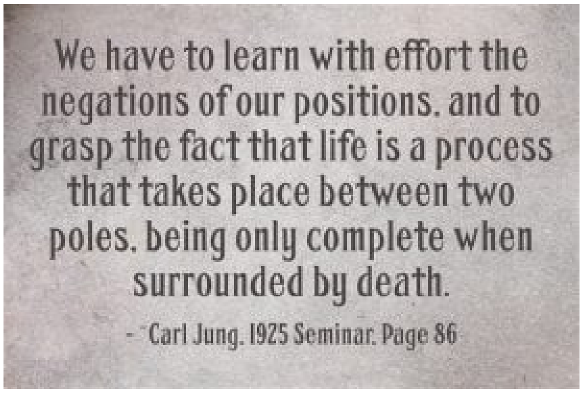
If you are a dualist like Lao-tse, and concerned chiefly with the opposites, all you will find to say about what is between might go into his words, “Tao is so still.” But if, on the other hand, you are monistic like the Brahmans, you can write whole volumes about Atman, the thing between the opposites. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86



But when we become aware of the opposites we are driven to seek the way that will resolve them for us, for we cannot live in a world that is and is not, we must go forward to a creation that enables us to attain a third point superior to the pairs of opposites.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86-87

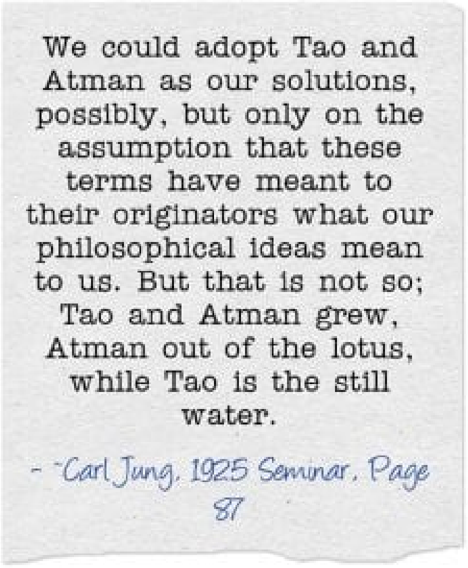
But when we become aware of the opposites we are driven to seek the way that will resolve them for us, for we cannot live in a world that is and is not, we must go forward to a creation that enables us to attain a third point superior to the pairs of opposites. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 86-87



We have to learn with effort the negations of our positions, and to grasp the fact that life is a process that takes place between two poles, being only complete when surrounded by death.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86

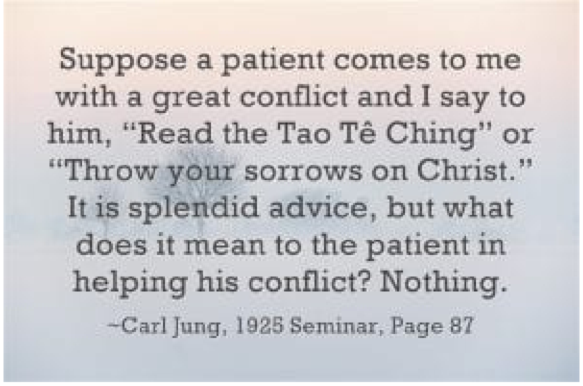
We have to learn with effort the negations of our positions, and to grasp the fact that life is a process that takes place between two poles, being only complete when surrounded by death. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86



We could adopt Tao and Atman as our solutions, possibly, but only on the assumption that these terms have meant to their originators what our philosophical ideas mean to us. But that is not so; Tao and Atman grew, Atman out of the lotus, while Tao is the still water.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 87

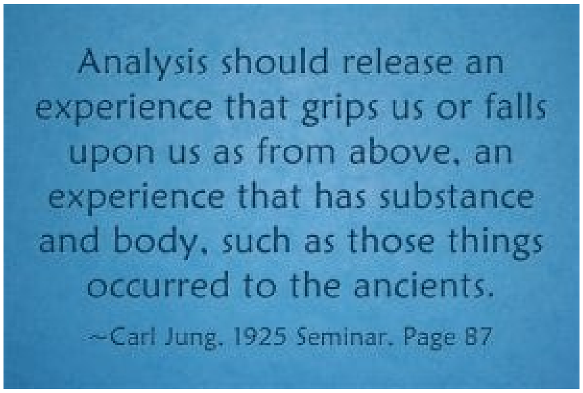
We could adopt Tao and Atman as our solutions, possibly, but only on the assumption that these terms have meant to their originators what our philosophical ideas mean to us. But that is not so; Tao and Atman grew, Atman out of the lotus, while Tao is the still water. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 87



Suppose a patient comes to me with a great conflict and I say to him, "Read the Tao Tê Ching" or "Throw your sorrows on Christ." It is splendid advice, but what does it mean to the patient in helping his conflict? Nothing.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 87

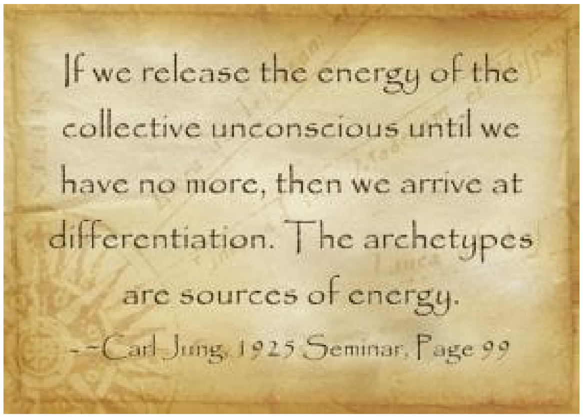
Suppose a patient comes to me with a great conflict and I say to him, "Read the Tao Tê Ching" or "Throw your sorrows on Christ." It is splendid advice, but what does it mean to the patient in helping his conflict? Nothing. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 87



Analysis should release an experience that grips us or falls upon us as from above, an experience that has substance and body, such as those things occurred to the ancients.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 87

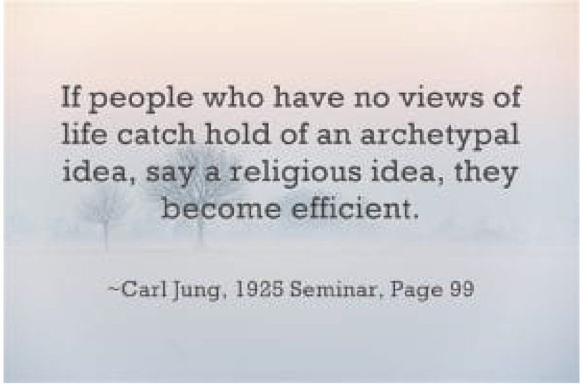
Analysis should release an experience that grips us or falls upon us as from above, an experience that has substance and body, such as those things occurred to the ancients. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 87



If we release the energy of the collective unconscious until we have no more, then we arrive at differentiation. The archetypes are sources of energy.

--Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

If we release the energy of the collective unconscious until we have no more, then we arrive at differentiation. The archetypes are sources of energy. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99



If people who have no views of life catch hold of an archetypal idea, say a religious idea, they become efficient.

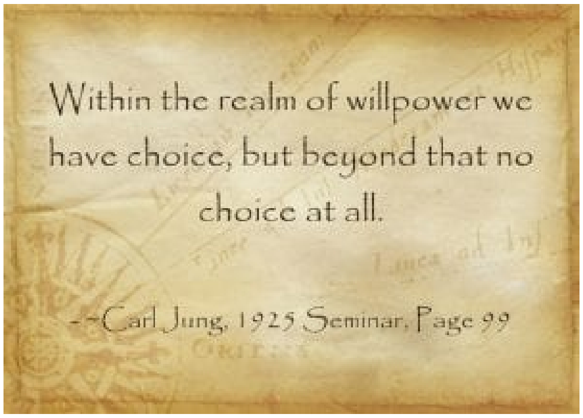
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

If people who have no views of life catch hold of an archetypal idea, say a religious idea, they become efficient. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

Moral views do not touch the collective unconscious.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

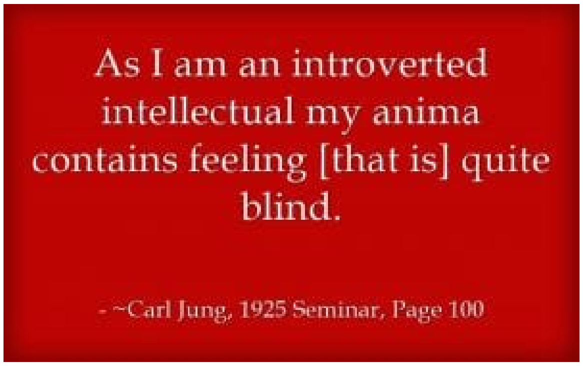
Moral views do not touch the collective unconscious. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99



Within the realm of willpower we have choice, but beyond that no choice at all.

--~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

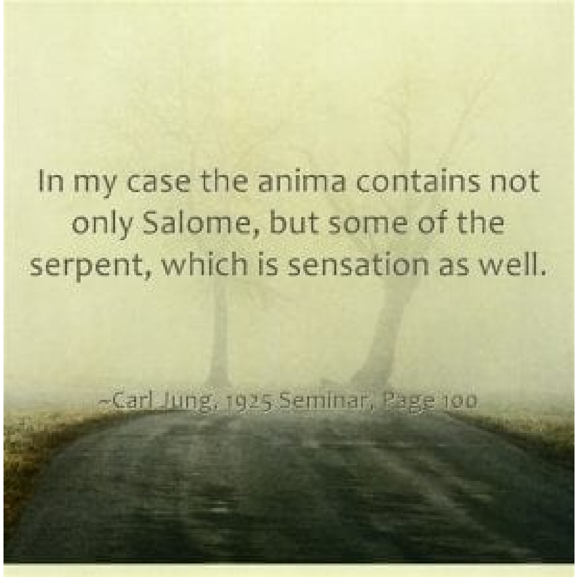
Within the realm of willpower we have choice, but beyond that no choice at all. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99



As I am an introverted intellectual my anima contains feeling [that is] quite blind.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100

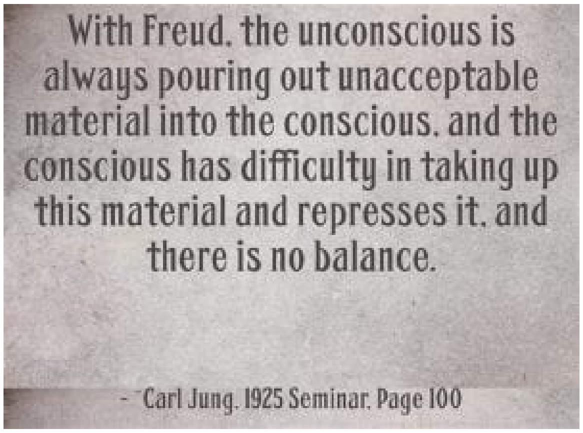
As I am an introverted intellectual my anima contains feeling [that is] quite blind. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100



In my case the anima contains not only Salome, but some of the serpent, which is sensation as well.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100

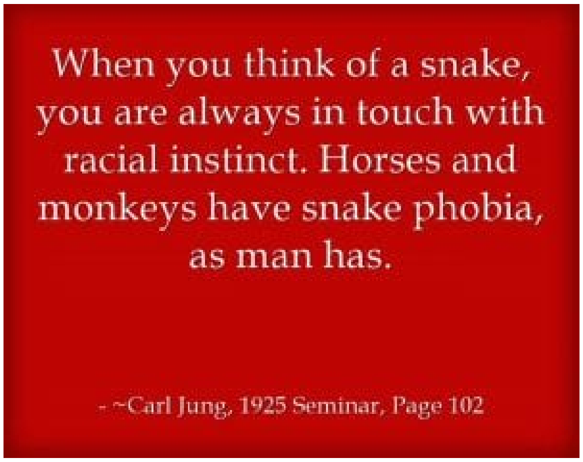
In my case the anima contains not only Salome, but some of the serpent, which is sensation as well. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100



With Freud, the unconscious is always pouring out unacceptable material into the conscious, and the conscious has difficulty in taking up this material and represses it, and there is no balance.

- Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100

With Freud, the unconscious is always pouring out unacceptable material into the conscious, and the conscious has difficulty in taking up this material and represses it, and there is no balance. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100

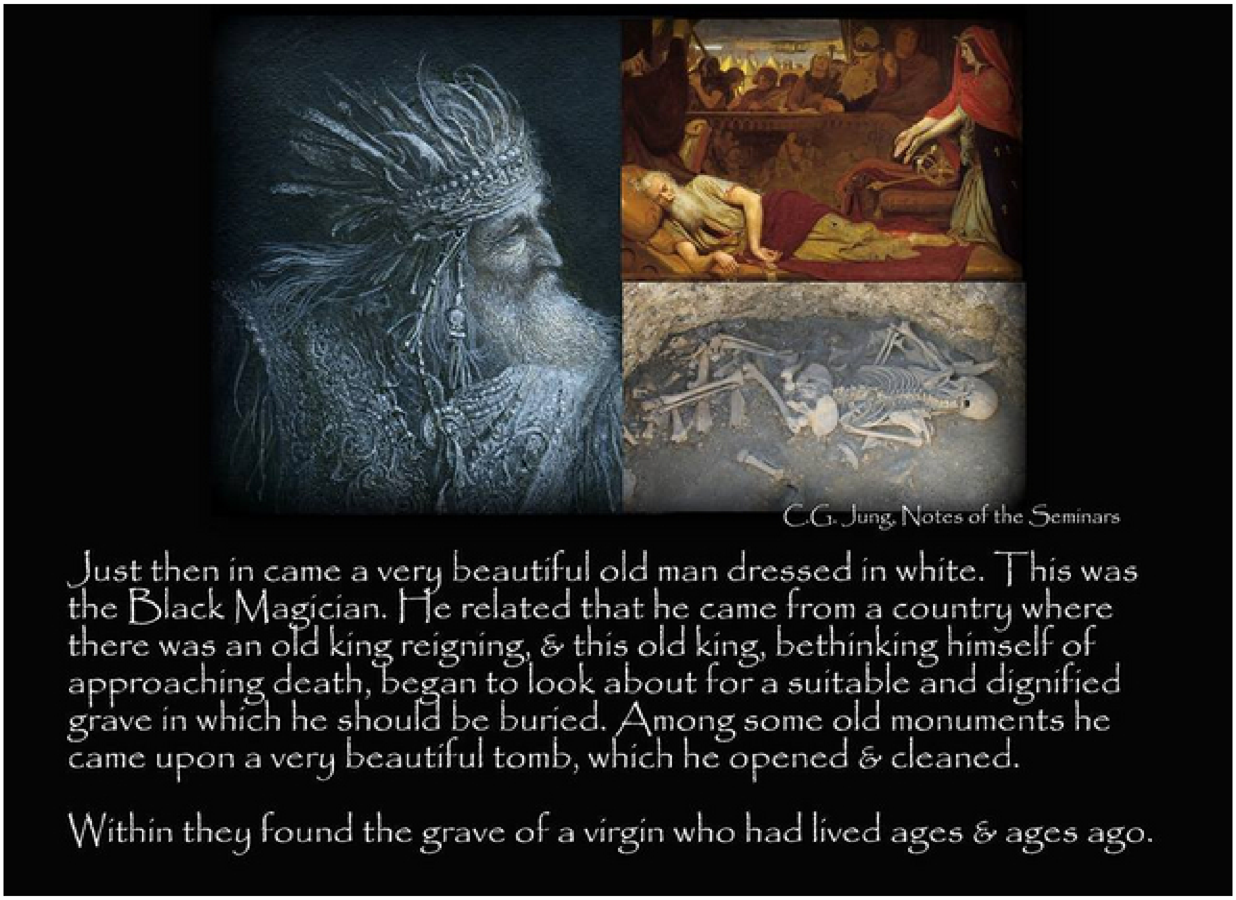


When you think of a snake, you are always in touch with racial instinct. Horses and monkeys have snake phobia, as man has.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102

When you think of a snake, you are always in touch with racial instinct. Horses and monkeys have snake phobia, as man has. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102

Carl Jung: "Just then in came another very beautiful old man dressed in white, and this was the Black Magician." (2019-11-16 04:16)



C.G. Jung, Notes of the Seminars

Just then in came a very beautiful old man dressed in white. This was the Black Magician. He related that he came from a country where there was an old king reigning, & this old king, bethinking himself of approaching death, began to look about for a suitable and dignified grave in which he should be buried. Among some old monuments he came upon a very beautiful tomb, which he opened & cleaned.

Within they found the grave of a virgin who had lived ages & ages ago.

This dual aspect in which a man's collective unconscious can present itself was brought very vividly to my attention through the dream of a young divinity student about whom I was once consulted.

He was in a conflict of doubts as to whether he had chosen right in becoming a minister, as to whether he really believed as he thought he did, etc.

Many of you, however, have heard this dream before, so I do not know that it is worthwhile for me to repeat it.

(It was requested that the dream be repeated.)

Well then, the dreamer found himself in the presence of a very beautiful venerable old man who was clad in a black robe.

This dual aspect in which a man's collective unconscious can present itself was brought very vividly to my attention through the dream of a young divinity student about whom I was once consulted.

He was in a conflict of doubts as to whether he had chosen right in becoming a minister, as to whether he really believed as he thought he did, etc.

Many of you, however, have heard this dream before, so I do not know that it is worthwhile for me to repeat it.

(It was requested that the dream be repeated.)

Well then, the dreamer found himself in the presence of a very beautiful venerable old man who was clad in a black robe.

He knew this man was the White Magician.

The old man had just finished a sort of discourse, which the dreamer knew was full of fine things, but he could not quite remember what had been said, though he did know the old man had said the Black Magician would be needed.

Just then in came another very beautiful old man dressed in white, and this was the Black Magician.

He wanted to speak to the White Magician but, seeing the young man there, hesitated.

Then the White Magician immediately explained that the young man was “an innocent,” and that the Black Magician could speak quite freely before him.

So the Black Magician related that he came from a country where there was an old king reigning, and this old king, bethinking himself of approaching death, began to look about for a suitable and dignified grave in which he should be buried.

Among some old monuments he came upon a very beautiful tomb, which he caused to be opened and cleaned.

Within they found the grave of a virgin who had lived ages and ages ago.

When they threw out the bones and these came into the sunlight, they immediately formed themselves into a black horse which ran away into the desert and was lost.

The Black Magician said he had heard about this horse and thought it very important to find him, so he went back to the place where all this had taken place, and there he found the horse’s tracks.

These he followed into the desert, and for days and days, until he came to the other side of the desert, and there he found the black horse grazing.

By his side lay the keys to Paradise.

With these he had come to the White Magician for help, as he did not know what to do with them. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 120-121.

The old man had just finished a sort of discourse, which the dreamer knew was full of fine things, but he could not quite remember what had been said, though he did know the old man had said the Black Magician would be needed.

Just then in came another very beautiful old man dressed in white, and this was the Black Magician.

He wanted to speak to the White Magician but, seeing the young man there, hesitated.

Then the White Magician immediately explained that the young man was “an innocent,” and that the Black Magician could speak quite freely before him.

So the Black Magician related that he came from a country where there was an old king reigning, and this old king, bethinking himself of approaching death, began to look about for a suitable and dignified grave in which he should be buried.

Among some old monuments he came upon a very beautiful tomb, which he caused to be opened and cleaned.

Within they found the grave of a virgin who had lived ages and ages ago.

When they threw out the bones and these came into the sunlight, they immediately formed themselves into a black horse which ran away into the desert and was lost.

The Black Magician said he had heard about this horse and thought it very important to find him, so he went back to the place where all this had taken place, and there he found the horse's tracks.

These he followed into the desert, and for days and days, until he came to the other side of the desert, and there he found the black horse grazing.

By his side lay the keys to Paradise.

With these he had come to the White Magician for help, as he did not know what to do with them. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 120-121.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http://www.blogger.com/home

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

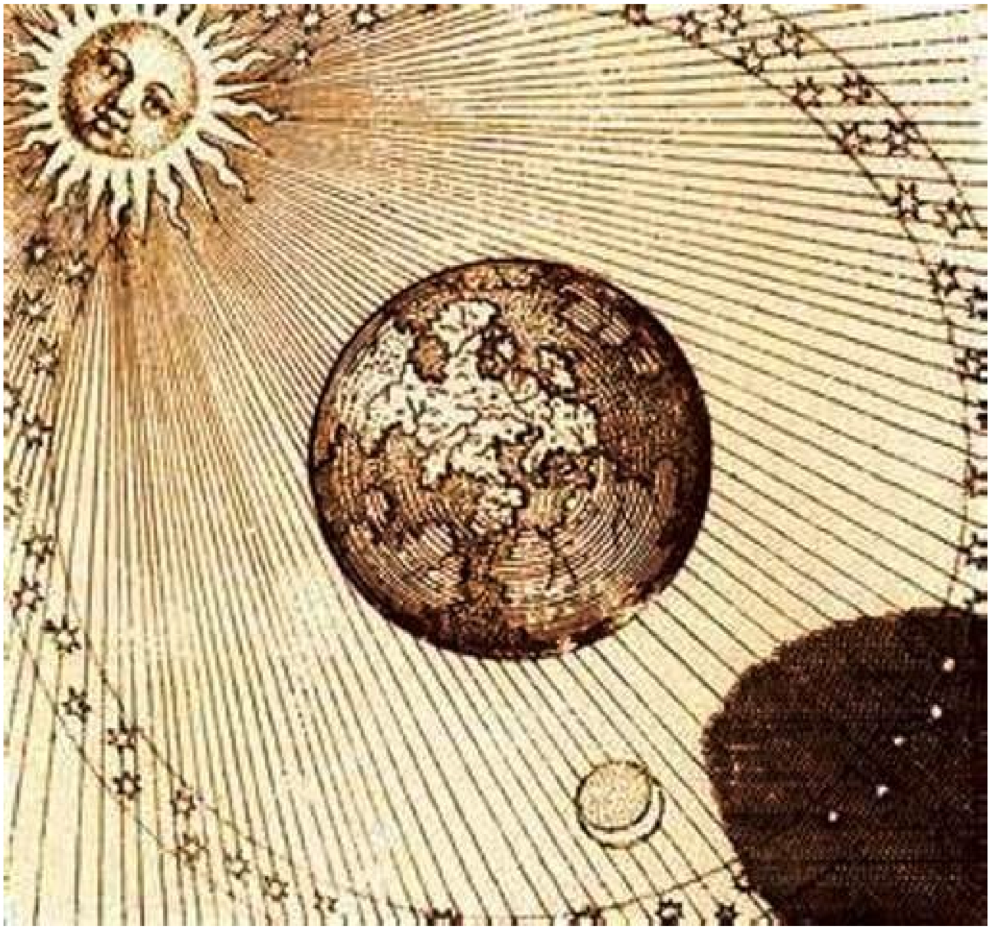
Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/1f49e-1magician.jpg`

God may be revealed out of man (2019-11-16 04:17)

[1]



"Just as man was once revealed out of God, so, when the circle closes, God may be revealed out of man."   Carl Jung, (from "A Psychological Approach to the Dogma of the Trinity", 1942)

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/af70b-sun.jpg`

Carl Jung on “Paranormal Cognition.” (2019-11-16 04:18)

[1]

[Carl Jung on “Paranormal Cognition.”]

To Laurence J. Bendit

Dear Dr. Bendit, 12 November 1945

I have read your essay on Paranormal Cognition (P.C.) with greatest interest and I fully agree with you in all your general statements.

There are only some minor points which I want to comment on.

The fact, for instance, that you couldn’t find a word about the famous 1;2 in my writings is merely due to the misfortune that a considerable part of my work is not translated .

You would have found not only an acknowledgement of "telepathy" but also an example of P .C . in Kerenyi and Jung : Einfiihrung in das Wesen der Mythologie (Amsterdam 1 941, p. 2 30 f.).

I’m acquainted with P .C. and I have seen many a case of it.

The reason why I haven’t said more about it publicly is that I don’t like to talk about things which are difficult to prove.

I include P .C. in the concept of intuition, "perception by the way of the unconscious."

Sensation is perception in absolute time and space, intuition is perception in relative time and space, or "elastic" time and ditto space.

Dunne is by no means the first to have recognized the prophetic quality of dreams.

Any old medicine man 1o,ooo years ago has done so.

What’s wrong with intuition?

Is there any difference between "perception by the way of the unconscious" (i.e., you don’t know how you get it) and P .C. which is also "perception in an unknown way"?

Or does P.C. claim to know what P.C. is?

I confess I don’t know how to make a difference between intuition and P .C. I like your little book, and I appreciate your unorthodox attitude in that case where it was chiefly a matter of an insufficient adaptation to P .C.

I suppose you have also seen cases where P .C. developed under the influence of analytical treatment?

I am fully aware of the extraordinary importance of such phenomena, which transcend our actual means of understanding.

They give you a certain feeling of hopelessness.

This has been one of the main reasons why I tried to explore the unconscious from another side, which seemed to be more accessible than the "parapsychological" phenomena, which are, at least for the time being, far beyond the reach of our actual mental capacity, although I always kept them in mind and left a place for them in my definition of intuition.

Physiology has not done so yet, but it ought to leave room for paraphysiology, which comes in where it is a question of materialization .

I have seen enough of this phenomenon to convince me entirely of its existence.

Being an honorary member of the British and American SPR I have read almost all the important publications in this field.

All this on top of my own experiences has led me to the conclusion that space as well as time and matter are relative to the psyche, i.e., they are to a certain extent psychic functions.

I discussed this problem with Rhine whose experiments with the space and time factor prove my hypothesis with sufficient evidence.

I don’t know whether Rhine has already published his experiments concerning the psychic influences on mechanical dice-throwing.

They prove, as far as I know, the extension ofpsychic relativity to matter.

If this is true, my hypothesis would be at least a point of view from which a theoretical handling of P .C. and paraphysiology could start.

I should like to send you something in exchange for your book but unfortunately I have no copies left of my English translations.

Not knowing whether you are sufficiently acquainted with the German language I don’t dare to send you one of my German publications, but let me know in case you do read German.

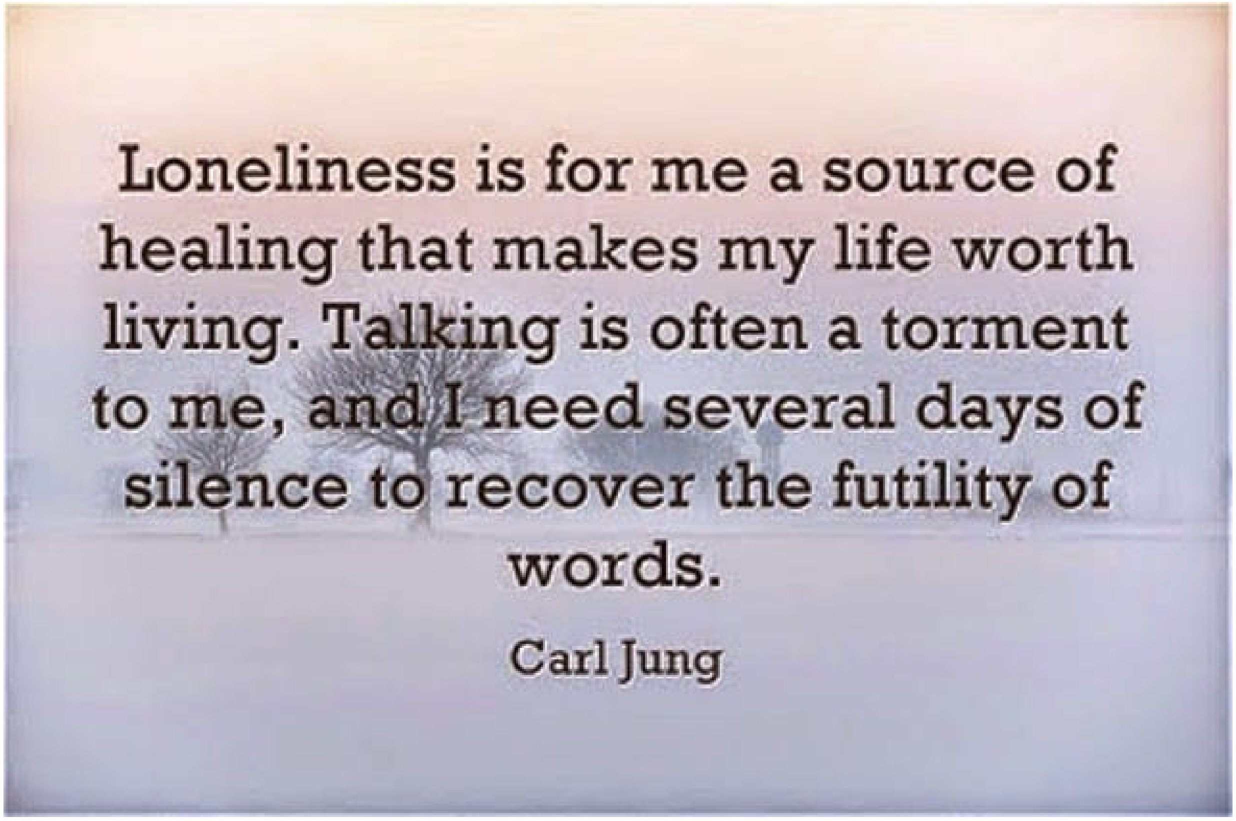
Sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Pages 389-390.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/8c1a9-para.jpg`

Carl Jung on Loneliness. [Anthology] (2019-11-16 04:21)

[1]



Loneliness is for me a source of healing that makes my life worth living. Talking is often a torment to me, and I need several days of silence to recover the futility of words.

Carl Jung

[Carl Jung on Loneliness]

It is … only in the state of complete abandonment and loneliness that we experience the helpful powers of our own natures. Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul

As a child I felt myself to be alone, and I am still, because I know things and must hint at things which others apparently know nothing of, and for the most part do not want to know. Loneliness does not come from having no people about one, but from being unable to communicate the things that seem important to oneself, or from holding certain views which others find inadmissible. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 356.

If a man knows more than others, he becomes lonely. But loneliness is not necessarily inimical to companionship, for no one is more sensitive to companionship than the lonely man, and companionship thrives only when each individual remembers his individuality and does not identify himself with others. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 356.

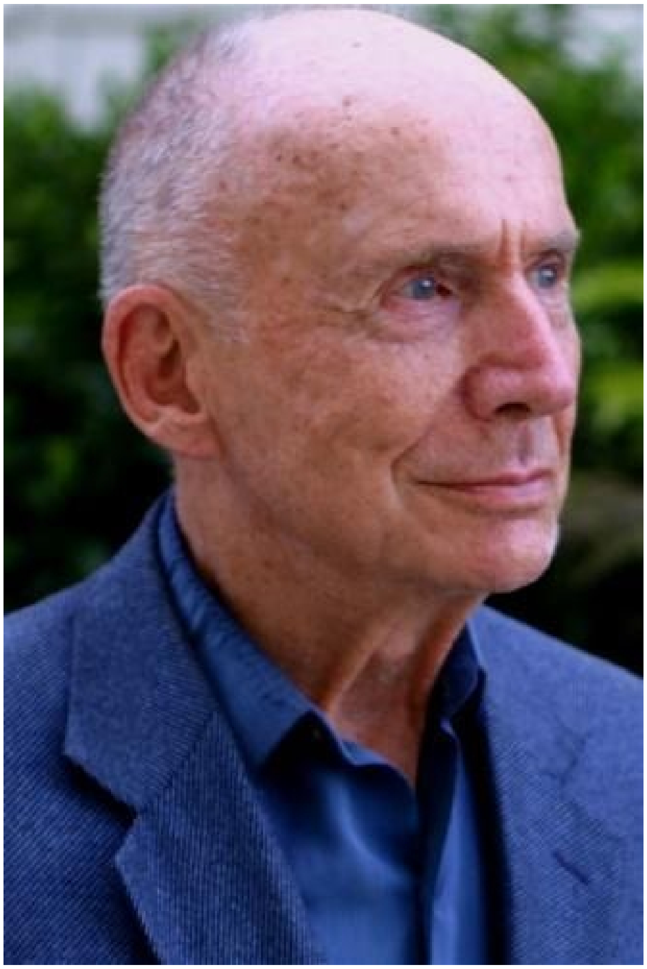
Loneliness is for me a source of healing that makes my life worth living. Talking is often a torment to me, and I need several days of silence to recover the futility of words. Carl Jung

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/c9250-loneliness.jpg`

Carl Jung: Dr. Jung advised me to spend most of my time alone, have a separate room in the house to be used for nothing but inner work, (2019-11-16 04:30)

[1]



Robert Johnson: Memory of C.G. Jung

My contact with Dr. Jung?-certainly one of the most important events of my life!

When I enrolled in the C. G. Jung Institute in Zurich at its first term in 1948 there were some thirty students, diverse in nature, I the youngest at age twenty-seven.

I began analysis with Dr. Jolande Jacobi, who probably was the worst possible choice for this shy, inexperienced, highly introverted feeling type.

At my first hour Dr. Jacobi explained that she conducted her hours pacing the floor.

She justified this by saying she was an extraverted Hungarian and that this was her manner.

Her neighbor one floor below had taken her to court for pacing and the judge had ruled that since it was her nature to pace this was her born right but that she must not pace before eight in the morning or after ten at night.

I was impressed with Swiss justice, but should have known that there was no hope for my analysis in her hands.

One day soon after beginning with Dr. Jacobi I brought one of the great pivotal archetypal dreams which has periodically punctuated my life.

Dr. Jacobi paced at accentuated speed and announced that I should not dream dreams like that!

I was a young man and the dream I had brought was an old man's dream.

I should not dream dreams like that!

Even in my naivete I knew that this was an inadequate interpretation of the dream and I had to have more guidance than Dr. Jacobi was capable of giving.

So I left the analysis, clumsily, without tact. I asked for an hour with Mrs. Jung, who was lecturing at the Institute and who appealed to me as a gentle, introverted, dignified person.

She agreed to see me next day and I went to Kusnacht to tell her my great dream which was hanging so heavily over me.

I sensed that it was a very good dream but difficult by virtue of the transpersonal scope and its very great weight.

Mrs. Jung listened to my dream, said very little but in quite a different way from Dr. Jacobi's dismissal of the dream.

It seems that Mrs. Jung discussed my dream with Dr. Jung that evening for Dr. Jung called the school next day and told me, "Please come out here, I want to talk at you."

Two days later I was again at Kusnacht to be met at the door by the famous two dogs at the entrance to Dr. Jung's house.

I had heard that he arranged to have his two dogs meet a new patient, the dogs being more sensitive to a Potential psychotic than any human observation.

I felt as if I had passed Cerberus on my journey to the Inner World, and by the time Dr. Jung came the dogs were on their backs enjoying my petting.

Dr. Jung took me into the garden and proceeded to give me a very long lecture on the meaning of my dream, what it meant to me to have contact in this manner with the deep parts of the collective unconscious, how I should live, what I might expect of my life, what I should not attempt, what I could trust, what did not belong to me in life.

The meeting took nearly three hours and it was clear that I was to listen and not interrupt.

Non-directive counselling, indeed!

Dr. Jung advised me to spend most of my time alone, have a separate room in the house to be used for nothing but inner work, never to join any organization or collectivity.

He indicated that though it was true that I was a young man, my dream was of the second half of life and was to be lived no matter what age I was.

When such a dream comes it is to be honored whether the time or circumstances are convenient or not.

Dr. Jung told me that the unconscious would protect me, give me everything that I needed for my life and that my one duty was to do my inner work.

All else would follow from this.

He said that it was not the least important whether I accomplished anything outwardly in this life since my one task was to contribute to the evolution of the collective unconscious.

The dream was of the general form of three elements being differentiated and a fourth less well developed; he elaborated at great length the problem of adding the fourth element to the existing trinity of faculties and the implications of this development.

He was jubilant at that time over the forthcoming proclamation from Rome of the bodily Assumption of the Virgin Mary into Heaven and talked of that as an example of the addition of the fourth element to the already established three.

My observations of Dr. Jung were several; his frequent laughter, his kindness in taking an unknown youth through his great dream, and most of all, his gift of walking by my side in the matter of typology.

It was my observation that here was a man just like me!

His thought movement, timing, humor were almost exactly parallel to my own.

How fine to find someone so much like myself who can stand two generations ahead of me and speak my own language.

Not only did Dr. Jung speak English with me but he spoke my introverted feeling type as well.

Only later when I was with him in groups of people did I learn that he was quite different from me in type and that his gift to me was in leaving his own natural typology and engaging me in my own.

I was so deeply impressed with this that I determined to learn the same art with others as I was capable.

I continued work with both Dr. Jung (brief meetings at his invitation) and Mrs. Jung. Mrs. Jung was a highly introverted, sensitive person who I learned only much later was an introverted sensation type.

I fear I put her through a difficult time with my feeling intuitive extravagances but she also gave me the gift of following my typology rather than her own. Carl Jung, J.E.T., Pages 36-39

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

Great Sites to visit:

1. Jenna Lilla's Path of the Soul http://jennalilla.org/
2. Steve Jung-Hearted Parker's Jung Currents http://jungcurrents.com/
3. Frith Luton's Jungian Dream Analysis and Psychotherapy: http://frithluton.com/articles/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/a8236-252bjohnson.jpg`

Carl Jung: To be, and to enjoy your being, you need death... (2019-11-16 04:40)

[1]

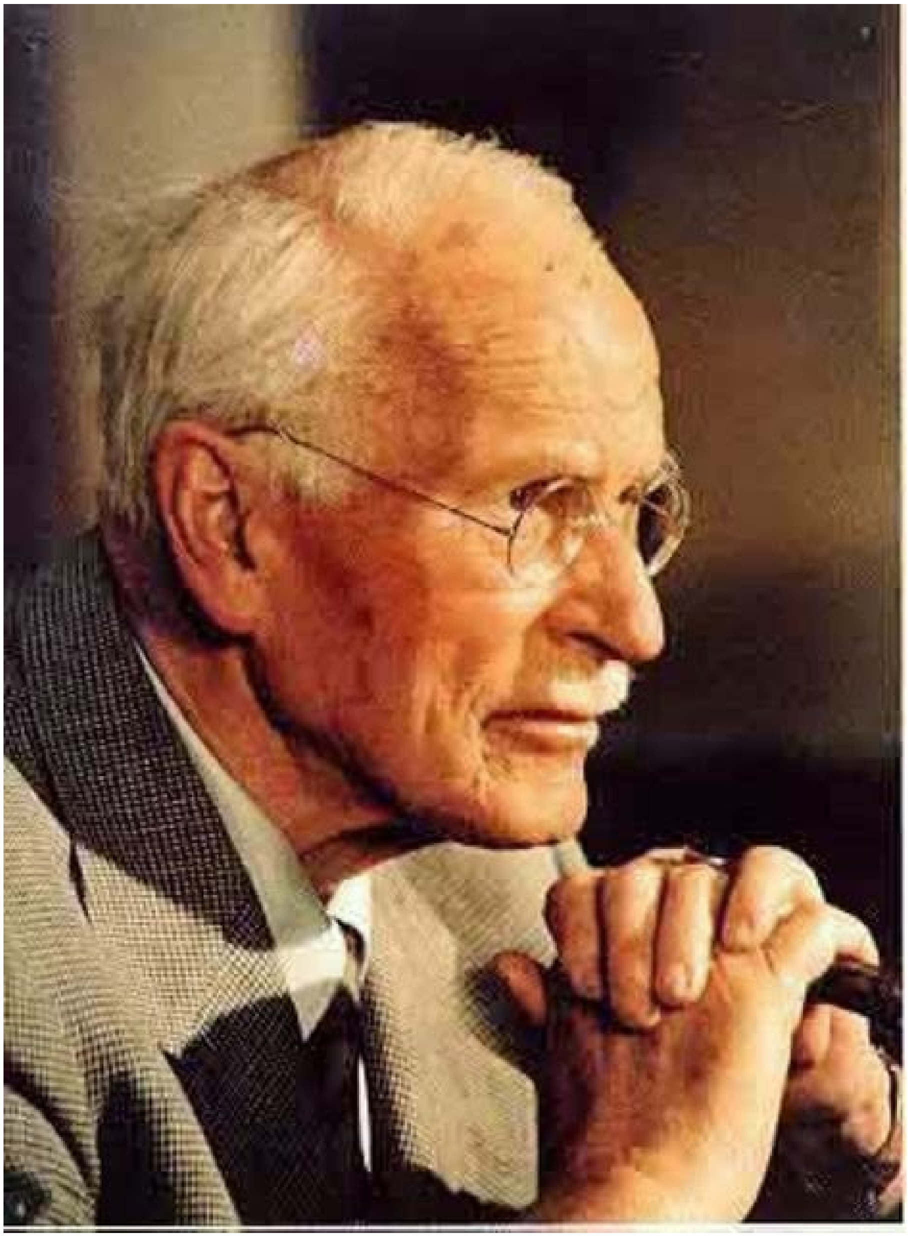
Joy at the smallest things comes to you only when you have accepted death. But if you look out greedily for all that you could still live, then nothing is great enough for your pleasure, and the smallest things that continue to surround you are no longer a joy. Therefore I behold death, since it teaches me how to live.

If you accept death, it is altogether like a frosty night and an anxious misgiving, but a frosty night in a vineyard full of sweet grapes. You will soon take pleasure in your wealth. Death ripens. One needs death to be able to harvest the fruit. Without death, life would be meaningless, since the long-lasting rises again and denies its own meaning. To be, and to enjoy your being, you need death, and limitation enables you to fulfill your being. Carl Jung; Red Book, Page 275

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/11/bfb07-death.jpg`

Carl Jung on Illnesses, Accidents and Homoeopathy (2019-11-16 04:56)

[1]



To Joachim Knopp

Dear Herr Knopp, 10 July 1946

1 . An author by the name of Jakob Lorber is unfortunately not known to me.

2. With regard to homoeopathy you are quite right in considering it a continuation of alchemical practice. This is indeed so. I recommend you to take a look at the writings of Hahnemann. You will find them listed in any encyclopedia .

3• Regarding organic illness (accidents, injuries, etc.) it can be stated with certainty that these things do at least have psychological syndromes, i.e., there is a concomitant psychic process which can sometimes also have an aetiological significance, so that it looks as though the illness were a psychic arrangement.

At any rate there are numerous cases where the symptoms exhibit, in a positively remarkable way, a symbolic meaning even if no psychological pathogenesis is present.

4• One cannot say that every symptom is a challenge and that every cure takes place in the intermediate realm between psyche and physis.

One can only say that it is advisable to approach every illness from the psychological side as well, because this may be extraordinarily important for the healing process.

When these two aspects work together, it may easily happen that the cure takes place in the intermediate realm, in other words that it consists of a complexio oppositorum, like the lapis. In this case the illness is in the fullest sense a stage of the individuation process.

5• I don't know under what conditions you could study in Switzerland. But I would advise you to write tentatively to the Dean of the Medical Faculty [in Zurich) .

Someone there might be able to help you. I myself have long since given up lecturing at the University, nor do I lecture any more at the Federal Polytechnic. So in this respect I can give you no information.

..Unfortunately I don't know any psychotherapist for you now in Germany why has my confidence.

Some of these people are dead, some have disappeared. As you know, my teachings were suppressed as much as possible in Germany both before and during the "era ."

Consequently, though I am very well known in Anglo-Saxon countries only a very few people know me in Germany-a land of the dead as you rightly say.

Yours truly,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 428-429.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/c6666-doctor.jpg`

William Alex: A Personal Assessment (2019-11-16 05:31)

It is not often in the course of a lifetime that one is privileged to stand in the presence of greatness, nor is one likely to remain unaffected by the encounter.

My first meeting with Jung, while I was a student at the Jung Institute in Zurich, affirmed for me what I had experienced through his writings and in personal analysis: his deep and enduring conviction, and sense of purpose, and the singularly human qualities of warmth and humor that accompanied them.

I caught glimpses of the trickster in him, of the shaman-like, even at moments of the diabolical we felt harmonious interplay of his immense experience, wisdom, and dignified humility; the rare quality of his greatness.

The occasion was an Institute-sponsored tea held at one of the ancient guild houses in the Altstadt of Zurich.

A newcomer at the Institute, I found myself, quite unexpectedly, seated next to the man whose insight and Weltanschauung had prompted me to relinquish an established medical practice and become, once again, a student.

Jung introduced himself to me and continued his previous conversation.

It had all happened too quickly. I felt overwhelmed and at a loss for words, in spite of a great eagerness to join in the conversation to convey to Jung that I had studied his books and knew quite a bit about his psychology.

After several awkward attempts to introject something I was not ready for, it occurred to me that it would be best to tell him how I felt.

I proceeded to explain my surprise at our unexpected meeting and he laughed, reached over, patted my knee and said simply, ’My boy, take things as they come.’

The incident and Jung’s response have come back to me many times in the intervening years, and I am grateful for the opportunity to relive them in attempting to formulate the extent and meaning of their impact upon me.

’Take things as they come’ is a well-known expression, on everyone’s lips, and quite familiar when one hears it, like: ’You can’t fight City Hall,’ or ’If you can’t beat ’em, join ’em.’

The message of these sayings is as commonplace as the situations which evoke them.

What was it, then, that, through Jung, transformed a popular cliche into a moving and abiding memory? Projection? Undoubtedly-but not entirely.

To take things as they come was certainly not an invitation to passive compliance in the face of stress.

Nor did it mean simple adaptation or conformity to existing conditions.

I seem to find it easier to relate what I think Jung’s response does not mean than what it does.

At the time of the incident, I understood it as saying, in effect: ’You are a newcomer in analytical psychology and to this part of the world.

There is no need to propel yourself beyond your present level and depth. Relax ! You are among friends.’

I feel that the passing years have enlarged and enriched Jung’s admonition.

It has amplified itself and led me to discern in it overtones reminiscent of Eastern philosophies and religions; of its close relationship to existential thought.

The moment of time becomes the focal point of experience, and harmony in the moment requires the proper interplay of time, of place, and of attitude.

Failure of any of these elements or of their coordination results in disharmony and in the distress of not being at one with oneself.

Besides being fatherly and relieving my momentary discomfort, Jung was telling me that I was not in harmony with myself or my situation, implying that in human affairs, as in nature, a natural or optimal order exists.

Implicit also is the existence of a proper relationship between novice and master, with its established limitations upon the behavior of both; limits as valid in principle in the future as they have been in the past.

Really to take things as they come, in Jung’s meaning as I perceive it, requires a relinquishment of the egocentric need, indigenous in us all, to impose wish, will, and volition upon life in an effort contrary to its natural flow.

How familiar in my experience is the patient, new in analysis, who has the urgent need to grasp at once the substance and meaning of the whole process.

He demands immediate answers to questions and problems that have been taking shape for the better part of his lifetime.

The realization that genuine insight comes its own way and in its own time will impress itself upon him as it will upon the analyst, when he is tempted to impose interpretations and conclusions on the patient before the time is ripe for proper integration of the experience.

If he is fortunate, the rejected lover will learn that the way back to harmony with himself in time and place requires a sacrifice of his possessiveness, of his narcissistic demands projected upon the relationship.

So, too, the aspiring artist who discovers that his vividly perceived images of perfection correspond to distant goals to be approximated only after years of intensive effort; not with his present capacities.

It does little good to storm the gates of heaven with loud cries and laments, demanding fulfillment.

The psychological conditions regulating orderly relationship in regard to time, place, and attitude must be given full recognition.

What Jung conveyed to me in so few words is at once rich and profound and commonplace.

In it, as in all his work, Jung, speaking out of the depth of his own center, reveals his reverence for the life process as a carrier of meaning, direction, and purpose, if none other than the genetic urge to biological and spiritual fulfillment of each in accord with his kind.

Like the J Ching, which states that human life was not meant to be unlimited, Jung seemed to say that acceptance of one’s own natural limits in time and place constitutes one of the cardinal virtues.

It runs as a leitmotif through his writings, accompanied by the conviction that the limited human drama unfolds against the unlimited and the divine.

To think of the complex in Jung’s psychology stripped of its autonomy is as impossible as it is to conceive of the archetype without its numinosity.

Although the former is closer to personal consciousness, both partake of the same invisible spirit evident in his discussion of the self, of the compensatory function of dreams, or of the psyche's self-regulatory tendency.

The natural inner movement toward a goal is also evident in his discussion of psychological types.

The exact descriptions of types, interesting and helpful as they may be, are, to my mind, of less importance than the dynamics of relationship between them and the inferior function. Integration of the latter points the way to completion or wholeness of the personality.

Throughout Jung's teachings, one feels the presence of the transcendent spirit so well expressed in the inscription above the door of his residence-to the effect that, invited or not, God will be present.

Jung lived and worked to make people realize and experience the timeless reality of the soul.

Seen from academic and psychiatric viewpoints, he stood alone.

He was out of step with his time or, better, his time was neither ripe nor ready for him.

He shared the fate of all pioneers whose insights and perceptions precede the world's readiness to receive them.

I believe that it is too early to attempt a comprehensive evaluation of Jung's psychology.

It is probable that the full impact of his contributions may not be generally appreciated for decades to come.

Yet Jung spoke directly to the central and immediate problems of our time, in response to urgent but unformulated questions: Where is new meaning to be sought when current meanings have lost their validity?

Where are the new symbols, the new God values, to be found when ancient, ancestral gods appear moribund; stricken by the fatal virus of modern scientific enlightenment?

And where shall we seek the new morality when knowledge of good and evil, of right and wrong, no longer thunders from the mouths of the wrathful or loving Jahweh, Jesus, Mary pantheon?

Jung's answer: the new gods and values will spring from the same sources that gave rise to the departing ones.

They will emerge in their own time and place from the archetypal depths of man's soul, in response to new conditions and in accord with the eternal pattern of life's movement from the beginning, that of birth, procreation, death, and rebirth. William Alex, Contact with Jung, Pages 168-171

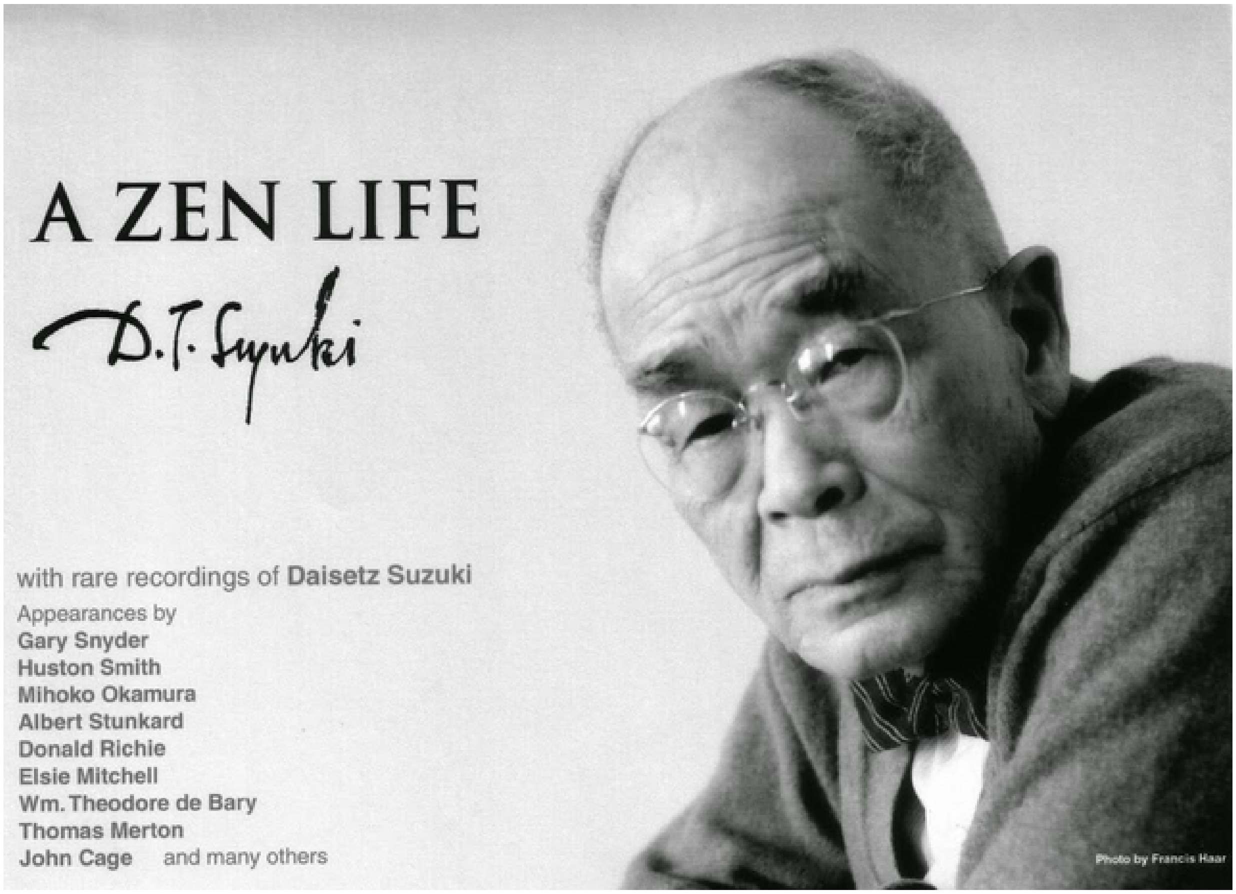
Book by D.T. Suzuki Foreword by C.G. Jung (2019-11-17 02:21)



A ZEN LIFE
D.T. Suzuki
with rare recordings of Daisetz Suzuki
Appearances by Gary Snyder
Huston Smith
Mihoko Okamura
Albert Stunkard
Donald Richie
Elsie Mitchell
Wm. Theodore de Bary
Thomas Merton
John Cage and many others
Photo by Francis Haar

[2] An Introduction to
Zen Buddhism
D.T. Suzuki
禅
Foreword by Carl Jung

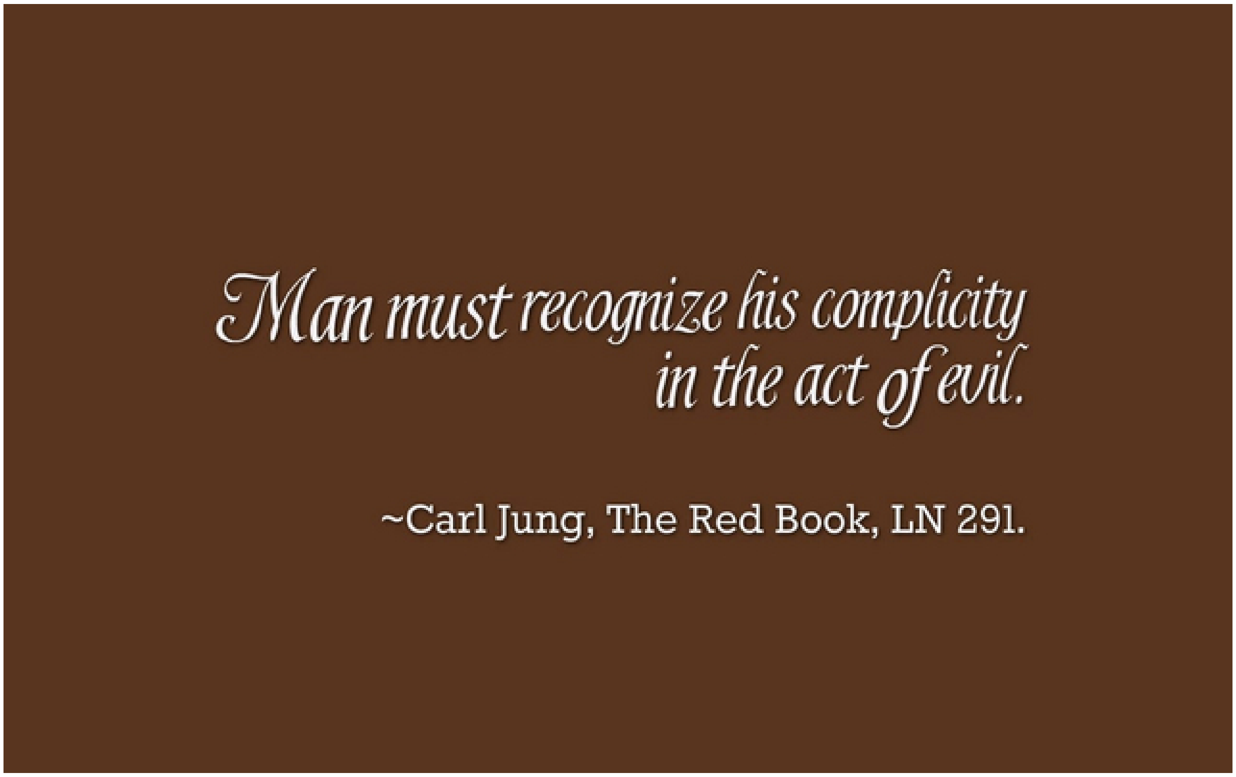
[3]Buy at Amazon here

[4]Books by D.T. Suzuki

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/4886f-dt.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/122e1-1.jpg`
3. `http://www.amazon.com/dp/0802130550/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_g7HAub1PCT0KY`
4. `http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/2014/11/book-by-dt-suzuki-jungian-foreword-by.html`

Some Carl Jung Quotations from The Red Book (2019-11-17 02:30)

[1]

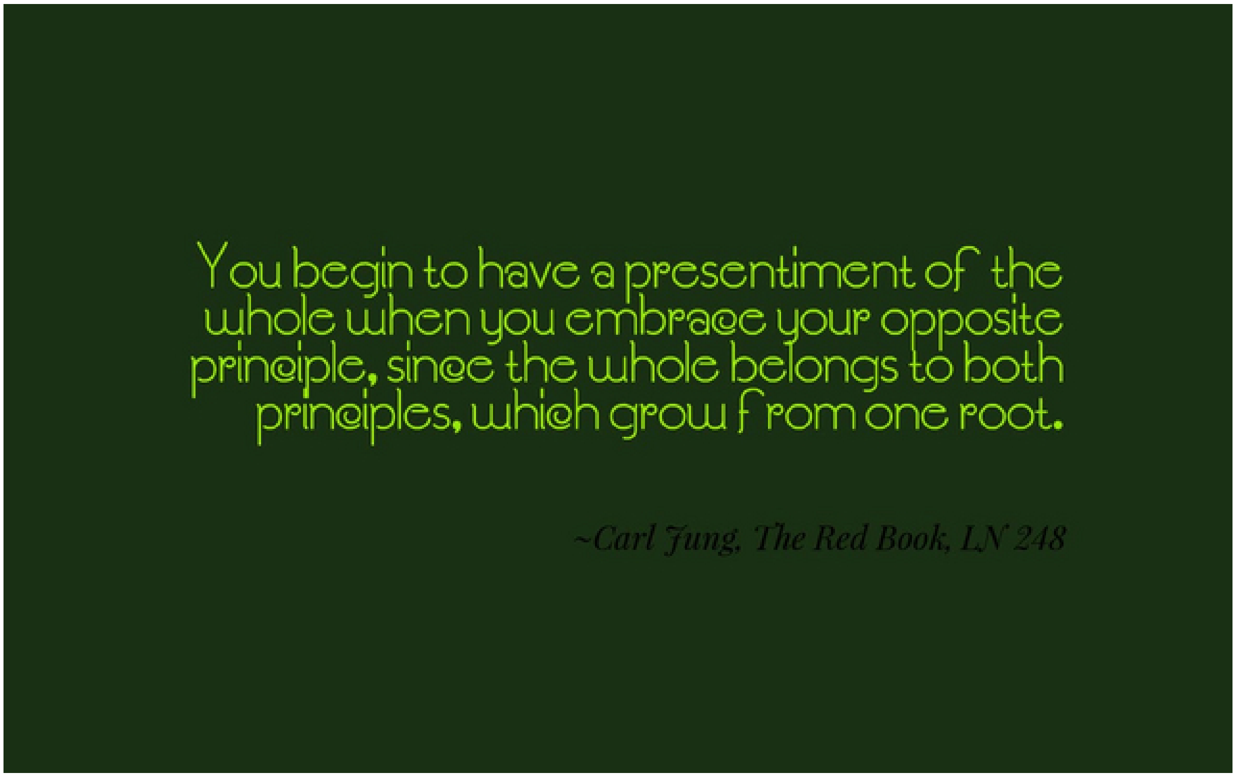


Man must recognize his complicity in the act of evil.

~Carl Jung, The Red Book, LN 291.

Man must recognize his complicity in the act of evil. Carl Jung, The Red Book, LN 291.

[2]

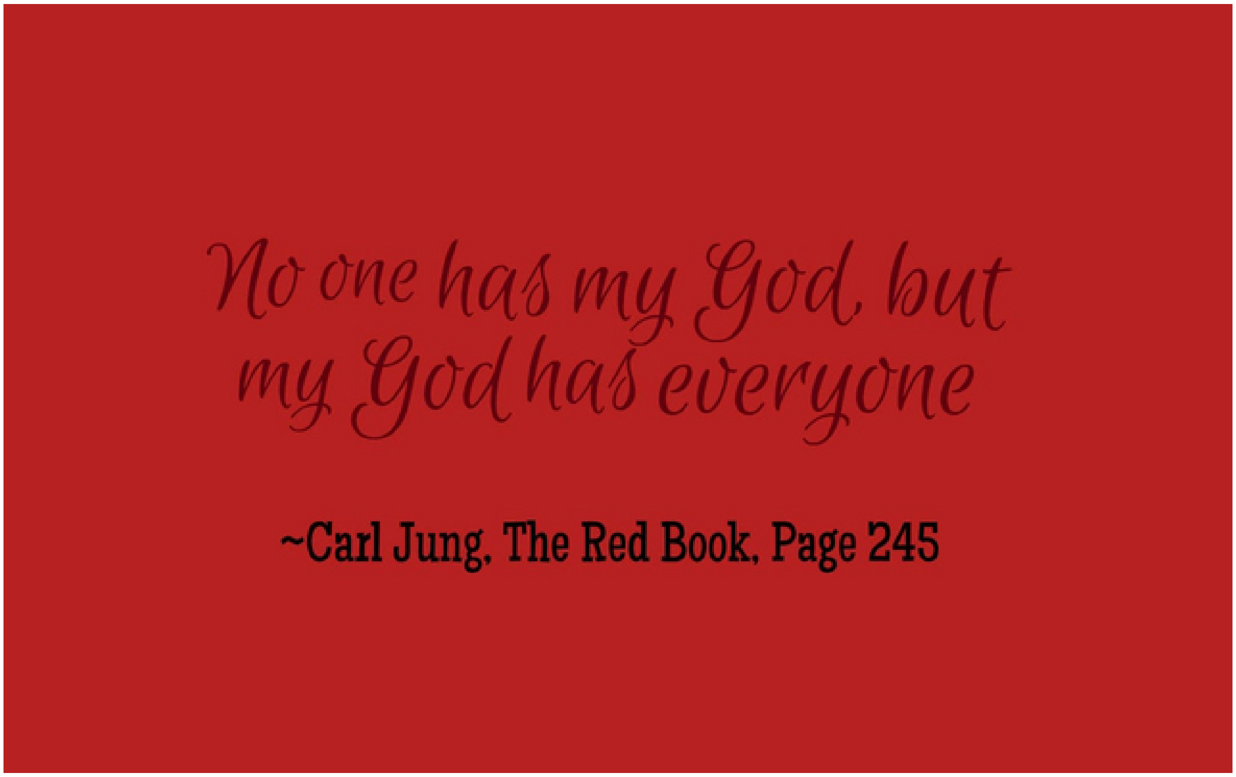


You begin to have a presentiment of the whole when you embrace your opposite principle, since the whole belongs to both principles, which grow from one root.

~Carl Jung, The Red Book, LN 248

You begin to have a presentiment of the whole when you embrace your opposite principle, since the whole belongs to both principles, which grow from one root. Carl Jung, The Red Book, LN 248

[3]

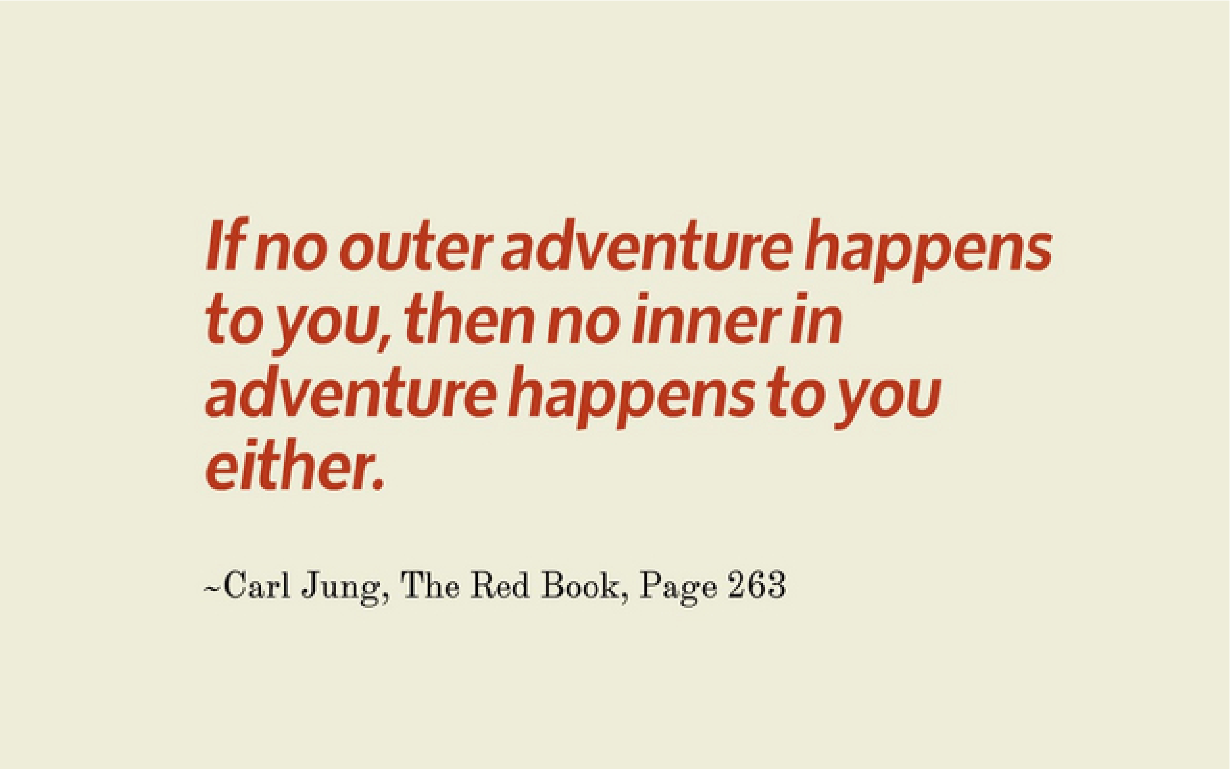


No one has my God, but my God has everyone

~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 245

No one has my God, but my God has everyone. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 245.

[4]



If no outer adventure happens to you, then no inner in adventure happens to you either.

~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 263

If no outer adventure happens to you, then no inner in adventure happens to you either. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 263.

[5]

Your voice is too weak for those raging to be able to hear.
Thus do not speak and do not show the God, but sit in a solitary place and sing incantations in the ancient manner.

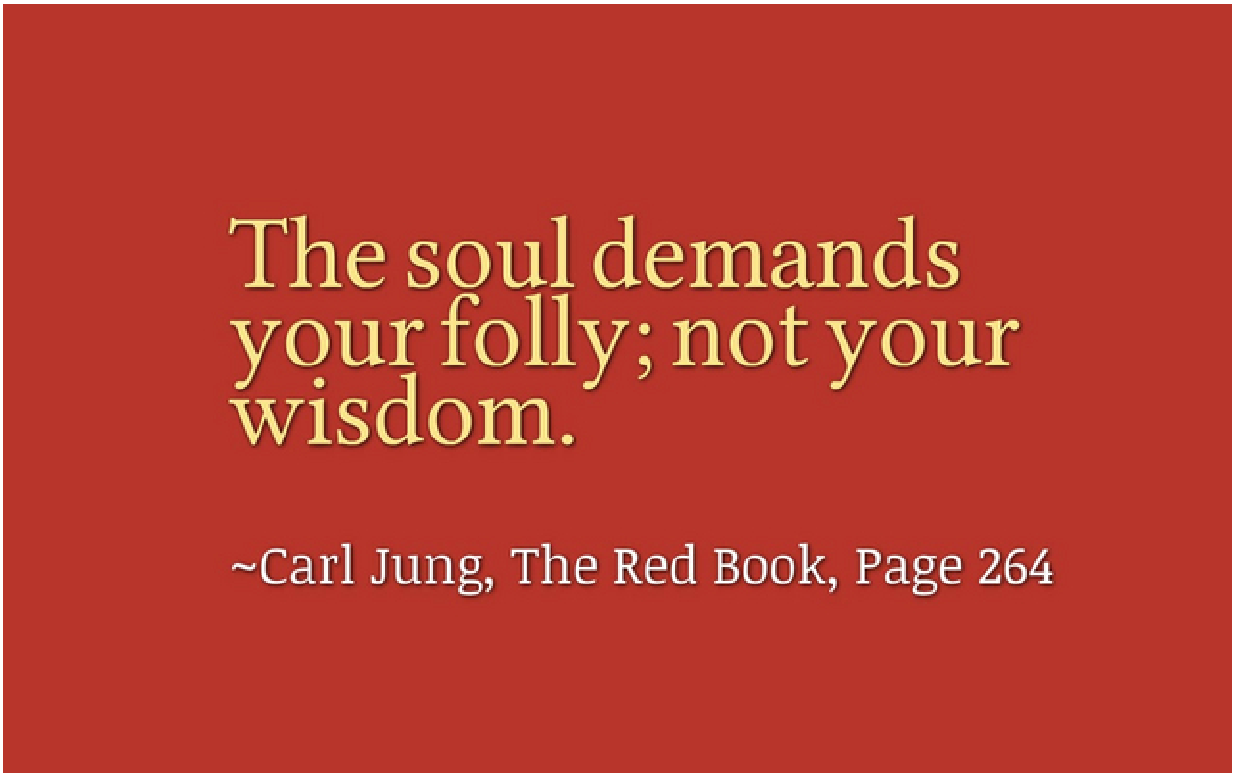
Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 284

Your voice is too weak for those raging to be able to hear. Thus do not speak and do not show the God, but sit in a solitary place and sing incantations in the ancient manner. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 284.

[6]

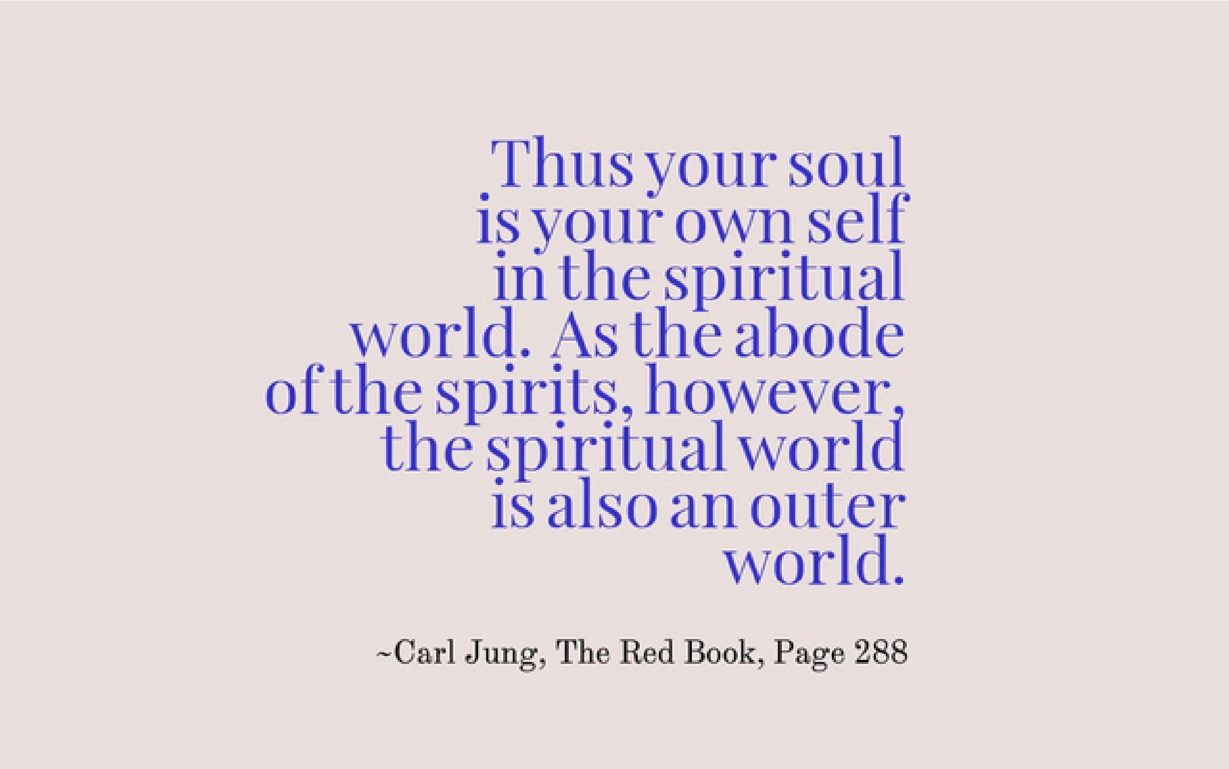


The soul demands your folly; not your wisdom.

~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 264

The soul demands your folly; not your wisdom. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 264.

[7]

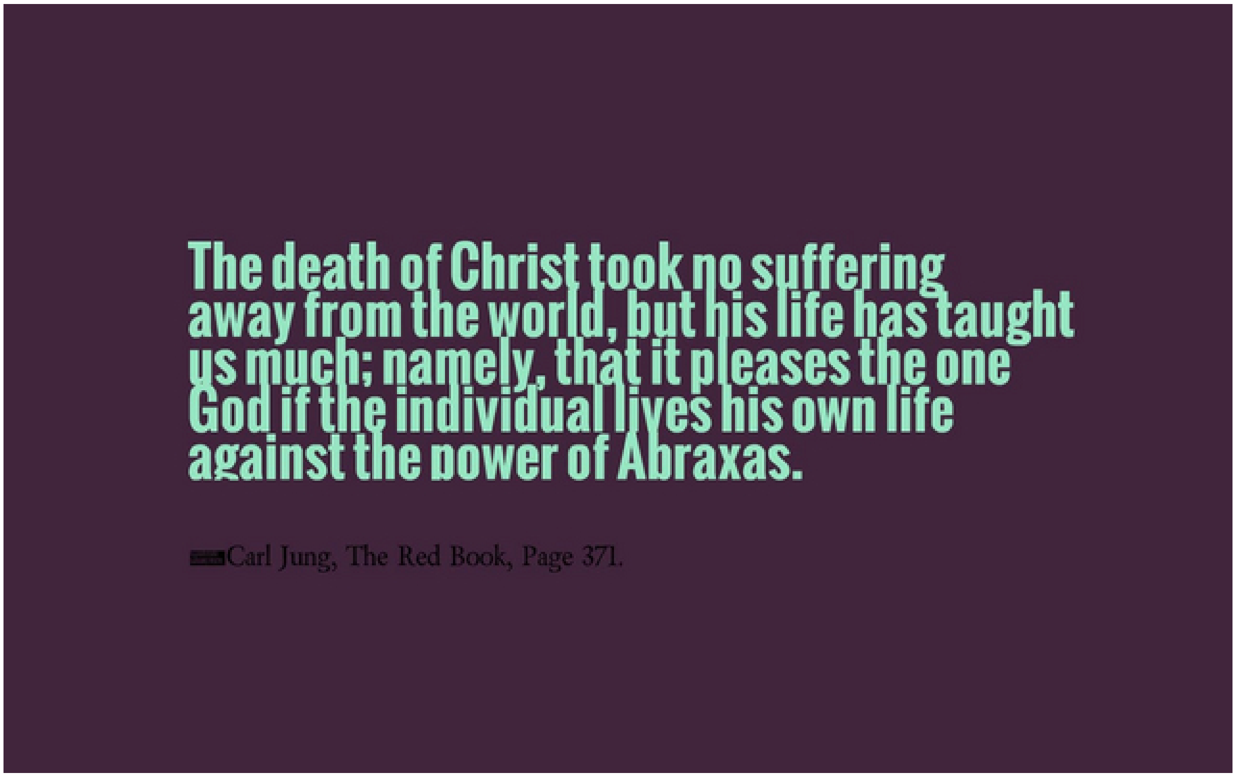


Thus your soul is your own self in the spiritual world. As the abode of the spirits, however, the spiritual world is also an outer world.

~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 288

Thus your soul is your own self in the spiritual world. As the abode of the spirits, however, the spiritual world is also an outer world. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 288.

[8]



The death of Christ took no suffering away from the world, but his life has taught us much; namely, that it pleases the one God if the individual lives his own life against the power of Abraxas.

Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 371.

The death of Christ took no suffering away from the world, but his life has taught us much; namely, that it pleases the one God if the individual lives his own life against the power of Abraxas. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 371.

[9]

You have the one God, and you become your one God in the innumerable number of Gods.

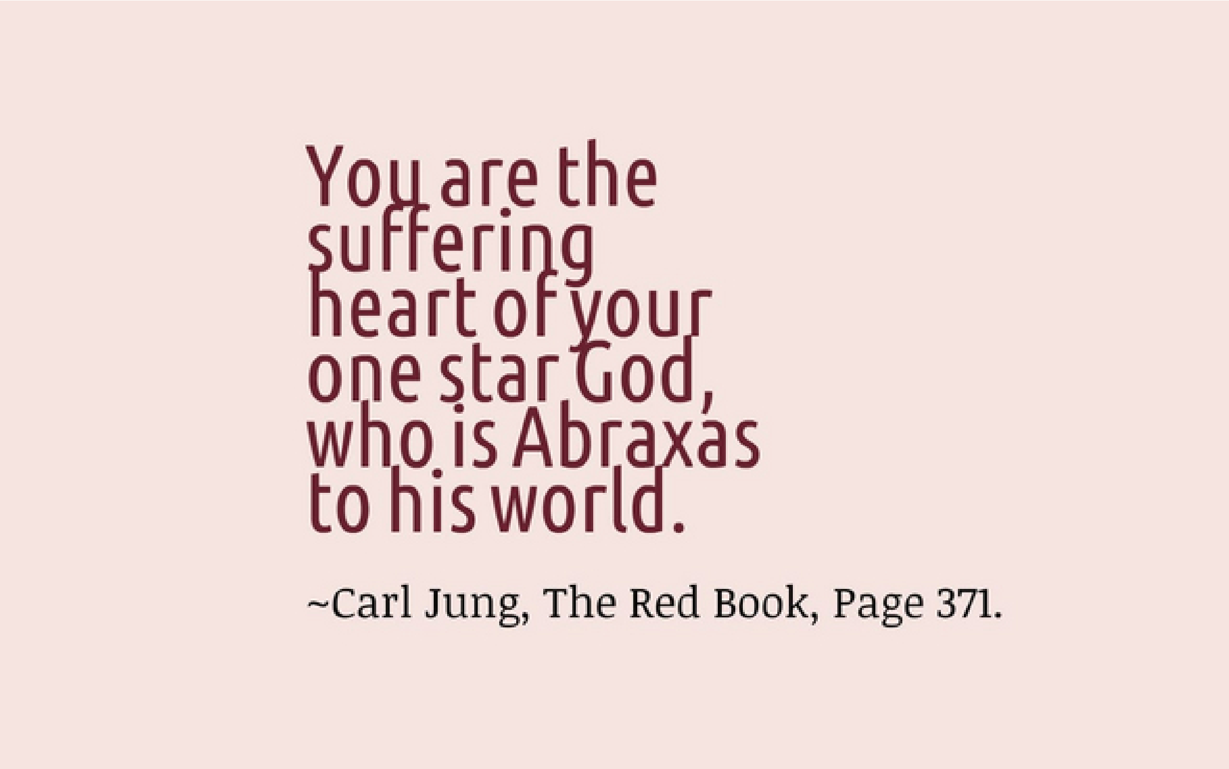
~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 371.

You have the one God, and you become your one God in the innumerable number of Gods. Carl Jung's Soul, The Red Book, Page 371.



You are the suffering heart of your one star God, who is Abraxas to his world.

~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 371.

You are the suffering heart of your one star God, who is Abraxas to his world.   Carl Jung’s Soul, The Red Book, Page 371.

I am no longer alone with myself, and I can only artificially recall the scary and beautiful
feeling of solitude.
This is the shadow side of the fortune
of love.

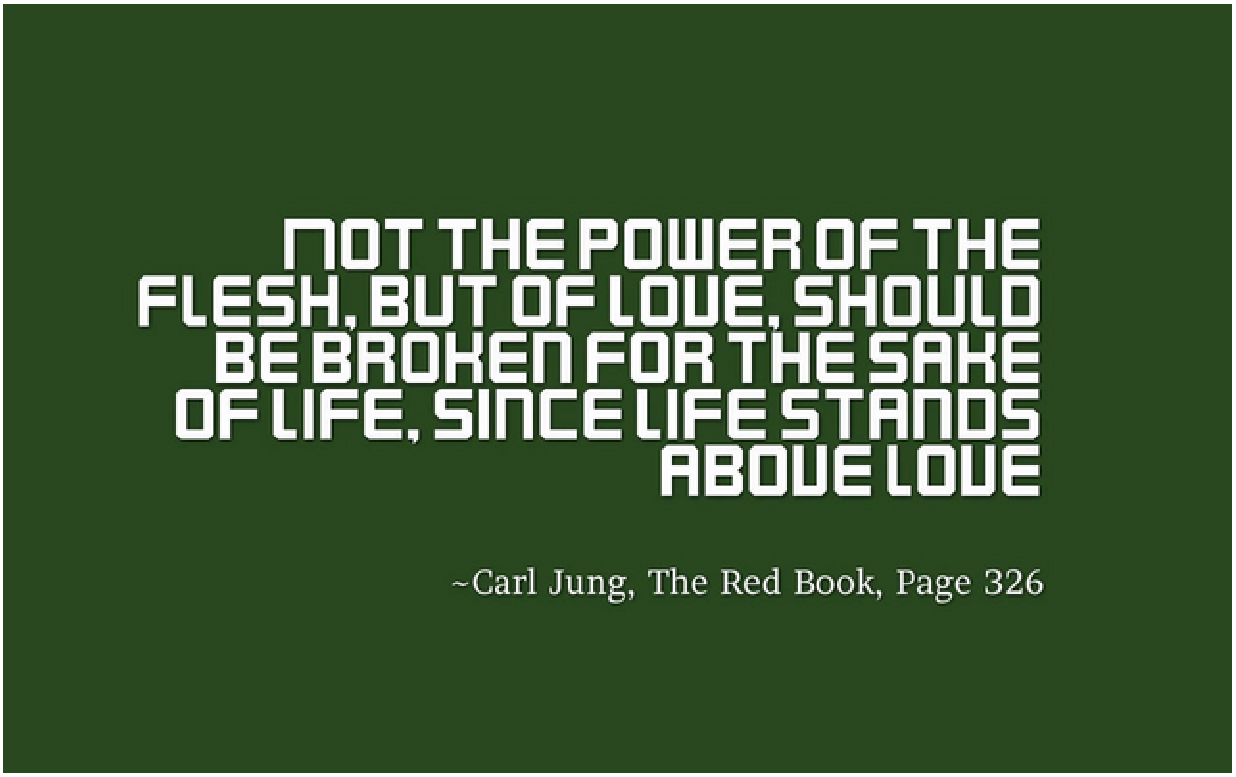
-Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 196

I am no longer alone with myself, and I can only artificially recall the scary and beautiful feeling of solitude. This is the shadow side of the fortune of love. Carl Jung; Carl Jung, The Red Book, Introduction, Page 196.

First: these qualities are differentiated and separate in us; therefore they do not cancel each other out, but are effective. Thus we are the victims of the pairs of opposites. The Pleroma is rent within us.

~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 348

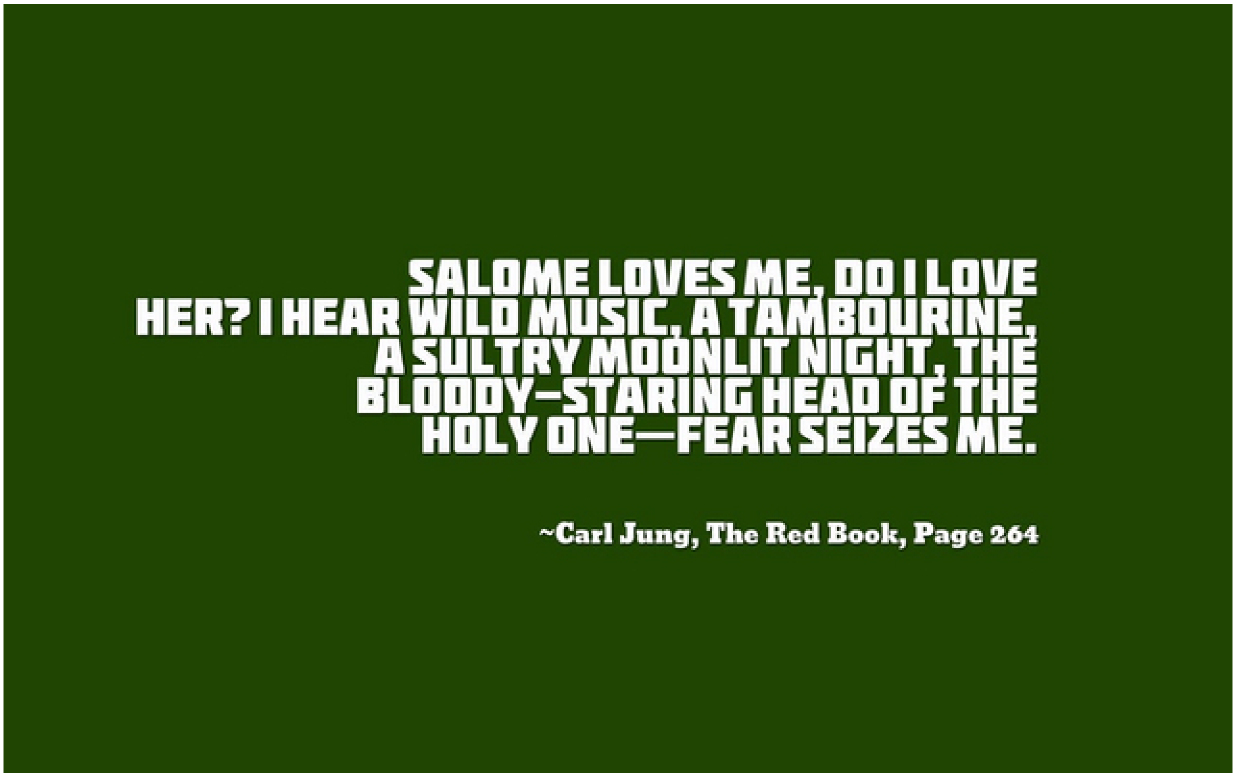
First: these qualities are differentiated and separate in us; therefore they do not cancel each other out, but are effective. Thus we are the victims of the pairs of opposites. The Pleroma is rent within us. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 348.



NOT THE POWER OF THE FLESH, BUT OF LOVE, SHOULD BE BROKEN FOR THE SAKE OF LIFE, SINCE LIFE STANDS ABOVE LOVE

~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 326

Not the power of the flesh, but of love, should be broken for the sake of life, since life stands above love.
Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 326.



SALOME LOVES ME, DO I LOVE
HER? I HEAR WILD MUSIC, A TAMBOURINE, A SULTRY MOONLIT NIGHT, THE BLOODY-STARING HEAD OF THE HOLY ONE—FEAR SEIZES ME.

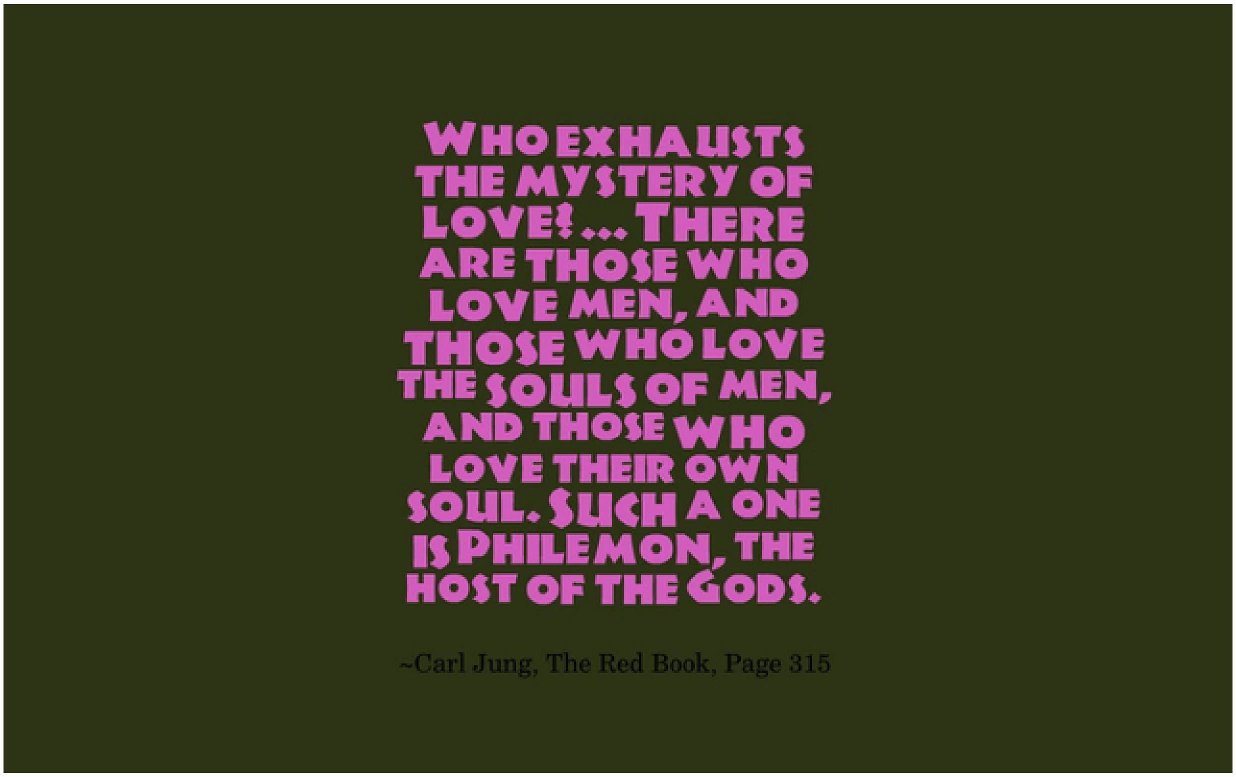
~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 264

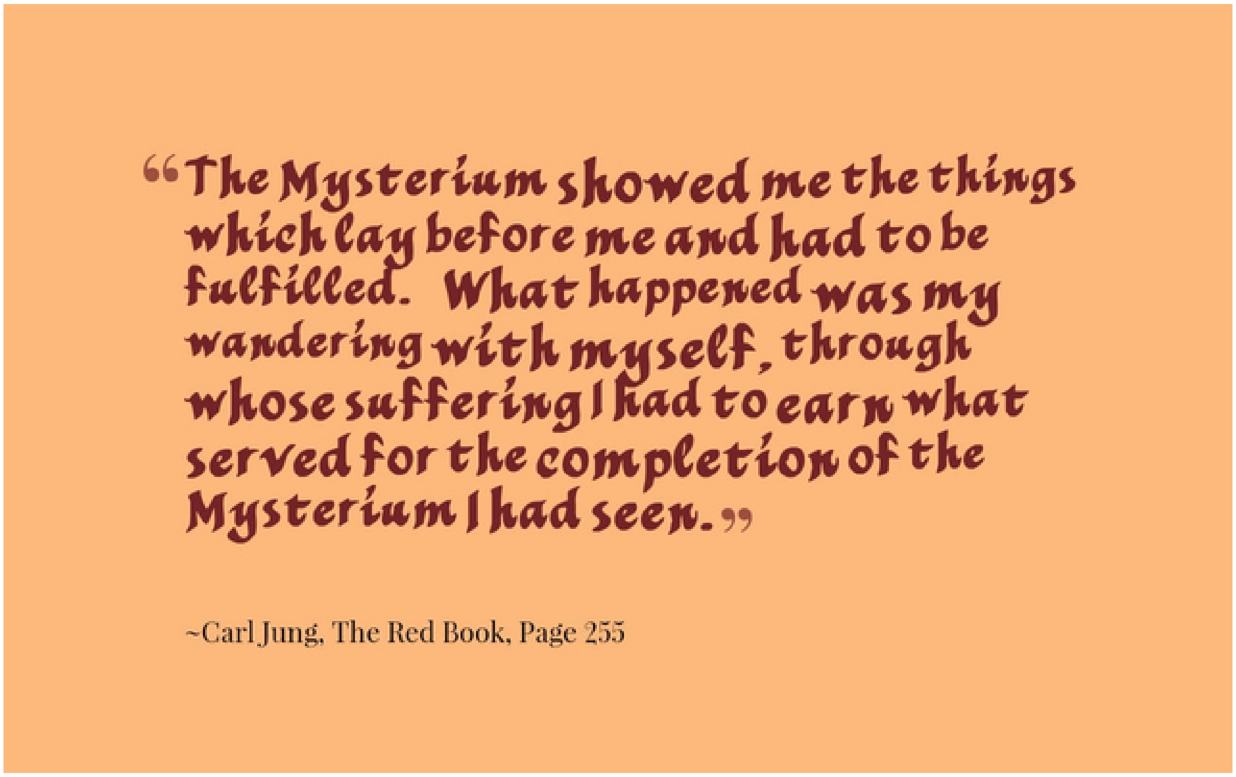
Salome loves me, do I love her? I hear wild music, a tambourine, a sultry moonlit night, the bloody-staring head of the holy one—fear seizes me. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 264.



WHO EXHAUSTS THE MYSTERY OF LOVE? ... THERE ARE THOSE WHO LOVE MEN, AND THOSE WHO LOVE THE SOULS OF MEN, AND THOSE WHO LOVE THEIR OWN SOUL. SUCH A ONE IS PHILEMON, THE HOST OF THE GODS.

~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 315

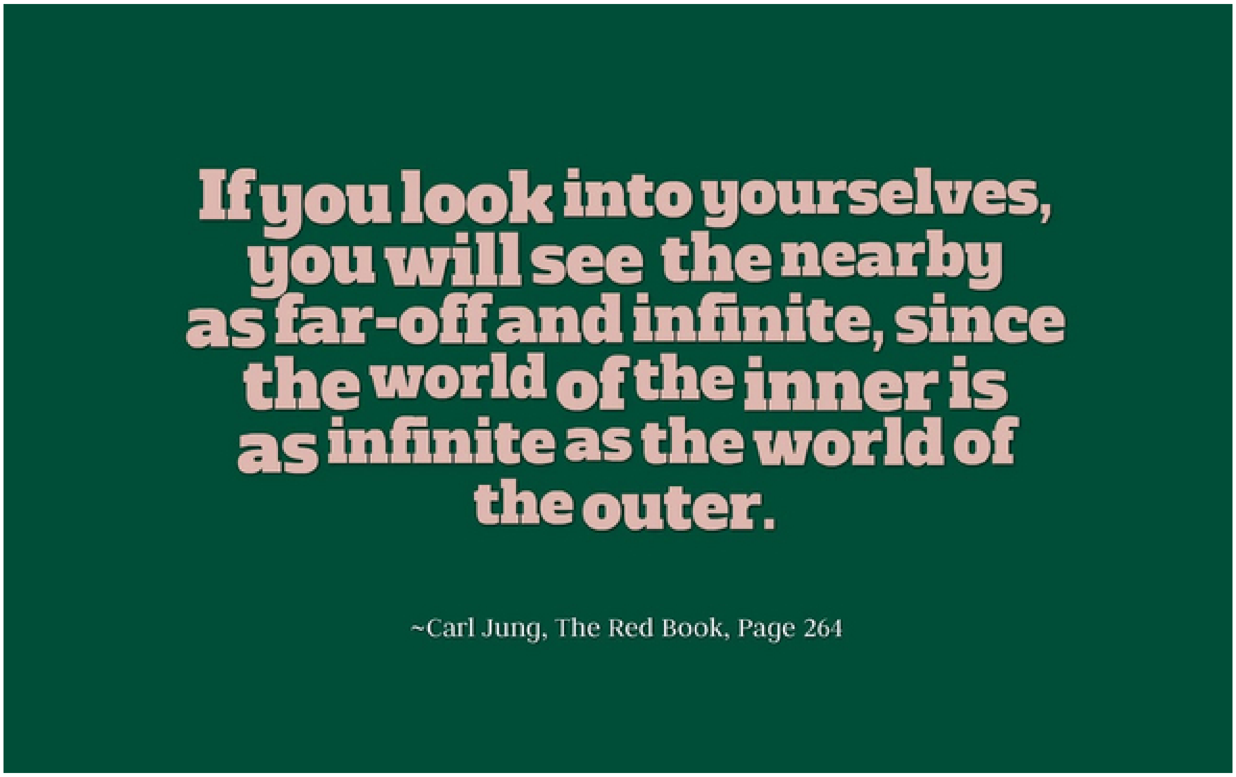
Who exhausts the mystery of love? ... There are those who love men, and those who love the souls of men, and those who love their own soul. Such a one is Philemon, the host of the Gods. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 315.



“The Mysterium showed me the things which lay before me and had to be fulfilled. What happened was my wandering with myself, through whose suffering I had to earn what served for the completion of the Mysterium I had seen.”

~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 255

The Mysterium showed me the things which lay before me and had to be fulfilled. … What happened was my wandering with myself, through whose suffering I had to earn what served for the completion of the Mysterium I had seen. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 255.



If you look into yourselves,
you will see the nearby
as far-off and infinite, since the world of the inner is as infinite as the world of the outer.

~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 264

If you look into yourselves, you will see … the nearby as far-off and infinite, since the world of the inner is as infinite as the world of the outer. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 264.

...Are you still a man,
Philemon, or is one not a man until one is a lover of one's own soul?

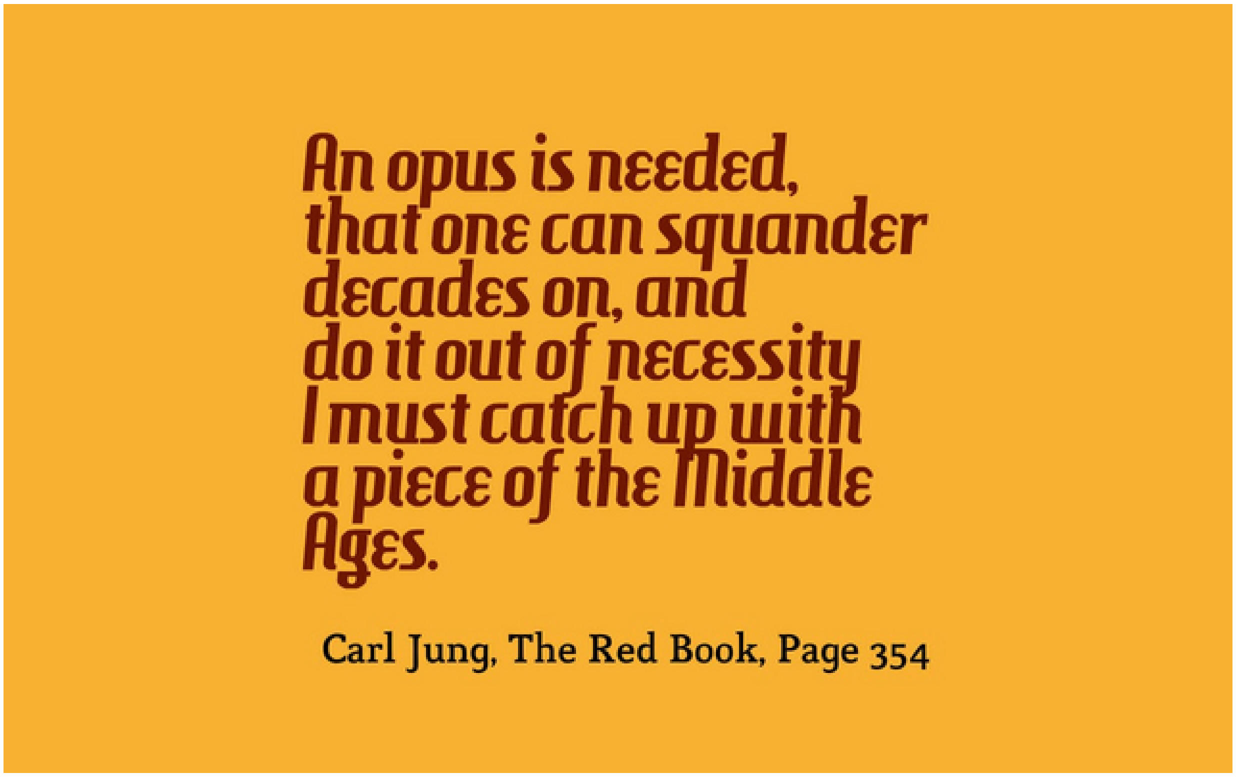
~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 315

…Are you still a man, Philemon, or is one not a man until one is a lover of one's own soul? Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 315.



An opus is needed,
that one can squander decades on, and do it out of necessity
I must catch up with a piece of the Middle Ages.

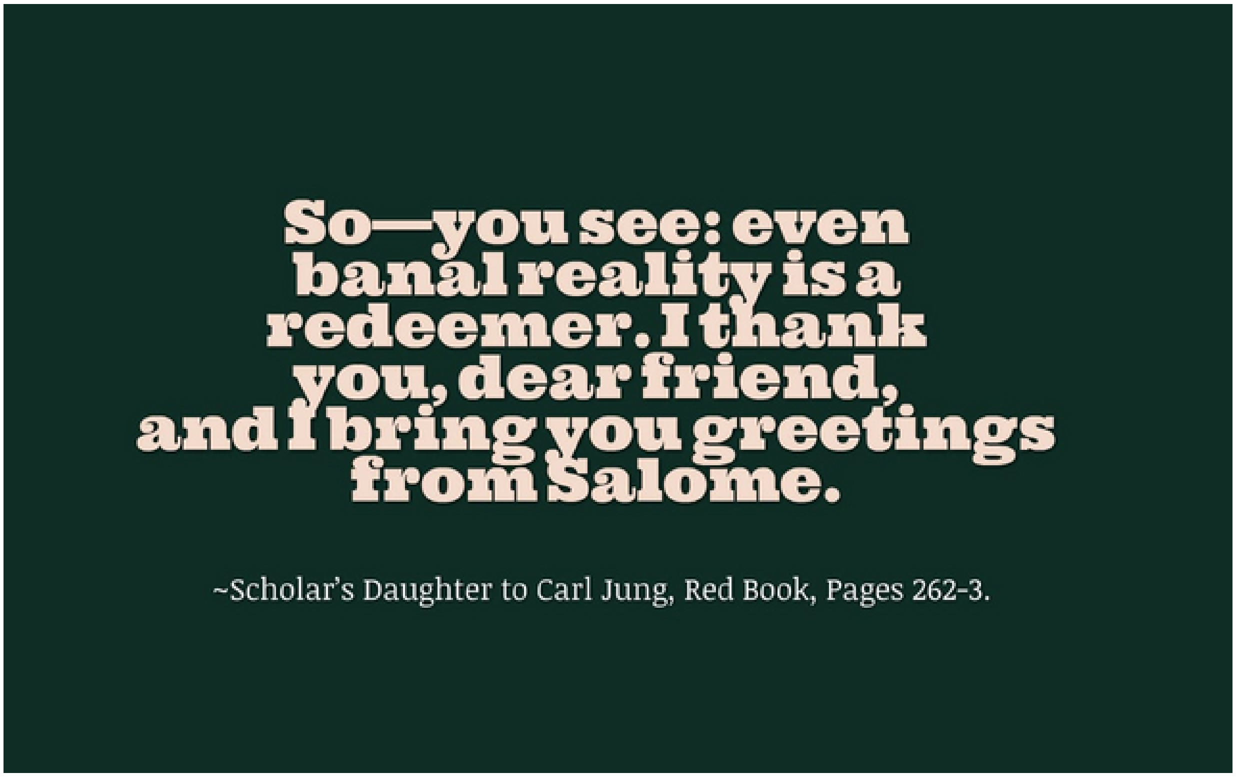
Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 354

An opus is needed, that one can squander decades on, and do it out of necessity I must catch up with a piece of the Middle Ages. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 354.



So—you see: even banal reality is a redeemer. I thank you, dear friend, and I bring you greetings from Salome.

~Scholar's Daughter to Carl Jung, Red Book, Pages 262-3.

So—you see: even banal reality is a redeemer. I thank you, dear friend, and I bring you greetings from Salome. Scholar's Daughter to Carl Jung, The Red Book, Pages 262-3.

Therefore whoever considers the event from outside always sees only that it already was, and that it is always the same. But whoever looks from inside, knows that everything is new.

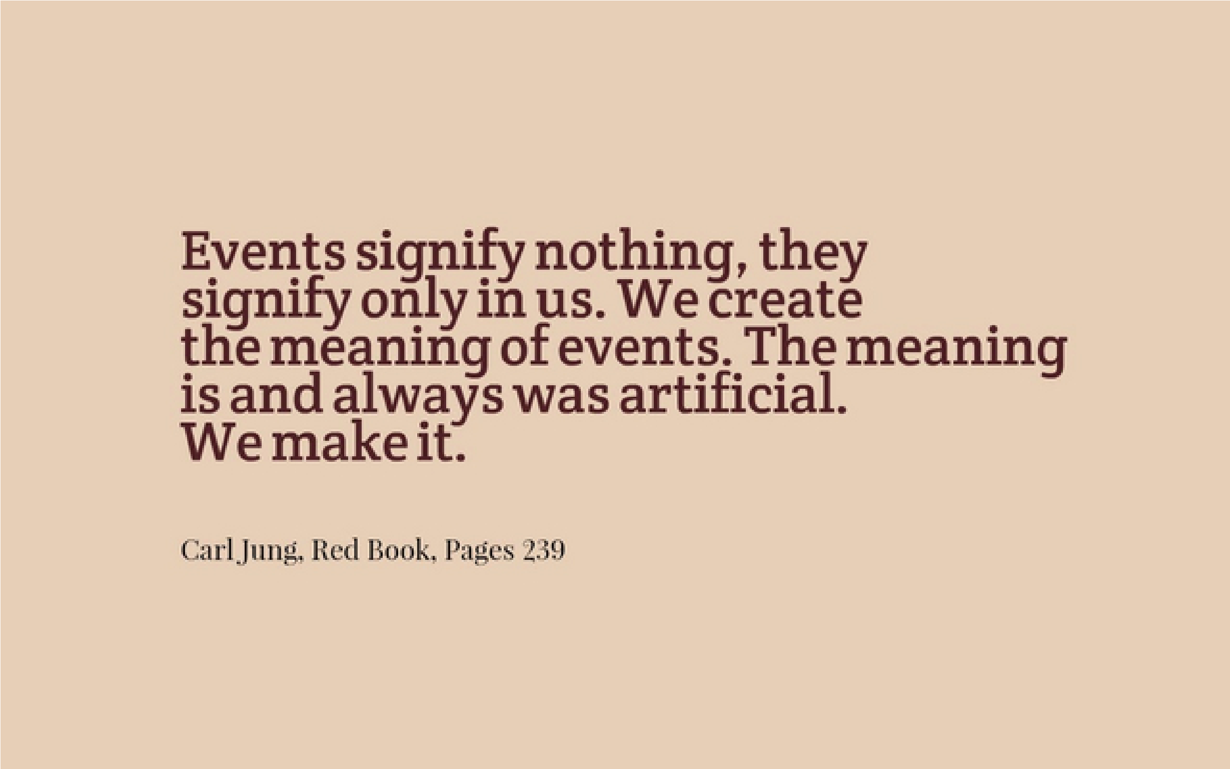
Carl Jung, Red Book, Pages 239

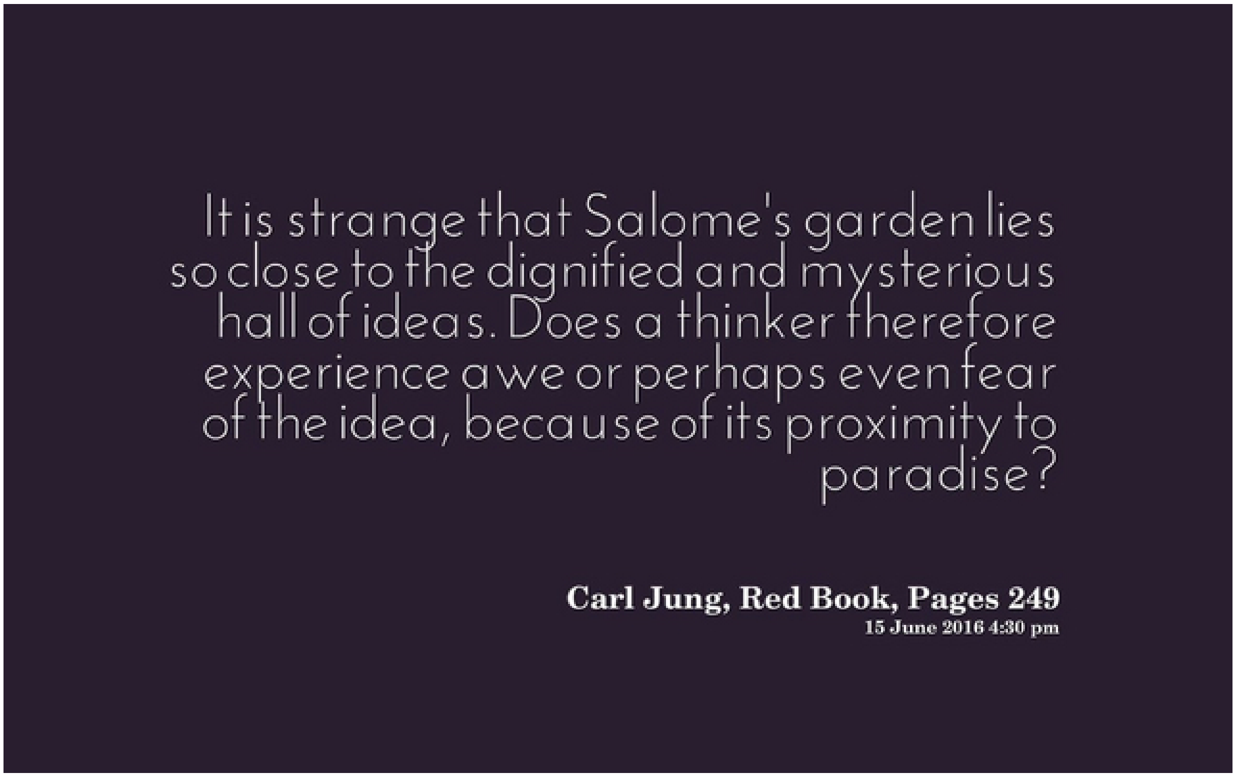
Therefore whoever considers the event from outside always sees only that it already was, and that it is always the same. But whoever looks from inside, knows that everything is new. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 239.



Events signify nothing, they signify only in us. We create the meaning of events. The meaning is and always was artificial. We make it.

Carl Jung, Red Book, Pages 239

Events signify nothing, they signify only in us. We create the meaning of events. The meaning is and always was artificial. We make it. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 239.



It is strange that Salome's garden lies so close to the dignified and mysterious hall of ideas. Does a thinker therefore experience awe or perhaps even fear of the idea, because of its proximity to paradise?

Carl Jung, Red Book, Pages 249

15 June 2016 4:30 pm

It is strange that Salome’s garden lies so close to the dignified and mysterious hall of ideas. Does a thinker therefore experience awe or perhaps even fear of the idea, because of its proximity to paradise? Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 249, Draft, Footnote 178.

The touchstone is being alone with oneself.
This is the way.

Carl Jung, Red Book, Pages 330

The touchstone is being alone with oneself. This is the way. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 330.

[25]

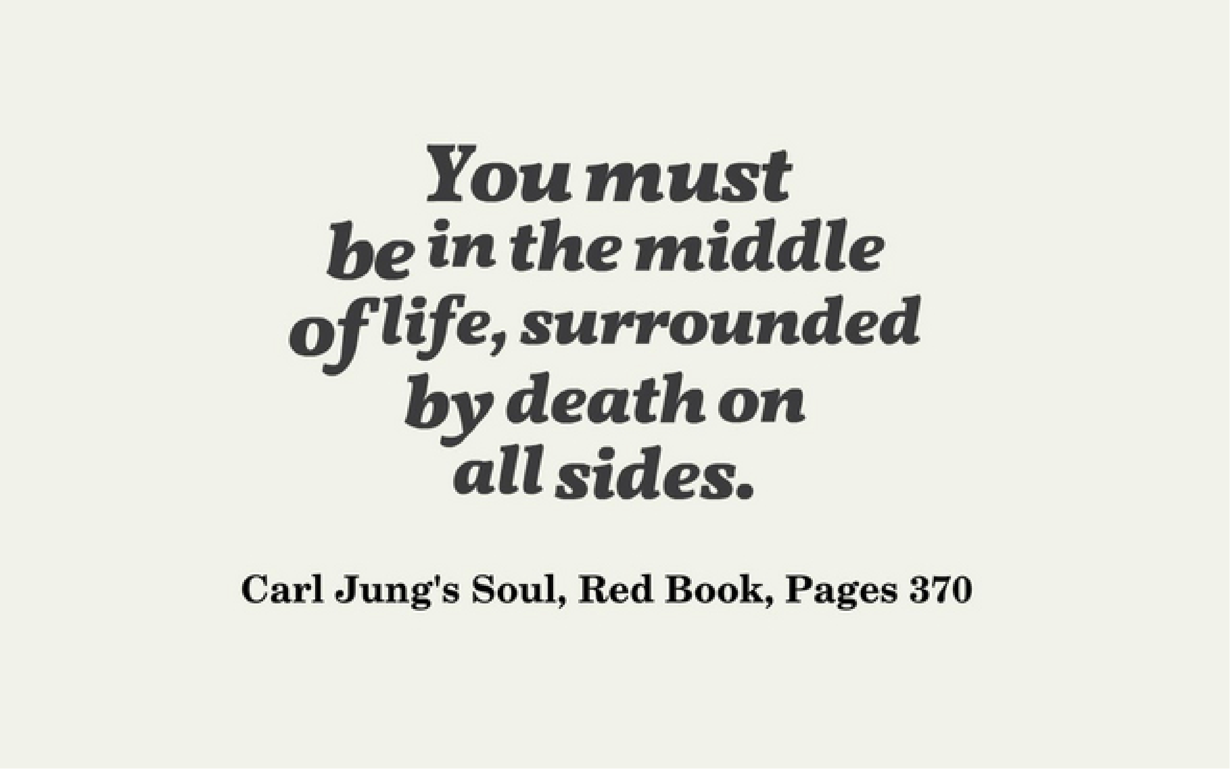
You should call me if you want to live with men, but the one God if you want to rise above the human world to the divine and eternal solitude of the star.

Carl Jung's Soul, Red Book, Pages 371

You should call me if you want to live with men, but the one God if you want to rise above the human world to the divine and eternal solitude of the star. Carl Jung’s Soul, The Red Book, Page 371.

[26]



You must be in the middle of life, surrounded by death on all sides.

Carl Jung's Soul, Red Book, Pages 370

You must be in the middle of life, surrounded by death on all sides. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 370.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

Great Sites to visit:

1. Jenna Lilla's Path of the Soul http://jennalilla.org/
2. Steve Jung-Hearted Parker's Jung Currents http://jungcurrents.com/
3. Frith Luton's Jungian Dream Analysis and Psychotherapy: http://frithluton.com/articles/
4. Lance S. Owens The Gnosis Archives http://gnosis.org/welcome.html

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/bb76e-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/6a4e7-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/74e4c-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/f0a97-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/8ac2e-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/68ecb-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/631df-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/5e19a-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/65b92-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/58a94-jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/c2f0d-kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/35b50-lll.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/fc952-mmm.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/f3d0d-nnn.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/625ce-ooo.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/b3ad2-ppp.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/47b61-qqq.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/c02c5-rrr.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/c3f98-sss.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/131a8-ttt.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/24722-uuu.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/cb242-vvv.jpg`
23. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/36511-www.jpg`
24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/d5dd1-xxx.jpg`
25. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/7bb17-yyy.jpg`
26. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/3533f-zzz.jpg`

Poimandres, the Shepherd of Men (2019-11-17 03:59)

[1]

Poimandres, the Shepherd of Men

[Note: Poimandres (Greek: also known as Poimandres, Poimander or Pimander) is a chapter in the Corpus Hermeticum.

Originally written in Greek, the title was formerly understood to mean "Man-Shepherd", but recent studies on its etymology have shown that it is actually derived from the Egyptian phrase meaning "Knowledge of Re" or "Understanding of Re". It is also a sort of deity or attribute of God as nous.]

1. It chanced once on a time my mind was meditating on the things that are, my thought was raised to a great height, the senses of my body being held back − just as men who are weighed down with sleep after a fill of food, or from fatigue of body.

Methought a Being more than vast, in size beyond all bounds, called out my name and saith: What wouldst thou hear and see, and what hast thou in mind to learn and know?

2. And I do say: Who art thou?

He saith: I am Man−Shepherd (Poimandres), Mind of all−masterhood; I know what thou desirest and I'm with thee everywhere.

3. [And] I reply: I long to learn the things that are, and comprehend their nature, and know God. This is, I said, what I desire to hear.

He answered back to me: Hold in thy mind all thou wouldst know, and I will teach thee.

4. With these words His aspect changed, and straightway, in the twinkling of an eye, all things were opened to me, and I see a Vision limitless, all things turned into Light − sweet, joyous [Light]. And I became transported as I gazed.

But in a little while Darkness came settling down on part [of it], awesome and gloomy, coiling in sinuous folds, so that methought it like unto a snake.

And then the Darkness changed into some sort of a Moist Nature, tossed about beyond all power of words, belching out smoke as from a fire, and groaning forth a wailing sound that beggars all description.

[And] after that an outcry inarticulate came forth from it, as though it were a Voice of Fire.

5. [Thereon] out of the Light [...] a Holy Word (Logos) descended on that Nature. And upwards to the height from the Moist Nature leaped forth pure Fire; light was it, swift and active too.

The Air, too, being light, followed after the Fire; from out of the Earth−and−Water rising up to Fire so that it seemed to hang therefrom.

But Earth−and−Water stayed so mingled with each other, that Earth from Water no one could discern. Yet were they moved to hear by reason of the Spirit−Word (Logos) pervading them.

6. Then saith to me Man−Shepherd: Didst understand this Vision what it means?
Nay; that shall I know, said I.

That Light, He said, am I, thy God, Mind, prior to Moist Nature which appeared from Darkness; the Light−Word (Logos) [that appeared] from Mind is Son of God.

What then? − say I.

Know that what sees in thee and hears is the Lord's Word (Logos); but Mind is Father−God. Not separate are they the one from other; just in their union [rather] is it Life consists.

7. And speaking thus He gazed for long into my eyes, so that I trembled at the look of him.

But when He raised His head, I see in Mind the Light, [but] now in Powers no man could number, and Cosmos grown beyond all bounds, and that the Fire was compassed round about by a most mighty Power, and [now] subdued had come unto a stand.

And when I saw these things I understood by reason of Man−Shepherd's Word (Logos).

8. But as I was in great astonishment, He saith to me again: Thou didst behold in Mind the Archetypal Form whose being is before beginning without end. Thus spake to me Man−Shepherd.

And I say: Whence then have Nature's elements their being?

To this He answer gives: From Will of God. [Nature] received the Word (Logos), and gazing upon the Cosmos Beautiful did copy it, making herself into a cosmos, by means of her own elements and by the births of souls.

9. And God−the−Mind, being male and female both, as Light and Life subsisting, brought forth another Mind to give things form, who, God as he was of Fire and Spirit, formed Seven Rulers who enclose the cosmos that the sense perceives. Men call their ruling Fate.

10. Straightway from out the downward elements God's Reason (Logos) leaped up to Nature's pure formation, and was at−oned with the Formative Mind; for it was co−essential with it.

And Nature's downward elements were thus left reason−less, so as to be pure matter.

11. Then the Formative Mind ([at−oned] with Reason), he who surrounds the spheres and spins them with his whorl, set turning his formations, and let them turn from a beginning boundless unto an endless end.

For that the circulation of these [spheres] begins where it doth end, as Mind doth will.

And from the downward elements Nature brought forth lives reason−less; for He did not extend the Reason (Logos) [to them].

The Air brought forth things winged; the Water things that swim, and Earth−and−Water one from another parted, as Mind willed. And from her bosom Earth produced what lives she had, four−footed things and reptiles, beasts wild and tame.

12. But All−Father Mind, being Life and Light, did bring forth Man co−equal to Himself, with whom He fell in love, as being His own child; for he was beautiful beyond compare, the Image of his Sire. In very truth,

God fell in love with his own Form; and on him did bestow all of His own formations.

13. And when he gazed upon what the Enformer had created in the Father, [Man] too wished to enform; and [so] assent was given him by the Father.

Changing his state to the formative sphere, in that he was to have his whole authority, he gazed upon his Brother's creatures. They fell in love with him, and gave him each a share of his own ordering.

And after that he had well learned their essence and had become a sharer in their nature, he had a mind to break right through the Boundary of their spheres, and to subdue the might of that which pressed upon the Fire.

14. So he who hath the whole authority o'er [all] the mortals in the cosmos and o'er its lives irrational, bent his face downwards through the Harmony, breaking right through its strength, and showed to downward Nature God’s fair form.

And when she saw that Form of beauty which can never satiate, and him who [now] possessed within himself each single energy of [all seven] Rulers as well as God’s own Form, she smiled with love; for ’twas as though she’d seen the image of Man’s fairest form upon her Water, his shadow on her Earth.

He in turn beholding the form like to himself, existing in her, in her Water, loved it and willed to live in it; and with the will came act, and [so] he vivified the form devoid of reason.

And Nature took the object of her love and wound herself completely around him, and they were intermingled, for they were lovers.

15. And this is why beyond all creatures on the earth man is twofold; mortal because of body, but because of the essential man immortal.

Though deathless and possessed of sway o’er all, yet doth he suffer as a mortal doth, subject to Fate.

Thus though above the Harmony, within the Harmony he hath become a slave.

Though male–female, as from a Father male–female, and though he’s sleepless from a sleepless [Sire], yet is he overcome [by sleep].

16. Thereon [I say: Teach on], O Mind of me, for I myself as well am amorous of the Word (Logos).

The Shepherd said: This is the mystery kept hid until this day.

Nature embraced by Man brought forth a wonder, oh so wonderful.

For as he had the nature of the Concord of the Seven, who, as I said to thee, [were made] of Fire and Spirit – Nature delayed not, but immediately brought forth seven "men", in correspondence with the natures of the Seven, male–female and moving in the air.

Thereon [I said]: O Shepherd, ..., for now I’m filled with great desire and long to hear; do not run off.

The Shepherd said: Keep silence, for not as yet have I unrolled for thee the first discourse (logoi).

Lo! I am still, I said.

17. In such wise than, as I have said, the generation of these seven came to pass.

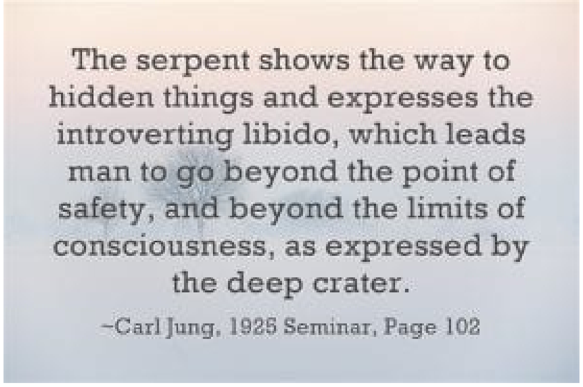
Earth was as woman, her Water filled with longing; ripeness she took from Fire, spirit from Aether. Nature thus brought forth frames to suit the form of Man.

And Man from Light and Life changed into soul and mind – from Life to soul, from Light to mind.

And thus continued all the sense–world’s parts until the period of their end and new beginnings. The Corpus Hermeticum, Poimandres, The Shepard of Men, Paragraphs 1-17.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/0f715-corpush.jpg`

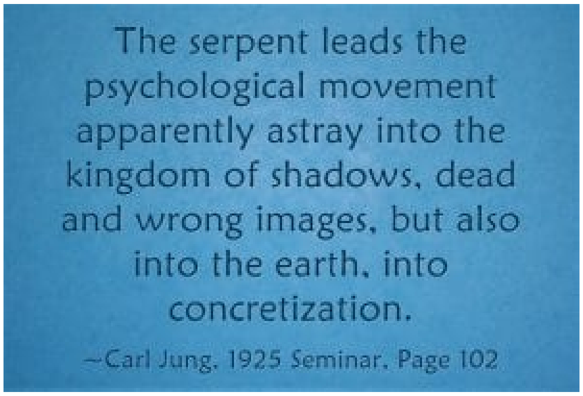
Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-11-17 04:01)



The serpent shows the way to hidden things and expresses the introverting libido, which leads man to go beyond the point of safety, and beyond the limits of consciousness, as expressed by the deep crater.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102

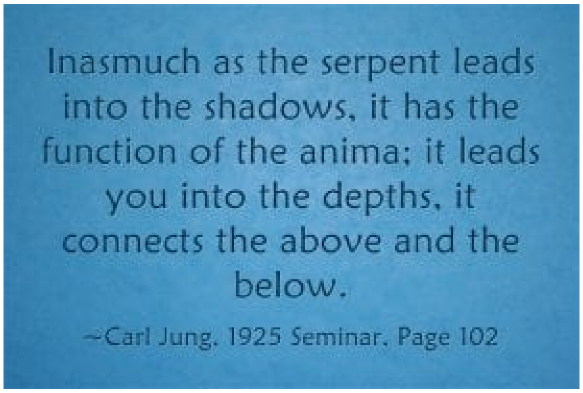
The serpent shows the way to hidden things and expresses the introverting libido, which leads man to go beyond the point of safety, and beyond the limits of consciousness, as expressed by the deep crater. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102



The serpent leads the psychological movement apparently astray into the kingdom of shadows, dead and wrong images, but also into the earth, into concretization.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102

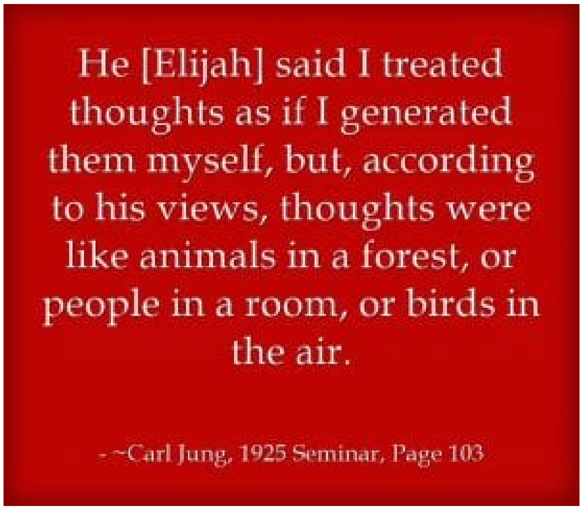
The serpent leads the psychological movement apparently astray into the kingdom of shadows, dead and wrong images, but also into the earth, into concretization. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102



Inasmuch as the serpent leads into the shadows, it has the function of the anima; it leads you into the depths, it connects the above and the below.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102

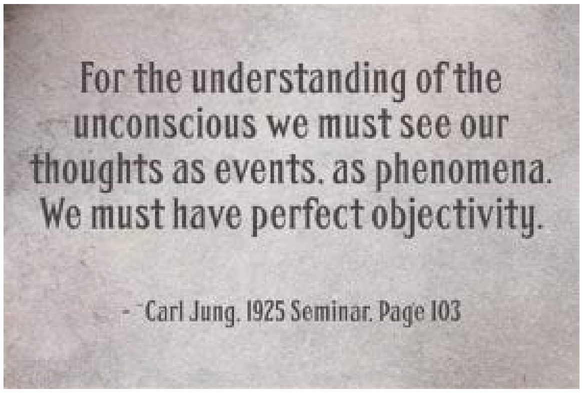
Inasmuch as the serpent leads into the shadows, it has the function of the anima; it leads you into the depths, it connects the above and the below. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102



He [Elijah] said I treated thoughts as if I generated them myself, but, according to his views, thoughts were like animals in a forest, or people in a room, or birds in the air.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 103

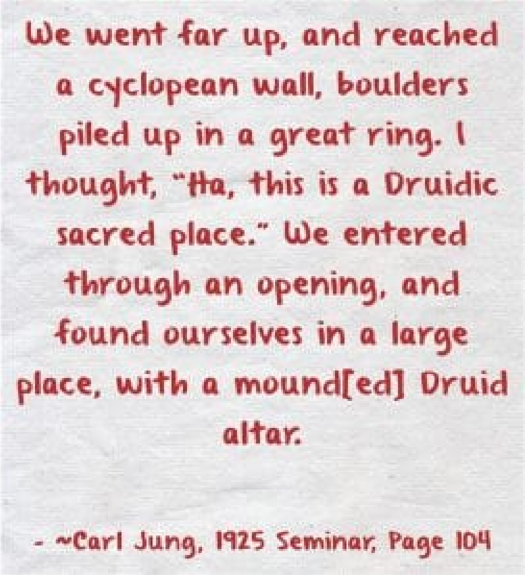
He [Elijah] said I treated thoughts as if I generated them myself, but, according to his views, thoughts were like animals in a forest, or people in a room, or birds in the air. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 103



For the understanding of the unconscious we must see our thoughts as events, as phenomena. We must have perfect objectivity.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 103

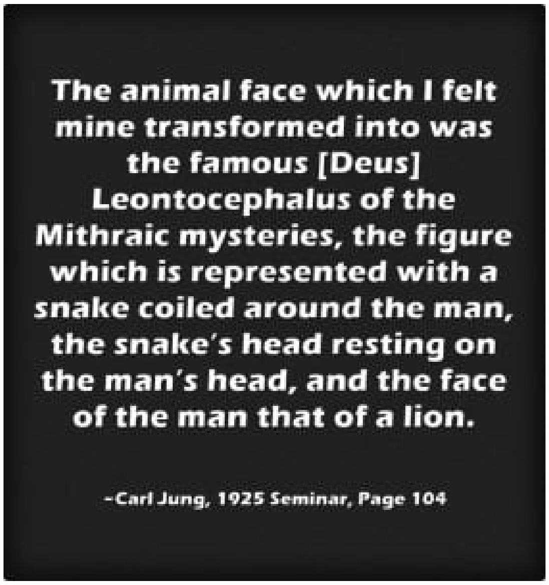
For the understanding of the unconscious we must see our thoughts as events, as phenomena. We must have perfect objectivity. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 103



We went far up, and reached a cyclopean wall, boulders piled up in a great ring. I thought, "Ha, this is a Druidic sacred place." We entered through an opening, and found ourselves in a large place, with a mound[ed] Druid altar.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 104

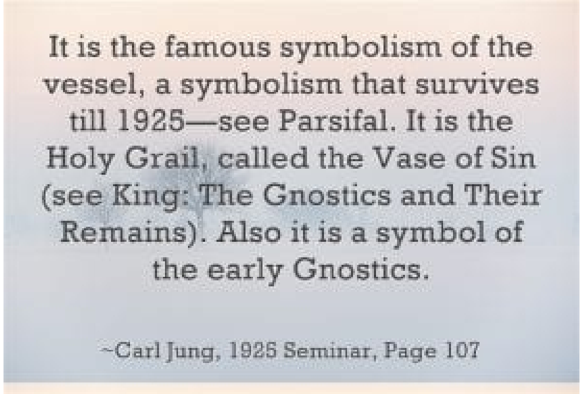
We went far up, and reached a cyclopean wall, boulders piled up in a great ring. I thought, “Ha, this is a Druidic sacred place.” We entered through an opening, and found ourselves in a large place, with a mound[ed] Druid altar. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 104



The animal face which I felt mine transformed into was the famous [Deus] Leontocephalus of the Mithraic mysteries, the figure which is represented with a snake coiled around the man, the snake's head resting on the man's head, and the face of the man that of a lion.

-Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 104

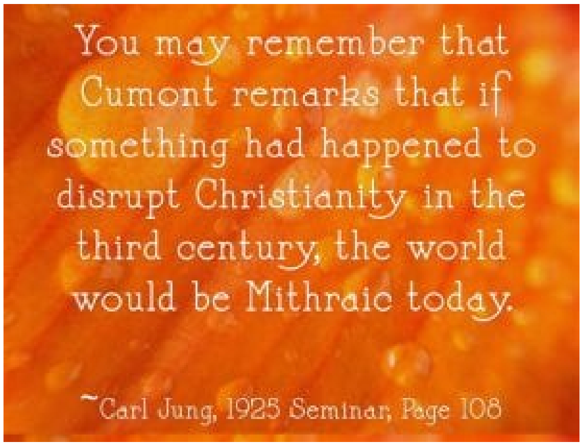
We went far up, and reached a cyclopean wall, boulders piled up in a great ring. I thought, “Ha, this is a Druidic sacred place.” We entered through an opening, and found ourselves in a large place, with a mound[ed] Druid altar. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 104



It is the famous symbolism of the vessel, a symbolism that survives till 1925—see Parsifal. It is the Holy Grail, called the Vase of Sin (see King: The Gnostics and Their Remains). Also it is a symbol of the early Gnostics.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 107

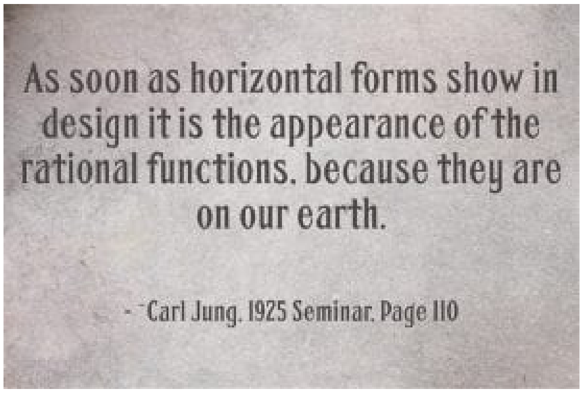
It is the famous symbolism of the vessel, a symbolism that survives till 1925—see Parsifal. It is the Holy Grail, called the Vase of Sin (see King: The Gnostics and Their Remains). Also it is a symbol of the early Gnostics. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 107



You may remember that Cumont remarks that if something had happened to disrupt Christianity in the third century, the world would be Mithraic today.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 108

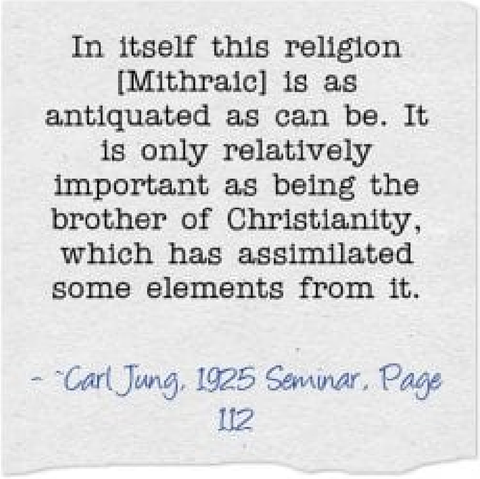
You may remember that Cumont remarks that if something had happened to disrupt Christianity in the third century, the world would be Mithraic today. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 108



As soon as horizontal forms show in design it is the appearance of the rational functions, because they are on our earth.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 110

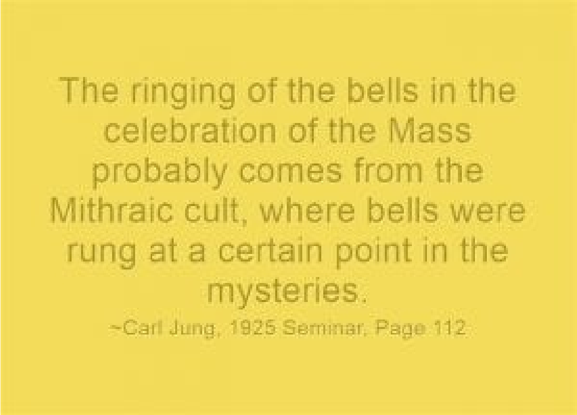
As soon as horizontal forms show in design it is the appearance of the rational functions, because they are on our earth. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 110



In itself this religion [Mithraic] is as antiquated as can be. It is only relatively important as being the brother of Christianity, which has assimilated some elements from it.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 112

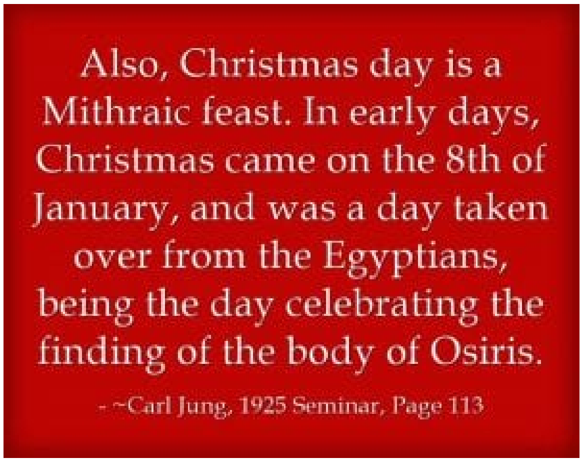
In itself this religion [Mithraic] is as antiquated as can be. It is only relatively important as being the brother of Christianity, which has assimilated some elements from it. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 112



The ringing of the bells in the celebration of the Mass probably comes from the Mithraic cult, where bells were rung at a certain point in the mysteries.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 112

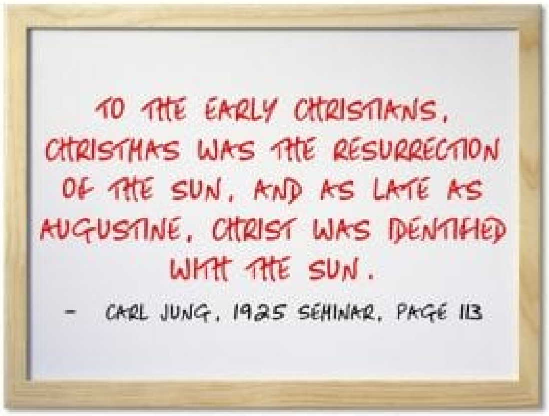
The ringing of the bells in the celebration of the Mass probably comes from the Mithraic cult, where bells were rung at a certain point in the mysteries. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 112



Also, Christmas day is a Mithraic feast. In early days, Christmas came on the 8th of January, and was a day taken over from the Egyptians, being the day celebrating the finding of the body of Osiris.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 113

Also, Christmas day is a Mithraic feast. In early days, Christmas came on the 8th of January, and was a day taken over from the Egyptians, being the day celebrating the finding of the body of Osiris. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 113



TO THE EARLY CHRISTIANS,
CHRISTMAS WAS THE RESURRECTION
OF THE SUN, AND AS LATE AS AUGUSTINE, CHRIST WAS IDENTIFIED WITH THE SUN.

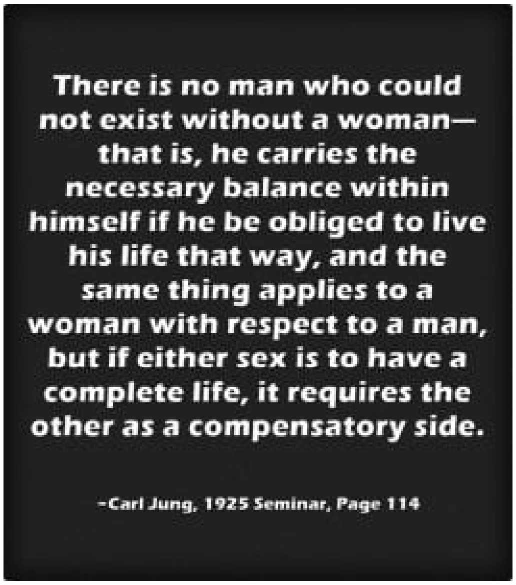
- CARL JUNG, 1925 SEMINAR, PAGE 113

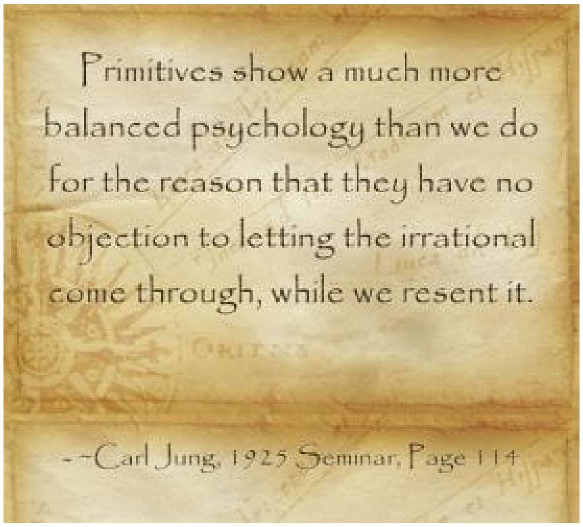
To the early Christians, Christmas was the resurrection of the sun, and as late as Augustine, Christ was identified with the sun. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 113



There is no man who could not exist without a woman—that is, he carries the necessary balance within himself if he be obliged to live his life that way, and the same thing applies to a woman with respect to a man, but if either sex is to have a complete life, it requires the other as a compensatory side.

-Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 114

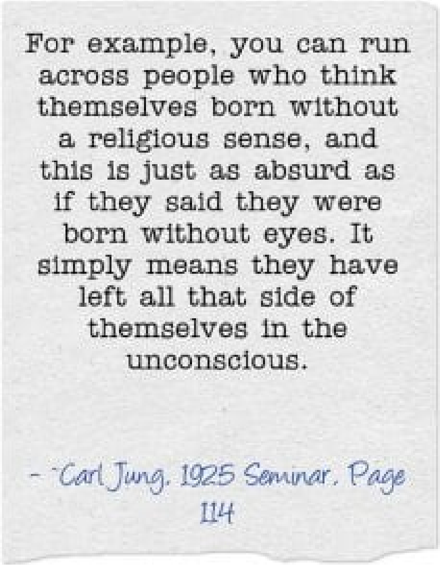
There is no man who could not exist without a woman—that is, he carries the necessary balance within himself if he be obliged to live his life that way, and the same thing applies to a woman with respect to a man, but if either sex is to have a complete life, it requires the other as a compensatory side. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 114



Primitives show a much more balanced psychology than we do for the reason that they have no objection to letting the irrational come through, while we resent it.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 114

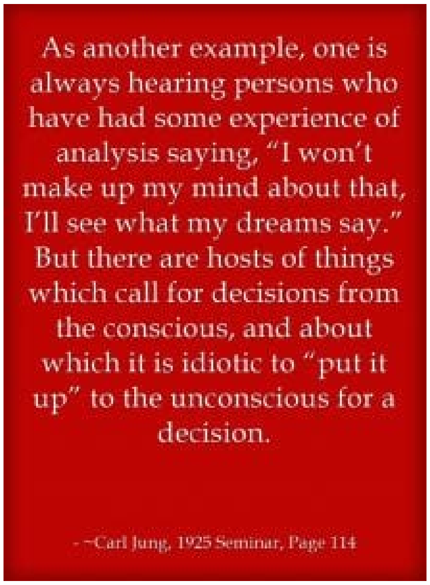
Primitives show a much more balanced psychology than we do for the reason that they have no objection to letting the irrational come through, while we resent it. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 114



For example, you can run across people who think themselves born without a religious sense, and this is just as absurd as if they said they were born without eyes. It simply means they have left all that side of themselves in the unconscious.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 114

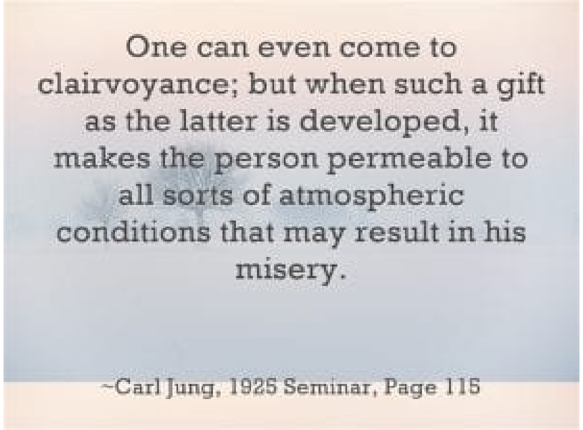
For example, you can run across people who think themselves born without a religious sense, and this is just as absurd as if they said they were born without eyes. It simply means they have left all that side of themselves in the unconscious. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 114



As another example, one is always hearing persons who have had some experience of analysis saying, “I won’t make up my mind about that, I’ll see what my dreams say.” But there are hosts of things which call for decisions from the conscious, and about which it is idiotic to “put it up” to the unconscious for a decision.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 114

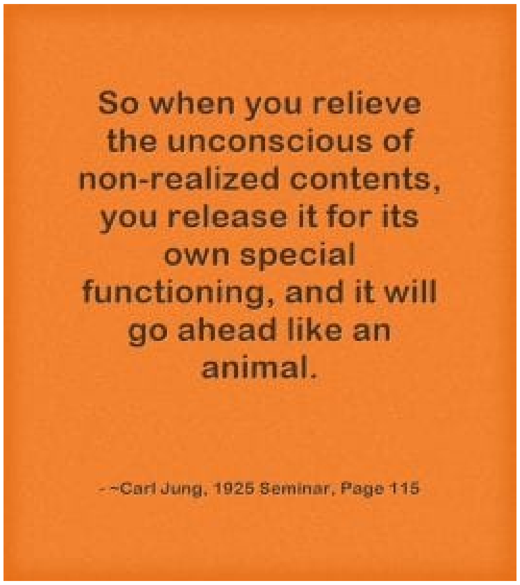
As another example, one is always hearing persons who have had some experience of analysis saying, “I won’t make up my mind about that, I’ll see what my dreams say.” But there are hosts of things which call for decisions from the conscious, and about which it is idiotic to “put it up” to the unconscious for a decision. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 114



One can even come to clairvoyance; but when such a gift as the latter is developed, it makes the person permeable to all sorts of atmospheric conditions that may result in his misery.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 115

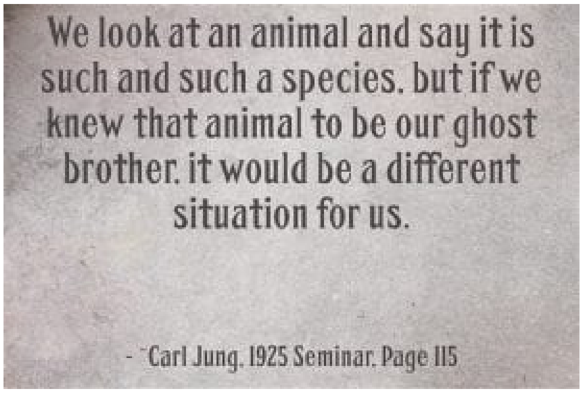
One can even come to clairvoyance; but when such a gift as the latter is developed, it makes the person permeable to all sorts of atmospheric conditions that may result in his misery. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 115



So when you relieve the unconscious of non-realized contents, you release it for its own special functioning, and it will go ahead like an animal.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 115

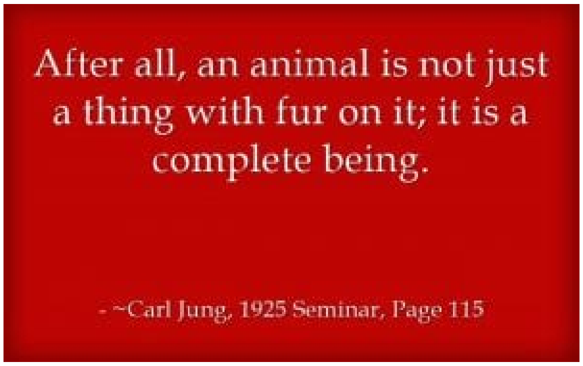
So when you relieve the unconscious of non-realized contents, you release it for its own special functioning, and it will go ahead like an animal. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 115



We look at an animal and say it is such and such a species. but if we knew that animal to be our ghost brother. it would be a different situation for us.

- ~Carl Jung. 1925 Seminar. Page 115

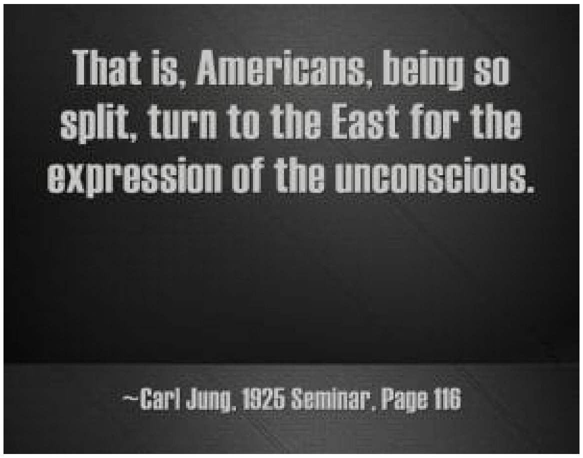
We look at an animal and say it is such and such a species, but if we knew that animal to be our ghost brother, it would be a different situation for us. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 115



After all, an animal is not just a thing with fur on it; it is a complete being.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 115

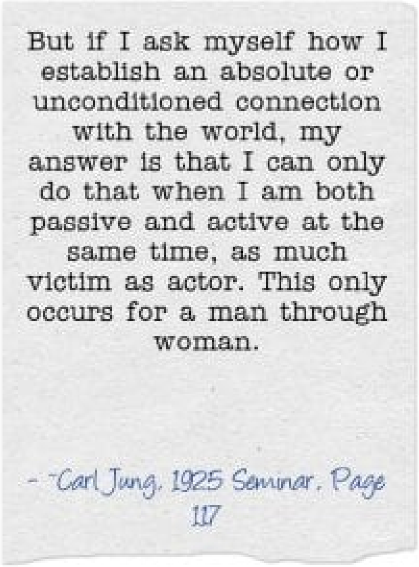
After all, an animal is not just a thing with fur on it; it is a complete being.   Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 115



That is, Americans, being so split, turn to the East for the expression of the unconscious.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 116

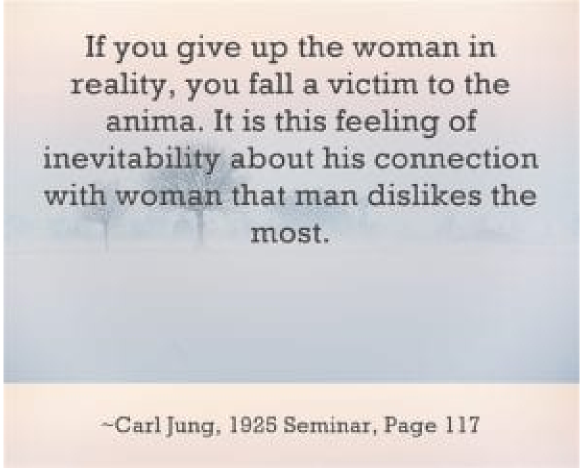
That is, Americans, being so split, turn to the East for the expression of the unconscious. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 116



But if I ask myself how I establish an absolute or unconditioned connection with the world, my answer is that I can only do that when I am both passive and active at the same time, as much victim as actor. This only occurs for a man through woman.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 117

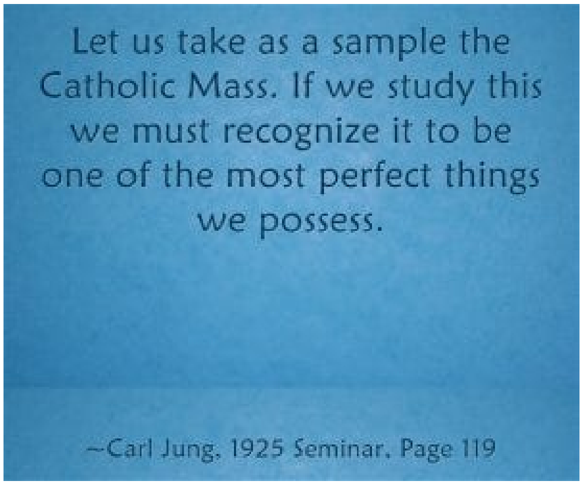
But if I ask myself how I establish an absolute or unconditioned connection with the world, my answer is that I can only do that when I am both passive and active at the same time, as much victim as actor. This only occurs for a man through woman. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 117



If you give up the woman in reality, you fall a victim to the anima. It is this feeling of inevitability about his connection with woman that man dislikes the most.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 117

If you give up the woman in reality, you fall a victim to the anima. It is this feeling of inevitability about his connection with woman that man dislikes the most. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 117



Let us take as a sample the Catholic Mass. If we study this we must recognize it to be one of the most perfect things we possess.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 119

Let us take as a sample the Catholic Mass. If we study this we must recognize it to be one of the most perfect things we possess. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 119

Carl Jung on ESP, Intuition and Relative Immortality. (2019-11-17 04:06)

[Carl Jung on ESP, Intuition and Relative Immortality.]

To Laurence J. Bendit

Dear Dr. Bendit, 20 April 1946

I do remember X. and I'm sorry to hear that he died.

He was my patient once. I'm glad to know that his end was correct.

Concerning Ascona I must say that the meetings continued throughout the whole war.

You should apply as soon as possible to Mrs. Frobe (Casa Gabriella, Ascona-Moscia, Tessin) for tickets.

The meeting will take place at the end of August.

It would be a great pleasure to meet you there and to discuss matters with you.

Your views about extra-sensory perception are not fundamentally different from mine. It's only the definition which I was criticizing.

People are apt to consider intuition as something quite particular, something much "higher" than sensory perception.

As you know I call intuition any kind of perception which takes place in a way that cannot be explained by the function of the senses.

Intuition of divine thoughts or of a small tumour in the bone is in no way different as the nature of an object has nothing to do with the function of intuition.

It has to do with it just as little as the faculty of seeing with the nature of the object which you see.

It is always the function of seeing or hearing, the nature of which does not depend upon the object.

I do not make the difference between intuition as a merely unconscious perception and a hypothetical intuition which would produce say a pneumatic truth.

Whether intuition takes place in a normal state of mind or in an ecstasy or in a delirium, it is always the same function which in certain cases however reaches an acuteness or an autonomy which it does not in other cases.

But there are people with an unusual faculty of thinking or reasoning or with an extraordinary sense-perception; for instance there are chamoix-hunters in our country who see the stars in bright sky during daytime, etc.

This is the reason why I classify any kind of extra-sensory perception under the term of intuition no matter what the object is.

Inasmuch as any function of consciousness can be directed, controlled, differentiated, intuition also can be practised and differentiated.

That you can perceive things which your senses would not allow you to catch hold of or your thinking would not allow you to infer forms an additional problem.

It forces us to speculate about the nature of time and space.

The fact that extra-sensory perception is real proves that time and space are psychically relative.

That means that they can be more or less annihilated.

If that is the case, an extreme also is possible where time and space don't exist at all.

If a thing is capable of non-existence then we must assume that it is also capable of absolute existence.

We know that time and space are indispensable and inalterable conditions of our three-dimensional world, what you call the world of the soma.

The non-existent space and time cannot be an object of our observation.

Therefore there is no possibility of proving that they do not exist.

The most we can know is that under certain psychic conditions time and space reveal a certain elastic quality, i.e., a psychic relativity, where they begin to behave as if they were dependent upon the psyche.

From this fact I conclude that the human psyche (and presumably the animal psyche too) has a non-spatial and a non-temporal quality, i .e., a relative power to make time and space non-existent.

This would speak in favour of a relative immortality, as only in time can something come to an absolute end, but in relative time it can only come to a relative end.

Concerning space we would come to the conclusion that the psyche is only to be located relatively. In other words, the whereabouts or the extension of the psyche in space is relatively uncertain.

Concerning spirit (pneuma) I want to say that spirit and matter are a pair of opposite concepts which designate only the bipolar aspect of observation in time and space.

Of their substance we know nothing. Spirit is just as ideal as matter.

They are mere postulates of reason.

Therefore I speak of psychic contents that are labelled "pneumatic" and others "material."

I’m much obliged to you that you mention a possible translator of my writings.

The great difficulty of translating my works consists in the fact that one rarely finds a translator who is educated enough to understand my technical language or my thought.

I have a thoroughly humanistic training and my language is imbued with all sorts of allusions which are completely dark to somebody lacking an academic training. (. . .)

Yours sincerely,

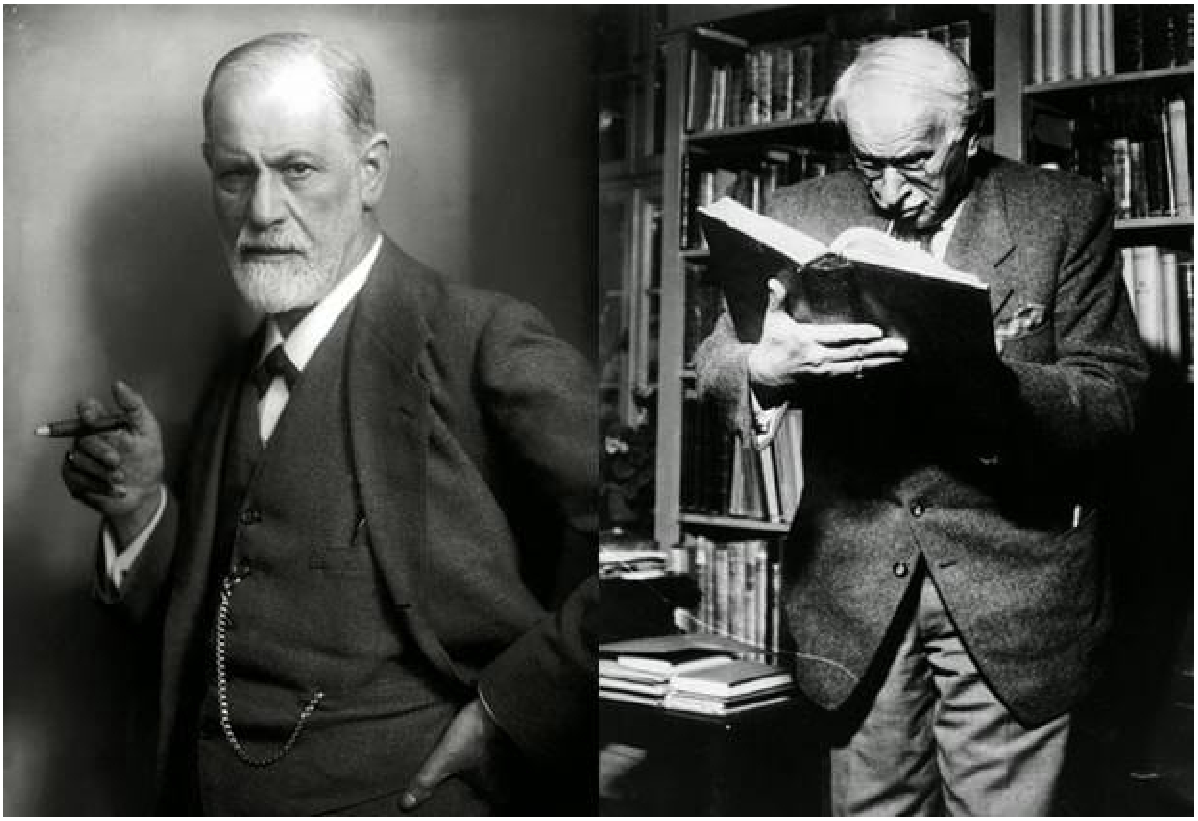
C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Pages 420-422.

C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950 by C. G. Jung http://www.amazon.com/dp/0691098956/ref=cm _sw _r _pi _dp _4pEAub1MPRB6J

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b3d95-aego.jpg`

Carl Jung on “Suffering in sympathy with the psychic difficulties of the sick... (2019-11-17 04:11)

[1]



To Helene Kiener

Dear Fraulein Kiener, 6 December 1935

Suffering in sympathy with the psychic difficulties of the sick is a peculiarity which none escapes who has to do with such people.

It is a well-known childhood ailment.

In the beginning it is very exhausting and burdensome.

When I started analyzing I could usually endure only two cases a day because it was too much of a strain for me.

This apparent weakness disappears with time and practice.

Only, at the beginning one must not overexert oneself, otherwise one becomes discouraged and disappointed.

It is advisable to use all the available time to recover by doing something quite different.

In this way you accustom yourself to change round quickly and to concentrate only on the hours you spend with the sick person.

May you have patience and sufficient instinct to learn to overcome as soon as possible the infection that emanates from every sick psyche.

Best thanks for your a posteriori birthday wishes.

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 204.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/19c6a-analysis.jpeg`

Carl Jung on Visions of the Anima (2019-11-17 04:19)

[1]

[Carl Jung on Visions of the Anima]

To Mr. O.

My dear O., 7 May 1947

Your material is, as I feared, much too rich ! It needs a tremendous amount of mental work to reduce it.

Your first vision where your Beatrice appears contains a point where I can show you how you can come in.

Beatrice, as an anima figure, is most certainly a personification; that means, a personal being created in this shape by the unconscious.

You can safely assume that this is the shape your anima has chosen in order to demonstrate to you how she looks.

Such a huge Beatrice is surely an unexpected sight. Instead of reacting to this rather amazing sight, you are satisfied with continuing your vision.

But the natural thing would be that you make use of the opportunity and start some dialogue with your anima.

Anybody who feels natural about such things would follow his surprise and put a question or two to her: why she appears as Beatrice? why she is so big? why you are so small? why she nurses your wife and not yourself? Etc.

You also might ask her-since she is the "messenger of the grail"-what that funny thing is with that orange? what the magic ring means? What is the matter with all those animals?

Treat her as a person, if you like as a patient or a goddess, but above all treat her as something that does exist.

Moreover, in this vision you get right under the influence of your anima, and that's the reason why she begins to feed your wife, because your wife becomes underfed when you fall for your anima.

Therefore you must talk to this person in order to see what she is about and to learn what her thoughts and character are.

If you yourself step into your fantasy, then that overabundance of material will soon come to more reasonable proportions.

But since you are giving free rein to your intuitions you are just swamped by it.

Keep your head and your own personality over against the overwhelming multitude of images and aspects.

You can do that, as I tell you, by stepping into the picture with your ordinary human reactions and emotions.

It is a very good method to treat the anima as if she were a patient whose secret you ought to get at.

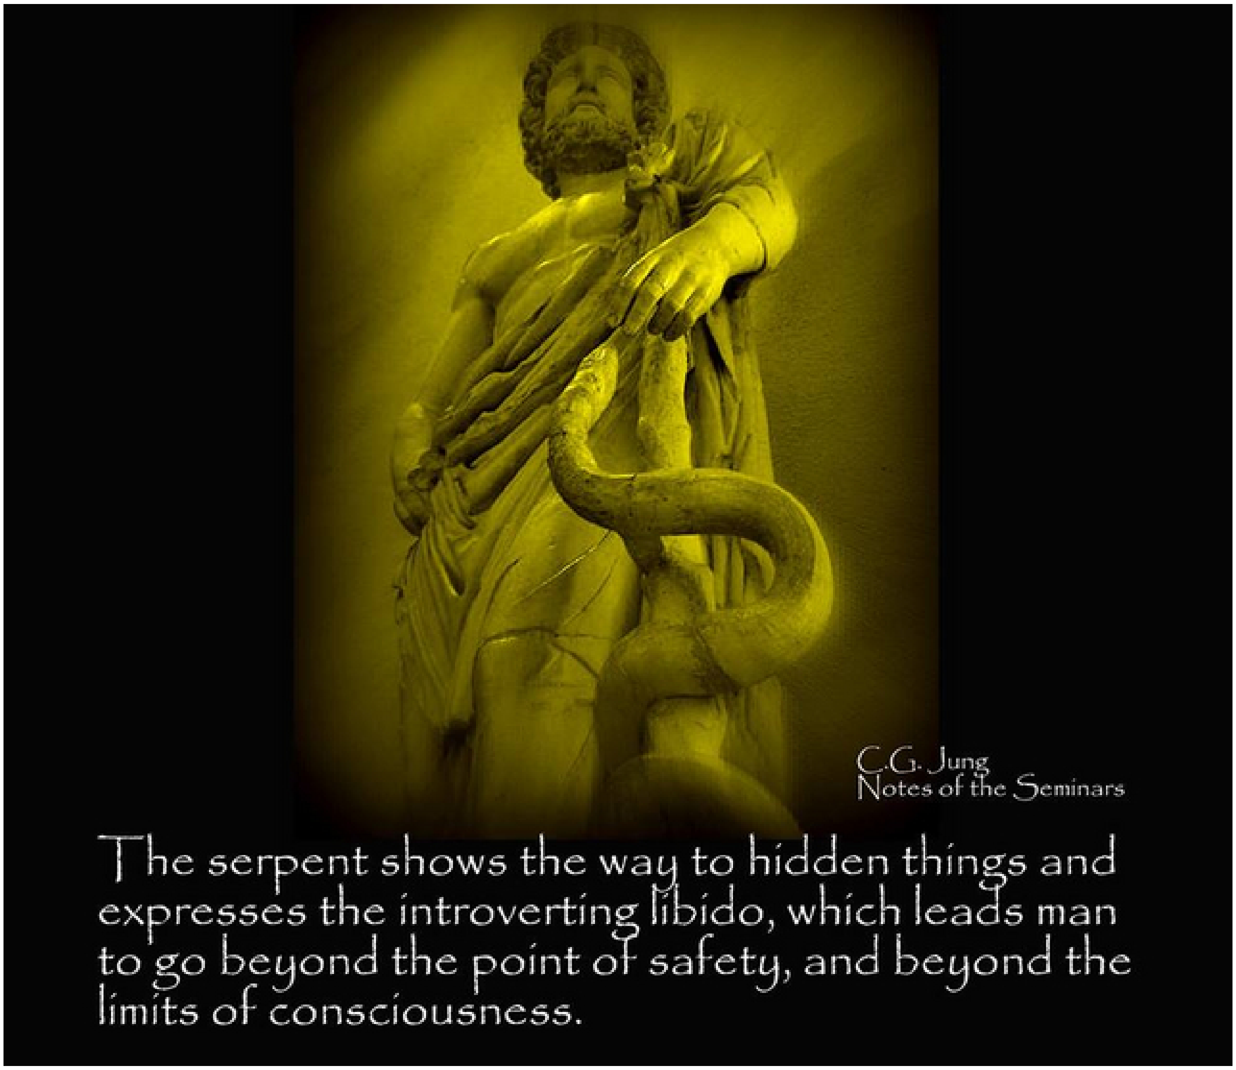
Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Volume II, Page 461.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/29918-a1.jpg`

Carl Jung: The dragon is the mythological form of the snake. (2019-11-17 04:58)

[1]



C.G. Jung
Notes of the Seminars

The serpent shows the way to hidden things and expresses the introverting libido, which leads man to go beyond the point of safety, and beyond the limits of consciousness.

The serpent is the animal, but the magical animal.

There is hardly anyone whose relation to a snake is neutral.

When you think of a snake, you are always in touch with racial instinct.

Horses and monkeys have snake phobia, as man has.

In primitive countries, you can easily see why man has acquired this instinct.

The Bedouins are afraid of scorpions and carry amulets to protect themselves, especially stones from certain Roman ruins.

So whenever a snake appears, you must think of a primordial feeling of fear.

The black color goes with this feeling, and also with the subterranean character of the snake. It is hidden and therefore dangerous.

As animal it symbolizes something unconscious; it is the instinctive movement or tendency; it shows the way to the hidden treasure, or it guards the treasure.

The dragon is the mythological form of the snake.

The snake has a fascinating appeal, a peculiar attraction through fear.

Some people are fascinated by this fear.

Things that are awe-inspiring and dangerous have an extraordinary attraction.

This combination of fear and attraction is shown, for instance, when a bird is hypnotized by a snake, for the bird flutters down to fight the snake, and then becomes attracted and held by the snake.

The serpent shows the way to hidden things and expresses the introverting libido, which leads man to go beyond the point of safety, and beyond the limits of consciousness, as expressed by the deep crater.

The snake is also Yin, the dark female power.

The Chinese would not use the snake (i.e., dragon) as a symbol for Yin, but for Yang.

In Chinese [tradition], the Yin is symbolized by the tiger and the Yang by the dragon. Carl Jung, Seminar 1925, Page 102.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/9bfc2-1serpent.jpg`

Carl Jung on “Active Imagination.” (2019-11-17 04:59)

[1]

[Carl Jung on “Active Imagination.”]

To Mr. O.

My dear Mr. O. 2 May 1947

I’m somewhat astonished that you haven’t learned yet to apply what I call "active imagination," as this is the indispensable second part of any analysis that is really meant to go to the roots.

I wish you would carefully study what I have written about it in “The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious.”

It is true, not much has been published about this subject.

Most is contained in my Seminars. It is too difficult a subject to deal with before a merely intellectual public.

The dream you write about is suggestive in that respect: it is a massa informis which is meant to be shaped.

It shouldn’t go down the sink as it is always expected to do, it must remain on the surface, because it is the prima materia4 of whatever you are going to do about it.

The point is that you start with any image, for instance just with that yellow mass in your dream.

Contemplate it and carefully observe how the picture begins to unfold or to change.

Don't try to make it into something, just do nothing but observe what its spontaneous changes are.

Any mental picture you contemplate in this way will sooner or later change through a spontaneous association that causes a slight alteration of the picture.

You must carefully avoid impatient jumping from one subject to another.

Hold fast to the one image you have chosen and wait until it changes by itself.

Note all these changes and eventually step into the picture yourself, and if it is a speaking figure at all then say what you have to say to that figure and listen to what he or she has to say.

Thus you can not only analyse your unconscious but you also give your unconscious a chance to analyse yourself, and therewith you gradually create the unity of conscious and unconscious without which there is no individuation at all.

If you apply this method, then I can come in as an occasional adviser, but if you don't apply it, then my existence is of no use for you.

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung

Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Pages 459-460.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/e14d7-active.jpg`

Edward Whitmont The Symbolic View (2019-11-17 05:23)

[1]Contact with Jung: Essays on the influence of his work and personality

P.W. Bridgeman has stated: 'The structure of nature may eventually be such that our processes of thought do not correspond to it sufficiently to permit us to think about it at all. . . . The world fades out and eludes us. . . . We are confronted with something truly ineffable.

We have reached the limit of the vision of the great pioneers of science, the vision, namely, that we live in a sympathetic world in that it is comprehensible by our minds.'

As this quotation indicates, scientific research into the external world is leading to results less and less easy to comprehend, and may eventually exceed the limits of rational, human comprehension.

In response to this dilemma, Jung's vision of the internal world of the psyche has opened a new vista via the symbolic experience of the irrational.

The irrational correspondence of rational events, or synchronicity, may eventually help to unify into a new cosmological order the dichotomy between man's rational, scientific, and irrational, religious world pictures.

How symbolic correspondence may unify the rational and irrational into a new order I shall attempt to sketch by describing two fields which symbolic reality may rescue from their rational deadlock.

These fields are the experience of religious reality and the scientific aspect of soul and matter.

When my interest in Jung's work was first aroused, I was concerned with problems of psychosomatics.

In response to my groping attempts to interrelate through correspondence homeopathy and alchemy, Jung had written in a personal letter: 'There is also the possibility ... of synchronicity, which basically is nothing else than a mere specifically formulated aspect of correspondentia which we know to have been one of the elements of the medieval interpretation of nature. It is thinkable, and there are facts pointing in this direction, that an archetypal situation configurates itself also through bodily events. . . .' This verified my own impression.

I vaguely felt that physical illness was concretely related to the patient's life history.

Yet what exactly was the relationship?

At the same time, I was puzzled by the implication of the so-called homeopathic remedy 'pictures' which I had studied and tried.

In these 'drug pictures' psychosomatic interaction is demonstrated, but in a way that at first deepens rather than solves the riddle.

The clinical scope of drugs is depicted by drug pictures of different personality types, e.g. Sulfur, Silica, Gold, or Snake Venom personalities.

In these drug personalities individual psychological traits are combined with typical physiological or constitutional characteristics.

One might say that chemical and biological traits are linked in meaningful coincidence with psychological patterns.

But there is no rational explanation for this coincidence.

Thus, medical science looks upon these homeopathic concepts as superstitions. oddly enough, the drugs 'work' when used according to their pictures. This makes the matter even more puzzling.

I was struck further by the analogy between these homeopathic drug personalities and the alchemistic 'personifications' of substances.

Even more surprising is the impressively close correspondence between the actual therapeutic scope of the homeopathic drug personalities and their medieval alchemical' signatures'.

For instance, the 'gold' personality is deeply depressed and predisposed to cardiac disturbances in the homeopathic description.

The medieval alchemical signature of gold associates with the heart and the sun as life principle.

The symbolic picture, 'lacking the sun of life', fits both descriptions.

To take another example, the homeopathic 'sulfur' personality both physiologically and psychologically initiates but does not finish, is a Jack of all trades, restless, and full of impulses, irritations, and inflammations.

This corresponds closely to the alchemical description of sulfur as millererum artifex, fiery initiator of life, and source of corruption and

Thus the homeopaths and the alchemists use similar symbolic pictures to describe the same physical and psychic traits, in spite of being separated by several centuries.

Furthermore, these symbolic pictures are verified by clinical experience. (For a detailed exposition see The Homeopathic Recorder, Brattleboro, Vermont, November 1947, February 1954, April 1959, June 1959.)

Is this 'nothing but' projection of psychic contents?

In my view it is rather symbolic perception, which should be clearly distinguished from projection in the clinical sense.

The alchemists' visions are often symbolic perceptions of what we may call the 'spirit in matter', even though undoubtedly psychological projections do abound.

To accept symbolic perception of this sort as valid means that such archetypal visions may represent, not only the projection of psychic contents into 'dead' matter, but also the epiphany of a formative pattern which appears in both matter and psyche, uniting them in meaningful coincidence.

Our clinical concept of projection might then be a special, distorted instance of this wider principle.

Symbolic experience expresses the unknown by analogies to the known and also, in Jung's words, ignotum per ignotius, the unknown through the even more unknown.

It can help us to grasp irrational relationships between qualities of matter and psyche which rational thought cannot explain.

Comprehension is promoted by means of image rather than abstract concept.

The possible importance for a science of tomorrow of a conceptual approach in which symbolic analogy is taken seriously cannot be measured yet.

With our hypothesis that symbolic analogy points to objective reality, to unknown dimensions of configurating power that encompass mind and matter, we tum now to the religious experience.

Here, also, the question arises, is the symbol only a psychic image or does it participate in a metaphysical reality?

I believe that Jung has hinted at the latter answer in speaking of the symbol as 'an expression of something supra-human and only partly conceivable' and 'ranking below the level of the mystery it seeks to describe'.

The hypothesis of a concrete dimension of being of pervasive form patterns, from which symbolic experience emanates, would re-establish the transcendental reality towards which man's religious search has always been striving.

Man's disconnection from spiritual, transpersonal guidance constitutes the most urgent problem of our time.

In past ages a connection existed by virtue of participation mystique, whereby men functioned in mythological and magical dimensions.

As the effective reality of the mythological dimension diminished and the rational function emerged, men attempted to comprehend religious imagery rationally.

Literal rationalization of religious tenets invited rational rejection of the same tenets.

Thus, scholasticism, renaissance, and enlightenment led from a rationalization of religion to a cleavage between science and religion.

Jung’s work demonstrated clearly that the religious instinct is a fundamental psychic drive.

The emergence of archetypal imagery during the individuation process is a unique experience for those who have undergone it.

The imagery implies a transpersonal goal of holeness, a metapsychological mystery, valid, seemingly, even beyond the confines of personal death; as incomprehensible rationally, yet as real, as the sub-atomic realm, where energy and mass become indistinguishable.

If the symbolic approach can be accepted as touching transpsychological reality, it means to overcome our ,:q.Jn .. H„,baJL starvation by bringing us in touch again with that life-sustaining and directing guidance which in all ages and cultures has been called divine.

By putting the archetypal messages to the rational test of psychological understanding and actual life, we ’experimentally’ satisfy the needs of the critical mind.

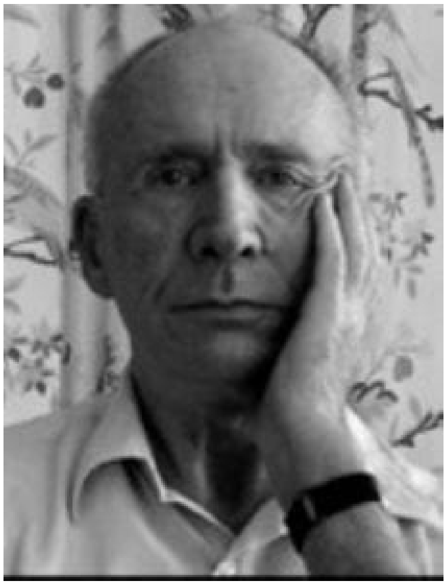
The gap may thus be bridged between providential guidance and rationally verifiable experience.

Comprehending the universe and life by means of symbolic analogies which point to the ultimate operating patterns binding the rational and the irrational, the psychic and the material components of reality, may be the most important task before us.

Therein lies the monumental importance of Jung’s work, which provides the stimulus and vision for the healing of western man’s split between faith and reason. Edward Whitman, Contact with Jung, Pages 201-206

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Contact-Jung-Essays-influence-personality/dp/B0000CLPU0/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=fordham+contact+with+jung&qid=1574187133&sr=8-1`

Robert A. Johnson - Obituary (2019-11-17 09:03)



[1]Robert A. Johnson

Robert A. Johnson May 26, 1921 - September 12, 2018 San Diego

Robert A. Johnson, Jungian author and lecturer, died on September 12, 2018, in San Diego.

He was 97. Mr. Johnson was born in Portland, Oregon, on May 26, 1921.

He was the only child of Alexius Johnson and Clara Gladys Williamson Johnson.Mr. Johnson studied at the University of Oregon and Stanford University.

He was a student of Jiddu Krishnamurti in Ojai, California; and he was a student at the C. G. Jung Institute in Switzerland in the years following WW II.In the 1950's,

Mr. Johnson established a practice in Analytical Psychology in Los Angeles with fellow Jung Institute graduate, Helen Luke.

Mr. Johnson closed this practice in 1963, and for the next four years was a member of St. Gregory's Abbey in Three Rivers, Michigan, a Benedictine monastery of the Episcopal Church.In 1968,

Mr. Johnson moved to San Diego where he resumed his career as a Jungian analyst and lecturer.

In 1974 a collection of his lectures were published as a book,

He: Understanding Masculine Psychology.

Over the next three decades, Mr. Johnson published another dozen books that were translated into multiple languages and sold millions of copies worldwide.

He lectured extensively, both domestically and internationally.Mr. Johnson is survived by his timeless books, millions of inspired and heartened readers, and friends from all corners of the globe.

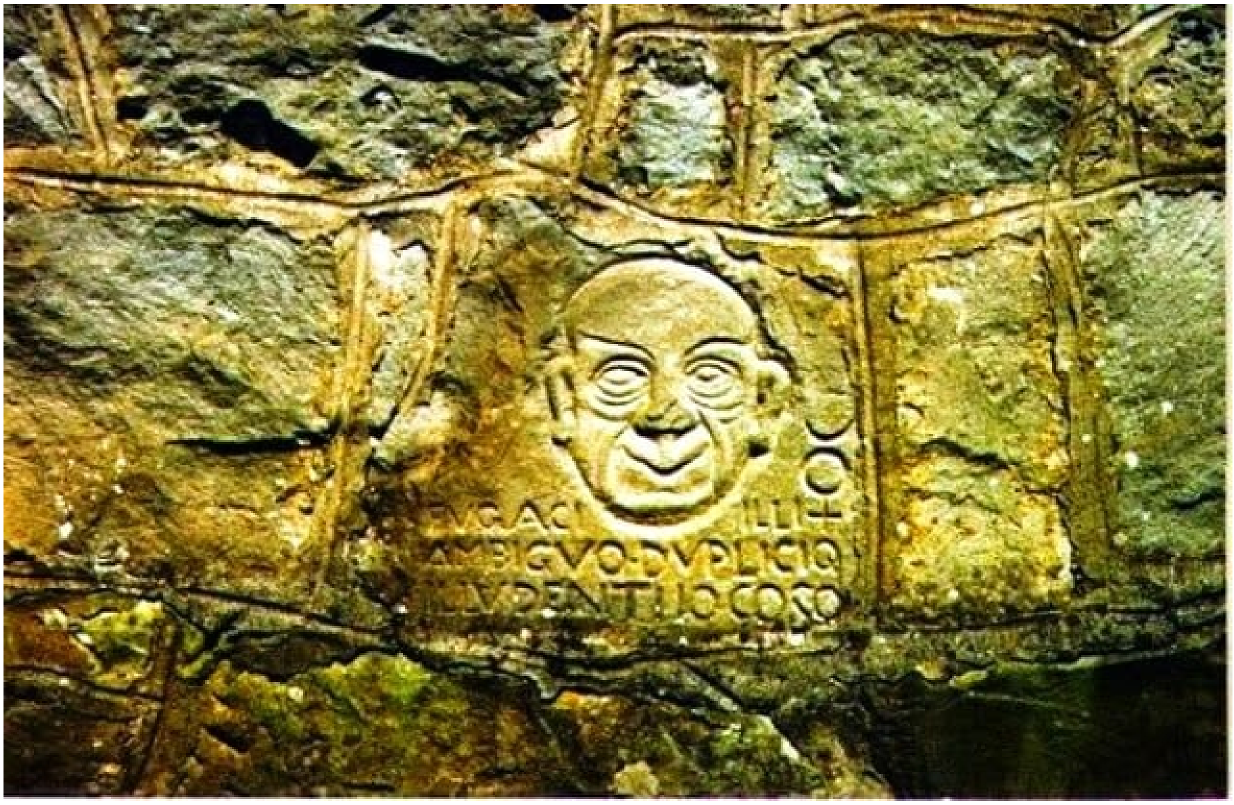
A memorial service will be held on January 19, 2019 at 2:00 PM at St. Paul’s Cathedral in San Diego.

In lieu of flowers, memorial donations may be made to the Tubb Canyon Deseret Conservancy.

1. `https://www.legacy.com/obituaries/sandiegouniontribune/obituary.aspx?n=robert-a-johnson&pid=190471528`

On the Psychology of the Trickster Figure ~C.G. Jung (2019-11-18 04:11)

[1]



On the Psychology of the Trickster Figure C.G. Jung

It is no light task for me to write about the figure of the trickster in American Indian mythology within the confined space of a commentary. When I first came across Adolf Bandelier’s classic on this subject, The Delight

Makers, many years ago, I was struck by the European analogy of the carnival in the medieval Church, with its reversal of the hierarchic order, which is still continued in the carnivals held by student societies today. Something of this contradictoriness also inheres in the medieval description of the devil as simia dei (the ape of God), and in his characterization in folklore as the "simpleton" who is "fooled" or "cheated." A curious combination of typical trickster motifs can be found in the alchemical figure of Mercurius; for instance, his fondness for sly jokes and malicious pranks, his powers as a shape-shifter, his dual nature, half animal, half divine, his exposure to all kinds of tortures, and—last but not least—his approximation to the figure of a saviour. These qualities make Mercurius seem like a daemonic being resurrected from primitive times, older even than the Greek Hermes. His rogueries relate him in some measure to various figures met with in folklore and universally known in fairytales: Tom Thumb, Stupid Hans, or the buffoon-like Hanswurst, who is an altogether negative hero and yet manages to achieve through his stupidity what others fail to accomplish with their best efforts. In Grimm's fairytale, the "Spirit Mercurius" lets himself be outwitted by a peasant lad, and then has to buy his freedom with the precious gift of healing.

Since all mythical figures correspond to inner psychic experiences and originally sprang from them, it is not surprising to find certain phenomena in the field of parapsychology which remind us of the trickster. These are the phenomena connected with poltergeists, and they occur at all times and places in the ambience of pre-adolescent children. The malicious tricks played by the poltergeist are as well known as the low level of his intelligence and the fatuity of his "communications." Ability to change his shape seems also to be one of his characteristics, as there are not a few reports of his appearance in animal form. Since he has on occasion described himself as a soul in hell, the motif of subjective suffering would seem not to be lacking either. His universality is co-extensive, so to speak, with that of shamanism, to which, as we know, the whole phenomenology of spiritualism belongs. There is something of the trickster in the character of the shaman and medicine-man, for he, too, often plays malicious jokes on people, only to fall victim in his turn to the vengeance of those whom he has injured. For this reason, his profession sometimes puts him in peril of his life. Besides that, the shamanistic techniques in themselves often cause the medicine-man a good deal of discomfort, if not actual pain. At all events the "making of a medicine-man" involves, in many parts of the world, so much agony of body and soul that permanent psychic injuries may result. His "approximation to the saviour" is an obvious consequence of this, in confirmation of the mythological truth that the wounded wounder is the agent of healing, and that the sufferer takes away suffering.

These mythological features extend even to the highest regions of man's spiritual development. If we consider, for example, the daemonic features exhibited by Yahweh in the Old Testament, we shall find in them not a few reminders of the unpredictable behaviour of the trickster, of his senseless orgies of destruction and his self· imposed sufferings, together with the same gradual development into a saviour and his simultaneous humanization. It is just this transformation of thl:' meaningless into the meaningful that reveals the trickster's compensatory relation to the "saint." In the early Middle Ages, this led to some strange ecclesiastical customs based on memories of the ancient saturnalia. Mostly they were celebrated on the days immediately following the birth of Christ—that is, in the New Year—with singing and dancing. The dances were the originally harmless tripudia of the priests, lower clergy, children, and subdeacons and took place in church. An episcopus puerorum (children's bishop) was elected on Innocents' Day and dressed in pontifical robes. Amid uproarious rejoicings he paid an official visit to the palace of the archbishop and bestowed the episcopal blessing from one of the windows. The same thing happened at the tripudium hypodiaconorum, and at the dances for other priestly grades. By the end of the twelfth century, the subdeacons' dance had degenerated into a real festum stuttorum (fools' feast). A report from the year I1g8 says that at the Feast of the Circumcision in Notre Dame, Paris, "so many abominations and shameful deeds" were committed that the holy place was desecrated "not only by smutty jokes, but even by the shedding of blood." In vain did Pope Innocent III inveigh against the "jests and madness that make the clergy a mockery," and the "shameless frenzy of their play-acting." Two hundred and fifty years later (March 12, 1444), a letter from the Theological Faculty of Paris to all the French bishops was still fulminating against these festivals, at which "even the priests and clerics elected an archbishop OT a bishop or pope, and named him the Fools' Pope" (fatuorum papam). "In the very midst of divine service masqueraders with grotesque faces, disguised as women, lions, and mummers, performed their dances, sang indecent songs in the choir, ate their greasy food from a corner of the altar near the priest celebrating mass, got out their games of dice, burned a stinking incense made of old shoe leather, and ran and hopped about all over the church."

It is not surprising that this veritable witches' sabbath was uncommonly popular, and that it required considerable time and effort to free the Church from this pagan heritage.

In certain localities even the priests seem to have adhered to the "libertas decembrica," as the Fools' Holiday was called, in spite (or perhaps because?) of the fact that the older level of consciousness could let itself rip on this happy occasion with all the wildness, wantonness, and irresponsibility of paganism.4 These ceremonies, which still reveal the spirit of the trickster in his original form, seem to have died out by the beginning of the sixteenth century. At any rate, the various conciliar decrees issued from 1581 to 1585 forbade only the festum puerorum and the election of an episcopus puerorum.

Finally, we must also mention in this connection the festum asinorum, which, so far as I know, was celebrated mainly in France. Although considered a harmless festival in memory of Mary's flight into Egypt, it was celebrated in a somewhat curious manner which might easily have given rise to misunderstandings. In Beauvais, the ass procession went right into the church.5 At the conclusion of each part (Introit, Kyrie, Gloria, ete.) of the high mass that followed, the whole congregation brayed) that is, they all went "Y-a" like a donkey ("hac modulatione hinham concludebantur"). A codex dating apparently from the eleventh century says: "At the end of the mass, instead of the words 'Ite missa est,' the priest shall bray three times (ter hinhamabit), and instead of the words 'Deo gratias,' the congregation shall answer ·Y·a' (hinham) three times,"

Du Cange cites a hymn from this festival:

Orientis partibus
Adventavit Asinus
Pulcher et fortissimus
Sarcinis aptissimus.

Each verse was followed by the French refrain:

Hez, Sire Asnes, car chantez
Belle bouche rechignez
Vous aurez du foin assez
Et de l'avoine a plantez.

The hymn had nine verses, the last of which was:

Amen, dicas, Asine (hie genufleetebatur)
Jam satur de gramine.
Amen, amen, itera
Aspernare vetera.

Du Cange says that the more ridiculous this rite seemed, the greater the enthusiasm with which it was celebrated. In other places the ass was decked with a golden canopy whose corners were held "by distinguished canons"; the others present had to "don suitably festive garments, as at Christmas." Since there were certain tendencies to bring the ass into symbolic relationship with Christ, and since, from ancient times, the god of the Jews was vulgarly conceived to be an ass-a prejudice which extended to Christ himself,7 as is shown by the mock crucifixion scratched on the wall of the Imperial Cadet School on the Palatine 8-the danger of theriomorphism lay uncomfortably close. Even the bishops could do nothing to stamp out this custom, until finally it had to be suppressed by the "auctoritas supremi Senatus." The suspicion of blasphemy becomes quite open in Nietzsche's "Ass Festival," which is a deliberately blasphemous parody of the mass.9

These medieval customs demonstrate the role of the trickster to perfection, and, when they vanished from the precincts of the Church, they appeared again on the profane level of Italian theatricals, as those comic types who, often adorned with enormous ithyphallic emblems, entertained the far from prudish public with ribaldries in true Rabelaisian style. Callot's engravings have preserved these classical figures for posterity—the Pulcinellas, Cucorognas, Chico Sgarras, and the like.

In picaresque tales, in carnivals and revels, in magic rites of healing, in man's religious fears and exaltations, this phantom of the trickster haunts the mythology of all ages, sometimes in quite unmistakable form, sometimes in strangely modulated guise.n He is obviously a "psychologem," an archetypal psychic structure of extreme antiquity. In his clearest manifestations he is a faithful reflection of an absolutely undifferentiated human consciousness, corresponding to a psyche that has hardly left the animal level. That this is how the trickster figure originated can hardly be contested if we look at it from the causal and historical angle. In psychology as in biology we cannot afford to overlook or underestimate this question of origins, although the answer usually tells us nothing about the functional meaning. For this reason biology should never forget the question of purpose, for only by answering that can we get at the meaning of a phenomenon. Even in pathology, where we are concerned with lesions which have no meaning in themselves, the exclusively causal approach proves to be inadequate, since there are a number of pathological phenomena which only give up their meaning when we inquire into their purpose. And where we are concerned with the normal phenomena of life, this question of purpose takes undisputed precedence.

When, therefore, a primitive or barbarous consciousness forms a picture of itself on a much earlier level of development and continues to do so for hundreds or even thousands of years, undeterred by the contamination of its archaic qualities with differentiated, highly developed mental products, then the causal explanation is that the older the archaic qualities are, the more conservative and pertinacious is their behaviour. One simply cannot shake off the memory-image of things as they were, and drags it along like a senseless appendage.

This explanation, which is facile enough to satisfy the rationalistic requirements of our age, would certainly not meet with the approval of the Winnebagos, the nearest possessors of the trickster cycle. For them the myth is not in any sense a remnant-it is far too amusing for that, and an object of undivided enjoyment. For them it still "functions," provided that they have not been spoiled by civilization. For them there is no earthly reason to theorize about the meaning and purpose of myths, just as the Christmas—tree seems no problem at all to the naIve European. For the thoughtful observer, however, both trickster and Christmas-tree afford reason enough for reflection. Naturally it depends very much on the mentality of the observer what he thinks about these things. Considering the crude primitivity of the trickster cycle, it would not be surprising if one saw in this myth simply the reflection of an earlier, rudimentary stage of consciousness, which is what the trickster obviously seems to be.

The only question that would need answering is whether such personified reflections exist at all in empirical psychology. As a matter of fact they do, and these experiences of split or double personality actually form the core of the earliest psychopathological investigations. The peculiar thing about these dissociations is that the split-off personality is not just a random one, but stands in a complementary or compensatory relationship to the ego-personality. It is a personification of traits of character which are sometimes worse and sometimes better than those the ego-personality possesses. A collective personification like the trickster is the product of an aggregate of individuals and is welcomed by each individual as something known to him, which would not be the case if it were just an individual outgrowth.

Now if the myth were nothing but an historical remnant, one would have to ask why it has not long since vanished into the great rubbish-heap of the past, and why it continues to make its influence felt on the highest levels of civilization, even where, on account of his stupidity and grotesque scurrility, the trickster no longer plays the role of a "delight-maker." In many cultures his figure seems like an old river-bed in which the water still flows. One can see this best of all from the fact that the trickster motif does not crop up only in its mythical form but appears just as naively and authentically in the unsuspecting modern man—whenever, in fact, he feels himself at the mercy of annoying "accidents" which thwart his will and his actions with apparently malicious intent. He then speaks of "hoodoos" and "jinxes" or of the "mischievousness of the object." Here the trickster is represented by counter-tendencies in the unconscious, and in certain cases by a sort of second personality, of a puerile and inferior character, not unlike the personalities who announce themselves at spiritualistic seances and cause all those ineffably childish phenomena so typical of poltergeists. I have, I think, found a suitable designation for this character-component when I called it the shadow. On the civilized level, it is regarded as a personal "gaffe," "slip," "faux pas," etc., which are then chalked up as defects of the conscious personality. We are no longer aware that in carnival customs and the like there are remnants of a collective shadow figure which prove that the personal shadow is in part descended from a numinous collective figure. This collective figure gradually breaks up under the impact of civilization, leaving traces in folklore which are difficult to recognize. But the main part of him gets personalized and is made an object of personal responsibility.

Radin's trickster cycle preserves the shadow in its pristine mythological form, and thus points back to a very much earlier stage of consciousness which existed before the birth of the myth, when the Indian was still groping about in a similar mental darkness. Only when his consciousness reached a higher level could he detach the earlier state from himself and objectify it, that is, say anything about it. So long as his consciousness was itself trickster-like, such a confrontation could obviously not take place. It was possible only when the attainment of a newer and higher level of consciousness enabled him to look back on a lower and inferior state. It was only to be expected that a good deal of mockery and contempt should mingle with this retrospect, thus casting an even thicker pall over man's memories of the past, which were pretty unedifying anyway. This phenomenon must have repeated itself innumerable times in the history of his mental development. The sovereign contempt with which our modern age looks back on the taste and intelligence of earlier centuries is a classic example of this, and there is an unmistakable allusion to the same phenomenon in the New Testament, where we are told in Acts 17:30 that God looked down from above (lJ7I'€pL8wv, despiciens) on the XPOVOL T ' ayvoa" the times of ignorance (or unconsciousness).

This attitude contrasts strangely with the still commoner and more striking idealization of the past, which is praised not merely as the "good old days" but as the Golden Age-and not just by uneducated and superstitious people, but by all those legions of theosophical enthusiasts who resolutely believe in the former existence and lofty civilization of Atlantis.

Anyone who belongs to a sphere of culture that seeks the perfect state somewhere in the past must feel very queerly indeed when confronted by the figure of the trickster. He is a forerunner of the saviour, and, like him, God, man, and animal at once. He is both subhuman and superhuman, a bestial and divine being, whose chief and most alarming characteristic is his unconsciousness. Because of it he is deserted by his (evidently human) companions, which seems to indicate that he has fallen below their level of consciousness. He is so unconscious of himself that his body is not a unity, and his two hands fight each other. He takes his anus off and entrusts it with a special task. Even his sex is optional despite its phallic qualities: he can turn himself into a woman and bear children. From his penis he makes all kinds of useful plants. This is a reference to his original nature as a Creator, for the world is made from the body of a god.

On the other hand he is in many respects stupider than the animals, and gets into one ridiculous scrape after another. Although he is not really evil, he does the most atrocious things from sheer unconsciousness and unrelatedness. His imprisonment in animal unconsciousness is suggested by the episode where he gets his head caught inside the skull of an elk, and the next episode shows how he overcomes this condition by imprisoning the head of a hawk inside his own rectum. True, he sinks back into the former condition immediately afterwards, by falling under the ice, and is outwitted time after time by the animals, but in the end he succeeds in tricking the cunning coyote, and this brings back to him his saviour nature. The trickster is a primitive "cosmic" being of divine-animal nature, on the one hand superior to man because of his superhuman qualities, and on the other hand inferior to him because of his unreason and unconsciousness. He is no match for the animals either, because of his extraordinary clumsiness and lack of instinct. These defects are the marks of his human nature, which is not so well adapted to the environment as the animal's but, instead, has prospects of a much higher development of consciousness based on a considerable eagerness to learn, as is duly emphasized in the myth.

What the repeated telling of the myth signifies is the therapeutic anamnesis of contents which, for reasons still to be discussed, should never be forgotten for long. If they were nothing but the remnants of an inferior state it would be understandable if man turned his attention away from them, feeling that their reappearance was a nuisance. This is evidently by no means the case, since the trickster has been a source of amusement right down to civilized times, where he can still be recognized in the carnival figures of Pulcinella and the clown. That is one important reason for his still continuing to function. But it is not the only one, and certainly not the reason why this reflection of an extremely primitive state of consciousness solidified into a mythological personage. Mere vestiges of an early state that is dying out usually lose their energy at an increasing rate, otherwise they would never disappear. The last thing we would expect is that they would have the strength to solidify into a mythological figure with its own cycle of legends—unless, of course, they received energy from outside, in this case from a higher level of consciousness or from sources in the unconscious which are not yet exhausted. To take a legitimate parallel from the psychology of the individual, namely the appearance of an impressive shadow figure antagonistically confronting a personal consciousness: this figure does not appear merely because it still exists in the individual, but because it rests on a dynamism whose existence can only be explained in terms of his actual situation, for instance because the shadow is so disagreeable to his ego-consciousness that it has to be repressed into the unconscious. This explanation does not quite meet the case here, because the trickster obviously represents a vanishing level of consciousness which increasingly lacks the power to take express and assert itself. Furthermore, repression would prevent it from vanishing, because repressed contents are the very ones that have the best chance of survival, as we know from experience that nothing is corrected in the unconscious. Lastly, the story of the trickster is not in the least disagreeable to the Winnebago consciousness or incompatible with it but, on the contrary, pleasurable and therefore not conducive to repression. It looks, therefore, as if the myth were actively sustained and fostered by consciousness. This may well be so, since that is the best and most successful method of keeping the shadow figure conscious and subjecting it to conscious criticism. Although, to begin with, this criticism has more the character of a positive evaluation, we may expect that with the progressive development of consciousness the cruder aspects of the myth will gradually fall away, even if the danger of its rapid disappearance under the stress of white civilization did not exist. We have often seen how certain customs, originally cruel or obscene, became mere vestiges in the course of time.

The process of rendering this motif harmless takes an extremely long time, as its history shows; one can still detect traces of it even at a high level of civilization. Its longevity could also be explained by the strength and vitality of the state of consciousness described in the myth, and by the secret attraction and fascination this has for the conscious mind. Although purely causal hypotheses in the biological sphere are not as a rule very satisfactory, due weight must nevertheless be given to the fact that in the case of the trickster a higher level of consciousness has covered up a lower one, and that the latter was already in retreat. His recollection, however, is mainly due to the interest which the conscious mind brings to bear on him, the inevitable concomitant being, as we have seen, the gradual civilizing, i.e., assimilation, of a primitive daemonic figure who was originally autonomous and even capable of causing possession.

To supplement the causal approach by a final one therefore enables us to arrive at more meaningful interpretations not only in medical psychology, where we are concerned with individual fantasies originating in the unconscious, but also in the case of collective fantasies, that is myths and fairytales.

As Radin points out, the civilizing process begins within the framework of the trickster cycle itself, and this is a clear indication that the original state has been overcome. At any rate the marks of deepest unconsciousness fall away from him; instead of acting in a brutal, savage, stupid, and senseless fashion, the trickster's behaviour towards the end of the cycle becomes quite useful and sensible. The devaluation of his earlier unconsciousness is apparent even in the myth, and one wonders what has happened to his evil qualities. The naive reader may imagine that when the dark aspects disappear they are no longer there in reality. But that is not the case at all, as experience shows. 'What actually happens is that the conscious mind is then able to free itself from the fascination of evil and is no longer obliged to live it compulsively. The darkness and the evil have not gone up in smoke, they have merely withdrawn into the unconscious owing to loss of energy, where they remain unconscious so long as all is well with the conscious. But if the conscious should find itself in a critical or doubtful situation, then it soon becomes apparent that the shadow has not dissolved into nothing but is only waiting for a favourable opportunity to reappear as a projection upon one's neighbour. If this trick is successful, there is immediately created between them that world of primordial darkness where everything that is characteristic of the trickster can happen-even on the highest plane of civilization. The best examples of these "monkey tricks," as popular speech aptly and truthfully sums up this state of affairs in which everything goes wrong and nothing intelligent happens except by mistake at the last moment, are naturally to be found in politics.

The so-called civilized man has forgotten the trickster. He remembers him only figuratively and metaphorically, when, irritated by his own ineptitude, he speaks of fate playing tricks on him or of things being bewitched. He never suspects that his own hidden and apparently harmless shadow has qualities whose dangerousness exceeds his wildest dreams. As soon as people get together in masses and submerge the individual, the shadow is mobilized, and, as history shows, may even be personified and incarnated.

The disastrous idea that everything comes to the human psyche from outside and that it is born a tabula rasa is responsible for the erroneous belief that under normal circumstances the individual is in perfect order. He then looks to the State for salvation, and makes society pay for his inefficiency. He thinks the meaning of existence would be discovered if food and clothing were delivered to him gratis on his own doorstep, or if everybody possessed an automobile. Such are the puerilities that rise up in place of an unconscious shadow and keep it unconscious. As a result of these prejudices, the individual feels totally dependent on his environment and loses all capacity for introspection. In this way his code of ethics is replaced by a knowledge of what is permitted or forbidden or ordered. How, under these circumstances, can one expect a soldier to subject an order received from a superior to ethical scrutiny? He has not yet made the discovery that he might be capable of spontaneous ethical impulses, and of performing them-even when no one is looking.

From this point of view we can see why the myth of the trickster was preserved and developed: like many other myths, it was supposed to have a therapeutic effect. It holds the earlier low intellectual and moral level before the eyes of the more highly developed individual, so that he shall not forget how things looked yesterday. We like to imagine that something which we do not understand does not help us in any way. But that is not always so. Seldom does a man understand with his head alone, least of all when he is a primitive. Because of its numinosity the myth has a direct effect on the unconscious, no matter whether it is understood or not. The fact that its repeated telling has not long since become obsolete can, I believe, be explained by its usefulness. The explanation is rather difficult because two contrary tendencies are at work: the desire on the one hand to get out of the earlier condition and on the other hand not to forget it.15 Apparently Radin has also felt this difficulty, for he says: "Viewed psychologically, it might be contended that the history of civilization is largely the account of the attempts of man to forget his transformation from an animal into a human being." 16 A few pages further on he says (with reference to the Golden Age): "So stubborn a refusal to forget is not an accident." 17 And it is also no accident that we are forced to contradict ourselves as soon as we try to formulate man's paradoxical attitude to myth. Even the most enlightened of us will set up a Christmas-tree for his children without having the least idea what this custom means, and is invariably disposed to nip any attempt at interpretation in the bud. It is really astonishing to see how many so-called superstitions are rampant nowadays in town and country alike, but if one took hold of the individual and asked him, loudly and clearly, "Do you believe in ghosts? in witches? in spells and magic?" he would deny it indignantly. It is a hundred to one he has never heard of such things and thinks it all rubbish. But in secret he is all for it, just like a jungle-dweller. The public knows very little of these things anyway, for everyone is convinced that in our enlightened society that kind of superstition has long since been eradicated, and it is part of the general convention to act as though one had never heard of such things, not to mention believing in them.

But nothing is ever lost, not even the blood pact with the devil. Outwardly it is forgotten, but inwardly not at all. We act like the natives on the southern slopes of Mount Elgon, in East Africa, one of whom accompanied me part of the way into the bush. At a fork in the path we came upon a brand new "ghost trap," beautifully got up like a little hut, near the cave where he lived with his family. I asked him if he had made it. He denied it with all the signs of extreme agitation, asserting that only children would make such a "ju-ju." Whereupon he gave the hut a kick, and the whole thing fell to pieces.

This is exactly the reaction we can observe in Europe today. Outwardly people are more or less civilized, but inwardly they are still primitives. Something in man is profoundly disinclined to give up his beginnings, and something else believes it has long since got beyond all that. This contradiction was once brought home to me in the most drastic manner when I was watching a "Strudel" (a sort of local witch-doctor) taking the spell off a stable. The stable was situated immediately beside the Gotthard railway line, and several international expresses sped past during the ceremony. Their occupants would hardly have suspected that a primitive ritual was being performed a few yards away.

The conflict between the two dimensions of consciousness is simply an expression of the polaristic structure of the psyche, which like any other energic system is dependent on the tension of opposites. That is also why there are no general psychological propositions which could not just as well be reversed; indeed, their reversibility proves their validity. We should never forget that in any psychological discussion we are not saying anything about the psyche, but that the psyche is always speaking about itself. It is no use thinking we can ever get beyond the psyche by means of the "mind," even though the mind asserts that it is not dependent on the psyche. How could it prove that? We can say, if we like, that one statement comes from the psyche, is psychic and nothing but psychic, and that another comes from the mind, is "spiritual" and therefore superior to the psychic one. Both are mere assertions based on the postulates of belief.

The fact is, that this old trichotomous hierarchy of psychic contents (hylic, psychic, and pneumatic) represents the polaristic structure of the psyche, which is the only immediate object of experience. The unity of our psychic nature lies in the middle, just as the living unity of the waterfall appears in the dynamic connection between above and below. Thus, the living effect of the myth is experienced when a higher consciousness, rejoicing in its freedom and independence, is confronted by the autonomy of a mythological figure and yet cannot flee from its fascination, but must pay tribute to the overwhelming impression. The figure works, because secretly it participates in the observer’s psyche and appears as its reflection, though it is not recognized as such. It is split off from his consciousness and consequently behaves like an autonomous personality. The trickster is a collective shadow figure, a summation of all the inferior traits of character in individuals. And since the individual shadow is never absent as a component of personality, the collective figure can construct itself out of it continually. Not always, of course, as a mythological figure, but, in consequence of the increasing repression and neglect of the original mythologems, as a corresponding projection on other social groups and nations.

If we take the trickster as a parallel of the individual shadow, then the question arises whether that trend towards meaning, which we saw in the trickster myth, can also be observed in the subjective and personal shadow. Since this shadow frequently appears in the phenomenology of dreams as a well-defined figure, we can answer this question positively: the shadow, although by definition a negative figure, sometimes has certain clearly discernible traits and associations which point to a quite different background. It is as though he were hiding meaningful contents under an unprepossessing exterior. Experience confirms this; and what is more important, the things that are hidden usually consist of increasingly numinous figures. The one standing closest behind the shadow is the anima,18 who is endowed with considerable powers of fascination and possession. She often appears in rather too youthful form, and hides in her turn the powerful archetype of the wise old man (sage, magician, king, etc.). The series could be extended, but it would be pointless to do so, as psychologically one only understands what one has experienced oneself. The concepts of complex psychology are, in essence, not intellectual formulations but names for certain areas of experience, and though they can be described they remain dead and irrepresentable to anyone who has not experienced them. Thus, I have noticed that people usually have not much difficulty in picturing to themselves what is meant by the shadow, even if they would have preferred instead a bit of Latin or Greek jargon that sounds more "scientific." But it costs them enormous difficulties to understand what the anima is. They accept her easily enough when she appears in novels or as a film star, but she is not understood at all when it comes to seeing the role she plays in their own lives, because she sums up everything that a man can never get the better of and never finishes coping with. Therefore it remains in a perpetual state of emotionality which must not be touched. The degree of unconsciousness one meets with in this connection is, to put it mildly, astounding. Hence it is practically impossible to get a man who is afraid of his own femininity to understand what is meant by the anima.

Actually, it is not surprising that this should be so, since even the most rudimentary insight into the shadow sometimes causes the greatest difficulties for the modern European. But since the shadow is the figure nearest his consciousness and the least explosive one, it is also the first component of personality to come up in an analysis of the unconscious. A minatory and ridiculous figure, he stands at the very beginning of the way of individuation, posing the deceptively easy riddle of the Sphinx, or grimly demanding answer to a "quaestio crocodilina."

If, at the end of the trickster myth, the saviour is hinted at, this comforting premonition or hope means that some calamity or other has happened and been consciously understood. Only out of disaster can the longing for the saviour arise—in other words, the recognition and unavoidable integration of the shadow create such a harrowing situation that nobody but a saviour can undo the tangled web of fate. In the case of the individual, the problem constellated by the shadow is answered on the plane of the anima, that is, through relatedness. In the history of the collective as in the history of the individual, everything depends on the development of consciousness. This gradually brings liberation from imprisonment in unconsciousness, and is therefore a bringer of light as well as of healing.

As in its collective, mythological form, so also the individual shadow contains within it the seed of an enantiodromia, of a conversion into its opposite.

[2]
Buy Four Archetypes: Mother / Rebirth / Spirit / Trickster (From the Collected Works of C.G. Jung, Vol. 9, Part 1) (Vol. 9i) here

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/eba6a-trickster.jpg`
2. `file://www.amazon.com/dp/0691017662/ref=cm_sw_r_pi_dp_It7Aub1641Z0C`

Jane Wheelwright on Carl Jung, Women and Social Evolution (2019-11-18 04:11)

[1]C.G. Jung, Emma Jung and Toni Wolff: A Collection of Remembrances

Jung seemed to say that the new era can come through only by means of the feminine principle (through Eros) and that is not only in the man's experience of his anima.

It obviously has to come primarily through women.

No man's anima can compare to a real flesh-and-blood woman.

It can, however, give the man some respect and belief and liking and trusting women that can help forward the movement.

On this note I would like to end, because it refers to Jung's farsightedness and to his specific contribution to the future.

Without it I feel there would be far more delay in the understanding of women.

It also is another example of how Jung's broad vision did in the long run constellate for me specifically my need to strive towards being a free modern woman with my roots planted deeply in the soil of archaic woman.

The more Jung's concepts of the animus and anima are understood and the more Jung's insistence on the conscious realization of these concepts, the sooner the woman's movement will bring about the necessary changes in our society. At least I think so.

I wish therefore to honor Jung as having made an enormous contribution to this next step in our social evolution. Jane Wheelwright, J.E.T., Pages 96-97.

---

1. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Emma-Toni-Wolff/dp/B000UFJOU2/ref=sr_1_4?keywords=jung+emma+toni&qid=1574186896&sr=8-4`

[Carl Jung on when Intelligence couples with moral weakness.] (2019-11-18 04:17)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters Vol. 1 1906-1950

Anonymous

Dear Herr N., 23 November 1945

When moral weakness is coupled with a relatively good intelligence, as seems to be the case with you, one must use this intelligence when the ethical sense fails.

This trite bit of wisdom cannot teach you any psychotherapy, but you must understand it and simply apply it yourself. If you can make this minimal use of your intelligence, you are saved.

If not, not.

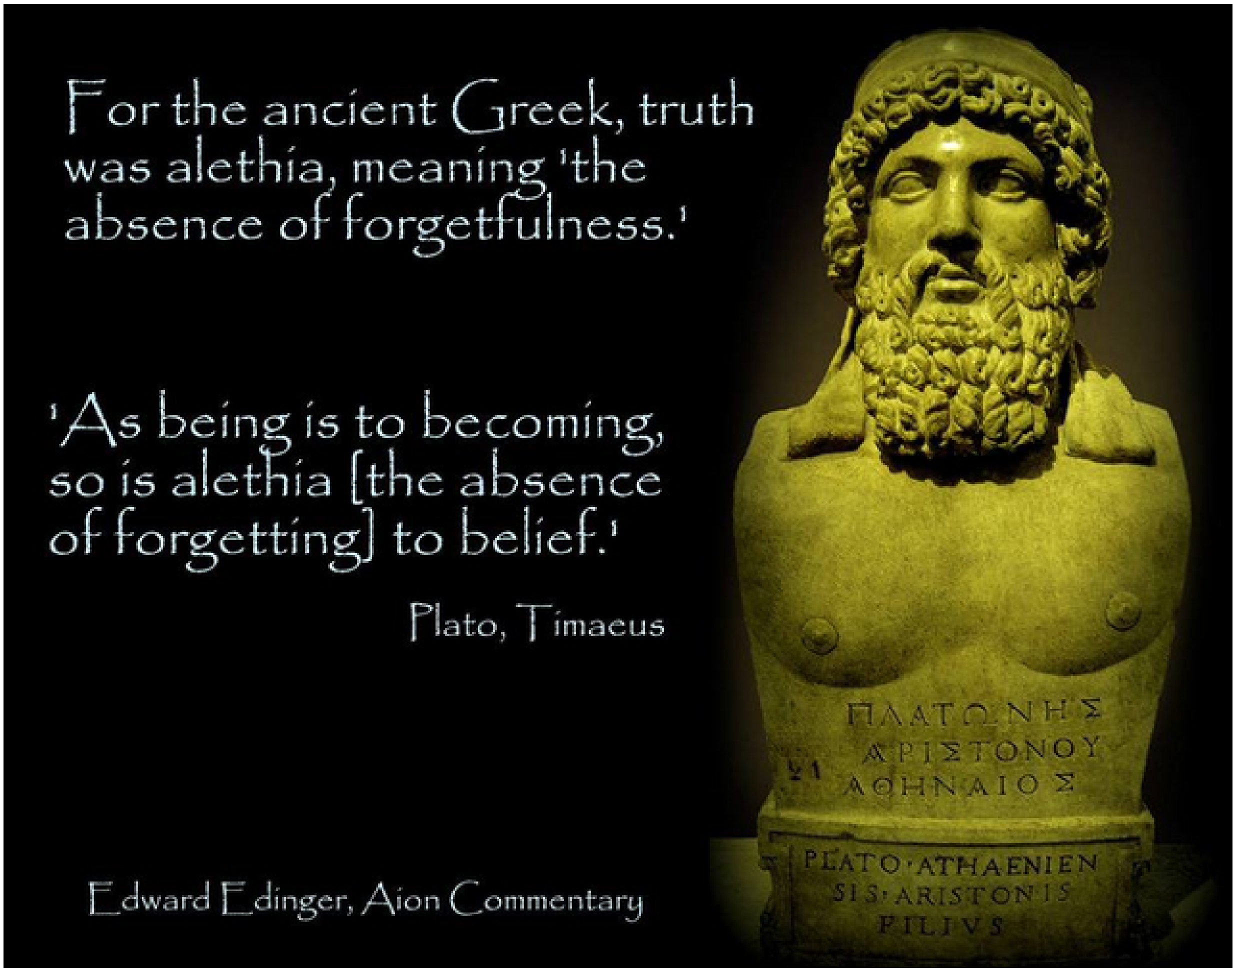
Yours truly,

C.G. Jung

Note: N., who was awaiting trial for a petty offence, asked for advice as to how not to succumb to similar temptations in the future (he was at the time on probation for a similar offence committed two years before). Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Page 393.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/9153b-earth.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=c.g.+jung+letters&qid=1574185363&sr=8-1`

Edward F. Edinger: When the soul is born it drinks lethe so that it forgets its prenatal life. (2019-11-18 04:30)



For the ancient Greek, truth was alethia, meaning 'the absence of forgetfulness.'

'As being is to becoming, so is alethia [the absence of forgetting] to belief.'

Plato, Timaeus

Edward Edinger, Aion Commentary

[2]Aion Lectures - Edward F. Edinger

[There is a slight misprint in the image above. The correct word should be: aletheia.]

In ancient Greece, the term for truth was aletheia, which is interesting because it is a negative term.

The a is a privative prefix which signifies "absence of," and what is absent is lethe, the water of forgetfulness, which is what one drinks when one comes intoconscious existence.

When the soul is born it drinks lethe so that it forgets its prenatal life.

For the ancient Greek, truth was aletheia, meaning the absence of forgetfulness or the presence of memory.

Plato uses this term aletheia to distinguish the eternal world of forms from the phenomenal world of appearance; aletheia refers to the world of forms.

The world of appearances is only a copy or an imitation of that eternal world; aletheia is the original.

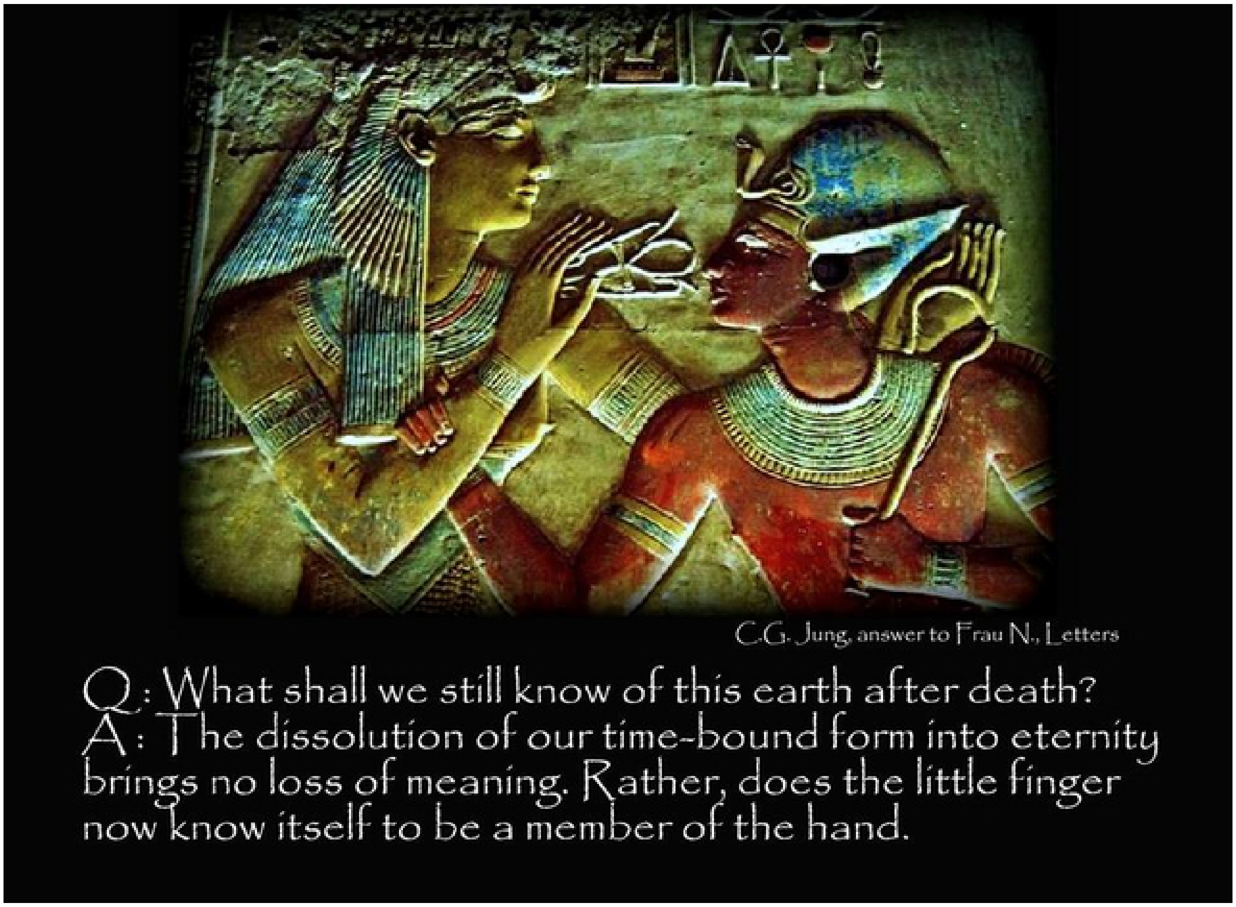
Thus Plato could say in Timaeus: "As being is to becoming, so is truth [aletheia] to belief."

Belief is a kind of copy of truth, not the real thing. Edward F. Edinger, Aion Lectures, Page 128.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/ab1d0-12bforgetfulness2baion2bedinger.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Lectures-STUDIES-JUNGIAN-PSYCHOLOGY-ANALYSTS/dp/0919123724/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=aion+lectures&qid=1574093641&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: What happens after death is so unspeakably glorious ... (2019-11-18 04:43)

[1]



C.G. Jung, answer to Frau N., Letters

Q: What shall we still know of this earth after death?
A: The dissolution of our time-bound form into eternity brings no loss of meaning. Rather, does the little finger now know itself to be a member of the hand.

[2]C.G. Jung Letters Vol. 1 1906-1950

Dear Frau N., 11July1944

What happens after death is so unspeakably glorious that our imagination and our feelings do not suffice to form even an approximate conception of it.

A few days before my sister died her face ware an expression of such inhuman sublimity that I was profoundly frightened.

A child, too, enters into this sublimity, and there detaches himself from this world and his manifold individuations more quickly than the aged.

So easily does he become what you also are that he apparently vanishes.

Sooner or later all the dead become what we also are.

But in this reality we know little or nothing about that mode of being, and what shall we still know of this earth after death?
The dissolution of our time-bound form in eternity brings no loss of meaning. Rather does the little finger know itself a member of the hand.

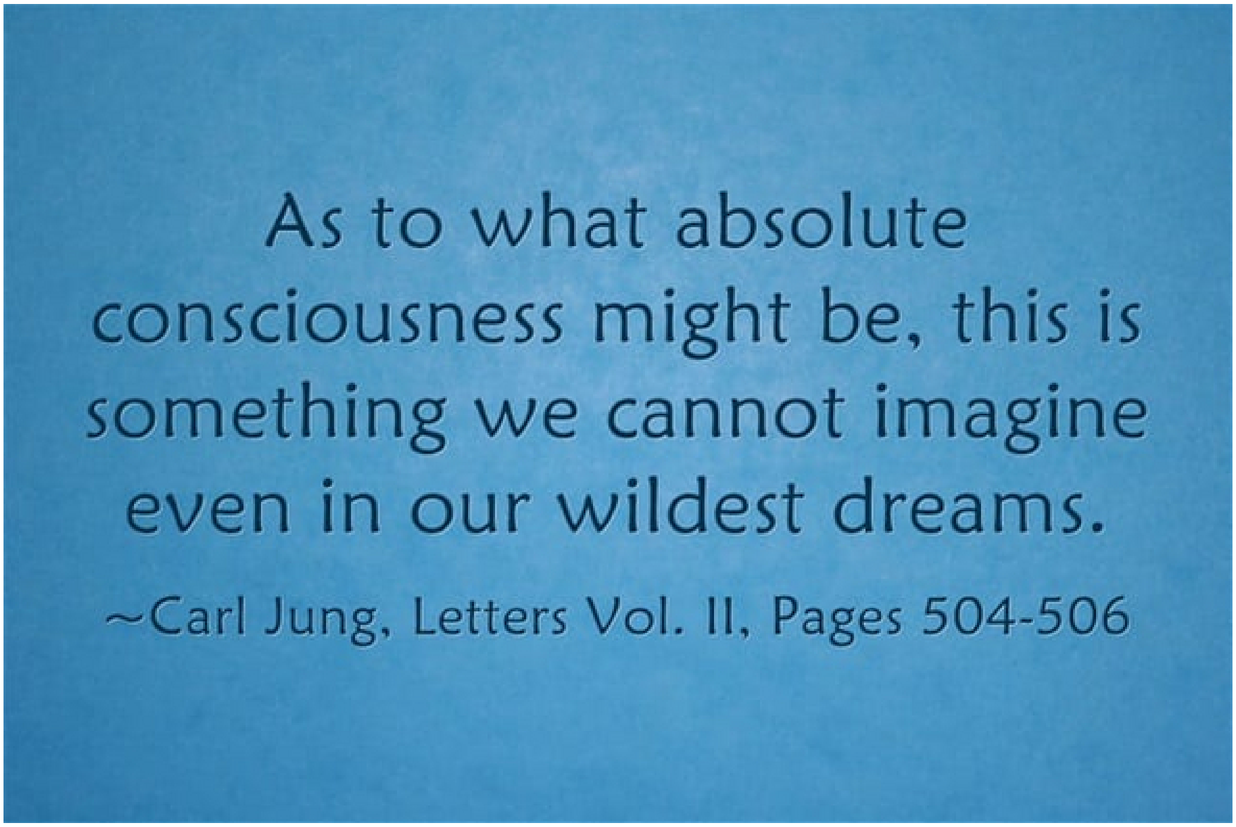
Your devoted,

C.G. Jung

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/56770-1frau2bn.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=c.g.+jung+letters&qid=1574185363&sr=8-1`

Some Carl Jung Quotation [VIII] (2019-11-18 05:01)

[1]

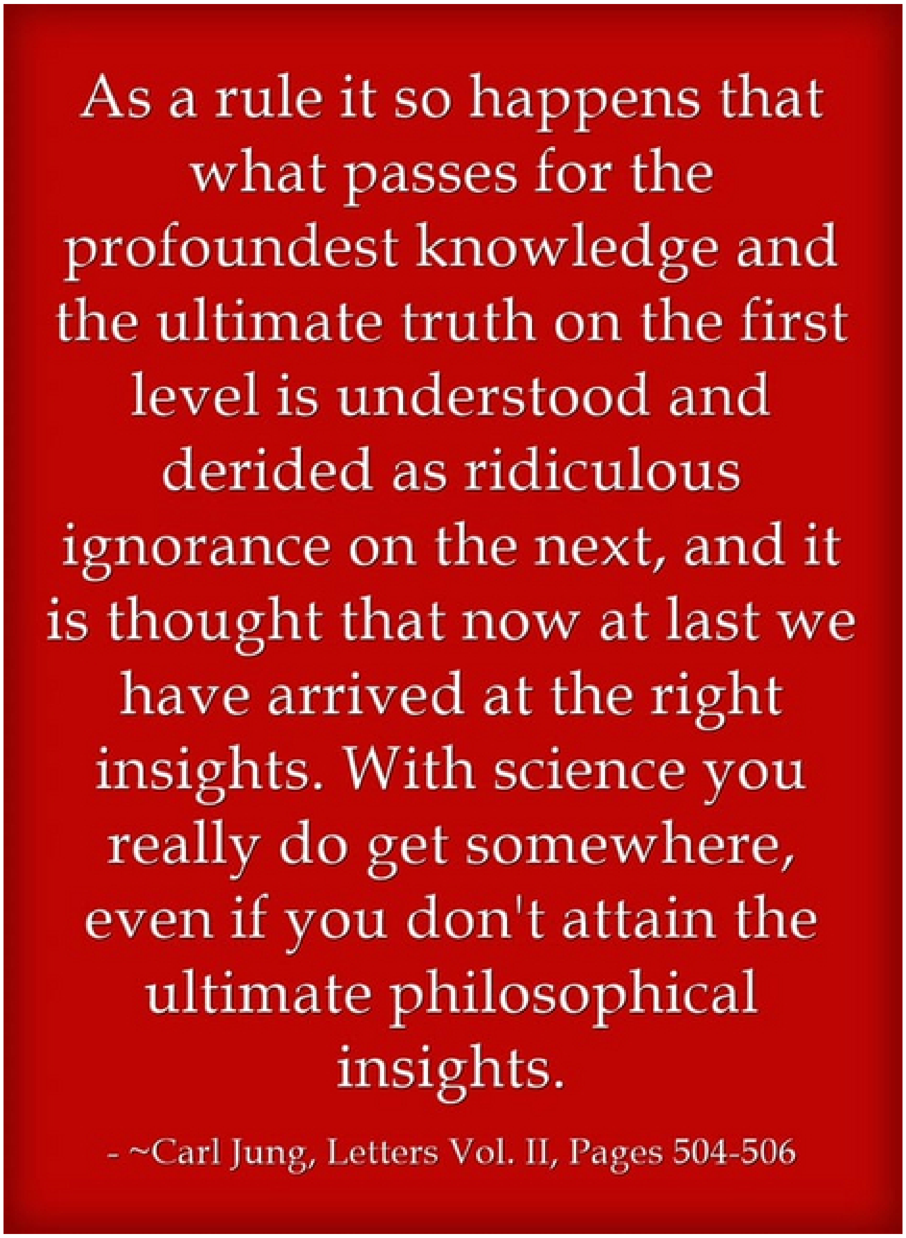


As to what absolute consciousness might be, this is something we cannot imagine even in our wildest dreams.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

As to what absolute consciousness might be, this is something we cannot imagine even in our wildest dreams.   Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

[2]

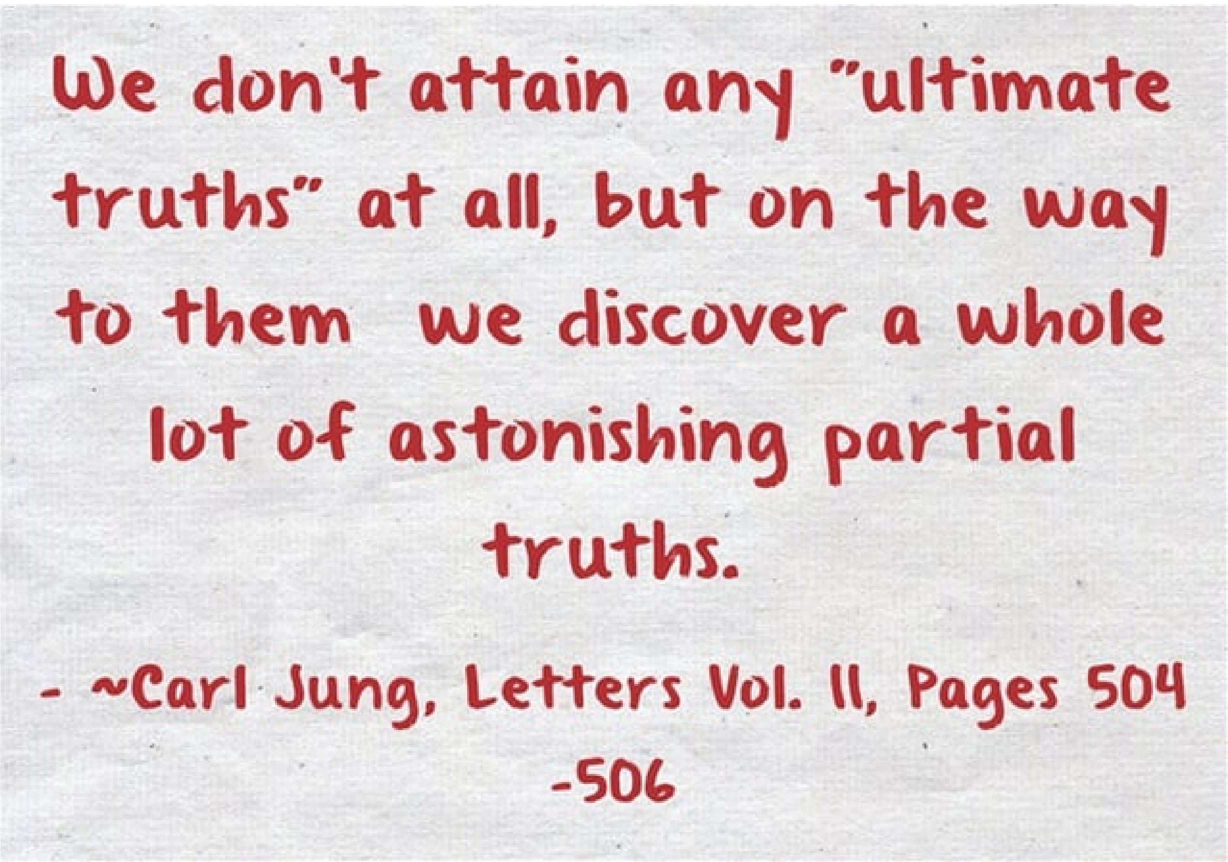


As a rule it so happens that what passes for the profoundest knowledge and the ultimate truth on the first level is understood and derided as ridiculous ignorance on the next, and it is thought that now at last we have arrived at the right insights. With science you really do get somewhere, even if you don't attain the ultimate philosophical insights.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

As a rule it so happens that what passes for the profoundest knowledge and the ultimate truth on the first level is understood and derided as ridiculous ignorance on the next, and it is thought that now at last we have arrived at the right insights. With science you really do get somewhere, even if you don’t attain the ultimate philosophical insights.
Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

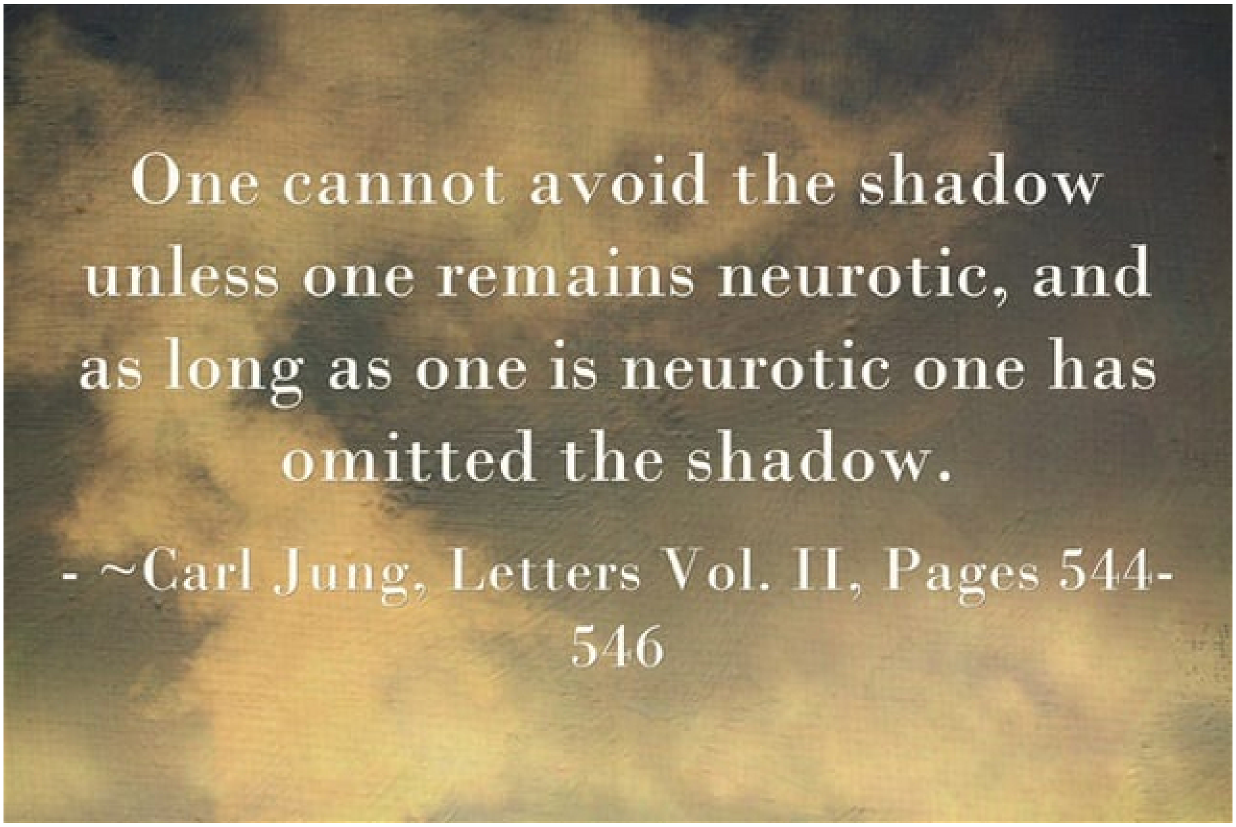
[3]



We don't attain any "ultimate truths" at all, but on the way to them we discover a whole lot of astonishing partial truths.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504 -506

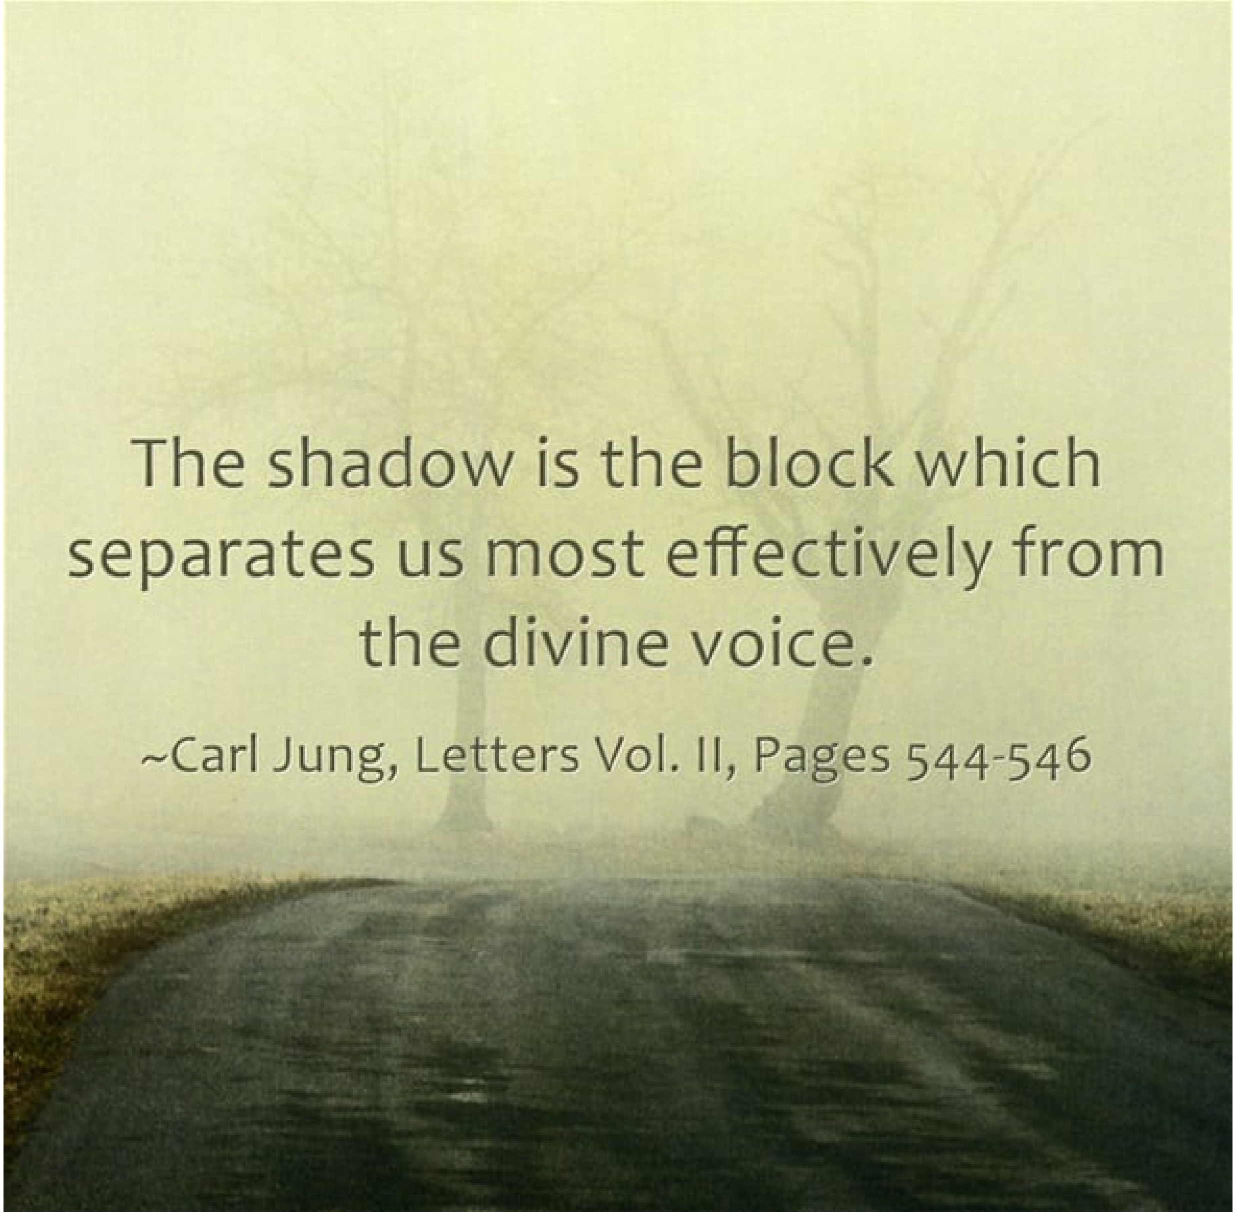
We don’t attain any "ultimate truths" at all, but on the way to them we discover a whole lot of astonishing partial truths. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506



One cannot avoid the shadow unless one remains neurotic, and as long as one is neurotic one has omitted the shadow.

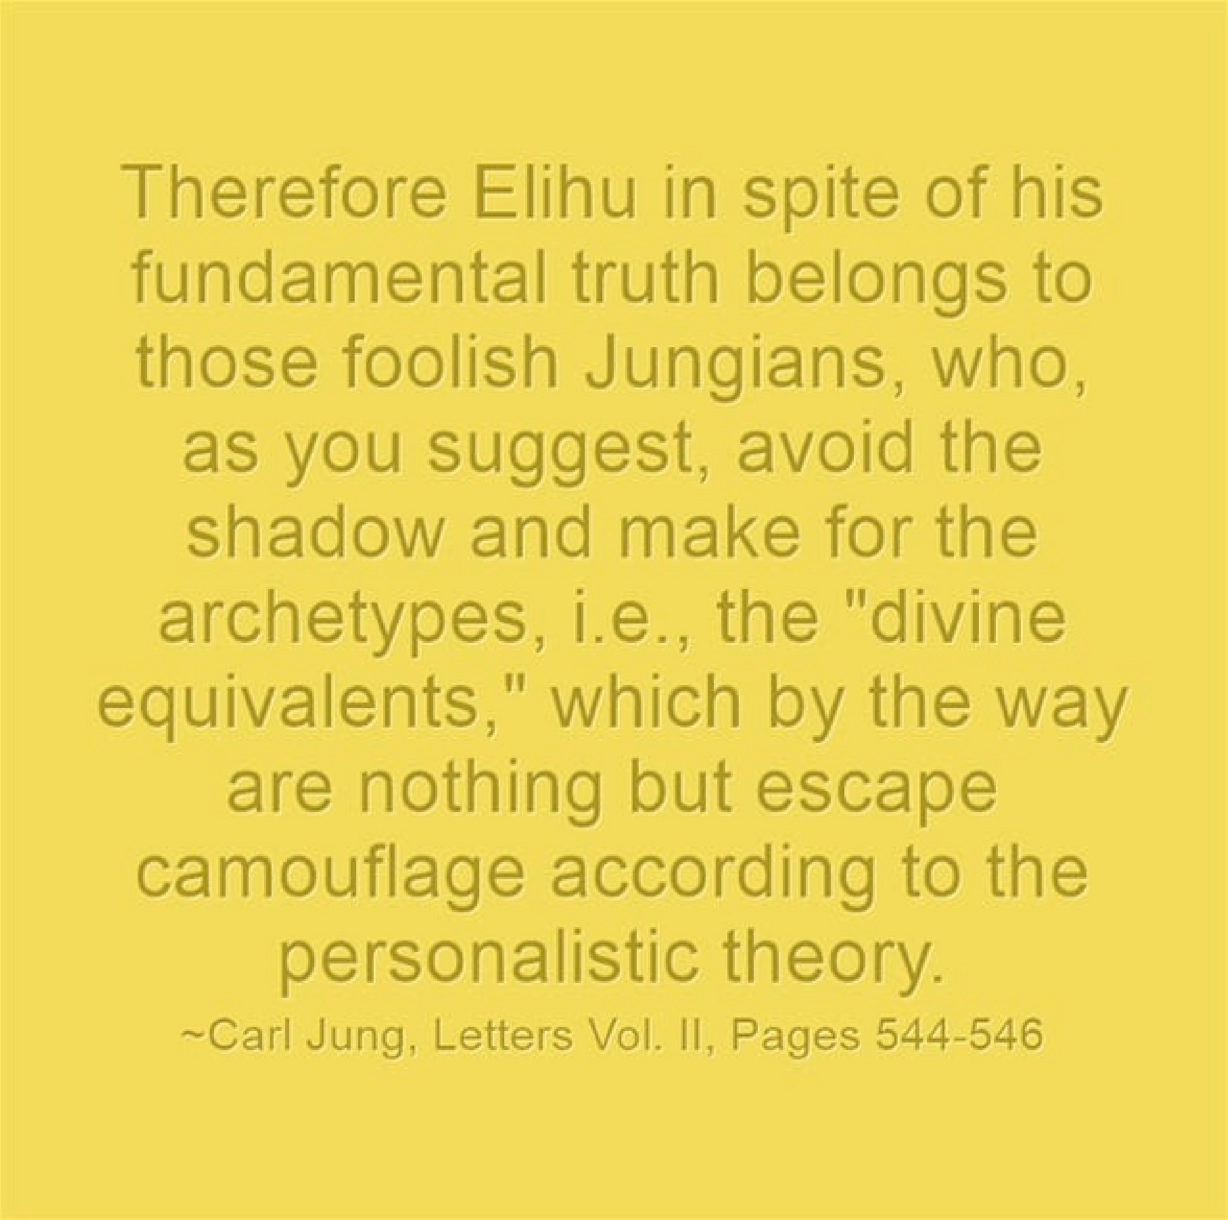
- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 544-546

One cannot avoid the shadow unless one remains neurotic, and as long as one is neurotic one has omitted the shadow. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 544-546



The shadow is the block which separates us most effectively from the divine voice.
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 544-546

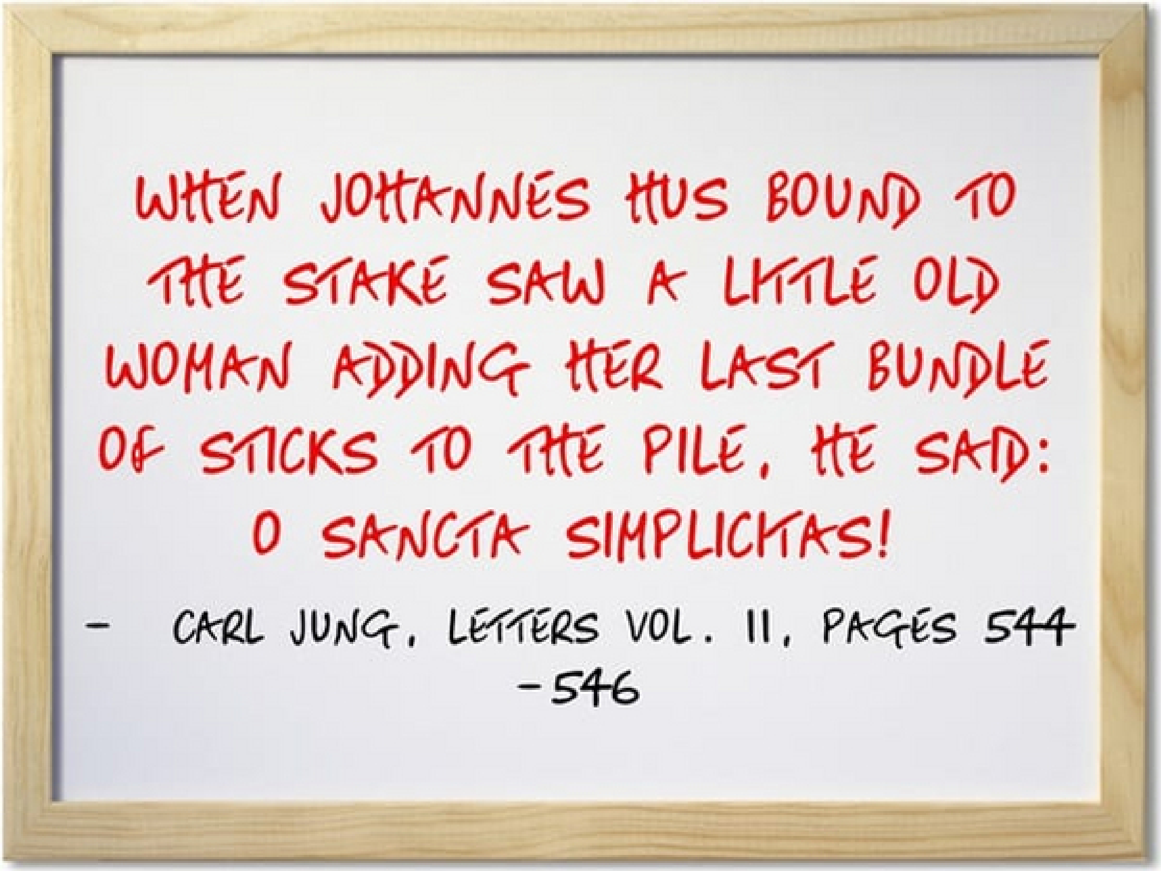
The shadow is the block which separates us most effectively from the divine voice. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 544-546



Therefore Elihu in spite of his fundamental truth belongs to those foolish Jungians, who, as you suggest, avoid the shadow and make for the archetypes, i.e., the "divine equivalents," which by the way are nothing but escape camouflage according to the personalistic theory.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 544-546

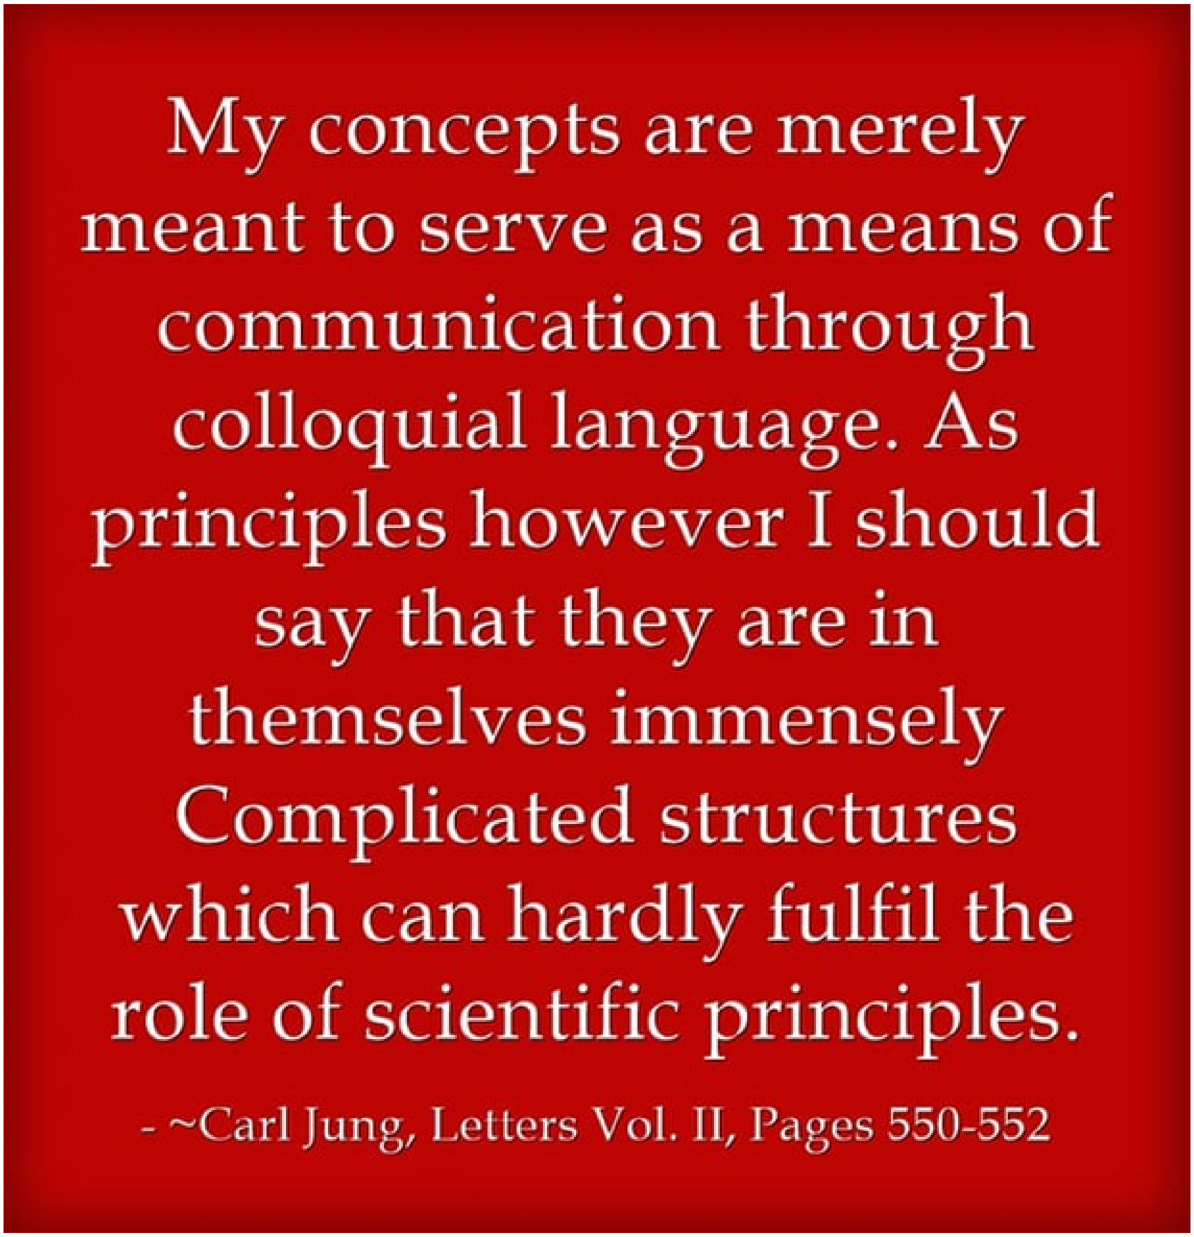
Therefore Elihu in spite of his fundamental truth belongs to those foolish Jungians, who, as you suggest, avoid the shadow and make for the archetypes, i.e., the "divine equivalents," which by the way are nothing but escape camouflage according to the personalistic theory. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 544-546



WHEN JOHANNES HUS BOUND TO THE STAKE SAW A LITTLE OLD WOMAN ADDING HER LAST BUNDLE OF STICKS TO THE PILE, HE SAID: O SANCTA SIMPLICITAS!

– CARL JUNG, LETTERS VOL. II, PAGES 544 -546

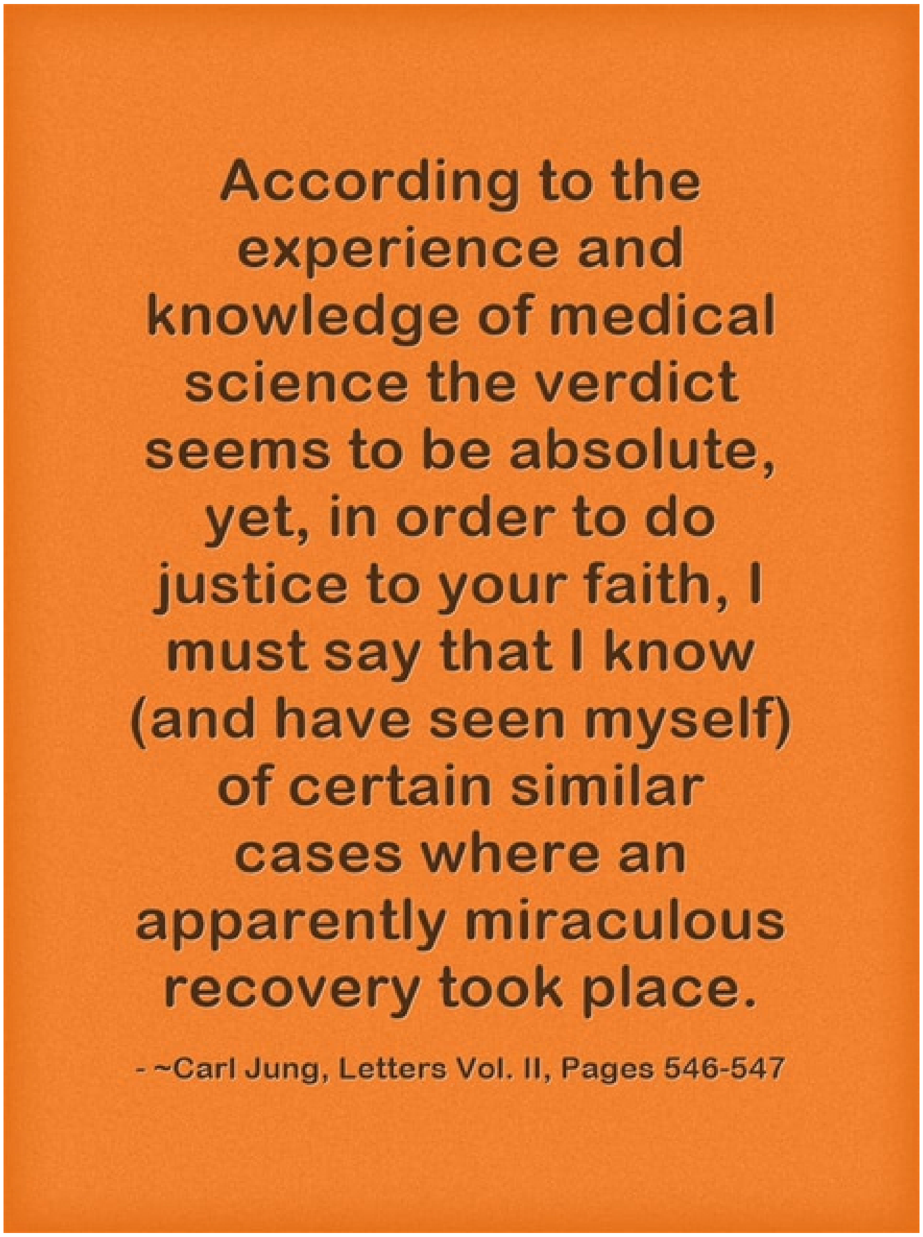
When Johannes Hus bound to the stake saw a little old woman adding her last bundle of sticks to the pile, he said: 0 sancta simplicitas! Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 544-546



My concepts are merely meant to serve as a means of communication through colloquial language. As principles however I should say that they are in themselves immensely Complicated structures which can hardly fulfil the role of scientific principles.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 550-552

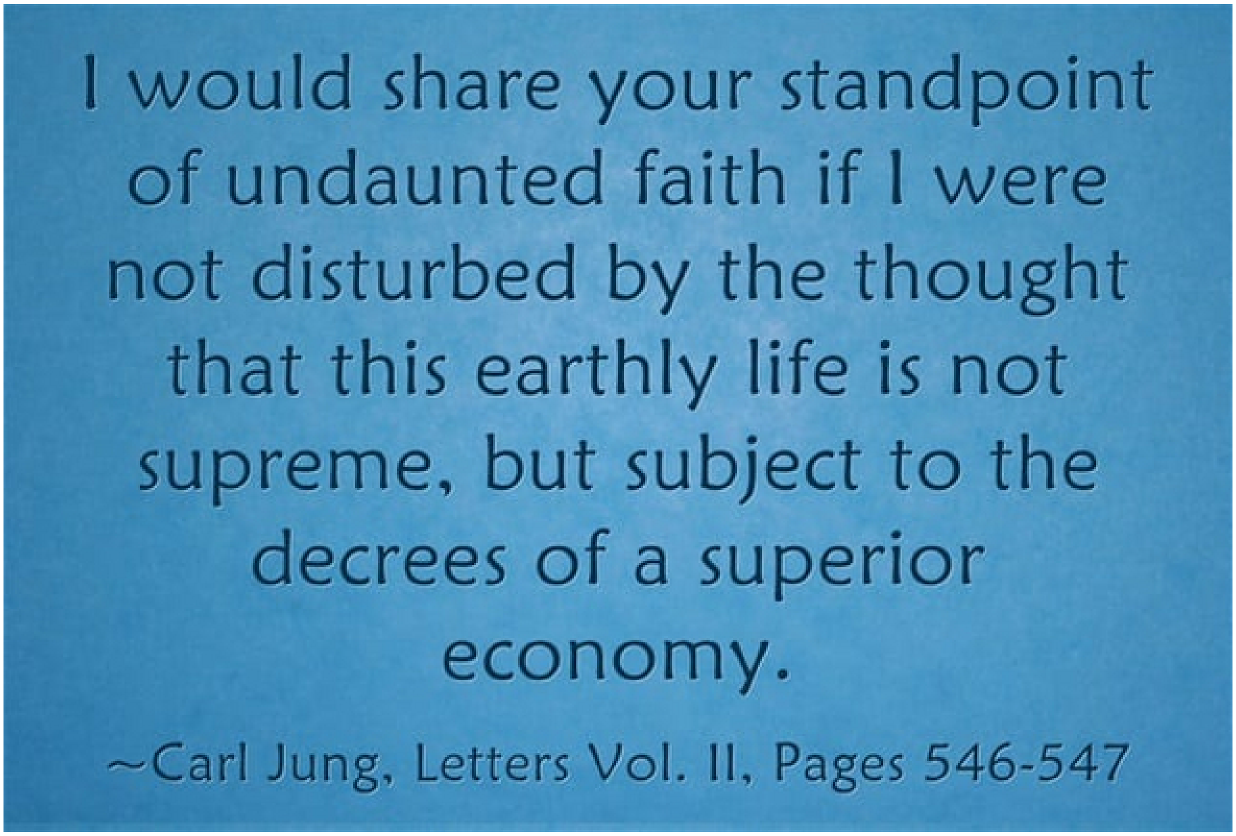
My concepts are merely meant to serve as a means of communication through colloquial language. As principles however I should say that they are in themselves immensely Complicated structures which can hardly fulfil the role of scientific principles. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 550-552



According to the experience and knowledge of medical science the verdict seems to be absolute, yet, in order to do justice to your faith, I must say that I know (and have seen myself) of certain similar cases where an apparently miraculous recovery took place.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 546-547

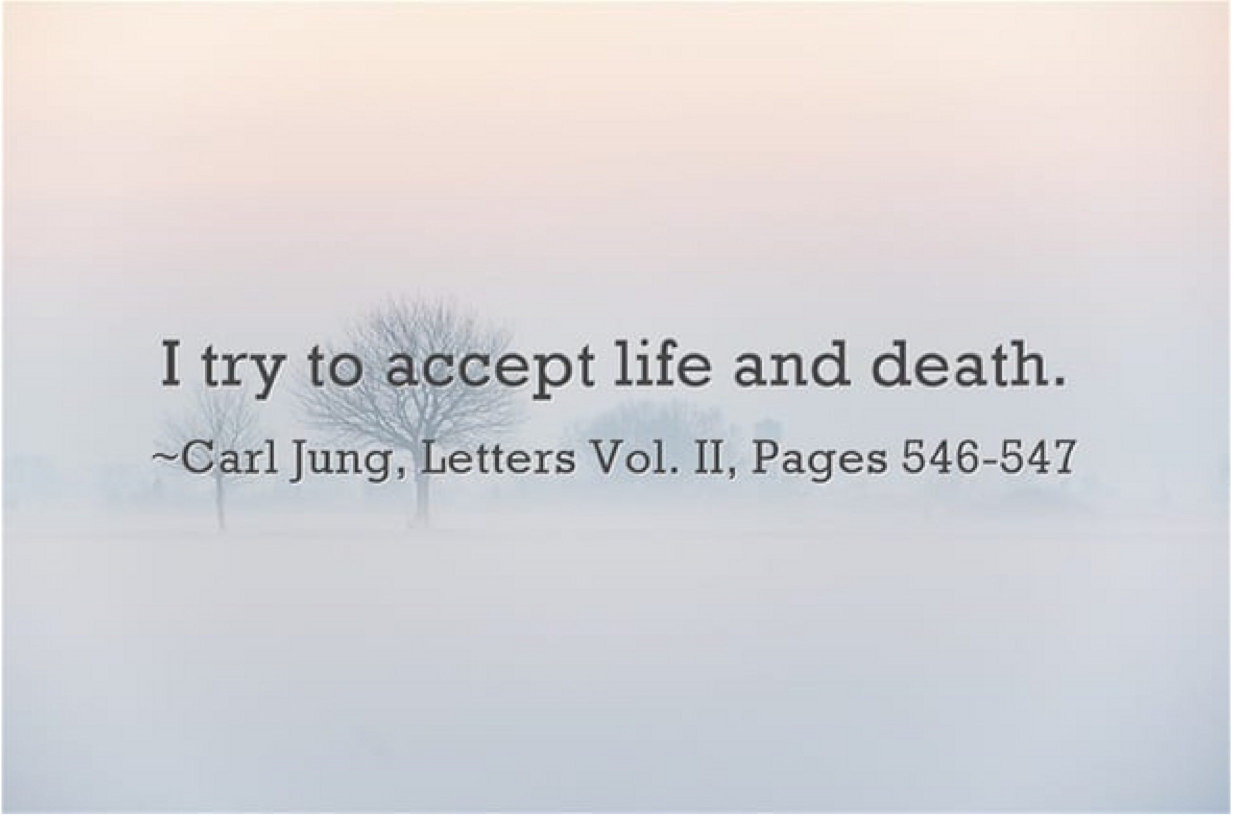
According to the experience and knowledge of medical science the verdict seems to be absolute, yet, in order to do justice to your faith, I must say that I know (and have seen myself) of certain similar cases where an apparently miraculous recovery took place. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 546-547



I would share your standpoint of undaunted faith if I were not disturbed by the thought that this earthly life is not supreme, but subject to the decrees of a superior economy.

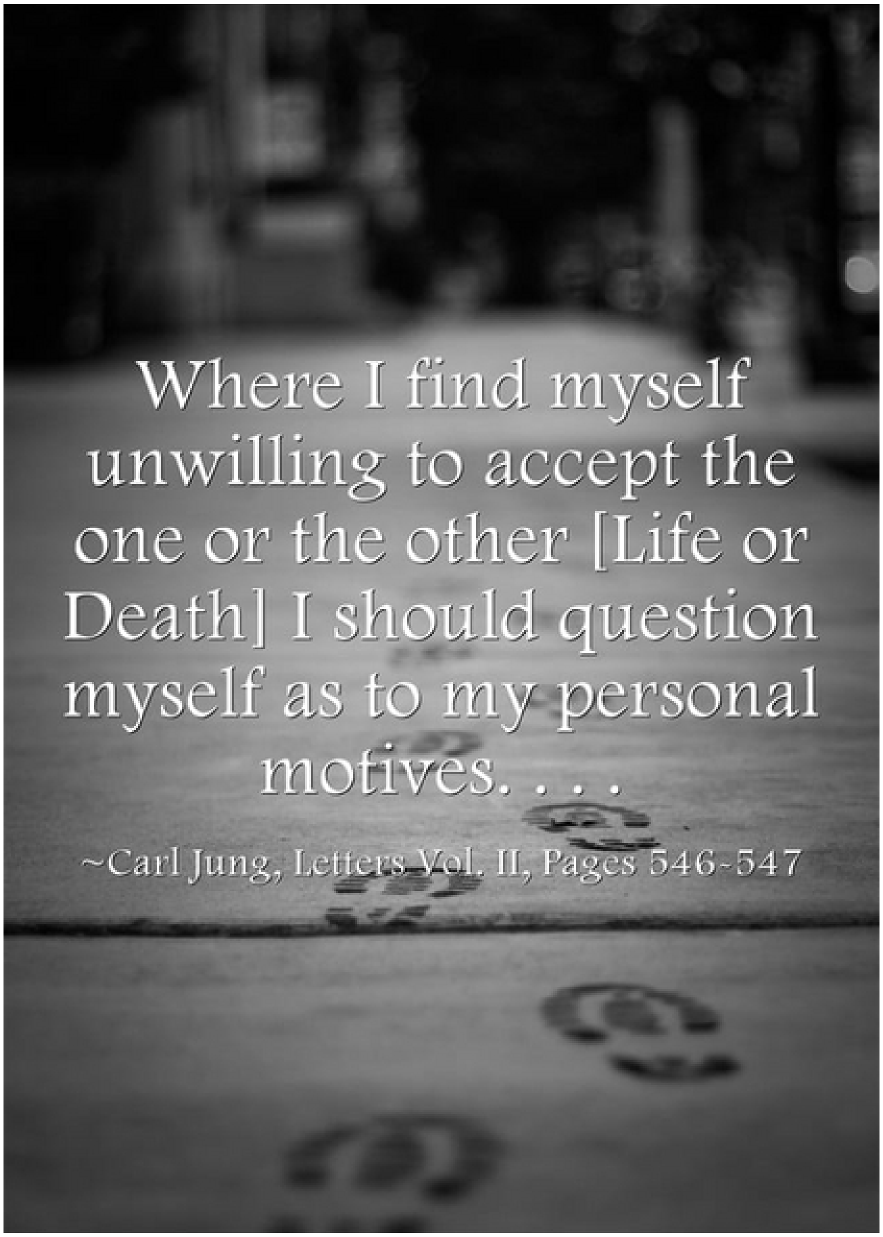
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 546-547

I would share your standpoint of undaunted faith if I were not disturbed by the thought that this earthly life is not supreme, but subject to the decrees of a superior economy. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 546-547



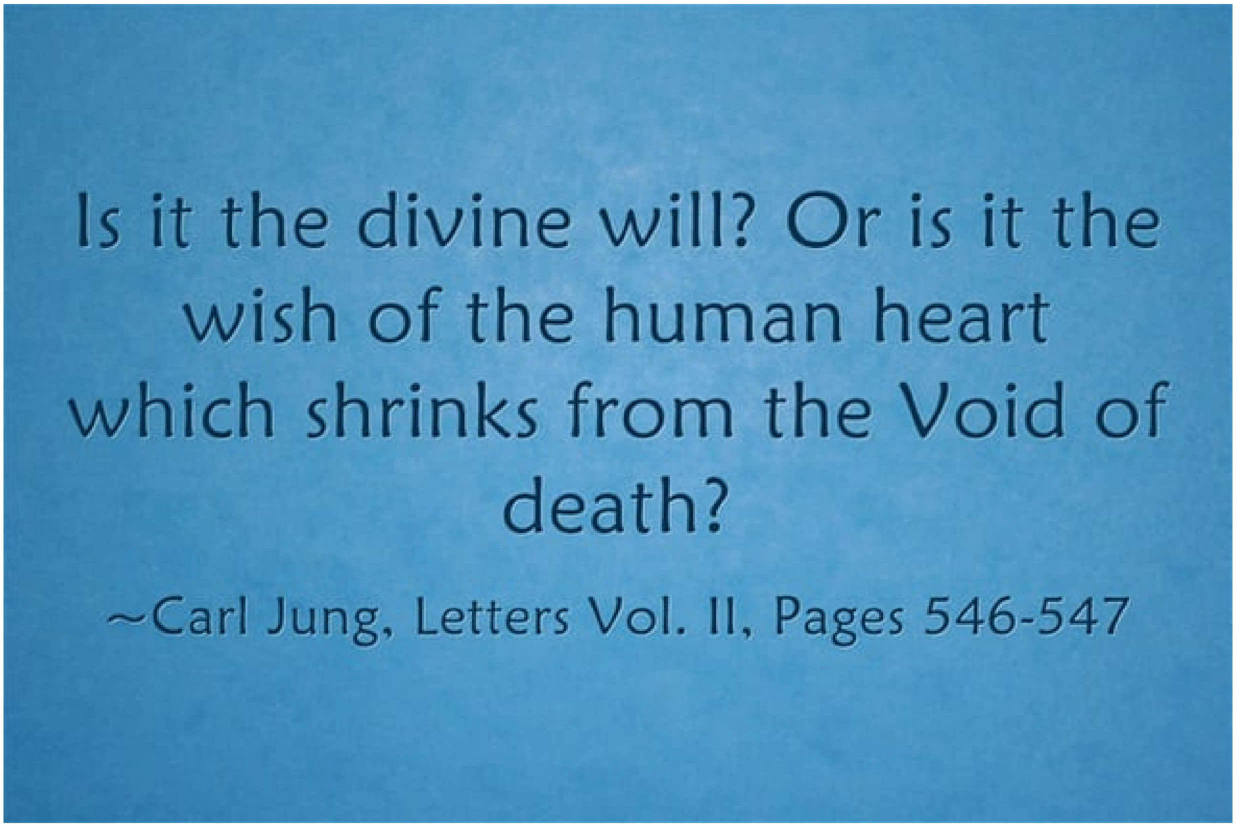
I try to accept life and death.
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 546-547

I try to accept life and death. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 546-547



Where I find myself unwilling to accept the one or the other [Life or Death] I should question myself as to my personal motives. . . .
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 546-547

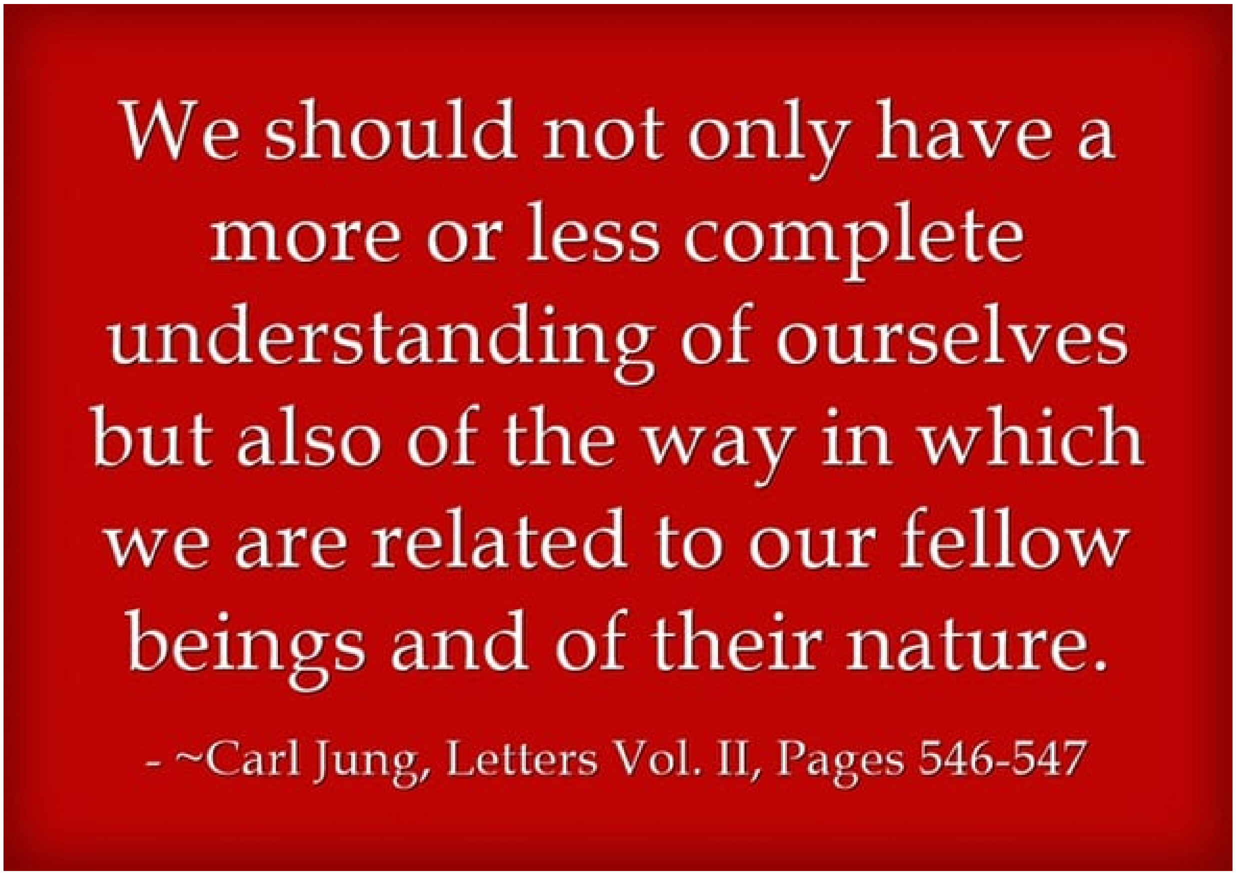
Where I find myself unwilling to accept the one or the other [Life or Death] I should question myself as to my personal motives. . . . Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 546-547



Is it the divine will? Or is it the wish of the human heart which shrinks from the Void of death?

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 546-547

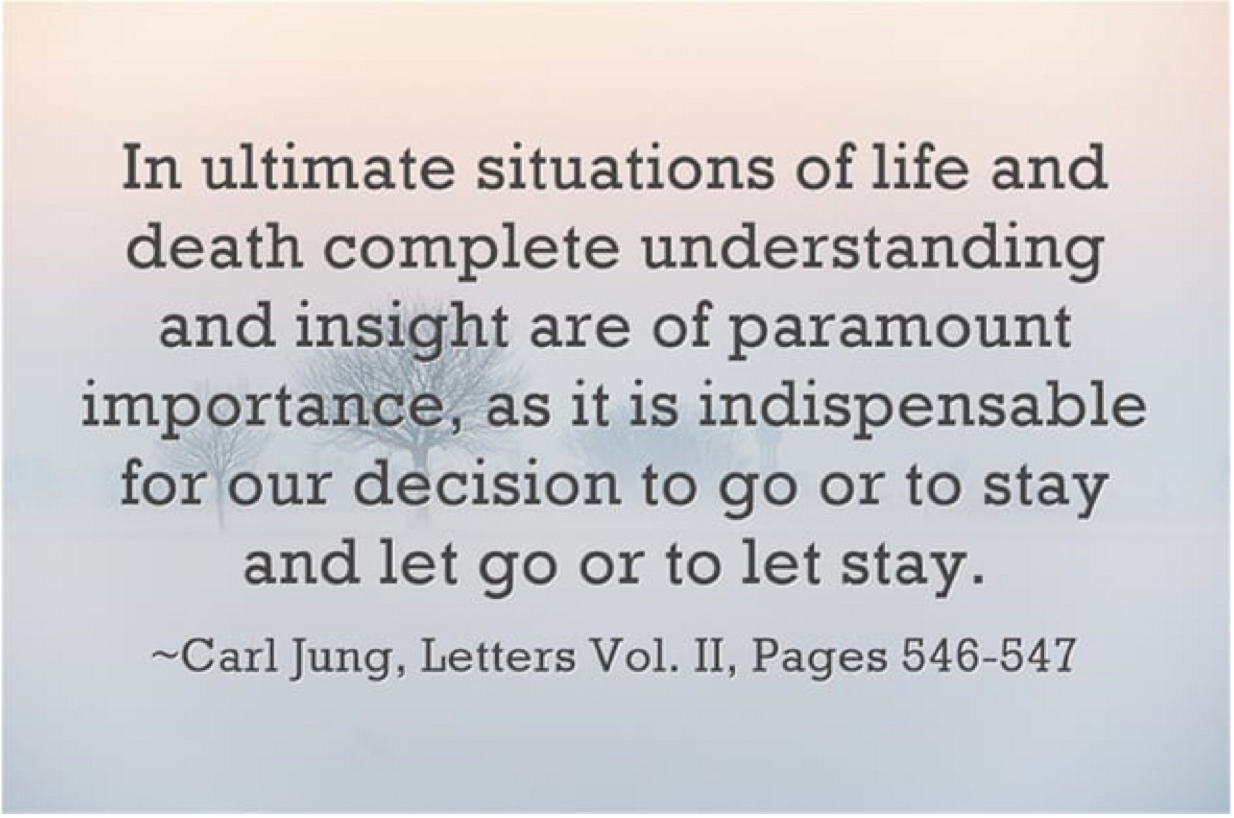
Is it the divine will? Or is it the wish of the human heart which shrinks from the Void of death? Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 546-547



We should not only have a more or less complete understanding of ourselves but also of the way in which we are related to our fellow beings and of their nature.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 546-547

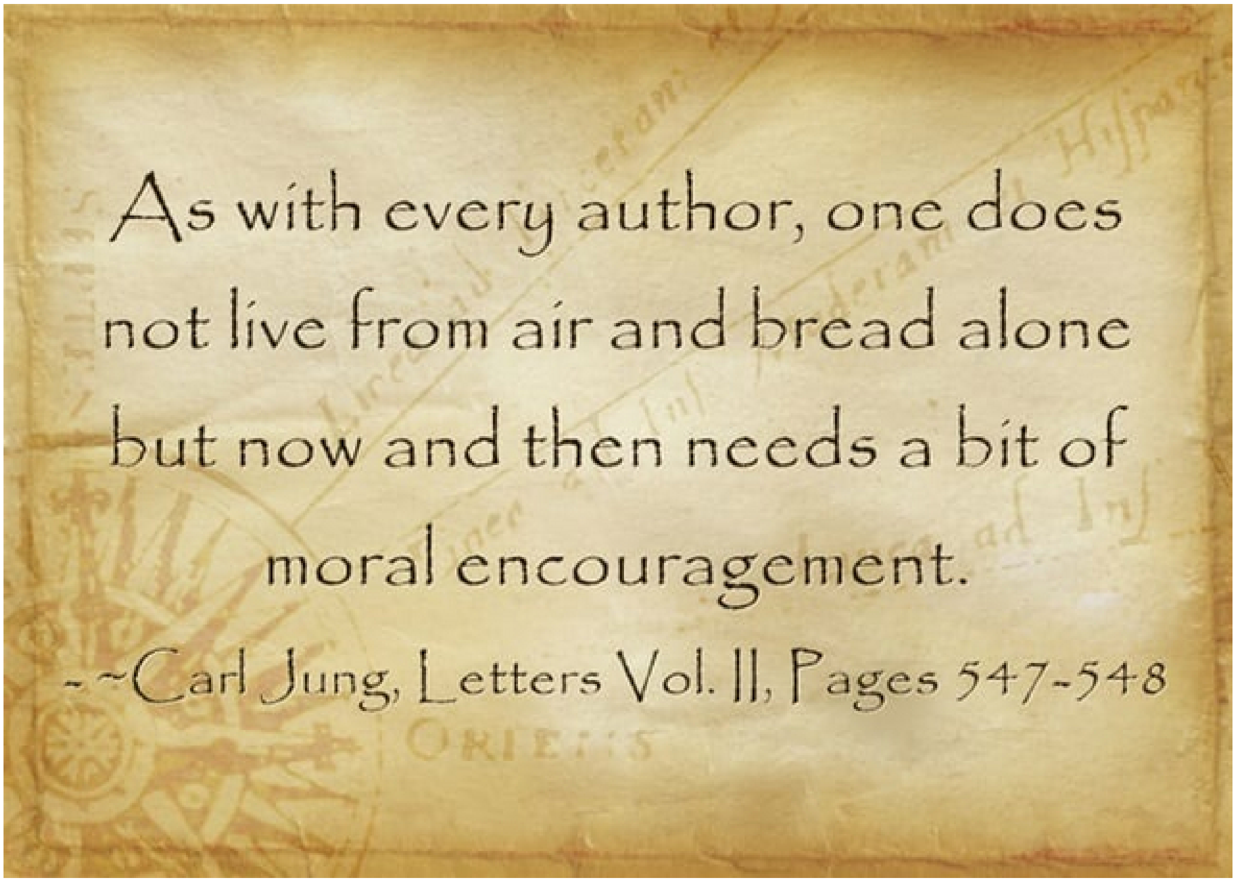
We should not only have a more or less complete understanding of ourselves but also of the way in which we are related to our fellow beings and of their nature. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 546-547



In ultimate situations of life and death complete understanding and insight are of paramount importance, as it is indispensable for our decision to go or to stay and let go or to let stay.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 546-547

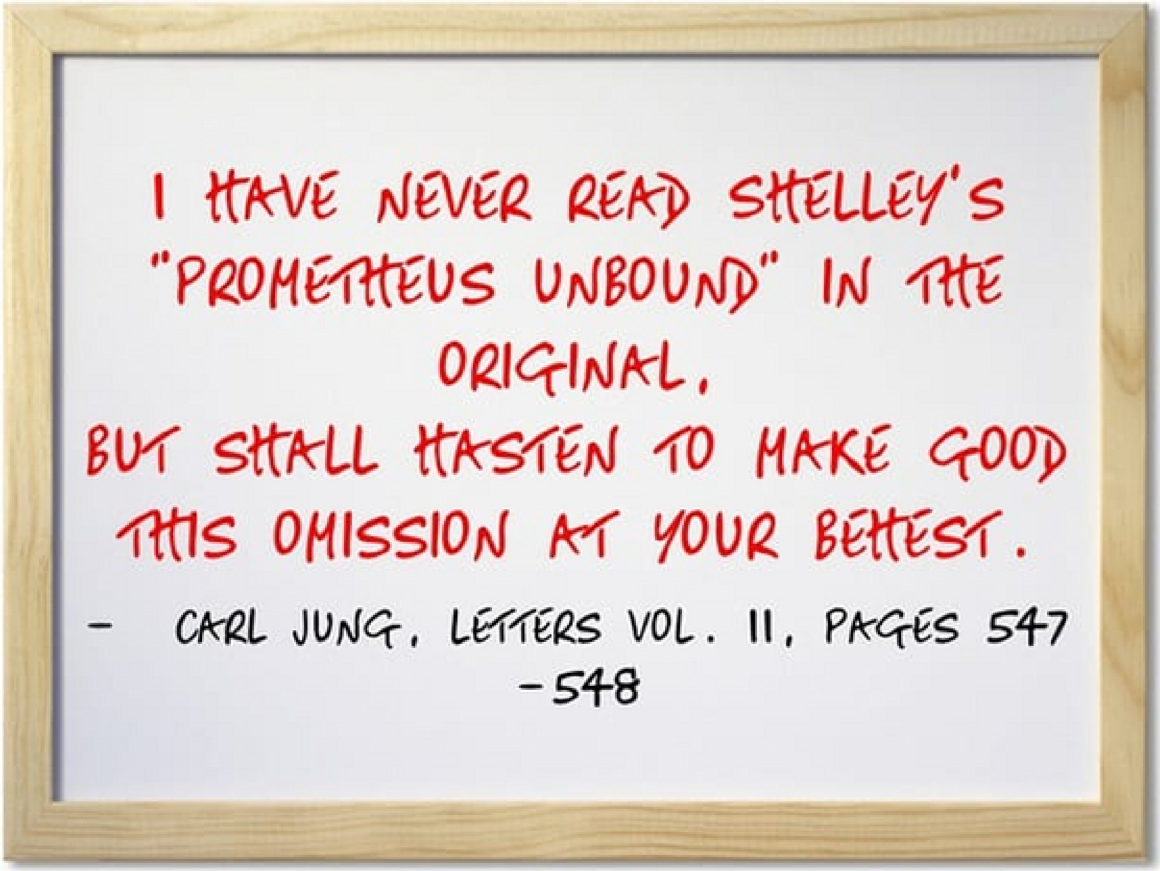
In ultimate situations of life and death complete understanding and insight are of paramount importance, as it is indispensable for our decision to go or to stay and let go or to let stay. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 546-547



As with every author, one does not live from air and bread alone but now and then needs a bit of moral encouragement.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 547-548

As with every author, one does not live from air and bread alone but now and then needs a bit of moral encouragement. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 547-548



I HAVE NEVER READ SHELLEY'S "PROMETHEUS UNBOUND" IN THE ORIGINAL,
BUT SHALL HASTEN TO MAKE GOOD THIS OMISSION AT YOUR BEHEST.

– CARL JUNG, LETTERS VOL. II, PAGES 547 -548

I have never read Shelley’s "Prometheus Unbound" in the original, but shall hasten to make good this omission at your behest. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 547-548

What I have heard from the theological side has readied me for a special compartment in hell.
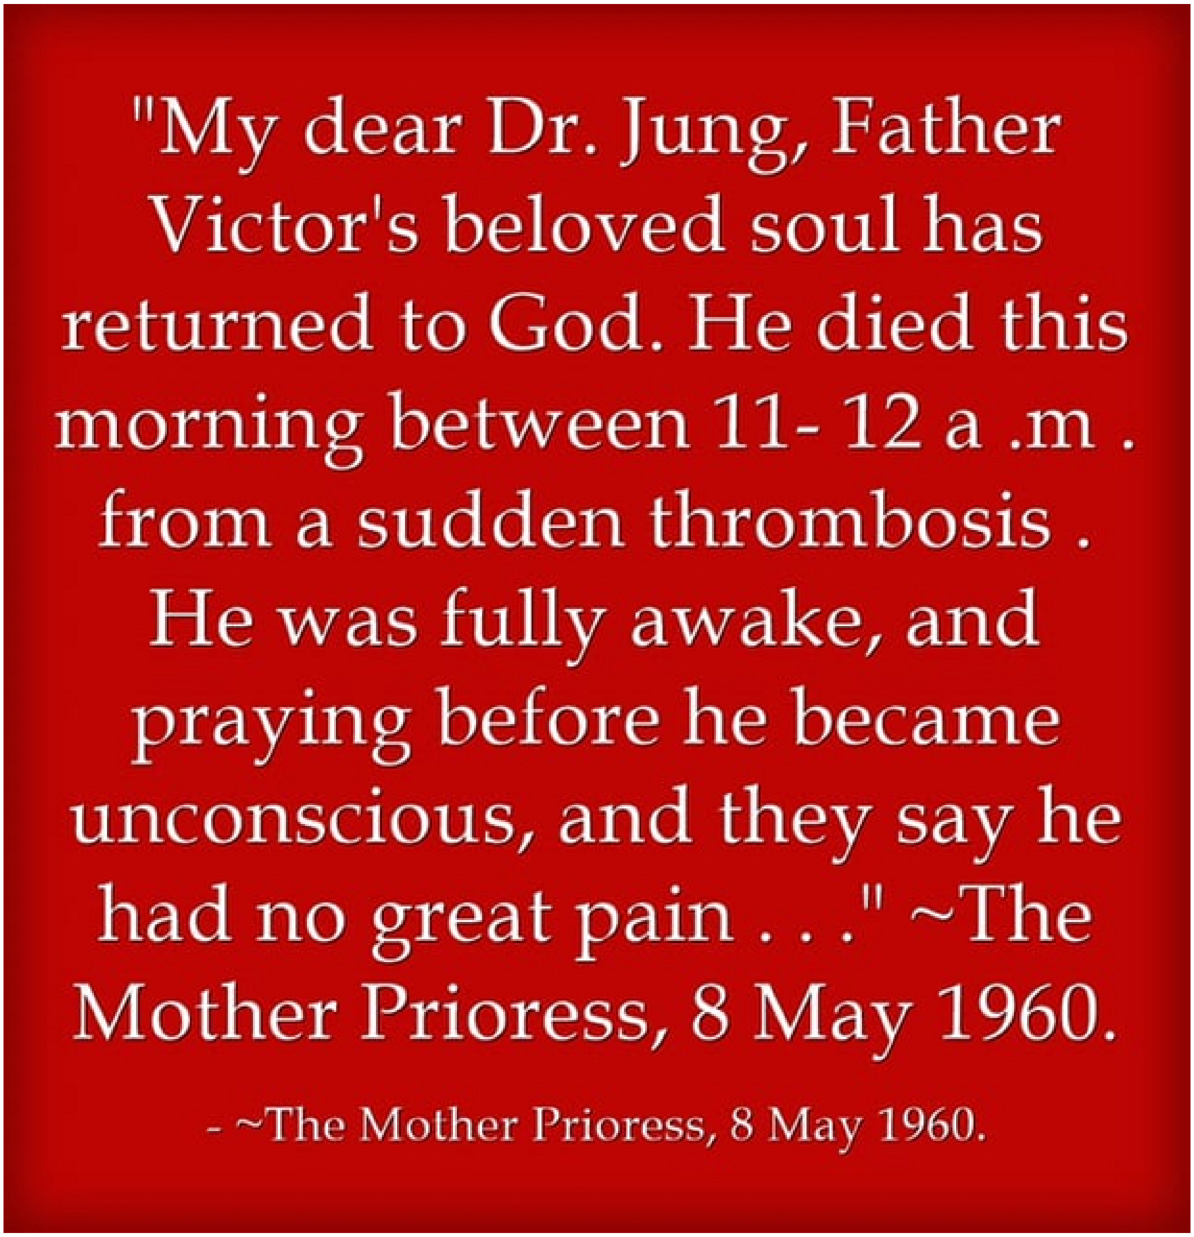
- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 547-548

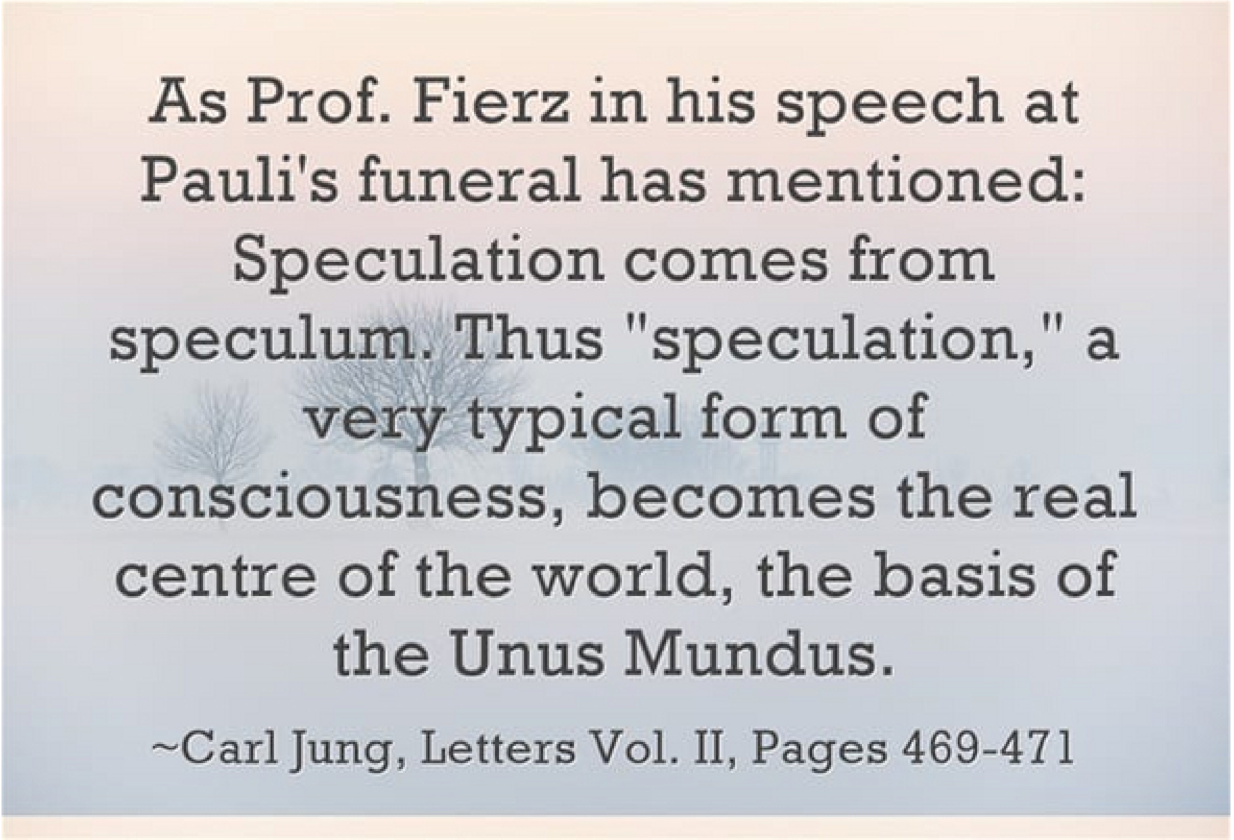
What I have heard from the theological side has readied me for a special compartment in hell. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 547-548



"My dear Dr. Jung, Father Victor's beloved soul has returned to God. He died this morning between 11- 12 a .m . from a sudden thrombosis . He was fully awake, and praying before he became unconscious, and they say he had no great pain . . ." ~The Mother Prioress, 8 May 1960.

- ~The Mother Prioress, 8 May 1960.

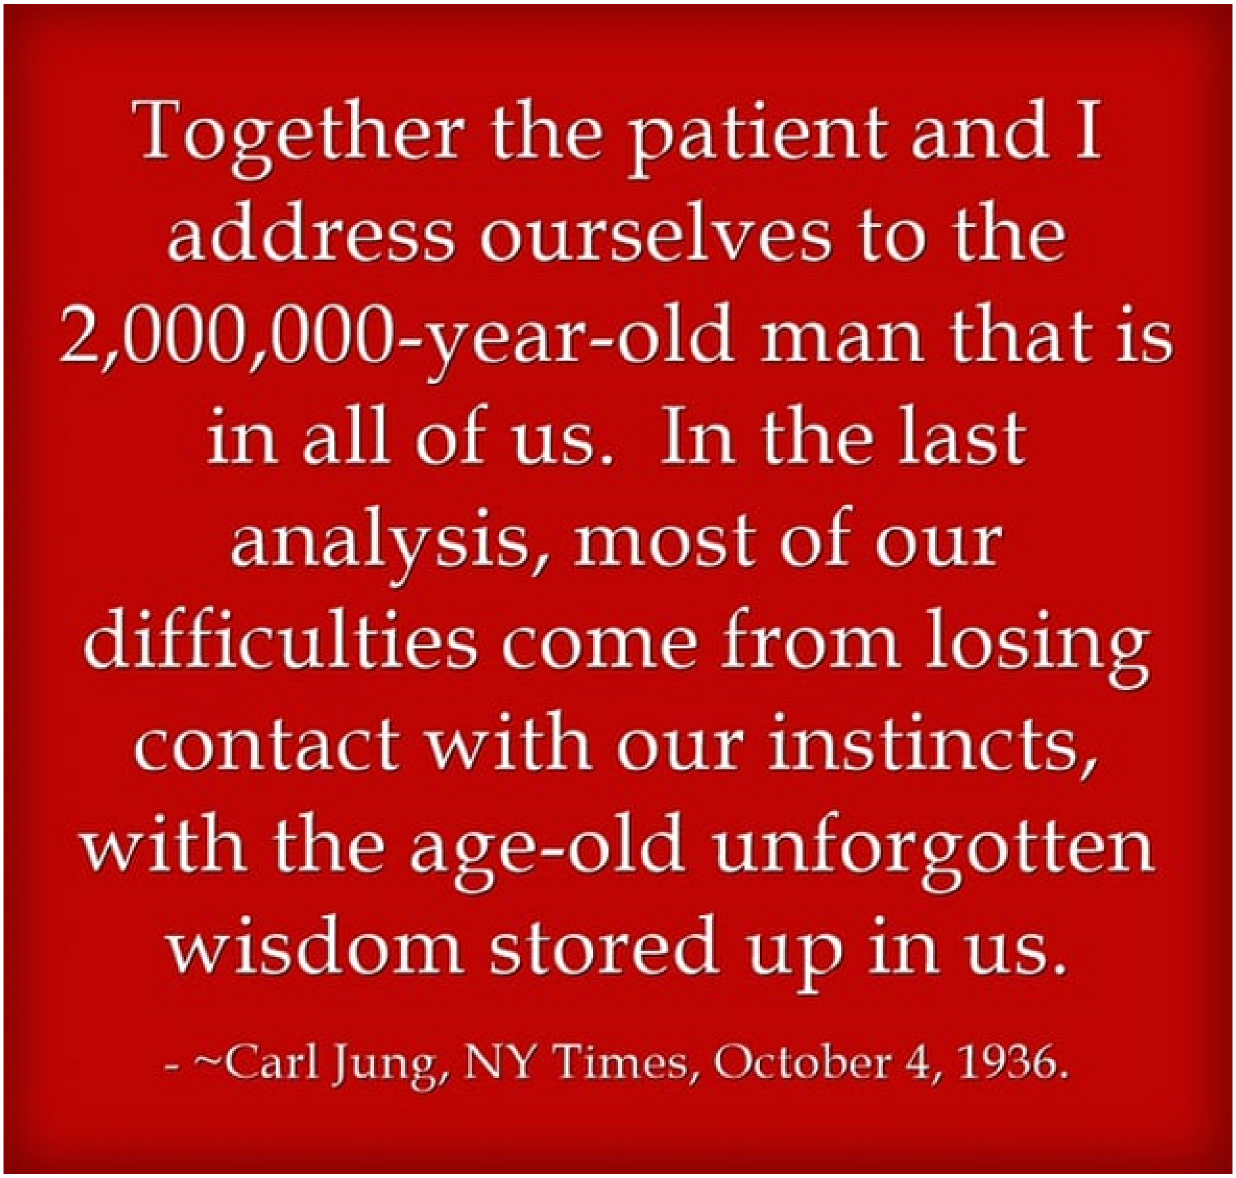
"My dear Dr. Jung, Father Victor’s beloved soul has returned to God. He died this morning between 11- 12 a .m . from a sudden thrombosis . He was fully awake, and praying before he became unconscious, and they say he had no great pain . . ." The Mother Prioress, 8 May 1960.



As Prof. Fierz in his speech at Pauli's funeral has mentioned: Speculation comes from speculum. Thus "speculation," a very typical form of consciousness, becomes the real centre of the world, the basis of the Unus Mundus.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 469-471

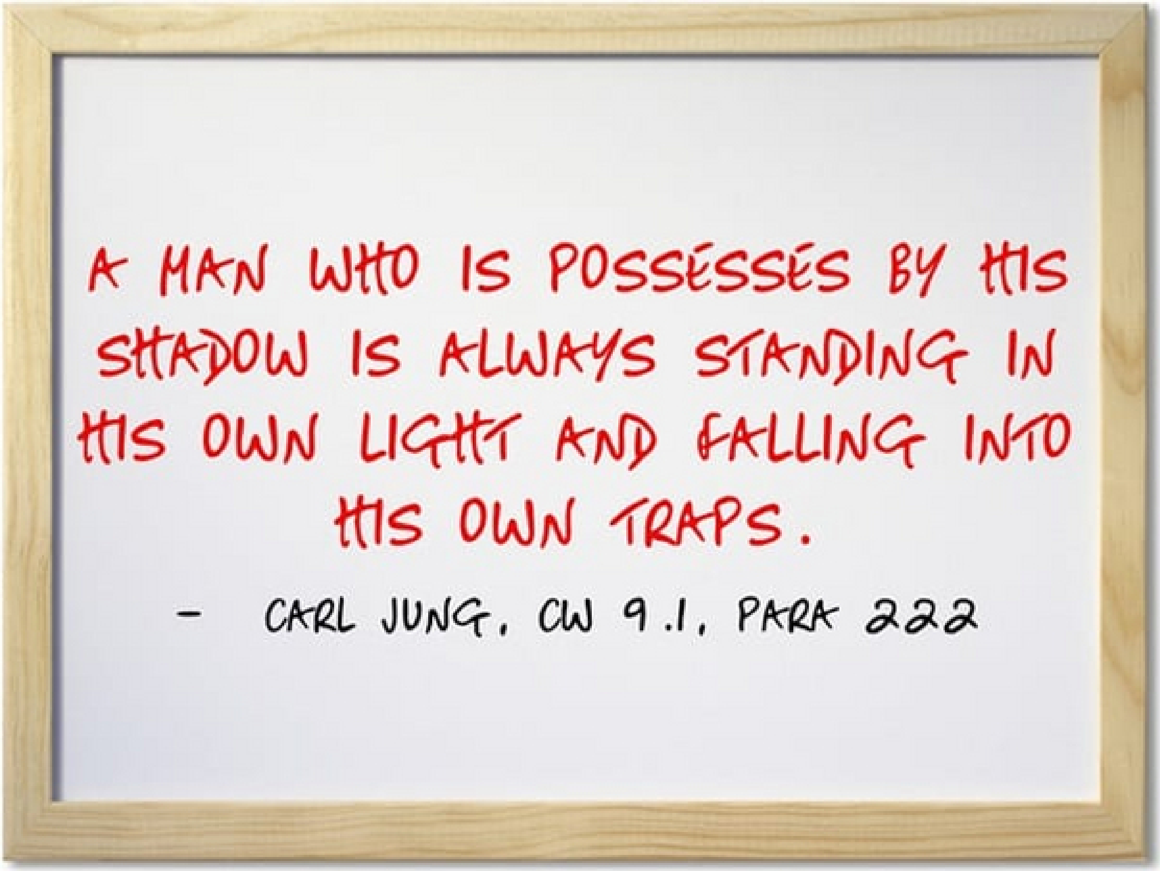
As Prof. Fierz in his speech at Pauli’s funeral has mentioned: Speculation comes from speculum. Thus "speculation," a very typical form of consciousness, becomes the real centre of the world, the basis of the Unus Mundus. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 469-471



Together the patient and I address ourselves to the 2,000,000-year-old man that is in all of us. In the last analysis, most of our difficulties come from losing contact with our instincts, with the age-old unforgotten wisdom stored up in us.

- ~Carl Jung, NY Times, October 4, 1936.

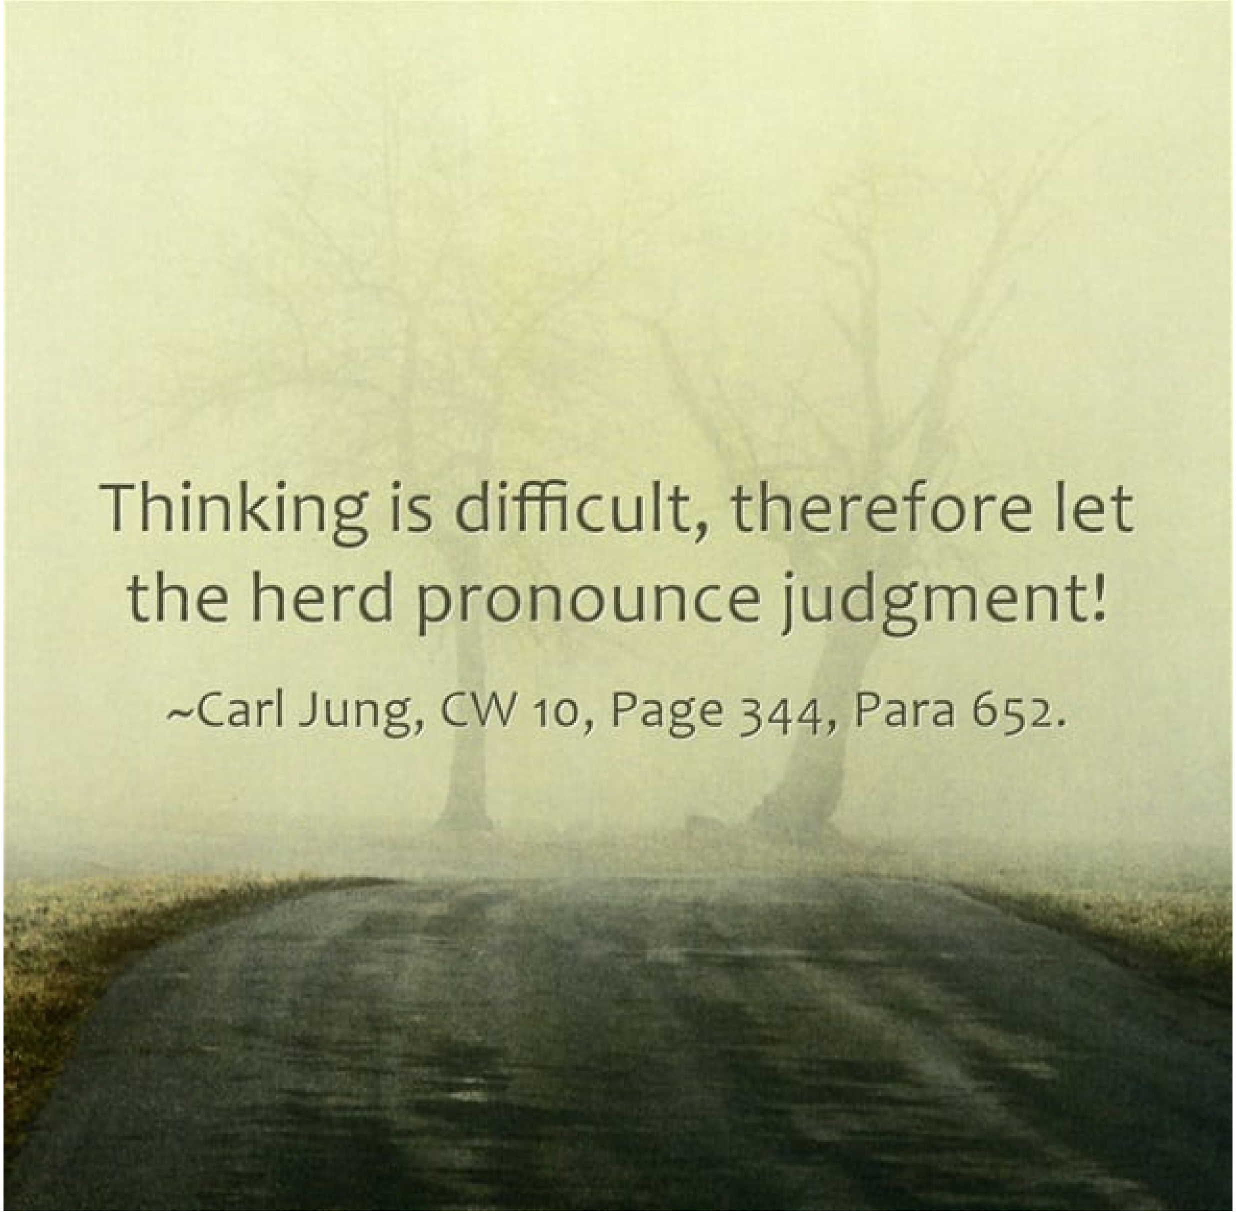
Together the patient and I address ourselves to the 2,000,000-year-old man that is in all of us. In the last analysis, most of our difficulties come from losing contact with our instincts, with the age-old unforgotten wisdom stored up in us. Carl Jung, NY Times, October 4, 1936.



A MAN WHO IS POSSESSES BY HIS SHADOW IS ALWAYS STANDING IN HIS OWN LIGHT AND FALLING INTO HIS OWN TRAPS.

- CARL JUNG. CW 9.1, PARA 222

A man who is possesses by his shadow is always standing in his own light and falling into his own traps.   Carl Jung, CW 9.1, Para 222



Thinking is difficult, therefore let the herd pronounce judgment!
~Carl Jung, CW 10, Page 344, Para 652.

Thinking is difficult, therefore let the herd pronounce judgment! Carl Jung, CW 10, Page 344, Para 652.

The joyous Christian tells us how things ought to be, but he is careful not to touch things as they are.

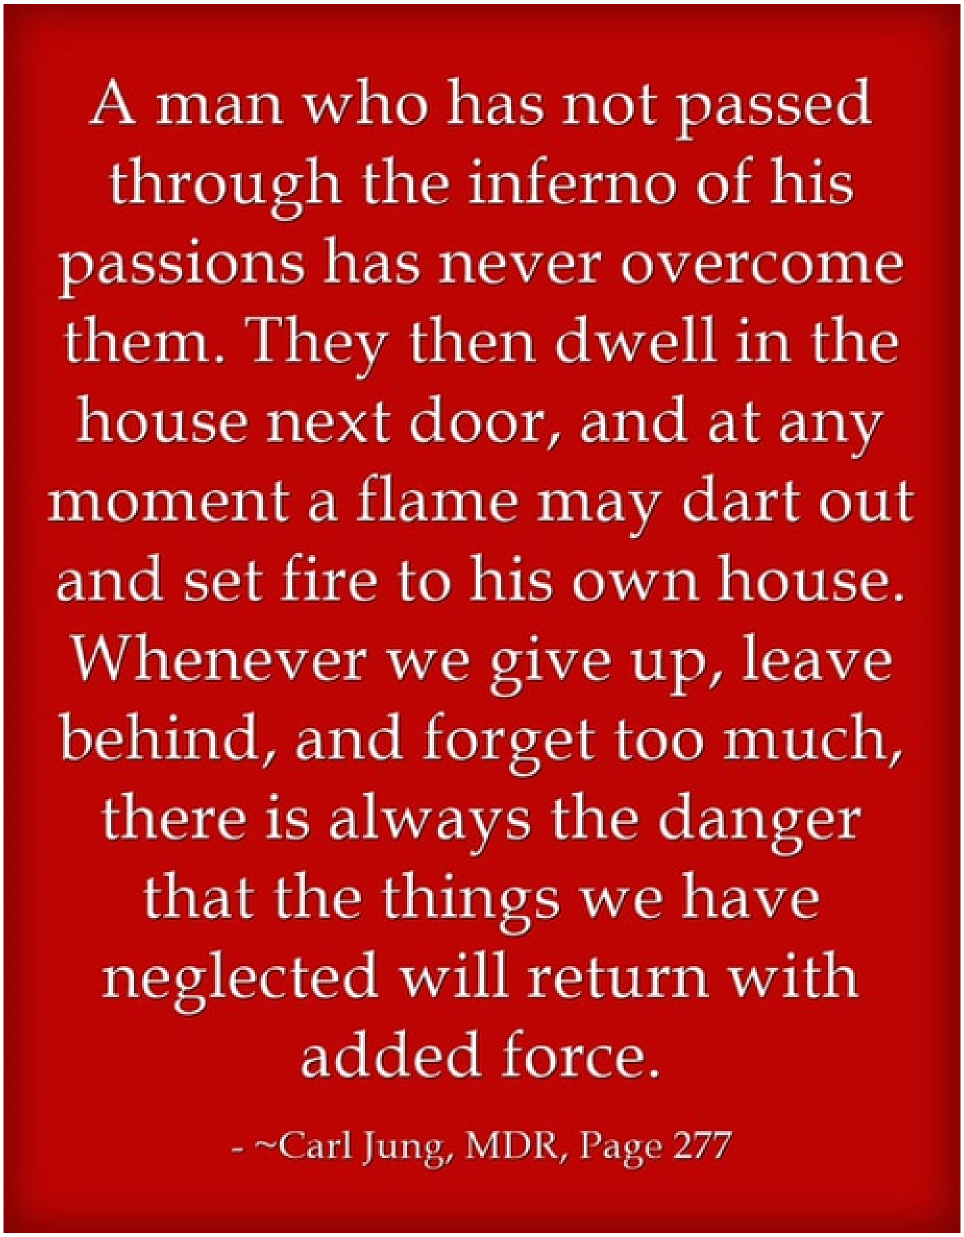
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 556-558

The joyous Christian tells us how things ought to be, but he is careful not to touch things as they are. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 556-558



A man who has not passed through the inferno of his passions has never overcome them. They then dwell in the house next door, and at any moment a flame may dart out and set fire to his own house. Whenever we give up, leave behind, and forget too much, there is always the danger that the things we have neglected will return with added force.

- ~Carl Jung, MDR, Page 277

A man who has not passed through the inferno of his passions has never overcome them. They then dwell in the house next door, and at any moment a flame may dart out and set fire to his own house. Whenever we give up, leave behind, and forget too much, there is always the danger that the things we have neglected will return with added force. Carl Jung, MDR, Page 277

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/47f56-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/84e6f-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/d3c2f-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/a614a-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/e4039-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/baaca-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/1e428-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/5fdde-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/eae81-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/6d80d-jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/a1082-kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/6d5a1-lll.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/ab092-mmm.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/af004-nnn.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/86675-ooo.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/07018-ppp.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/7152c-qqq.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/3bbdd-rrr.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/346c6-sss.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/afeab-ttt.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/d8f62-uuu.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/8ddec-vvv.jpg`

23. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/079ff-www.jpg
24. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/d0ab7-xxx.jpg
25. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/5e8bf-yyy.jpg

---

Carl Jung: The first childhood dreams contain the samskaras, the archetypes. (2019-11-18 05:01)

[1]

[2]Carl Jung: Kundalini Yoga

The first childhood dreams contain the samskaras, the archetypes.

It is thus in no way surprising that we find obvious cakras or mandalas in children's drawings.

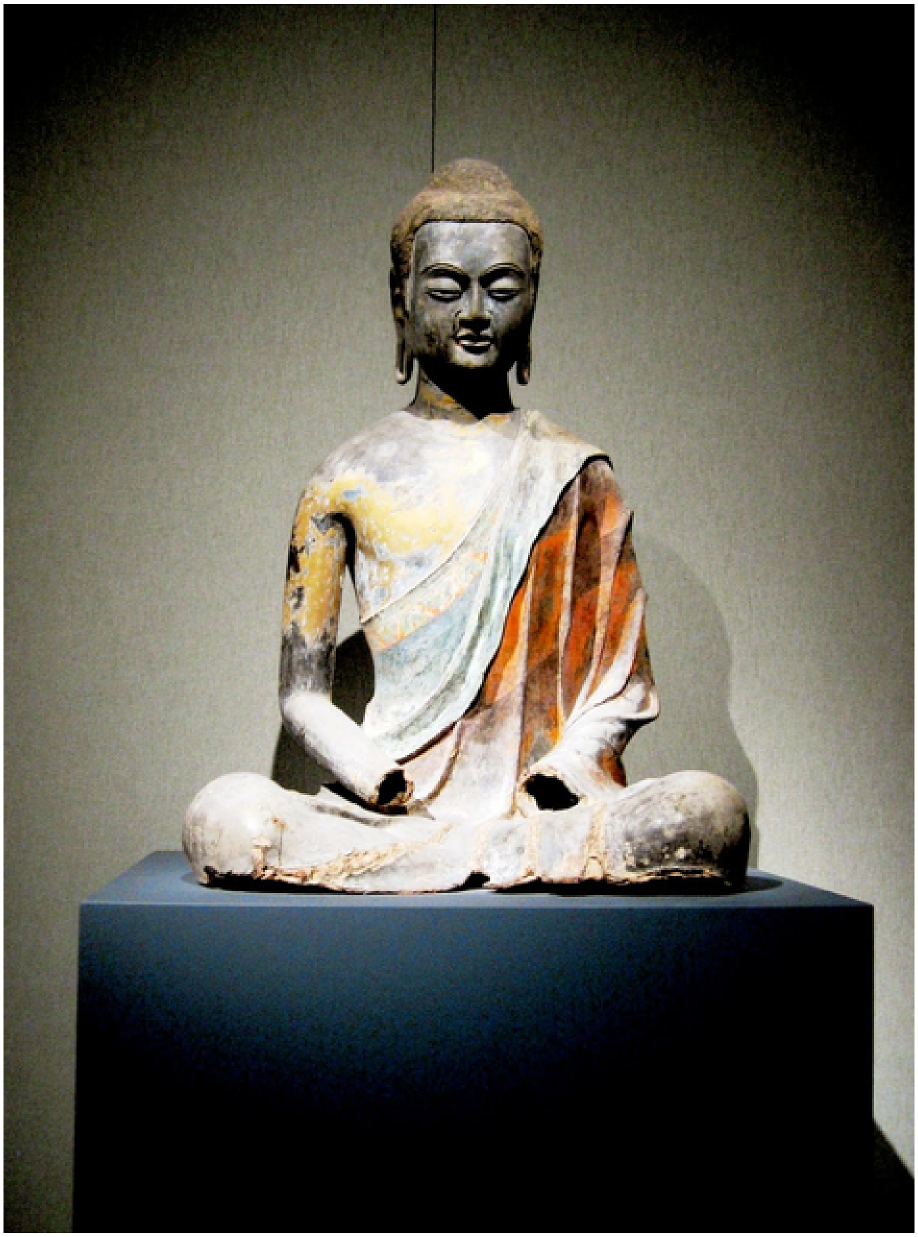
Small children are very old; later on we soon grow younger. In our middle age we are youngest, precisely at the time when we have completely or almost completely lost contact with the collective unconscious, the samskaras.

We grow older again only as with the mounting years we remember the samskaras anew. Carl Jung, Kundalini Yoga Seminar, Pages 73-74.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/6aecf-dream.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Kundalini-Yoga-C-Jung/dp/0691006768/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1ZA9KGLZZOP4I&keywords=jung+kundalini&qid=1574186369&s=books&sprefix=jung+`

Carl Jung "Consciousness is Maya, a veil which consists of the projection of earlier experience (samskaras)." (2019-11-18 05:10)

[1]



[2]Carl Jung: Kundalini Yoga

Mahayana teaches that all things are embryos of the Buddha; they are embryos of the Tathagata, the complete.

All things are formed out of the same energy; vajra is immanent in everything.

Thus also the fourth body (subtle body) of the Buddha is a manifestation of the lightening power in the form of bliss; it is vajrasattva or ananda—bliss. (Nietzsche: “Since all pleasure wants eternity, wants deep, deep eternity.”)

In this state of bliss and in the form of vajra the tathagata embraces its Sakti.

This is the eternal cohabitation of the god with its female form, its offspring, its emanation, its matter.

This belief occurs above all in Shivaism.

The worshiped god is Siva, the many-armed.

He is the hunter on the mountains, the lightening, the hidden power of creation. He is purely contemplative.

His spouse is Sakti, the emanation of power, the active creative power.

This idea corresponds to an old Upanishad concept of purusha and prakriti. (Siva and Sakti = purusha; and prakriti = linga and yoni.) ▯

Siva is also conceived and portrayed in images of worship as Siva-bindu (bindu = point), that is, as the latent point-shaped power of creation.

Surrounding Siva-bindu, around the center, rests the Sakti in the shape of a wheel or cakra. This is the primal form of the mandala.

Such a cakra is also called a padma-lotus.

To this relate the mystical syllables Om mani padme hum, which are best translated as something like: “Oh, by the gem in the lotus.”

They mean the highest perfection and the first beginning at the same time.

Contained therein is everything that can be said.

For us such speculations are the ultimate point at which one may arrive, whereas for the Indian they are simply the starting point, or point of departure.

He begins with the internal, whereas we constantly live in the external.

The visible world is for him Maya, appearance, illusion, Maya-Sakti, that is, the product of Sakti.

Consciousness is Maya, a veil which consists of the projection of earlier experience (samskaras).

The tabula rasa of childlike consciousness is predetermined through the experience of foresight—through the collective unconscious, we would say.

But the Indian says: Sakti has consciousness in itself. (Herein lies a key to the inconceivable.)

The first childhood dreams contain the samskaras, the archetypes.

It is thus in no way surprising that we find obvious cakras or mandalas in children’s drawings.

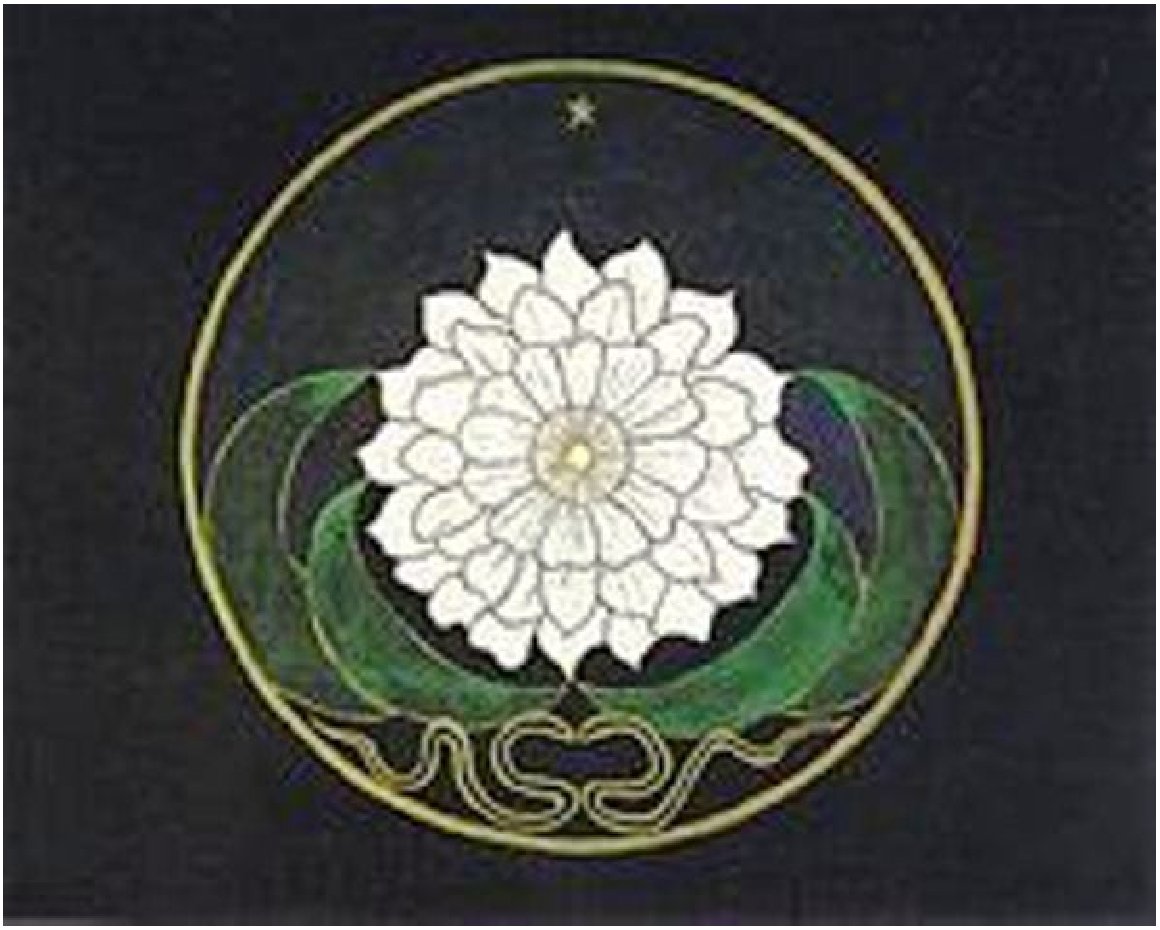
Small children are very old; later on we soon grow younger.

In our middle age we are youngest, precisely at the time when we have completely or almost completely lost contact with the collective unconscious, the samskaras.

We grow older again only as with the mounting years we remember the samskaras anew. Carl Jung, Kundalini Yoga Seminar, Pages 73-74.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/0110e-buddha.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Kundalini-Yoga-C-Jung/dp/0691006768/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1ZA9KGLZZOP4I&keywords=jung+kundalini&qid=1574186369&s=books&sprefix=jung+`

The symbol is a Living Body (2019-11-18 05:29)



[2]The Archetypes and The Collective Unconscious

The symbol is a living body, corpus et anima; hence the "child" is such an apt formula for the symbol.

The uniqueness of the psyche can never enter wholly into reality; it can only be realized approximately, though it still remains the absolute basis of all consciousness.

The deeper "layers" of the psyche lose their individual uniqueness as they retreat farther and farther into darkness. "Lower down," that is to say as they approach the autonomous functional systems, they become increasingly collective until they are universalized and extinguished in the body’s materiality, i.e., in chemical substances. The body’s carbon is simply carbon. Hence "at bottom" the psyche is simply "world."

In this sense I hold Kerenyi to be absolutely right when he says that in the symbol the world itself is speaking.

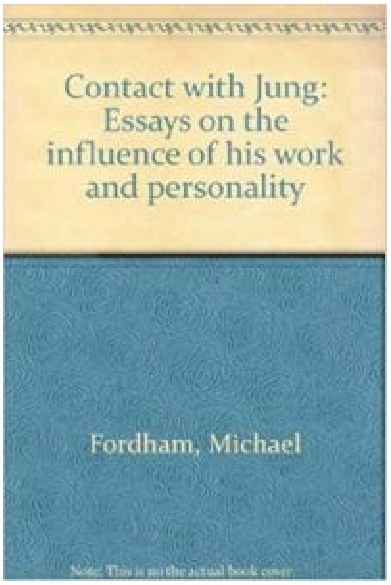
The more archaic and "deeper," that is the more physiological, the symbol is, the more collective and universal, the more "material" it is.

The more abstract, differentiated, and specified it is, and the more its nature approximates to conscious uniqueness and individuality, the more it sloughs off its universal character.

Having finally attained full consciousness, it runs the risk of becoming a mere allegory which nowhere oversteps the bounds of conscious comprehension, and is then exposed to all sorts of attempts at rationalistic and therefore inadequate explanation. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Page 291.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/11/6ac58-mandala2bpainted2bby2ba2bpatient2bof2bcarl2bjung.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Archetypes-Collective-Unconscious-Collected-Works/dp/0691018332/ref=sr_1_1?crid=36XWJUH9RIGTW&keywords=archetypes+and+the+collective+unco`

"Contact With Jung" by Michael Fordham -Quotations (2019-11-18 09:09)



Contact with Jung:
Essays on the influence of his work and personality

Fordham, Michael

[1]Contact With Jung by Michael Fordham

The proof is in the facts, was Jung's contention; he does not have to believe because he knows; this knowledge is based on experience and empirical findings. Renee Brand, Contact with Jung, Page 232

Miss Miller then became a representation of his anima at that stage of his .development, carrying his inferior function. In this thought we have the nucleus of the type theory. Renee Brand, Contact with Jung, Page 233

I believe Jung's myth is the realization of his creative urge to follow each new fact to its origin in the roots of his own psyche, and to draw from there the knowledge he formulated and lived as a new vision of the human soul. Renee Brand, Contact with Jung, Page 233

Most specifically, I know that I owe a great debt of gratitude to Jung, although now, even as it was in 1923, his gifts are part of my heritage, as inseparable from me as my hands; nor can I feel that his gifts are particular to me, but, like those of Wilson and Lincoln and Freud, they belong to all humanity. James G. Whitney, Contact with Jung, Page 231

Jung's attention was always riveted to the long-term of the soul, many souls, generations of souls. The great stream of life seemed to be his absorbing interest. Jane Wheelwright, Contact with Jung, Page 226

Jung's great courage lay in his willingness to remain alone and lonely, and was perhaps understood best by those very close to him. Jane Wheelwright, Contact with Jung, Page 228

Jung respected my right to be a woman and defined me in terms of what I am. Similarly, as a clinical psychologist, I can define myself and my colleagues in terms of what we are. Clare Thompson, Contact with Jung, Page 213

The flowering of his genius, that began so early, ripened into a harvest that will satisfy the spiritual hunger of mankind in the years to come, but it will take the work of many succeeding generations to garner all the wealth of meaning Jung discovered in his long and fruitful life. M. Esther Harding, Contact with Jung, Pages 179 -194

American materialism, extraversion, and rationalism are antithetical to a psychology that attempts to probe the inner world of man. Jay Dunn, Contact with Jung, Page 164

One would expect a society that places value on the principle of scientific causality to resist a psychological viewpoint that introduces the concept of synchronicity. Americans gave ready acceptance to behavioristic psychology. Jay Dunn, Contact with Jung, Page 164

The genius of this country [America] lies in the capacity to make things work, to make more of them, and to make them better, and so we may expect this spirit to influence the growth of analytical psychology in America. Jay Dunn, Contact with Jung, Page 165

Lacking deep roots in their own [America } country, they travel abroad in the attempt to re-establish a connection with their origins, and they may well be equally receptive to Jung's discovery of the historical psyche. Jay Dunn, Contact with Jung, Page 166

Americans gave ready acceptance to behavioristic psychology. Jay Dunn, Contact with Jung, Page 164

Jung's influence has many dimensions-from the spoken word to the tremendous, subtle effectiveness which radiated from his great personality-even if oceans, and years, prevented a personal encounter. Anneliese Aumuller, Contact with Jung, Page 190

Jung did not systematize his work. He stood firmly in the stream of life and refused to live in an ivory tower of abstract thought, divorced from reality. Margit Van Leight Frank, Contact with Jung, Page 194

He[Jung] conveyed in tangible form in his own person and in life the reality of what it is to be centered. Margit Van Leight Frank, Contact with Jung, Page 195

It became empirically true that spirit is the function that makes man truly human. Margit Van Leight Frank, Contact with Jung, Page 196

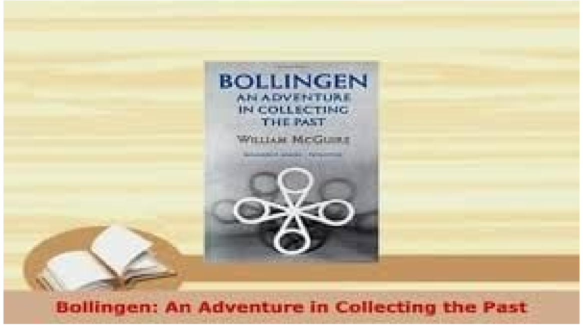
One basic fact has to be stressed: that the inner life, the life of the spirit, unfolds according to definite laws and that it follows its own order. Margit Van Leight Frank, Contact with Jung, Page 197

On the occasion of my first meeting with Jung we had just seen the play Glorious Morning, which dealt with resistance to the Nazi movement. seeing of this play was called by the Professor a 'valid experience'. I have never understood why Jung (like P. G. Wodehouse) was wrongfully thought to be pro-Nazi. Margit Van Leight Frank, Contact with Jung, Page 194

---

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Contact-Jung-Essays-influence-personality/dp/B0000CLPU0/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=michael+fordham+contact&qid=1574094241&sr=8-1`

Bollingen: An Adventure in Collecting the Past - Quotations (2019-11-18 10:28)



BOLLINGEN
AN ADVENTURE IN COLLECTING THE PAST
WILLIAM McGUIRE
Bollingen: An Adventure in Collecting the Past

[1]Bollingen: An Adventure in Collecting the Past by William McGuire

Alexis Leger had no partiality for any system of psychology and, indeed, no patience with psychoanalysis, Jungian or otherwise. There has been scarcely a glimmer of interest in his poetry from critics of a Jungian leaning. Yet, throughout almost the entire career of the Bollingen program, the work of St.-J ohn Perse was given a preeminence. William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 191

Hillyer's attempt to link the Foundation with fascist sympathies was dealt with in a letter written in July by Broch, Kahler, and Kracauer, all refugees from Nazism. William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 214

If Hillyer had looked into the Foundation's activities, the three stated, "he would have discovered that the list of its fellows and authors includes persons of the most diverse background and extraction, Jews as well as gentiles, refugees as well as Americans, . . . names like Paul Radin, Huntington

Cairns, Herbert Read, R. P. Blackmur, Benedetto Croce, Max Raphael, Joseph Campbell, Charles de Tolnay ... none of whom could be suspected of Fascist or authoritarian leanings. William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 214-215

Malcolm Cowley, appeared in the New Republic on October 3. Cowley wound up: "The little American republic of letters is under attack by pretty much the same forces as those to which the Russian writers have already yielded; that is, by the people who prefer slogans to poetry and national self-flattery to honest writing. Hillyer has gone over to the enemy, like Pound in another war. Worsted in a struggle among his colleagues and compatriots, he has appealed over their heads and under false colors to the great hostile empire of the Philistines." William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 216

In 1968, she [Kathleen Raine] lectured at the Eranos Conference, the first woman invited to the lectern since 1938. William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 235

But of course Academe is a very strong party in power ... and can easily discredit me in a world which shares their basic assumptions (positivist) and hates mine (the philosophia perennis) . Kathleen Raine, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 235

Kauffer's design for the Collected Jung-a jacket of glossy black with touches of blue and white and a black binding with a gold-stamped monogram "J"-has been admired by all but Jung, who observed that it seemed to put him in a coffin. William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 267

Jung's judgment was of real help to me in gauging the political situation. His deep antipathy to what Nazism and Fascism stood for was clearly evidenced in these conversations. John Foster Dulles, Bollingen: An Adventure, Pages 57-58

Jung spoke of the functions, how thinking's not wise.

How feeling may be but the ego's disguise,

Intuition and sense but a parcel of lies.

They got what they needed to know! Eleanor Bertine (Tongue in Cheek Verse), Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 12

...Marie-Louise von Franz was the youngest of the inner circle, and the most scholarly. She had earned a doctorate in classical philology before beginning to work with Jung. William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 16

He [Otto Gross] mostly frequented artists, litterateurs, political fanatics, degenerates of all descriptions, and in the swamps of Ascona carried on miserable and disgusting orgies. Carl Jung, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 22

The Eranos speakers and audience, who in the beginning were chiefly German, became more international, and Olga Froebe liked to say that the conferences, founded in the year the Nazis came to power, gradually became a counterforce to Nazism. William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 24

I had a long talk with him about what was going on in Germany and Italy, and I do not recall the slightest trace of anything Jung said which indicated other than a deep anti-Nazi and anti-Fascist sentiment. Allen W. Dulles, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 26

Jung, Mary [Mellon], and I all had a definite life work, submitted to each of us by the same Force. Each of us was independent, ruthless, isolated, yet bound together. . . . I remember Mary Mellon saying: ’Bollingen is my Eranos!’ . . . . She too was dedicated to Jung’s work and then to Eranos. She, Jung, and I were in the identical pattern, energized by the same Power and thereby bound up with each other. Olga Froebe, William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 27

A huge green Round Table found its place on the terrace, and became the true meeting place for the scholars. It was a concretized mandala, with all the qualities of that symbol reflected in it. The most important talks were held there, and gradually it became apparent that this Table was a creative circle. Olga Froebe, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 28

If a German invasion had forced Jung to leave Switzerland during the war-and he was indeed on a Gestapo blacklist-he would have found a goodly part of his own library duplicated at the Mellons’ house, Oak Spring. William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 33-34

I think the night has descended upon Europe. Heaven knows if and when and under which conditions we shall meet again. There is only one certainty-nothing can put out the light within. Carl Jung to Mary Mellon, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 34

"I feel that my epitaph will bear the sad legend: Killed by the Book of Changes." Cary Baynes, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 35

On top of all I felt very tired and deeply depressed by the senselessness of this war. It is mere destruction. Why in hell is Man unable to grow up? The Lord of this world is surely the Devil. Carl Jung, Bollingen: An Adventure, You hardly can imagine the thickness of the black cloud suspended over Europe, and one wishes to escape from the soundless pressure of evil and dull idiocy. Carl Jung, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 37

I wish you could [Mary Mellon] come again to Ascona. But the world-wide darkness is still on the increase. I am grateful to fate that you have such dreams, otherwise the world would be rather empty in the Western Hemisphere. Carl Jung, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 37

Living here without a car becomes a primitive problem. Yesterday we had to tramp for one hour and a half in order to get two sausages for our dinner. The misery in the occupied countries is indescribable. The air vibrates with lies and rumors and it is almost impossible to discern between true and false information. Carl Jung, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 49

[James]Joyce had also been a Catholic and found a way out without losing his symbols. Joseph Campbell, Carl Jung, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 65

On February 11, 1944, he [Carl Jung] had slipped in the snow, and the fibula of his right leg snapped. William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 106

Stay as well as you can during this hard winter to come. I am sending you [Carl Jung] eleven pounds a week made up of butter, fats, and sugar. Mary Mellon, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 107

... a text that was inscribed on Mary's [Mellon's] ring and was a favorite of Jung's: "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so must the Son of Man be lifted up." William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 114

"My mission is completed and I no longer wish to continue. I'm glad to be on my way!" Hull's "mission" encompassed the translation or recycling of about four million words of Jung's. William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 132

Of the Jungians who were published-seven in all-the one whose influence was most emphatic was Jolande

Jacobi, one of the rare extraverts in the Jungian fold. In Zurich she was nicknamed "The Locomotive" for her organizational talent. William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 133

Jolande Jacobi was not universally liked among the Jungians; such is the fate of the extravert among introverts. Jung valued her, however, and she took the lead in founding the C. G. Jung Institute in 1948, taught there, and was on its Curatorium for twenty years. William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 134

He [Neumann] had to leave Nazi Germany in 1934 without finishing his M.D., and after analyzing with Jung, he established an analytical practice in Tel Aviv. William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 135

Erich Neumann was considered to be the most original and creative of Jung’s followers, in Adler’s words "the only one who seemed destined to build on Jung’s work and to continue it." William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 135

Sympathy for other viewpoints or for other people she does not possess. She is a hard, calculating egoist. Some people are never appreciative of those who rescue them and are frequently inclined to believe that God created the rescuers for the sole purpose of coming to their particular rescue. I am afraid contact with Jungian psychology hasn’t done Olga [Froebe] any good. Paul Radin, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 169

With Johann Jakob Bachofen I learned to read mythology as expressing in its symbols the rise and decline of social and religious orders. It proved to be a most inspiring lesson for interpreting Hindu mythological tradition." Since Bachofen was dead, "the major task, to decipher mythology as the everlasting romance of the soul, as ’le drame interieur,’ as the play staged in the playhouse of the psyche-this task was left for Dr. Jung. Heinrich Zimmer, Bollingen: An Adventure, Pages 173-174

ELEANOR BERTINE M.D.
DAUGHTER OF FREDERICK AND ELEANOR BERTINE
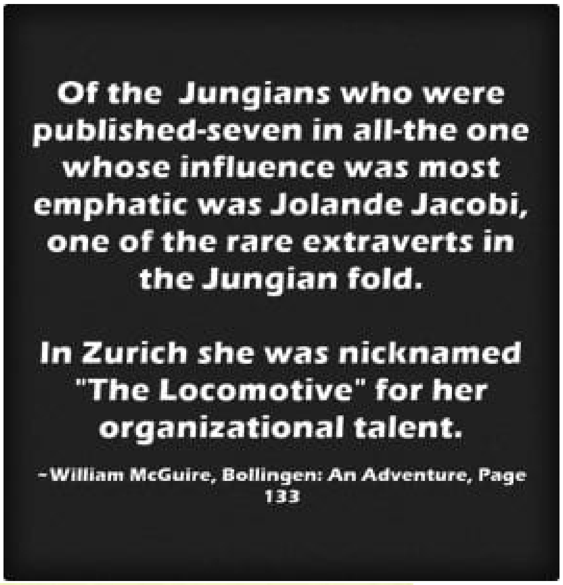
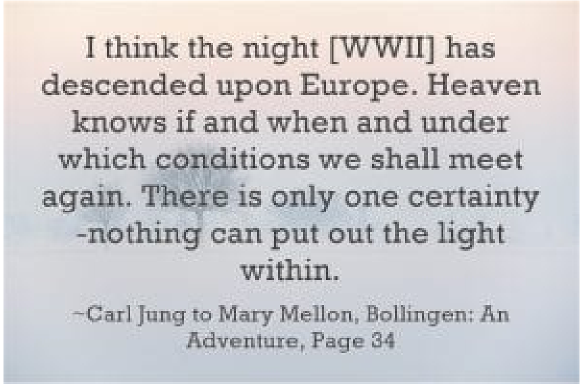
1887 — 1968



Of the Jungians who were published-seven in all-the one whose influence was most emphatic was Jolande Jacobi, one of the rare extraverts in the Jungian fold.

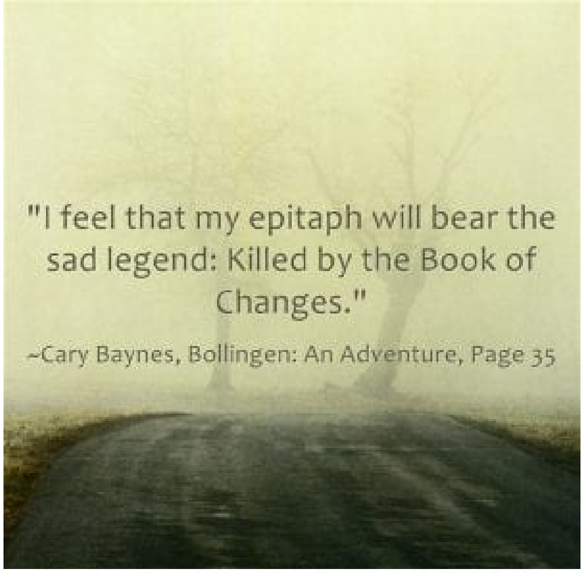
In Zurich she was nicknamed "The Locomotive" for her organizational talent.

-William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 133



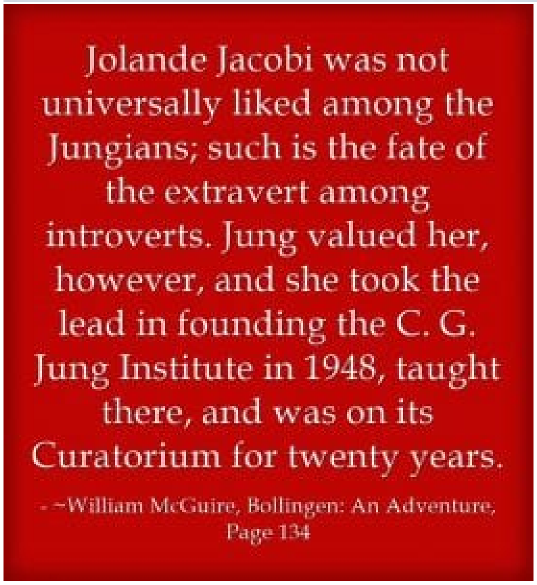
I think the night [WWII] has descended upon Europe. Heaven knows if and when and under which conditions we shall meet again. There is only one certainty -nothing can put out the light within.

~Carl Jung to Mary Mellon, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 34



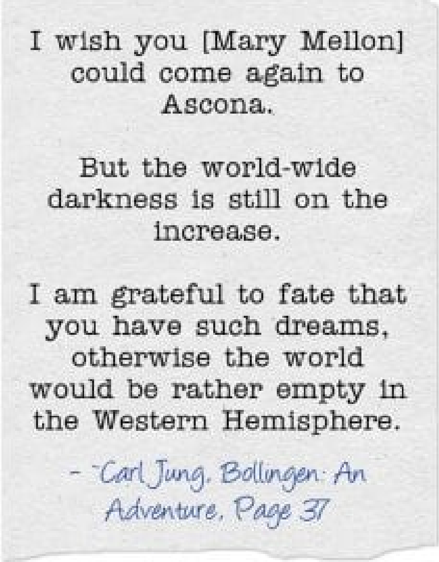
"I feel that my epitaph will bear the sad legend: Killed by the Book of Changes."

~Cary Baynes, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 35



Jolande Jacobi was not universally liked among the Jungians; such is the fate of the extravert among introverts. Jung valued her, however, and she took the lead in founding the C. G. Jung Institute in 1948, taught there, and was on its Curatorium for twenty years.

- ~William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 134

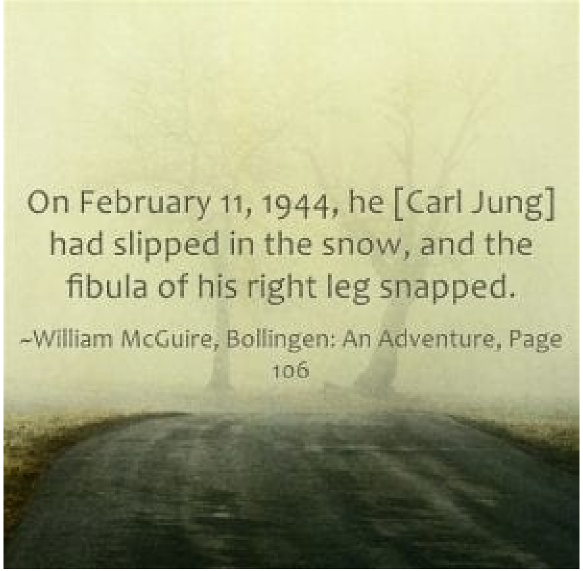


I wish you [Mary Mellon] could come again to Ascona.

But the world-wide darkness is still on the increase.

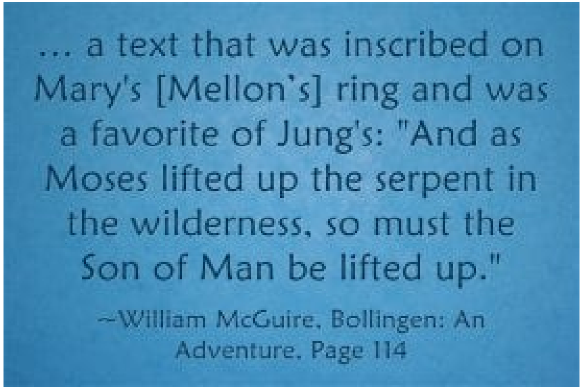
I am grateful to fate that you have such dreams, otherwise the world would be rather empty in the Western Hemisphere.

- ~Carl Jung, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 37



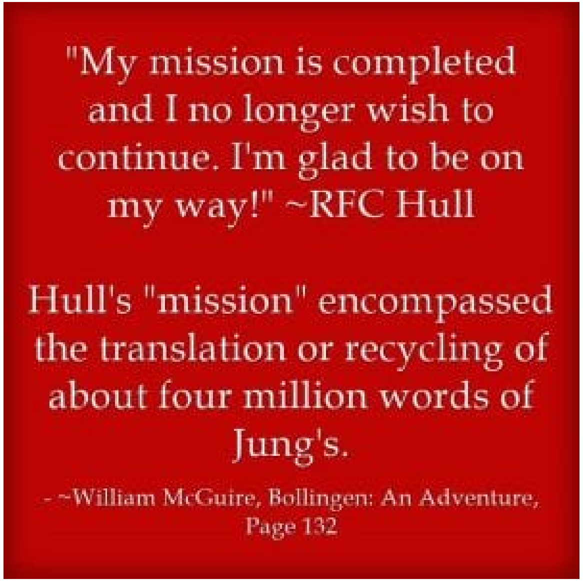
On February 11, 1944, he [Carl Jung] had slipped in the snow, and the fibula of his right leg snapped.

~William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 106



... a text that was inscribed on Mary's [Mellon's] ring and was a favorite of Jung's: "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so must the Son of Man be lifted up."

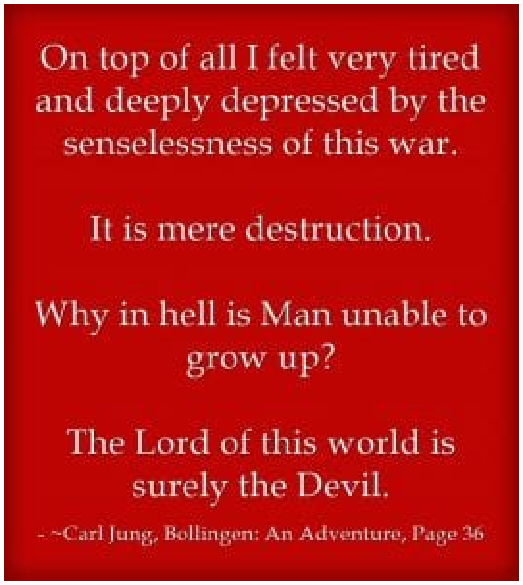
~William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 114



"My mission is completed and I no longer wish to continue. I'm glad to be on my way!" ~RFC Hull

Hull's "mission" encompassed the translation or recycling of about four million words of Jung's.

- ~William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 132



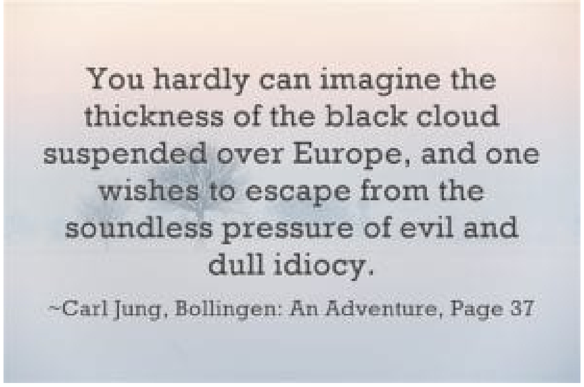
On top of all I felt very tired and deeply depressed by the senselessness of this war.

It is mere destruction.

Why in hell is Man unable to grow up?

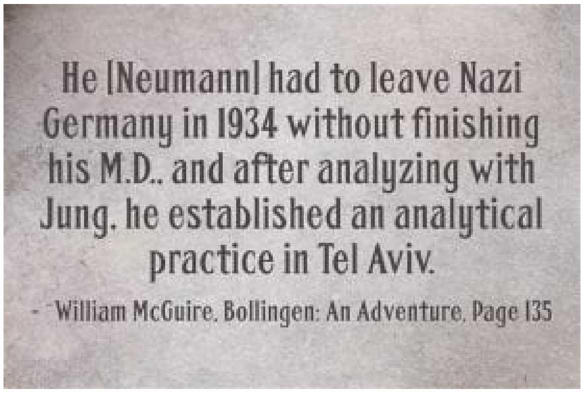
The Lord of this world is surely the Devil.

- ~Carl Jung, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 36



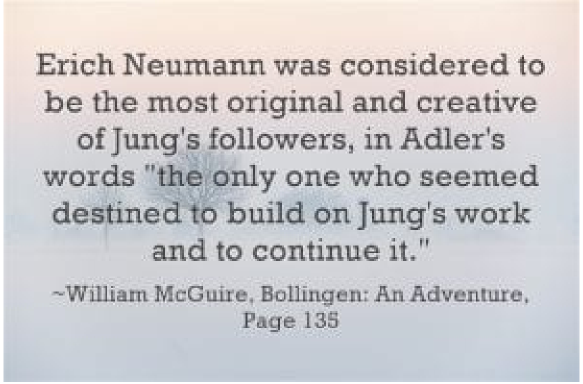
You hardly can imagine the thickness of the black cloud suspended over Europe, and one wishes to escape from the soundless pressure of evil and dull idiocy.

~Carl Jung, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 37



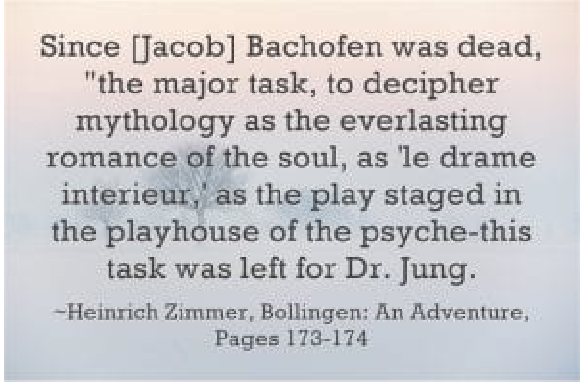
He [Neumann] had to leave Nazi Germany in 1934 without finishing his M.D.. and after analyzing with Jung. he established an analytical practice in Tel Aviv.

- ~William McGuire. Bollingen: An Adventure. Page 135



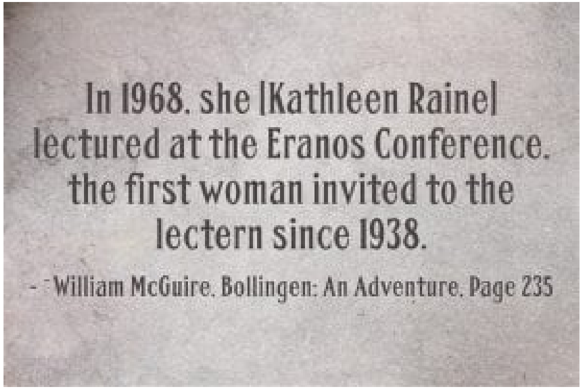
Erich Neumann was considered to be the most original and creative of Jung's followers, in Adler's words "the only one who seemed destined to build on Jung's work and to continue it."

~William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 135



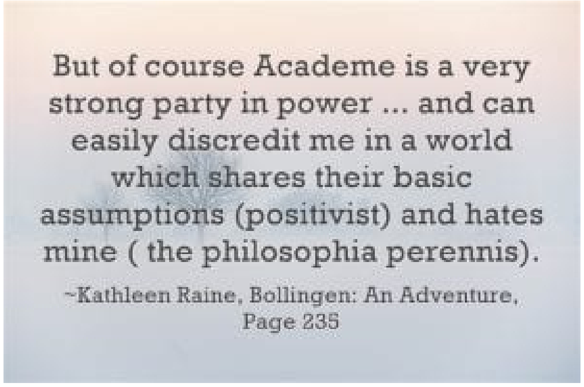
Since [Jacob] Bachofen was dead, "the major task, to decipher mythology as the everlasting romance of the soul, as 'le drame interieur,' as the play staged in the playhouse of the psyche-this task was left for Dr. Jung.

~Heinrich Zimmer, Bollingen: An Adventure, Pages 173-174



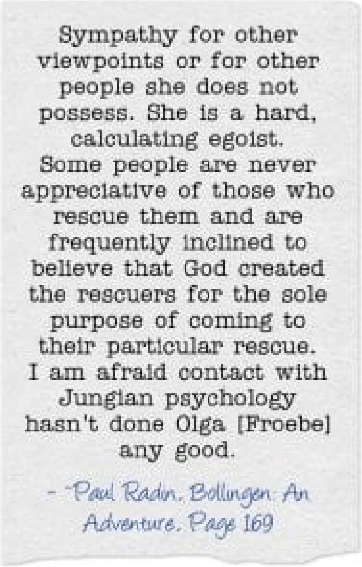
In 1968, she [Kathleen Raine] lectured at the Eranos Conference, the first woman invited to the lectern since 1938.

- ~William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 235



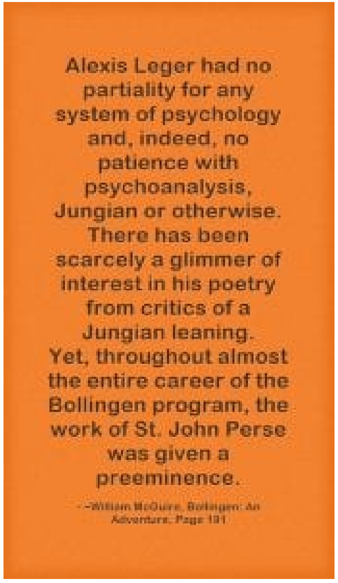
But of course Academe is a very strong party in power ... and can easily discredit me in a world which shares their basic assumptions (positivist) and hates mine (the philosophia perennis).

~Kathleen Raine, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 235



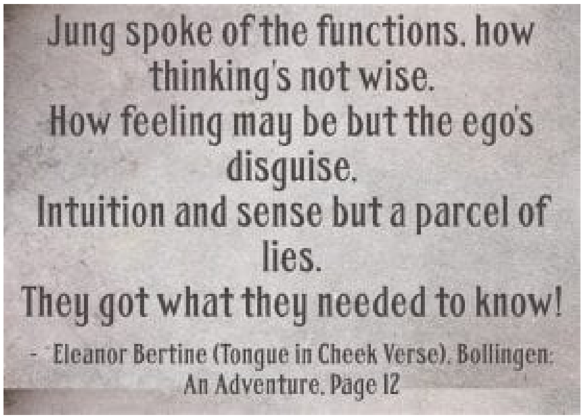
Sympathy for other viewpoints or for other people she does not possess. She is a hard, calculating egoist. Some people are never appreciative of those who rescue them and are frequently inclined to believe that God created the rescuers for the sole purpose of coming to their particular rescue. I am afraid contact with Jungian psychology hasn't done Olga [Froebe] any good.

- ~Paul Radin, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 169



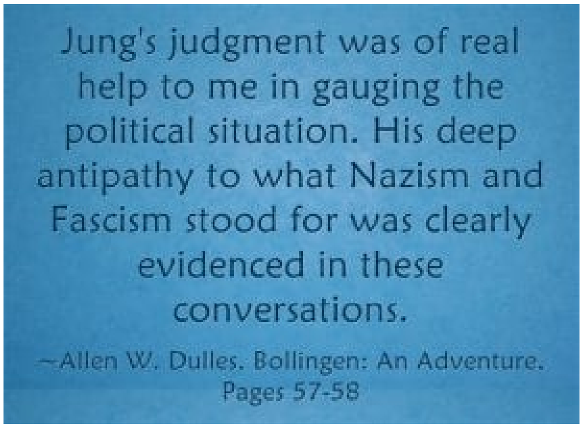
Alexis Leger had no partiality for any system of psychology and, indeed, no patience with psychoanalysis, Jungian or otherwise. There has been scarcely a glimmer of interest in his poetry from critics of a Jungian leaning. Yet, throughout almost the entire career of the Bollingen program, the work of St. John Perse was given a preeminence.

- ~William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 191



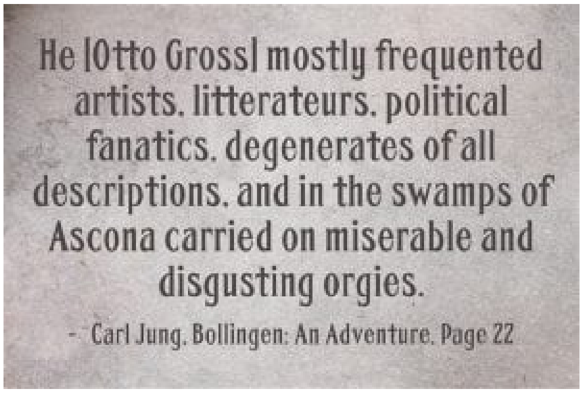
Jung spoke of the functions, how thinking's not wise.
How feeling may be but the ego's disguise.
Intuition and sense but a parcel of lies.
They got what they needed to know!

- ~Eleanor Bertine (Tongue in Cheek Verse), Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 12



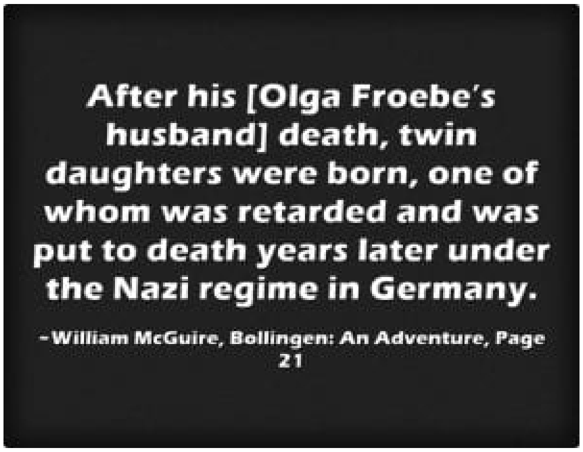
Jung's judgment was of real help to me in gauging the political situation. His deep antipathy to what Nazism and Fascism stood for was clearly evidenced in these conversations.

~Allen W. Dulles, Bollingen: An Adventure, Pages 57-58



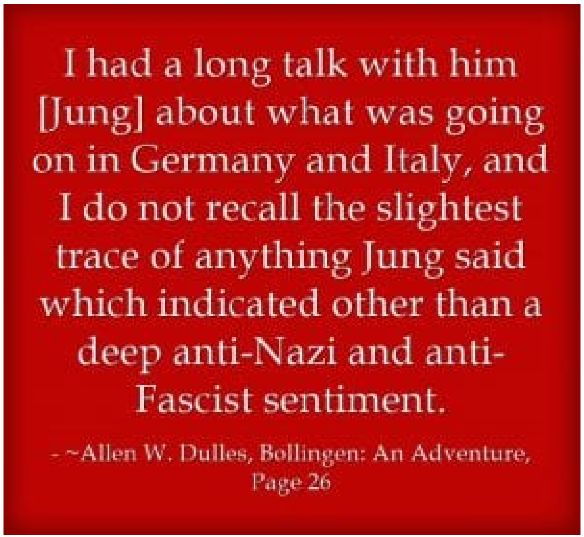
He [Otto Gross] mostly frequented artists, litterateurs, political fanatics, degenerates of all descriptions, and in the swamps of Ascona carried on miserable and disgusting orgies.

- Carl Jung, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 22



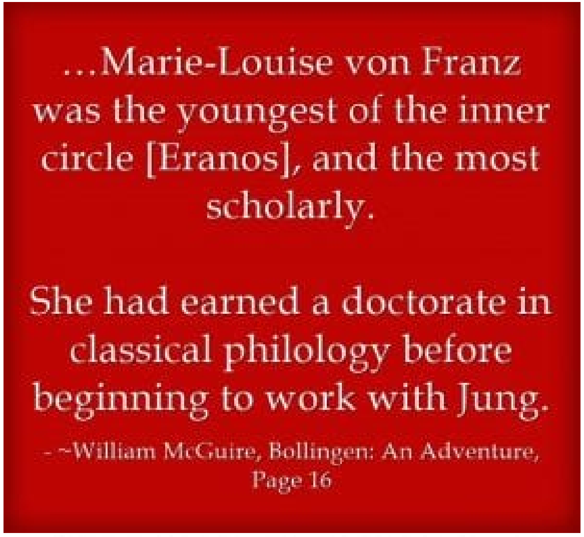
After his [Olga Froebe's husband] death, twin daughters were born, one of whom was retarded and was put to death years later under the Nazi regime in Germany.

-William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 21



I had a long talk with him [Jung] about what was going on in Germany and Italy, and I do not recall the slightest trace of anything Jung said which indicated other than a deep anti-Nazi and anti-Fascist sentiment.

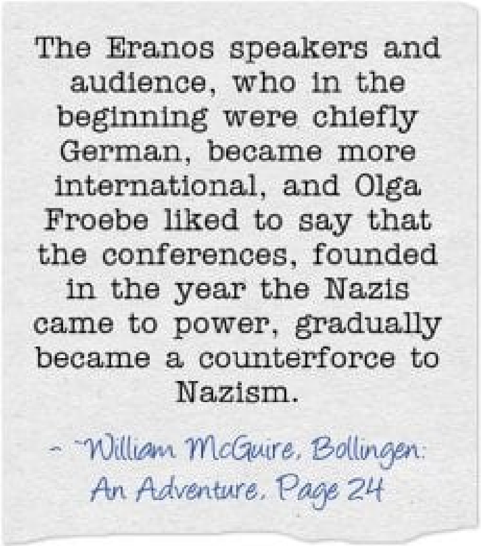
- ~Allen W. Dulles, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 26



…Marie-Louise von Franz was the youngest of the inner circle [Eranos], and the most scholarly.

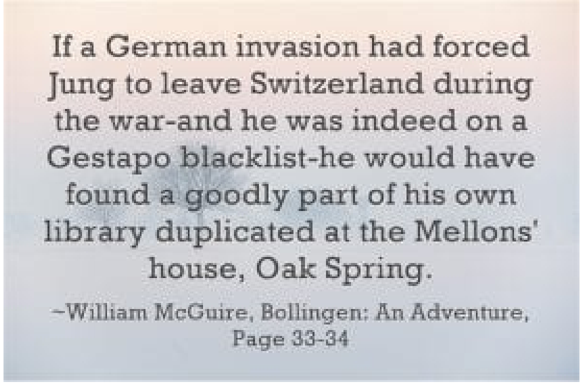
She had earned a doctorate in classical philology before beginning to work with Jung.

- ~William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 16



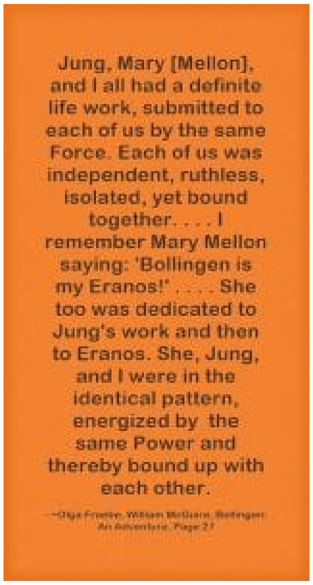
The Eranos speakers and audience, who in the beginning were chiefly German, became more international, and Olga Froebe liked to say that the conferences, founded in the year the Nazis came to power, gradually became a counterforce to Nazism.

- ~William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 24



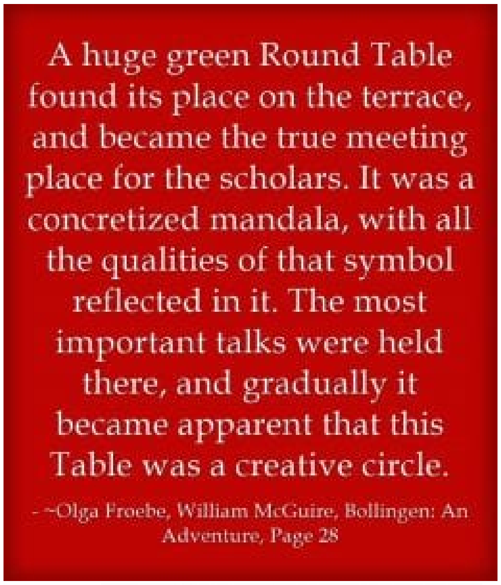
If a German invasion had forced Jung to leave Switzerland during the war-and he was indeed on a Gestapo blacklist-he would have found a goodly part of his own library duplicated at the Mellons' house, Oak Spring.

~William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 33-34



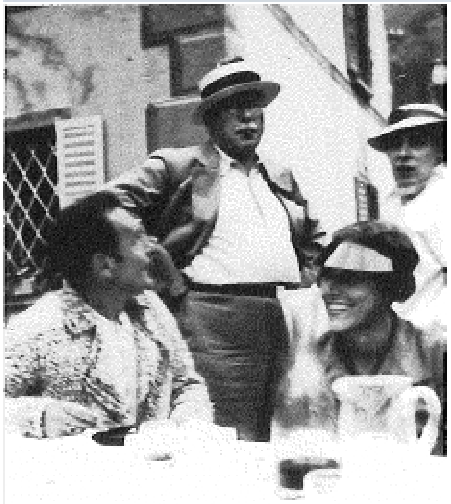
Jung, Mary [Mellon], and I all had a definite life work, submitted to each of us by the same Force. Each of us was independent, ruthless, isolated, yet bound together. . . . I remember Mary Mellon saying: 'Bollingen is my Eranos!' . . . . She too was dedicated to Jung's work and then to Eranos. She, Jung, and I were in the identical pattern, energized by the same Power and thereby bound up with each other.

~Olga Froebe, William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page [illegible]

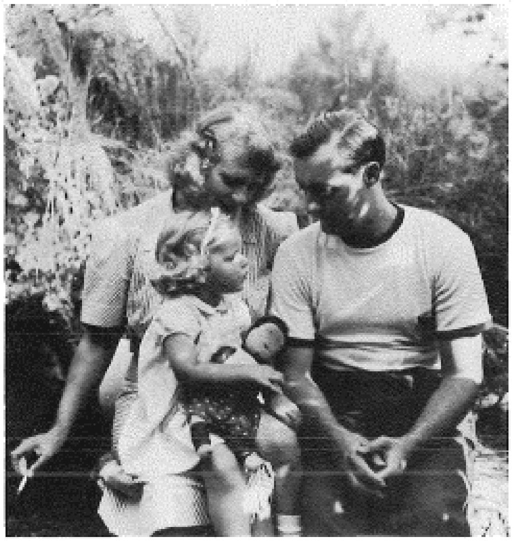


A huge green Round Table found its place on the terrace, and became the true meeting place for the scholars. It was a concretized mandala, with all the qualities of that symbol reflected in it. The most important talks were held there, and gradually it became apparent that this Table was a creative circle.

- ~Olga Froebe, William McGuire, Bollingen: An Adventure, Page 28



14 An Eranos picnic, 1935: Gustav Heyer, Jung, Cary Baynes, and Mary Foote



8 Mary, Paul, and Cathy at Ascona, 1939

1. https://www.amazon.com/Bollingen-William-McGuire/dp/0691018855/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=bollingen+an+adventure&qid=1574094115&sr=8-1

Barbara Hannah: The friendly goddess told him that only her father, Proteus, could tell them how they could get home. (2019-11-19 03:30)

[1]

Menelaus told Telemachus how his anima had taught him to deal with the situation when he was delayed on an island called Pharos, off the mouth of the Nile, by contrary winds.

He had reached the point of despair (as it sometimes seems we have to do before we will face active imagination in its inexorable reality), for he had used up all his supplies.

His whole crew, as well as Helen and himself, were faced with starvation if the wind did not change.

One day, when he was walking on the shore in deep dejection, he was approached by the beautiful Eidothea, ”daughter of the mighty Proteus, the Old Man of the Sea."

First, she chided him severely for his lack of initiative in allowing himself to be cooped up on the island, where they were all growing weaker every day.

Menelaus assured her that he longed to leave, but could only think he must somehow have offended the immortals who were now denying him any favorable wind.

The friendly goddess told him that only her father, Proteus, could tell them how they could get home.

Menelaus must set a trap for him and force him to explain the whole situation.

Menelaus begged her to tell him how to ” catch this mysterious old being,” and she then enlightened him as to what he should do.

The next morning he met her, with the three best men of his crew, as arranged, at daybreak.

They gathered at the mouth of the cave where Proteus always went for a midday nap which he only took after counting his seals, as a shepherd counts his sheep.

The goddess then covered all four men with the skins of four freshly flayed seals and laid them in lairs that she had scooped out in the sand, filling all their nostrils with a sweet-smelling stuff so that they could endure the stench of the ”monsters of the deep.”

She then left them to carry out her instructions by themselves.

All morning, as she had foretold, the seals came up "thick and fast" from the sea, and lay down in companies all around them.

At midday, the old man himself emerged, found all of his fat seals awaiting him and counted the four men, entirely unsuspiciously, among the rest.

Then he went into the cave for his midday sleep.

This was their moment.

He was hardly asleep before the four men jumped on him and held him fast.

As Eidothea had warned Menelaus, Proteus’s "skill and cunning" had not deserted him and he transformed himself ” into a bearded lion and then into a snake and after that a panther and a giant boar.

He changed into running water too and a great tree in leaf.”

But they set their teeth and held him like a vice.

Then, as the goddess had foretold, at last he tired of his magic repertoire and took· his own form again.

Breaking into speech, he asked questions and allowed Menelaus to question him.

He then revealed that Menelaus had blundered in leaving Troy so quickly.

He should have stayed ” and offered rich sacrifices to Zeus and all the other gods" if he "wished to get home fast across the wine-dark sea.”

Now he could only return to Egypt in order to make "ceremonial offerings to the everlasting gods."

When Menelaus heard he must take "the long and weary trip over the misty seas to Egypt," he was heartbroken but, knowing there was no escape, he promised Proteus to do exactly as he advised.

Then he asked more questions, this time referring to the safety of his countrymen, whom he and Nestor had left behind at Troy.

After warning him that his tears would flow, Proteus gave him the information he wanted, of which I will mention two examples.

Agamemnon, Menelaus’s brother, had been murdered an hour or two after reaching his home by the treachery of his wife and her love!’; Aegisthus (Clytemnestra was Helen’s sister, for the two brothers had married two sisters).

The second fate I will mention was the most important to Telemachus.

His father, Odysseus, was unhappily imprisoned on a distant island by Calypso, the witch.

After staying some time in great luxury with Menelaus, Pallas Athene warned Telemachus that it was time he went home.

She guided him home by a circuitous route to avoid the trap to kill him that had been set by the infamous suitors.

Instead of letting him go home, she guided him to his loyal swineherd’s cottage where he found his father (who had at last returned to Ithaca after nineteen years of wandering), disguised as a beggar.

My chief point in relating this material from the Odyssey is to show the importance of clinging fast to the first image that appears to us in an active imagination, not allowing it to escape us by quick transformations, as it still will do if it is left to itself.

But I have used a little more of the Odyssey than that which I cited in another book, so as to draw the reader’s attention to the importance of a collaboration between the conscious and unconscious.

If he had not been helped by what we call the unconscious, which Homer depicts as the immortals, what chance would either Menelaus or Telemachus have had of getting back to his home?

Without the knowledge that Proteus gave him, would Menelaus ever have returned to Egypt, when he says it broke his heart to do so?

Yet only in Egypt could he get rich-enough sacrifices to appease the gods so that they would send him favorable winds.

And Telemachus would undoubtedly have been killed in the suitors' trap if he had not had the guidance of Pallas Athene.

All this is even clearer in the main story of the Odyssey, that of Odysseus himself, but we have seen enough to be able to see how the same immortals will still guide us today, though we call them by different names in our modern material.

I will try, in later chapters, to point out the parallels between the ancient Odyssey and our own efforts. Barbara Hannah, Encounters with the Soul: Active Imagination, Pages 23-26.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/66572-12bpallas.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Encounters-Soul-Active-Imagination-Developed/dp/1630513504`

The Structure of the Psyche by C.G. Jung (2019-11-19 03:34)

[1]

The Structure of the Psyche by C.G. Jung

The only things we experience immediately are the contents of consciousness. In saying this I am not attempting to reduce the "world" to our "idea" of it.

What I am trying to emphasize could be expressed from another point of view by saying: Life is a function of the carbon atom.

This analogy reveals the limitations of the specialist point of view, to which I succumb as soon as I attempt to say anything explanatory about the world, or even a part of it.

My point of view is naturally a psychological one, and moreover that of a practising psychologist whose task it is to find the quickest road through the chaotic muddle of complicated psychic states.

This view must needs be very different from that of the psychologist who can study an isolated psychic process at his leisure, in the quiet of his laboratory.

The difference is roughly that between a surgeon and an histologist.

I also differ from the metaphysician, who feels he has to say how things are "in themselves," and whether they are absolute or not. My subject lies wholly within the bounds of experience.

My prime need is to grasp complicated conditions and be able to talk about them.

I must be able to differentiate between various groups of psychic facts.

The distinctions so made must not be arbitrary, since I have to reach an understanding with my patient.

I therefore have to rely on simple schemata which on the one hand satisfactorily reflect the empirical facts, and on the other hand link up with what is generally known and so find acceptance.

If we now set out to classify the contents of consciousness, we shall begin, according to tradition, with the proposition: Nihil est in intellectu quod non antea fuerit in sensu.

Consciousness seems to stream into us from outside in the form of sense-perceptions.

We see, hear, taste, and smell the world, and so are conscious of the world. Sense-perceptions tell us that something is. But they do not tell us what it is.

This is told us not by the process of perception but by the process of apperception, and this has a highly complex structure.

Not that sense-perception is anything simple; only, its complex nature is not so much psychic as physiological. The complexity of apperception, on the other hand, is psychic.

We can detect in it the cooperation of a number of psychic processes.

Supposing we hear a noise whose nature seems to us unknown.

After a while it becomes clear to us that the peculiar noise must come from air-bubbles rising in the pipes of the central heating: we have recognized the noise.

This recognition derives from a process which we call thinking. Thinking tells us what a thing is.

I have just called the noise "peculiar." When I characterize something as "peculiar," I am referring to the special feeling-tone which that thing has. The feeling-tone implies an evaluation.

The process of recognition can be conceived in essence as comparison and differentiation with the help of memory. When I see a fire, for instance, the light-stimulus conveys to me the idea "fire." As there are countless memory-images of fire lying ready in my memory, these images enter into combination with the fire-image I have just received, and the process of comparing it with and differentiating it from these memory-images produces the recognition; that is to say, I finally establish in my mind the peculiarity of this particular image. In ordinary speech this process is called thinking.

The process of evaluation is different. The fire I see arouses emotional reactions of a pleasant or unpleasant nature, and the memory-images thus stimulated bring with them concomitant emotional phenomena which are known as feeling-tones. In this way an object appears to us as pleasant, desirable, and beautiful, or as unpleasant, disgusting, ugly, and so on. In ordinary speech this process is called feeling.

The intuitive process is neither one of sense-perception, nor of thinking, nor yet of feeling, although language shows a regrettable lack of discrimination in this respect. One person will exclaim: "1 can see the whole house burning down already!" Another will say: "It is as certain as two and two make four that there will be a disaster if a fire breaks out here." A third will say: "1 have the feeling that this fire will lead to catastrophe." According to their respective temperaments, the one speaks of his intuition as a distinct seeing, that is, he makes a sense-perception of it. The other designates it as thinking: "One has only to reflect, and then it is quite clear what the consequences will be." The third, under the stress of emotion, calls his intuition a process of feeling. But intuition, as I conceive it, is one of the basic functions of the psyche, namely. perception of the possibilities inherent in a situation. It is probably due to the insufficient development of language that "feeling," "sensation," and "intuition" are still confused in German, while sentiment and sensation in French, and "feeling" and "sensation" in English, are absolutely distinct, in contrast to sentiment and "feeling," which are sometimes used as auxiliary words for "intuition." Recently, however, "intuition" has begun to be commonly used in English speech.

As further contents of consciousness, we can also distinguish volitional processes and instinctual processes. The former are defined as directed impulses, based on apperception, which are at the disposal of so-called free will. The latter are impulses originating in the unconscious or directly in the body and are characterized by lack of freedom and by compulsiveness.

Apperceptive processes may be either directed or undirected. In the former case we speak of "attention," in the latter case of "fantasy" or "dreaming." The directed processes are rational, the undirected irrational. To these last-named processes we must add—as the seventh category of contents of consciousness—dreams. In some respects dreams are like conscious fantasies in that they have an undirected, irrational character. But they differ inasmuch as their came, course, and aim are, at first, very obscure. I accord them the dignity of coming into the category of conscious contents because they are the most important and most obvious results of unconscious psychic processes obtruding themselves upon consciousness. These seven categories probably give a somewhat superficial survey of the contents of consciousness, but they are sufficient for our purpose.

There are, as we know, certain views which would restrict everything psychic to consciousness, as being identical with it. I do not believe this is sufficient. If we assume that there is anything at all beyond our sense-perception, then we are entitled to speak of psychic elements whose existence is only indirectly accessible to us. For anybody acquainted with the psychology of hypnotism and somnambulism, it is a well-known fact that though an artificially or morbidly restricted consciousness of this kind does not contain certain ideas, it nevertheless behaves exactly as if it did. For instance, there was an hysterically deaf patient who was fond of singing. One day the doctor unobtrusively sat down at the piano and accompanied the next verse in another key, whereupon the patient went on singing in the new key. Another patient always fell into "hystero-epileptic" convulsions at the sight of a naked flame. He had a markedly re· stricted field of vision, that is, he suffered from peripheral blindness (having what is known as a "tubular" field of vision). If one now held a lighted match in the blind zone, the attack followed just as if he had seen the flame. In the symptomatology of such states there are innumerable cases of this kind, where with the best will in the world one can only say that these people perceive, think, feel, remember, decide, and act unconsciously, doing unconsciously what others do consciously. These processes occur regardless of whether consciousness registers them or not.

These unconscious psychic processes also include the not inconsiderable labour of composition that goes into a dream. Though sleep is a state in which consciousness is greatly restricted, the psyche by no means ceases to exist and to act. Consciousness has merely withdrawn from it and, lacking any objects to hold its attention, lapsed into a state of comparative unconsciousness. But psychic life obviously goes on, just as there is unconscious psychic activity during the waking state. Evidence for this is not difficult to find; indeed, Freud has described this particular field of experience in The Psychopathology of Everyday Life. He shows that our conscious intentions and actions are often frustrated by unconscious processes whose very existence is a continual surprise to us. We make slips of the tongue and slips in writing and unconsciously do things that betray our most closely guarded secrets-which are sometimes unknown even to ourselves. "Lingua lapsa verum dicit," says an old proverb. These phenomena can also be demonstrated experimentally by the association tests, which are very useful for finding out things that people cannot or will not speak about.

But the classic examples of unconscious psychic activity are to be found in pathological states. Almost the whole symptomatology of hysteria, of the compulsion neuroses, of phobias, and very largely of schizophrenia, the commonest men tal illness, has its roots in unconscious psychic activity. We are therefore fully justified in speaking of an unconscious psyche. It is not directly accessible to observation-otherwise it would not be unconscious -but can only be inferred. Our inferences can never go beyond: "it is as if."

The unconscious, then, is part of the psyche. Can we now, on the analogy of the different contents of consciousness, also speak of contents of the unconscious? That would be postulating another consciousness, so to speak, in the unconscious. I will not go into this delicate question here, since I have discussed it in another connection, but will confine myself to inquiring whether we can differentiate anything in the unconscious or not. This question can only be answered empirically, that is, by the counter-question whether there are any plausible grounds for such a differentiation.

To my mind there is no doubt that all the activities ordinarily taking place in consciousness can also proceed in the unconscious. There are numerous instances of an intellectual problem, unsolved in the waking state, being solved in a dream. I know, for instance, of an expert accountant who had tried in vain for many days to clear up a fraudulent bankruptcy. One day he had worked on it till midnight, without success, and then went to bed. At three in the morning his wife heard him get up and go into his study. She followed, and saw him industriously making notes at his desk. After about a quarter of an hour he came back. In the morning he remembered nothing. He began working again and discovered, in his own handwriting, a number of notes which straightened out the whole tangle finally and completely.

In my practical work I have been dealing with dreams for more than twenty years. Over and over again I have seen how thoughts that were not thought and feelings that were not felt by day afterwards appeared in dreams, and in this way reached consciousness indirectly. The dream as such is undoubtedly a content of consciousness, otherwise it could not be an object of immediate experience. But in so far as it brings up material that was unconscious before, we are forced to assume that these contents already had some kind of psychic existence in an unconscious state and appeared to the "remnant" of consciousness only in the dream. The dream belongs to the normal contents of the psyche and may be regarded as a resultant of unconscious processes obtruding on consciousness.

Now if, with these experiences in mind, we are driven to assume that all the categories of conscious contents can on occasion also be unconscious, and can act on the conscious mind as unconscious processes, we find ourselves faced with the somewhat unexpected question whether the unconscious has dreams too. In other words, are there resultants of still deeper and-if that be possible-still more unconscious processes which infiltrate into the dark regions of the psyche? I should have to dismiss this paradoxical question as altogether too adventurous were there not, in fact, grounds which bring such an hypothesis within the realm of possibility.

We must first see what sort of evidence is required to prove that the unconscious has dreams. If we wish to prove that dreams appear as contents of consciousness, we have simply to show that there are certain contents which, in character and meaning, are strange and not to be compared with the other contents which can be rationally explained and understood. If we are to show that the unconscious also has dreams, we must treat its contents in a similar way. It will be simplest if I give a practical example:

The case is that of an officer, twenty-seven years of age. He was suffering from severe attacks of pain in the region of the heart and from a choking sensation in the throat, as though a lump were stuck there. He also had piercing pains in the left heel. There was nothing organically the matter with him. The attacks had begun about two months previously, and the patient had been exempted from military service on account of his occasional inability to walk. Various cures had availed nothing. Close investigation into the previous history of his illness gave no clue, and he himself had no idea what" the cause might be. He gave the impression of having a cheerful, rather light-hearted nature, perhaps a bit on the tough side, as though saying theatrically: "You can’t keep us down." As the anamnesis revealed nothing, I asked about his dreams. It at once became apparent what the cause was. Just before the beginning of his neurosis the girl with whom he was in love jilted him and got engaged to another man. In talking to me he dismissed this whole story as irrelevant-"a stupid girl, if she doesn't want me it's easy enough to get another one. A man like me isn't upset by a thing like that." That was the way he treated his disappointment and his real grief. But now the affects came to the surface. The pains in his heart soon disappeared, and the lump in his throat vanished after a few bouts of weeping. "Heartache" is a poeticism, but here it became an actual fact because his pride would not allow him to suffer the pain in his soul. The "lump" in the throat," the so-called globus hystericus, comes, as everyone knows, from swallowed tears. His consciousness had simply withdrawn from contents that were too painful to him, and these, left to themselves, could reach consciousness only indirectly, as symptoms. All this was a rationally understandable and perfectly intelligible process, which could just as well have passed off consciously, had it not been for his masculine pride.

But now for the third symptom. The pains in the heel did not disappear. They do not belong in the picture we have just sketched, for the heart is in no way connected with the heel, nor does one express sorrow through the heel. From the rational point of view, one cannot see why the other two syndromes should not have sufficed. Theoretically, it would have been entirely satisfactory if the conscious realization of the repressed psychic pain had resulted in normal grief and hence in a cure.

As I could get no clue to the heel symptom from the patient's conscious mind, I turned once more to the previous method to the dreams. The patient now had a dream in which he was bitten in the heel by a snake and instantly paralysed. This dream plainly offered an interpretation of the heel symptom. His heel hurt him because he had been bitten there by a snake. This is a very strange content, and one can make nothing of it rationally. We could understand at once why his heart ached, but that his heel should ache too is beyond all rational expectation. The patient was completely mystified.

Here, then, we have a content that propels itself into the unconscious zone in a singular manner, and probably derives from some deeper layer that cannot be fathomed rationally. The nearest analogy to this dream is obviously the neurosis itself. When the girl jilted him, she gave him a wound that paralyzed him and made him ill. Further analysis of the dream elicited something from his previous history that now became clear to the patient for the first time: He had been the darling of a somewhat hysterical mother. She had pitied him, admired him, pampered him so much that he never got along properly at school because he was too girlish. Later he suddenly swung over to the masculine side and went into the army, where he was able to hide his inner weakness by a display of "toughness." Thus, in a sense, his mother too had lamed him.

We are evidently dealing here with that same old serpent who had been the special friend of Eve. "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel," runs the saying in Genesis, an echo of the much more ancient Egyptian hymn that used to be recited or chanted for the cure of snake-bite:

The mouth of the god trembled with age, His spittle fell to the earth,
And what he spat forth fell upon the ground. Then Isis kneaded it with her hands
Together with the earth which was there; And she made it like a spear.
She wound not the living snake about her face, But threw it in a coil upon the path
Where the great god was wont to wander
At his pleasure through his two kingdoms.
The noble god stepped forth in splendour,
The gods serving Pharaoh bore him company,
And he went forth as was each day his wont.
Then the noble worm stung him ...
His jawbones chattered,

He trembled in all his limbs, And the poison invaded his flesh
As the Nile invades his territory.

The patient’s conscious knowledge of the Bible was at a lamentable minimum. Probably he had once heard of the serpent biting the heel and then quickly forgotten it. But something deep in his unconscious heard it and did not forget; it remembered this story at a suitable opportunity. This part of the unconscious evidently likes to express itself mythologically, because this way of expression is in keeping with its nature.

But to what kind of mentality does the symbolical or metaphorical way ,bf expression correspond? It corresponds to the mentality of the primitive, whose language possesses no abstractions but only natural and "unnatural" analogies. This primeval mentality is as foreign to the psyche that produced the heartache and the lump in the throat as a brontosaurus is to a racehorse. The/dream of the snake reveals a fragment of psychic activity that has nothing whatever to do with the dreamer as a modern individual. It functions at a deeper level, so to speak, and only the results of this activity rise up into the upper layer where the repressed affects lie, as foreign to them as a dream is to waking consciousness. Just as some kind of analytical technique is needed to understand a dream, so a knowledge of mythology is needed in order to grasp the meaning of a content deriving from the deeper levels of the psyche.

The snake-motif was certainly not an individual acquisition of the dreamer, for snake-dreams are very common even among city-dwellers who have probably never seen a real snake.

It might be objected that the snake in the dream is nothing but a concretized figure of speech. We say of certain women that they are treacherous as snakes, wily as serpents; we speak of the snake of temptation, etc. This objection does not seem to me to hold good in the present instance, though it would be difficult to prove this because the snake is in fact a common figure of speech. A more certain proof would be possible only if we succeeded in finding a case where the mythological symbolism is neither a common figure of speech nor an instance of cryptomnesia—that is to say, where the dreamer had not read, seen, or heard the motif somewhere, and then forgotten it and remembered it unconsciously. This proof seems to me of great importance, since it would show that the rationally explicable unconscious, which consists of material that has been made unconscious artificially, as it were, is only a top layer, and that underneath is an absolute unconscious which has nothing to do with our personal experience. This absolute unconscious would then be a psychic activity which goes on independently of the conscious mind and is not dependent even on the upper layers of the unconscious, untouched—and perhaps untouchable—by personal experience. It would be a kind of supra-individual psychic activity, a collective unconscious, as I have called it, as distinct from a superficial, relative, or personal unconscious.

But before we go in search of this proof, I would like, for the sake of completeness, to make a few more remarks about the snake-dream. It seems as if this hypothetical deeper layer of the unconscious—the collective unconscious, as I shall now speak of it—had translated the patient’s experiences with women into the snake-bite dream and thus turned them into a regular mythological motif. The reason—or rather, the purpose—of this is at first somewhat obscure. But if we remember the fundamental principle that the symptomatology of an illness is at the same time a natural attempt at healing—the heartaches, for example, being an attempt to produce an emotional outburst—then we must regard the heel symptom as an attempt at healing too. As the dream shows, not only the recent disappointment in love, but all other disappointments, in school and elsewhere, are raised by this symptom to the level of a mythological event, as though this would in some way help the patient.

This may strike us as flatly incredible. But the ancient Egyptian priest-physicians, who intoned the hymn to the Isis-serpent over the snake-bite, did not find this theory at all incredible; and not only they, but the whole world believed, as the primitive today still believes, in magic by analogy or "sympathetic magic."

We are concerned here, then, with the psychological phenomenon that lies at the root of magic by analogy. We should not think that this is an ancient superstition which we have long since outgrown. If you read the Latin text of the Mass carefully, you will constantly come upon the famous "sicut"; this always introduces an analogy by means of which a change is to be produced. Another striking example of analogy is the making of fire on Holy Saturday. In former times, the new fire was struck from the stone, and still earlier it was obtained by boring into a piece of wood, which was the prerogative of the Church. Therefore in the prayer of the priest it is said: "Deus, qui per Filium tuum, angularem scilicet lapidem, claritatis tuae fidelibus ignem contulisti productum ex silice, nostris profuturum usibus, novum hunc ignem sanctifica."—"O God, who through thy Son, who is called the cornerstone, hast brought the fire of thy light to the faithful, make holy for our future use this new fire struck from the firestone." By the analogy of Christ with the cornerstone, the firestone is raised to the level of Christ himself, who again kindles a new fire.

The rationalist may laugh at this. But something deep in us is stirred, and not in us alone but in millions of Christian men and women, though we may call it only a feeling for beauty. What is stirred in us is that faraway background, those immemorial patterns of the human mind, which we have not acquired but have inherited from the dim ages of the past.

If this supra-individual psyche exists, everything that is translated into its picture-language would be depersonalized, and if this became conscious would appear to us sub specie aeternitatis. Not as my sorrow, but as the sorrow of the world; not a personal isolating pain, but a pain without bitterness that unites all humanity. The healing effect of this needs no proof.

But as to whether this supra-individual psychic activity actually exists, I have so far given no proof that satisfies all the requirements. I should now like to do this once more in the form of an example. The case is that of a man in his thirties, who was suffering from a paranoid form of schizophrenia. He became ill in his early twenties. He had always presented a strange mixture of intelligence, wrong-headedness, and fantastic ideas. He was an ordinary clerk, employed in a consulate. Evidently as a compensation for his very modest existence he was seized with megalomania and believed himself to be the Saviour. He suffered from frequent hallucinations and was at times very much disturbed. In his quiet periods he was allowed to go unattended ip the corridor. One day I came across him there, blinking through the window up at the sun, and moving his head from side to side in a curious manner. He took me by the arm and said he wanted to show me something. He said I must look at the sun with eyes half shut, and then I could see the sun’s phallus. If I moved my head from side to side the sunphallus would move too, and that was the origin of the wind.

I made this observation about 1906. In the course of the year 1910, when I was engrossed in mythological studies, a book of Dieterich’s came into my hands. It was part of the so-called Paris magic papyrus and was thought by Dieterich to be a liturgy of the Mithraic cult.3 It consisted of a series of instructions, invocations, and visions. One of these visions is described in the following words: "And likewise the so-called tube, the origin of the ministering wind. For you will see hanging down from the disc of the sun something that looks like a tube. And towards the regions westward it is as though there were an infinite east wind. But if the other wind should prevail towards the regions of the east, you will in like manner see the vision veering in that direction." The Greek word for ’tube,’ means a wind-instrument, and the combination au’\o, 7raxv, in Homer means ’a thick jet of blood.’ So evidently a stream of wind is blowing through the tube out of the sun.

The vision of my patient in 1906, and the Greek text first edited in 1910, should be sufficiently far apart to rule out the possibility of cryptomnesia on his side and of thought-transference on mine. The obvious parallelism of the two visions cannot be disputed, though one might object that the similarity is purely fortuitous. In that case we should expect the vision to have no connections with analogous ideas, nor any inner meaning. But this expectation is not fulfilled, for in certain medieval paintings this tube is actually depicted as a sort of hose-pipe reaching down from heaven under the robe of Mary. In it the Holy Ghost flies down in the form of a dove to impregnate the Virgin. As we know from the miracle of Pentecost, the Holy Ghost was originally conceived as a mighty rushing wind, the 7rVfv }la, "the wind that bloweth where it listeth." In a Latin text we read: "Animo descensus per orbem sol is tribuitur" (They say that the spirit descends through the disc of the sun). This conception is common to the whole of late classical and medieval philosophy.

I cannot, therefore, discover anything fortuitous in these visions, but simply the revival of possibilities of ideas that have always existed, that can be found again in the most diverse minds and in all epochs, and are therefore not to be mistaken for inherited ideas.

I have purposely gone into the details of this case in order to give you a concrete picture of that deeper psychic activity which I call the collective unconscious. Summing up, I would like to emphasize that we must distinguish three psychic levels: (1) consciousness, (2) the personal unconscious, and (3) the collective unconscious. The personal unconscious consists firstly of all those contents that -became unconscious either because they lost their intensity and were forgotten or because consciousness was withdrawn from them (repression), and secondly of contents, some of thein sense-impressions, which never had sufficient intensity to reach consciousness but have somehow entered the psyche. The collective unconscious, however, as the ancestral heritage of possibilities of representation, is not individual but common to all men, and perhaps even to all animals, and is the true basis of the individual psyche.

This whole psychic organism corresponds exactly to the body, which, though individually varied, is in all' essential features the specifically human body which all men have. In its development and structure, it still preserves elements that connect it with the invertebrates and ultimately with the protozoa. Theoretically it should be possible to "peel" the collective unconscious, layer by layer, until we came to the psychology of the worm, and even of the amoeba.

We are all agreed that it would be quite impossible to understand the living organism apart from its relation to the environment. There are countless biological facts that can only be explained as reactions to environmental conditions, e.g., the blindness of Proteus anguinus) the peculiarities of intestinal parasites, the anatomy of vertebrates that have reverted to aquatic life.

The same is true of the psyche. Its peculiar organization must be intimately connected with environmental conditions. We should expect consciousness to react and adapt itself to the present, because it is that part of the psyche which is concerned chiefly with events of the moment. But from the collective unconscious, as a timeless and universal psyche, we should expect reactions to universal and constant conditions, whether psychological, physiological, or physical.

The collective unconscious-so far as we can say anything about it at all-appears to consist of mythological motifs or primordial images, for which reason the myths of all nations are its real exponents. In fact, the whole of mythology could be taken as a sort of projection of the collective unconscious. We can see this most dearly if we look at the heavenly constellations, whose originally chaotic forms were organized through the projection of images. This explains the influence of the stars as asserted by astrologers. These influences are nothing but unconscious, introspective perceptions of the activity of the collective unconscious. Just as the constellations were projected into the heavens, similar figures were projected into legends and fairytales or upon historical persons. We can therefore study the collective unconscious in two ways. either in mythology or in the analysis of the individual. As I cannot make the latter material available here, I must confine myself to mythology. This is such a wide field that we can select from it only a few types. Similarly, environmental conditions are endlessly varied, so here too only a few of the more typical can be discussed.

Just as the living body with its special characteristics is a system of functions for adapting to environmental conditions, so the psyche must exhibit organs or functional systems that correspond to regular physical events. By this I do not mean sense-functions dependent on organs, but rather a sort of psychic parallel to regular physical occurrences. To take an example, the daily course of the sun and the regular alternation of day and night must have imprinted themselves on the psyche in the form of an image from primordial times. We cannot demonstrate the existence of this image, but we find instead more or less fantastic analogies of the physical process. Every morning a divine hero is born from the sea and mounts the chariot of the sun. In the West a Great Mother awaits him, and he is devoured by her in the evening. In the belly of a dragon he traverses the depths of the midnight sea. After a frightful combat with the serpent of night he is born again in the morning.

This conglomerate myth undoubtedly contains a reflection of the physical process. Indeed this is so obvious that many investigators assume that primitives invent such myths merely to explain physical processes. There can be no doubt that science and philosophy have grown from this matrix, but that primitives think up such things merely from a need for explanation, as a sort of physical or astronomical theory, seems to me highly improbable.

What we can safely say about mythical images is that the physical process imprinted itself on the psyche in this fantastic, distorted form and was preserved there, so that the unconscious still reproduces similar images ,today. Naturally the question ow arises: why does the psyche not register the actual process, 1l1stead of mere fantasies about the physical process?

If you can put yourself in the mind of the primitive, you will at once understand why this is so. He lives in such "participation mystique" with his world, as Levy-Bruhl calls it, that there is nothing like that absolute distinction between subject and object which exists in our minds. What happens outside also happens in him, and what happens in him also happens outside. I witnessed a very fine example of this when I was with the Elgonyi, a primitive tribe living on Mount Elgon, in East Africa. At sunrise they spit on their hands and then hold the palms towards the sun as it comes over the horizon. "We are happy that the night is past," they say. Since the word for sun, adhista, also means God, I asked: "Is the sun God?" They said "No" to this and laughed, as if I had said something especially stupid. As the sun was just then high in the heavens, I pointed to it and asked: "When the sun is there you say it is not God, but when it is in the east you say it is God. How is that?" There was an embarrassed silence till an old chief began to explain. "It is so," he said. "'When the sun is up there it is not God, but when it rises, that is God [or: then it is God]." To the primitive mind it is immaterial which of these two versions is correct. Sunrise and his own feeling of deliverance are for him the same divine experience, just as night and his fear are the same thing. Naturally his emotions are more important to him than physics; therefore what he registers is his emotional fantasies. For him night means snakes and the cold breath of spirits, whereas morning means the birth of a beautiful god.

There are mythological theories that explain everything as coming from the sun and lunar theories that do the same for the moon. This is due to the simple fact that there are countless myths about the moon, among them a whole host in which the moon is the wife of the sun. The moon is the changing experience of the night, and thus coincides with the primitive's sexual experience of woman, who for him is also the experience of the night. But the moon can equally well be the injured brother of the sun, for at night affect-laden and evil thoughts of power and revenge may disturb sleep. The moon, too, is a disturber of sleep, and is also the abode of departed souls, for at night the dead return in dreams and the phantoms of the past terrify the sleepless. Thus the moon also signifies madness ("lunacy"). It is such experiences as these that have impressed themselves on the mind, rather than the changing image of the moon.

It is not storms, not thunder and lightning, not rain and cloud that remain as images in the psyche, but the fantasies caused by the affects they arouse. I once experienced a violent earthquake, and my first, immediate feeling was that I no longer stood on the solid and familiar earth, but on the skin of a gigantic animal that was heaving under my feet. It was this image that impressed itself on me, not the physical fact. Man's curses against devastating thunderstorms, his terror of the unchained elements-these affects anthropomorphize the passion of nature, and the purely physical element becomes an angry god.

Like the physical conditions of his environment, the physiological conditions, glandular secretions, etc., also can arouse fantasies charged with affect. Sexuality appears as a god of fertility, as a fiercely sensual, feminine daemon, as the devil himself with Dionysian goat's legs and obscene gestures, or as a terrifying serpent that squeezes its victims to death.

Hunger makes food into gods. Certain Mexican tribes even give their food-gods an annual holiday to allow them to recuperate, and during this time the staple food is not eaten. The ancient Pharaohs were worshipped as eaters of gods. Osiris is the wheat, the son of the earth, and to this day the Host must be made of wheat-meal, i.e., a god to be eaten, as also was Iacchos, the mysterious god of the Eleusinian mysteries. The bull of Mithras is the edible fruitfulness of the earth.

The psychological conditions of the environment naturally leave similar mythical traces behind them. Dangerous situations, be they dangers to the body or to the soul, arouse affect-laden fantasies, and, in so far as such situations typically repeat themselves, they give rise to archetypes, as I have termed myth-motifs in general.

Dragons make their lairs by watercourses, preferably near a ford or some such dangerous crossing; jinn and other devils are to be found in waterless deserts or in dangerous gorges; spirits of the dead haunt the eerie thickets of the bamboo forest; treacherous nixies and sea-serpents live in the depths of the ocean and its whirlpools. Mighty ancestor-spirits or gods dwell in the man of importance; deadly fetish-power resides in anyone strange or extraordinary. Sickness and death are never due to natural causes, but are invariably caused by spirits, witches, or wizards. Even the weapon that has killed a man is mana, endowed with extraordinary power.

How is it then, you may ask, with the most ordinary everyday events, with immediate realities like husband, wife, father, mother, child? These ordinary everyday facts, which are eternally repeated, create the mightiest archetypes of all, whose ceaseless activity is everywhere apparent even in a rationalistic age like ours. Let us take as an example the Christian dogma. The Trinity consists of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, who is represented by the bird of Astarte, the dove, and who in early Christian times was called Sophia and thought of as feminine. The worship of Mary in the later Church is an obvious substitute for this. Here we have the archetype of the family "in a supracelestial place," as Plato expresses it, enthroned as a formulation of the ultimate mystery. Christ is the bridegroom, the Church is the bride, the baptismal font is the womb of the Church, as it is still called in the text of the Benedictio fontis. The holy water has salt put into it, with the idea of making it like the amniotic fluid, or like sea-water. A hieros gamos or sacred wedding is performed on Holy Saturday before Easter, which I have just mentioned, and a burning candle as a phallic symbol is plunged three times into the font, in order to fertilize it and lend it the power to bear the baptized child anew (quasimodo genitus). The mana personality, the medicine-man, is the pontifex maximus, the Papa; the Church is mater ecclesia, the magna mater of magical power, and mankind are children in need of help and grace.

The deposit of mankind's whole ancestral experience—so rich in emotional imagery—of father, mother, child, husband and wife, of the magic personality, of dangers to body and soul, has exalted this group of archetypes into the supreme regulating principles of religious and even of political life, in unconscious recognition of their tremendous psychic power.

I have found that a rational understanding of these things in no way detracts from their value; on the contrary, it helps us not only to feel but to gain insight into their immense significance. These mighty projections enable the Catholic to experience large tracts of his collective unconscious in tangible reality. He has no need to go in search of authority, superior power, revelation, or something that would link him with the eternal and the timeless. These are always present and available for him: there, in the Holy of Holies on every altar, dwells the presence of God.- It is the Protestant and the Jew who have to seek, the one because he has, in a manner of speaking, destroyed the earthly body of the Deity, the other because he can never find it. For both of them the archetypes, which to the Catholic world have become a visible and living reality, lie in the unconscious. Unfortunately I cannot enter here into the remarkable differences of attitude towards the unconscious in our culture, but would only point out that this question is one of the greatest problems confronting humanity.

That this is so is immediately understandable when we consider that the unconscious, as the totality of all archetypes, is the deposit of all human experience right back to its remotest beginnings. Not, indeed, a dead deposit, a sort of abandoned rubbish-heap, but a living system of reactions and aptitudes that determine the individual's life in invisible ways—all the more effective because invisible. It is not just a gigantic historical prejudice, so to speak, an a priori historical condition; it is also the source of the instincts, for the archetypes are simply the forms which the instincts assume. From the living fountain of instinct flows everything that is creative; hence the unconscious is not merely conditioned by history, but is the very source of the creative impulse. It is like Nature herself—prodigiously conservative, and yet transcending her own historical conditions in her acts of creation. No wonder, then, that it has always been a burning question for humanity how best to adapt to these invisible determinants. If consciousness had never split off from the unconscious—an eternally repeated event symbolized as the fall of the angels and the disobedience of the first parents—this problem would never have arisen, any more than would the question of environmental adaptation.

The existence of an individual consciousness makes man aware of the difficulties of his inner as well as his outer life. Just as the world about him takes on a friendly or a hostile aspect to the eyes of primitive man, so the influences of his unconscious seem to him like an opposing power, with which he has to come to terms just as with the visible world. His countless magical practices serve this end. On higher levels of civilization, religion and philosophy fulfill the same purpose. Whenever such a system of adaptation breaks down a general unrest begins to appear, and attempts are made to find a suitable new form of relationship to the unconscious.

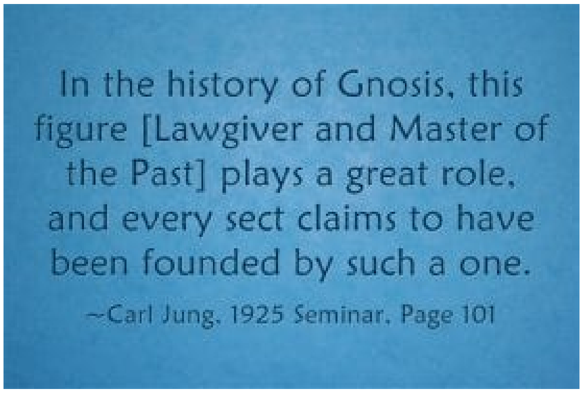
These things seem very remote to our modern, "enlightened" eyes. When I speak of this hinterland of the mind, the unconscious, and compare its reality with that of the visible world, I often meet with an incredulous smile. But then I must ask how many people there are in our civilized world who still believe in mana and spirits and suchlike theories-in other words, how many millions of Christian Scientists and spiritualists are there? I will not add to this list of questions. They are,merely intended to illustrate the fact that the problem of invisible psychic determinants is as alive today as ever it was.

The collective unconscious contains the whole spiritual heritage of mankind’s evolution, born anew in the brain structure of every individual. His conscious mind is an ephemeral phenomenon that accomplishes all provisional adaptations and orientations, for which reason one can best compare its function to orientation in space. The unconscious, on the other hand, is the source of the instinctual forces of the psyche and of the forms. or categories that regulate them, namely the archetypes. All the, most powerful ideas in history go back to archetypes. This is particularly ,true of religious ideas, but the central concepts of science, philosophy, and ethics are no exception to this rule. In their present form they are variants of archetypal ideas, created by consciously applying and adapting these ideas to reality. For it is the function of consciousness not only to recognize and assimilate the external world through the gateway of the senses, but to translate into visible reality the world within us.

[2]Source may be found here

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/61cf7-structure.jpg`
2. `http://www.the16types.info/vbulletin/content.php/209-The-Structure-of-the-Psyche-Jung`

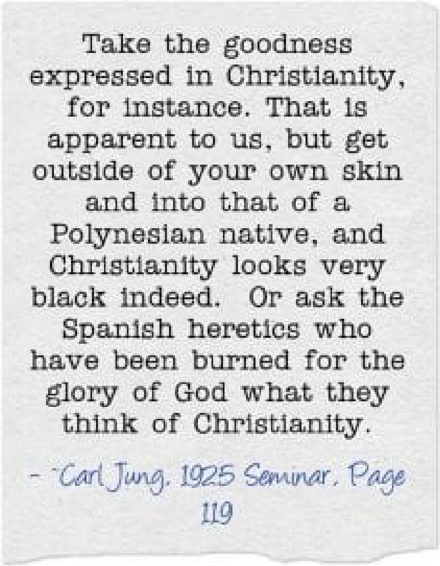
Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-11-19 03:40)



In the history of Gnosis, this figure [Lawgiver and Master of the Past] plays a great role, and every sect claims to have been founded by such a one.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 101

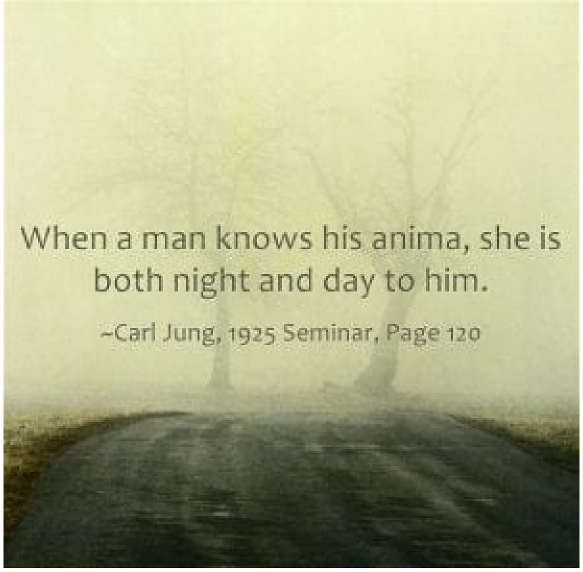
In the history of Gnosis, this figure [Lawgiver and Master of the Past] plays a great role, and every sect claims to have been founded by such a one. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 101



Take the goodness expressed in Christianity, for instance. That is apparent to us, but get outside of your own skin and into that of a Polynesian native, and Christianity looks very black indeed. Or ask the Spanish heretics who have been burned for the glory of God what they think of Christianity.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 119

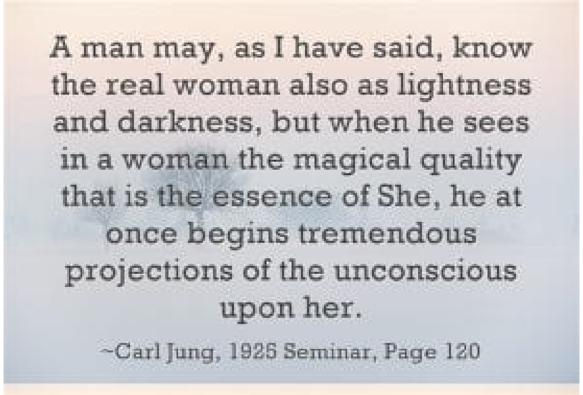
Take the goodness expressed in Christianity, for instance. That is apparent to us, but get outside of your own skin and into that of a Polynesian native, and Christianity looks very black indeed. Or ask the Spanish heretics who have been burned for the glory of God what they think of Christianity. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 119



When a man knows his anima, she is both night and day to him.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 120

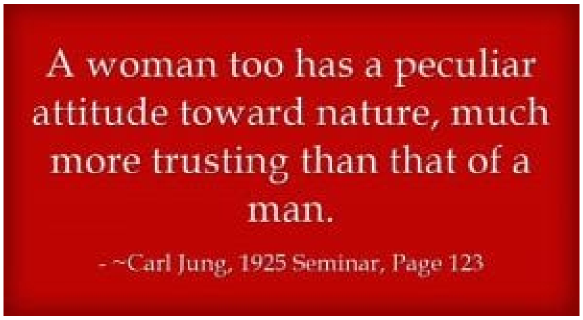
When a man knows his anima, she is both night and day to him. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 120



A man may, as I have said, know the real woman also as lightness and darkness, but when he sees in a woman the magical quality that is the essence of She, he at once begins tremendous projections of the unconscious upon her.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 120

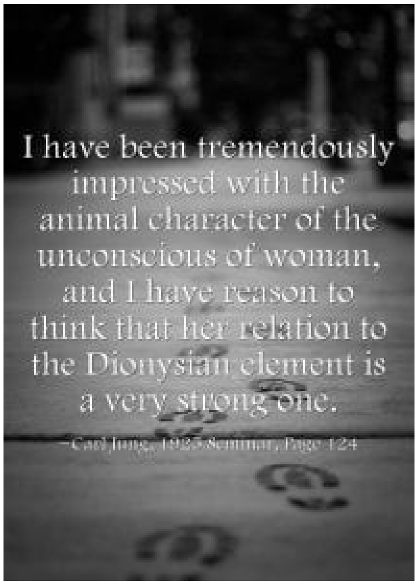
A man may, as I have said, know the real woman also as lightness and darkness, but when he sees in a woman the magical quality that is the essence of She, he at once begins tremendous projections of the unconscious upon her. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 120



A woman too has a peculiar attitude toward nature, much more trusting than that of a man.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 123

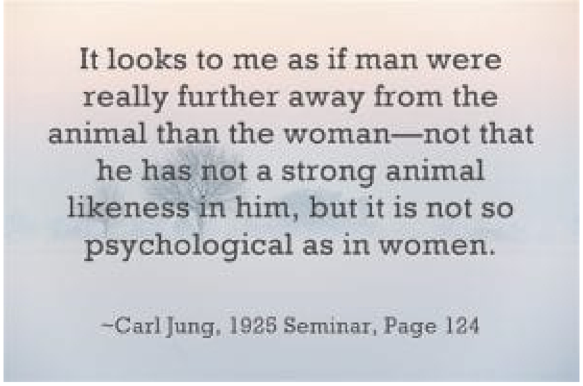
A woman too has a peculiar attitude toward nature, much more trusting than that of a man. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 123



I have been tremendously impressed with the animal character of the unconscious of woman, and I have reason to think that her relation to the Dionysian element is a very strong one.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 124

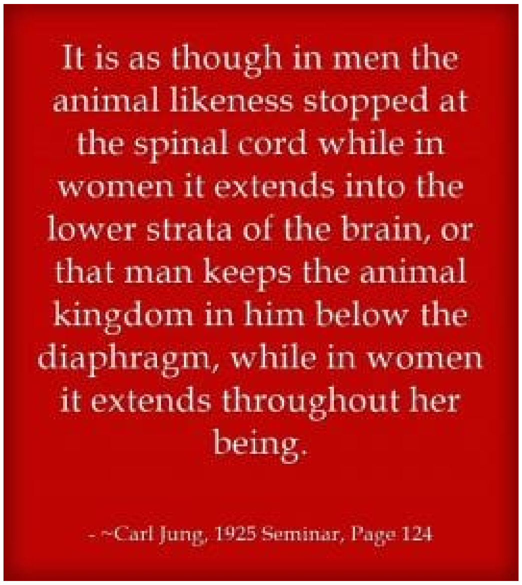
I have been tremendously impressed with the animal character of the unconscious of woman, and I have reason to think that her relation to the Dionysian element is a very strong one. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 124



It looks to me as if man were really further away from the animal than the woman—not that he has not a strong animal likeness in him, but it is not so psychological as in women.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 124

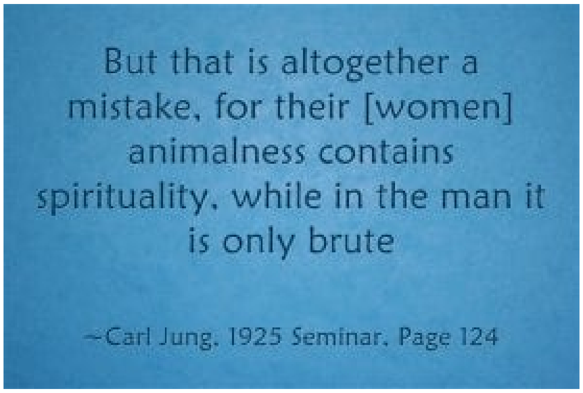
It looks to me as if man were really further away from the animal than the woman—not that he has not a strong animal likeness in him, but it is not so psychological as in women. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 124



It is as though in men the animal likeness stopped at the spinal cord while in women it extends into the lower strata of the brain, or that man keeps the animal kingdom in him below the diaphragm, while in women it extends throughout her being.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 124

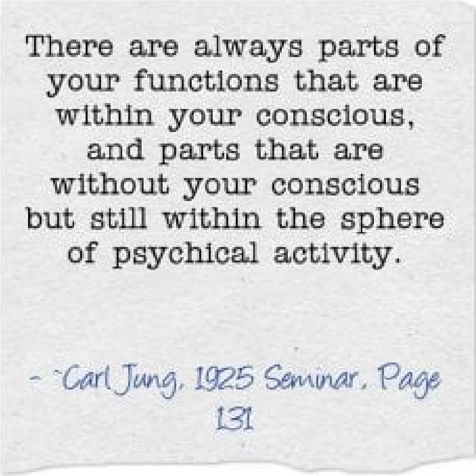
It is as though in men the animal likeness stopped at the spinal cord while in women it extends into the lower strata of the brain, or that man keeps the animal kingdom in him below the diaphragm, while in women it extends throughout her being. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 124



But that is altogether a mistake, for their [women] animalness contains spirituality, while in the man it is only brute

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 124

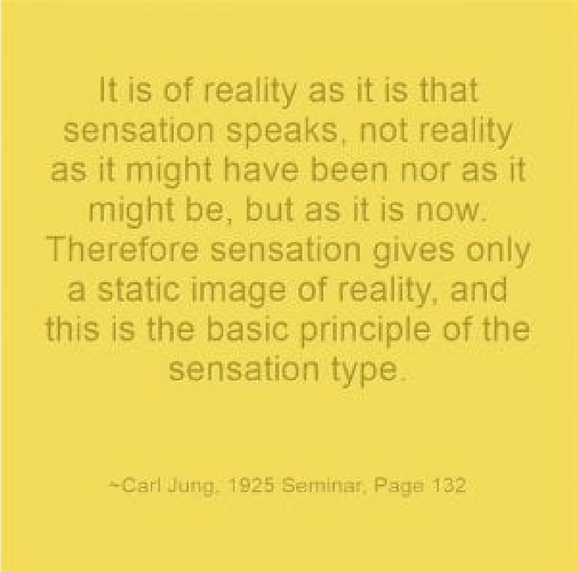
But that is altogether a mistake, for their [women] animalness contains spirituality, while in the man it is only brute. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 124



There are always parts of your functions that are within your conscious, and parts that are without your conscious but still within the sphere of psychical activity.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 131

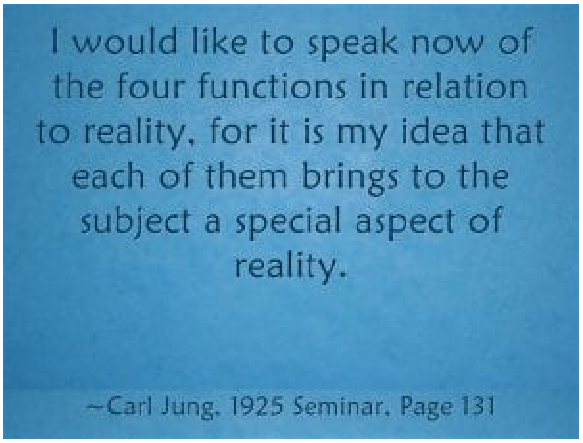
There are always parts of your functions that are within your conscious, and parts that are without your conscious but still within the sphere of psychical activity. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 131



It is of reality as it is that sensation speaks, not reality as it might have been nor as it might be, but as it is now. Therefore sensation gives only a static image of reality, and this is the basic principle of the sensation type.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 132

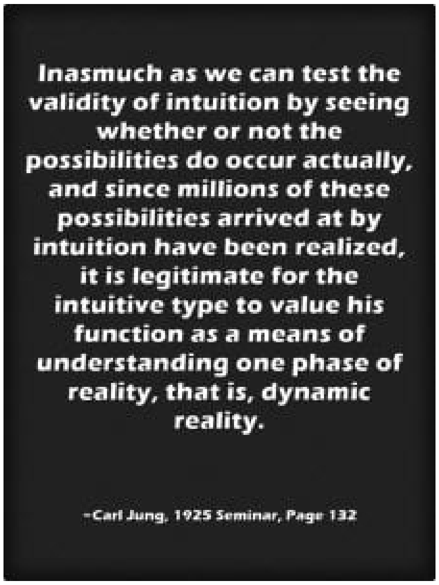
It is of reality as it is that sensation speaks, not reality as it might have been nor as it might be, but as it is now. Therefore sensation gives only a static image of reality, and this is the basic principle of the sensation type. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 132



I would like to speak now of the four functions in relation to reality, for it is my idea that each of them brings to the subject a special aspect of reality.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 131

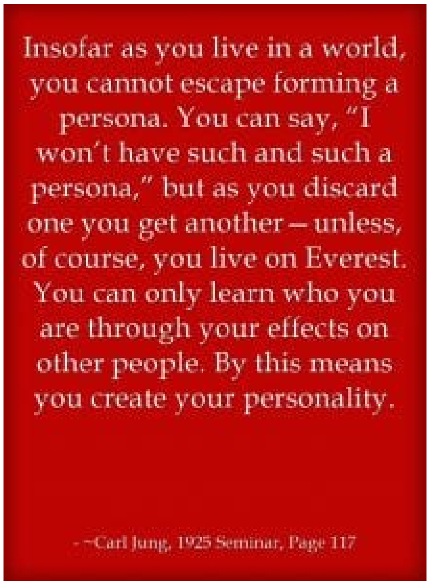
I would like to speak now of the four functions in relation to reality, for it is my idea that each of them brings to the subject a special aspect of reality. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 131



Inasmuch as we can test the validity of intuition by seeing whether or not the possibilities do occur actually, and since millions of these possibilities arrived at by intuition have been realized, it is legitimate for the intuitive type to value his function as a means of understanding one phase of reality, that is, dynamic reality.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 132

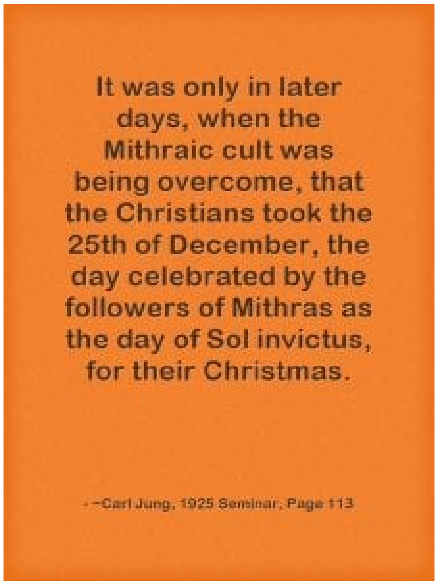
Inasmuch as we can test the validity of intuition by seeing whether or not the possibilities do occur actually, and since millions of these possibilities arrived at by intuition have been realized, it is legitimate for the intuitive type to value his function as a means of understanding one phase of reality, that is, dynamic reality. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 132



Insofar as you live in a world, you cannot escape forming a persona. You can say, "I won't have such and such a persona," but as you discard one you get another—unless, of course, you live on Everest. You can only learn who you are through your effects on other people. By this means you create your personality.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 117

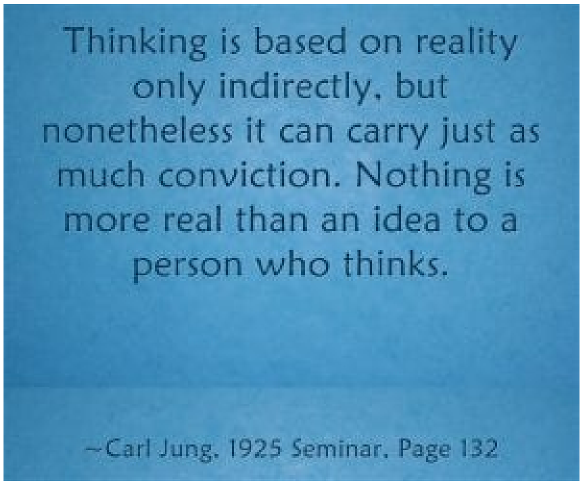
Insofar as you live in a world, you cannot escape forming a persona. You can say, "I won't have such and such a persona," but as you discard one you get another—unless, of course, you live on Everest. You can only learn who you are through your effects on other people. By this means you create your personality. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 117



It was only in later days, when the Mithraic cult was being overcome, that the Christians took the 25th of December, the day celebrated by the followers of Mithras as the day of Sol invictus, for their Christmas.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 113

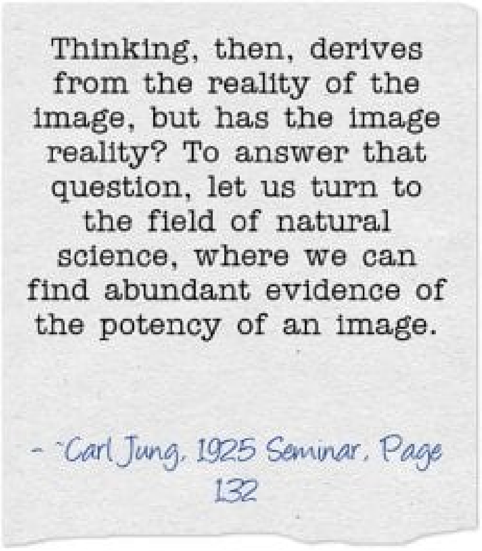
It was only in later days, when the Mithraic cult was being overcome, that the Christians took the 25th of December, the day celebrated by the followers of Mithras as the day of Sol invictus, for their Christmas. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 113



Thinking is based on reality only indirectly, but nonetheless it can carry just as much conviction. Nothing is more real than an idea to a person who thinks.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 132

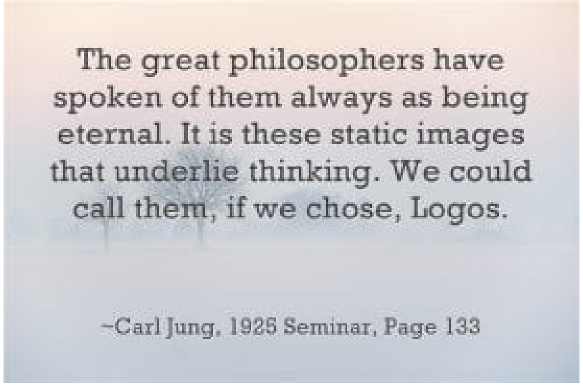
Thinking is based on reality only indirectly, but nonetheless it can carry just as much conviction. Nothing is more real than an idea to a person who thinks. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 132



Thinking, then, derives from the reality of the image, but has the image reality? To answer that question, let us turn to the field of natural science, where we can find abundant evidence of the potency of an image.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 132

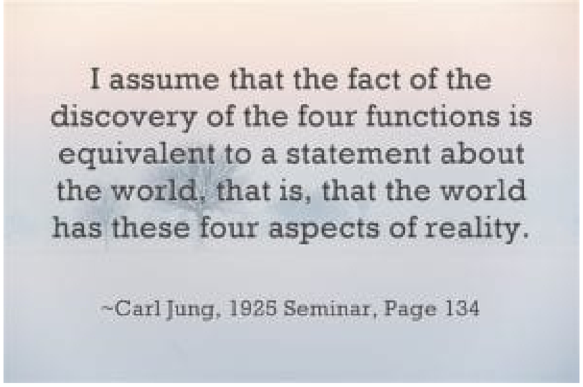
Thinking, then, derives from the reality of the image, but has the image reality? To answer that question, let us turn to the field of natural science, where we can find abundant evidence of the potency of an image. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 132



The great philosophers have spoken of them always as being eternal. It is these static images that underlie thinking. We could call them, if we chose, Logos.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 133

The great philosophers have spoken of them always as being eternal. It is these static images that underlie thinking. We could call them, if we chose, Logos. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 133



I assume that the fact of the discovery of the four functions is equivalent to a statement about the world, that is, that the world has these four aspects of reality.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 134

I assume that the fact of the discovery of the four functions is equivalent to a statement about the world, that is, that the world has these four aspects of reality. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 134

We have no way of knowing whether the world is Cosmos or Chaos. for. as we know the world. all the order is put into it by ourselves.
- ¯Carl Jung. 1925 Seminar. Page 134

We have no way of knowing whether the world is Cosmos or Chaos, for, as we know the world, all the order is put into it by ourselves. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 134

Each function type has a special way of viewing feeling, and is likely to find things about it which are untrue for the other types.
Thus one of the points with respect to the functions that has been most combated is my contention that feeling is rational.

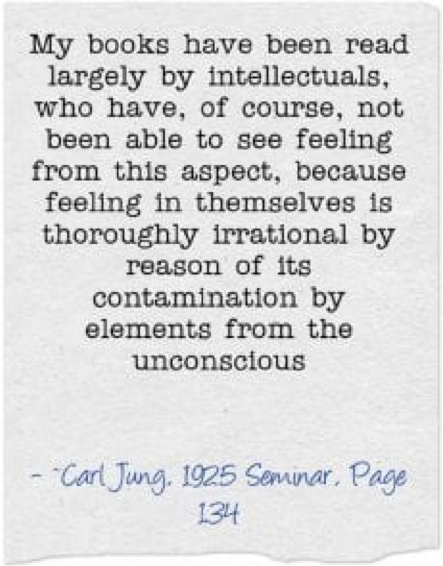
-Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 134

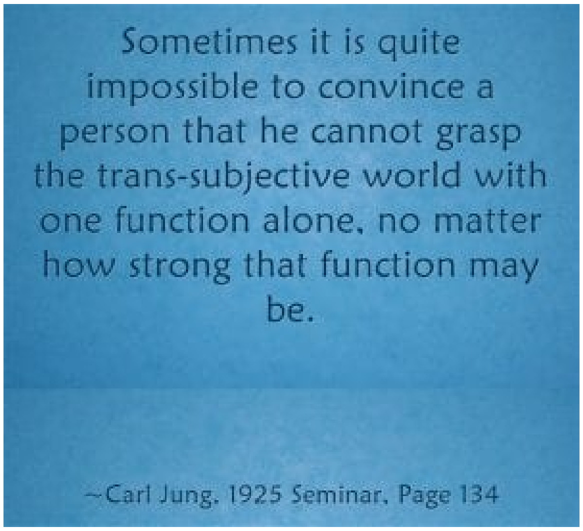
Each function type has a special way of viewing feeling, and is likely to find things about it which are untrue for the other types. Thus one of the points with respect to the functions that has been most combated is my contention that feeling is rational. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 134



My books have been read largely by intellectuals, who have, of course, not been able to see feeling from this aspect, because feeling in themselves is thoroughly irrational by reason of its contamination by elements from the unconscious

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 134

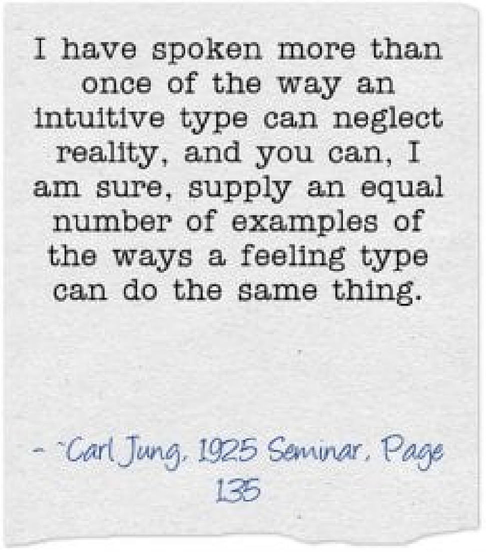
My books have been read largely by intellectuals, who have, of course, not been able to see feeling from this aspect, because feeling in themselves is thoroughly irrational by reason of its contamination by elements from the unconscious. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 134



Sometimes it is quite impossible to convince a person that he cannot grasp the trans-subjective world with one function alone, no matter how strong that function may be.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 134

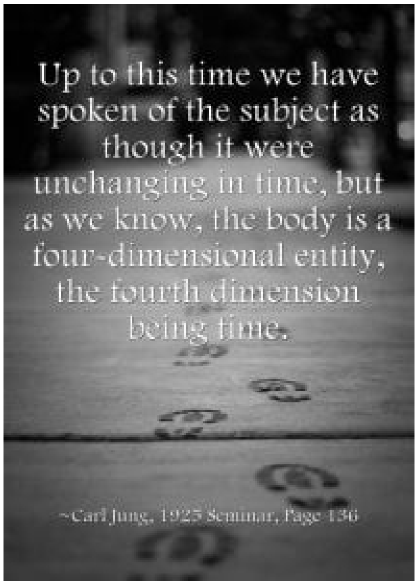
Sometimes it is quite impossible to convince a person that he cannot grasp the trans-subjective world with one function alone, no matter how strong that function may be. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 134



I have spoken more than once of the way an intuitive type can neglect reality, and you can, I am sure, supply an equal number of examples of the ways a feeling type can do the same thing.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 135

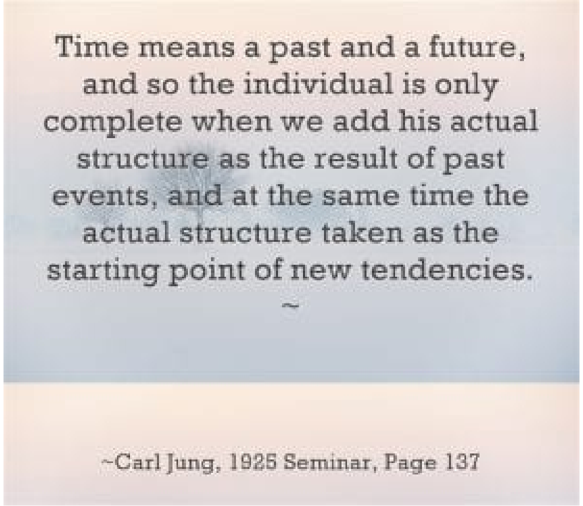
I have spoken more than once of the way an intuitive type can neglect reality, and you can, I am sure, supply an equal number of examples of the ways a feeling type can do the same thing. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 135



Up to this time we have spoken of the subject as though it were unchanging in time, but as we know, the body is a four-dimensional entity, the fourth dimension being time.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 136

Up to this time we have spoken of the subject as though it were unchanging in time, but as we know, the body is a four-dimensional entity, the fourth dimension being time. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 136



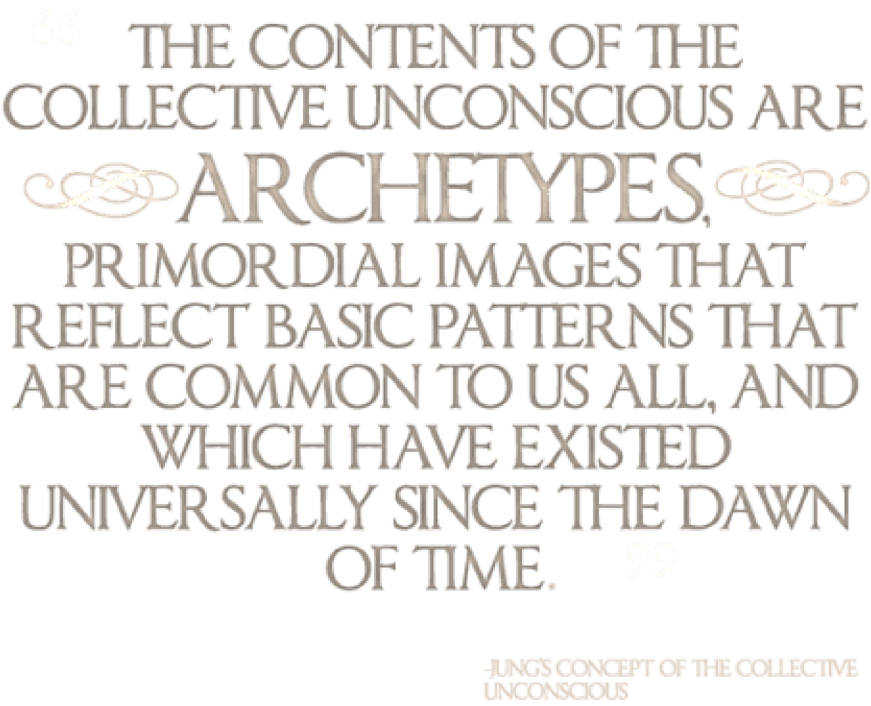
Time means a past and a future, and so the individual is only complete when we add his actual structure as the result of past events, and at the same time the actual structure taken as the starting point of new tendencies.

~

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 137

Time means a past and a future, and so the individual is only complete when we add his actual structure as the result of past events, and at the same time the actual structure taken as the starting point of new tendencies. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 137

Carl Jung: "Hence the archetype can never enter consciousness in its entirety..." (2019-11-19 03:49)



"THE CONTENTS OF THE COLLECTIVE UNCONSCIOUS ARE ARCHETYPES, PRIMORDIAL IMAGES THAT REFLECT BASIC PATTERNS THAT ARE COMMON TO US ALL, AND WHICH HAVE EXISTED UNIVERSALLY SINCE THE DAWN OF TIME."

-JUNG'S CONCEPT OF THE COLLECTIVE UNCONSCIOUS

[2]C.G. Jung Letters Vol. 1 1906-1950

To Elisabeth Metzger

Dear Frau Metzger, 7 February 1942

Your conception of the archetype as a psychic gene is quite possible.

It is also a plausible hypothesis that the archetype is produced by the original life urge and then gradually grows up into consciousness-with the qualification, however, that the innermost essence of the archetype can never become wholly conscious, since it is beyond the power of imagination and language to grasp and express its deepest nature.

It can only be experienced as an image.

Hence the archetype can never enter consciousness in its entirety but remains a borderline phenomenon, in the sense that external stimuli impinge upon the inner archetypal datum in a zone of friction, which is precisely what we might describe consciousness as being.

This view would do greater justice to the essentially conflicting nature of consciousness.

From the rest of your remarks I see that you have already formed trenchant views of the nature of the psyche.

Yours sincerely,

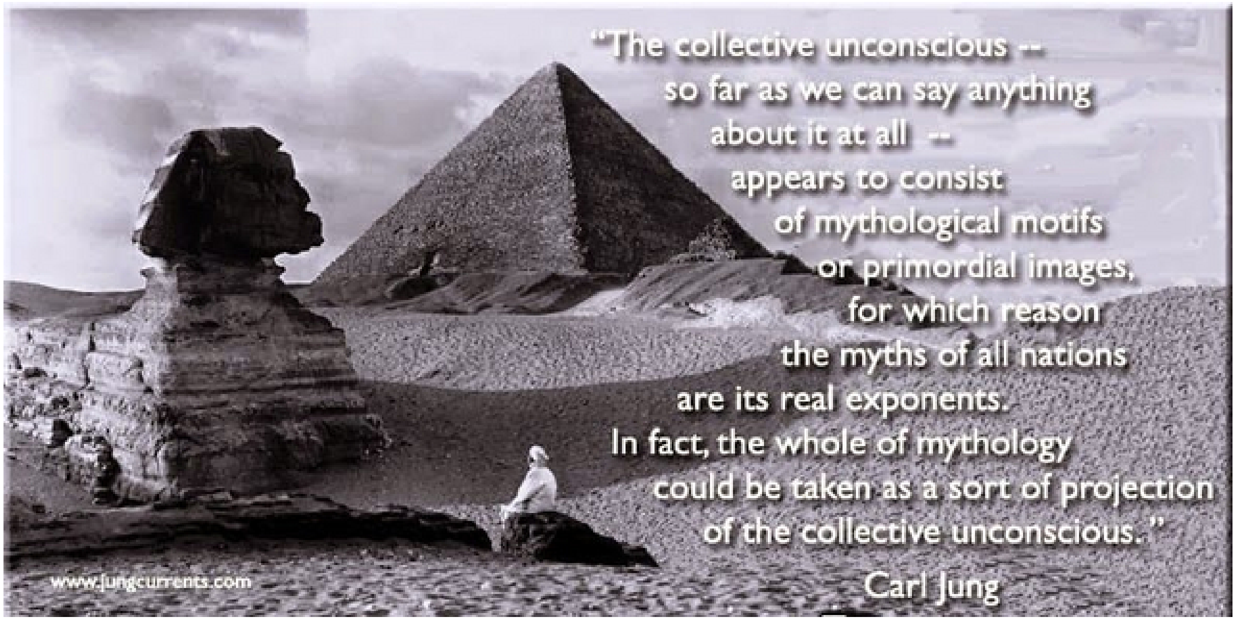
C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 313.

1. https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=c.g.+jung+letters&qid=1574185363&sr=8-1
2. https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=c.g.+jung+letters&qid=1574185363&sr=8-1

Carl Jung's response to a question about the relation between symbolic and rational-conceptual thinking...

(2019-11-19 03:53)

[1]



"The collective unconscious -- so far as we can say anything about it at all -- appears to consist of mythological motifs or primordial images, for which reason the myths of all nations are its real exponents. In fact, the whole of mythology could be taken as a sort of projection of the collective unconscious."
Carl Jung
www.jungcurrents.com

[2]C.G. Jung Letters Vol. 1 1906-1950

[Carl Jung's response to a question about the relation between symbolic and rational-conceptual thinking and to what extent the loss of the former during the Middle Ages was responsible for the alienation of scientific thought from a more general humanistic approach.]

To B. Milt

Dear Colleague, 8 June 1942

Your questions are not easy to answer as they touch on territory which for all the work of historical specialists still remains very much in the dark, probably because, as you quite rightly remark, the Western mind has deviated in a particular direction from its original basis.

Paracelsus, it seems to me, is one of the most outstanding exponents of a spiritual movement which sought to reverse this turning away from our psychic origins as a result of Scholasticism and Aristotelianism.

One can with a good conscience be in some doubt whether Paracelsus still remained in the origins or whether he got stuck in them again.

The object-orientedness of the Western mind, as I am accustomed to call it, makes us forget that all knowledge is subjectively-that is, psychically-conditioned.

This trend, manifesting itself first in the Church in the form of Platonism and Augustinism, succumbed to Aristotelianism.

The Arabs were in a sense responsible for this development because, through their transmission of Aristotle, they threatened the Platonism of the Church.

As we know, it was Thomas Aquinas who effectively parried this growing danger from the Arab side.

In my view, however, it would be wrong to overestimate the philosophical importance of the Arabs.

They were in the main faithful transmitters and handed down to the Middle Ages not only Aristotle but also a lot of Neoplatonic and Neopythagorean influences which became the roots of Western science.

By this I mean alchemy in the first place.

The quintessence of Hermetic philosophy is a classical feeling for nature and is pagan par excellence.

This lumen naturae was bound to appear obnoxious to the Church, for which reason the philosophical tendency in alchemy did not visibly break through until about the fourteenth century.

The parallel development in China is instructive in that alchemy was there allied with Taoism and in the first centuries after Christ was pressed back by Confucianism along with Taoism and its ancient sources.

But in keeping with the greater tolerance in China, alchemy resumed its philosophical flights perhaps in the eighth century, and put forth blossoms such as The Secret of the Golden Flower, which Richard Wilhelm brought out with my collaboration.

Confucianism could in a sense be compared with the Aristotelianism of the Church.

The symbol-laden obscurantism of our medieval alchemy, which strikes us as almost pathological, was due not least to the necessity of disguising the paganism of the alchemists' views because of the mortal danger of falling foul of the Holy Inquisition.

Since the essential source of knowledge in Hermetic philosophy was the lumen naturae, or individual revelation, it is altogether understandable that the revelation administered by the Church could not tolerate a second one.

Consequently, those deep springs bubbling up from nature, i.e., from the depths of the psyche, were largely blocked and the psychic component of our cognitive processes was excluded from the purview of consciousness.

As I have had the good fortune to go more closely into the psychology of Orientals, it has become clear to me that anything like a question of the unconscious-a quite notorious question for us simply doesn't exist for these people.

In the case of the Indians and Chinese, for instance, it is overwhelmingly clear that their whole spiritual attitude is based on what with us is profoundly unconscious.

It was therefore left to psychopathology rather than, say, theology to discover that a quite substantial portion of our psyche has disappeared-to wit, the so-called unconscious.

So it is not in the least surprising, but actually certain on a priori grounds, that we should 'find the nearest analogy to our "unconscious" in alchemy and Hermetic philosophy, and all we have really done today is unwittingly to take up again that spiritual quest whose exponent among many others was Paracelsus.

Our Western intellectualistic and rationalistic attitude has gradually become a sickness causing disturbances of the psychic equilibrium to an extent that can hardly be estimated at present.

If you like to call the attitude of Paracelsus experimental, then the result of the experiment was that he got the practical outcome of the Church's Aristotelianism, namely the objectification of nature, really going.

As to the other side of him, one can safely say it was not a success.

The adversities of his time saw to it that he remained stuck in occultism, thanks to the fact that that age had as little a conception of psychology as Catholic philosophy has today.

The psyche as an object of scientific study had still to be discovered.

I don't know whether I have answered your questions adequately, but you know as well as I do how complicated and far-reaching are the factors that have to be considered.

With collegial regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung; Carl Jung, Letters Vol.1, Pages 316-318.

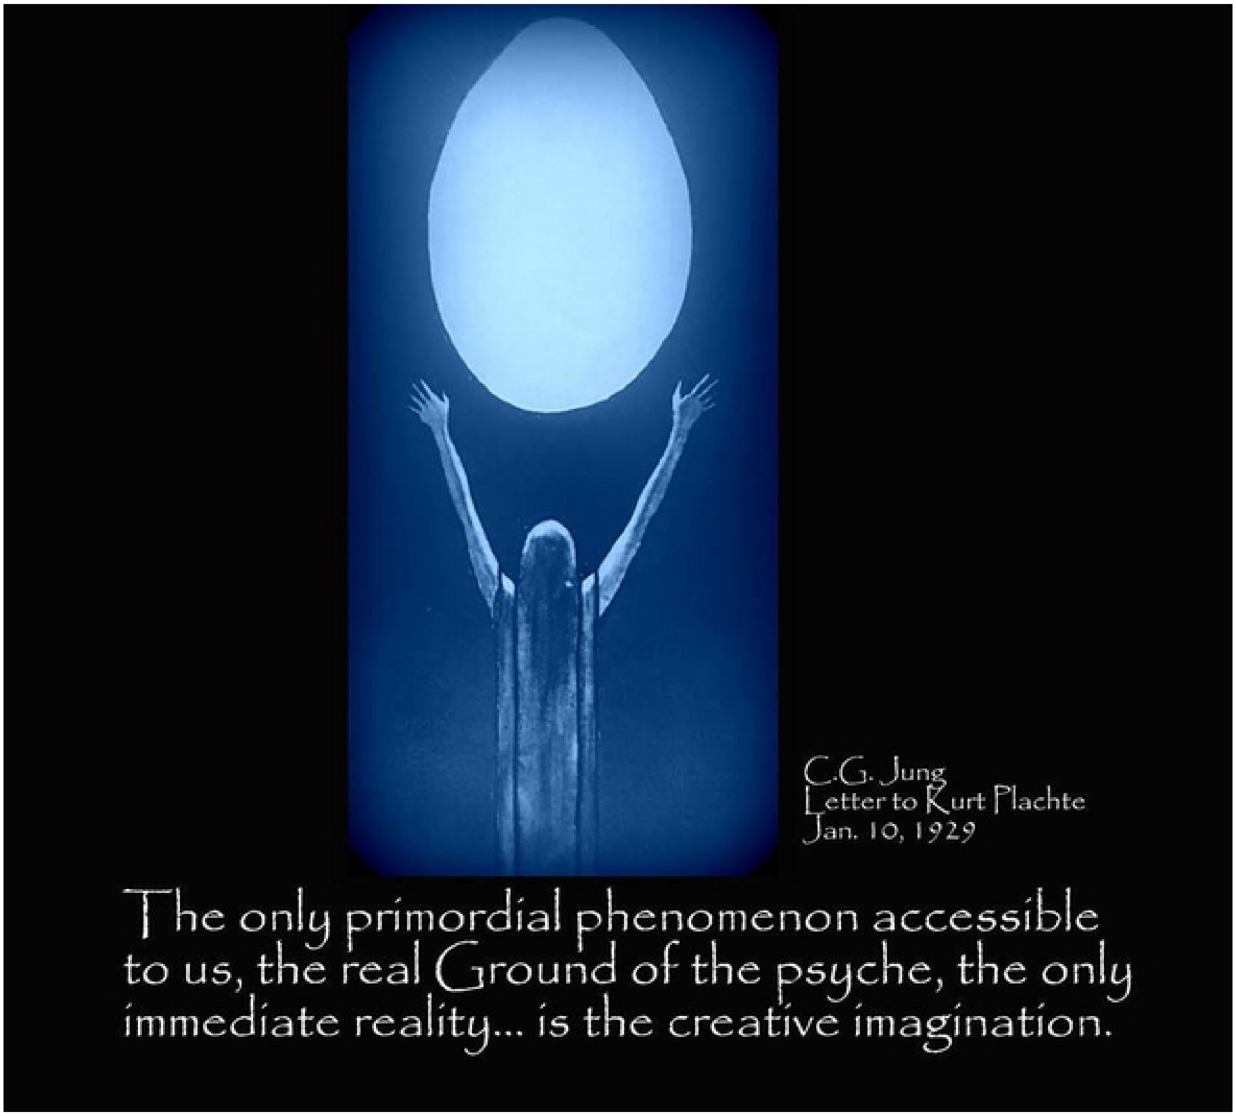
---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/4afc0-current.jpg`

2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=c.g.+jung+letters&qid=1574185363&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: The idol betokens a regression to the unconscious... (2019-11-19 04:12)

[1]



C.G. Jung
Letter to Kurt Plachte
Jan. 10, 1929
The only primordial phenomenon accessible to us, the real Ground of the psyche, the only immediate reality... is the creative imagination.

[2]C.G. Jung, Letters Vol. 1; 1906-1950

To Kurt Plachte 10 January 1929

I can agree with your statements in all details and merely regret I am not in a position to give you practical examples of my views.

Everything in me has arisen from direct experience of the mentally I or "seekers after truth."

For me a symbol is the sensuously perceptible expression of an inner experience.

A religious experience strives for expression and can be expressed only "symbolically" because it transcends understanding.

It must be expressed on way or another, for therein is revealed its immanent vital force.

It wants to step over, as it were, into visible life, to take concrete shape. (The spirit shows its effective power only in the reshaping of matter.)

An idol is a petrified symbol used stereotypically for "magical" effects.

It can have this fascinating effect so long as it touches those layers unconscious from which the symbol arose (somewhere else i.e. with other people).

Its effect is just the opposite of the symbol is an expression of the enrichment of consciousness through experience.

The idol betokens a regression to the unconscious, i.e .. an impoverishment of consciousness.

The Master speaks a "power word" born of the richness of his vision, the disciple merely conjures with it.

For the Master the communion means: I give you myself, my flesh, my blood.

For the disciple this means: I eat the god, his flesh and blood.

The ritual anthropophagy of primitive man (the cave dweller) echoes fascinatingly deep down in us: we can do it again, mysteriously sanctified, and yet we are not primitive brutes but are sanctified by the god’s flesh.

In a few cases I have found a quite unquestionable blood lust in connection with the Communion!

Here we have religious license for what is primitive and no longer permissible.

The magical word is one that lets "a primordial word resound behind it"’; magical action releases primordial action.

I am indeed convinced that creative imagination is the only primordial phenomenon accessible to us, the real Ground of the psyche, the only immediate reality.

Therefore I speak of esse in anima, the only form of being we can experience directly.

We can distinguish no form of being that is not psychic in the first place.

All other realities are derived from and indirectly revealed by it, actually with the artificial aid named science.

We should think of the collective unconscious neither as order nor as disorder.

Experience corroborates both.

With a disordered consciousness order can come out of the unconscious, just as conversely unconscious chaos can break into the too narrow cosmos of consciousness.

At the founding of the great religions there was to begin with a collective disorientation which everywhere constellated in the unconscious an overwhelming principle of order (the collective longing for redemption).

Through his inner vision the prophet discerns from the needs of his time the helpful image in the collective unconscious and expresses it in the symbol: because it speaks out of the collective unconscious it speaks for everyone-le vrai mot de la situation!

Hence it has a fascinating effect on everyone, it is "true' 'temporarily valid because it is meant only for a particular situation.

If the situation changes, a new "truth" is needed, therefore truth always relative to a particular situation.

So long as the symbol is the true and redeeming answer to the corresponding situation, it is true, valid, indeed "absolute."

But if the situation changes and the is simply perpetuated, it is nothing but an idol, having an impoverishing and stultifying effect, because it merely makes us unconscious and provides no explanation and enlightenment.

Justin Martyr for instance, spoke of Christianity as "our philosophy."

The symbol is doctrine, the idol delusion.

I regard Hegel's "perceptual" thinking as a thinking analogous with *archetypes.

"Perceptual" or "apperceptive" thinking has greater meaning and value because it unites at least two functions.

The highest form of the intellectual process would be symbolic experience and its symbolic expression.

You are right-the symbol belongs to a different sphere from the sphere of instinct.

The latter sphere is the mother, the former the Son (or God).

For my private use I call the sphere of paradoxical existence, i.e., the instinctive unconscious, the Pleroma ,a term borrowed from Gnosticism.

The reflection and formation of the Pleroma in the individual consciousness produces an image of it (of like nature in a certain sense), and that is the symbol.

In it all paradoxes are abolished.

In the Pleroma, Above and Below lie together in a strange way and produce nothing; but when it is disturbed by the mistakes needs of the individual a waterfall arises between Above and Below, a dynamic something that is the symbol.

Like the Pleroma, the symbols is greater than man.

It overpowers him, shapes him, as if he had. opened a sluice that pours a mighty stream over him sweeps him away.

Our difficulty is that we understand the psyche as what we make regulate ourselves and we can't get it into our head that we are the helpless victims of psychic forces.

Take the professor who suffers from a ”compulsion neurosis."

Compulsion neurosis is a magic word used by the modern medicine man, which means (apotropaically) nothing but neurosis (imaginary illness).

Yet real compulsion is one of the most hellish, devilish tortures, far worse than any organic disease.

It would be better if the professor thought were possessed by the devil! That would be considerably nearer to the truth.

The term "symbol" in Freud's psychoanalysis has nothing to with the symbol.

He should have said "symptom" or "metaphor” instead.

The symbol never arises in the unconscious (the Pleroma) but as you rightly say, "in self-formation."

It comes from the unconscious raw material and is formed and expressed consciously. (Cf. my definition of the symbol in Psychological Types.)

The symbol needs man for its development.

But it grows beyond him, therefore it is called "God," since it expresses a psychic situation or factor stronger than the ego. (I call it the self)

This factor is pre-existent in the collective unconscious, yet powerless until I experience it consciously then it takes the lead. ("Yet not I, but Christ liveth in me.")

It supplants the ego in essential respects.

Hence the deliverance from the feeling of ineptitude, etc. ("Thy Will be done.") Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 59-63.

Carl Jung across the web:

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/f9ed1-1plachte.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=c.g.+jung+letters&qid=1574185363&sr=8-1`

E.F. Edinger: On the psychology of terrorism (2019-11-19 04:24)

[1]

E.F. Edinger: On the psychology of terrorism; Unpublished letter written in 1995.

Terrorism is a manifestation of the psyche.

It is time we recognized the psyche as an autonomous factor in world affairs.

The psychological root of terrorism is a fanatical resentment – a quasi-psychotic hatred originating in the depths of the archetypal psyche and therefore carried by religious (archetypal) energies.

A classic literary example is Melville's Moby Dick.

Captain Ahab, with his fanatical hatred of the White Whale, is a paradigm of the modern terrorist.

Articulate terrorists generally express themselves in religious (archetypal) terminology.

The enemy is seen as the Principle of Objective Evil (Devil) and the terrorist perceives himself as the "heroic" agent of divine or Objective Justice (God).

This is an archetypal inflation of demonic proportions which temporarily grants the individual almost superhuman energy and effectiveness.

To deal with terrorism effectively we must understand it.

We need a new category to understand this new phenomenon.

These individuals are not criminals and are not madmen although they have some qualities of both.

Let's call them zealots.

Zealots are possessed by transpersonal, archetypal dynamisms deriving from the collective unconscious.

Their goal is a collective, not a personal one.

The criminal seeks his own personal gain; not so the zealot.

In the name of a transpersonal, collective value – a religion, an ethnic or national identity, a "patriotic" vision, etc. – they sacrifice their personal life in the service of their "god."

Although idiosyncratic and perverse, this is fundamentally a religious phenomenon that derives from the archetypal, collective unconscious.

Sadly, the much-needed knowledge of this level of the psyche is not generally available.

For those interested in seeking it, I recommend a serious study of the psychology of C.G. Jung. Edward F. Edinger, Archetype of the Apocalypse (1999), "Editor's Preface," p. xvii.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

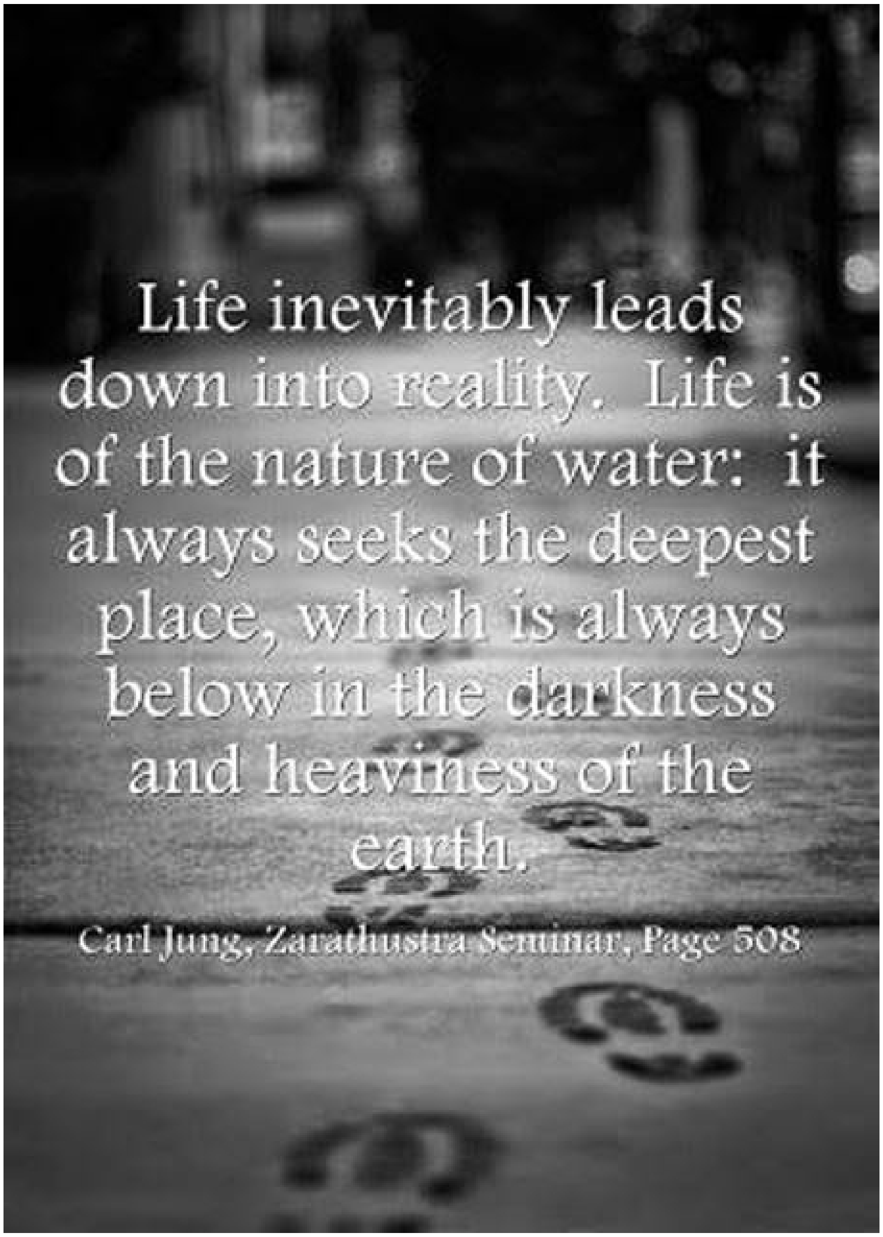
Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/59ffb-1edinger.jpg`

Carl Jung “Psychological treatment cannot rid you of the basic facts of your nature;... (2019-11-19 04:24)

[1]



Life inevitably leads down into reality. Life is of the nature of water: it always seeks the deepest place, which is always below in the darkness and heaviness of the earth.
Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 508

[2]C.G. Jung Letters Vol. 1: 1906-1950

Anonymous

Dear Fraulein N., 23 January 1941

There is much that I do not understand in your letter.

If you are suffering from an inferior extraversion, then that is a fact which is nobody's fault and for which you can hold nobody responsible.

It is a difficulty which is rooted in your own nature and which you can only acknowledge in an attempt to do the best you can with it.

Nor does it matter at all whether I have a high or a low opinion of you.

The only thing that matters is what you do yourself.

Nobody can "fence you in," a s you put it.

But people who have no money, for instance, are fenced in by that very fact without being able to hold anybody else responsible.

There are a whole lot of facts in your letter which you'll just have to face up to instead of tracing them back to the faulty behaviour of other people.

Psychological treatment cannot rid you of the basic facts of your nature; it can only give you the necessary insight, and only to the extent that you are capable of it.

There are countless people with an inferior extraversion or with too much introversion or with too little money who in God's name must plod along through life under such conditions.

These conditions are not diseases but normal difficulties of life.

If you blame me for your psychological difficulties it won't help you at all, for it is not my fault you have them . It's nobody's fault.

I can't take these difficulties away from you, but have merely tried to make you aware of what you need in order to cope with them.

If you could stop blaming other people and external circumstances for your own inner difficulties you would have gained an infinite amount.

But if you go on making others responsible, no one will have any desire to stand by you with advice.

Yours sincerely, C. G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Page 292.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/df498-life.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=c.g.+jung+letters&qid=1574185363&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: ... consciousness possesses spatiality only when it is in participation with that world. (2019-11-20 03:48)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung: Letters Vol 1 1906-1950

To Dr. S.

Dear Colleague, 22 February 1938

The feeling of inner detachment and isolation is not in itself an abnormal phenomenon but is normal in the sense that consciousness has withdrawn from the phenomenal world and got outside time and space.

You will find the clearest parallels in Indian philosophy, especially in Yoga.

In your case the feeling is reinforced by your psychological studies.

The assimilated unconscious apparently disappears in consciousness without trace, but it has the effect of detaching consciousness from its ties to the object.

I have described this development in my commentary on the Golden Flower.

It is a sort of integration process and emancipation of consciousness.

The cross is an indication of this, since it represents an integration of the 4 (functions).

It is perfectly understandable that, when consciousness detaches itself from the object, the feeling arises that one does not know where one stands.

Actually one is standing nowhere, because standing has a below and an above.

But there one has no below and above at all, because spatiality pertains to the world of the senses, and consciousness possesses spatiality only when it is in participation with that world.

It is a not-knowing, which has the same positive character as nirvana in the Buddhist definition, or the wu-wei,:-not-doing, of the Chinese, which does not mean doing nothing.

The profound doubt you seem to be suffering from is quite in order as it simply expresses the detachment of consciousness and the resultant explanation of the objective world as an illusion.

The neurotic character of your skepticism is due essentially to the fact that you cannot accept positively the development that is being prepared or is already in progress but fight against it for understandable reasons: it is a figurative death against which one naturally has all kinds of objections to make.

If your shadow exhibits no inferior features you can be sure that your consciousness is living in the shade, that is, is playing a negative role.

But that doesn't necessarily make you a dark horse.

It only means that your consciousness is not yet able to see anything positive in this development towards not-being.

As a result, the shadow naturally gets a positive value.

There is indeed an important task you have left unfinished.

The development now being offered to you is not accepted positively, whereas it is the meaning and purpose of all life's wisdom to go along with natural developments that spring from the functioning of the whole personality.

With best greetings and wishes;
,
Yours sincerely,

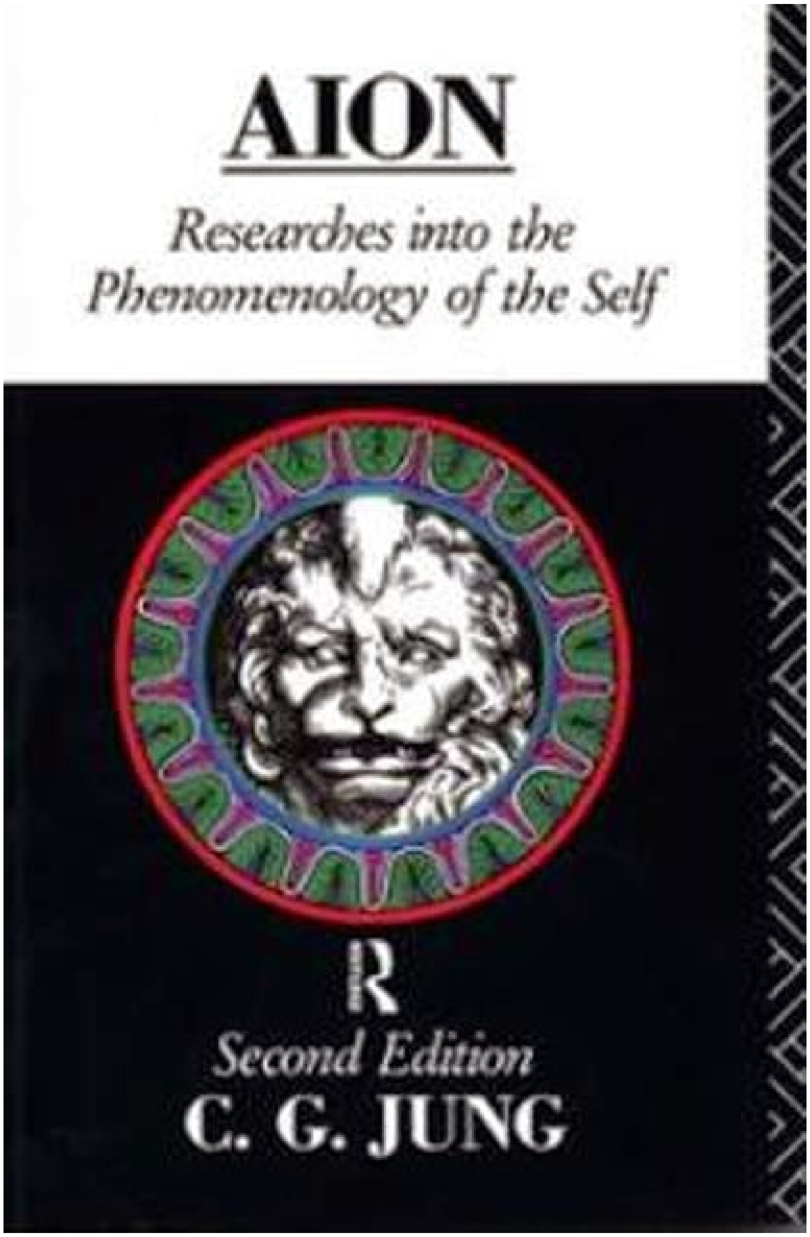
C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 240-241.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/fd7c8-helios.jpg`

2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=c.g.+jung+letters&qid=1574240961&sr=8-1`

Phenomenology of the Self by C.G. Jung on the "Ego." (2019-11-20 04:12)



AION
Researches into the Phenomenology of the Self
R
Second Edition
C. G. JUNG

[2]Aion (Collected Works of C.G. Jung)

I. The Ego

Investigation of the psychology of the unconscious confronted me with facts which required the formulation of new concepts.

One of these concepts is the self.

The entity so denoted is not meant to take the place of the one that has always been known as the ego, but includes it in a supraordinate concept.

We understand the ego as the complex factor to which all conscious contents are related.

It forms, as it were, the centre of the field of consciousness; and, in so far as this comprises the empirical personality, the ego is the subject of all personal acts of consciousness.

The relation of a psychic content to the ego forms the criterion of its consciousness, for no content can be conscious unless it is represented to a subject.

With this definition we have described and delimited the scope of the subject.

Theoretically, no limits can be set to the field of consciousness, since it is capable of indefinite extension.

Empirically, however, it always finds its limit when it comes up against the unknown.

This consists of everything we do not know, which, therefore, is not related to the ego as the centre of the field of consciousness.

The unknown falls into two groups of objects: those which are outside and can be experienced by the senses, and those which are inside and are experienced immediately.

The first group comprises the unknown in the outer world; the second the unknown in the inner world. We call this latter territory the unconscious.

The ego, as a specific content of consciousness, is not a simple or elementary factor but a complex one which, as such, cannot be described exhaustively.

Experience shows that it rests on two seemingly different bases: the somatic and the psychic.

The somatic basis is inferred from the totality of endosomatic perceptions, which for their part are already of a psychic nature and are associated with the ego, and are therefore conscious.

They are produced by endosomatic stimuli, only some of which cross the threshold o consciousness.

A considerable proportion of these stimuli occur unconsciously, that is, subliminally.

The fact that they are subliminal does not necessarily mean that their status is merely physiological, any more than this would be true of a psychic content.

Sometimes they are capable of crossing the threshold, that is, of becoming perceptions.

But there is no doubt that a large proportion of these endosomatic stimuli are simply incapable of consciousness and are so elementary that there is no reason to assign them a psychic natureunless of course one favours the philosophical view that all life-processes are psychic anyway.

The chief objection to this hardly demonstrable hypothesis is that it enlarges the concept of the psyche beyond all bounds and interprets the life-process in a way not absolutely warranted by the facts.

Concepts that are too broad usually prove to be unsuitable instruments because they are too vague and nebulous.

I have therefore suggested that the term "psychic" be used only where there is evidence of a will capable of modifying reflex or instinctual processes.

Here I must refer the reader to my paper "On the Nature of the Psyche," where I have discussed this definition of the "psychic" at somewhat greater length.

The somatic basis of the ego consists, then, of conscious and unconscious factors.

The same is true of the psychic basis: on the one hand the ego rests on the total field of consciousness, and on the other, on the sum total of unconscious contents.

These fall into three groups: first, temporarily subliminal contents that can be reproduced voluntarily (memory); second, unconscious contents that cannot be reproduced voluntarily; third, contents that are not capable of becoming conscious at all.

Group two can be inferred from the spontaneous irruption of subliminal contents into consciousness.

Group three is hypothetical; it is a logical inference from the facts underlying group two.

This contains contents which have not yet irrupted into consciousness, or which never will.

When I said that the ego "rests" on the total field of consciousness I do not mean that it consists of this.

Were that so, it would be indistinguishable from the field of consciousness as a whole.

The ego is only the latter's point of reference, grounded on and limited by the somatic factor described above.

Although its bases are in themselves relatively unknown and unconscious, the ego is a conscious factor par excellence. It is even acquired, empirically speaking, during the individual's lifetime.

It seems to arise in the first place from the collision between the somatic factor and the environment, and, once established as a subject, it goes on developing from further collisions with the outer world and the inner.

Despite the unlimited extent of its bases, the ego is never more and never less than consciousness as a whole.

As a conscious factor the ego could, theoretically at least, be described completely.

But this would never amount to more than a picture of the conscious personality; all those features which are unknown or unconscious to the subject would be missing. A total picture would have to Include these.

But a total description of the personality is, even in theory, absolutely impossible, because the unconscious portion of it cannot be grasped cognitively.

This unconscious portion, as experience has abundantly shown, is by no means unimportant.

On the contrary, the most decisive qualities in a person are often unconscious and can be perceived only by others, or have to be laboriously discovered with outside help.

Clearly, then, the personality as a total phenomenon does not coincide with the ego, that is, with the conscious personality, but forms an entity that has to be distinguished from the ego.

Naturally the need to do this is incumbent only on a psychology that reckons with the fact of the unconscious, but for such a psychology the distinction is of paramount importance.

Even for jurisprudence it should be of some importance whether certain psychic facts are conscious or not for instance, in adjudging the question of responsibility.

I have suggested calling the total personality which, though present, cannot be fully known, the self.

The ego is, by definition, subordinate to the self and is related to it like a part to the whole, Inside the field of consciousness it has, as we say, free will.

By this I do not mean anything philosophical, only the well-known psychological fact of "free choice/' or rather the subjective feeling of freedom.

But, just as our free will clashes with necessity in the outside world, so also it finds its limits outside the field of consciousness in the subjective inner world, where it comes into conflict with the facts of the self.

And just as circumstances or outside events "happen" to us and limit our freedom, so the self acts upon the ego like an objective occurrence which free will can do very little to alter.

It is, indeed, well known that the ego not only can do nothing against the self, but is sometimes actually assimilated by unconscious components of the personality that are in the process of development and is greatly altered by them.

It is, in the nature of the case, impossible to give any general description of the ego except a formal one.

Any other mode of observation would have to take account of the individuality which attaches to the ego as one of Its main characteristics.

Although the numerous elements composing this complex factor are, in themselves, everywhere the same, they are infinitely varied as regards clarity, emotional colouring, and scope.

The result of their combination the ego is therefore, so far as one can judge, individual and unique, and retains its identity up to a certain point. Its stability is relative, because far-reaching changes of personality can sometimes occur.

Alterations of this kind need not always be pathological; they can also be developmental and hence fall within the scope of the normal.

Since it is the point of reference for the field of consciousness, the ego Is the subject of all successful attempts at adaptation so far as these are achieved by the will.

The ego therefore has a significant part to play in the psychic economy.

Its position there is so important that there are good grounds for the prejudice that the ego is the centre of the personality, and that the field of consciousness is the psyche per se.

If we discount certain suggestive ideas in Leibniz, Kant, Schelling, and Schopenhauer, and the philosophical excursions of Gams and von Hartmann, It is only since the end of the nineteenth century that modern psychology, with its inductive methods, has discovered the foundations of consciousness and proved empirically the existence of a psyche outside consciousness.

With this discovery the position of the ego, till then absolute, became relativized; that Is to say, though It retains its quality as the centre of the field of consciousness, it is questionable whether it is the centre of the personality. It is part of the personality but not the whole of; It.

As I have said, it is simply impossible to estimate how large or how small its share is; how free or how dependent it Is on the qualities of this its freedom is limited and its dependence proved in ways that are often decisive.

In my experience one would do well not to underestimate its dependence on the unconscious.

Naturally there is no need to say this to persons who already overestimate the latter’s importance. Some criterion for the right measure is afforded by the psychic consequences of a wrong estimate, a point to which we shall return later on.

We have seen that, from the standpoint of the psychology of consciousness, the unconscious can be divided into three groups of contents.

But from the standpoint of the psychology of the personality a twofold division ensues: an "extra-conscious" psyche whose contents are personal, and an "extra-conscious" psyche whose contents are impersonal and collective.

The first group comprises contents which are integral components of the individual personality and could therefore just as well be conscious; the second group forms, as it were, an omnipresent, unchanging, and everywhere identical quality or substrate of the psyche per se.

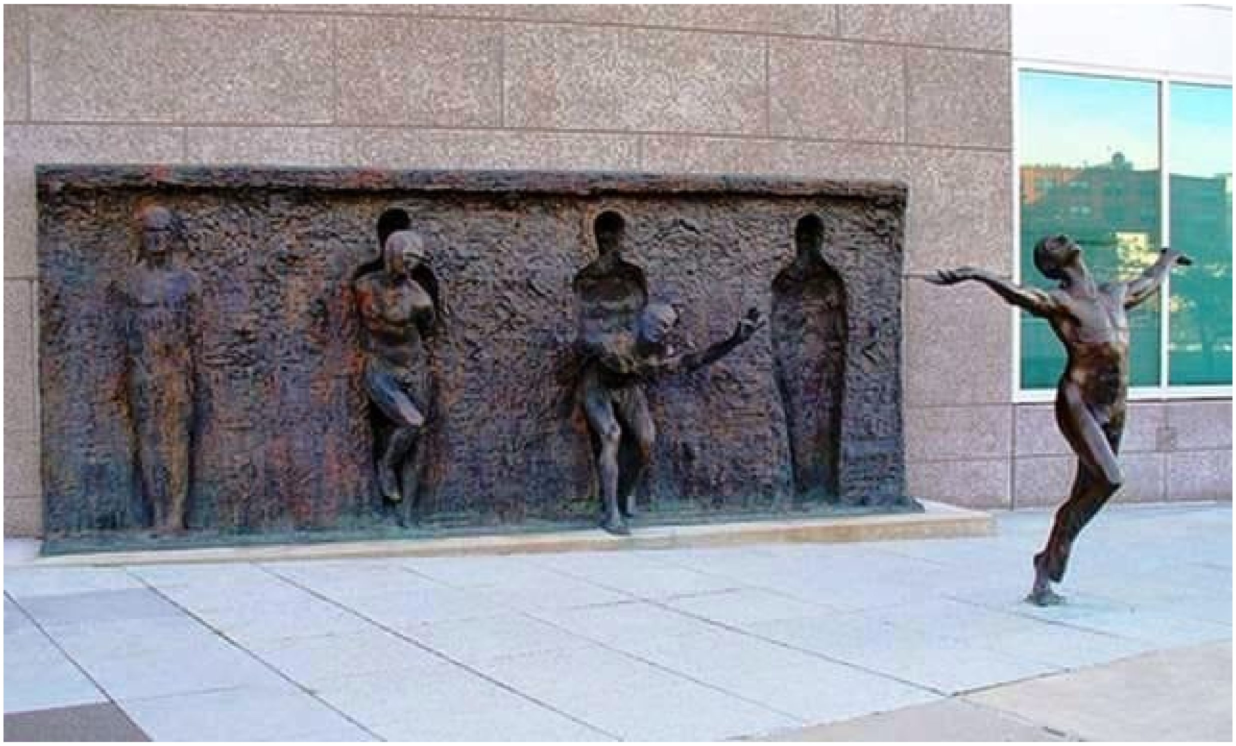
This is, of course, no more than a hypothesis. But we are driven to it by the peculiar nature of the empirical material, not to mention the high probability that the general similarity of psychic processes in all individuals must be based on an equally general and impersonal principle that conforms to law, just as the instinct manifesting itself in the individual is only the partial manifestation of an instinctual substrate common to all men.

http://www.the16types.info/vbulletin/content.php/208-Phenomenology-of-the-Sel f-Jung

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/43fed-aion.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Aion-Researches-Phenomenology-Collected-Works/dp/0415064767/ref=sr_1_3?keywords=aion+jung&qid=1574244699&sr=8-3`

Carl Jung on Consciousness and Becoming Conscious (2019-11-20 04:13)

[1]



[Carl Jung on Consciousness and Becoming Conscious]

Consciousness and Becoming Conscious Consciousness is the divine light; it is the possibility of seeing oneself, and this means to me that it is the very basis of life.

Consciousness is the transformation and the transformer of the primordial instinctual images.

The act of becoming conscious happens to man in darkness.

If he can grasp and handle consciousness then the fire brought from Heaven becomes a sacrificial flame, not the wrath of the gods.

The acquisition of consciousness by force creates a sense of guilt.

Consciousness is only possible if a spark of the essence becomes detached from the unconscious, religiously one could say from God.

Consciousness is obviously the supreme quality: the destiny of the world is to achieve entry into human consciousness.

Man is the being God has sought not only to show him the world, but because the Creator needs man to illuminate his creation.

We must become conscious for God because, through us, God becomes conscious and then becomes man.

We have to realize the inborn divine will, which is the process of individuation.

If I am all things I cannot discover anything.

I am a point that requires space and time to expand into consciousness.

If I am all things I cannot distinguish myself from the rest or recognize what is different from me.

Man is the dividing line of the acts of consciousness; he illuminates the night of the unconscious around him.

The actuality of things is a great puzzle.

What existed before and outside us? At a certain time a vast change must have taken place; yet even then, at that moment, the possibility of consciousness must already have been present in the world.

If a sudden separation occurs in the pleroma there arises the possibility of creation and consciousness.

In the completeness of the pleroma there is nothing to explain or distinguish because change and causality cease to exist there.

When we have achieved our greatest capacity for consciousness the task is to continue our efforts to carry into reality what we have learned.

In certain areas this cannot be done – I could not commit a murder, for instance.

With the contents of my consciousness I must live as naturally as a plant.

If I act inadequately it is the ape in me that does it.

The positive result of analysis enables us to become unconscious again.

Analysis is an intermezzo that lasts until the individual’s greatest possible capacity for consciousness has been achieved.

Then he can return to nature and re-enter the dark current of life, practice Zen, or spend his time in alehouses.

Unfortunately the last possibility does not agree with my health!

We do not know our own role in life.

We behave like the lizard; we do what it does except that we also talk …

We approach life from the side of consciousness, but at certain times we have to make the sacrificium intellectus.

We must sacrifice everything and become again as a child; not to remain a child, be it understood, but to re-enter childhood.

This state implies a divinely transformed nature, a higher level of existence, and a more profound realization of the world.

The unconscious has first to be activated; then we must extricate ourselves, doubting all the things we have hitherto believed; then we can turn back and resume our place in the collective unconscious.

This higher consciousness must be re-integrated into the dark flow of life so that we see then only that, which is immediately before our eyes.

Even Goethe could only know a fraction of his possibilities and his destiny.

Mankind today is faced with problems that formerly concerned only the gods.

Man can now choose between total destructiveness and complete constructiveness.

These are superhuman possibilities.

The light of consciousness needs to be clearly distinguished from the cunning of the unfathomable depths of the spirit.

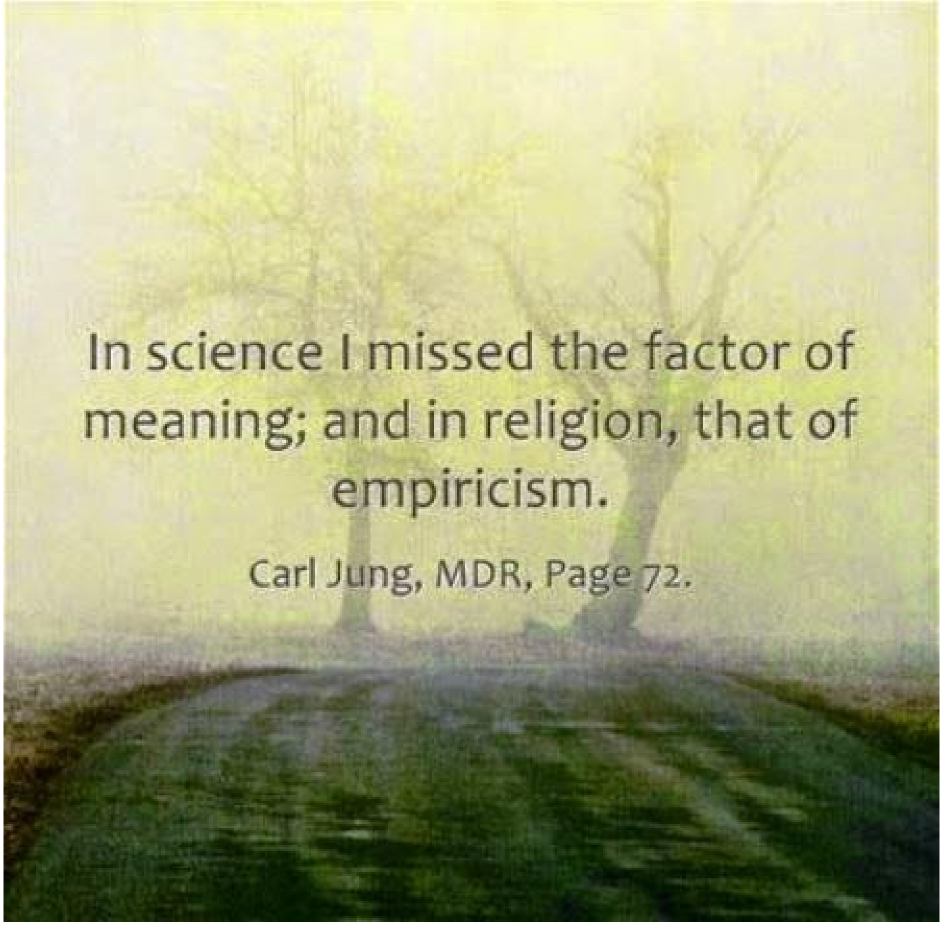
The psyche is emancipated from instinctual patterns and from causality. The psyche is also the scene of conflicts between instinct and free will, for instincts are without order and collide with the organised consciousness.

Europeans are especially likely to believe that they can replace instinct by intellect. Carl Jung; Conversations with C.G. Jung; Consciousness and becoming Conscious; Pages 9-13.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/4b774-living.jpg`

Carl Jung on Religion, Science and Belief (2019-11-20 04:17)

[1]



In science I missed the factor of meaning; and in religion, that of empiricism.

Carl Jung, MDR, Page 72.

To Paul Maag

Dear Colleague, 12 June 1933

Best thanks for your kind letter.

You assume, unjustly, that your specifically orthodox position arouses in me a feeling of mockery.

Nothing could be further from my mind.

I can only emphasize yet again that I must fulfill my scientific duty as a psychologist and therefore may not go beyond the bounds proper to science without making myself guilty of intellectual presumption.

I cannot under any circumstances square it with my scientific conscience to presume to make any arrogant assertions about God that spring from a belief or a subjective opinion.

Even what I may personally believe about the ultimate things is, regarded as an object of science, open to scientific criticism.

But that in no way prevents me from having views of my own.

These views cannot possibly be known to you since I have never expressed them.

When therefore you state in• your estimable letter that you know exactly what kind of God I believe in, I can only marvel at your powers of imagination.

In my humble opinion you would perhaps have done better to ask me first what I actually think about God outside the bounds of my science.

It might then have turned out that I am a Mohammedan, or a Buddhist, or possibly even an orthodox Christian like you.

Whatever my subjective opinion may be, I would consider it absolutely immoral to use them to anticipate what is scientifically knowable.

My subjective attitude is that I hold every religious position in high esteem but draw an inexorable dividing line between the content of belief and the requirements of science.

I consider it unclean to confuse these incommensurables.

Even more, I consider it presumptuous to credit human knowledge with a faculty that demonstrably exceeds its limitations.

We must admit in all modesty the limitations of all human knowledge and take it as a gift of grace if ever an experience of the Unfathomable should come our way.

What men have always named God is the Unfathomable itself. Were that not so, it would be as possible for an ant to know man and his nature as it is for us to know the nature of the ant.

As you. see, I am wholly incorrigible and utterly incapable of coming up with a mixture of theology and science.

This was, as you well know: the prerogative of the early Middle Ages and is still the prerogative of the Catholic Church today, which has set the Summa of Thomas Aquinas above the whole of science.

It has been one of the greatest achievements of Protestantism to have separated the things of God from .the things of the world.

With our human knowledge we always move in the human sphere, but in the things of God we should keep quiet and not make any arrogant assertions about what is greater than ourselves.

Belief as a religious phenomenon cannot be discussed.

It seems to me, however, that when belief enters into practical life we are entitled to the opinion that it should be coupled with the Christian virtue of modesty, which does not brag about absoluteness but brings itself to admit the unfathomable ways of God which have nothing to do with the Christian revelation.

Even though the apostles and Paul and John of the Apocalypse himself emphasize its uniqueness and exclusiveness, we nevertheless know that they were all mortal men who for that reason were also subject to the limitations of human knowledge.

Hoping I have made my standpoint sufficiently plain,

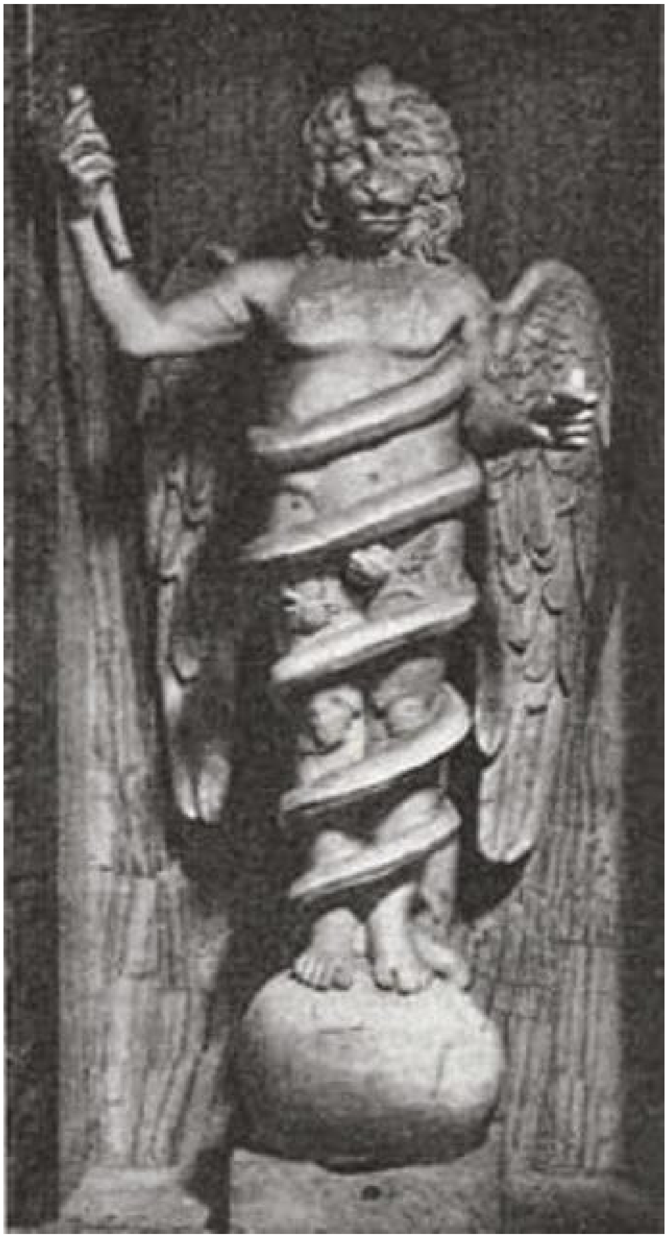
With collegial regards,

C.G. Jung, Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 124-125.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/8fde3-science.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=c.g.+jung+letters&qid=1574240961&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung and "Aion." (2019-11-20 04:29)

[1]



[2]Aion (Collected Works of C.G. Jung)

Aion: a lion-headed, snake-encircled Mithraic God-image of time (also called Kronos or Deus Leontocephalus) who for Jung represented death/rebirth and a psychological union of opposites like light and darkness, male and female, creation and destruction.

"Eon," a long length of time, also meant for Jung the two-thousand-year Christian eon, which coincided with its astrological sign, Pisces, in which one fish represents Christ and the other its future opposite, the Antichrist.

Below all this works the archetype of the hostile brothers; too, the astrological characteristics of the fish contain essential components of the Christian myth: the cross, the moral conflict and its splitting into two figures, the son of a virgin, the classical mother-son tragedy, the danger at birth, and the savior.

For the alchemist, the fish also symbolized the Lapis; for Jung, unconscious wholeness.

Some history…

Two thousand years ago, the late Roman Empire saw a roar of libido emanating from the collective unconscious, an outpouring we can no longer imagine thanks to the psychological barriers erected by centuries of Christianity.

The Roman gods were dying, foreshadowing Nietzsche and our era.

Christian ritual and dogma contained and channeled the animal ancestral forces splashing across Europe and symbolized by the Colosseum, thereby exalting the individual, providing a new ethic, forging a new sense of community, giving people for whom the old religions and myths no longer worked a sense of purpose, and splitting spirit and nature so each could develop independently.

The result: modern civilization, standing on the ruins of Rome.

Starting with the Reformation (which was helped along by an interest in antiquity inspired by the fall of the Byzantine Empire under Islam's onslaught and by the resulting spread of Greek language and literature through Europe) that broke the church's authority, eroded ritual, and splintered Christianity, religious and traditional containers for the instinctual-archetypal forces began to lose their meaning. "The bridge from dogma to the inner experience of the individual has broken down" (Aion)

The Reformation coincided with the point where the ecliptic intersects the meridian at the second fish's tail.

The enantiodromia (conversion into an opposite) from Christ to Antichrist falls midway between the two fishes, which was around the Renaissance.

At that time Post-Reformation Christianity gave the bipolar Self expression (the Incarnation of God in us) but compensated for the Gothic overemphasis on spirit by further dividing spirit from instinct and matter, faith from knowledge.

1750: Enlightenment - tail of second fish - reason replaces faith.

Alchemy and astrology arose by way of further compensation and set the stage for scientific materialism, which could now oppose and control nature by reeling in our identification with/projections onto it.

The result of all this: the vertical development of spirituality gave way to the horizontal development of materialism.

Jung speculated that the polarity of the God-image was behind the Reformation and the split of modern society into two armed camps.

Compensating for this: psychology, a symbol system potentially useful for containing and channeling the instinctual-archetypal forces and reuniting the God-image.

Around and because of the French Revolution: an explosion of nonpersonal stuff piled up since the Enlightenment. The pagan in us got much stronger. The decay of traditional symbol systems increased.
Ideally, the autonomous activity of the unconscious is zero; today it's higher than ever before.

The freed surplus of libido also has caused inflation (because attributing things to the gods at least jibed with their nonego status and because an archetype that loses its container becomes identified with the conscious mind) and activated various isms, utopian fantasies, psychic infections, and a longing for herdism and the State (as opposed to the earlier traditions and heirarchical orders).

Too, collective ideals compensate the rise of individuality that began with the Reformation.

Meanwhile the rise of exogamous libidinal tendencies (stranger-love) prompted a counterreaction of endogamous (relative-love) libido that powers religions, sects, nations, and isms.

Ultimately, however, only individuation can fuse the two tendencies and prevent the endogamous reaction from growing dangerously powerful. See cross-cousin marriage.

"A civilization does not decay, it regenerates." (Civilization in Transition) http://www.terrapsych.com/jungdefs.html

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/8f85f-aion.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Aion-Researches-Phenomenology-Collected-Works/dp/0415064767/ref=sr_1_3?keywords=aion+jung&qid=1574244699&sr=8-3`

Carl Jung: The answer to human life is not to be found within the limits of human life. (2019-11-20 04:30)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Linda Gray Oppenheim

Dear Mrs. Oppenheim, 12 August 1933

A year ago I heard through a friend of Mr. Oppenheim’ s most unexpected death.

Yes, it is true, such a death and such suffering seem to be pointless if one assumes that this life is the acme of all existence.

I have seen quite a number of people who died when they had reached the most they could.

Obviously then the measure of their life was fulfilled, everything said and everything done and nothing remained.

The answer to human life is not to be found within the limits of human life.

Sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 127

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

Great Sites to visit:

1. Jenna Lilla’s Path of the Soul http://jennalilla.org/
2. Steve Jung-Hearted Parker’s Jung Currents http://jungcurrents.com/
3. Frith Luton’s Jungian Dream Analysis and Psychotherapy: http://frithluton.com/articles/
4. Lance S. Owens The Gnosis Archives http://gnosis.org/welcome.html

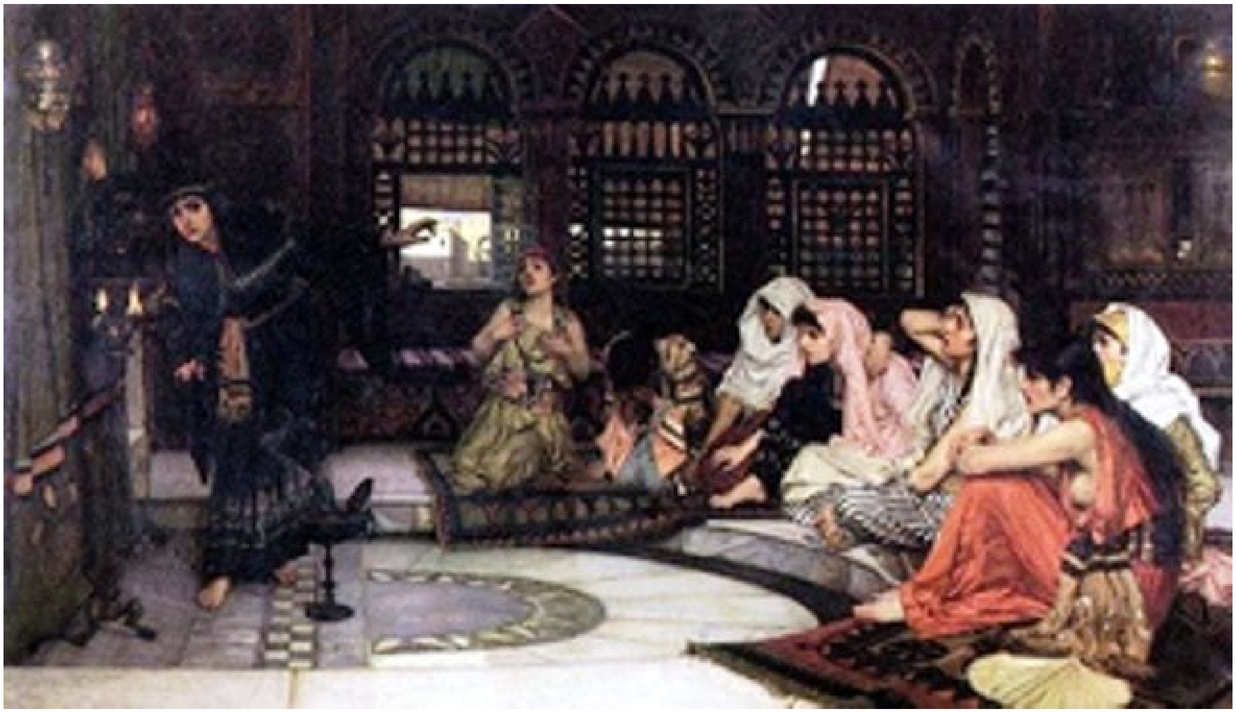
---

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/c47e0-82boppenheim2bblog.jpg

2. https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=c.g.+jung+letters&qid=1574240961&sr=8-1

God may be revealed out of man. (2019-11-20 04:38)

[1]



"Consulting the Oracle" by John William Waterhouse, showing eight priestesses in a temple of prophecy

"Just as man was once revealed out of God, so, when the circle closes, God may be revealed out of man." (from "A Psychological Approach to the Dogma of the Trinity", 1942)

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/11/43ab2-300px-john_william_waterhouse_oracle_1884.jpg`

Poimandres, the Shepherd of Men and Archetypal Form and Archetype of Soul. (2019-11-20 05:12)

[1]

[Poimandres, the Shepherd of Men and Archetypal Form and Archetype of Soul.]

8. But as I was in great astonishment, He saith to me again: Thou didst behold in Mind the Archetypal Form whose being is before beginning without end. Thus spake to me Man−Shepherd.

And I say: Whence then have Nature's elements their being?

To this He answer gives: From Will of God. [Nature] received the Word (Logos), and gazing upon the Cosmos Beautiful did copy it, making herself into a cosmos, by means of her own elements and by the births of souls.

12. A: Thy argument (logos), Thrice−greatest one, is not to be gainsaid; air is a body. Further, it is this body which doth pervade all things, and so, pervading, fill them. What are we, then, to call that space in which the all doth move?

H: The bodiless, Asclepius.

A: What, then, is Bodiless?

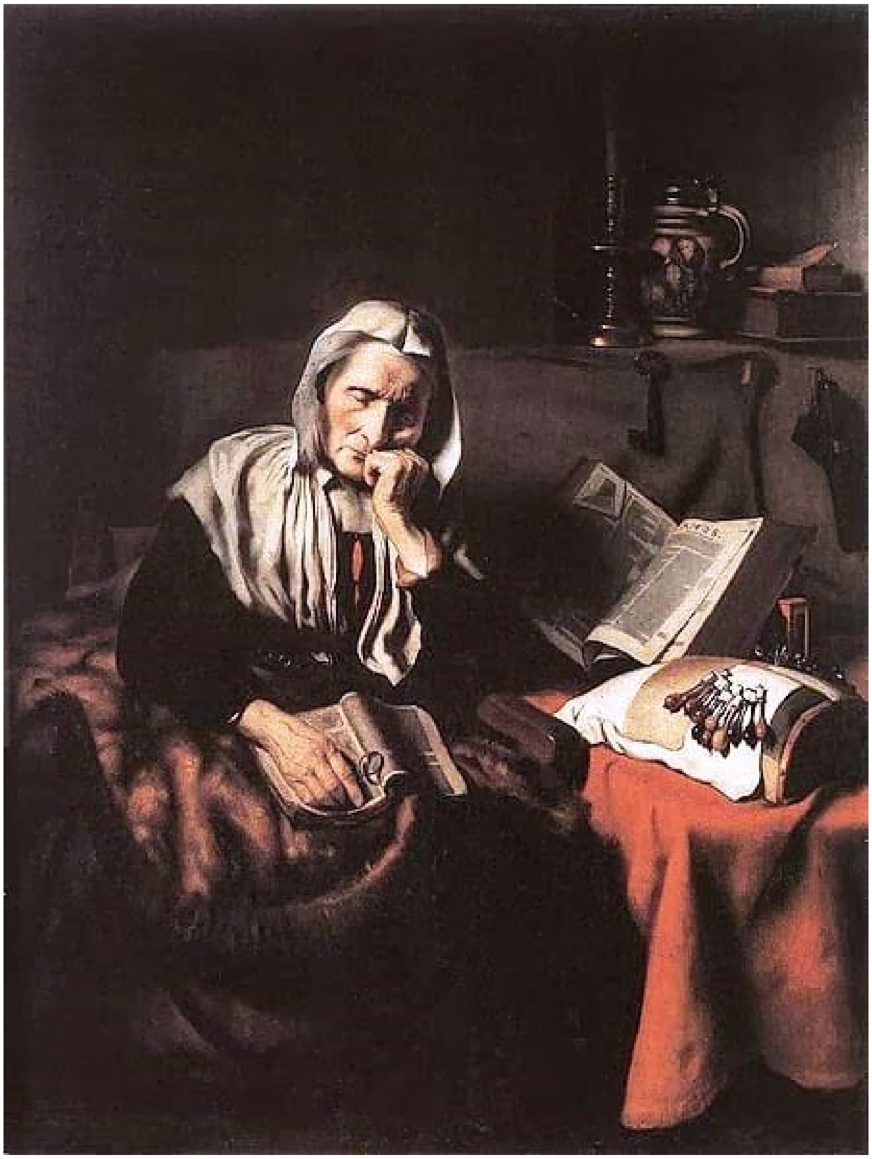
H: ’Tis Mind and Reason (logos), whole out of whole, all self–embracing, free from all body, from all error free, unsensible to body and untouchable, self stayed in self, containing all, preserving those that are, whose rays, to use a likeness, are Good, Truth, Light beyond light, the Archetype of soul.

[Source: The Corpus Hermeticum, Poemandres, the Shepherd of Men, Paragraphs 8 and 12.]

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/f50bd-corpus.jpg`

Carl Jung on Aging (2019-11-20 05:19)

[1]



[2]Modern Man in Search of a Soul

Aging people should know that their lives are not mounting and unfolding but that an inexorable inner process forces the contraction of life.

For a young person it is almost a sin — and certainly a danger — to be too much occupied with him; but for the aging person it is a duty and a necessity to give serious attention to him. Carl Jung, Modern Man in Search of a Soul, Page 125.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/cab79-age.jpg`

2. `https://www.amazon.com/Modern-Search-Soul-C-G-Jung/dp/B0014BM0IY/ref=sr_1_8?keywords=c.g.+jung+modern+man&qid=1574245771&sr=8-8`

Mankind wishes to love in God only their ideas... (2019-11-20 05:23)

...

[1]

[2]https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Unconscious-C-G-Jung/dp/0486424995/ref =sr _1 _8?keywords=c.g.+jung+psychology+of+the+unconscious &qid=1574245957 &sr=8-8

Mankind wishes to love in God only their ideas, that is to say, the ideas which they project into God.

By that they wish to love their unconscious, that Is, that remnant of ancient humanity and the centuries-old past In all people, namely, the common property left behind from all development which is given to all men, like the sunshine and the air.

But in loving this inheritance they love that which is common to all.

Thus they turn back to the mother of humanity, that is to say, to the spirit of the race, and regain in this way something of that connection and of that mysterious and irresistible power which is imparted by the feeling of belonging to the herd.

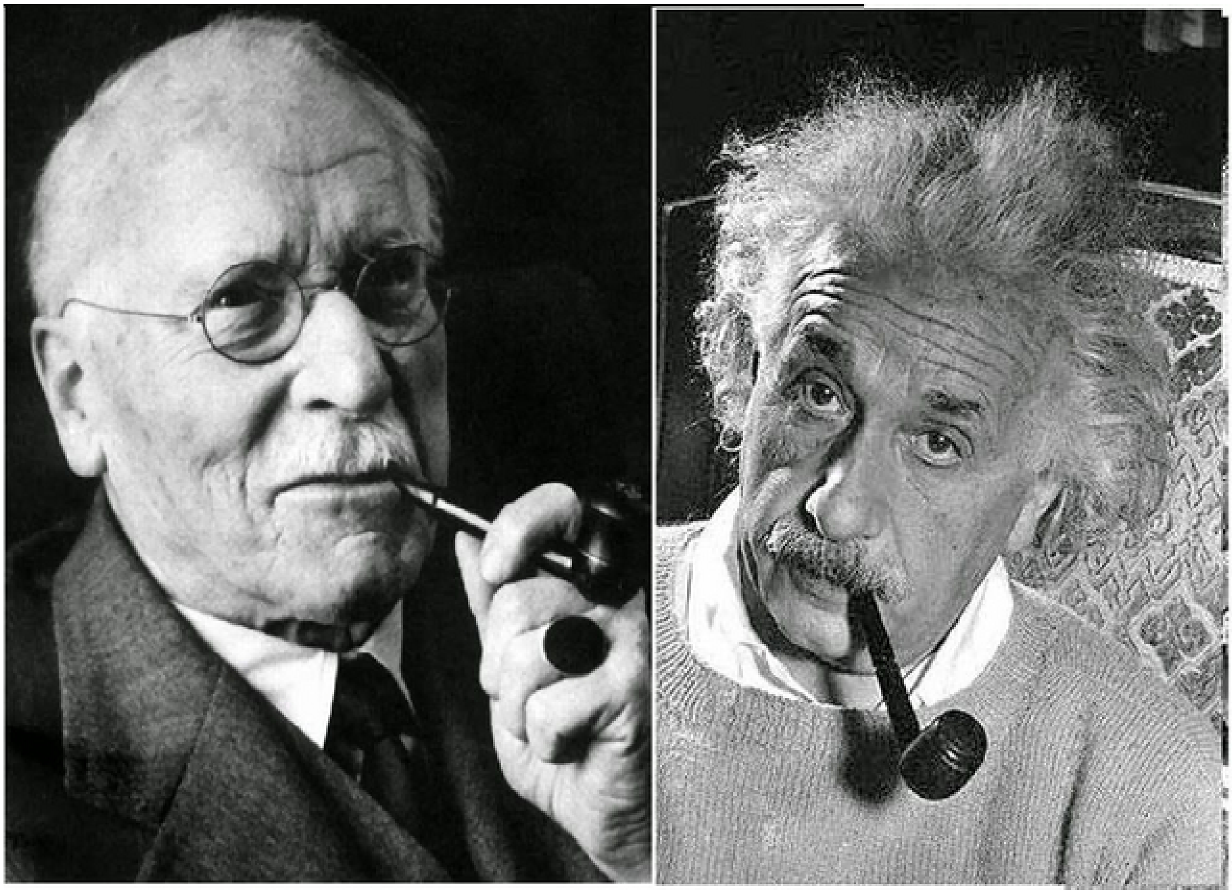
It is the problem of Antaeus, who preserves his gigantic strength only through contact with mother earth. Carl Jung; Psychology of the Unconscious; Pages 200 – 201.

Image: Hercules and Antaeus

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/fdd49-antaeus.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Unconscious-C-G-Jung/dp/0486424995/ref=sr_1_8?keywords=c.g.+jung+psychology+of+the+unconscious&qid=1574245957&sr=8-8`

Carl Jung on meeting Albert Einstein (2019-11-21 03:21)

[1]



When he was just starting to work on the theory of relativity, Einstein came often to my house and I bombed with questions about the new theory.

I’m not good at math and imagine the problem that the poor guy had to explain relativity.

He didn’t know how to explain it.

Faced with the difficulty of it, I felt insignificant, I wanted to sink into the ground.

Until one day he asked me something and psychology was my revenge.

"The expertise ” Jung adds" is a big disadvantage; the intensification is such that you can’t explain.

I have since had many opportunities to observe that nowadays the conversation is impossible between the infinitely graduates.

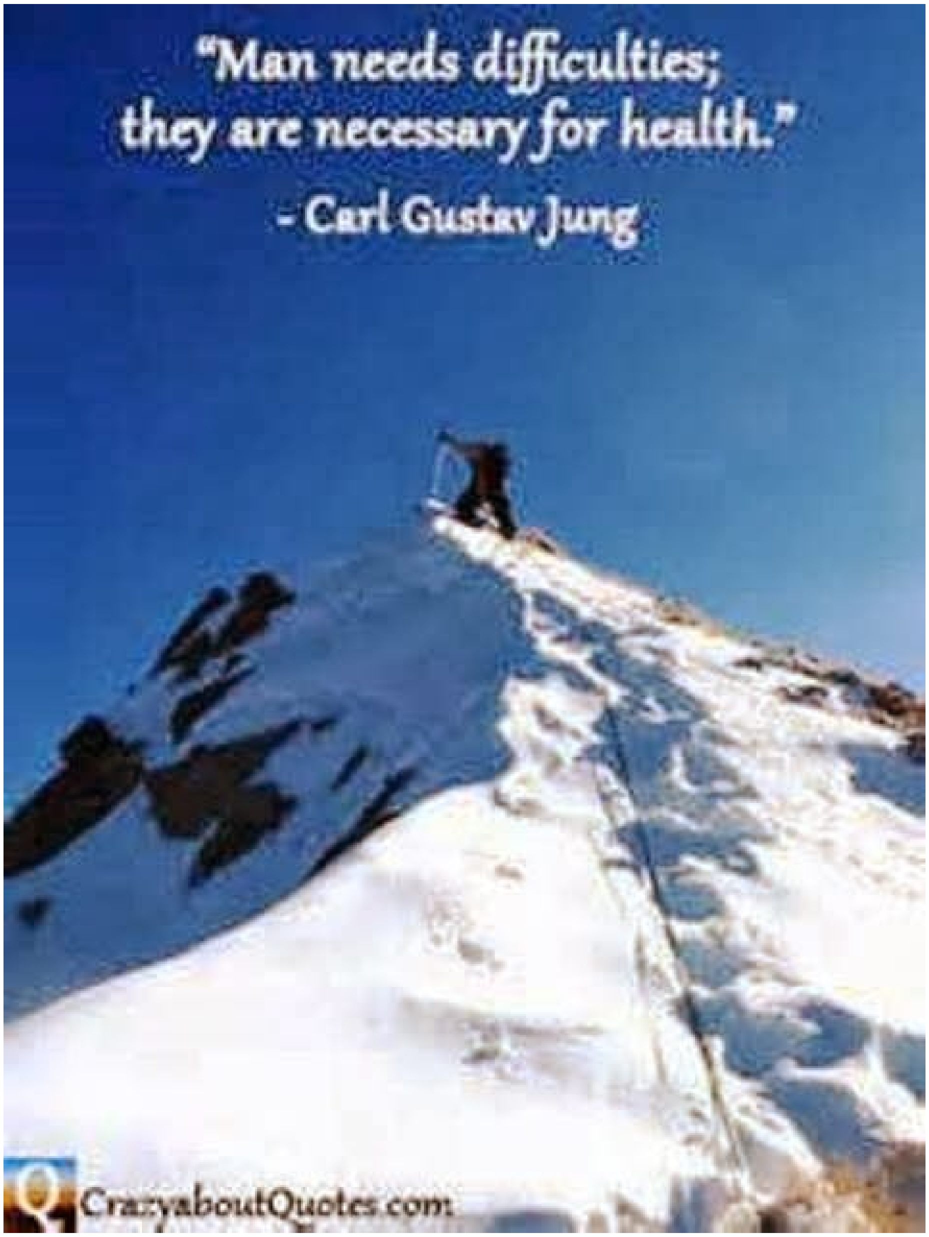
Everyone is so advanced in the field of your enthusiasm and feel so comfortable there that barely, and hardly care, talk about everything else.

Would be exposed as a crab out of the shell. Carl Jung on meeting Albert Einstein

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/89988-einstein.jpg`

Man needs difficulties; they are necessary for health. (2019-11-21 03:37)

[1]



"Man needs difficulties;
they are necessary for health."
- Carl Gustav Jung
CrazyaboutQuotes.com

[2]Carl Jung: The Undiscovered Self

Nothing estranges Man more from the Ground Plan of his instincts than his Learning Capacity, which turns out to be a genuine Drive toward Progressive transformations of human modes of behavior.

It, more than anything else, is responsible for the Altered conditions of our existence and. the Need for New adaptations which Civilization Brings.

It is also the source of numerous psychic disturbances and difficulties occasioned by Man's Progressive alienation from his instinctual Foundation, IE, by his up Rootedness and identification with his conscious Knowledge of himself, by his Concern with Consciousness. at the expense of the Unconscious.

The result is that Modern Man Can he know himself only in so Far as Can Become conscious of himself …. (Carl Jung, The Undiscovered Self).

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/e7650-health.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Undiscovered-Self-Dilemma-Individual-Society/dp/0451217322/ref=sr_1_2?keywords=undiscovered+self+jung&qid=1574326071&sr=8-2`

Barbara Hannah: The cat's archetypal image is present in us all. (2019-11-21 04:01)

[1]

[2]The Archetypal Symbolism of Animals

"The cat's archetypal image is present in us all.

It is clearer to women, for the cat – even the tomcat – is much more feminine in behavior than, for instance, the dog. Men have the cat also, but here it is more connected with the anima.

Thus they do not escape the disastrous tendency of their anima cat to spin plots.

She usually hooks on to ambition, power and money where temptations are great and men are not so terribly conscious.

And then, of course, Tefnut entangles them in sexual affairs of all kinds and is delighted when they turn out disastrously.

The anima is much farther away for men and therefore more difficult to make conscious.

In fact, catching plots is the conditio sine qua non of men becoming conscious of their animas.

This is the most difficult task of all for men, far more difficult than it is for woman to become conscious of her animus.
"
But perhaps the cat is especially important on account of her tendency to go off with Tefnut into the depths of the unconscious and to degenerate into all kinds of injurious or even fatal behavior.

This degeneration is certainly very reminiscent of the days we live in, where plots are so readily spun in the unconscious and subconscious lives of women and men alike, not only in ourselves but even on a worldwide scale.

All that each one of us can do is to work honestly on the archetypal image of the cat in our own souls.

Perhaps we may each then add "an infinitesimal grain [on] the scales of humanity's soul" Barbara Hannah.The Archetypal Symbolism of Animals, Page 51.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

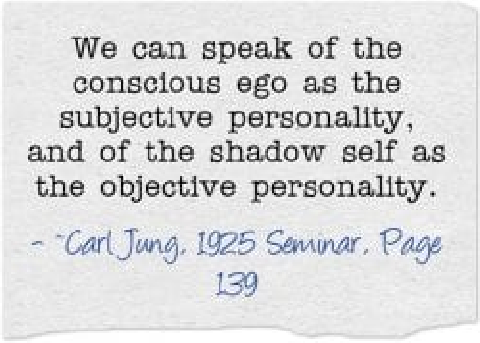
Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/26d66-1cat.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Archetypal-Symbolism-Animals-Institute-Polarities/dp/1888602333/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=Barbara+Hannah.The+Archetypal+Symbolism+of+Animals&qi`

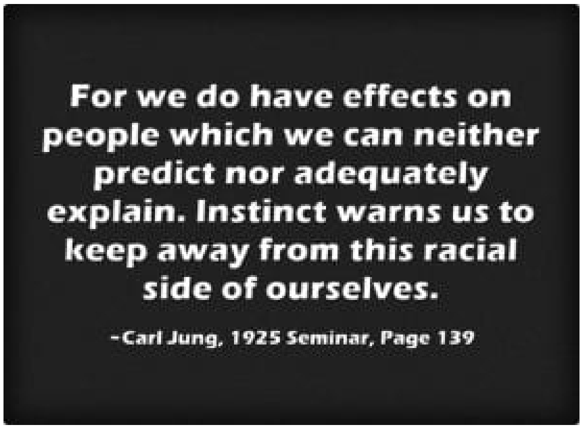
Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-11-21 04:10)



We can speak of the conscious ego as the subjective personality, and of the shadow self as the objective personality.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 139

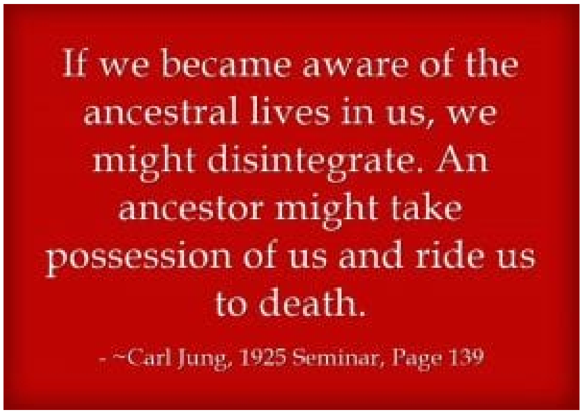
We can speak of the conscious ego as the subjective personality, and of the shadow self as the objective personality. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 139



For we do have effects on people which we can neither predict nor adequately explain. Instinct warns us to keep away from this racial side of ourselves.

-Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 139

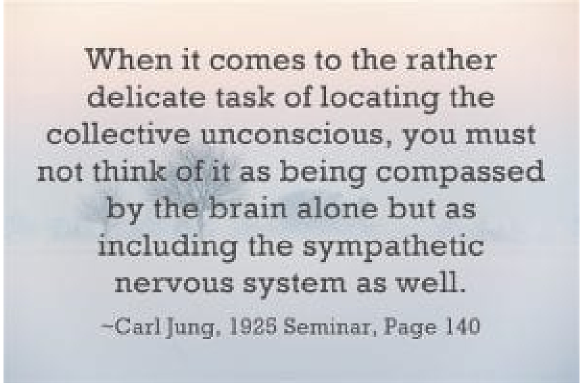
For we do have effects on people which we can neither predict nor adequately explain. Instinct warns us to keep away from this racial side of ourselves. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 139



If we became aware of the ancestral lives in us, we might disintegrate. An ancestor might take possession of us and ride us to death.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 139

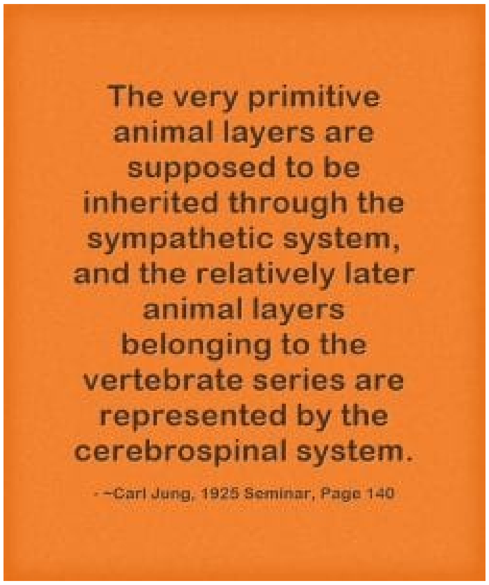
If we became aware of the ancestral lives in us, we might disintegrate. An ancestor might take possession of us and ride us to death. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 139



When it comes to the rather delicate task of locating the collective unconscious, you must not think of it as being compassed by the brain alone but as including the sympathetic nervous system as well.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 140

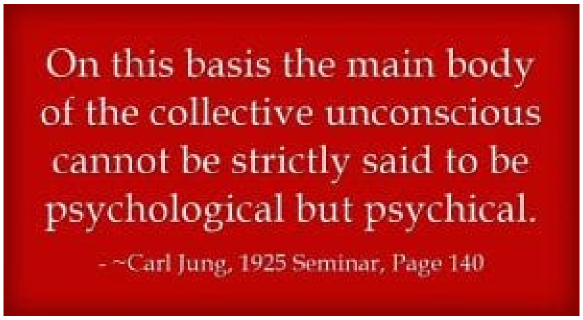
When it comes to the rather delicate task of locating the collective unconscious, you must not think of it as being compassed by the brain alone but as including the sympathetic nervous system as well. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 140



The very primitive animal layers are supposed to be inherited through the sympathetic system, and the relatively later animal layers belonging to the vertebrate series are represented by the cerebrospinal system.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 140

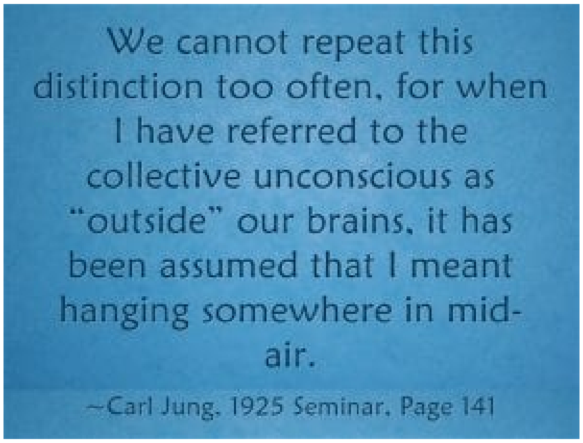
The very primitive animal layers are supposed to be inherited through the sympathetic system, and the relatively later animal layers belonging to the vertebrate series are represented by the cerebrospinal system. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 140



On this basis the main body of the collective unconscious cannot be strictly said to be psychological but psychical.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 140

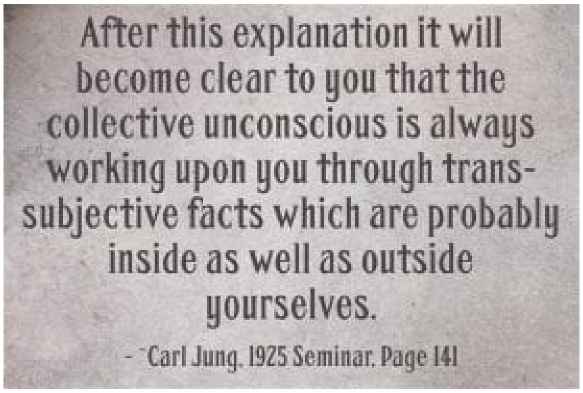
On this basis the main body of the collective unconscious cannot be strictly said to be psychological but psychical. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 140



We cannot repeat this distinction too often, for when I have referred to the collective unconscious as "outside" our brains, it has been assumed that I meant hanging somewhere in mid-air.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 141

We cannot repeat this distinction too often, for when I have referred to the collective unconscious as "outside" our brains, it has been assumed that I meant hanging somewhere in mid-air. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 141



After this explanation it will become clear to you that the collective unconscious is always working upon you through trans-subjective facts which are probably inside as well as outside yourselves.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 141

After this explanation it will become clear to you that the collective unconscious is always working upon you through trans-subjective facts which are probably inside as well as outside yourselves. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 141

It is of reality as it is that sensation speaks, not reality as it might have been nor as it might be, but as it is now.
Therefore sensation gives only a static image of reality, and this is the basic principle of the sensation type.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page
132

It is of reality as it is that sensation speaks, not reality as it might have been nor as it might be, but as it is now. Therefore sensation gives only a static image of reality, and this is the basic principle of the sensation type. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 132

He thinks the sensation type spends his life with corpses, but once he has taken up this inferior function in himself, he begins to enjoy the object as it really is and for its own sake instead of seeing it through an atmosphere of his projections.

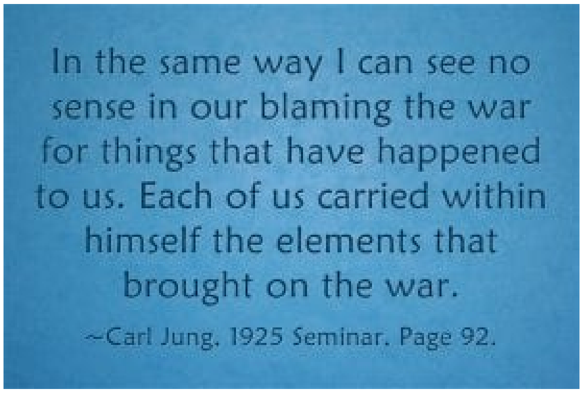
- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 90.

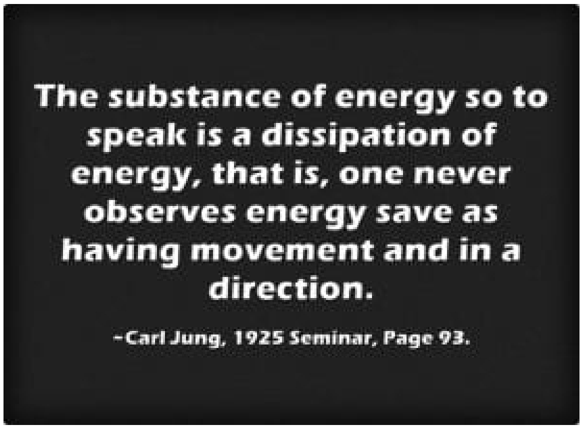
He thinks the sensation type spends his life with corpses, but once he has taken up this inferior function in himself, he begins to enjoy the object as it really is and for its own sake instead of seeing it through an atmosphere of his projections. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 90



In the same way I can see no sense in our blaming the war for things that have happened to us. Each of us carried within himself the elements that brought on the war.

~Carl Jung. 1925 Seminar. Page 92.

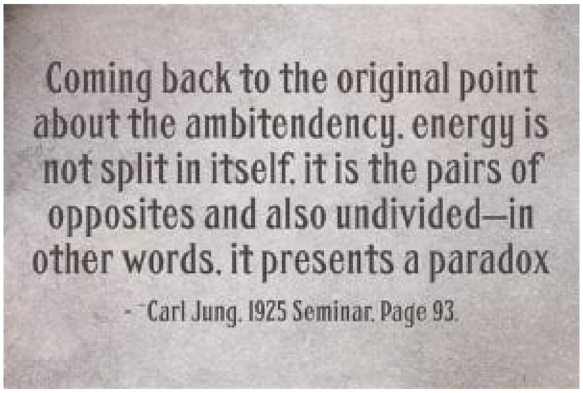
In the same way I can see no sense in our blaming the war for things that have happened to us. Each of us carried within himself the elements that brought on the war. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 92



The substance of energy so to speak is a dissipation of energy, that is, one never observes energy save as having movement and in a direction.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 93.

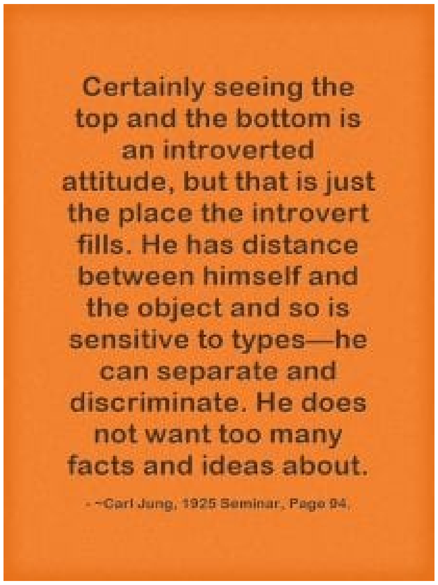
The substance of energy so to speak is a dissipation of energy, that is, one never observes energy save as having movement and in a direction. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 93



Coming back to the original point about the ambitendency. energy is not split in itself. it is the pairs of opposites and also undivided—in other words. it presents a paradox

- ~Carl Jung. 1925 Seminar. Page 93.

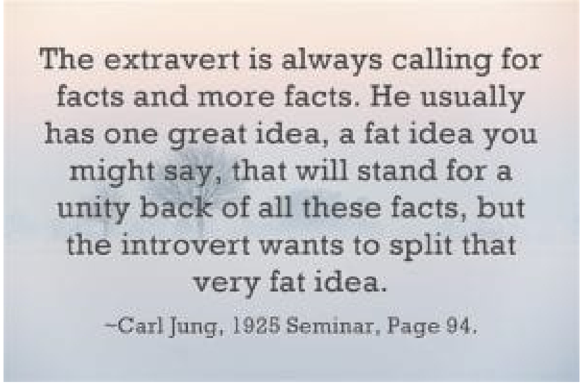
Coming back to the original point about the ambitendency, energy is not split in itself, it is the pairs of opposites and also undivided—in other words, it presents a paradox. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 93



Certainly seeing the top and the bottom is an introverted attitude, but that is just the place the introvert fills. He has distance between himself and the object and so is sensitive to types—he can separate and discriminate. He does not want too many facts and ideas about.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 94.

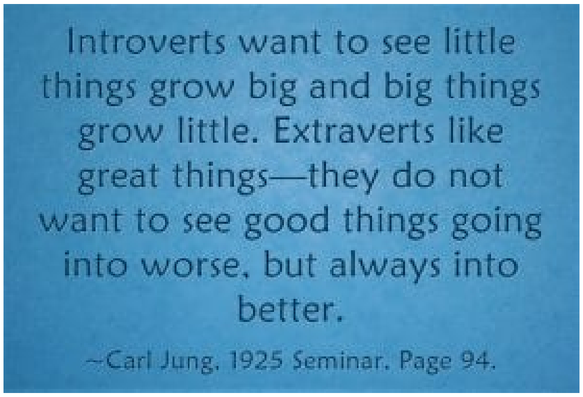
Certainly seeing the top and the bottom is an introverted attitude, but that is just the place the introvert fills. He has distance between himself and the object and so is sensitive to types—he can separate and discriminate. He does not want too many facts and ideas about. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 94



The extravert is always calling for facts and more facts. He usually has one great idea, a fat idea you might say, that will stand for a unity back of all these facts, but the introvert wants to split that very fat idea.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 94.

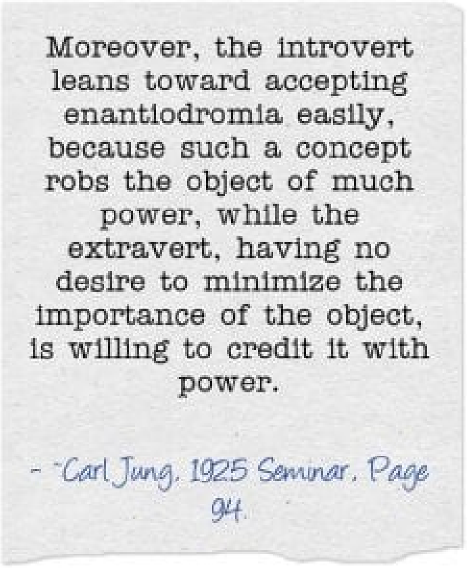
The extravert is always calling for facts and more facts. He usually has one great idea, a fat idea you might say, that will stand for a unity back of all these facts, but the introvert wants to split that very fat idea. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 94



Introverts want to see little things grow big and big things grow little. Extraverts like great things—they do not want to see good things going into worse, but always into better.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 94.

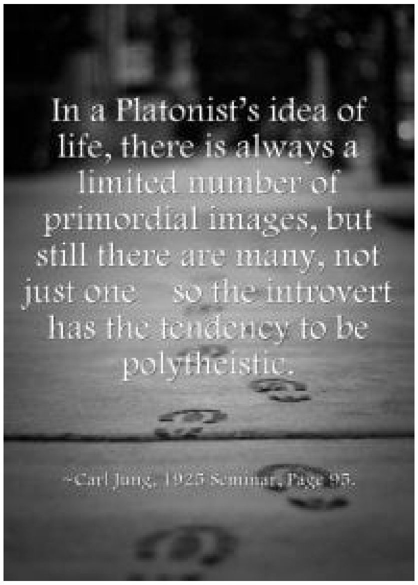
Introverts want to see little things grow big and big things grow little. Extraverts like great things—they do not want to see good things going into worse, but always into better. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 94



Moreover, the introvert leans toward accepting enantiodromia easily, because such a concept robs the object of much power, while the extravert, having no desire to minimize the importance of the object, is willing to credit it with power.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 94.

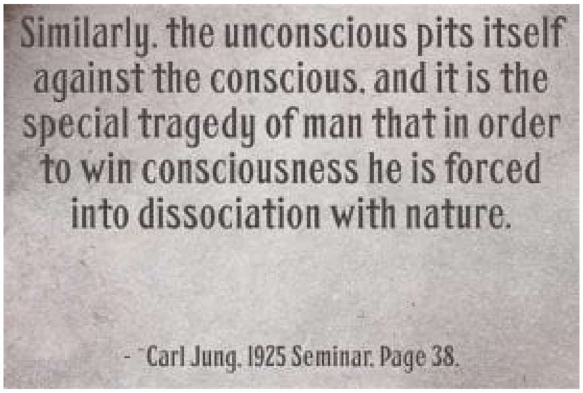
Moreover, the introvert leans toward accepting enantiodromia easily, because such a concept robs the object of much power, while the extravert, having no desire to minimize the importance of the object, is willing to credit it with power. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 94



In a Platonist's idea of life, there is always a limited number of primordial images, but still there are many, not just one so the introvert has the tendency to be polytheistic.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 95.

In a Platonist's idea of life, there is always a limited number of primordial images, but still there are many, not just one—so the introvert has the tendency to be polytheistic. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 95



Similarly. the unconscious pits itself against the conscious. and it is the special tragedy of man that in order to win consciousness he is forced into dissociation with nature.

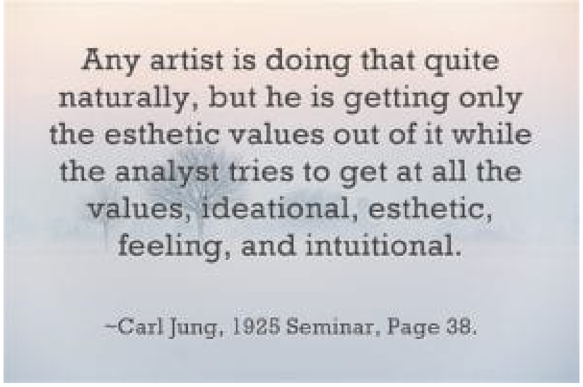
- ~Carl Jung. 1925 Seminar. Page 38.

Similarly, the unconscious pits itself against the conscious, and it is the special tragedy of man that in order to win consciousness he is forced into dissociation with nature. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 38

Going back to the question of fantasizing, if once the resistance to free contact with the unconscious can be overcome, and one can develop the power of sticking to the fantasy, then the play of the images can be watched.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 38.

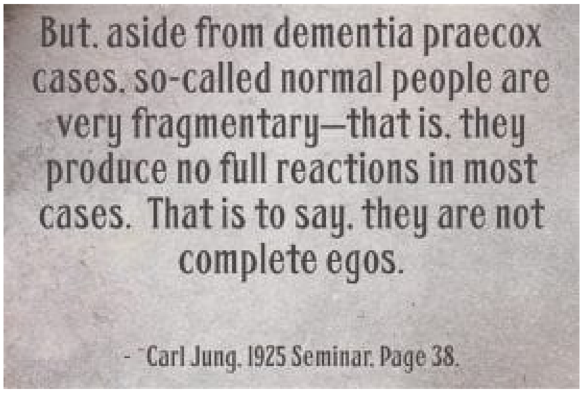
Going back to the question of fantasizing, if once the resistance to free contact with the unconscious can be overcome, and one can develop the power of sticking to the fantasy, then the play of the images can be watched. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 38.



Any artist is doing that quite naturally, but he is getting only the esthetic values out of it while the analyst tries to get at all the values, ideational, esthetic, feeling, and intuitional.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 38.

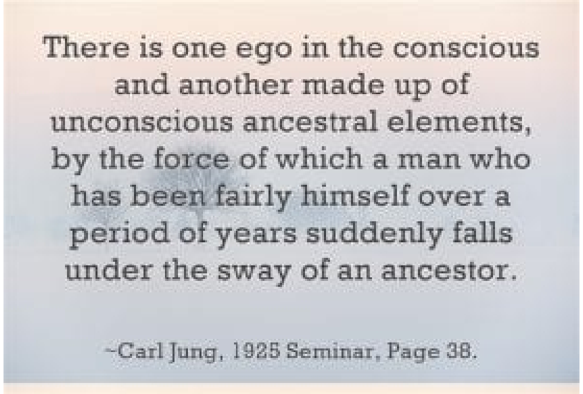
Any artist is doing that quite naturally, but he is getting only the esthetic values out of it while the analyst tries to get at all the values, ideational, esthetic, feeling, and intuitional. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 38



But. aside from dementia praecox cases. so-called normal people are very fragmentary—that is. they produce no full reactions in most cases. That is to say. they are not complete egos.

- ~Carl Jung. 1925 Seminar. Page 38.

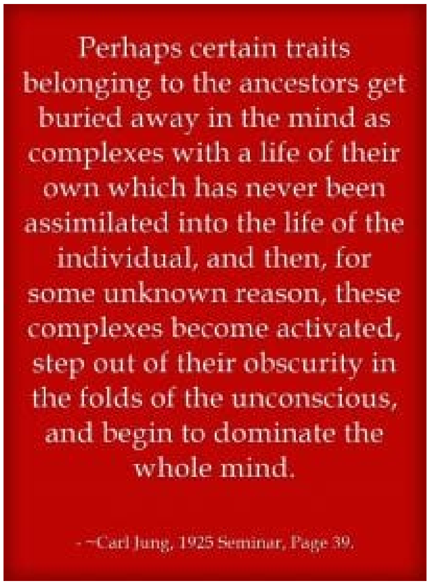
But, aside from dementia praecox cases, so-called normal people are very fragmentary—that is, they produce no full reactions in most cases. That is to say, they are not complete egos. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 38.



There is one ego in the conscious and another made up of unconscious ancestral elements, by the force of which a man who has been fairly himself over a period of years suddenly falls under the sway of an ancestor.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 38.

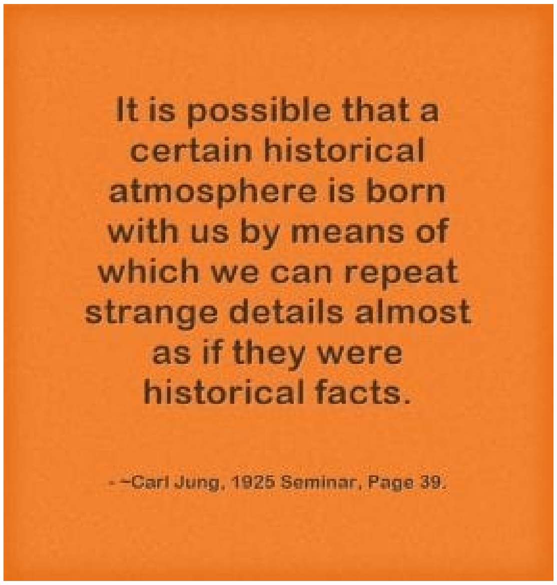
There is one ego in the conscious and another made up of unconscious ancestral elements, by the force of which a man who has been fairly himself over a period of years suddenly falls under the sway of an ancestor. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, page 38.



Perhaps certain traits belonging to the ancestors get buried away in the mind as complexes with a life of their own which has never been assimilated into the life of the individual, and then, for some unknown reason, these complexes become activated, step out of their obscurity in the folds of the unconscious, and begin to dominate the whole mind.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 39.

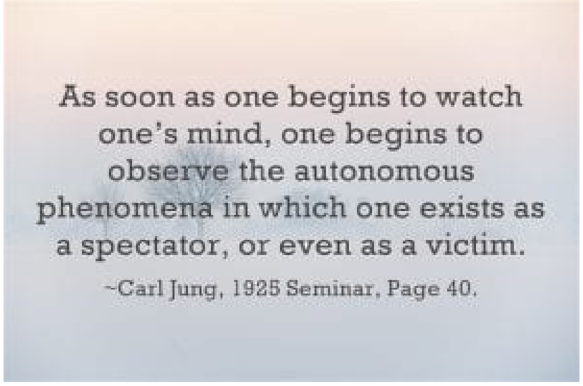
Perhaps certain traits belonging to the ancestors get buried away in the mind as complexes with a life of their own which has never been assimilated into the life of the individual, and then, for some unknown reason, these complexes become activated, step out of their obscurity in the folds of the unconscious, and begin to dominate the whole mind. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 39.



It is possible that a certain historical atmosphere is born with us by means of which we can repeat strange details almost as if they were historical facts.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 39.

It is possible that a certain historical atmosphere is born with us by means of which we can repeat strange details almost as if they were historical facts. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 39.



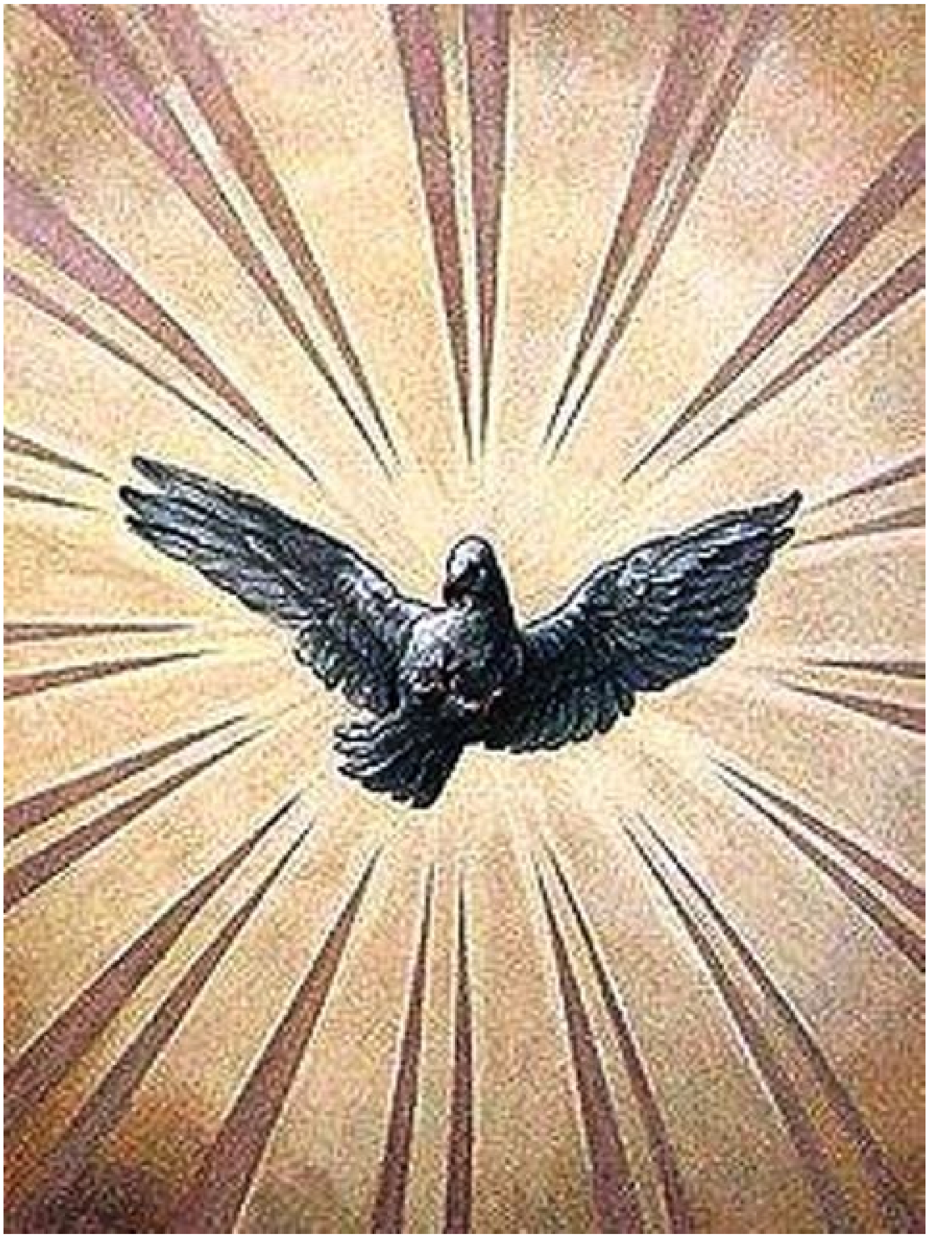
As soon as one begins to watch one's mind, one begins to observe the autonomous phenomena in which one exists as a spectator, or even as a victim.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 40.

As soon as one begins to watch one's mind, one begins to observe the autonomous phenomena in which one exists as a spectator, or even as a victim. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 40.

If God wishes to be born as man.... (2019-11-21 04:19)

[1]



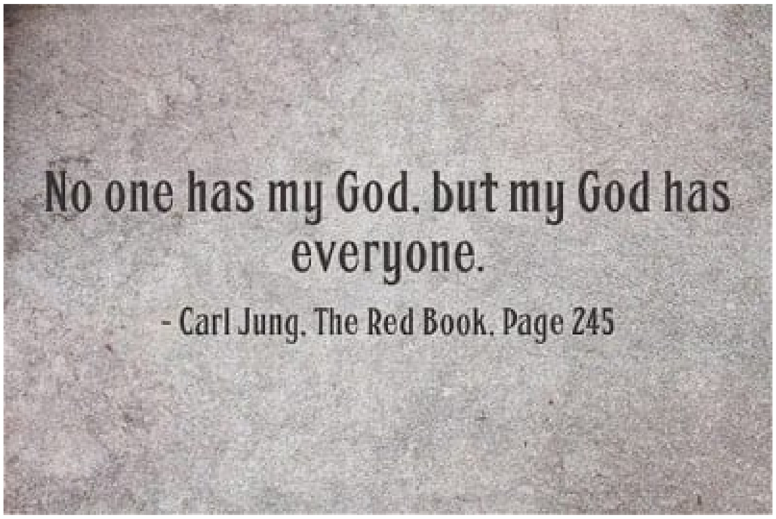
[2]Psychology and Religion: West and East

"If God wishes to be born as man and to unite mankind in the fellowship of the Holy Ghost, He suffers the terrible torment of having to bear the world in its reality. It is a crux; indeed, He Himself is His own cross. The world is God's suffering, and every individual human being who wishes even to approach his own wholeness knows very well that this means bearing his own cross. But the eternal promise for him who bears his own cross is the Paraclete." Carl Jung; (from "A Psychological Approach to the Dogma of the Trinity", 1942)

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/11/0073c-depiction2bof2bthe2bholy2bspirit2bdove2b2528ceiling2bfresco2bin2bst-2bcharles2527s2bch`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Religion-West-Collected-Works/dp/0691097720/ref=sr_1_fkmr1_2?keywords=carl+jung+cw11&qid=1574328393&sr=8-2-fkmr1`

Carl Jung: “If my God is lamed…….” (2019-11-21 04:25)

[1]



No one has my God, but my God has everyone.

- Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 245

[2]The Red Book: A Reader’s Edition

[Carl Jung: “If my God is lamed…….”]

If my God is lamed, I must stand by him, since I cannot abandon the much-loved. I sense that he is my lot, my brother, who abided and grew in the light while I was in the darkness and fed myself with poison.

It is good to know such things: if we are surrounded by night, our brother stands in the fullness of the light, doing his great deeds, tearing up the lion and killing the dragon.

And he draws his bow against ever more distant goals, until he becomes aware of the sun wandering high up in the sky and wants to catch it.

But when he has discovered his valuable prey; then your longing for the light also awakens.

You discard the fetters and take yourself to the place of the rising light.

And thus you rush toward each other.

He believed he could simply capture the sun and encountered the worm of the shadows.

You thought that in the East you could drink from the source of the light, and catch the horned giant, before whom you fall to your knees.

His essence is blind excessive longing and tempestuous force.

My essence is seeing limitation and the incapacity of cleverness.

He possesses in abundance what I lack.

Consequently I will also not let him go, the Bull God, who once wounded Jacob's hip and whom I have now lamed.
I want to make his force my own. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 281.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/7353c-my.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Red-Book-Readers-Philemon/dp/0393089088/ref=sr_1_2?keywords=the+red+book+jung&qid=1574329976&sr=8-2`

Carl Jung: It is correct to say that women are more dependent on the idea and men more dependent on the Primordial image. (2019-11-21 04:30)

[1]

GERDA·WEGENER

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Gerda Hipert

Dear Frau Hipert, 17 March 1937

You have seen quite correctly that the attitude-type remains more or less constant but that the function-type is subject to all manner of changes in the course of life.

During a practical analysis you can observe an extremely interesting transition from the differentiated function to its auxiliary function and from this to its counter-function and thence to the undifferentiated or inferior function.

You are right when you say that ethical values are the product of a highly differentiated feeling function.

Naturally the intellect also plays a part in working out and formulating an ethic, but the decisive contents all come from feeling.

You are right, too, about the difference between men and women in relation to the idea.

It is correct to say that women are more dependent on the idea and men more dependent on the Primordial image.

Naturally this is true only of those women in whom the idea functions at all, just as the primordial image becomes effective only when a man takes account of feeling.

There is as yet no literature on the animus problem except for my wife’s essay "Ein Beitrag zum Problem des Animus" in Wirklichkeit der Seele, Rascher, Zurich.

It is true, of course, that inability to express oneself is a defect and in a deeper sense a fault in so far as it is incumbent upon people to realize their psychic contents whether in words, images, or deeds.

But since different types do in fact exist, and men and women besides, one simply cannot imagine any form of words or any image that could express a content with absolute validity and absolute conviction.

What is the most perfect and clearest expression for one person can be a dead formula or a bewildering complication for another.

This is due partly to the fact that human beings are defective in some way, but also to the fact that every conceivable expression is necessarily one-sided, for what is idea is not word and what is word is not deed, though all three should be one.

Such completeness and perfection is only a religious legend but unfortunately never a reality in the usual sense of the word.

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol I, Pages 230-231

https://aras.org/concordance/content/gerda-hipert-3-20-1937

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

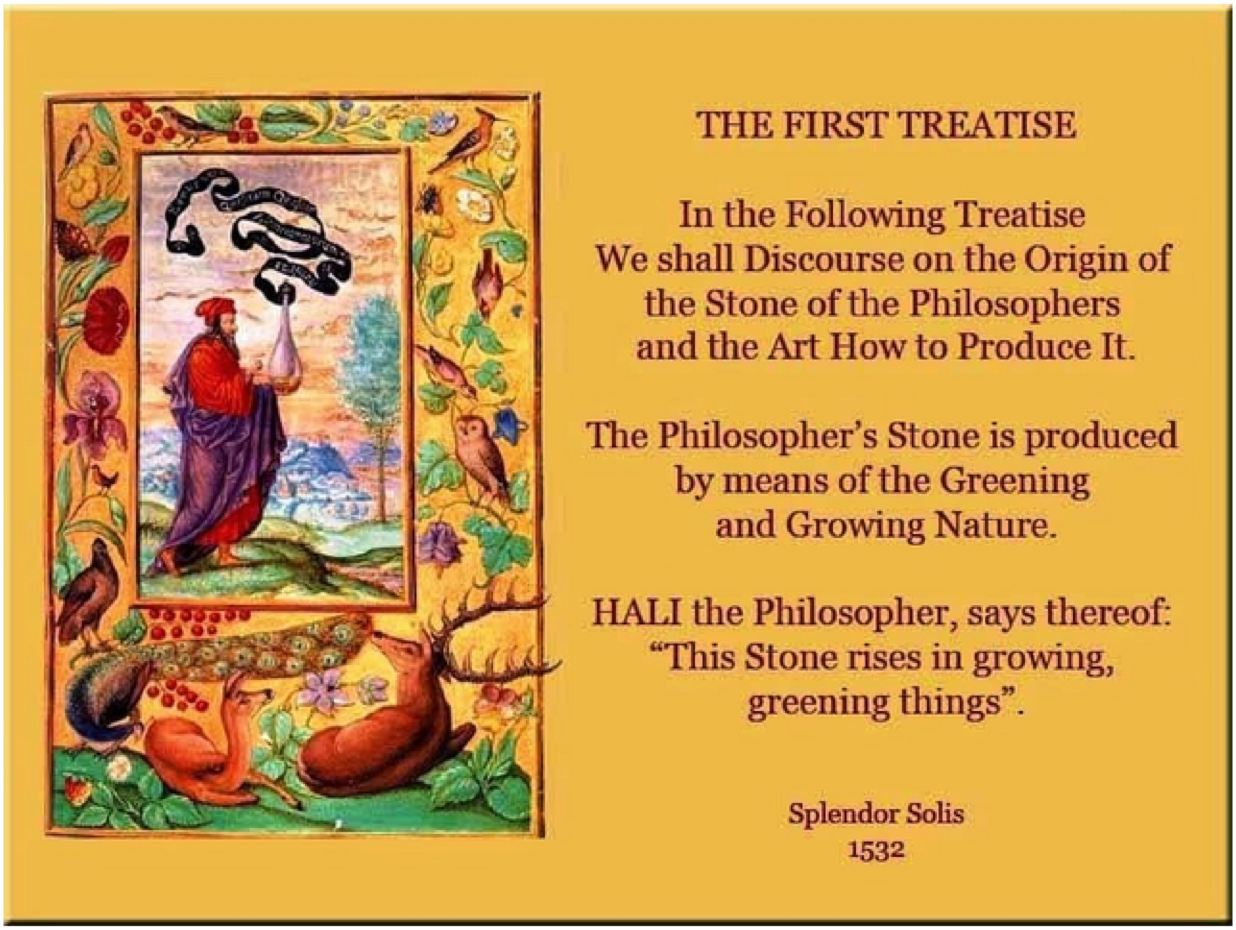
Great Sites to visit:

1. Jenna Lilla's Path of the Soul http://jennalilla.org/
2. Steve Jung-Hearted Parker's Jung Currents http://jungcurrents.com/
3. Frith Luton's Jungian Dream Analysis and Psychotherapy: http://frithluton.com/articles/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/49a92-302bhipert.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_3?crid=4TD2Q5IDAX2X&keywords=jung+letters&qid=1574330178&sprefix=jung+l%2Caps%2C176`

The Philosopher's Stone is produced by means of the Greening and Growing Nature (2019-11-21 04:33)

[1]



THE FIRST TREATISE

In the Following Treatise
We shall Discourse on the Origin of the Stone of the Philosophers and the Art How to Produce It.

The Philosopher’s Stone is produced by means of the Greening and Growing Nature.

HALI the Philosopher, says thereof:
“This Stone rises in growing, greening things”.

Splendor Solis
1532

THE FIRST TREATISE. Treatise In the Following Discourse on the Origin of the We shall the Philosophers Stone and the Art of How to Produce It. The Philosopher’s Stone is produced by means of the Greening and Growing Nature.

HALI the Philosopher, says thereof: "This Stone rises in growing, greening things’. Wherefore when the Green is reduced to its former nature whereby things sprout and come forth in ordained time, it must be decocted and putrefied in the way of our secret art.

That by Art may be aided, what nature decocts and putrefies, until she gives it, in due time, the proper form, and our Art but adapts and prepares the matter as becomes Nature, for such work, and such work provides also, with. Premeditated Wisdom, a suitable Vessel.

For Art does not undertake to Produce Gold and Silver, Anew, as it can not Endow matter with its first Origin, NOR is it necessary to search our Art in places and Caverns of the Earth, another Way to Work. and with different intention from Nature, therefore also does Use different Art Tools and Instruments.

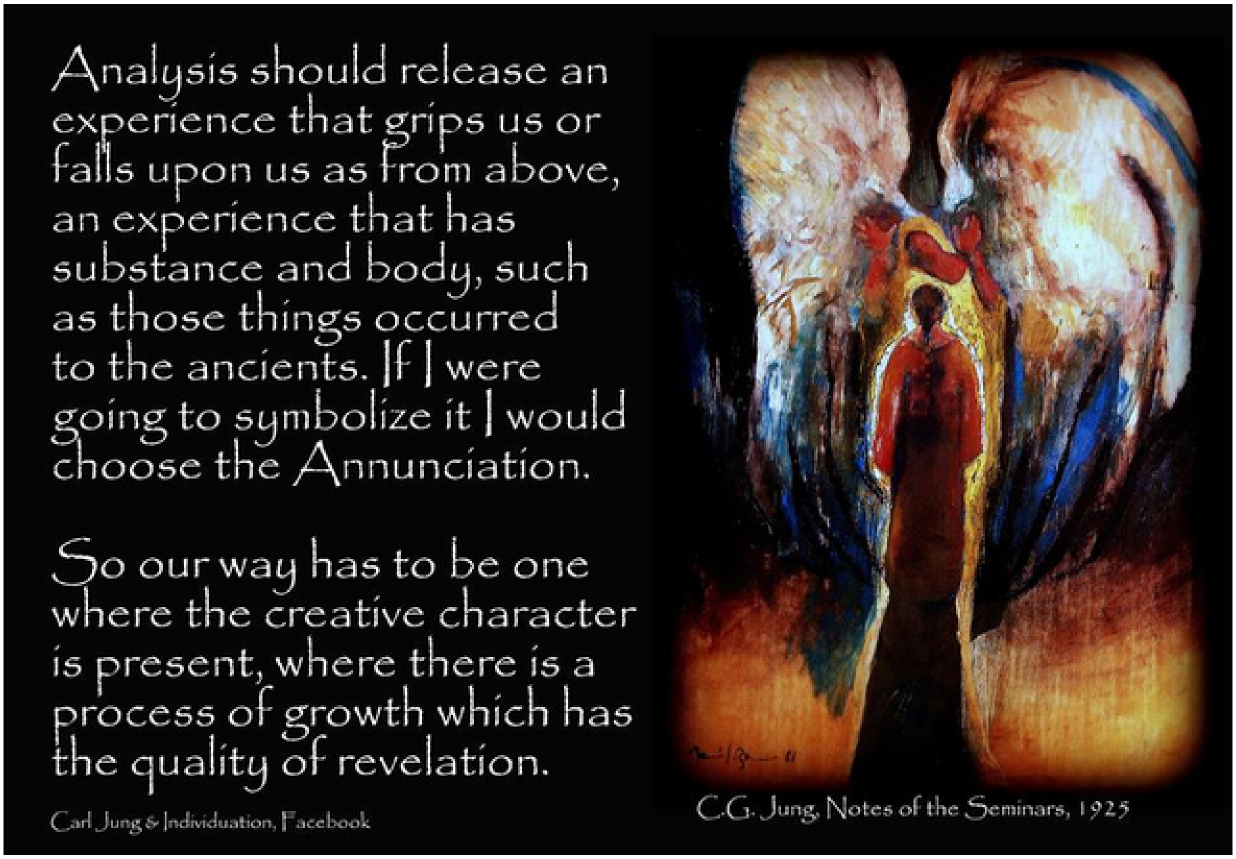
Produce Extraordinary Things Art Can For that reason out of the Aforesaid beginnings Such as Natural Nature of herself Would never be Able to create.

For unaided Nature does not produce things whereby imperfect metals can in a moment be made perfect, but by the secrets of Our Art this can be done. Splendor Solis.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/7b598-first.jpg`

Carl Jung: Analysis should release an experience that grips... (2019-11-21 04:34)

[1]



Analysis should release an experience that grips us or falls upon us as from above, an experience that has substance and body, such as those things occurred to the ancients. If I were going to symbolize it I would choose the Annunciation.

So our way has to be one where the creative character is present, where there is a process of growth which has the quality of revelation.

Carl Jung & Individuation, Facebook

C.G. Jung, Notes of the Seminars, 1925

[2]Introduction to Jungian Psychology: Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925

These revelations happened to those people, they grew out of them just as the apple grows from the tree.

For us, they give great satisfaction to the intellect, but for uniting the pairs of opposites they serve nothing.

Suppose a patient comes to me with a great conflict and I say to him, “Read the Tao Tê Ching” or “Throw your sorrows on Christ.”

It is splendid advice, but what does it mean to the patient in helping his conflict?

Nothing.

To be sure, the thing for which Christ stands does work for Catholics and partly for Protestants, but it does not work for everybody; and nearly all my patients are people for whom the traditional symbols do not work.

So our way has to be one where the creative character is present, where there is a process of growth which has the quality of revelation.

Analysis should release an experience that grips us or falls upon us as from above, an experience that has substance and body, such as those things occurred to the ancients.

If I were going to symbolize it I would choose the Annunciation. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 88.

Carl Jung across the web:

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/7c1e6-1analysis.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+1925+seminar&qid=1574330315&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung's attitude towards Religion and Biology. (2019-11-21 04:41)

[1]

[2]Collected Works of C.G. Jung, Volume 4: Freud & Psychoanalysis

[Carl Jung's attitude towards Religion and Biology.]

My attitude to all religions is therefore a positive one.

In their symbolism I recognize those figures which I have met with in the dreams and fantasies of my patients.

In their moral teachings I see efforts that are the same as or similar to those made by my patients when, guided by their own insight or inspiration, they seek the right way to deal with the forces of psychic life.

Ceremonial ritual, initiation rites, and ascetic practices, in all their forms and variations, interest me profoundly as so many techniques for bringing about a proper relation to these forces.

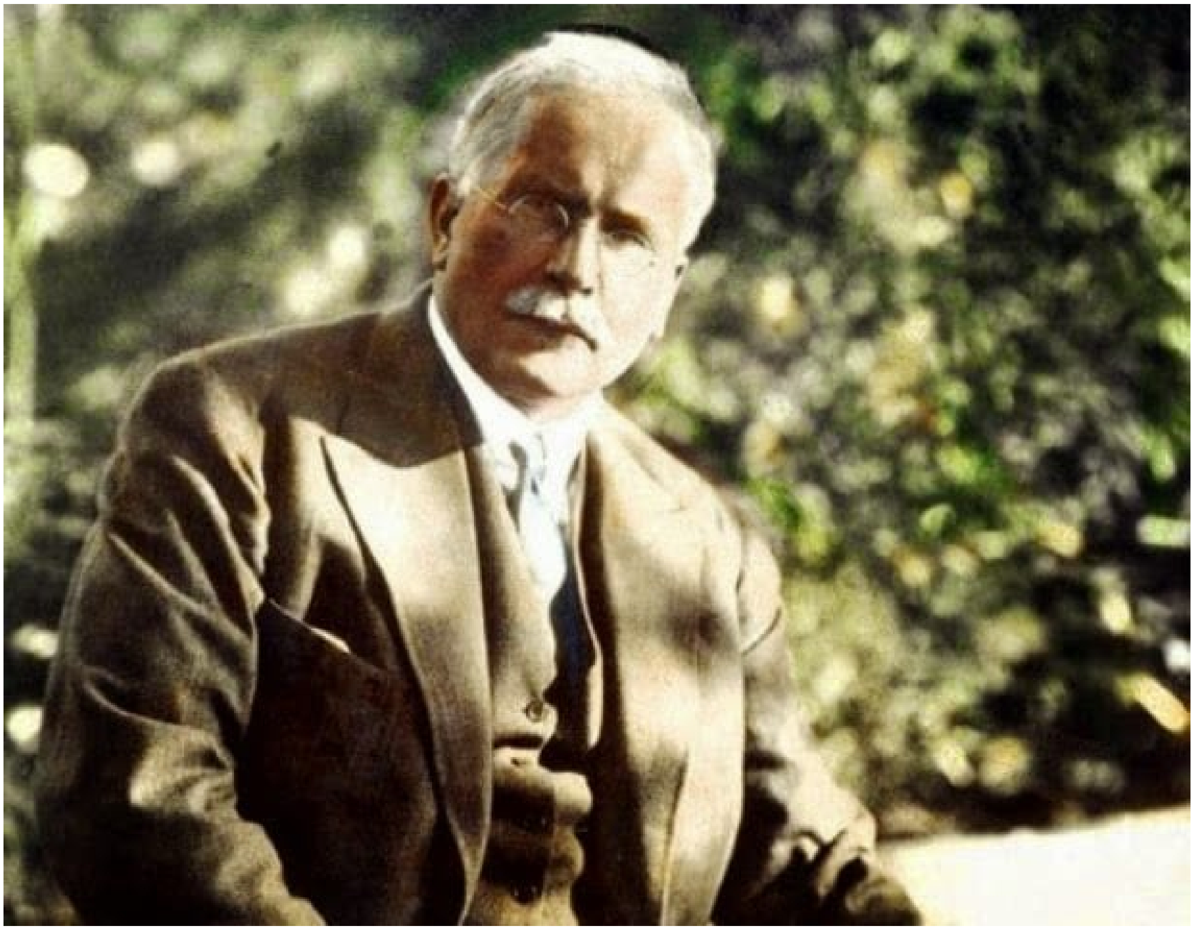
My attitude to biology is equally positive, and to the empiricism of natural science in general, in which I see a herculean attempt to understand the psyche by approaching it from the outside world, just as religious gnosis is a prodigious attempt of the human mind to derive knowledge of the cosmos from within.

In my picture of the world there is a vast outer realm and an equally vast inner realm; between these two stands man, facing now one and now the other, and, according to temperament and disposition, taking the one for the absolute truth by denying or sacrificing the other. Carl Jung, Freud and Psychoanalysis, Paragraph 777.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/ce45c-religion.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Collected-Works-C-G-Jung-Psychoanalysis/dp/0691018642/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+freud+and+psychoanalysis&qid=1574330480&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung's answer to the question whether Jung possessed any "secret knowledge" surpassing his written formulations. (2019-11-21 04:51)

[1]



[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

[Carl Jung’s answer to the question whether Jung possessed any "secret knowledge" surpassing his written formulations.]

To Bernhard Baur-Celio 30 January 1934

I cannot leave your "question of conscience" unanswered.

Obviously I speak only of what I know and what can be verified.

I don’t want to addle anybody’s brains with my subjective conjectures.

Beyond that I have had experiences which are, so to speak, "ineffable," "secret" because they can never be told properly and because nobody can understand them (I don't know whether I have even approximately understood them myself), "dangerous" because 99 % of humanity would declare l was mad if they heard such things from me, "catastrophic" because the prejudices aroused by their telling might block other people's way to a living and wondrous mystery, "taboo" because they are an "Holy (numinous) precinct, sanctuary" protected by "Fear of the gods (or demons)" as faithfully described by Goethe:

Shelter gives deep cave.
Lions around us stray,
Silent and tame they rove,
And sacred honors pay
To the holy shrine of love.

And already too much has been said-my public might be fatally infected by the suspicion of "poetic license"-that most painful aberration!

Can anyone say "credo" when he stands amidst his experience, "In faith trusting the terrifying apparition." when he knows how superfluous "belief" is, when he more than just "knows," when the experience has even pressed him to the wall?

I don't want to seduce anyone into believing and thus take his experience from him.

I need my mental and physical health in fullest measure to hold out against what people call "peace," so I don't like boosting my experiences.

But one thing I will tell you: the exploration of the unconscious has in fact and in truth discovered the age-old, timeless way of initiation.

Freud's theory is an apotropaic .attempt to block off and protect oneself from the perils of the "long road"; only a "knight" dares "la queste" and the "adventure."

Nothing is submerged for ever-that is the terrifying discovery everyone makes who has opened that portal.

But the primeval fear is so great that the world is grateful to Freud for having proved "scientifically" (what a bastard of a science!) that one has seen nothing behind it.

Now it is not merely my "credo" but the greatest and most incisive experience of my life that this door, a highly inconspicuous side-door on an unsuspicious looking and easily overlooked footpath-narrow and indistinct because only a few have set foot on it-leads to the secret of transformation and renewal.

Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat:
Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.
Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. (Matthew 7:13-15)

Now you will understand why I prefer to say "scio" and not "credo" -because I don't want to act mysterious.

But it would infallibly look as though I were acting mysterious if I spoke of a real, living mystery.

One is mysterious when one speaks of a real mystery.

Therefore better not speak of it in order to avoid that evil and confusing look.

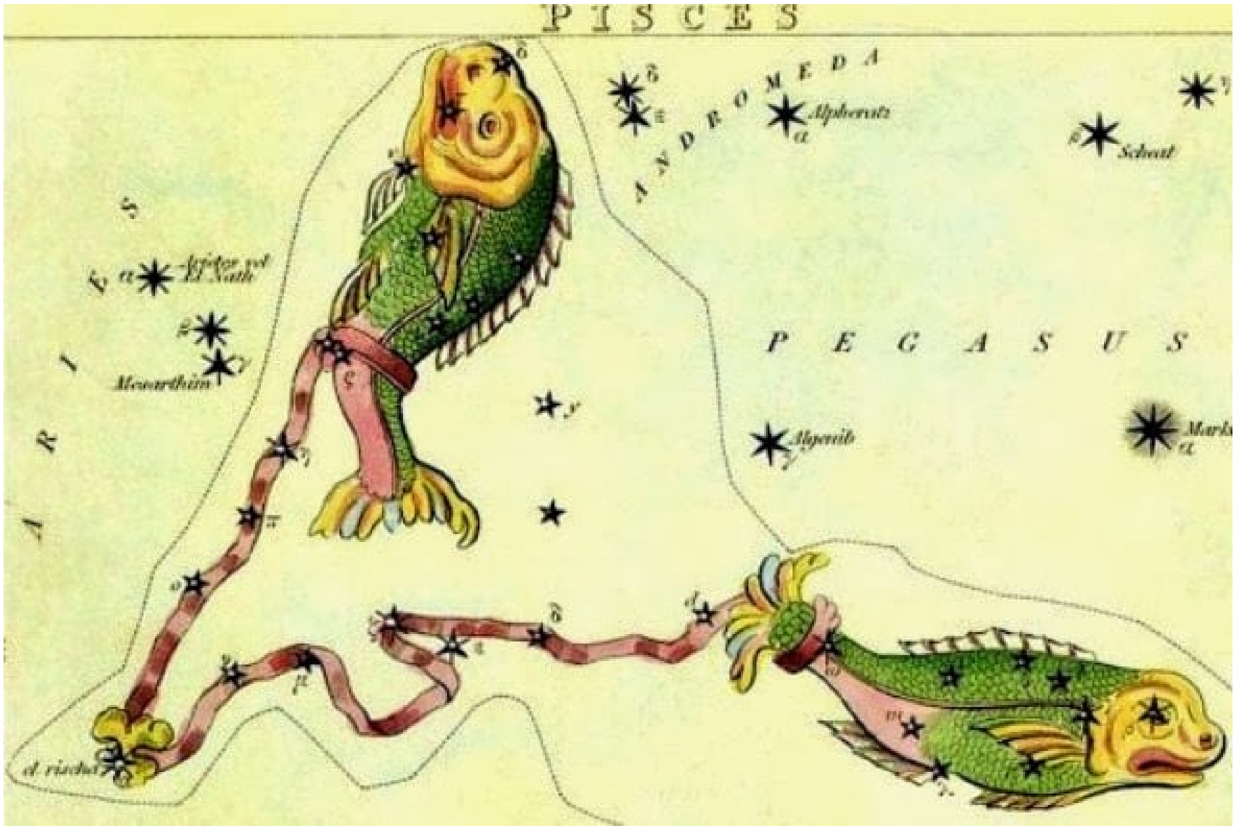
Like all real life it is a voyage between Scylla and Charybdis. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 140-143.

[Note: According to a communication from Prof. Baur-Celio, this letter reached him in the form reproduced here, without beginning or end.]

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/917e1-carl.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_3?crid=4TD2Q5IDAX2X&keywords=jung+letters&qid=1574330178&sprefix=jung+l%2Caps%2C176`

Carl Jung on Christ and The Sign of The Fishes “Pisces” (2019-11-21 04:59)

[1]



PISCES
ANDROMEDA
Alpheratz
Scheat
ARIES
Arietes vel El Nath
Mesarthim
PEGASUS
Algenib
Markab
el rischa

[2]Aion: Researches into the Phenomenology of the Self

[Carl Jung on Christ and The Sign of The Fish “Pisces”]

Let us now turn back to the theme of Christ as the fish.

According to Doelger, the Christian fish symbol first appeared in Alexandria around A.D. 200; 71 similarly, the baptismal bath was described as a piscina (fish-pond) quite early.

This presupposes that the believers were fishes, as is in fact suggested by the gospels (for instance Matt. 4:19).

There Christ wants to make Peter and Andrew "fishers of men” and the miraculous draught of fishes (Luke 5:10) is used by Christ himself as a paradigm for Peter’s missionary activity.

A direct astrological aspect of Christ’s birth is given us in Matthew 2:1ff. The Magi from the East were stargazers who, beholding an extraordinary constellation, inferred an equally extraordinary birth.

This anecdote proves that Christ, possibly even at the time of the apostles, was viewed from the astrological standpoint or was at least brought into connection with astrological myths.

The latter alternative is fully confirmed when we consider the apocalyptic utterances of St. John. Since this exceedingly complex question has been discussed by those who are more qualified than I, we can support our argument on the well-attested fact that glimpses of astrological mythology may be caught behind the stories of the worldly and otherworldly life of the Redeemer.

Above all it is the connections with the age of the Fishes which are attested by the fish symbolism, either contemporaneously with the gospels themselves ("fishers of men” fishermen as the first disciples, miracle of loaves and fishes), or immediately afterwards in the post-apostolic era.

The symbolism shows Christ and those who believe in him as fishes, fish as the food eaten at the Agape, baptism as immersion in a fish-pond, etc.

At first sight, all this points to no more than the fact that the fish symbols and mythologems which have always existed had assimilated the figure of the Redeemer; in other words, it was a symptom of Christ’s assimilation into the world of ideas prevailing at that time.

But, to the extent that Christ was regarded as the new aeon, it would be clear to anyone acquainted with astrology that he was born as the first fish of the Pisces era, and was doomed to die as the last ram of the declining Aries era. 75 Matthew 27:158 hands down this mythologem in the form of the old sacrifice of the seasonal god.

Significantly enough, Jesus’s partner in the ceremony is called Barabbas, "son of the father." There would be some justification for drawing a parallel between the tension of opposites in early Christian psychology and the fact the zodiacal sign for Pisces frequently shows two fishes moving in opposite directions, but only if it could be proved that their contrary movement dates from pre-Christian times or is at least contemporary with Christ.

Unfortunately, I know of no pictorial representation from this period that would give us any information about the position of the fishes. In the fine bas-relief of the zodia from the Little Metropolis in Athens, Pisces and Aquarius are missing.

There is one representation of the fishes, near the beginning of our era, that is certainly free from Christian influence. This is the globe of the heavens from the Farnese Atlas in Naples.

The first fish, depicted north of the equator, is vertical, with its head pointing to the celestial Pole; the second fish, south of the equator, is horizontal, with its head pointing West. The picture follows the astronomical configuration and is therefore naturalistic.

The zodiac from the temple of Hathor at Denderah (1st cent. B.C.) shows the fishes, but they both face the same way. The planisphere of Timochares, mentioned by Hipparchus, has only one fish where Pisces should be.

On coins and gems from the time of the emperors, and also on Mithraic monuments, the fishes are shown either facing the same way or moving in opposite directions. The polarity which the fishes later acquired may perhaps be due to the fact that the astronomical constellation shows the first (northerly) fish as vertical, and the second (southerly) fish as horizontal.

They move almost at right angles to one another and hence form a cross. This countermovement, which was unknown to the majority of the oldest sources, was much emphasized in Christian times, and this leads one to suspect a certain tendentiousness.

Although no connection of any kind can be proved between the figure of Christ and the inception of the astrological age of the fishes, the simultaneity of the fish symbolism of the Redeemer with the astrological symbol of the new aeon seems to me important enough to warrant the emphasis we place upon it. If we try to follow up the complicated mythological ramifications of this parallel, we do so with intent to throw light on the multifarious aspects of an archetype that manifests itself on the one hand in a personality, and on the other hand synchronistically, in a moment of time determined in advance, before Christ's birth.

Indeed, long before that, the archetype had been written in the heavens by projection, so as then, "when the time was fulfilled" to coincide with the symbols produced by the new era. The fish, appropriately enough, belongs to the winter rainy season, like Aquarius and Capricorn (the goatfish).

As a zodiacal sign, therefore, it is not in the least remarkable. It becomes a matter for astonishment only when, through the precession of the equinoxes, the spring-point moves into this sign and thus inaugurates an age in which the "fish" was used as a name for the God who became a man, who was born as a fish and was sacrificed as a ram, who had fishermen for disciples and wanted to make them fishers of men, who fed the multitude with miraculously multiplying fishes, who was himself eaten as a fish, the "holier food," and whose followers are little fishes, the, "pisciculi."

Assume, if you like, that a fairly widespread knowledge of astrology would account for at least some of this symbolism in certain Gnostic-Christian circles. But this assumption does not apply when it comes to eyewitness accounts In the synoptic gospels. There is no evidence of any such thing. We have no reason whatever to suppose that those stories are disguised astrological myths.

On the contrary, one gets the impression that the fish episodes are entirely natural happenings and that there is nothing further to be looked for behind them. They are "Just So" stories, quite simple and natural, and one wonders whether the whole Christian fish symbolism may not have come about equally fortuitously and without premeditation.

Hence one could speak just as well of the seemingly fortuitous coincidence of this symbolism with the name of the new aeon, the more so as the age of the fishes seems to have left no very clear traces in the cultures of the East.

I could not maintain with any certainty that this is correct, because I know far too little about Indian and Chinese astrology.

As against this, the fact that the traditional fish symbolism makes possible a verifiable prediction that had already been made in the New Testament is a somewhat uncomfortable proposition to swallow.

The northerly, or easterly, fish, which the spring-point entered at about the beginning of our era, is joined to the southerly, or westerly, fish by the so-called commissure. This consists of a band of weak stars forming the middle sector of the constellation, and the spring-point gradually moved along its southern edge.

The point where the ecliptic intersects with the meridian between the two fishes coincides roughly with the sixteenth century, the time of the Reformation, which as we know is so extraordinarily important for the history of Western symbols.

Since then the spring-point has moved along the southern edge of the second fish, and will enter Aquarius in the course of the third millennium.

Astrologically interpreted, the designation of Christ as one of the fishes identifies him with the first fish, the vertical one. Christ is followed by the Antichrist, at the end of time. The beginning of the enantiodromia would fall, logically, midway between the two fishes.

We have seen that this is so. The time of the Renaissance begins in the immediate vicinity of the second fish, and with it comes that spirit which culminates in the modern age. Carl Jung, Aion, The Sign of the Fishes, Paragraphs 145-148.

Note: In instances where Dr. Jung used Astrological Symbols or Greek terminology I have sadly been unable to include them within the text above.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/10/d548f-pisces.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Aion-Researches-Phenomenology-Collected-Works/dp/069101826X/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+aion&qid=1574330723&sr=8-1`

Tis the Season to Support Carl Jung Depth Psychology (2019-11-21 08:40)

A new season is approaching for Carl Jung Depth Psychology.

Funds are being raised to support further research related to the Life, Work and Legacy of Dr. Jung. .

Donations made be made at either of both of the links below:

[1]GoFundMe Carl Jung Depth Psychology

Carl Jung Depth Psychology

$60

[2]Become a Patron of Carl Jung Depth Psychology

Donations support the sites below:

[3]Carl Jung Depth Psychology - Word Press

[4]Carl Jung Depth Psychology Facebook Group

[5]Carl Jung Depth Psychology on Twitter

[6]Carl Jung Depth Psychology on LinkedIn

[7]Carl Jung on "YouTube"

[8]Aniela Jaffe Facebook Page

[9]Barbara Hannah Facebook Page

[10]Carl Jung and Princeton University Press Facebook Page

[11]E.A. Bennet Facebook Page

[12]Jungian Books Group on Facebook

[13]Karl Kerenyi Facebook Page

[14]Marie Louise Von Franz Books Facebook Group

[15]Richard Wilhelm Facebook Page

[16]The Red Book by Carl Jung Facebook Group

[17]Sonu Shamdasani Facebook Page

1. `https://www.gofundme.com/f/wrwnm-carl-jung-depth-psychology`
2. `https://www.patreon.com/bePatron?u=11486251&redirect_uri=https%3A%2F%2Fcarljungdepthpsychologysite.blog%2F2019%2F11%2F19%2Fcarl-jung-psychological-treatment-can`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/`
4. `https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/`
5. `https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt`
6. `https://www.linkedin.com/in/lewis-lafontaine-09aa6662/`

7. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/2018/04/26/carl-jung-depth-psychology-youtube-presentations-subscribers-needed/#.W-2i2-hKjIU
8. https://www.facebook.com/Aniela-Jaffe-1507926539471152/
9. https://www.facebook.com/Barbara-Hannah-317459305124661/
10. https://www.facebook.com/CarlJungPublications/?eid=ARB2X9i8nCwKf6qbtVLl6uSs9TPVnXtRgFNE6eKpzit_Xy97TPhFkOPj8KdoD1hGmwvpH1q_bHq9ALs6
11. https://www.facebook.com/EA-Bennett-352229564948049/
12. https://www.facebook.com/groups/1644635502430189/
13. https://www.facebook.com/Karl-Kerenyi-1484915891796424/?ref=br_rs
14. https://www.facebook.com/groups/688632314584444/
15. https://www.facebook.com/Richard-Wilhelm-1510076199249883/
16. https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/
17. https://www.facebook.com/Sonu-Shamdasani-524802170989730/

Carl Jung: Your dream is really the stuff artists work with. (2019-11-22 04:15)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Dr. S.

Dear Colleague, 27 March 1937

As I was reading your dream the thought suddenly struck me that it had almost a literary ring.

Have you never thought of using this material for a two-tiered novel, one tier being played out in three dimensions, the other in four?

Your dream is really the stuff artists work with.

In this respect the dream is so excellent that I would conjecture that your descriptive powers are equal to the task in the world of consciousness as well.

Action as we know can take place only in the third dimension, and the fourth dimension is that which actually wants to grow into our conscious three-dimensional world.

This realization is man's task par excellence.

All culture is an extension of consciousness, and just as modern physics can no longer do without four-dimensional thinking, so our psychological view of the world will have to concern itself with these problems.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 232

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

Great Sites to visit:

1. Jenna Lilla's Path of the Soul http://jennalilla.org/
2. Steve Jung-Hearted Parker's Jung Currents http://jungcurrents.com/
3. Frith Luton's Jungian Dream Analysis and Psychotherapy: http://frithluton.com/articles/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/c5fc3-322bdr-2bs.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_2?crid=3BU7Q3SZVBV4R&keywords=jung+letters&qid=1574414736&sprefix=jung+lett%2Caps%2`

Carl Jung on the Symbolism of the “washing of the hands.” (2019-11-22 04:15)

[1]

[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940

[Carl Jung on the Symbolism of the “washing of the hands.”]

We have shown the connection between the nature of the girl and the elves. Elves don’t have souls.

In her playful way, the girl now does something very significant: she washes her hands.

Washing one’s hands has always been connected with a great and magnificent ceremony.

At first, washing one’s hands was probably done out of politeness and custom, but it is also a symbolic act.

Thus the priest in Catholic mass prays for moral lustration during the washing of hands, the introductory part of mass.

In Matthew 27:24, there is the well-known passage: “When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person: see ye to it.”

Something similar is found in Deuteronomy, where the following is demanded after a manslaughter: “And all the elders of that city, that are next unto the slain man, shall wash their hands” (21:6).

In Cornwall, according to the biblical tradition, washing one’s hands was the sign of innocence of a certain crime.

An Icelandic prayer says: “I remove my enemies and adversaries from me by washing.”

In this context let us also remember the statement of Lady Macbeth: “A little water clears us of this deed: How easy is it, then!”

Who can forget the scene in which Lady Macbeth enters the hall after the bloody deed at midnight, watched by the doctor and the gentlewoman: “Look, how she rubs her hands
It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands.”

In ancient customs, too, washing one’s hands is considered necessary in extraordinary circumstances, for example, in Silesia, one has to wash one’s hands after a burial to avoid dying or losing one’s teeth.

In the Rhineland, you should wash your hands after a sudden fright to prevent lasting harm. In Southern Germany and in Switzerland, special blessings by washing the hands are customary, which impressively show the importance of this act.

In all cultures, washing one’s hands is a symbolic act, an integral part of the ritual.

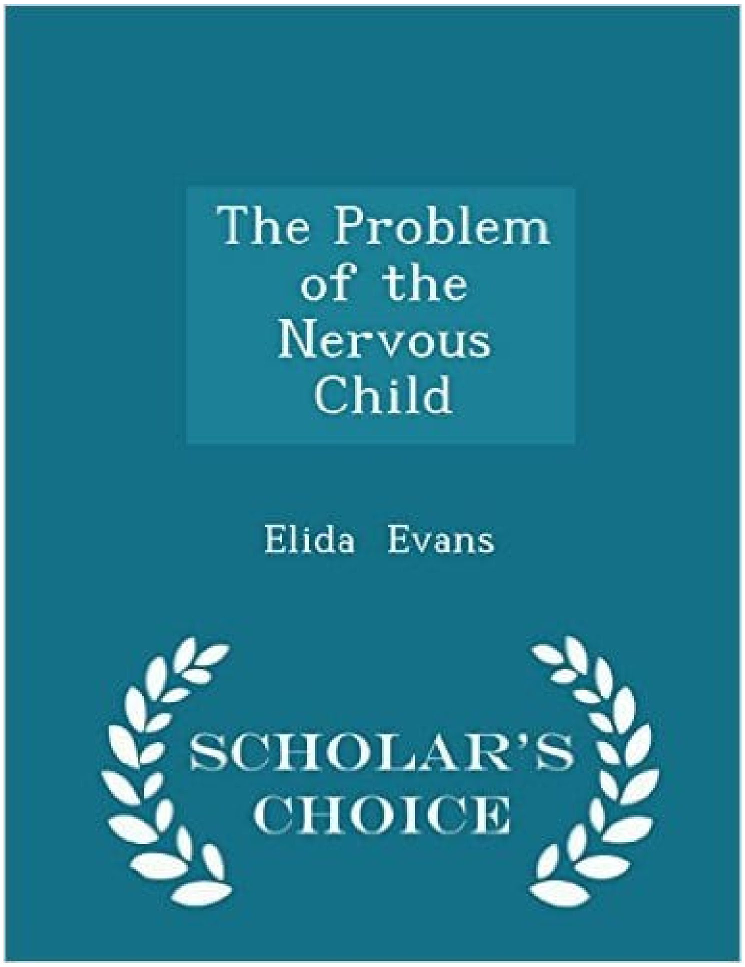
The Egyptian priest, for example, is called uibu, the washed one, or uibu totui, the clean one with both hands.

In alchemy, too, we know of the ablutio, when the pure white color emerges after the nigredo, the blackness. Carl Jung, Children’s Dream Seminar Pages 301-302.

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b9f62-pilate.jpeg
2. https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-Seminar-1936-1940-Seminars/dp/0691148074/ref=sr_1_2?keywords=jung+dreams+children&qid=1574414573&sr=8-2

Carl Jung Introduction to "The Problem of the Nervous Child." (2019-11-22 04:33)

[1]



The Problem of the Nervous Child
Elida Evans
SCHOLAR'S CHOICE

"[2]The Problem of the Nervous Child" by Elida Evans with Foreword by Carl Jung.

Introduction by Dr. C.G. Jung

I have read the manuscript of Mrs. Evans book, The Problem of the Nervous Child, with great pleasure and interest.

Mrs. Evans' knowledge of her subject matter is based on the solid foundation of practical experience, an experience gained in the difficult and toilsome treatment and education of nervous children.

Whoever has had to deal with nervous children knows what an amount of patience, as well as skill, is needed to guide a child out of a wrong pathological attitude into a normal life.

This book, as the reader can see on almost every page, is the fruit of an extended work in the field of neuroses and abnormal characters.

Despite the fact that there are numbers of books on education, there are very few that occupy themselves with a child's most intimate problems in such a careful and painstaking way.

It is self-evident that this contribution will be of great value to anyone interested in educational questions.

But the physician should be particularly indebted to the author, as her book will be a valuable co-operation in the fight against the widespread evil of neuroses in adults.

More and more the neurologist of today realizes the fact that the origin of the nervousness of his patients is very rarely of recent date, but that it traces back to the early impressions and developments in childhood.

There lies the source of many later nervous diseases.

Most of the neuroses originate from a wrong psychological attitude which hinders the adjustment to the emdronment or to the individual's own requirements.

This wrong psychological position which is at the bottom of almost every neurosis has, as a rule, been built up during the course of years and very often began in early childhood as a consequence of incompatible familiar influences.

Knowing this, Mrs. Evans lays much stress on the parent's mental attitude and its importance for the child's psychology.
One easily overlooks the enormous power of imitation in children.

Parents too easily content themselves with the belief that a thing hidden from the child cannot influence it.

They forget that the infantile imitation is less concerned with the action than with the parent's state of mind from which the action emanates.
I have frequently observed children who were particularly influenced by certain unconscious tendencies of the parents and, in such cases, I have often advised the treatment of the mother rather than of the child.

Through the enlightenment of the parents, their wrong influences can at least be avoided, and thus much can be done for the prevention of later neuroses in the children.

The author particularly insists upon the importance of watching the manifestations of the sexual instinct in childhood.

Any one concerned with the education of abnormal children will confirm the existence and the frequency of sexual symptoms in these children.

Despite the fact that sexual activity does not belong to the infantile age, it frequently manifests itself in a symptomatic way, viz. as a symptom of abnormal development.

An abnormal development does not provide sufficient opportunity for the normal display of the child's energies.

Thus, the normal outlet being blocked, the energy accumulates itself and forcibly seeks an abnormal outlet in premature and perverted sexual interests and activities.

Infantile sexuality is the most frequent symptom of a morbid psychological attitude.

According to my view, it is wrong to consider sexual phenomena in early childhood as the expression of an organic disposition; most of the cases are due to an environment not fitting the child's psychological nature.

The attitude of the child toward life is certainly determined by the inherited disposition, but only to a certain extent; on the other side it is the result of the immediate parental influences and of the educational measures.

While the inherited disposition cannot be changed, these latter influences can be improved by suitable methods, and thus the original unfavourable disposition can be overcome.

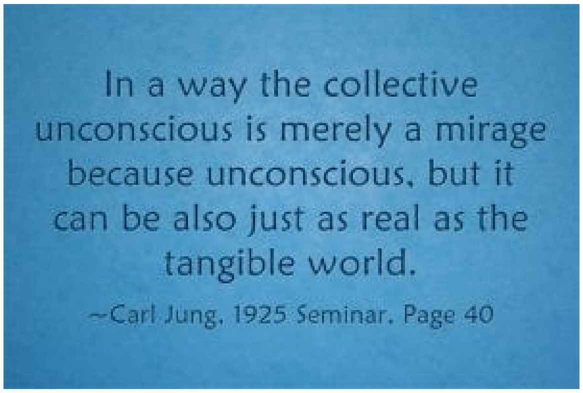
Mrs. Evans book shows the way, and how to treat even the most intricate cases.

Kushnacht, near Zurich, October, 1919. Carl Jung, Foreword to "The Problem of the Nervous Child" by Elida Evans, Page v-viii

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/06f04-elida.jpg`

2. `https://www.amazon.com/Problem-Nervous-Child-Elida-Evans/dp/1117049817/ref=sr_1_fkmr1_3?ie=UTF8&qid=1542879907&sr=8-3-fkmr1&keywords=nervous+child+linda+evans`

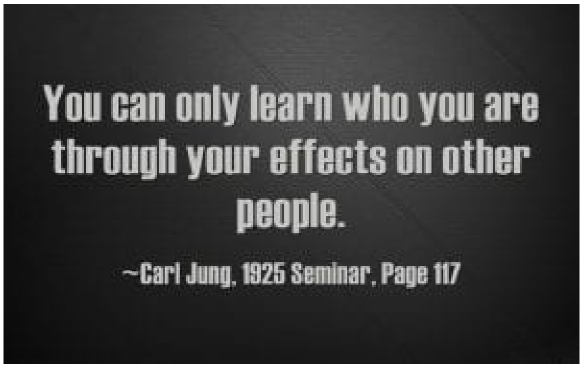
Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-11-22 04:35)



In a way the collective unconscious is merely a mirage because unconscious, but it can be also just as real as the tangible world.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 40

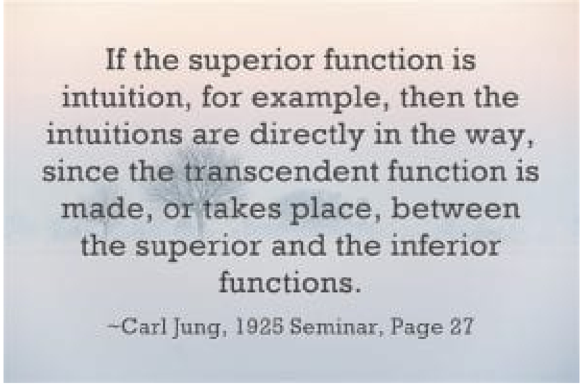
In a way the collective unconscious is merely a mirage because unconscious, but it can be also just as real as the tangible world. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 40



You can only learn who you are through your effects on other people.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 117

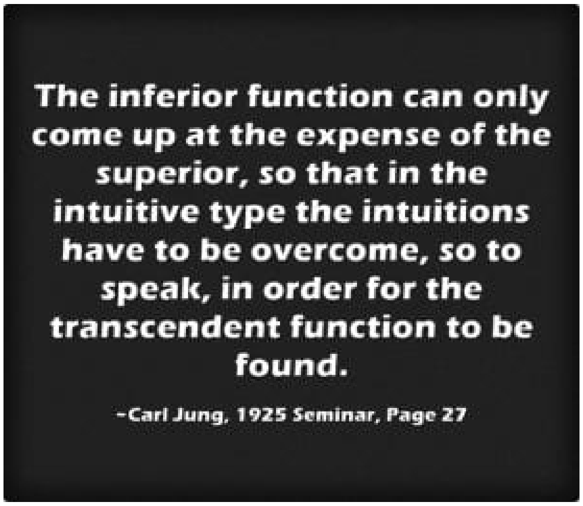
You can only learn who you are through your effects on other people. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 117



If the superior function is intuition, for example, then the intuitions are directly in the way, since the transcendent function is made, or takes place, between the superior and the inferior functions.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 27

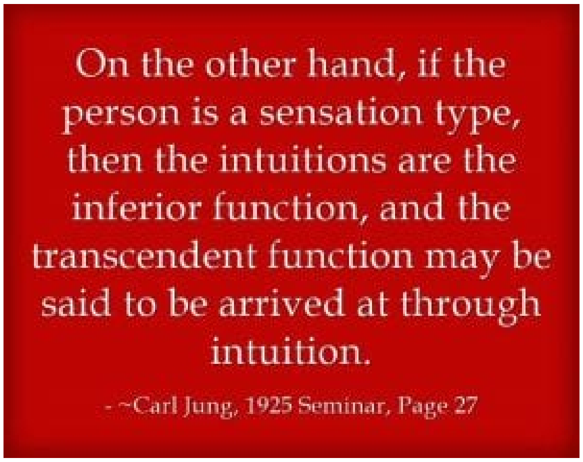
If the superior function is intuition, for example, then the intuitions are directly in the way, since the transcendent function is made, or takes place, between the superior and the inferior functions. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 27



The inferior function can only come up at the expense of the superior, so that in the intuitive type the intuitions have to be overcome, so to speak, in order for the transcendent function to be found.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 27

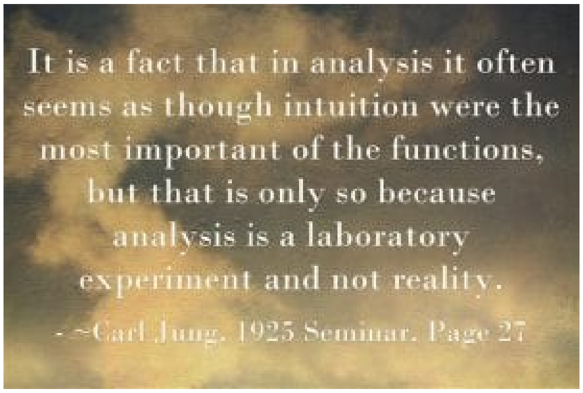
The inferior function can only come up at the expense of the superior, so that in the intuitive type the intuitions have to be overcome, so to speak, in order for the transcendent function to be found. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 27



On the other hand, if the person is a sensation type, then the intuitions are the inferior function, and the transcendent function may be said to be arrived at through intuition.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 27

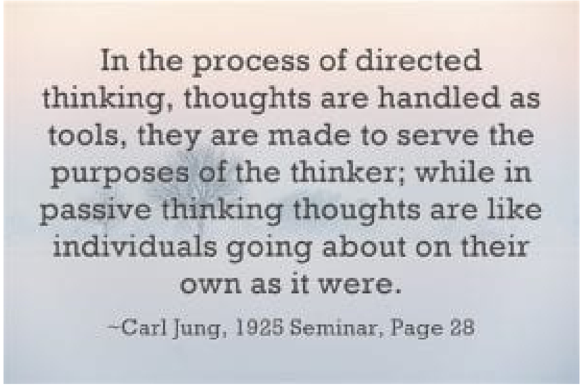
On the other hand, if the person is a sensation type, then the intuitions are the inferior function, and the transcendent function may be said to be arrived at through intuition. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 27



It is a fact that in analysis it often seems as though intuition were the most important of the functions, but that is only so because analysis is a laboratory experiment and not reality.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 27

It is a fact that in analysis it often seems as though intuition were the most important of the functions, but that is only so because analysis is a laboratory experiment and not reality. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 27



In the process of directed thinking, thoughts are handled as tools, they are made to serve the purposes of the thinker; while in passive thinking thoughts are like individuals going about on their own as it were.

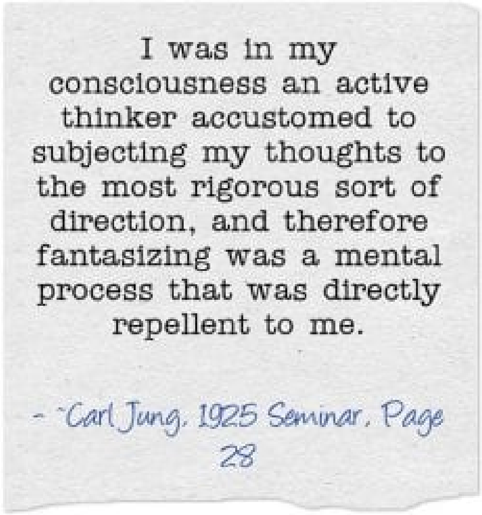
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 28

In the process of directed thinking, thoughts are handled as tools, they are made to serve the purposes of the thinker; while in passive thinking thoughts are like individuals going about on their own as it were. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 28

Fantastical thinking knows no hierarchy; the thoughts may even be antagonistic to the ego.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 28

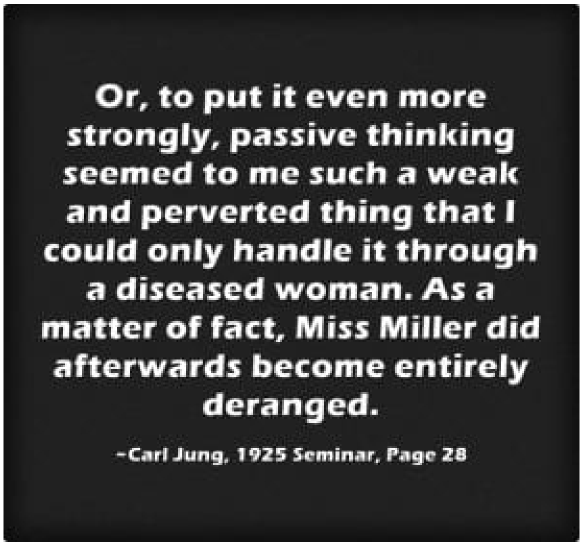
Fantastical thinking knows no hierarchy; the thoughts may even be antagonistic to the ego. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 28



I was in my consciousness an active thinker accustomed to subjecting my thoughts to the most rigorous sort of direction, and therefore fantasizing was a mental process that was directly repellent to me.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 28

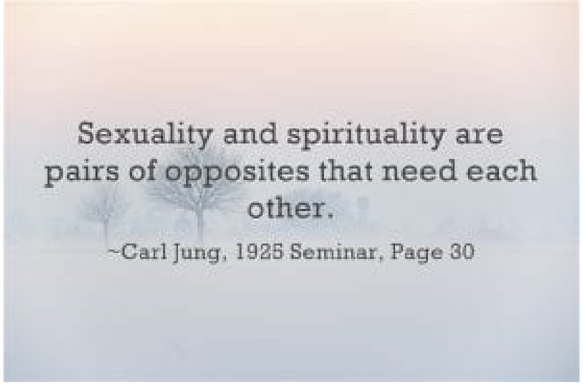
I was in my consciousness an active thinker accustomed to subjecting my thoughts to the most rigorous sort of direction, and therefore fantasizing was a mental process that was directly repellent to me. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 28



Or, to put it even more strongly, passive thinking seemed to me such a weak and perverted thing that I could only handle it through a diseased woman. As a matter of fact, Miss Miller did afterwards become entirely deranged.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 28

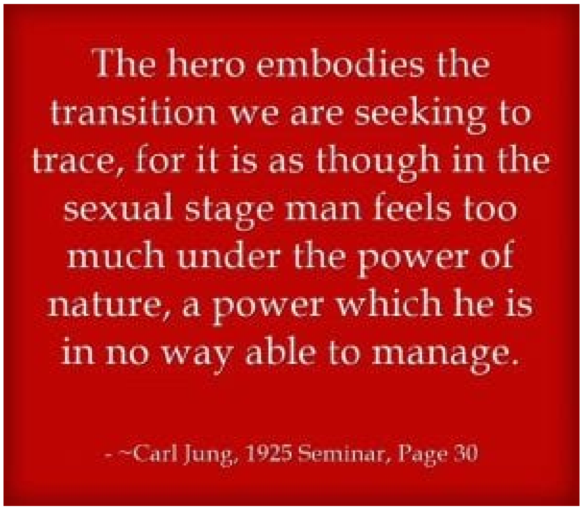
Or, to put it even more strongly, passive thinking seemed to me such a weak and perverted thing that I could only handle it through a diseased woman. As a matter of fact, Miss Miller did afterwards become entirely deranged. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 28



Sexuality and spirituality are pairs of opposites that need each other.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 30

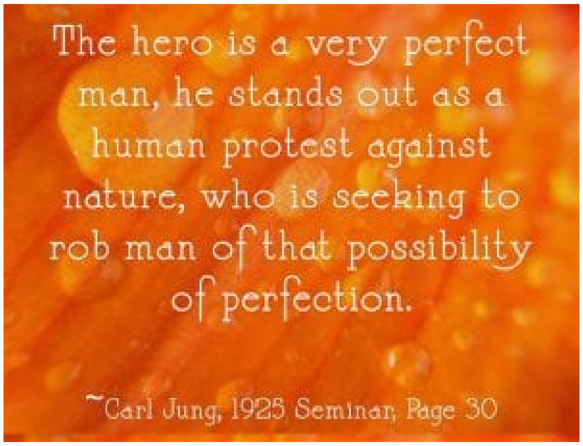
Sexuality and spirituality are pairs of opposites that need each other. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 30



The hero embodies the transition we are seeking to trace, for it is as though in the sexual stage man feels too much under the power of nature, a power which he is in no way able to manage.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 30

The hero embodies the transition we are seeking to trace, for it is as though in the sexual stage man feels too much under the power of nature, a power which he is in no way able to manage. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 30



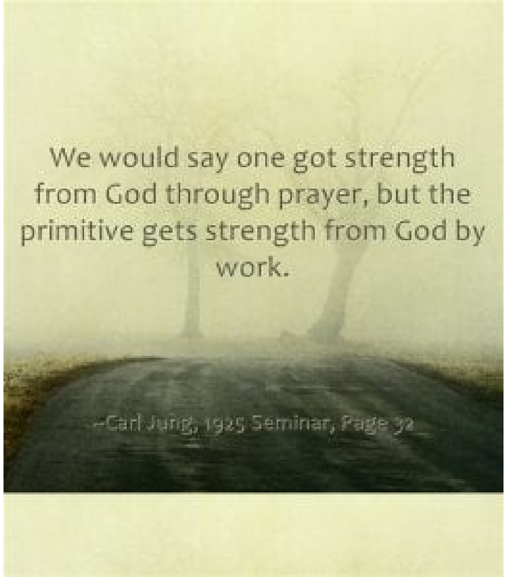
The hero is a very perfect man, he stands out as a human protest against nature, who is seeking to rob man of that possibility of perfection.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 30

The hero is a very perfect man, he stands out as a human protest against nature, who is seeking to rob man of that possibility of perfection. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 30

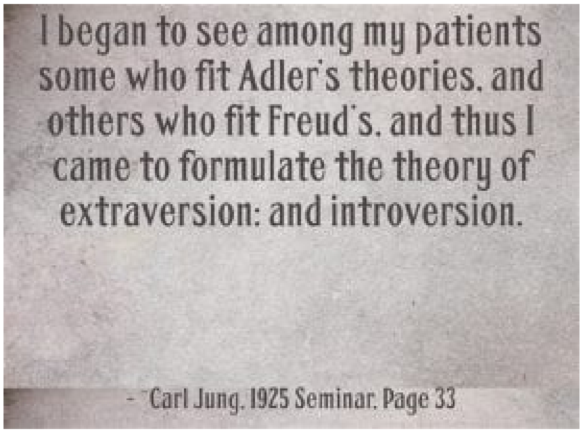
We can conquer unconsciousness by regular work but never by a grand gesture.
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 31

We can conquer unconsciousness by regular work but never by a grand gesture. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 31



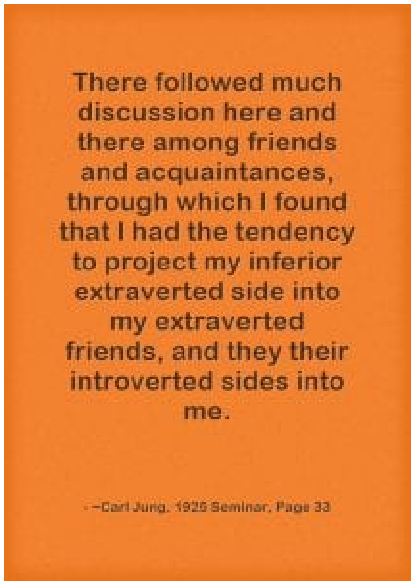
We would say one got strength from God through prayer, but the primitive gets strength from God by work.
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 32

We would say one got strength from God through prayer, but the primitive gets strength from God by work. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 32



I began to see among my patients some who fit Adler's theories, and others who fit Freud's, and thus I came to formulate the theory of extraversion: and introversion.
- Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 33

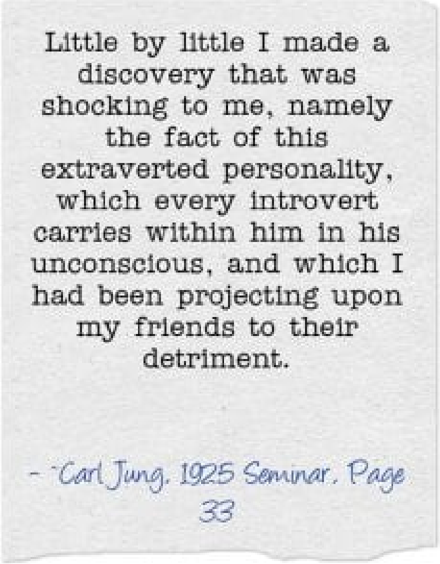
I began to see among my patients some who fit Adler's theories, and others who fit Freud's, and thus I came to formulate the theory of extraversion: and introversion. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 33



There followed much discussion here and there among friends and acquaintances, through which I found that I had the tendency to project my inferior extraverted side into my extraverted friends, and they their introverted sides into me.

- —Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 33

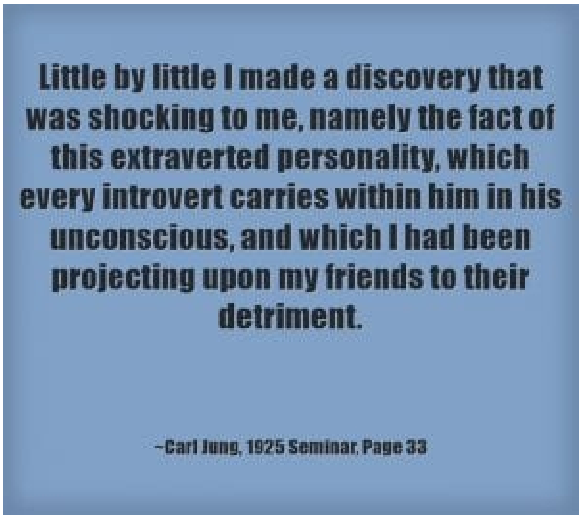
There followed much discussion here and there among friends and acquaintances, through which I found that I had the tendency to project my inferior extraverted side into my extraverted friends, and they their introverted sides into me. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 33



Little by little I made a discovery that was shocking to me, namely the fact of this extraverted personality, which every introvert carries within him in his unconscious, and which I had been projecting upon my friends to their detriment.

- "Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 33

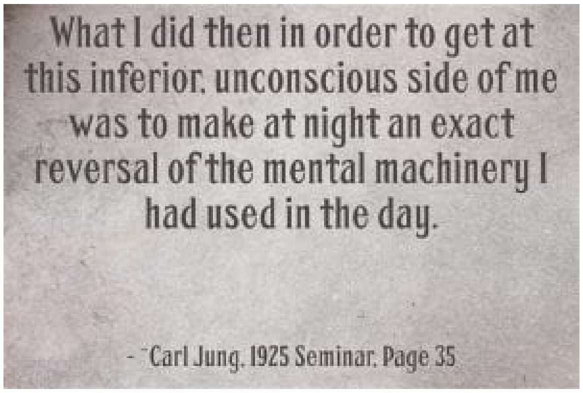
Little by little I made a discovery that was shocking to me, namely the fact of this extraverted personality, which every introvert carries within him in his unconscious, and which I had been projecting upon my friends to their detriment. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 33



Little by little I made a discovery that was shocking to me, namely the fact of this extraverted personality, which every introvert carries within him in his unconscious, and which I had been projecting upon my friends to their detriment.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 33

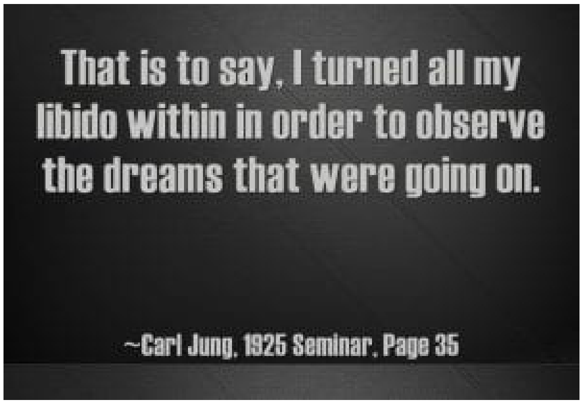
Out of these experiences that were partly personal, I wrote a little pamphlet on the psychological types, and afterwards read it as a paper before a congress. There were contained in this several mistakes which I afterwards could rectify. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 33



What I did then in order to get at this inferior, unconscious side of me was to make at night an exact reversal of the mental machinery I had used in the day.

- Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 35

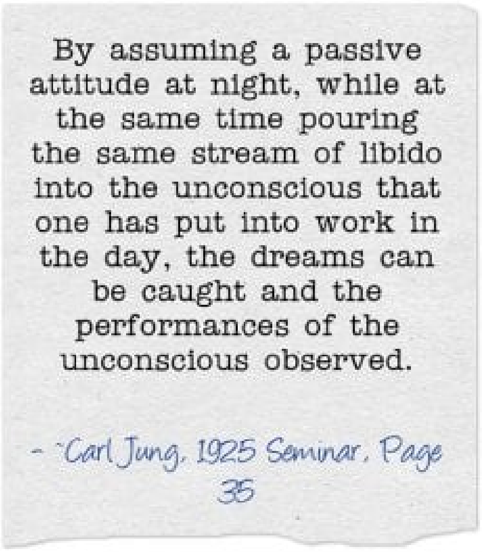
What I did then in order to get at this inferior, unconscious side of me was to make at night an exact reversal of the mental machinery I had used in the day. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 35



That is to say, I turned all my libido within in order to observe the dreams that were going on.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 35

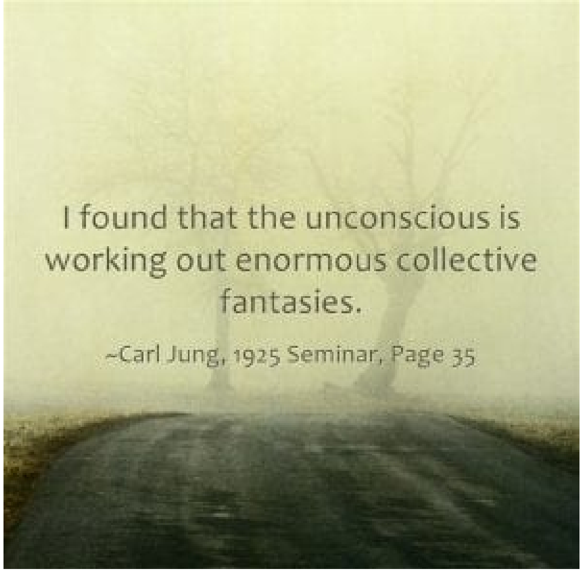
That is to say, I turned all my libido within in order to observe the dreams that were going on.   Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 35



By assuming a passive attitude at night, while at the same time pouring the same stream of libido into the unconscious that one has put into work in the day, the dreams can be caught and the performances of the unconscious observed.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 35

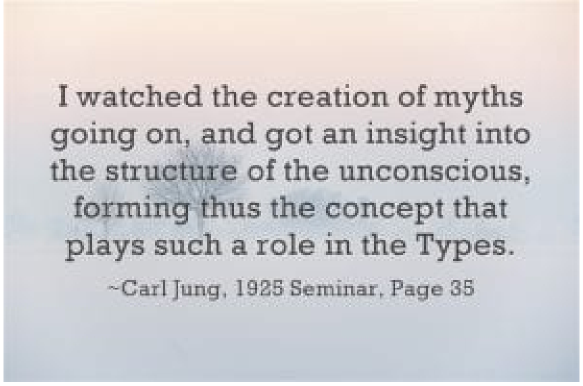
By assuming a passive attitude at night, while at the same time pouring the same stream of libido into the unconscious that one has put into work in the day, the dreams can be caught and the performances of the unconscious observed. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 35



I found that the unconscious is working out enormous collective fantasies.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 35

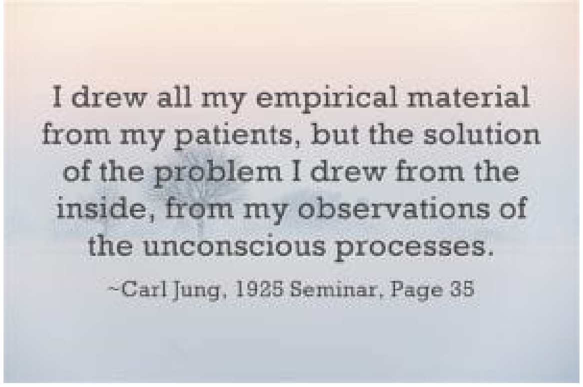
I found that the unconscious is working out enormous collective fantasies. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 35



I watched the creation of myths going on, and got an insight into the structure of the unconscious, forming thus the concept that plays such a role in the Types.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 35

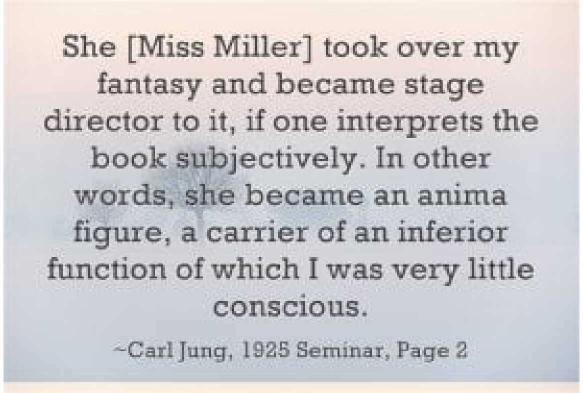
I watched the creation of myths going on, and got an insight into the structure of the unconscious, forming thus the concept that plays such a role in the Types. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 35



I drew all my empirical material from my patients, but the solution of the problem I drew from the inside, from my observations of the unconscious processes.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 35

I drew all my empirical material from my patients, but the solution of the problem I drew from the inside, from my observations of the unconscious processes. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 35



She [Miss Miller] took over my fantasy and became stage director to it, if one interprets the book subjectively. In other words, she became an anima figure, a carrier of an inferior function of which I was very little conscious.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 2

She [Miss Miller] took over my fantasy and became stage director to it, if one interprets the book subjectively. In other words, she became an anima figure, a carrier of an inferior function of which I was very little conscious. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 2

Carl Jung’s Letter to Father White (2019-11-22 04:36)

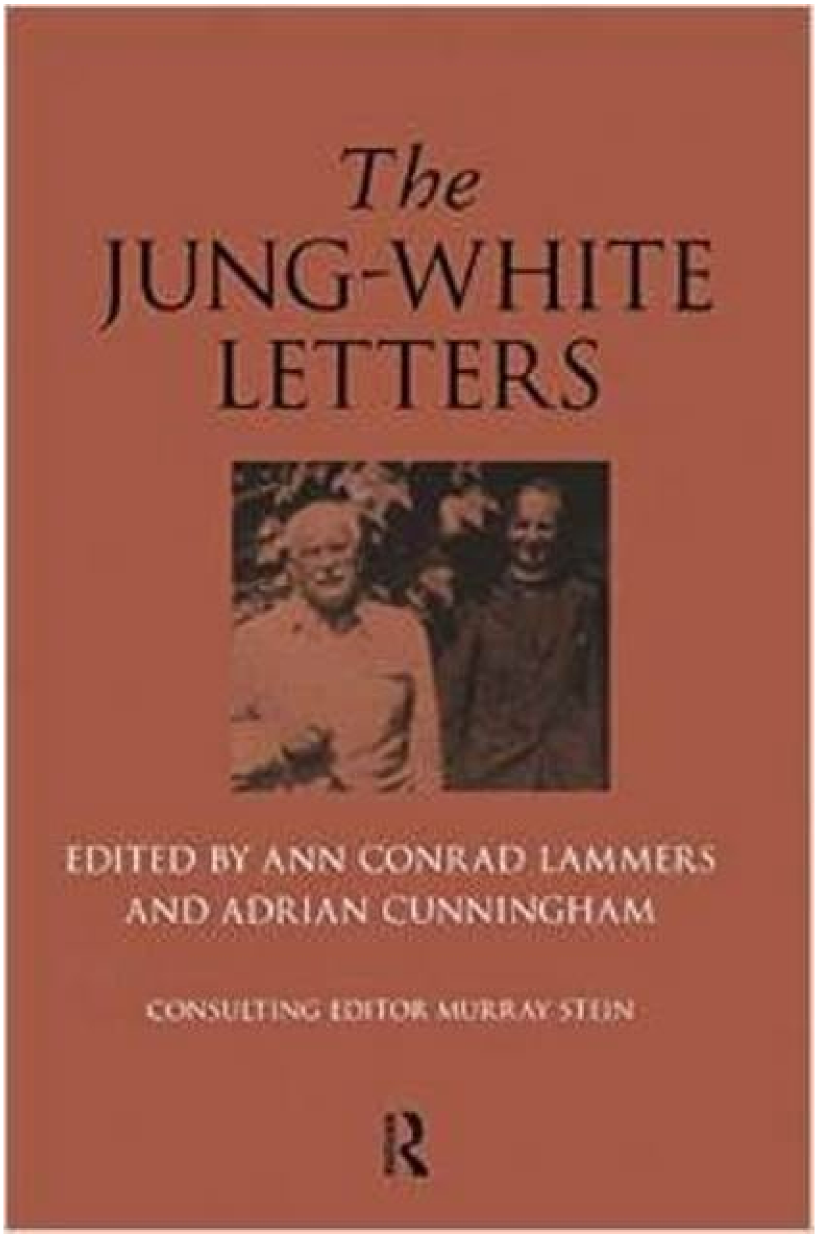
[1]



The JUNG-WHITE LETTERS
EDITED BY ANN CONRAD LAMMERS AND ADRIAN CUNNINGHAM
CONSULTING EDITOR MURRAY STEIN
R

[2]The Jung-White Letters

[Carl Jung’s Letter to Father White]

To Father Victor White

My dear Father White, 5 October 1945

In the meantime I have finished reading the pamphlets you kindly have sent to me.

My first reaction was: what a pity that you live in England and that I don’t have you at my elbow when I am blundering in the wide field of theological knowledge.

You must grant me attenuating circumstances though: besides all the other things I had to learn, I arrived only very late at the treasure-house of patristic wisdom, so late in fact that my limited powers didn’t suffice any more to acquire all that would be needed to elucidate and explain the perplexities of modern psychological experience.

Excuse the irreverential pun: you are to me a white raven inasmuch as you are the only theologian I know of who has really understood something of what the problem of psychology in our present world means.

You have seen its enormous implications.

I cannot tell you how glad I am that I know a man, a theologian, who is conscientious enough to weigh my opinions on the basis of a careful study of my writings!

My temperamental empiricism has its reasons.

I began my career with repudiating everything that smelt of belief.

That explains my critical attitude in my Psychology of the Unconscious.

You should know that this book was written by a psychiatrist for the purpose of submitting the necessary material to his psychiatric colleagues, material which would demonstrate to them the importance of religious symbolism .

My audience then was a thoroughly materialistic crowd/ and I would have defeated my own ends if I had set out with a definite creed or with definite metaphysical assertions.

I was not and I did not want to be anything else but one of them.

My principle was always not to seek the place where I might do something useful, but to do it where I actually was .

I was impressed with their utter lack of knowledge in matters of symbolism and I wanted to do my best to provide it for them.

Only too late I have discovered that it wasn't my colleagues at all but very different people who became interested in my work.

I have tried to accommodate myself to the psychiatric and medical mind, hardened and often made cynical through the relentless onslaught of brutal and cruel facts and the depravity of mankind.

Thus, when I said that God is a complex/ I meant to say: Whatever He is, He is at least a very tangible complex.

You can say, He is an illusion, but He is at least a psychological fact.

I surely never intended to say: He is nothing else but a complex.

Naturally when my book got into the hands of readers outside my psychiatric sphere they read it with very different eyes. Hence many mistakes!

My book was originally nothing but a reprint from a psychiatric periodical, which was supposed to be read by doctors chiefly.

Concerning my gnoseological standpoint at that time please see note 42, p. 307, Engl. edit. of Psychology of the Unconscious.

You have rendered justice to my empirical and practical standpoint throughout.

I consider this as a very meritorious act, since most of my philosophically or theologically minded readers overlook my empiricism completely.

I never allow myself to make statements about the divine entity, since that would be a transgression beyond the limit of science.

It would therefore be unfair to criticize my opinions as if they were a philosophical system .

My personal view in this matter is that man's vital energy or libido is the divine pneuma all right and it was this conviction which it was my secret purpose to bring into the vicinity of my colleagues' understanding.

When you want to talk to scientists you cannot start with a religious creed .

You have to show the facts and let them draw their own conclusions.

You also cannot say that man's goal is actually realized in God, you must again show facts demonstrating in what the goal is realized.

What you can show in this respect is the symbol of the self, a well-defined psychological phenomenon, which anybody may call God, but the scientists cannot prove it to be God.

As a scientist I must give a wide berth to anything dogmatic or metaphysical, since it is not the scientist's task to preach the Gospel.

But it is precisely what the theologian has to say, namely that the dogma is the hitherto most perfect answer to and formulation of the most relevant items in the objective psyche and that God has worked all these things in man’s soul.

The scientist however cannot prove such an assertion, he can only try his best in his limited sphere.

I sympathize fully with you when you say : "The task before us is gigantic indeed."

It is enormous and I marvel at the intellectual pachydermia of those who ought to know better and who didn’t take notice apparently, or worse-who try to get rid of the octopus by the most futile arguments.

I have frequent discussions with Catholic as well as Protestant theologians.

As a rule they are astonishingly innocent of actual psychological experience and often they seem to have forgotten the wisdom of the Fathers.

It is all very well to have it summarized most beautifully by St. Thomas Aquinas, but when it comes to the interpretation of man’s living soul you need actual knowledge.

It is far from me to depreciate concepts and formulas.

On the contrary I envy you and all those enjoying full possession of Scholastic philosophy and I would surely be among the first to welcome an explicit attempt to integrate the findings of psychology into the ecclesiastical doctrine.

I am sure I should draw the greatest benefit from it.

I am grateful for every hint you dropped in your papers .

I was for instance most interested in what you said about the problem of the Third Person.

I wish you would enlighten me about this subject a bit more.

Could you tell me about the sources where I can find more enlightenment?

You can perhaps imagine my feelings of inadequacy when I have to tackle such a problem at short notice.

It is usually so, that I keep quiet for years about such intricate matters as for instance the Trinity.

But all of a sudden the subject comes up in a discussion or in a lecture and somebody deals with it in a really inadequate way, then I feel somebody ought to say something more to the point and I am launched utterly unprepared, only supported by my experience with practically nothing on the other, the theological side. There I would need some solid theological help.

I realize that it can come only from the Catholic side, as the sola fide standpoint8 of the Protestant has lost the tradition of the doctrine too much to be useful in disentangling the knots in the empirical material.

This collaboration has been realized to a certain extent as I enjoy the most valuable help of Prof. Hugo Rahner, S.J., at Innsbruck University.

He is an authority on the Hermeneutics, science of interpretation, more especially of the Bible.of the Fathers.

But I see him only rarely and it is most difficult to find out how far his psychological understanding reaches.

I think he is too careful.

Do you know the Eranos-Jahrbiicher?

Do you read German?

There is stuff for you.

If you read German I should like to send you my book Psychology and Alchemy, much better than the badly translated Integration of the Personality which was forced out of my hands by the thrift and "pep" of an American publisher.

There will be an English edition of Psychology and Alchemy within the next year.

I owe you special thanks for kindly remembering my seventieth birthday.

The Eranos circle has dedicated to me a Festschrift in which you will find a brilliant paper by Rahner about Moly and Mandragora and an equally remarkable essay by Layard on the subject of primitive marriage-classes and the virgin archetype.

You accuse me of repudiating the divine transcendence altogether.

This is not quite correct.

I merely omit it, since I am unable to prove it.

I don’t preach, I try to establish psychological facts.

I can confirm and prove the interrelation of the God-image with other parts of the psyche, but I cannot go further without committing the error of a metaphysical assertion, which is far beyond my scope.

I am not a theologian and I have nothing to say about the nature of God.

There is no place for subjective confessions in science.

Whatever I say about "God" is said about the image expressis verbis.

And the image is relative, as you yourself have stated.

It is again a matter of to-whom-you talk.

My public does not consist of theologians but of utterly worldly, educated people of our day.

When you talk of God, they do not know of what you talk, since such ideas have been dismissed long ago as nebulous fantasies.

I show facts to them and not metaphysical assertions which they cannot grasp.

If I were talking to peasants I certainly would talk about God, since I know that they know of what I am talking.

It is of the highest importance that the educated and "enlightened" public should know religious truth as a thing living in the human soul and not as an abstruse and unreasonable relic of the past.

People must be taught to see where they come in, otherwise you never bridge the gulf between the educated mind and the world of dogmatic ideas, which they comprehend nowhere and which moreover offend their reason.

If the Reformers for instance had ever understood what the Holy Mass is or what the rites in general stands for, they would certainly not have abandoned it.

The appalling lack of understanding threatens the Christian religion with complete oblivion.

You cannot preach to a man who does not understand the language.

To shout and to repeat makes no sense.

But you feel as I do, that the theologian ought to learn a new language.

What if St. Paul had talked on the ayopa as if he were in a synagogue?

Understanding begins with the individual mind and this means psychology.

It is a gigantic task indeed to create a new approach to an old truth.

More than once I have put the question to my theological friends: what about new wine in old skins?

The old way of interpreting has itself to be interpreted, this time with the help of science.

This method can reach the modern mind as I have seen in many cases.

I do not combat the Christian truth, I am only arguing with the modern mind.

We have known for long and sufficiently well how things ought to be, but we do not know how to bring them about.

This is my main concern.

People. are not to be lured any more by the promises of Heaven and Hell, they want to understand.

I cannot "tell" my patient, I have to seek him and I must learn his language and think his thoughts, until he knows that I understand him correctly.

Then only is he ready to understand me and at the same time the strange language of the unconscious, that tells him of eternal truths, and incidentally he will discover that he has heard similar things before.

That’s the practical way. But to get there you have to avoid "suggestions."

Well-a long letter! Not my style at all.

"It" has made an exception in your case, my dear Father, because "it" has appreciated your conscientious and far-sighted work.

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 383-387.

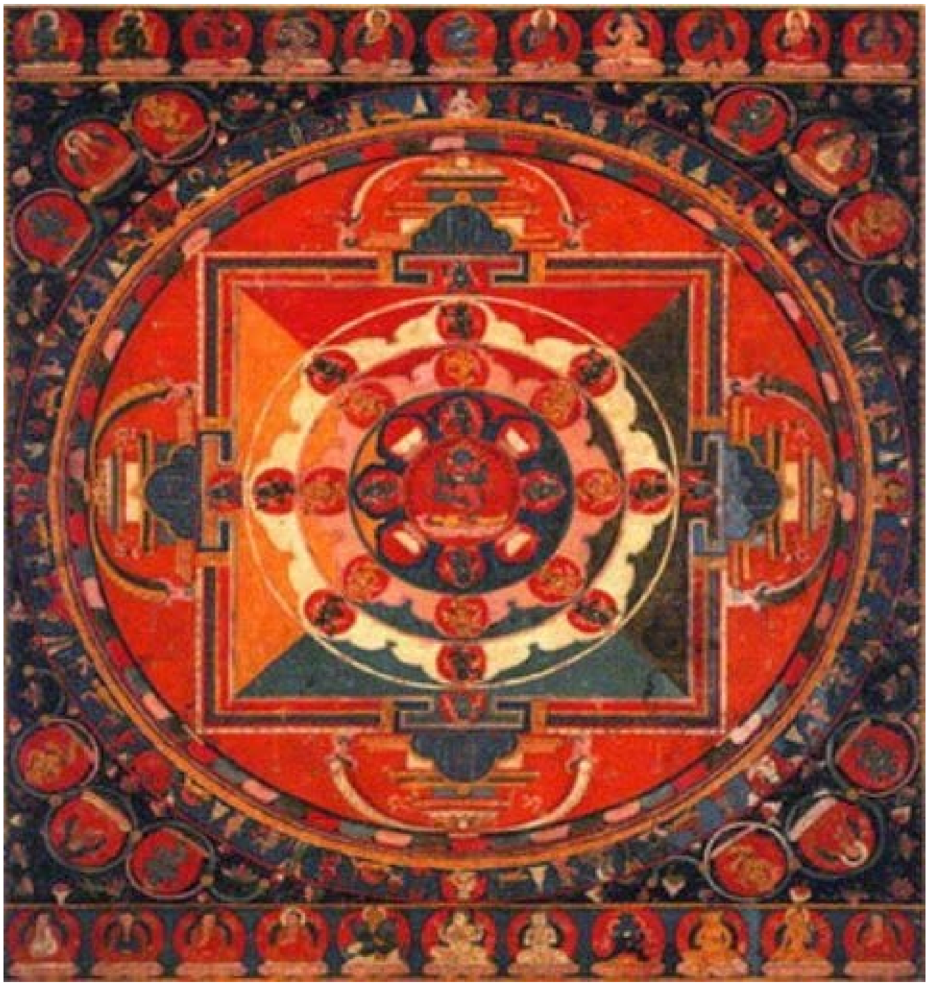
The Jung-White Letters by Ann Conrad Lammers http://www.amazon.com/dp/1583911944/ref=cm _sw _r _pi _dp _2znCub0N3AM5W

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/1c1ea-letters.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Jung-White-Letters-Ann-Conrad-Lammers/dp/1583911944/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+white+letters&qid=1574417740&sr=8-1`

On the Nature of Four: Jung’s Quarternity, Mandalas, the Stone and the Self (2019-11-22 04:58)

[1]



[2]The Practice of Psychotherapy: Essays on the Psychology of the Transference and Other Subjects

On the Nature of Four: Jung’s Quarternity, Mandalas, the Stone and the Self

The "squaring of the circle" is one of the many archetypal motifs which form the basic patterns of our dreams and fantasies. But it is distinguished by the fact that it is one of the most important of them from the functional point of view. Indeed, it could even be called the archetype of wholeness.
- from Mandalas. C. G. Jung. trans. from Du (Zurich, 1955)

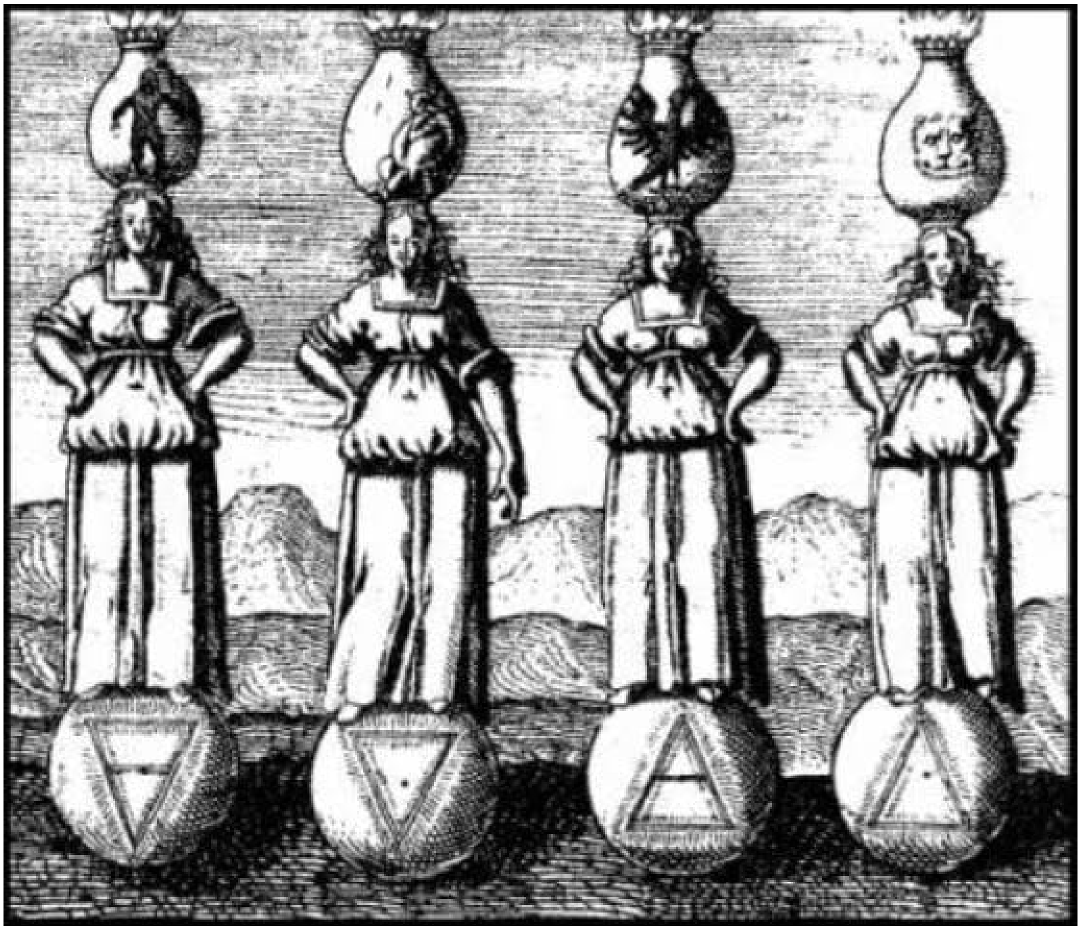
During a difficult period in his life in which he withdrew from his teaching position and devoted much of his time investigating the nature of the unconscious, Jung frequently painted or drew mandalas, but only learned to understand the mandala symbology many years after he had begun creating the images.

He understood only that he felt compelled to make the figures and that they comforted him, “Only gradually did I discover what the mandala really is: “Formation, Transformation, Eternal Mind’s eternal recreation”. And that is the self, the wholeness of the personality, which if all goes well is harmonious, but which cannot tolerate self-deceptions” (MDR 195-196). Mandalas are defined by Jung as magic circles, containing certain design motifs that he found to have a universal nature, across cultures and across time, whether they are the transiently created mandalas from Tibet, sand paintings from the American southwest, or illustrations from ancient, medieval, and Renaissance alchemical works.

Jung believes that his mandalas were “cryptograms” of the state of the self as it was on the day the mandala was created. Each mandala that he spontaneously created was different from their predecessors and the paintings were precious to him, he “guarded them like pearls” (MDR 196). He also believes that mandalas appear in connection with dreams, chaotic psychic states of disorientation or panic (CW 9i 645) as they did in Jung’s own life, and that a function of the mandalas is to bring order out of chaos. Edinger agrees, “Quaternity, mandala images emerge in times of psychic turmoil and convey a sense of stability and rest. The image of the fourfold nature of the psyche provides stabilizing orientation. It gives one a glimpse of static eternity.” (Edinger 182). Jung eventually came to believe that the mandala itself is an image of “squaring the circle” and as such could be called an archetype of wholeness (CW 9i 715).

Jung’s continuing practice of drawing and painting mandalas eventually leads him to understand them as symbols of the Self, that they are informed by archetypal forces in the unconscious that the artist is not aware of during the creation of the work.

Working with mandalas, Jung eventually realizes that like the designs he was drawing, his own life had been a series of meandering paths that bent back upon each other and yet always led back to the center. The mandala symbolically represents that path to the center, to individuation (MDR 196). Jung’s later practice of having his patients to spontaneously create mandalas is a prime example of Jung’s own explorations into the unconscious becoming effective tools in his psychiatric practice. In “Concerning Mandala Symbolism” several mandalas painted by some of Jung’s patients are reproduced and his commentary on each shows the universality of the symbolism across the patients’ cultural differences. He doesn’t go into the clinical details of the patients’ therapy but notes that “a rearranging of the personality is involved, a kind of new centering” over time as the mandala-creating process continued. (CW 9i 645). Jung’s reasoning for the similarity in mandala symbols created by his patients is that these symbols and images come from the collective unconscious and are therefore archetypes, or primordial images, which reside in each of us (CW 9i 711).



Jung also found that mandalas created by individuals often contain motifs related to the number four, which he terms a “quaternity”. The symbol might be “in the form of a cross, a star, a square, an octagon, etc. A form of this symbol is frequently found in alchemical texts as the “squaring the circle” or quadratura circuli (CW 9i 713). Jung thought that “squaring the circle” was a “problem that greatly exercised medieval minds” and this was also a “symbol of the opus alchymicum because it breaks down the original chaotic unity into the four elements and then combines them again in a higher unity” (CW 12 165). However, Jung is not the first to write about the symbolism of the quaternity as Ellenberger reports:

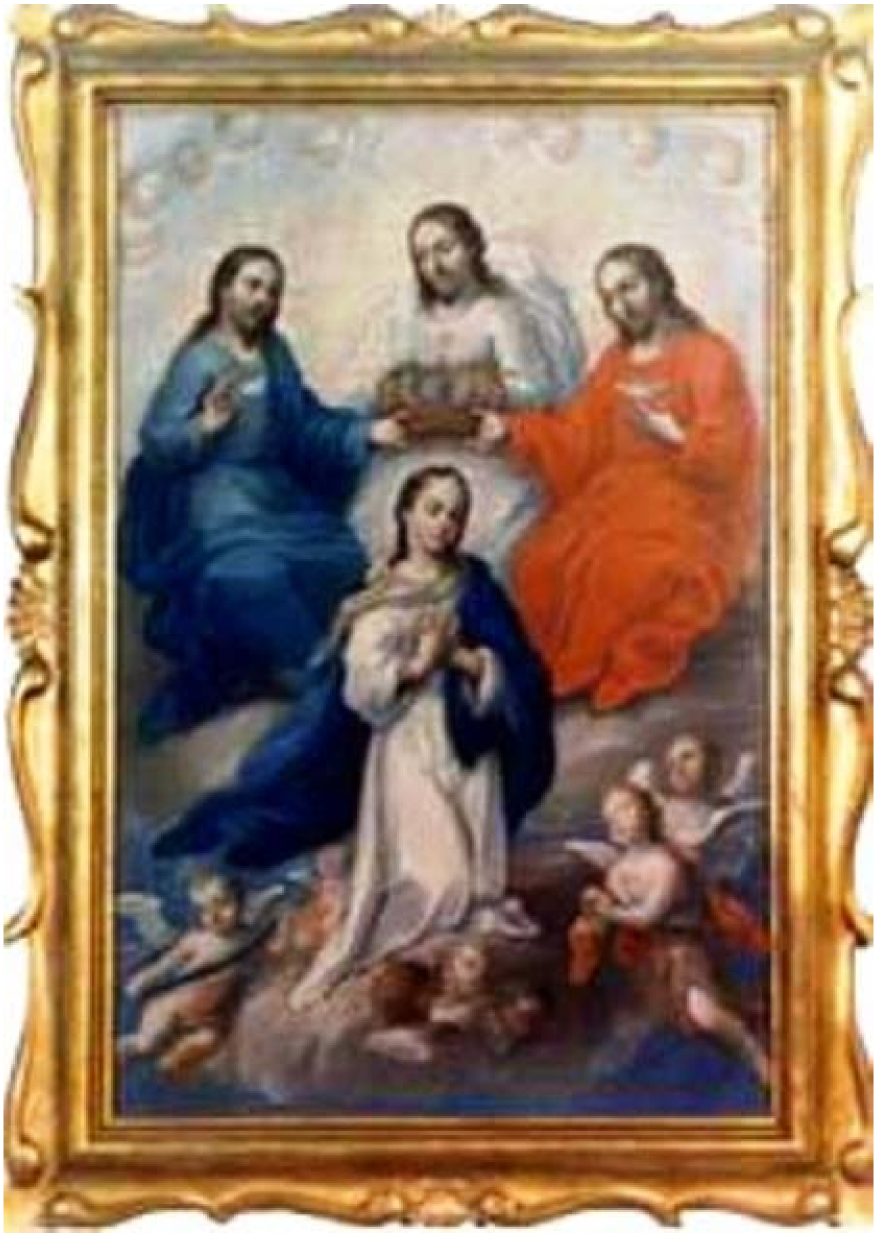
“In France Fabre d’Olivet had previously written about the same subject in the nineteenth century. However, Jung was certainly the first to relate it so closely to the process of individuation. The mandala is a circular figure ornamented with symbols that is generally divided into four sections. It is well known in India and Tibet, where it was used for centuries by ascetics and mystics to aid in contemplation” (712).

The fourfold symmetry of the quaternity eventually led Jung to study alchemical works and in these he found many examples, such the four main steps in the alchemical process: nigredo (black), albedo (white), citrinalis (yellow), and rubedo (red) (Henderson and Sherwood 5). Alchemical processes have fourfold properties such as hot, cold, wet, and dry while all materials are said to be combinations of the four elements: earth, air, fire, and water. He found that even the alchemical Philosopher’s Stone had a four-fold nature, “The lapis is called a “sacred rock” and is described as having four parts (CW 9ii 143). Elias Ashmole, in his Theatricum Chemicum Britannicum, an 18th century collection of English alchemical texts, he even describes four different Philosopher’s Stones: Mineral, Vegetable, Magical, and Angelical, each with a different functionality (Edinger 264).

We find a wide spectrum of four-fold symbols and systems in religion, myth, history and culture. There are four winds (Boreas, Eurus, Notus, Zephyrus), four seasons (winter, spring, summer, fall), four directions (north, east, south, west), four Evangelists (Matthew, Mark, Luke, John), four letters in the sacred name of God (YHVH), four ancient ages (gold, silver, bronze, iron), and four medieval humours: sanguine (blood), choleric (yellow bile), phlegmatic (phlegm), melancholic (black bile)to name a few.

Adding a fourth to an already established thee has a transformational effect. In geometry, a fourth point transforms the two-dimensional triad or triangle into a figure with depth, the cube and the tetrahedron (a form lapis). As the mathematician Michael Schneider observes, "There are always four ways (another quaternity) to look at any three-dimensional structure: as points, lines, areas, and volumes, or as corners, edges, faces, and from the center outward (63). Ellenberger notes that "The quaternity can appear as a geometric figure of square or sometimes rectangular shape, or it will have some relation wit the number four: four persons, four trees, and so on. Often it is a matter of completing a triadic figure with a fourth term, thus making it into a quaternity" (712). Jung searches for the quaternity when a trinity is encountered, "Jung over and over again in his writings returns to the alchemical question: "Three are here but where is the fourth?" (Edinger 189). The completion of the quaternity is seen frequently in alchemical works, even whimsically, "All things do live in the three/ But in the four they merry be" (quoted in CW 12 125).

One Trinity that was completed in the last century, with the bodily assumption of the Virgin Mary into heaven (defined as dogma in 1950 by Pope Pius XII), transformed the Christian Trinity into a Quaternity, and one that Jung believes was achieved by the overwhelming insistence of the Catholic masses (CW 9ii, 142). "... the quaternity is the sine qua non of divine birth and consequently of the inner life of the trinity. Thus circle and quaternity on one side and the threefold rhythm on the other interpenetrate so that each is contained in the other" (CW 11 125). Jung believes that this was the most significant religious event since the reformation (quoted in EJ 321).



Another quaternity that Jung develops is that of the four psychic functions: sensing, thinking, feeling, and intuiting. “The essential function of sensation is to establish that something exists, thinking tells us what it means, feeling what its value is, and intuition surmises whence it comes and whither it goes. (CW 6 983). Sensation and intuition he terms irrational types with thinking and feeling are rational types. Jung diagrams the four functions in a basic symbol of the quaternity, as a cross with the irrational functions at right angles with the ration functions. Along with what he terms the two general attitudes, extroversion and introversion, Jung feels that these now eight types provide a useful framework for these psychological concepts (CW 6 987). Jung’s suggestion that his psychological typology could be compared with a trigonomic net or a crystallographic axial system suggests the lapis, or Philosopher’s Stone once again circling back to alchemical concepts (CW 6 987).

During the years that Jung spends drawing and painting mandalas, he comes to understand that “the goal of psychic development is the self. There is no linear evolution; there is only a circumambulation of the self” (MDR 196). If there is one concept about the development of the self, of individuation that is important for those of us in the 21st century caught in a Cartesian-Newtonian notion of reality is that "there is no linear evolution" for this process; that the process is one of circling, rotating, orbiting, circumambulating around the center – we must square the circle. We must create our own mandalas and go where they lead us. As much as we might wish for a clearly delineated way, here is no straight line to follow:

"From the circle and quaternity motif is derived the symbol of the geometrically formed crystal and the wonder-working stone. From here analogy formation leads on to the city, castle, church, house, and vessel. Another variant is the wheel (rota). The former motif emphasizes the ego's containment in the greater dimension of the self; the latter emphasizes the rotation which also appears as a ritual circumambulation. Psychologically, it denotes concentration on and preoccupation with a centre. (CW 9ii 352).

The circumambulation Jung describes, the process of "squaring the circle" or "circling the square" has an uncertainty built into the journey: do we ever achieve individuation or is it a goal that is ever just out of reach? It is important to take the path that the mandala represents, to revolve around the center, to rotate near and around the center, and hopefully, move towards the self.. As Jung remarks "... the self is our life's goal, for it is the completest expression of that fateful combination we call individuality..." (CW 7 404).

[5]Source of Article here

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/f79d3-1.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Practice-Psychotherapy-Psychology-Transference-Bollingen/dp/0691018707/ref=sr_1_fkmr0_1?keywords=jung+cw+7&qid=1574417850&sr=8-1-fkmr0`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/46cd5-2.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/adaaf-3.jpg`
5. `http://www.the16types.info/vbulletin/content.php/228-On-the-Nature-of-Four-Jung%E2%80%99s-Quarternity-Mandalas-the-Stone-and-the-Self`

A Dream Carl Jung had as a young man. (2019-11-22 05:07)

[1]

[2]Memories, Dreams, Reflections

[A Dream Carl Jung had as a young man.]

About this time I had a dream which both frightened and encouraged me. It was night in some unknown place, and I was making slow and painful headway against a mighty wind.

Dense fog was flying along everywhere.

I had ray hands cupped around a tiny light which threatened to go out at any moment.

Everything depended on my keeping this little light alive.

Suddenly I had the feeling that something was coming up behind me. I looked back, and saw a gigantic black figure following me.

But at the same moment I was conscious, in spite of my terror, that I must keep my little light going through night and wind, regardless of all dangers.

When I awoke I realized at once that the figure was a "specter of the Brocken," my own shadow on the swirling mists, brought into being by the little light I was carrying.

I blew, too, that this little light was my consciousness, the only light I have.

My own understanding is the sole treasure I possess, and the greatest.

Though infinitely small and fragile in comparison with the powers of darkness, it is still a light, my only light. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 87.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/10/a3237-fog.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Memories-Dreams-Reflections-Publisher-Vintage/dp/B004X19L3E/ref=sr_1_2?crid=387NGJQ52INHI&keywords=jung+memories+dreams+reflections&qid=1`

Carl Jung on “Kierkegaard.” (2019-11-22 05:08)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

[Carl Jung on “Kierkegaard.”]

To Arnold Kiinzli

Dear Herr Kiinzli 16 March 1943

That Kierkegaard was a stimulating and pioneering force precisely because of his neurosis is not surprising since he started out with a conception of God that had a peculiar Protestant bias which he shares with a great many Protestants

To such people his problems and his grizzling are entirely acceptable because to them it serves the same purpose as it served him you can then settle everything in the study and need not do it in life.

Out there things are apt to get unpleasant.

I am to be sure a doctor but even more than that I am concerned with the saving good of man for I am also a psychiatrist I would have said to Kierkegaard straight off It does not matter what you say but what it says in you to it you must address your answers.

God is straightway with you and is the voice within you

You have to have it out with that voice Whatever stuffing Kierkegaard had in him would then have been plain to see.

A changed man certainly but a whole one not a jangling hither and thither of displeasing fragmentary souls

True creative genius does not let itself be spoilt by analysis but is freed from the impediments and distortions of a neurosis.

Neurosis does not produce art. It is uncreative and inimical to life. It is failure and bungling.

But the moderns mistake morbidity for creative birth—part of the general lunacy of our time.

It is, of course, an unanswerable question what an artist would have created if he had not been neurotic.

Nietzsche's syphilitic infection undoubtedly exerted a strongly neuroticizing influence on his life.

But one could imagine a sound Nietzsche possessed of creative power without hypertension—something like Goethe.

He would have written much the same as he did, but less strident, less shrill—i.e., less German—more restrained, more responsible, more reasonable and reverent.

Jacob Burckhardt might have been a friend to him.

Neurosis is a justified doubt in oneself and continually poses the ultimate question of trust in man and in God.

Doubt is creative if it is answered by deeds, and so is neurosis if it exonerates itself as having been a phase—a crisis which is pathological only when chronic.

Neurosis is a protracted crisis degenerated into a habit, the daily catastrophe ready for use.

To the question whether anxiety is the subject or object of the philosophers, I can only answer: anxiety can never be the object unless it is, or was, first the subject. In other words, anxiety, as affect, always has us, wherefore we say—lucus a non lucendo and euphemistically!—" I have anxiety."

The philosopher starts from the anxiety that possesses him and then, through reflection, turns his subjective state of being possessed into a perception of anxiety.

Question: is it an object worthy of anxiety, or a poltroonery of the ego, shitting its pants? (Compare Freud, "The ego is the seat of anxiety," with Job 28:28, "The fear of the Lord, that is wisdom.")

What is the "anxiety of the ego," this "modestly modest" over-weeningness and presumption of a little tin god, compared with the almighty shadow of the Lord, which is the fear that fills heaven and earth?

The first leads to apotropaic defensive philosophy, the second to “knowledge of God”.

Would you have the time and inclination to review Walter Ehrlich’s Der Mensch and die numinosen Regionen (Chur, 1943)?

A philosopher who leaves the sham science r of psychology far below him and with godlike nimbleness bestrides the rainbow bridge of hypostases without being seized with vertigo.

We empirical worms stare up at the heights gawping

I can send you the book if you would care to do it

The review would be for the new Zeitschrift fur Psychologie not more than 3-4 typewritten pages preferably less With best regards

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol 1, Pages 332-334.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/27715-soren.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_2?crid=3BU7Q3SZVBV4R&keywords=jung+letters&qid=1574414736&sprefix=jung+lett%2Caps%2`

The Chaotic Currents of Life (2019-11-22 05:24)

[1]

[2]Jung: A Biography by Gerhard Wehr

Nobody, as long as he moves about among the chaotic currents of life, is without trouble .... I am on my road and I carry my burden just as well as I can do .... There is no difficulty in my life that is not entirely myself. Nobody shall carry me as long as I can walk on my own feet. Carl Jung, Jung by Gerhard Wehr, Page 8

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/11/8b026-life.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Jung-Biography-Gerhard-Wehr/dp/0877734550/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=Jung+by+Gerhard+Wehr&qid=1574437517&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung Letter to Claire Kaufmann (2019-11-22 05:33)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Claire Kaufmann

Dear Fraulein Kaufmann, 12 March 1934

I have nothing against your wish to write me letters "that reach him," on the contrary I must say that I am interested in what you thin.

Though I don’t know who you are and your name conveys nothing to me, your philosophical discussion is none the less interesting for that.

So if you don’t expect me to give detailed answers everything is in order.

It is serenely feminine of you to define a man as a philosopher "if his life is realized in the concept.”

We know very well that a man’s ambition is for his concepts to be realized in life, whereas it is the most secret longing of all women for their lives to be realized in concepts.

This is not a fundamental criticism, only a friendly hint at the very natural fact that a man wants to understand, whereas a woman wants to be understood.

For this purpose she tries to make her life understandable to herself.

With best regards,

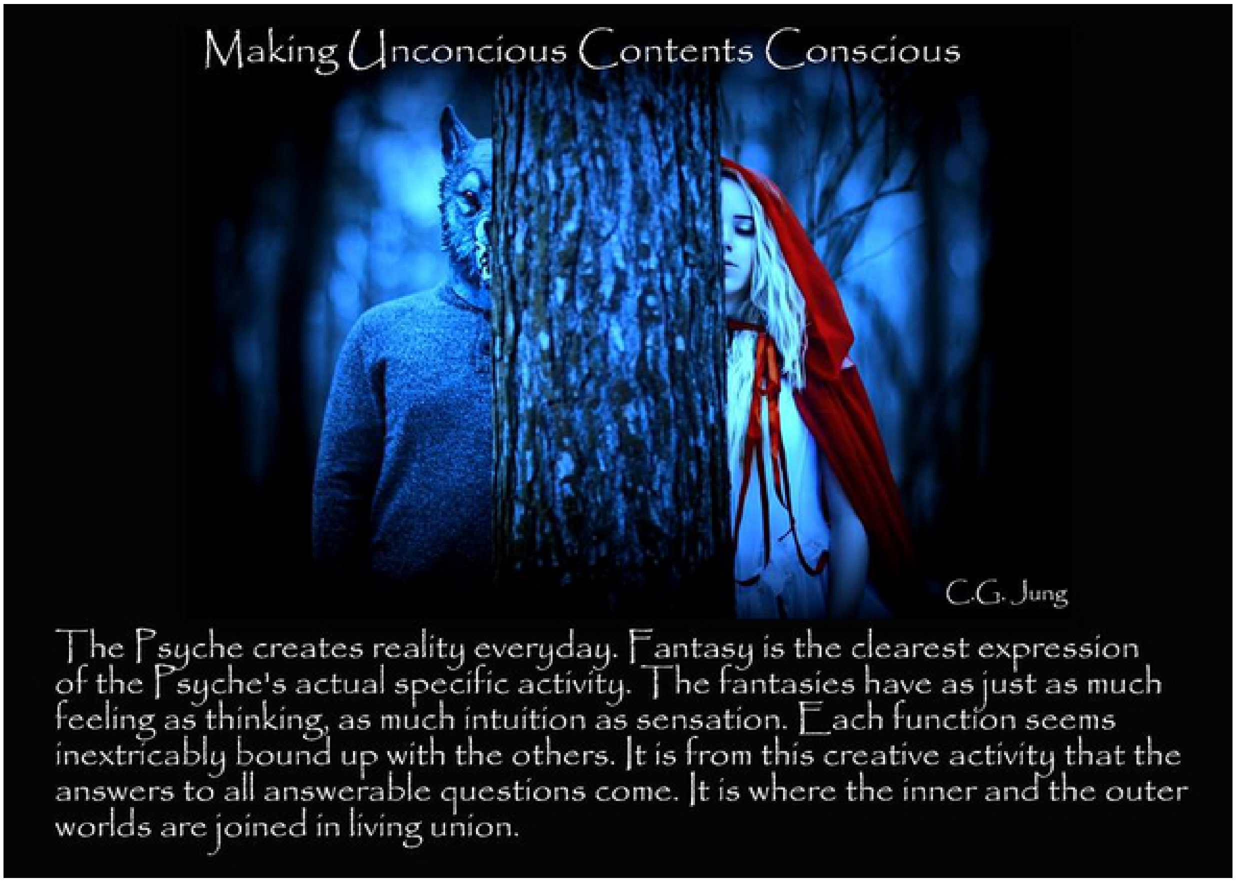
Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 151

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/d75d5-fem.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574437282&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: Primitives show a much more balanced psychology… (2019-11-22 05:59)

[1]



Making Unconcious Contents Conscious

C.G. Jung

The Psyche creates reality everyday. Fantasy is the clearest expression of the Psyche's actual specific activity. The fantasies have as just as much feeling as thinking, as much intuition as sensation. Each function seems inextricably bound up with the others. It is from this creative activity that the answers to all answerable questions come. It is where the inner and the outer worlds are joined in living union.

[2]Introduction to Jungian Psychology: Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925

One can follow this same principle of balance in any separate units holding a compensatory relation to one another—for example, in the relation of men and women to each other.

There is no man who could not exist without a woman—that is, he carries the necessary balance within himself if he be obliged to live his life that way, and the same thing applies to a woman with respect to a man, but if either sex is to have a complete life, it requires the other as a compensatory side.

It is the same thing with the conscious and the unconscious, and we seek analysis just to get at the benefits of the compensation from the unconscious.

Primitives show a much more balanced psychology than we do for the reason that they have no objection to letting the irrational come through, while we resent it.

Sometimes a patient becomes greatly outraged at the mere possibility of a dream or a fantasy having a sexual content, though to be sure, today it has become fashionable to recognize sexuality.

But let a dream show a moral criticism about the individual—let it say there is something unclean and ugly about you—and there is the same violent reaction that used to come with a sexual dream. Carl Jung, 1929 Seminar,

Page 114.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/d8cc2-1psyche.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+1925+seminar&qid=1574437140&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung on overcoming Suffering in India and the West. (2019-11-23 03:32)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

Walther Uhsadel (cf. Ubsadel, 4 Aug. 36), in his book Evangells. che Seelsorgc (1966), p.121, reports a conversation he had with Jung in 1938 at his house in Kiisnacht.

Jung, pointing to a copy of one of the glass windows in the monastery at Konigsfeldeo, Aargau, Switzerland, representing the Crucifixion, said:

"You see, this is the crux for us."

When I asked him why, he replied:

"I've just got back from India and it has struck me with renewed force.

Man has to cope with the problem of suffering.

The Oriental wants to get rid of suffering by casting it off.

Western man tries to suppress suffering with drugs.

But suffering has to be overcome, and the only way to overcome it is to endure it. We learn that only from him."

And here he pointed to the Crucified. Carl Jung, Letters, Volume 1, Page 236.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/00970-agony.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574499377&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: "... When I treat Catholics who are suffering from neurosis..." (2019-11-23 03:51)

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Jolande Jacobi 24 June 1935

... When I treat Catholics who arc suffering from neurosis I consider it my duty to lead them back to the bosom of the Church where they belong.

The ultimate decisions rest with the authority of the Church for anyone who is of the Catholic faith.

Psychology in this context therefore means only the removal of all those factors which hinder final submission to the authority of the Church.

Anyone who puts another "factor" above the authority of the Church is no longer a Catholic. . Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Page 191.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/867a2-catholic.jpg`

2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574499377&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung on the "Shadow." (2019-11-23 04:00)

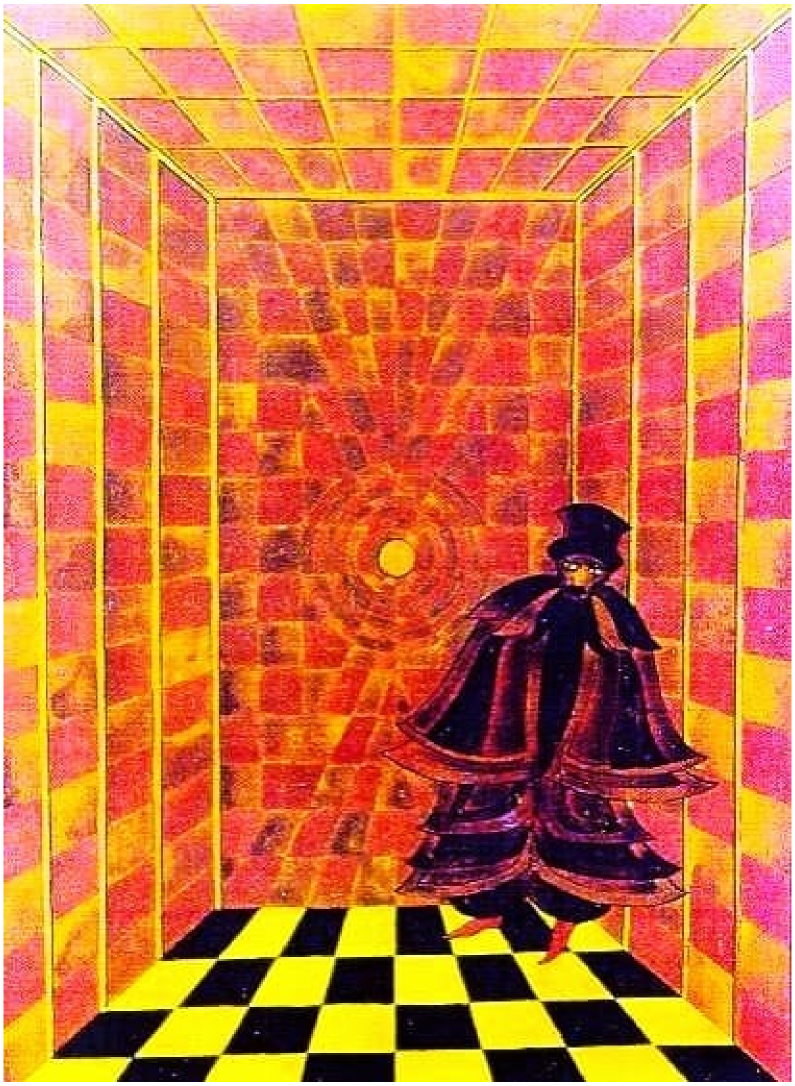
[1]



[2]The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche (Collected Works of C.G. Jung, Volume 8)

[Carl Jung on the "Shadow."]

II. The Shadow

Whereas the contents of the personal unconscious are acquired during the individual’s lifetime, the contents of the collective unconscious are invariably archetypes that were present from the beginning.

Their relation to the instincts has been discussed elsewhere.

The archetypes most clearly characterized from the empirical point of view are those which have the most frequent and the most disturbing influence on the ego.

These are the shadow, the anima and the animus.

The most accessible of these, and the easiest to experience, is the shadow, for its nature can in large measure be inferred from the contents of the personal unconscious.

The only exceptions to this rule are those rather rare cases where the positive qualities of the personality are repressed, and the ego in consequence plays an essentially negative or unfavorable role.

The shadow is a moral problem that challenges the whole ego-personality, for no one can become conscious of the shadow without considerable moral effort.

To become conscious of it involves recognizing the dark aspects of the personality as present and real.

This act is the essential condition for any kind of self-knowledge, and it therefore, as a rule, meets with considerable resistance. Indeed, self-knowledge as a psychotherapeutic measure frequently requires much painstaking work extending over a long period.

Closer examination of the dark characteristics – that is, the inferiorities constituting the shadow – reveals that they have an emotional nature, a kind of autonomy, and accordingly an obsessive, or, better, possessive quality.

Emotion, incidentally, is not an activity of the individual but something that happens to him.

Affects occur usually where adaptation is weakest, and at the same time they reveal the reason for its weakness, namely a certain degree of inferiority and the existence of a lower level of personality.

On this lower level with its uncontrolled or scarcely controlled emotions one behaves more or less like a primitive, who is not only the passive victim of his affects, but also singularly incapable of moral judgment.

Although, with insight and good will, the shadow can to some extent be assimilated into the conscious personality, experience shows that there are certain features which offer the most obstinate resistance to oral control and prove almost impossible to influence.

These resistances are usually bound up with projections, which are not recognized as such, and their recognition if a moral achievement beyond the ordinary.

While some traits peculiar to the shadow can be recognized without too much difficulty as one’s own personal qualities, in this case both insight and good will are unavailing because the cause of the emotion appears to lie, beyond all possibility of doubt, in the other person.

No matter how obvious it may be to the neutral observer that it is a matter of projection, there is little hope that the subject will perceive this himself.

He must be convinced that he throws a very long shadow before he is willing to withdraw his emotionally-toned projections from their object.

Let us suppose that a certain individual shows no inclination whatever to recognize his projections.

The projection-making factor then has a free hand and can realize its object – if it has one – or bring about some other situation characteristic of its power.

As we know, it is not the conscious subject but the unconscious which does the projecting.

Hence one meets with projections, one does not make them.

The effect of projection is to isolate the subject from his environment, since instead of a real relation to it there is now only an illusory one.

Projections change the world into the replica of one's own unknown face.

In the last analysis, therefore, they lead to an autoerotic or autistic condition in which one dreams a world whose reality remains forever unattainable.

The resultant sentiment d'incompletude and the still worse feelings of sterility are in their turn explained by projection as the malevolence of the environment, and by means of this vicious circle the isolation is intensified.

The more projections are thrust in between the subject and the environment, the harder it is for the ego to see through its illusions.

A forty-five year old patient who had suffered from a compulsion neurosis since he was twenty and had become completely cut off from the world once said to me: "But I can never admit to myself that I've wasted the best twenty-five years of my life!"

It is often tragic to see how blatantly a man bungles his own life and the lives of others yet remains totally incapable of seeing how much the whole tragedy originates in himself, and how he continually feeds it and keeps it going. Not consciously, of course – for consciously he is engaged in bewailing and cursing a faithless world that recedes further and further into the distance.

Rather, it is an unconscious factor which spins the illusions that veil his world.

And what is being spun is a cocoon, which in the end will completely envelop him.

One might assume that projections like these, which are so very difficult if not impossible to dissolve, would belong to the realm of the shadow – that is, to the negative side of the personality.

This assumption becomes untenable after a certain point, because the symbols that then appear no longer refer to the same but to the opposite sex, in a man's case to a woman and vice versa.

The source of projections is no longer the shadow – which is always of the same sex as the subject – but a contrasexual figure.

Here we meet the animus of a woman and the anima of a man, two corresponding archetypes whose autonomy and unconsciousness explain the stubbornness of their projections.

Though the shadow is a motif as well known to mythology as anima and animus, it represents first and foremost the personal unconscious, and its content can therefore be made conscious without too much difficulty.

In this it differs from anima and animus, for whereas the shadow can be seen through and recognized fairly easily, the anima and animus are much further away from consciousness and in normal circumstances are seldom if ever realized.

With a little self-criticism, one can see through the shadow – so far as its nature is personal.

But when it appears as an archetype, one encounters the same difficulties as with anima and animus. In other words, it is quite the relative evil of his nature, but it is a rare and shattering experience for him to gaze into the face of absolute evil. The Structure of the Psyche by C.G. Jung

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/2f9d6-shadow.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Structure-Dynamics-Psyche-Collected-Works/dp/0691097747/ref=sr_1_fkmr0_1?keywords=jung+cw+8+structure+dynamics&qid=1574500128&sr=8-1-fkmr`

Carl Jung on “Meditation and Imagination.” (2019-11-23 04:09)

[1]

[2]Psychology and Alchemy (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.12)

Carl Jung on “Meditation and Imagination.”

The point of view described above is supported by the alchemist’s remarkable use of the terms meditatio and imaginatio.

Ruland’s Lexicon alchemiae defines meditatio as follows:

“The word meditatio is used when a man has an inner dialogue with someone unseen.

It may be with God, when He is invoked, or with himself, or with his good angel” (fig.137).

The psychologist is familiar with this “inner dialogue”; it is an essential part of the technique for coming to terms with the unconscious.

Ruland’s definition proves beyond all doubt that when the alchemists speak of meditari they do not mean mere cogitation, but explicitly an inner dialogue and hence a living relationship to the answering voice of the “other” in ourselves, i.e., of the unconscious.

The use of the term “meditation” in the Hermetic dictum “And as all things proceed from the One through the meditation of the One” must therefore be understood in this alchemical sense as a creative dialogue, by means of which things pass from an unconscious potential state to a manifest one.

Thus we read in a treatise of Philalethes:

“Above all it is marvelous that our stone, although already perfect and able to impart a perfect tincture, does voluntarily humble itself again and will meditate a new volatility, apart from all manipulation.”

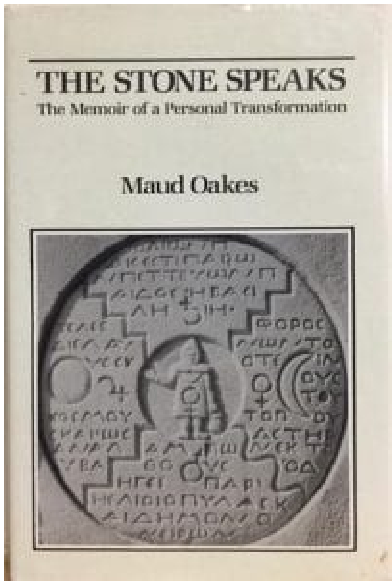
What is meant by a “meditated volatility” we discover a few lines lower down, where it says:

“Of its own accord it will liquefy . . .and by God’s command become endowed with spirit, which will fly up and take the stone with it.”

Again, therefore, to “meditate” means that through a dialogue with God yet more spirit will be infused into the stone, i.e., it will become still more spiritualized, volatilized, or sublimated (cf. fig. 178).

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/d2e9d-anima.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Alchemy-Collected-Works-Vol-12/dp/0691018316/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1FACUZFJMXVFN&keywords=jung+psychology+and+alchemy&qid=1574502529`

In America, especially, one blames me for my so-called mysticism. (2019-11-23 04:21)



[1]Letters of C. G. Jung: Volume 2, 1951-1961

Dear Miss Oakes, February 2, 1956

I have read your meditation about the stone with much interest.

Your method of reading its messages is adequate and in this case the only one yielding positive results.

You understand the stone as a statement about a more or less limitless world of thought-images. I quite agree with your view.

One can read the symbols like that.

When I hewed the stone I did not think, however.

I just brought into shape what I saw on its face.

Sometimes you express yourself (in the MS), as if my symbols and my text were sort of a confession of a belief.

Thus it looks as if I were moving in the vicinity of Theosophy.

In America, especially, one blames me for my so-called mysticism.

Since I don’t claim at all to be the happy proprietor of metaphysical truths, I should prefer that you attribute to my symbols the same tentativeness which characterizes your explanatory attempts.

You see, I have no religious or otherwise convictions about my symbols.

They can change tomorrow.

They are mere allusions, they hint at something, they stammer and often lose their way.

They try only to point in a certain direction, viz. to those dim horizons beyond which lies the secret of existence.

They are just no Gnosis, no metaphysical assertions.

They are partly even futile or dubious attempts at pronouncing the ineffable.

Their number therefore is infinite and the validity of each is to be doubted.

They are nothing but humble attempts to formulate, to define, to shape the inexpressible.

"Wo fass ich Dich, unendliche Natur?" (Faust) It is not a doctrine, but a mere expression of and a reaction to the experience of an ineffable mystery.

There is one point more I want to mention: the stone is not a product only of thought images, but just as much of feeling and local atmosphere i.e. of the specific ambiente of the place.

The stone belongs to its secluded place between the lake and hill where it expresses the beata solitudo and the genius loci the spell of the chosen and walled-in spot.

It could be nowhere else and cannot be thought of or properly understood without the secret web of threads that relate to its surroundings.

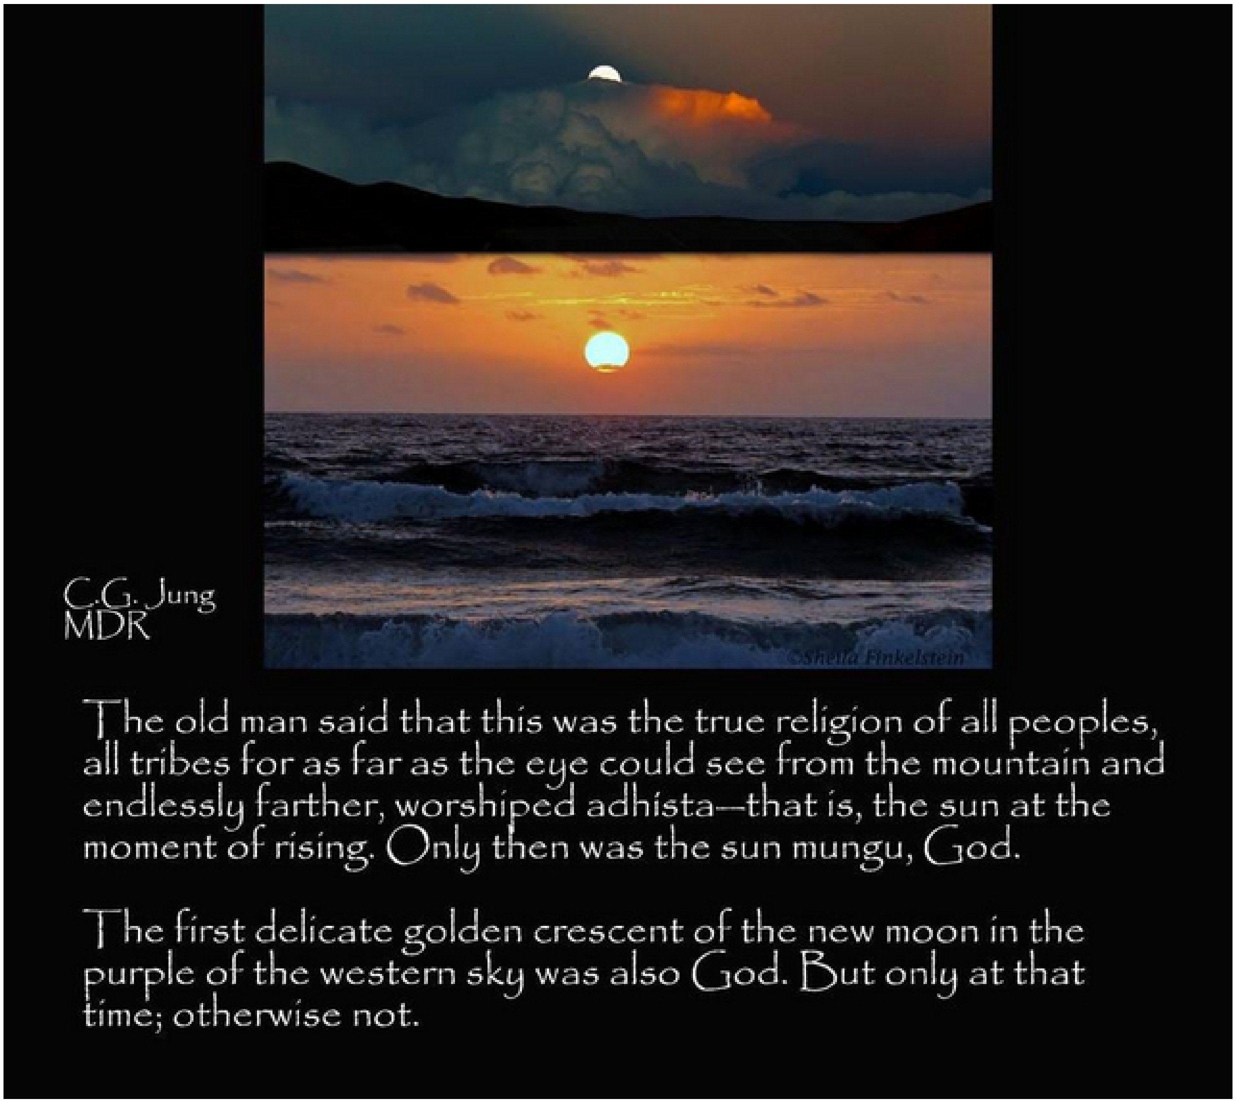
Only there in its solitude it can say: Orphanus sum and only there it makes sense. It is there for its own sake and only seen by a few.

Under such conditions only the stone will whisper its misty lore of ancient roots and ancestral lives.

Thank you for letting me see your typescript. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages, 18-19

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Letters-C-G-Jung-1951-1961/dp/0415051711/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2XL75CKNDT47X&keywords=jung+letters+volume+2&qid=1574502687&sprefix=jung+le%2Cap`

Carl Jung: Only then was the sun mungu, God. (2019-11-23 04:24)



C.G. Jung
MDR

©Sheila Finkelstein

The old man said that this was the true religion of all peoples, all tribes for as far as the eye could see from the mountain and endlessly farther, worshiped adhista—that is, the sun at the moment of rising. Only then was the sun mungu, God.

The first delicate golden crescent of the new moon in the purple of the western sky was also God. But only at that time; otherwise not.

[2]Memories, Dreams, Reflections

The old man said that this was the true religion of all peoples, that all Kevirondos, all Buganda, all tribes for as far as the eye could see from the mountain and endlessly farther, worshiped adhista that is, the sun at the moment of rising.

Only then was the sun mungu, God.

The first delicate golden crescent of the new moon in the purple of the western sky was also God.

But only at that time; otherwise not.

Evidently, the meaning of the Elgonyi ceremony was that an offering was being made to the sun divinity at the moment of its rising.

If the gift was spittle, it was the substance which in the view of primitives contains the personal mana, the power of healing, magic, and life.

If it was breath, then it was roho Arabic, ruch, Hebrew, ruach, Greek, pneuma wind and spirit.

The act was therefore saying: I offer to God my living soul.

It was a wordless, acted-out prayer which might equally well be rendered: "Lord, into thy hands I commend my spirit."

Besides adhista the Elgonyi we were further informed also venerate ayik, the spirit who dwells in the earth and is a sheitan (devil).

He is the creator of fear, a cold wind who lies in wait for the nocturnal traveler.

The old man whistled a kind of Loki motif to convey vividly how the ayik creeps through the tall, mysterious grass of the bush. Carl Jung, MDR, Page 267.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/6ed51-1mungu.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Ukemi-Audiobooks-Memories-Dreams-Reflections/dp/B01BW37JXE/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3MG9VDIJK3CIT&keywords=jung+memories+dreams+reflections&qid=15`

The mandala itself is just a sort of hieroglyph, ... (2019-11-23 04:27)

[1]Letters of C. G. Jung: Volume 2, 1951-1961

Dear Miss Oakes, January 31, 1956

As you can imagine, I am quite astonished to hear about your project although I am fully aware of the fact that an imaginative person could easily write not one but several volumes about my stone.

All the volumes I had written are "in nuce" contained in it.

The mandala itself is just a sort of hieroglyph, hinting at and trying to express a vast background in a most abbreviated form.

Your method to realize its contents through your subjective experience is unexceptionable, as a matter of fact the only correct way of reading its message.

That is just the virtue of symbolic expression that it can be read in many different ways by many different individuals.

And if they are honest, the reading will be correct.

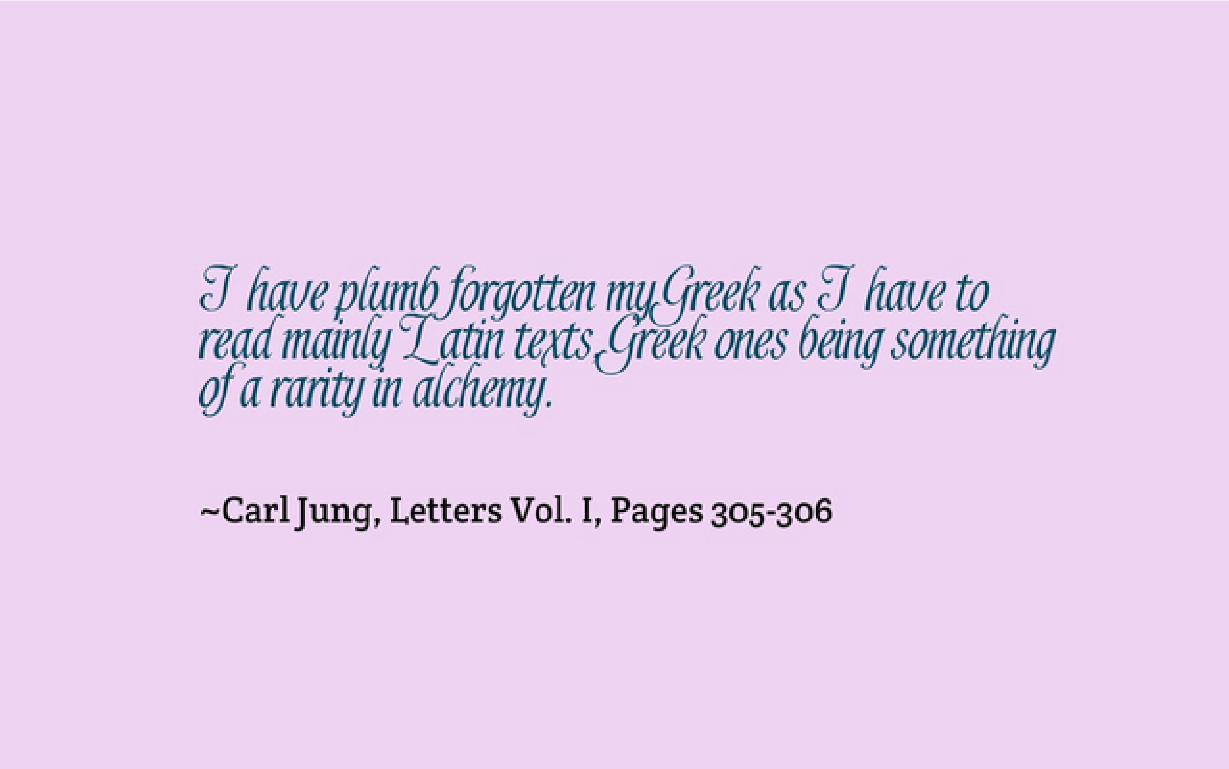
Thus, as you see, I am prepared for the shock to get the MS about a thing most emphatically belonging to my innermost self.

I only ask you to be patient with the slow ways of old age-Deo concedente you will get an answer.-Inshallah! [If God Wills It.] Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 17-18

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Letters-C-G-Jung-1951-1961/dp/0415051711/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2XL75CKNDT47X&keywords=jung+letters+volume+2&qid=1574502687&sprefix=jung+le%2Cap`

Some Carl Jung Quotation LIII (2019-11-23 04:30)

[1]

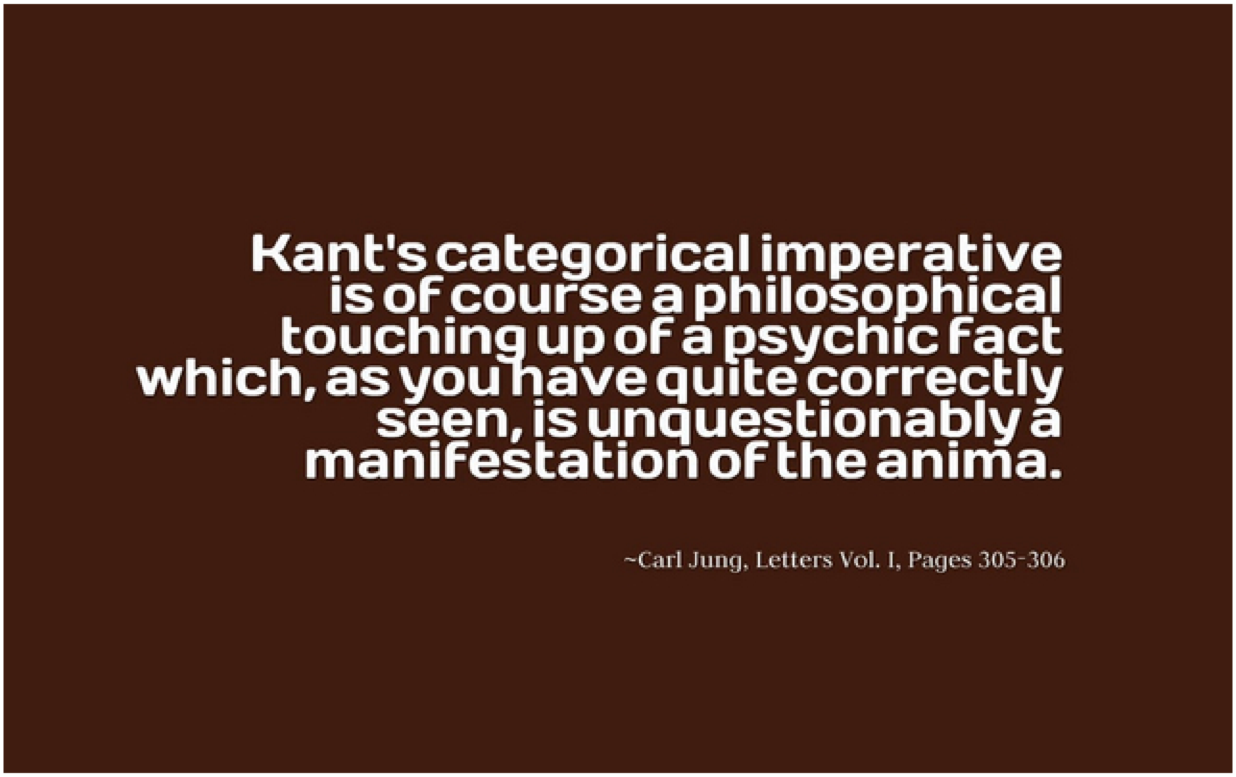


I have plumb forgotten my Greek as I have to read mainly Latin texts Greek ones being something of a rarity in alchemy.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 305-306

I have plumb forgotten my Greek as I have to read mainly Latin texts, Greek ones being something of a rarity in alchemy. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 305-306

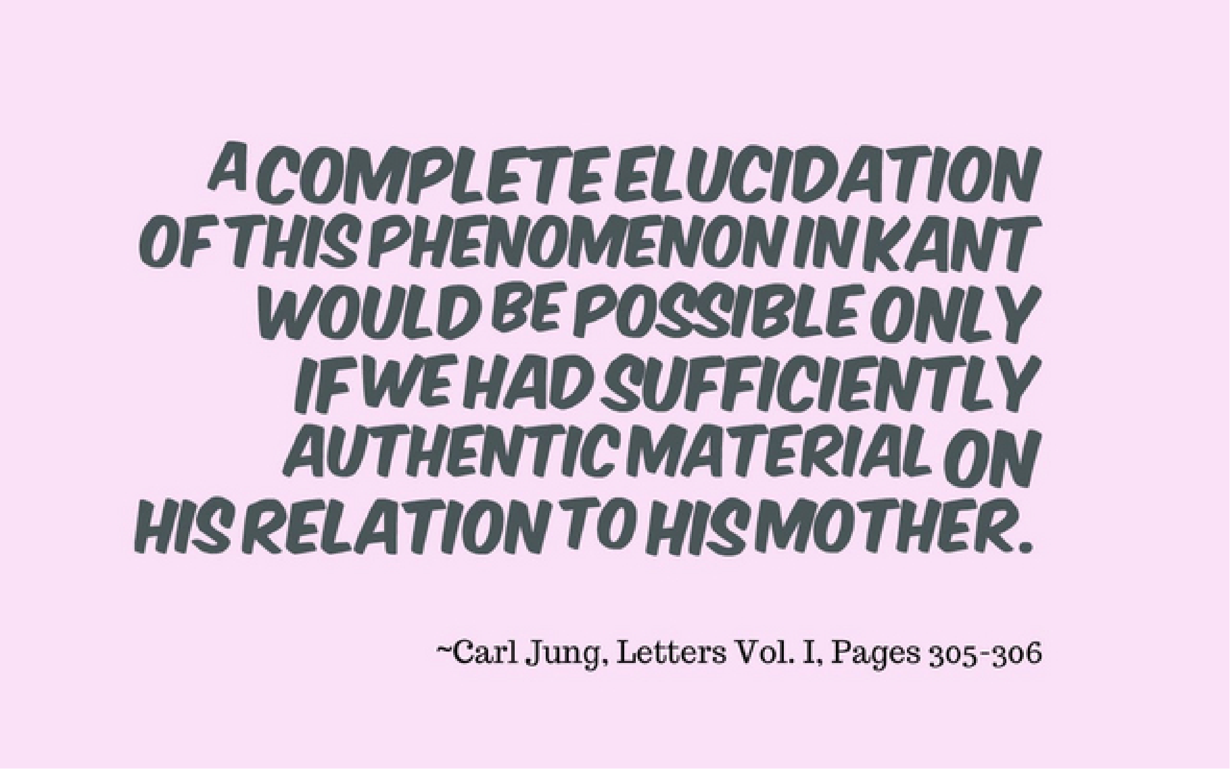
[2]



Kant's categorical imperative is of course a philosophical touching up of a psychic fact which, as you have quite correctly seen, is unquestionably a manifestation of the anima.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 305-306

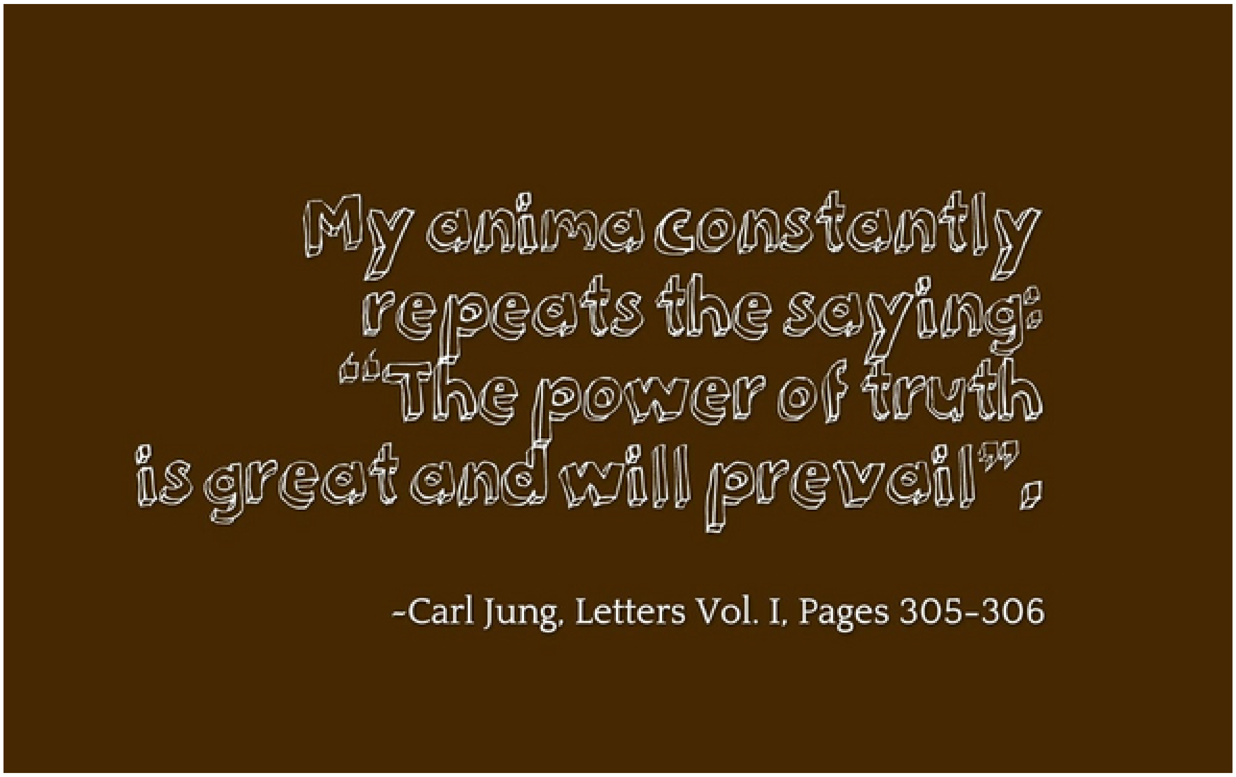
Kant’s categorical imperative is of course a philosophical touching up of a psychic fact which, as you have quite correctly seen, is unquestionably a manifestation of the anima.   Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 305-306



A COMPLETE ELUCIDATION OF THIS PHENOMENON IN KANT WOULD BE POSSIBLE ONLY IF WE HAD SUFFICIENTLY AUTHENTIC MATERIAL ON HIS RELATION TO HIS MOTHER.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 305-306

A complete elucidation of this phenomenon in Kant would be possible only if we had sufficiently authentic material on his relation to his mother. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 305-306

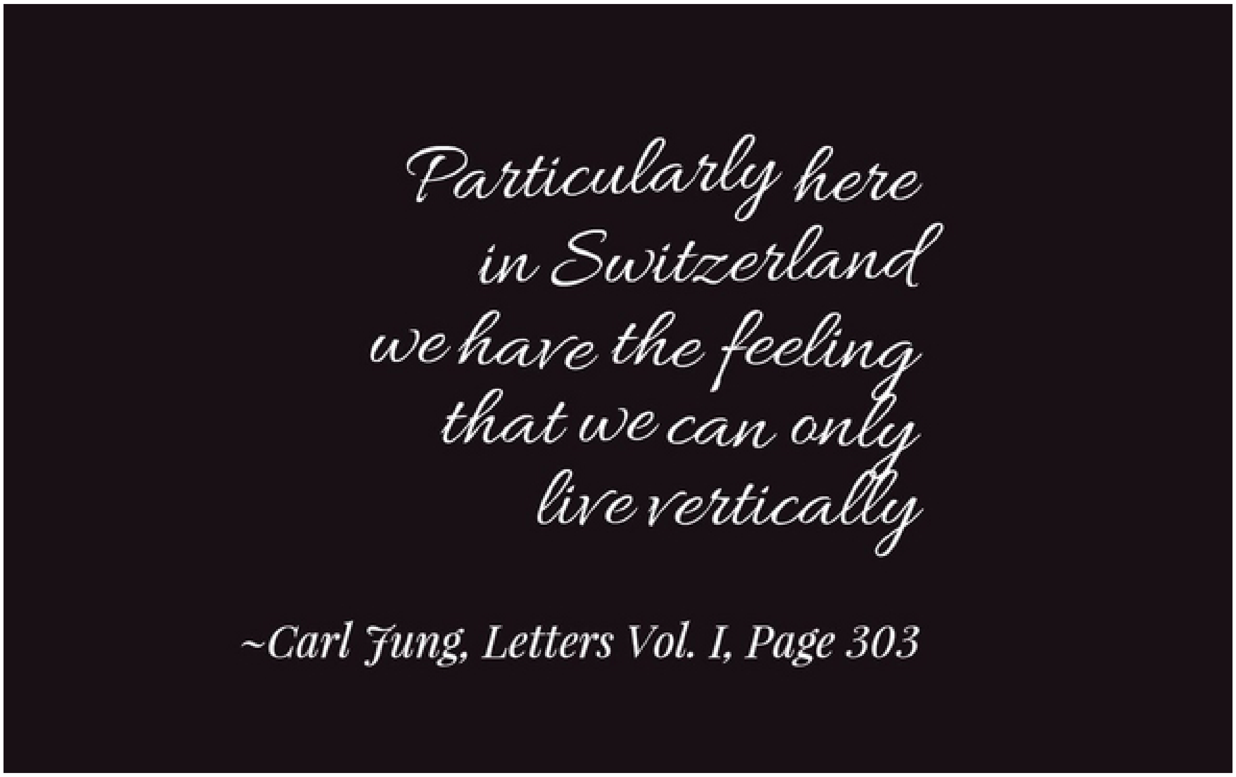


My anima constantly repeats the saying: "The power of truth is great and will prevail".

-Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 305-306

My anima constantly repeats the saying: "The power of truth is great and will prevail". Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 305-306

[5]

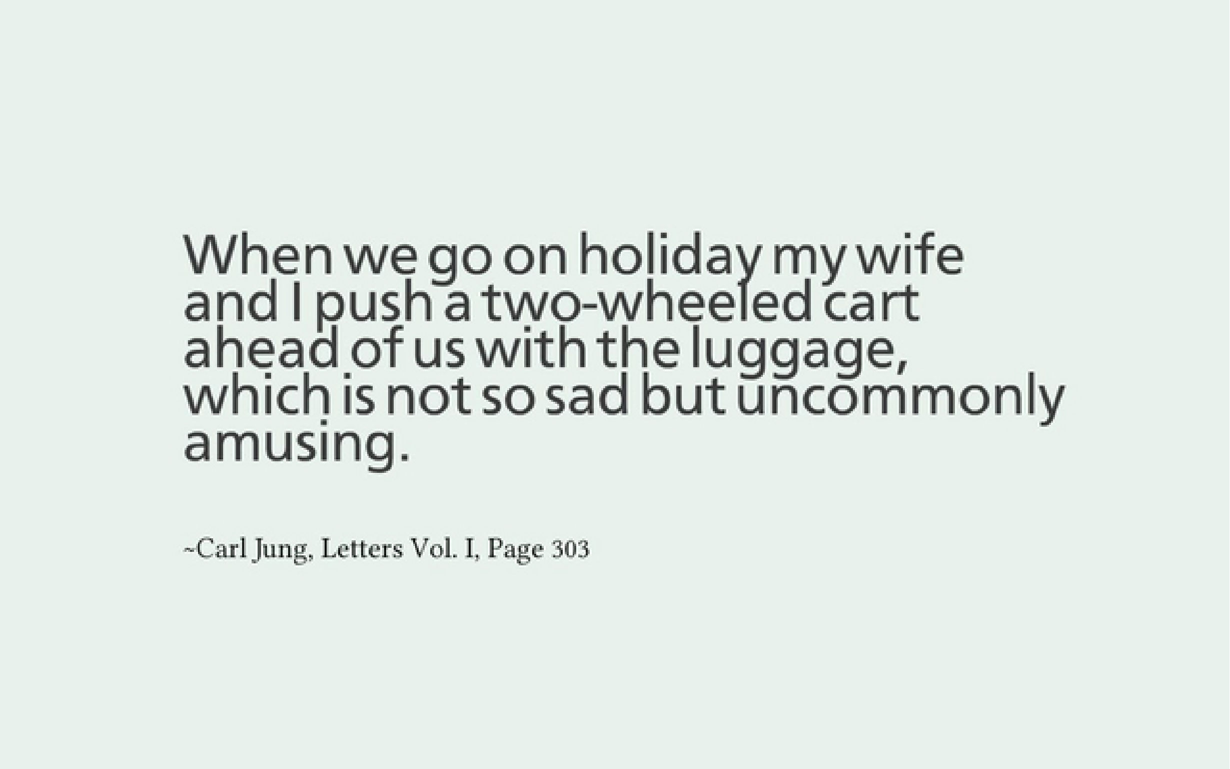


Particularly here in Switzerland we have the feeling that we can only live vertically

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 303

Particularly here in Switzerland we have the feeling that we can only live vertically. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 303

[6]



When we go on holiday my wife and I push a two-wheeled cart ahead of us with the luggage, which is not so sad but uncommonly amusing.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 303

When we go on holiday my wife and I push a two-wheeled cart ahead of us with the luggage, which is not so sad but uncommonly amusing. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 303

[7]

Meanwhile I would like an older edition of the Vulgate and Septuagint and should be grateful if you could get these texts for me.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 324

Meanwhile I would like an older edition of the Vulgate and Septuagint and should be grateful if you could get these texts for me. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 324

[8]

Depending on the peculiar nature of the case the most primitive therapeuticmethods can achieve even better results than the most refined.

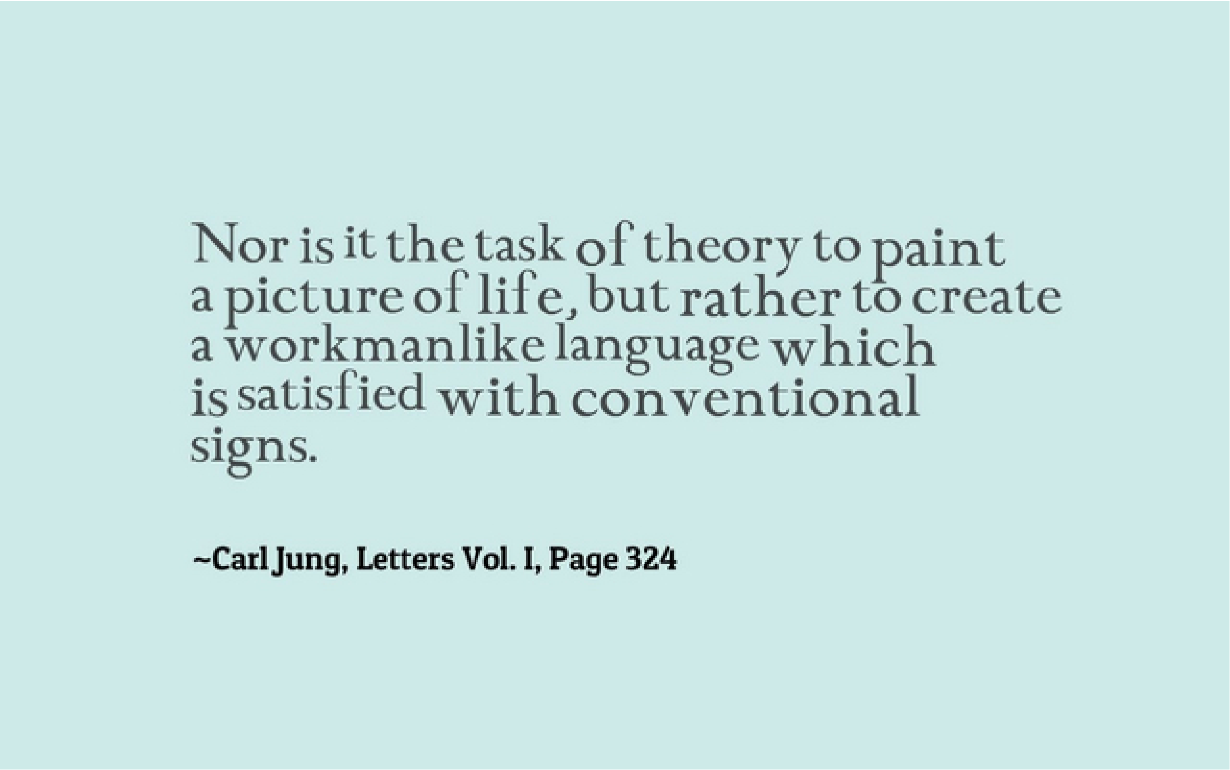
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 324

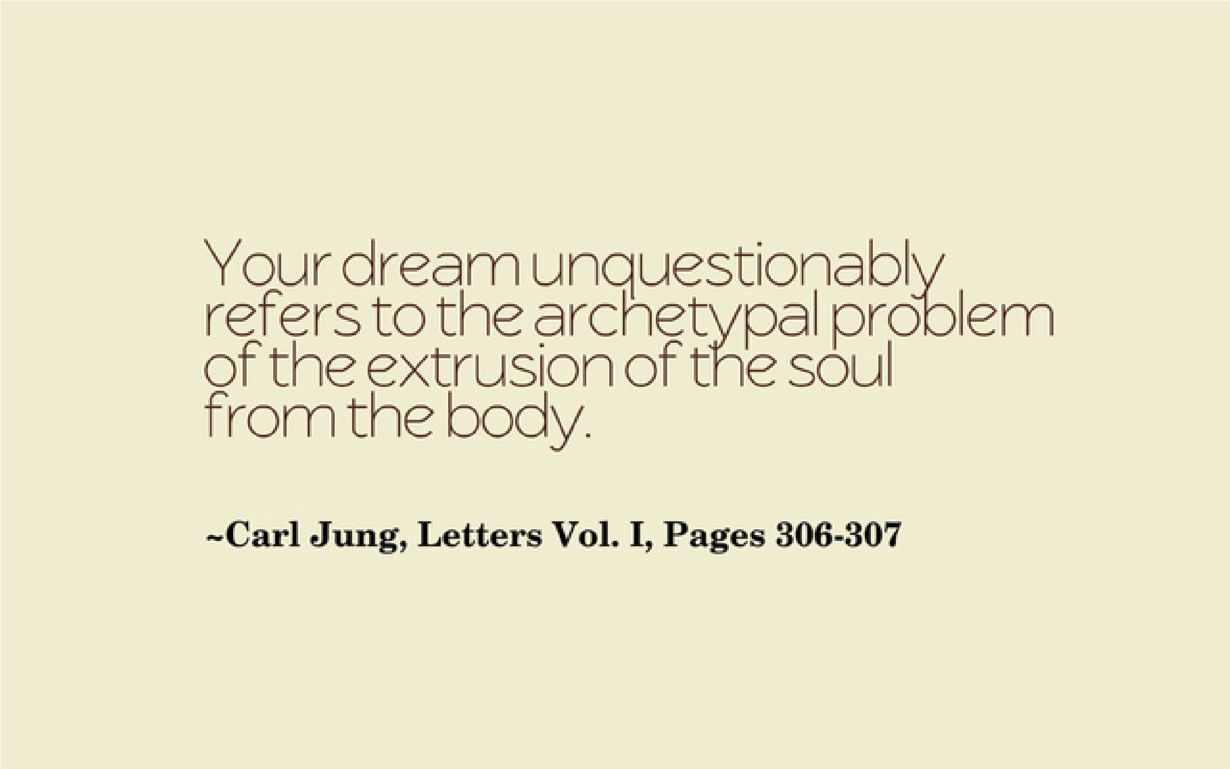
Depending on the peculiar nature of the case the most primitive therapeutic methods can achieve even better results than the most refined. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 324



Nor is it the task of theory to paint a picture of life, but rather to create a workmanlike language which is satisfied with conventional signs.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 324

Nor is it the task of theory to paint a picture of life, but rather to create a workmanlike language which is satisfied with conventional signs. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 324

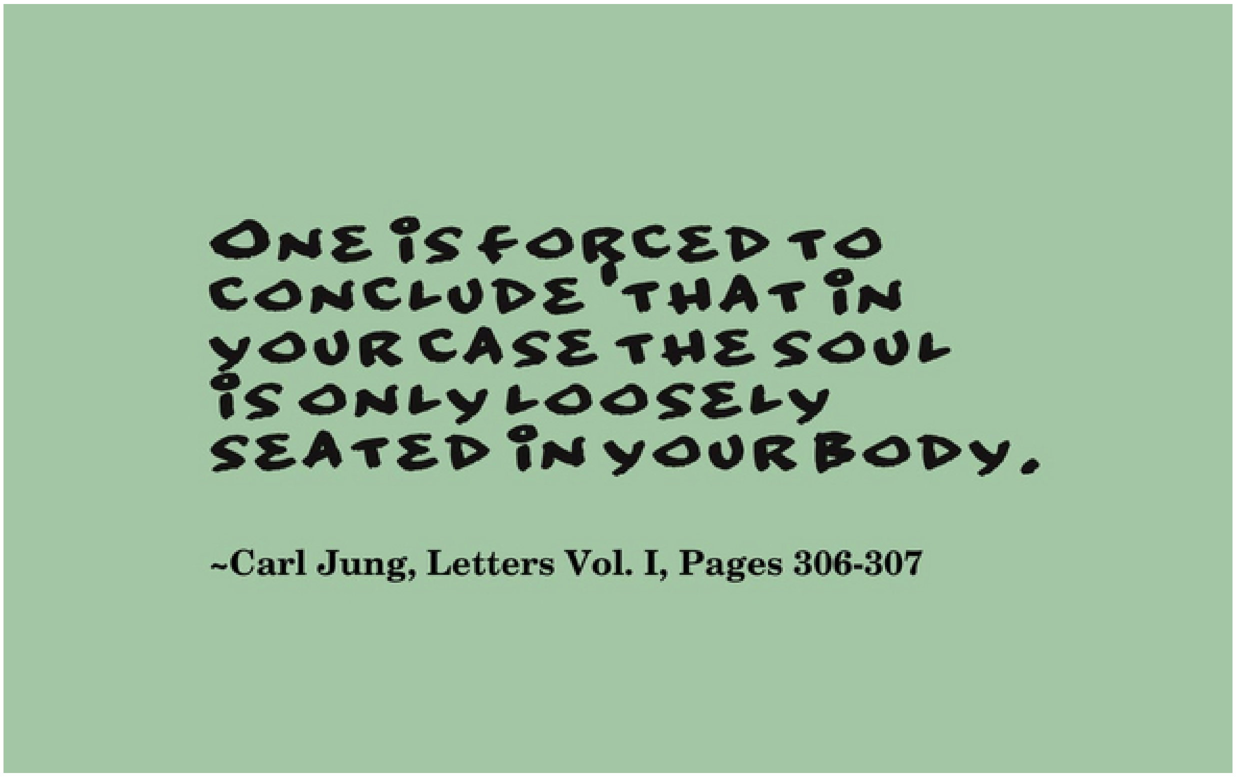


Your dream unquestionably refers to the archetypal problem of the extrusion of the soul from the body.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

Your dream unquestionably refers to the archetypal problem of the extrusion of the soul from the body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

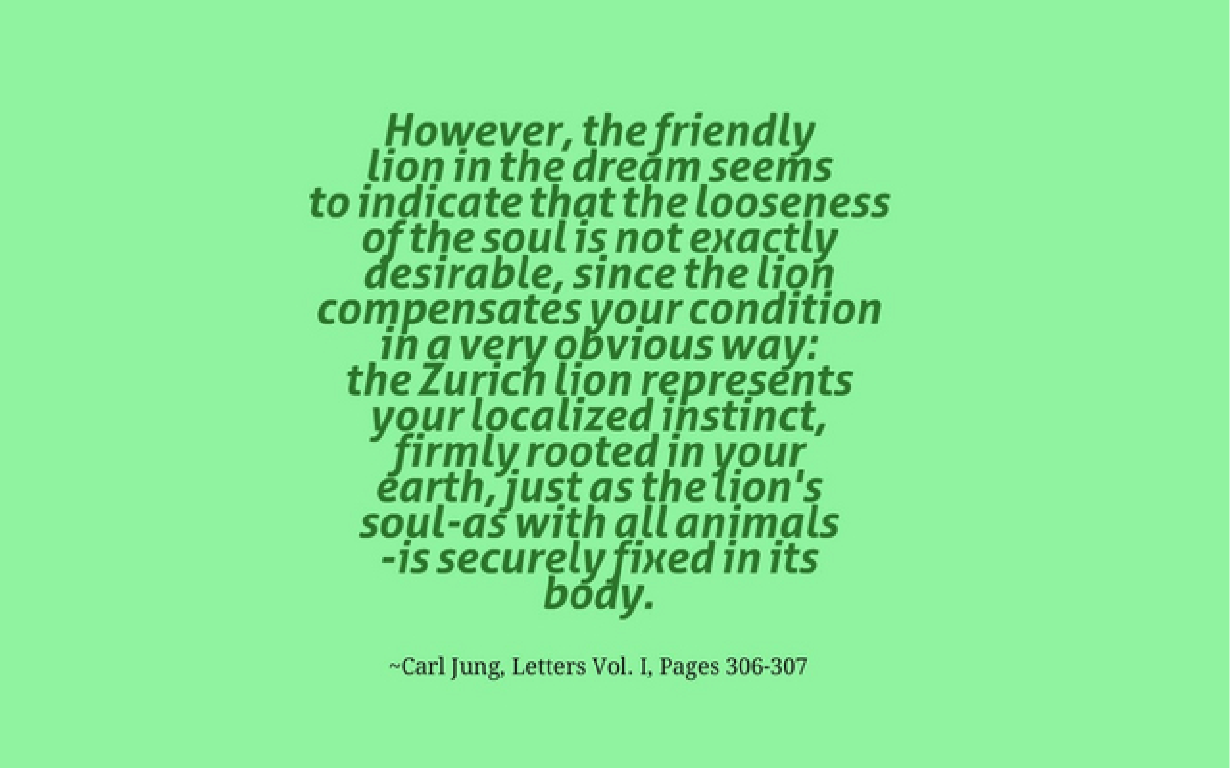
[11]



ONE IS FORCED TO CONCLUDE THAT IN YOUR CASE THE SOUL IS ONLY LOOSELY SEATED IN YOUR BODY.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

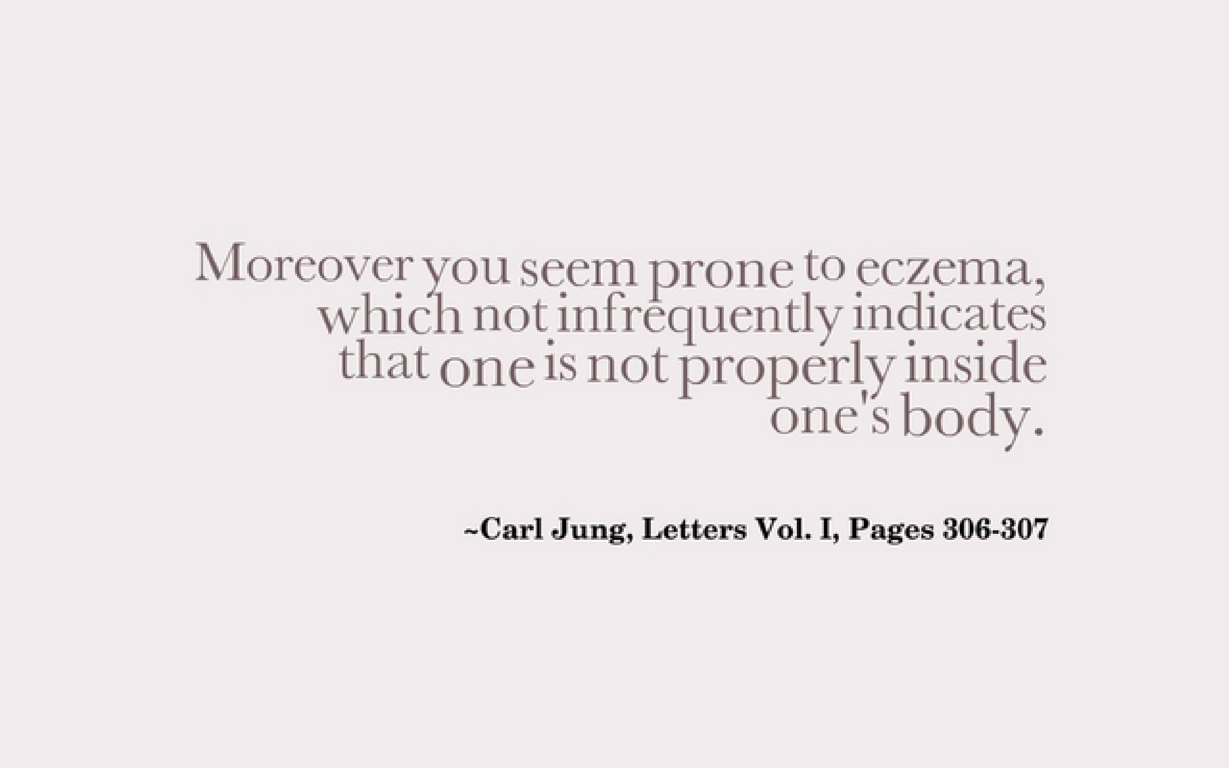
One is forced to conclude ’that in your case the soul is only loosely seated in your body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307



However, the friendly lion in the dream seems to indicate that the looseness of the soul is not exactly desirable, since the lion compensates your condition in a very obvious way: the Zurich lion represents your localized instinct, firmly rooted in your earth, just as the lion's soul-as with all animals -is securely fixed in its body.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

However, the friendly lion in the dream seems to indicate that the looseness of the soul is not exactly desirable, since the lion compensates your condition in a very obvious way: the Zurich lion represents your localized instinct, firmly rooted in your earth, just as the lion’s soul-as with all animals -is securely fixed in its body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

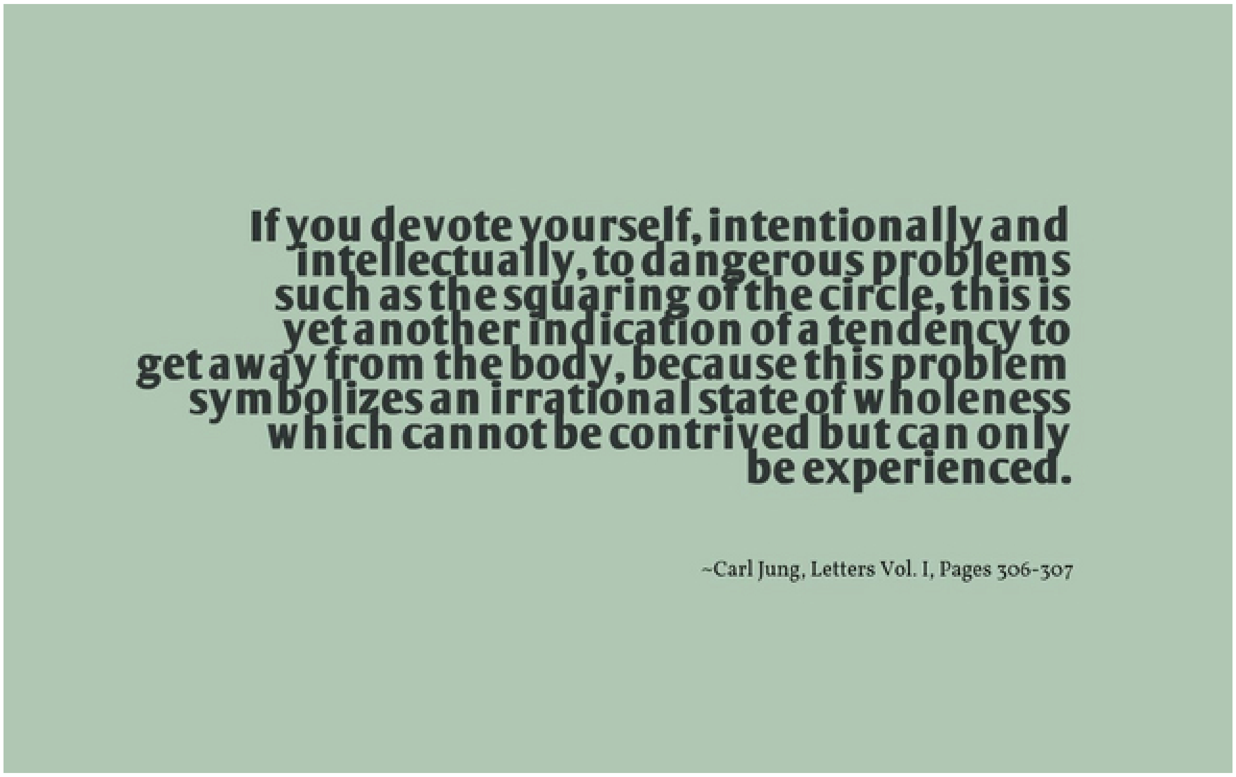


Moreover you seem prone to eczema, which not infrequently indicates that one is not properly inside one's body.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

Moreover you seem prone to eczema, which not infrequently indicates that one is not properly inside one's body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

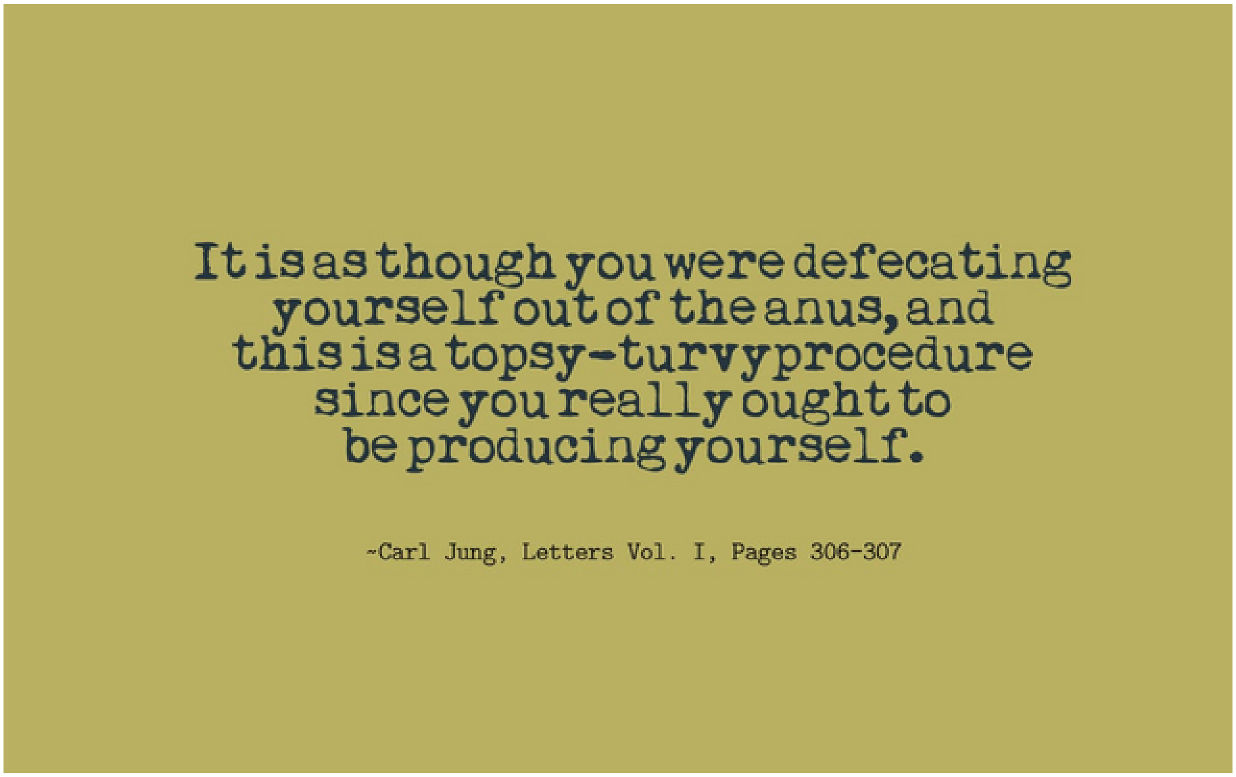
[14]



If you devote yourself, intentionally and intellectually, to dangerous problems such as the squaring of the circle, this is yet another indication of a tendency to get away from the body, because this problem symbolizes an irrational state of wholeness which cannot be contrived but can only be experienced.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

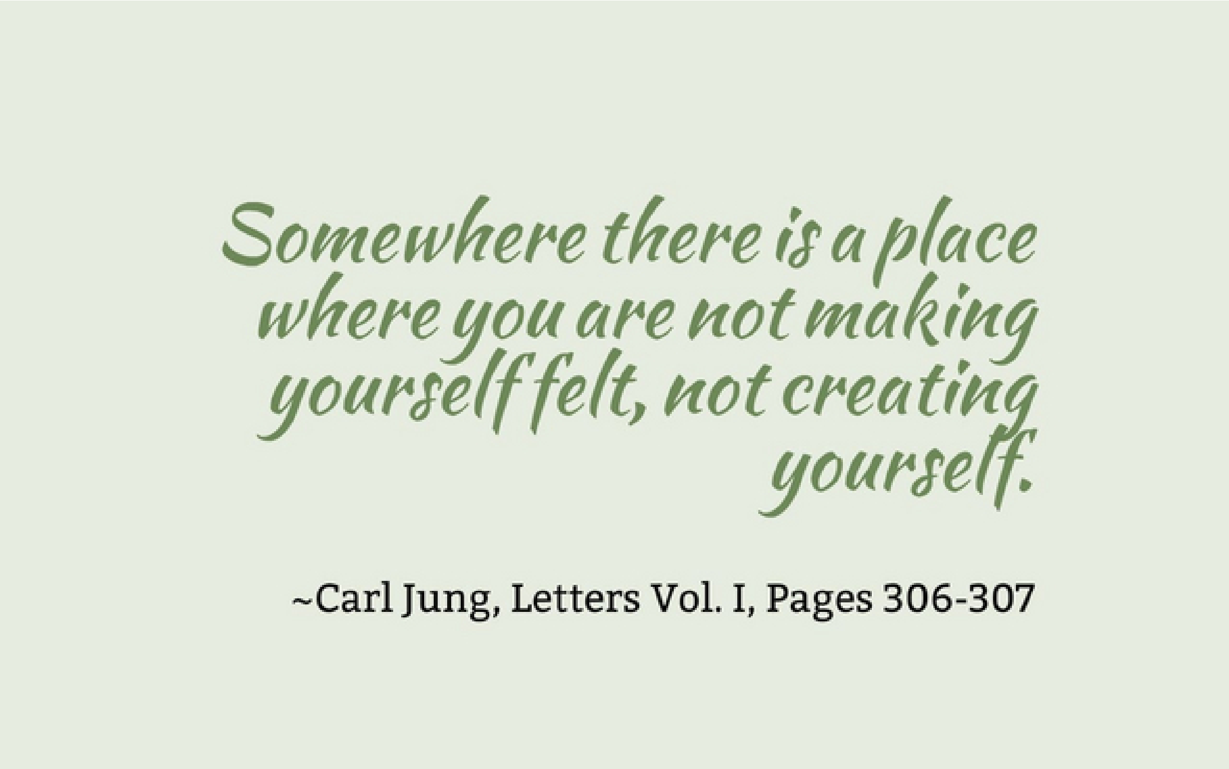
If you devote yourself, intentionally and intellectually, to dangerous problems such as the squaring of the circle, this is yet another indication of a tendency to get away from the body, because this problem symbolizes an irrational state of wholeness which cannot be contrived but can only be experienced. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307



It is as though you were defecating yourself out of the anus, and this is a topsy-turvy procedure since you really ought to be producing yourself.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

It is as though you were defecating yourself out of the anus, and this is a topsy-turvy procedure since you really ought to be producing yourself. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

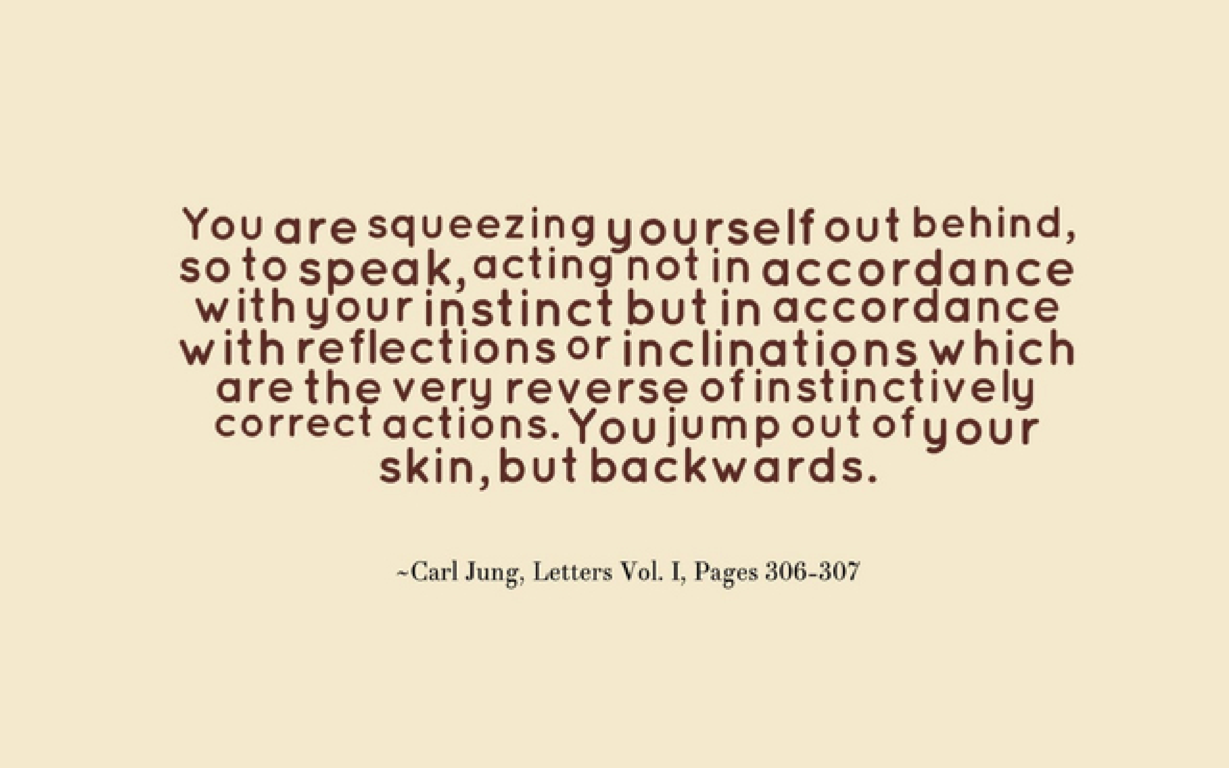


Somewhere there is a place where you are not making yourself felt, not creating yourself.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

Somewhere there is a place where you are not making yourself felt, not creating yourself. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

[17]



You are squeezing yourself out behind, so to speak, acting not in accordance with your instinct but in accordance with reflections or inclinations which are the very reverse of instinctively correct actions. You jump out of your skin, but backwards.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

You are squeezing yourself out behind, so to speak, acting not in accordance with your instinct but in accordance with reflections or inclinations which are the very reverse of instinctively correct actions.
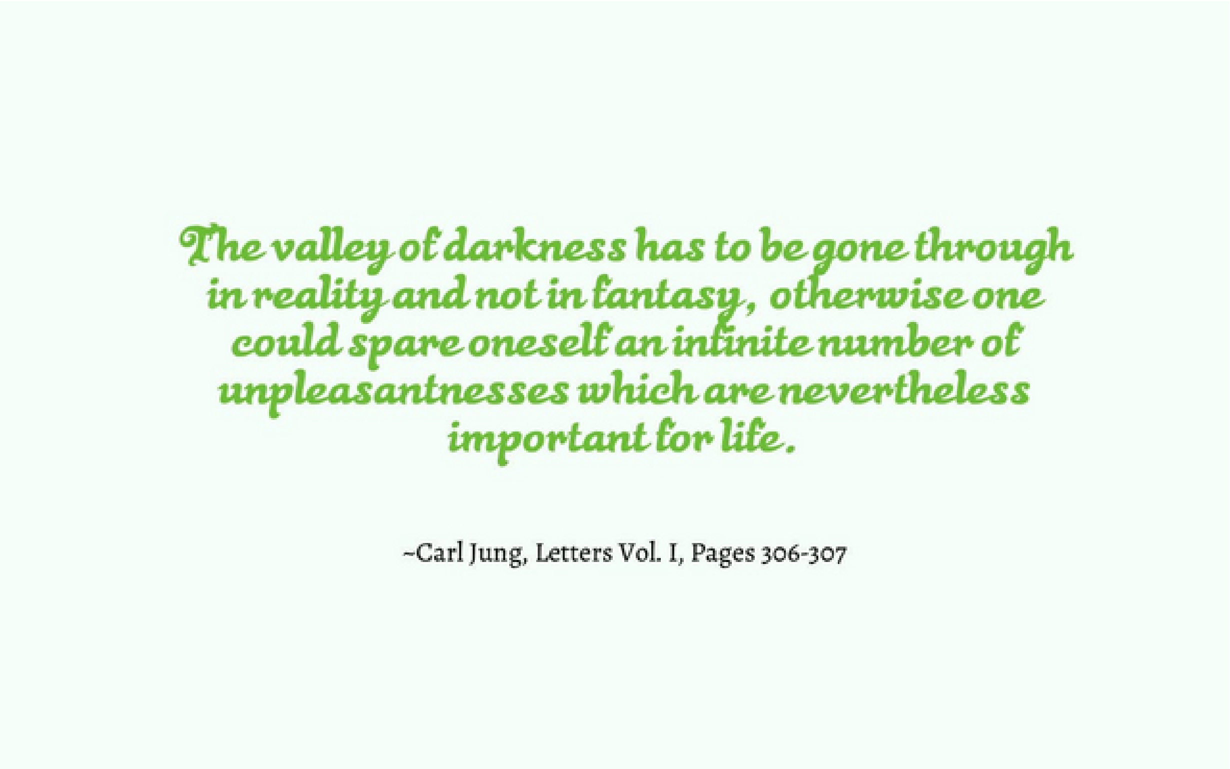
You jump out of your skin, but backwards. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307



The valley of darkness has to be gone through in reality and not in fantasy, otherwise one could spare oneself an infinite number of unpleasantnesses which are nevertheless important for life.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

The valley of darkness has to be gone through in reality and not in fantasy, otherwise one could spare oneself an infinite number of unpleasantnesses which are nevertheless important for life. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

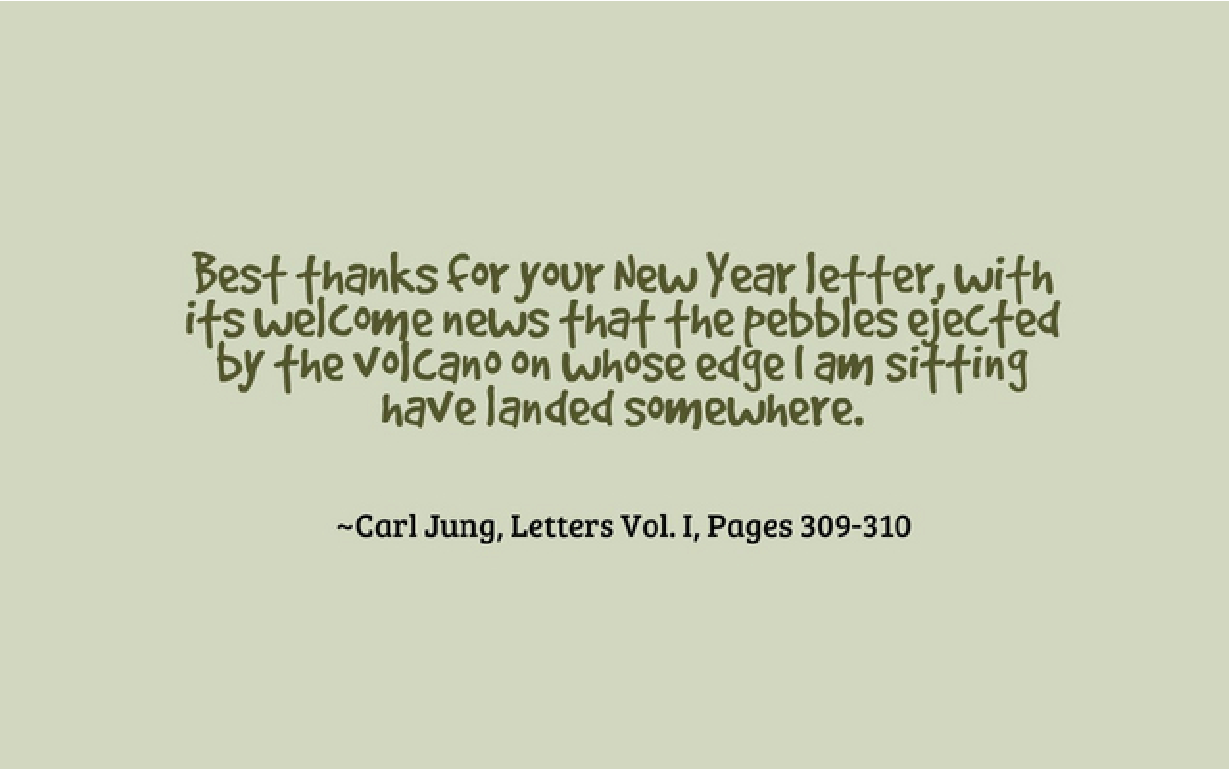
I think, therefore, that if you keep as closely as possible to concrete reality and try to create yourself there and illuminate the darkness, you will be on a more normal road than when you engross yourself in squaring the circle as a substitute.

Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

I think, therefore, that if you keep as closely as possible to concrete reality and try to create yourself there and illuminate the darkness, you will be on a more normal road than when you engross yourself in squaring the circle as a substitute. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

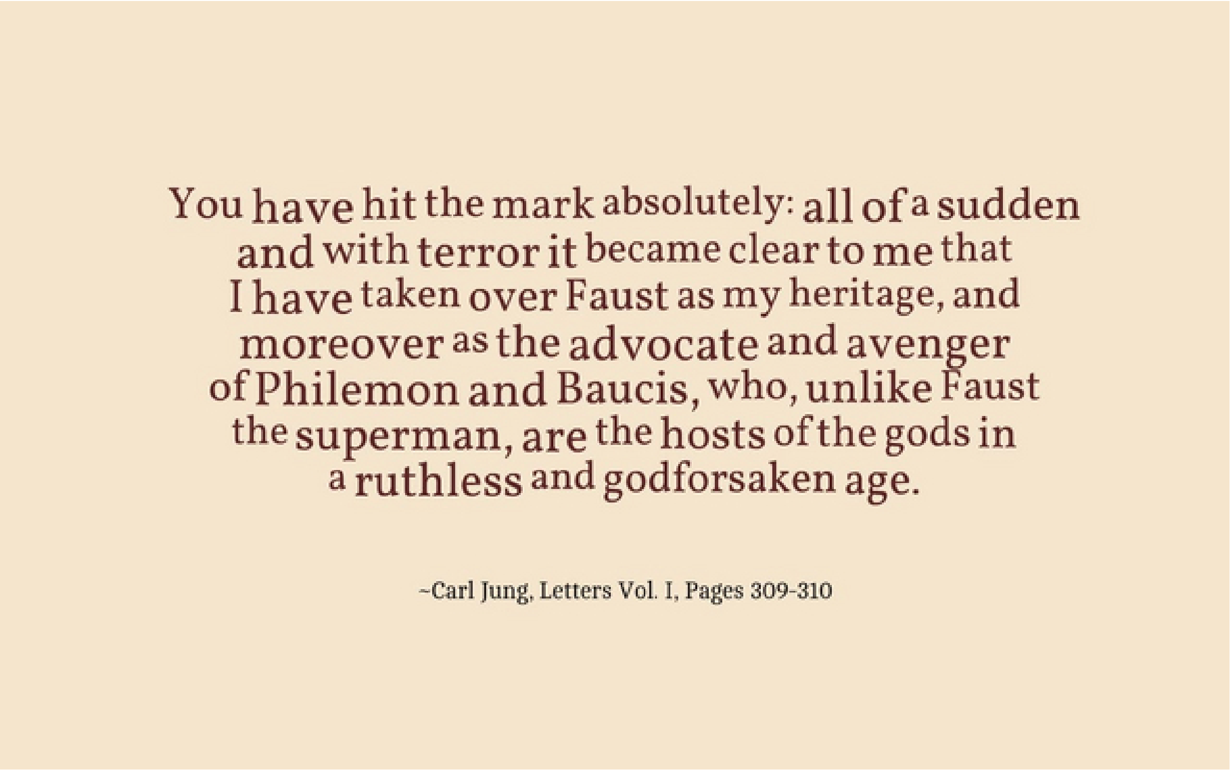
[20]



Best thanks for your New Year letter, with its welcome news that the pebbles ejected by the volcano on whose edge I am sitting have landed somewhere.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 309-310

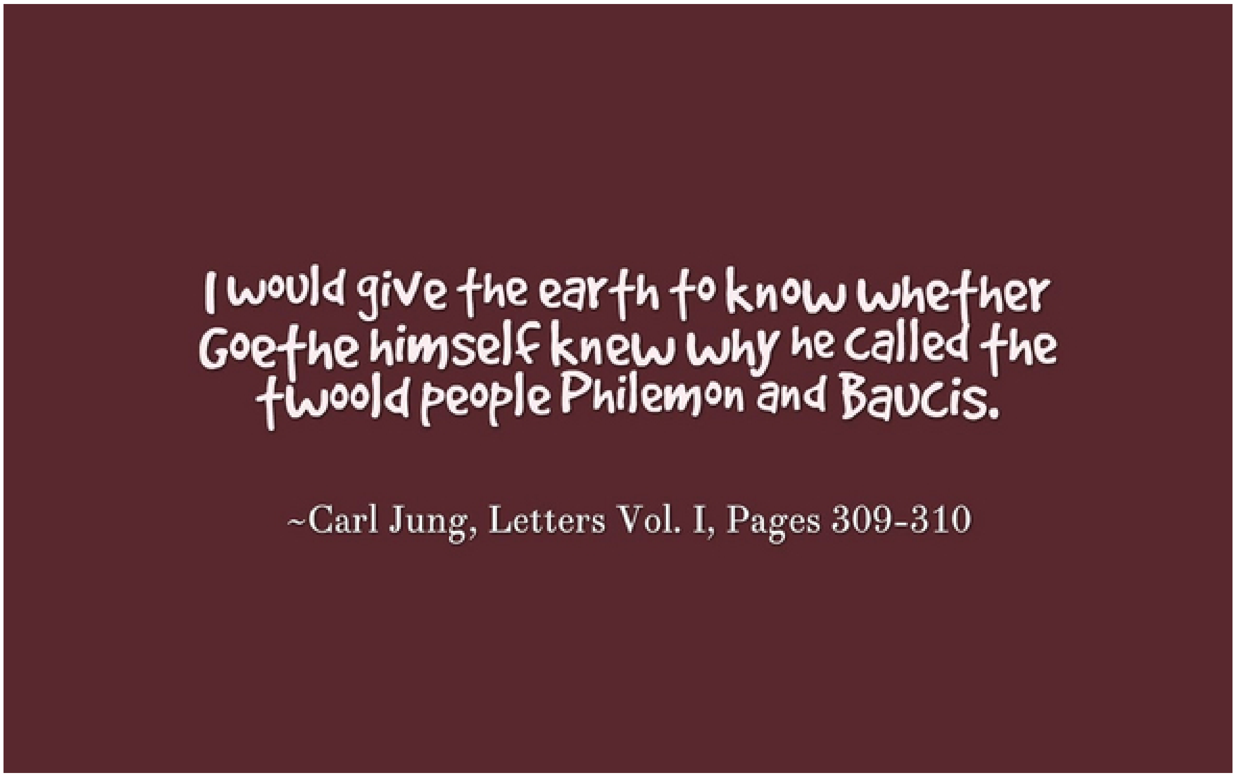
Best thanks for your New Year letter, with its welcome news that the pebbles ejected by the volcano on whose edge I am sitting have landed somewhere. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 309-310



You have hit the mark absolutely: all of a sudden and with terror it became clear to me that I have taken over Faust as my heritage, and moreover as the advocate and avenger of Philemon and Baucis, who, unlike Faust the superman, are the hosts of the gods in a ruthless and godforsaken age.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 309-310

Best thanks for your New Year letter, with its welcome news that the pebbles ejected by the volcano on whose edge I am sitting have landed somewhere. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 309-310

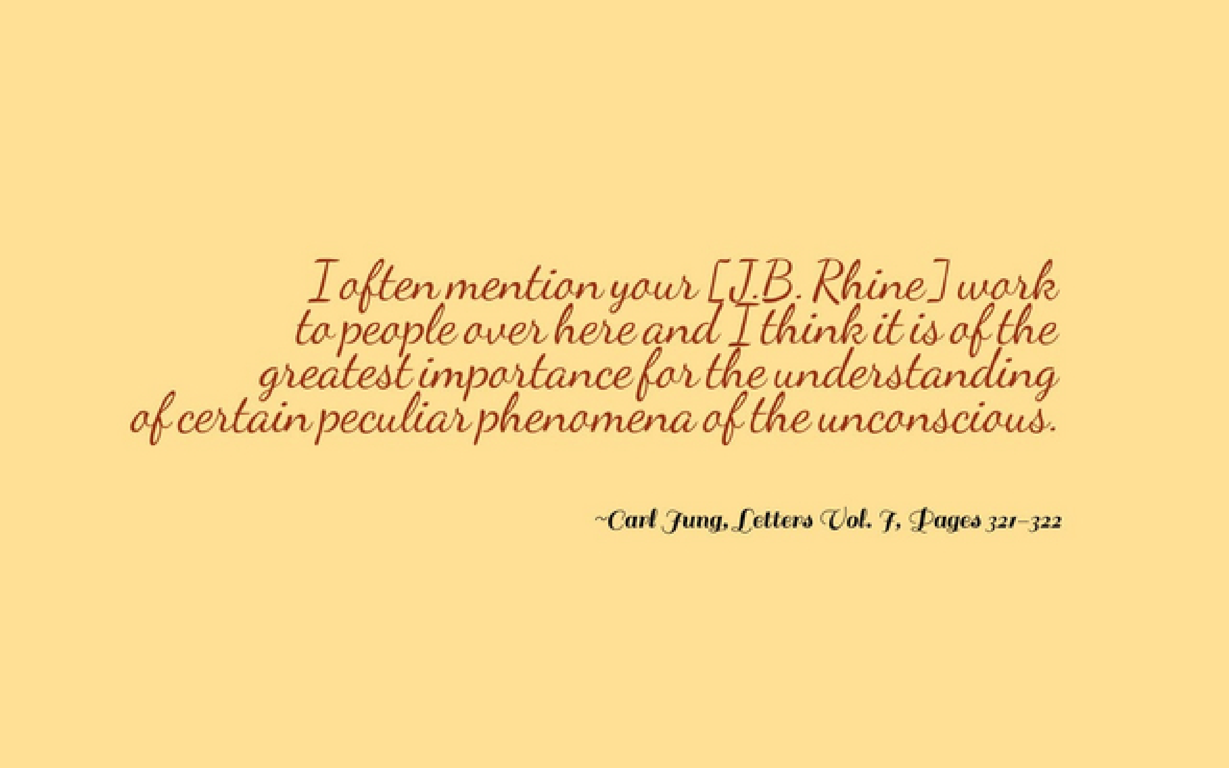


I would give the earth to know whether Goethe himself knew why he called the two old people Philemon and Baucis.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 309-310

I would give the earth to know whether Goethe himself knew why he called the two old people "Philemon" and "Baucis." Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 309-310

[23]

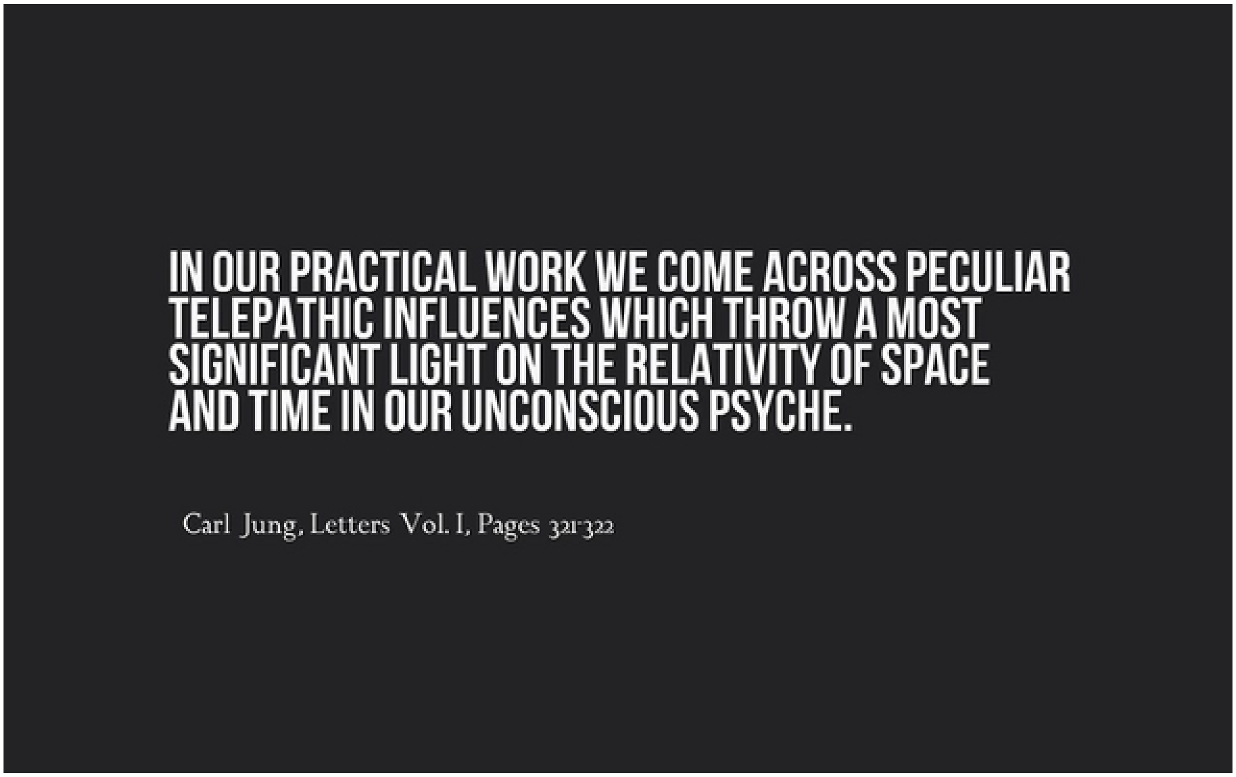


I often mention your [J.B. Rhine] work to people over here and I think it is of the greatest importance for the understanding of certain peculiar phenomena of the unconscious.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 321-322

I often mention your [J.B. Rhine] work to people over here and I think it is of the greatest importance for the understanding of certain peculiar phenomena of the unconscious. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 321-322

[24]

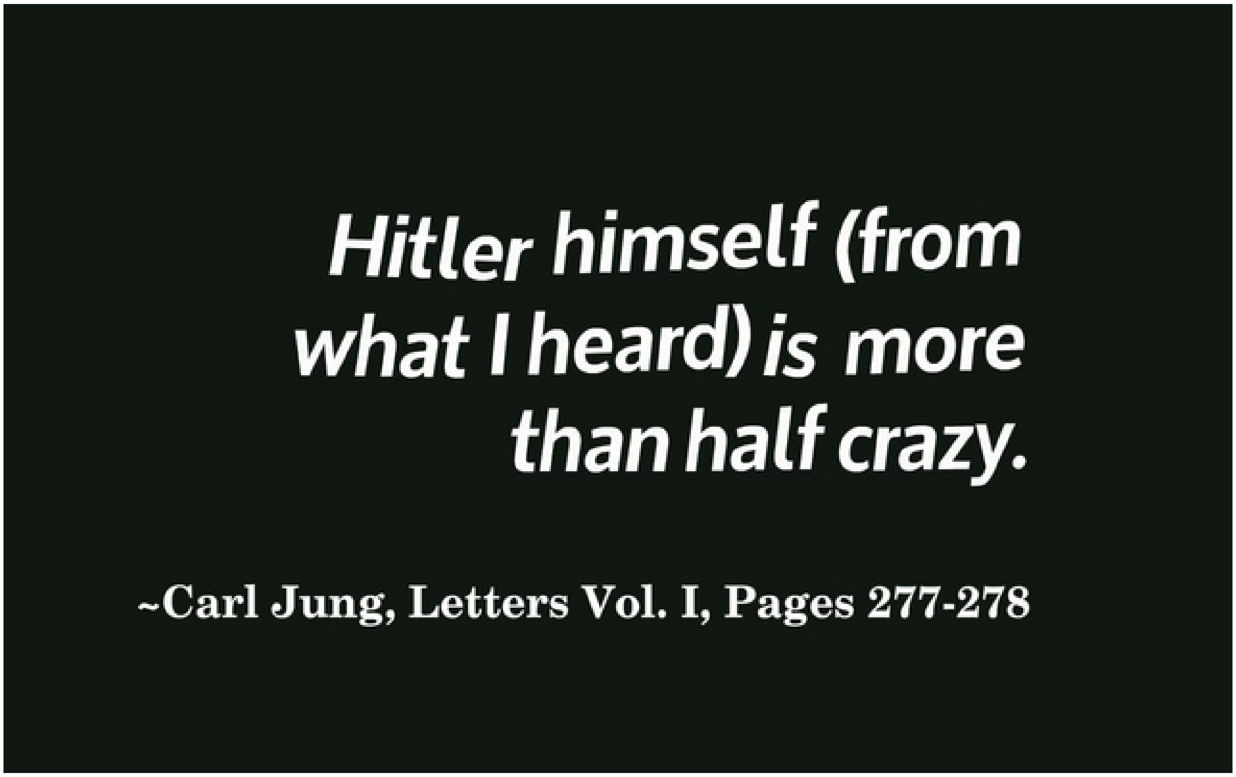


IN OUR PRACTICAL WORK WE COME ACROSS PECULIAR TELEPATHIC INFLUENCES WHICH THROW A MOST SIGNIFICANT LIGHT ON THE RELATIVITY OF SPACE AND TIME IN OUR UNCONSCIOUS PSYCHE.

Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 321-322

In our practical work we come across peculiar telepathic influences which throw a most significant light on the relativity of space and time in our unconscious psyche. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 321-322

[25]

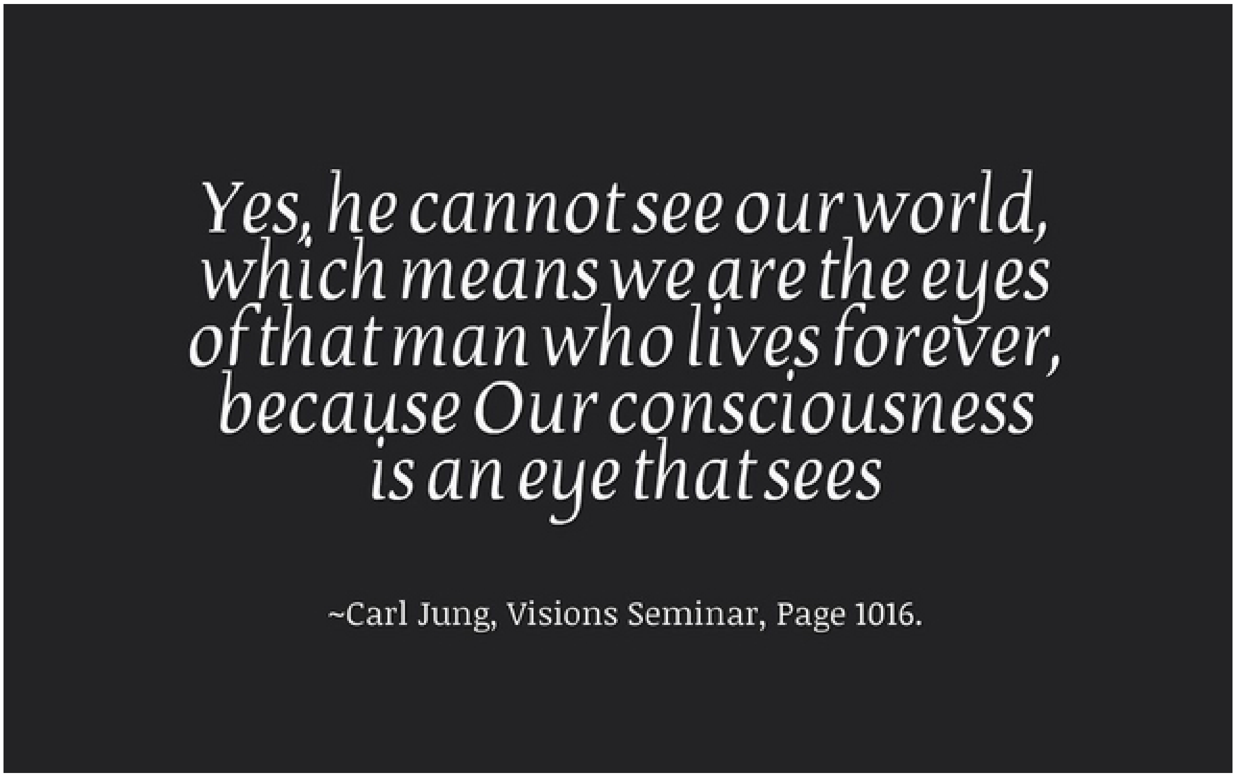


Hitler himself (from what I heard) is more than half crazy.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 277-278

Hitler himself (from what I heard) is more than half crazy. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 277-278

[26]



Yes, he cannot see our world, which means we are the eyes of that man who lives forever, because Our consciousness is an eye that sees

~Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 1016.

Yes, he cannot see our world, which means we are the eyes of that man who lives forever, because

Our consciousness is an eye that sees Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 1016.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

Great Sites to visit:

1. Jenna Lilla's Path of the Soul http://jennalilla.org/

2. Steve Jung-Hearted Parker's Jung Currents http://jungcurrents.com/

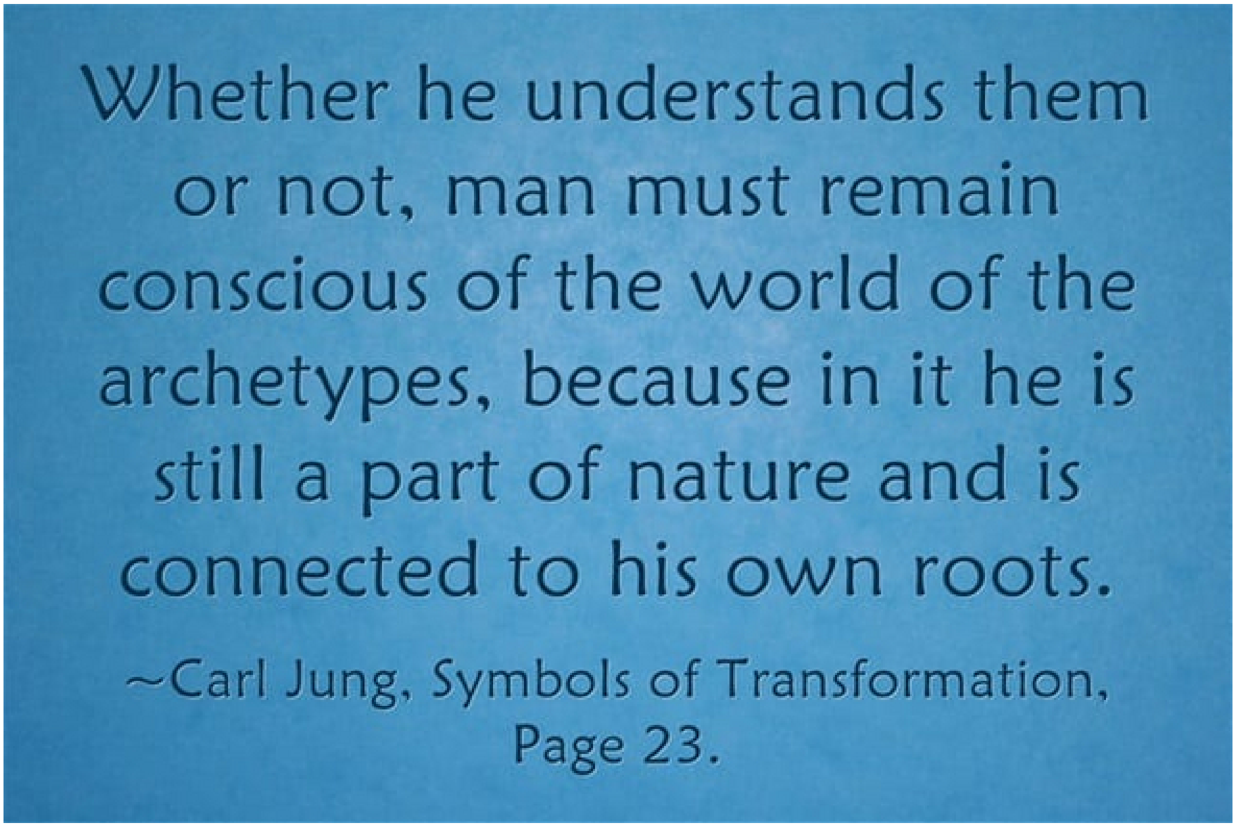
3. Frith Luton's Jungian Dream Analysis and Psychotherapy: http://frithluton.com/articles/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/216ea-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/6b971-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/d7434-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/04e79-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/0a80d-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/10d8f-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/eacf4-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/7c2fa-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/fd595-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/af63c-jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/9ebc8-kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/edb3a-lll.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/8d391-mmm.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/c3e05-nnn.jpg`

15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/2336b-ooo.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/5ff83-ppp.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/8f5e1-qqq.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/504e5-rrr.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/e5ed6-sss.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/b3eb0-ttt.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/5e04d-uuu.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/e682c-vvv.jpg`
23. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/cb7c7-www.jpg`
24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/570ab-xxx.jpg`
25. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/f2e38-yyy.jpg`
26. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/8f5da-zzz.jpg`

Some Carl Jung Quotations [x] (2019-11-23 04:38)

[1]

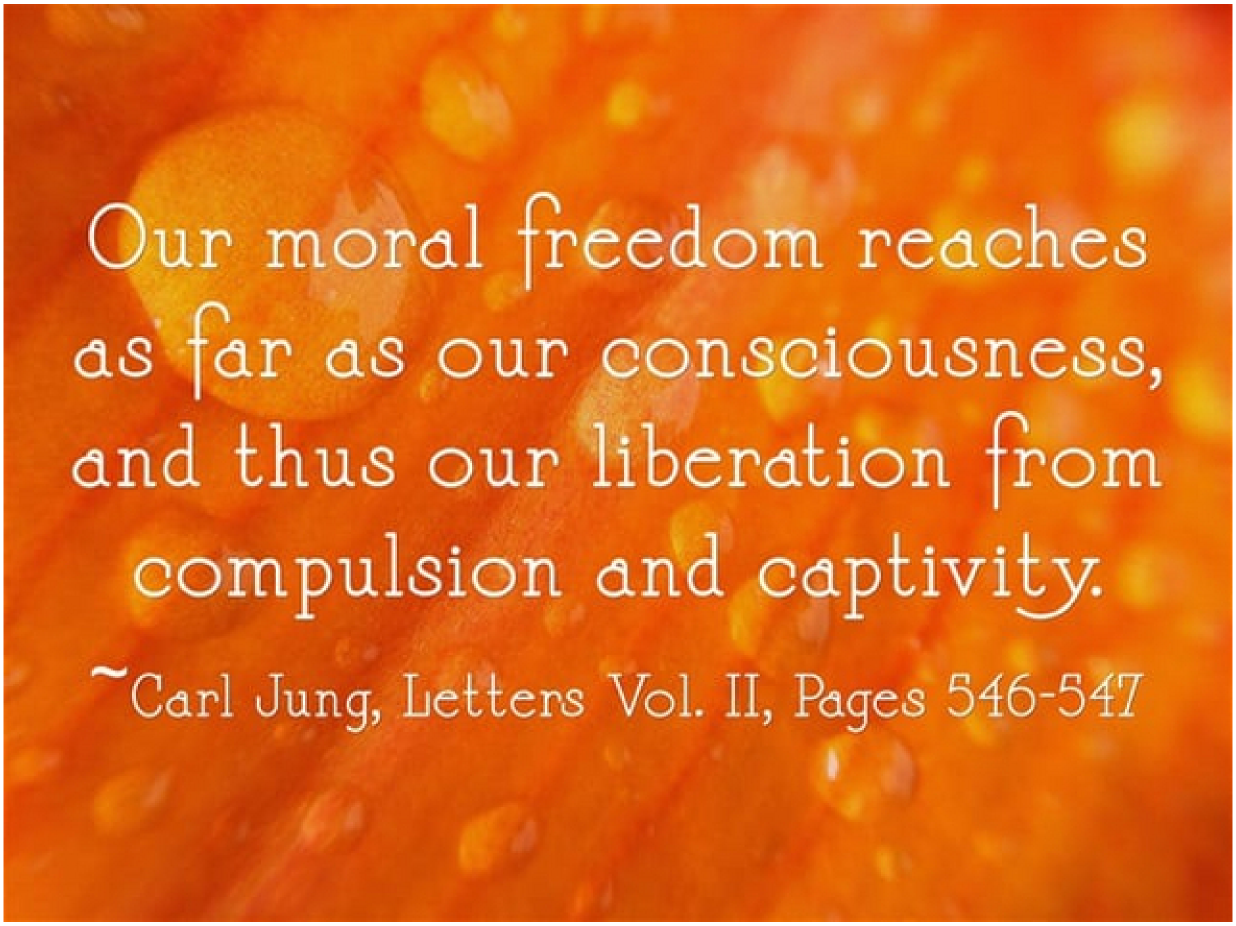


Whether he understands them or not, man must remain conscious of the world of the archetypes, because in it he is still a part of nature and is connected to his own roots.

~Carl Jung, Symbols of Transformation, Page 23.

Whether he understands them or not, man must remain conscious of the world of the archetypes, because in it he is still a part of nature and is connected to his own roots. Carl Jung, Symbols of Transformation, Page 23.

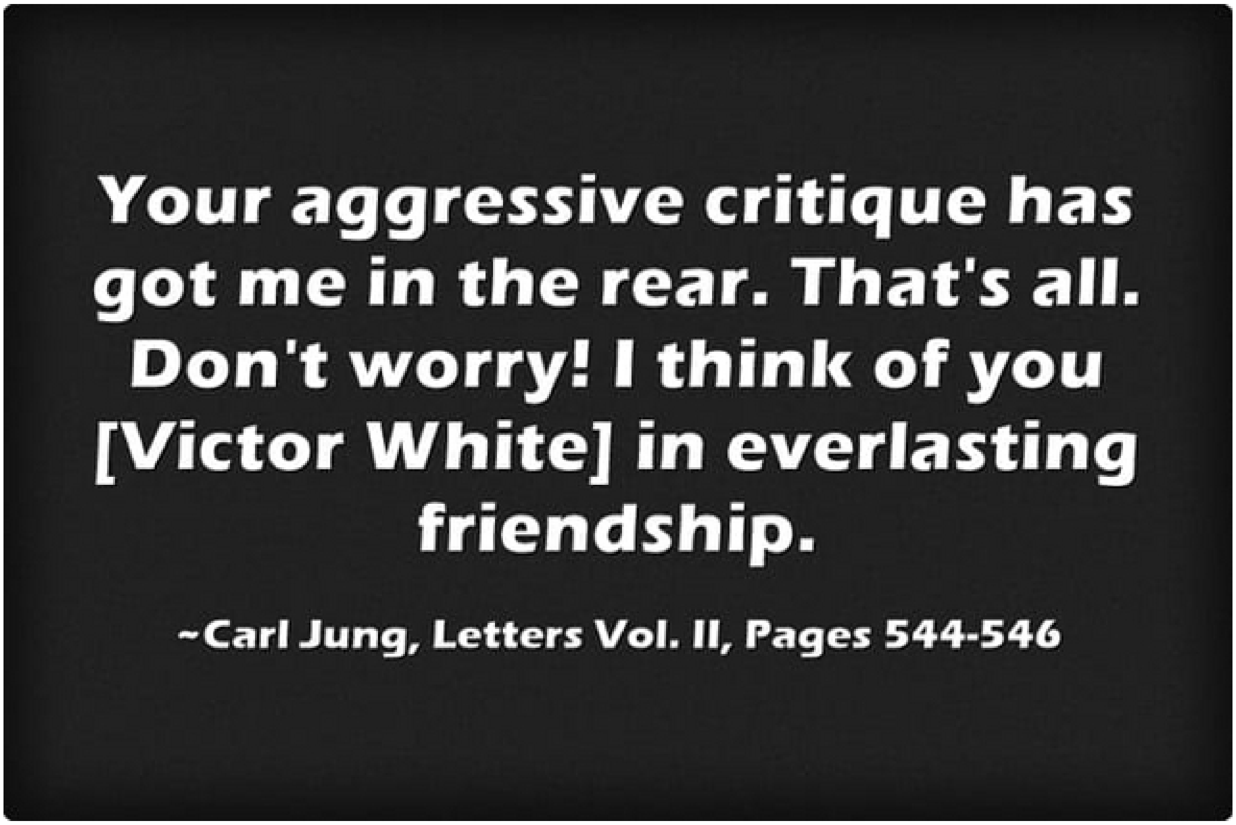
[2]



Our moral freedom reaches as far as our consciousness, and thus our liberation from compulsion and captivity.
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 546-547

Our moral freedom reaches as far as our consciousness, and thus our liberation from compulsion and captivity. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 546-547

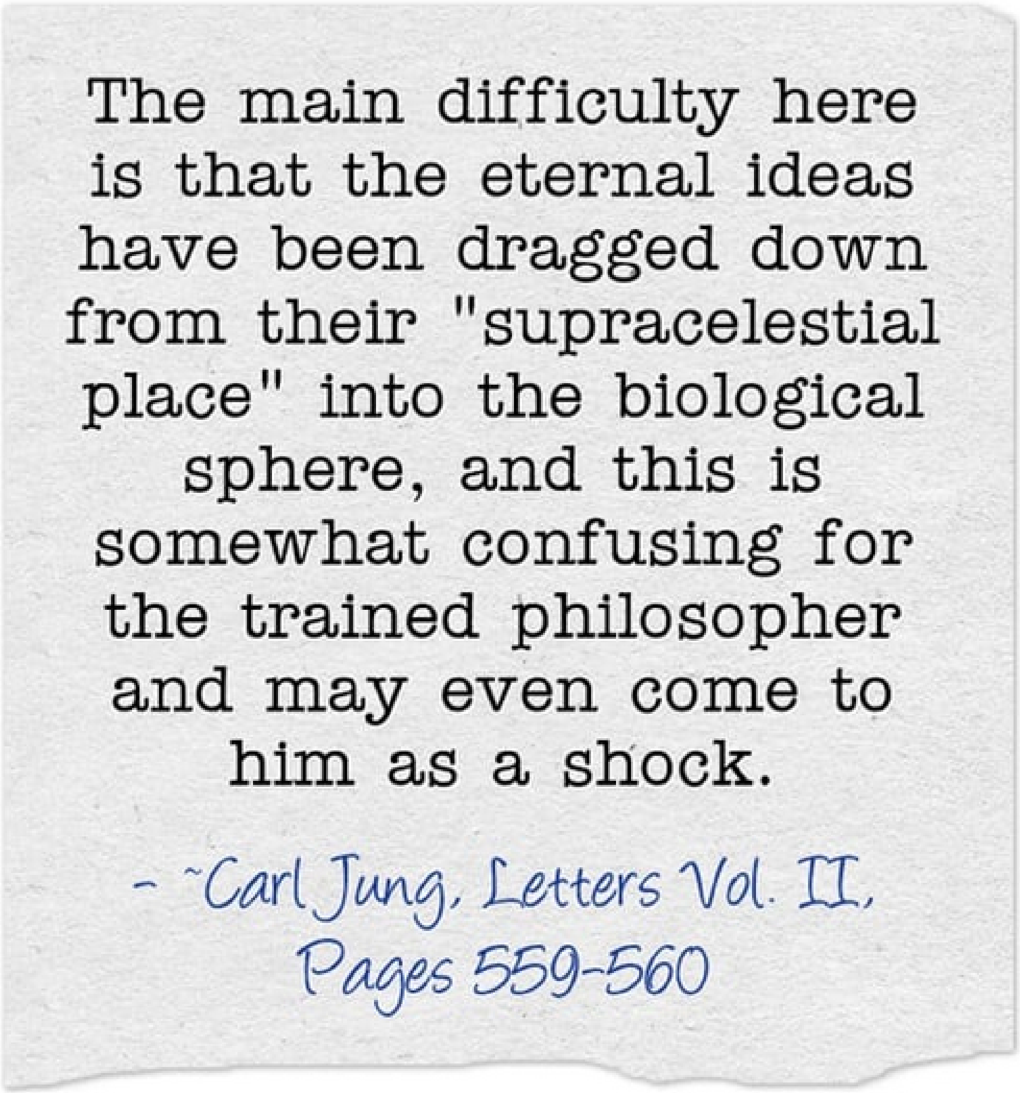
[3]



Your aggressive critique has got me in the rear. That's all. Don't worry! I think of you [Victor White] in everlasting friendship.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 544-546

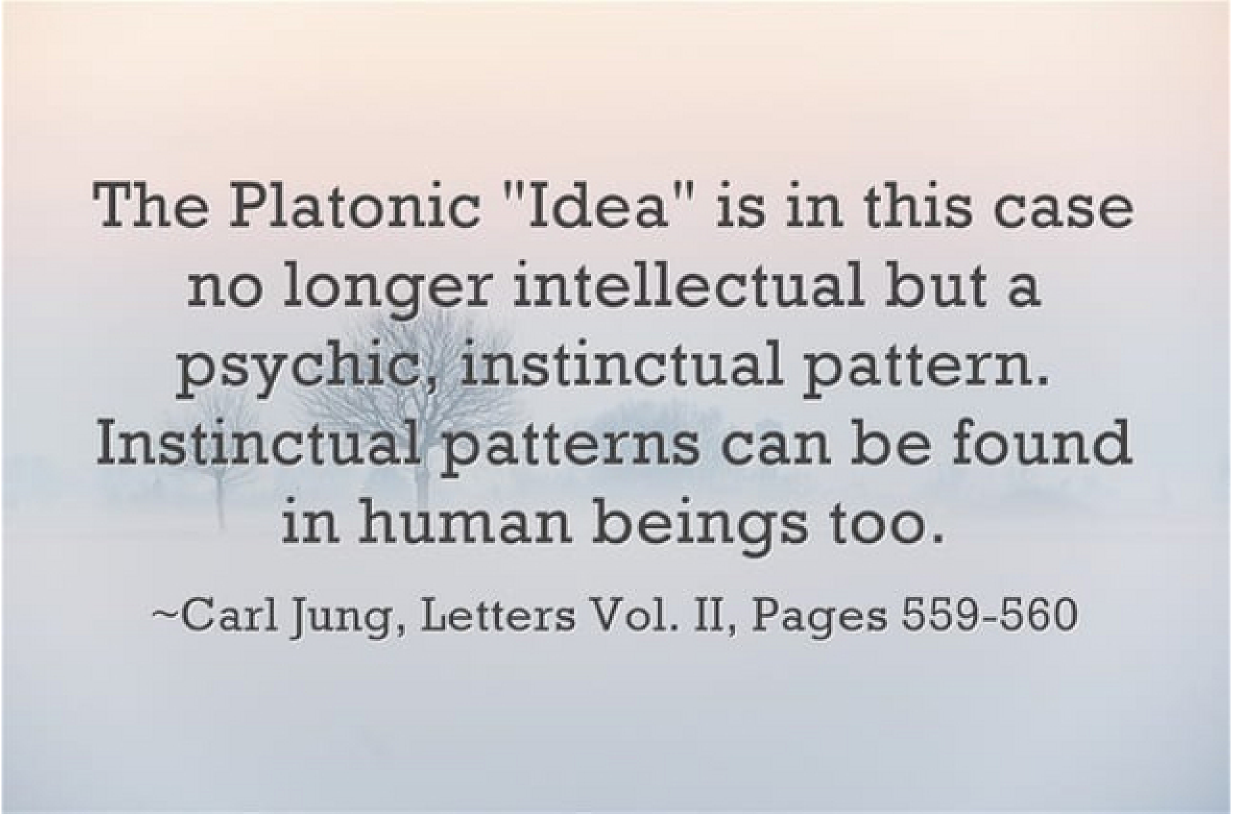
Your aggressive critique has got me in the rear. That’s all. Don’t worry! I think of you [Victor White] in everlasting friendship. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 544-546



The main difficulty here is that the eternal ideas have been dragged down from their "supracelestial place" into the biological sphere, and this is somewhat confusing for the trained philosopher and may even come to him as a shock.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 559-560

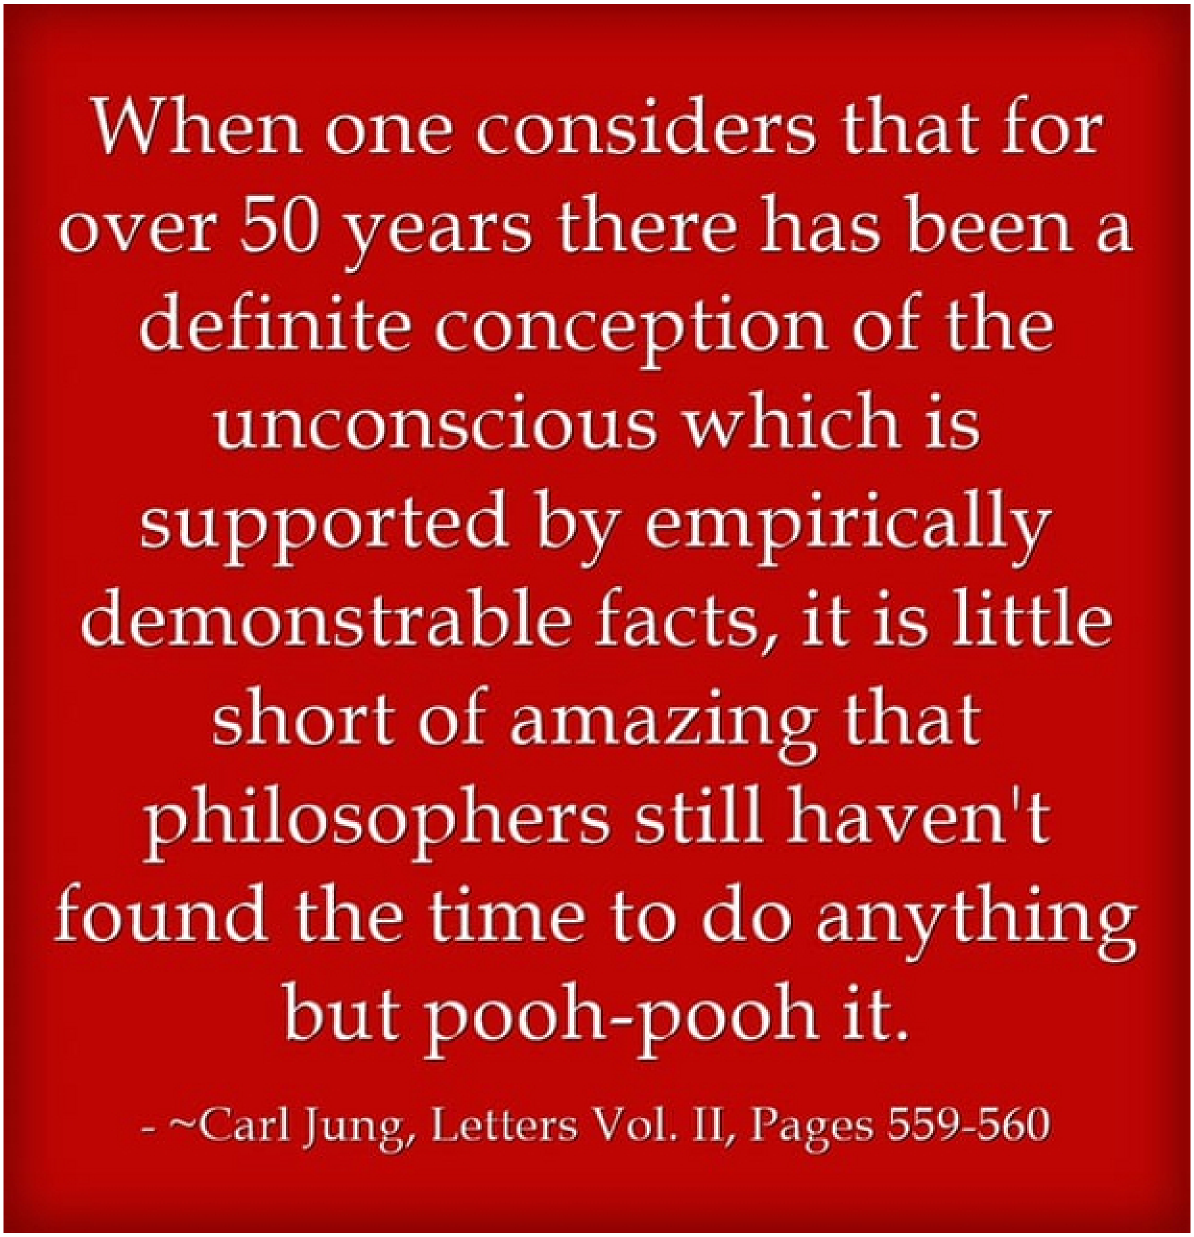
The main difficulty here is that the eternal ideas have been dragged down from their "supracelestial place" into the biological sphere, and this is somewhat confusing for the trained philosopher and may even come to him as a shock.
Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 559-560



The Platonic "Idea" is in this case no longer intellectual but a psychic, instinctual pattern. Instinctual patterns can be found in human beings too.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 559-560

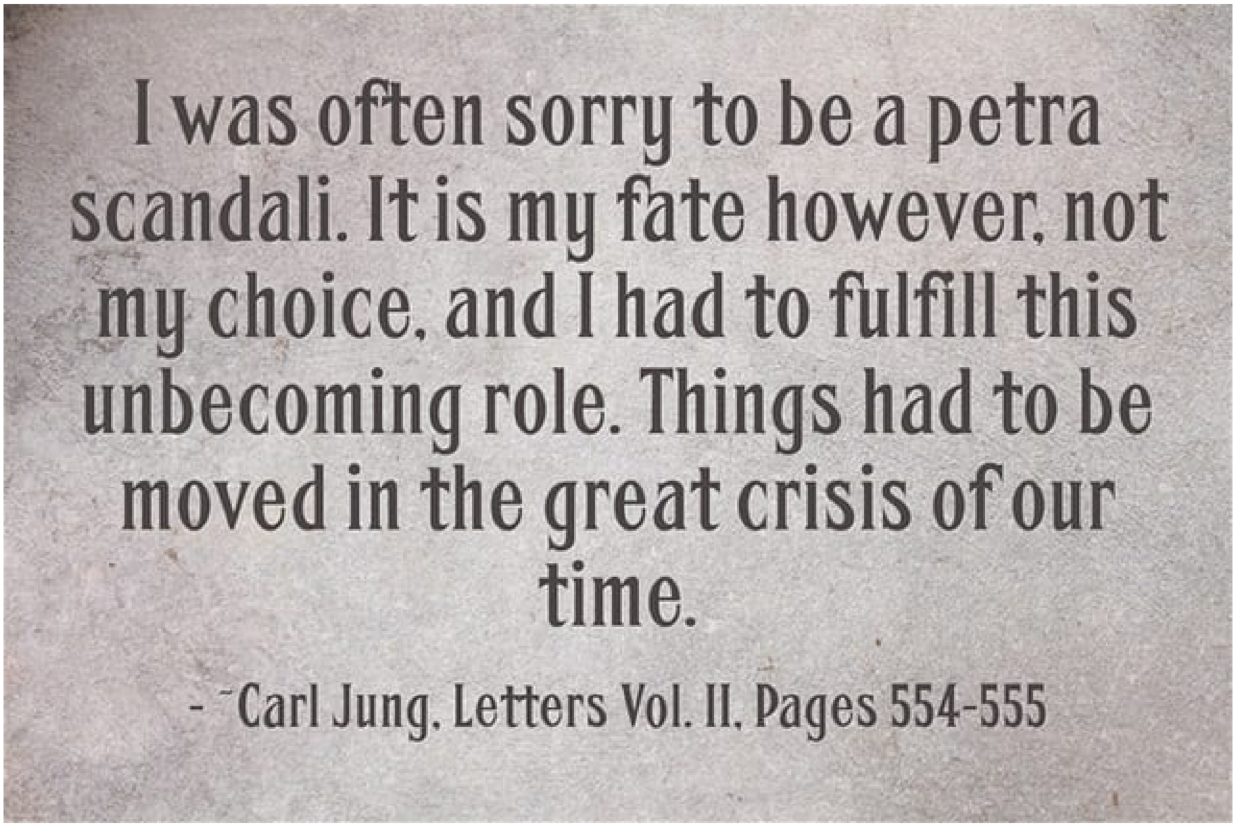
The Platonic "Idea" is in this case no longer intellectual but a psychic, instinctual pattern. Instinctual patterns can be found in human beings too. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 559-560



When one considers that for over 50 years there has been a definite conception of the unconscious which is supported by empirically demonstrable facts, it is little short of amazing that philosophers still haven't found the time to do anything but pooh-pooh it.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 559-560

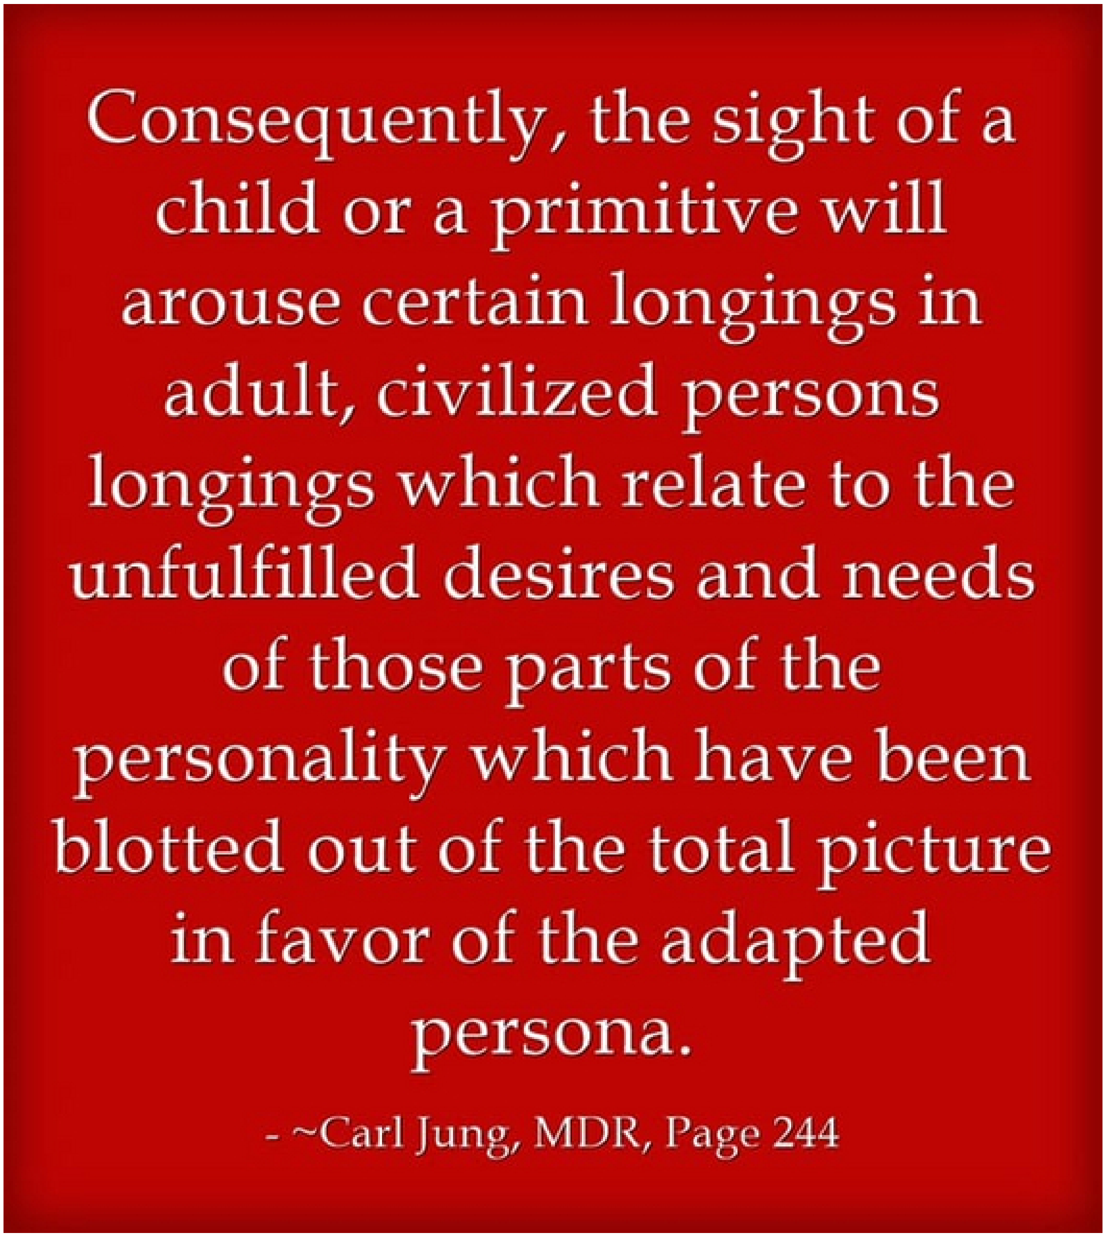
When one considers that for over 50 years there has been a definite conception of the unconscious which is supported by empirically demonstrable facts, it is little short of amazing that philosophers still haven’t found the time to do anything but pooh-pooh it. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 559-560



I was often sorry to be a petra scandali. It is my fate however, not my choice, and I had to fulfill this unbecoming role. Things had to be moved in the great crisis of our time.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 554-555

I was often sorry to be a petra scandali. It is my fate however, not my choice, and I had to fulfill this unbecoming role. Things had to be moved in the great crisis of our time. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 554-555



Consequently, the sight of a child or a primitive will arouse certain longings in adult, civilized persons longings which relate to the unfulfilled desires and needs of those parts of the personality which have been blotted out of the total picture in favor of the adapted persona.

- ~Carl Jung, MDR, Page 244

Consequently, the sight of a child or a primitive will arouse certain longings in adult, civilized persons longings which relate to the unfulfilled desires and needs of those parts of the personality which have been blotted out of the total picture in favor of the adapted persona. Carl Jung, MDR, Page 244

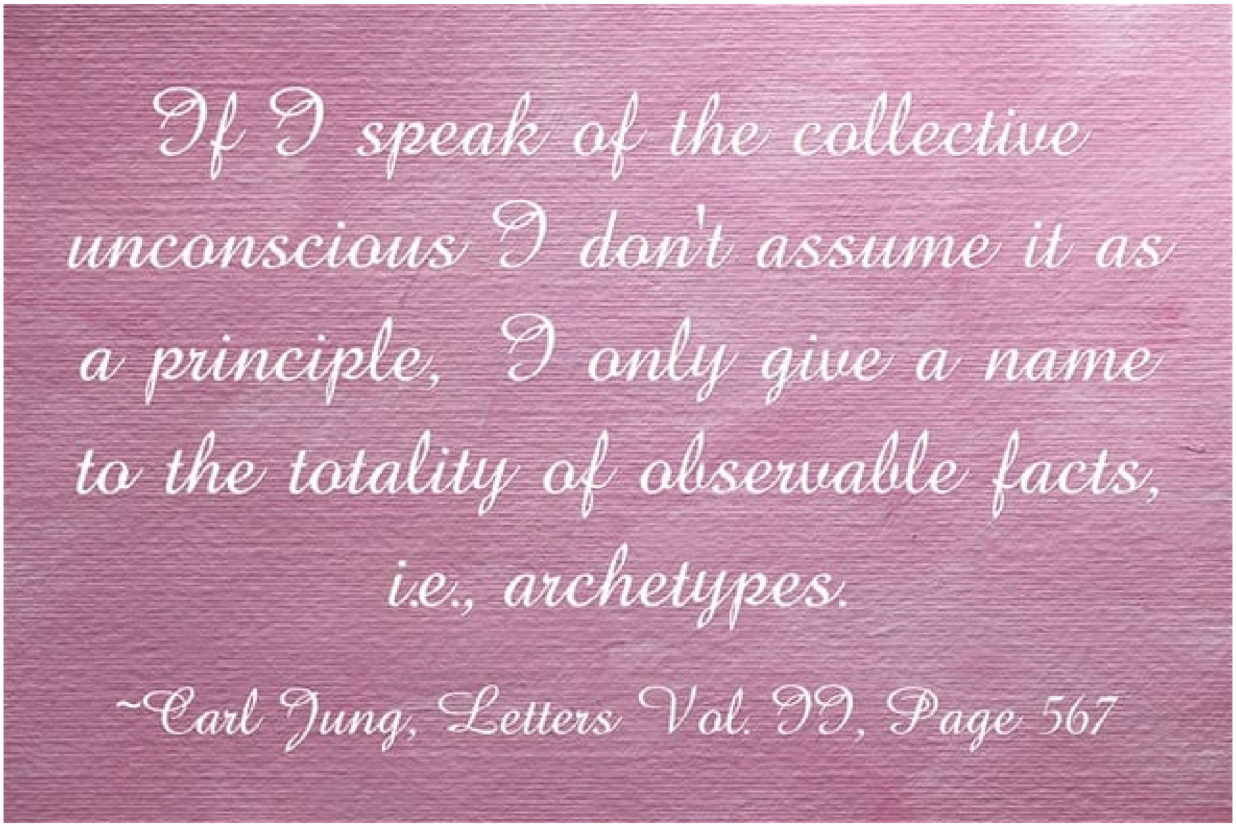
Under these circumstances I do make the claim of being "scientific" because I do exactly what you describe as the "scientific method." I observe, I classify, I establish relations and sequences between the observed data, and I even show the possibility of prediction.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 567

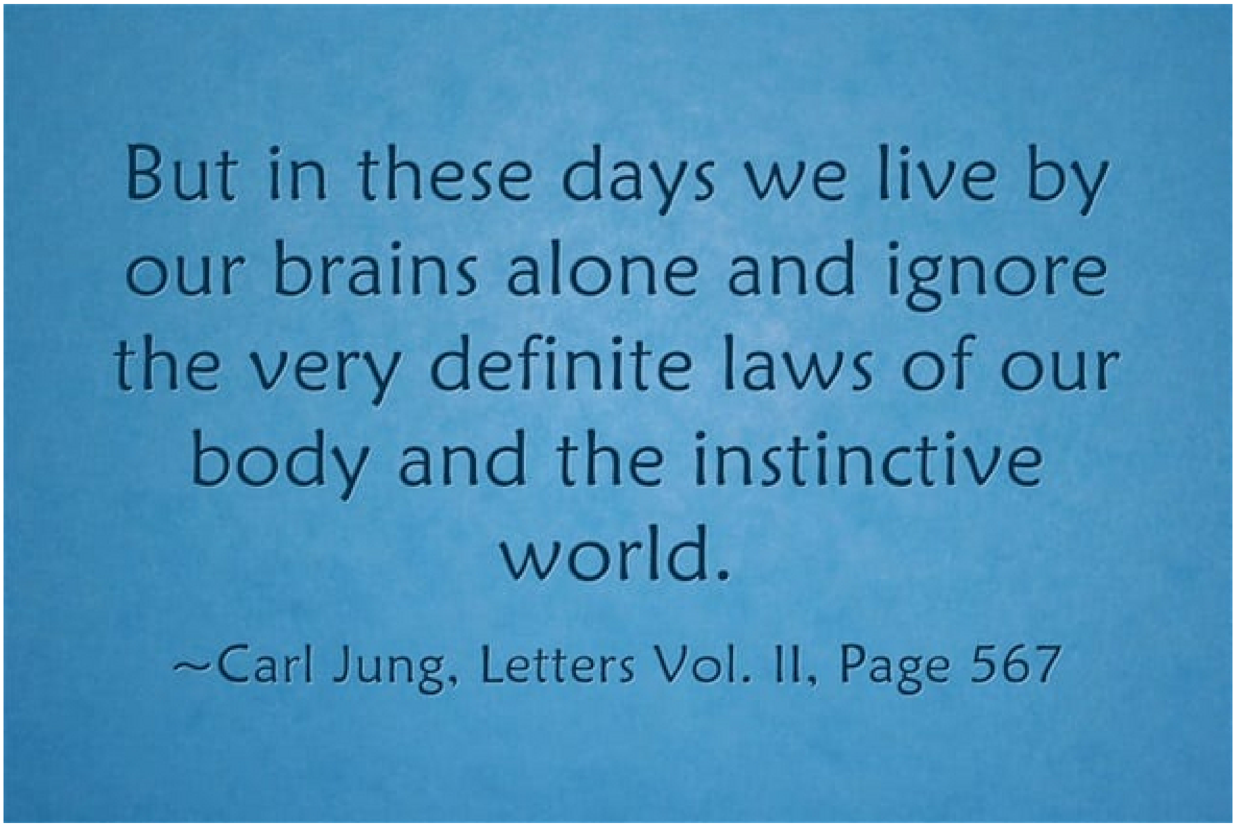
Under these circumstances I do make the claim of being "scientific" because I do exactly what you describe as the "scientific method." I observe, I classify, I establish relations and sequences between the observed data, and I even show the possibility of prediction. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 567



If I speak of the collective unconscious I don't assume it as a principle, I only give a name to the totality of observable facts, i.e., archetypes.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 567

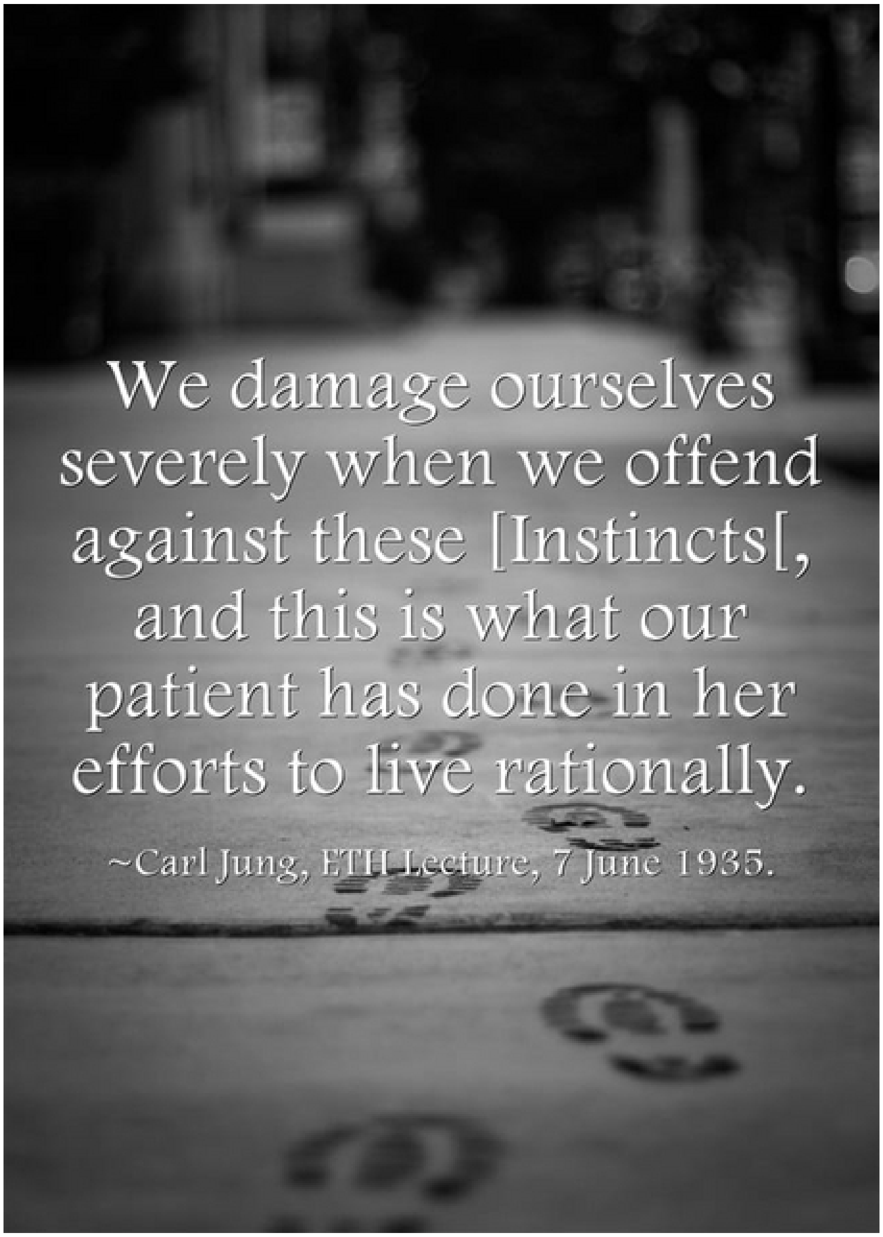
If I speak of the collective unconscious I don’t assume it as a principle,
I only give a name to the totality of observable facts, i.e., archetypes. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 567



But in these days we live by our brains alone and ignore the very definite laws of our body and the instinctive world.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 567

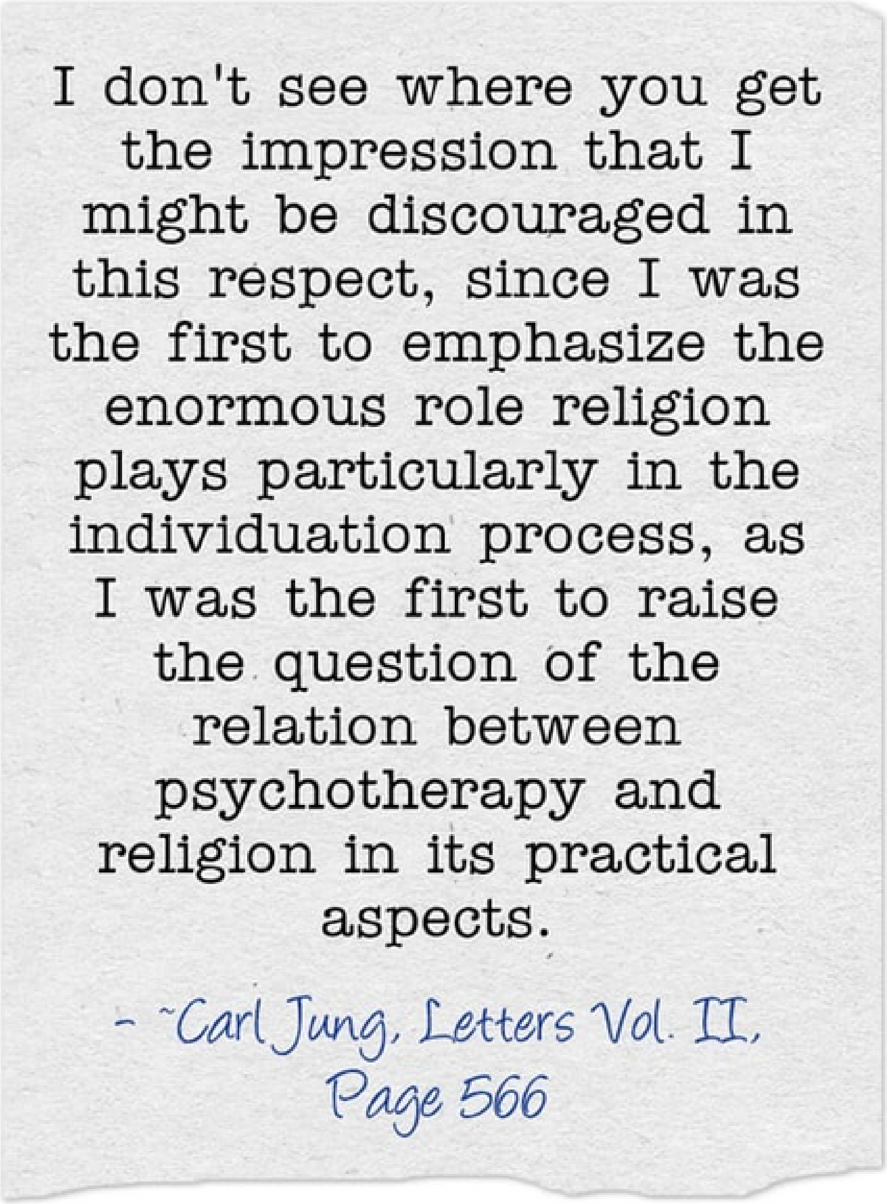
But in these days we live by our brains alone and ignore the very definite laws of our body and the instinctive world.
Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 567



We damage ourselves severely when we offend against these [Instincts[, and this is what our patient has done in her efforts to live rationally.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture, 7 June 1935.

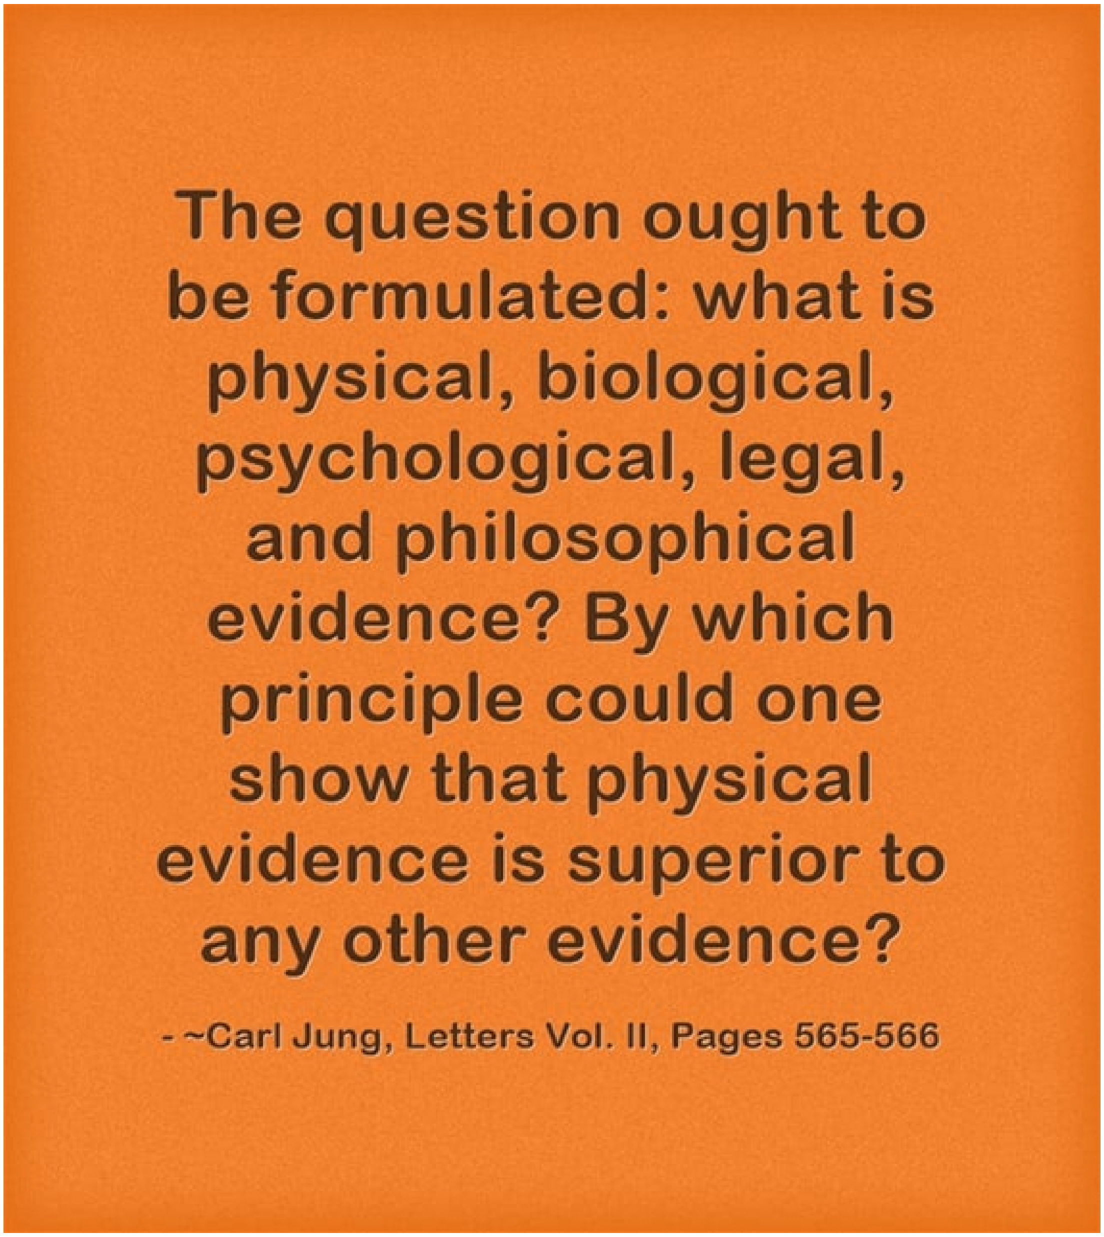
We damage ourselves severely when we offend against these, and this is what our patient has done in her efforts to live rationally. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture, 7 June 1935.



I don't see where you get the impression that I might be discouraged in this respect, since I was the first to emphasize the enormous role religion plays particularly in the individuation process, as I was the first to raise the question of the relation between psychotherapy and religion in its practical aspects.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 566

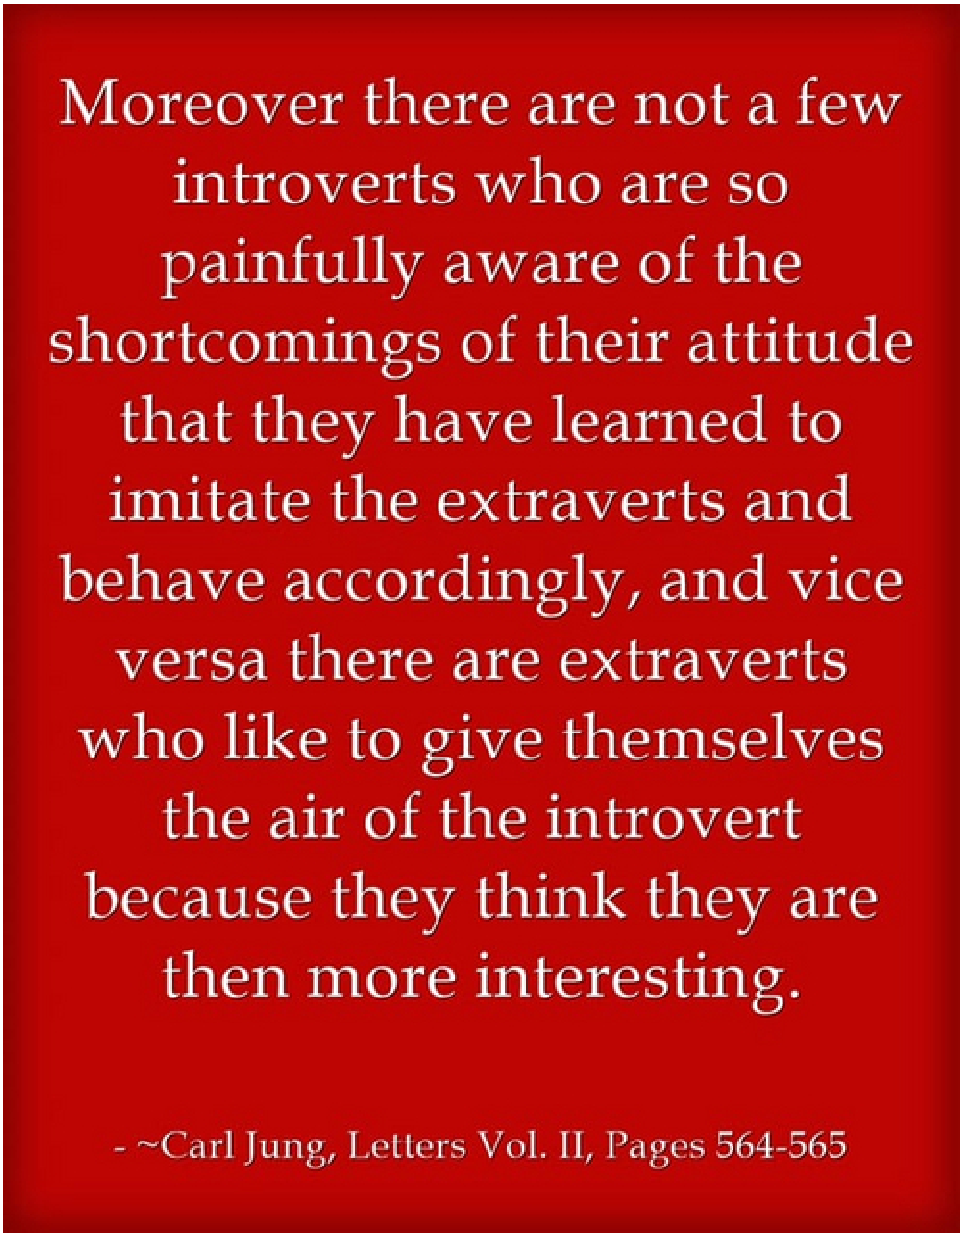
I don’t see where you get the impression that I might be discouraged in this respect, since I was the first to emphasize the enormous role religion plays particularly in the individuation process, as I was the first to raise the question of the relation between psychotherapy and religion in its practical aspects. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 566



The question ought to be formulated: what is physical, biological, psychological, legal, and philosophical evidence? By which principle could one show that physical evidence is superior to any other evidence?

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 565-566

The question ought to be formulated: what is physical, biological, psychological, legal, and philosophical evidence? By which principle could one show that physical evidence is superior to any other evidence? Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 565-566



Moreover there are not a few introverts who are so painfully aware of the shortcomings of their attitude that they have learned to imitate the extraverts and behave accordingly, and vice versa there are extraverts who like to give themselves the air of the introvert because they think they are then more interesting.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 564-565

Moreover there are not a few introverts who are so painfully aware of the shortcomings of their attitude that they have learned to imitate the extraverts and behave accordingly, and vice versa there are extraverts who like to give themselves the air of the introvert because they think they are then more interesting. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 564-565

Although I have never made a statistique of this kind I have always been impressed by the fact that pipe-smokers are usually introverted.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 564-565

Although I have never made a statistique of this kind I have always been impressed by the fact that pipe-smokers are usually introverted. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 564-565

The typical extravert is too much of a busybody to bother and fuss with the pipe which demands infinitely more nursing than a cigarette that can be lighted or thrown away in a second.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 564-565

The typical extravert is too much of a busybody to bother and fuss with the pipe which demands infinitely more nursing than a cigarette that can be lighted or thrown away in a second. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages, 564-565

That does not prevent me from having found heavy cigarette-smokers among my introverts and not a few pipe-smokers among the extraverts, but normally with empty pipes.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 564-565

That does not prevent me from having found heavy cigarette-smokers among my introverts and not a few pipe-smokers among the extraverts, but normally with empty pipes. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 564-565

I cannot omit to remark that the diagnosis is not rarely hampered by the fact that it is chiefly extraverts who resent being called extraverts, as if it were a derogatory designation

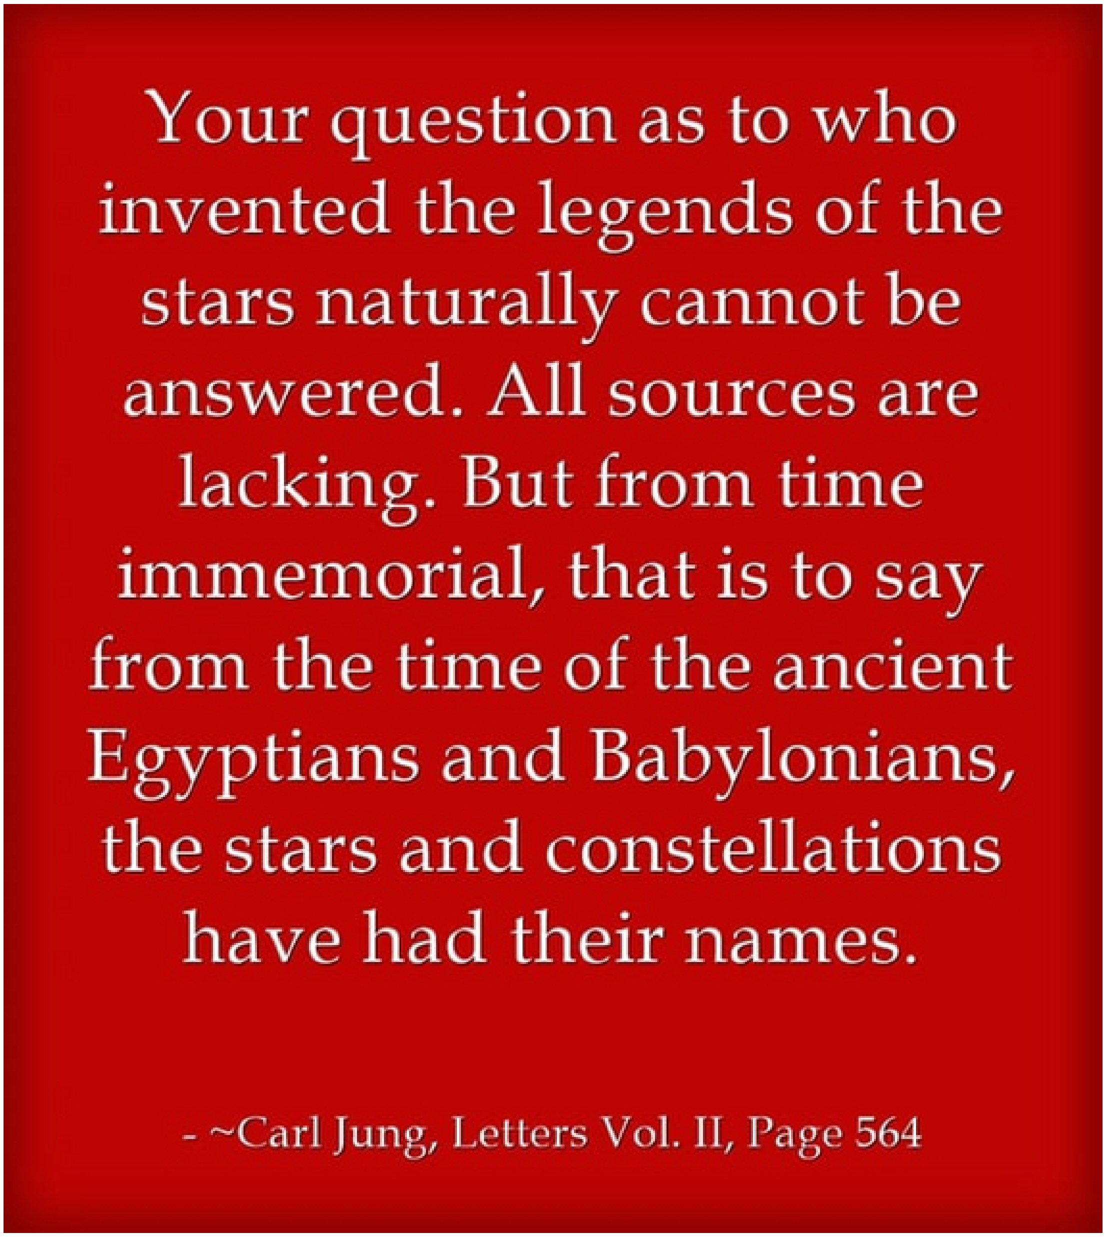
- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II,
Pages 564-565

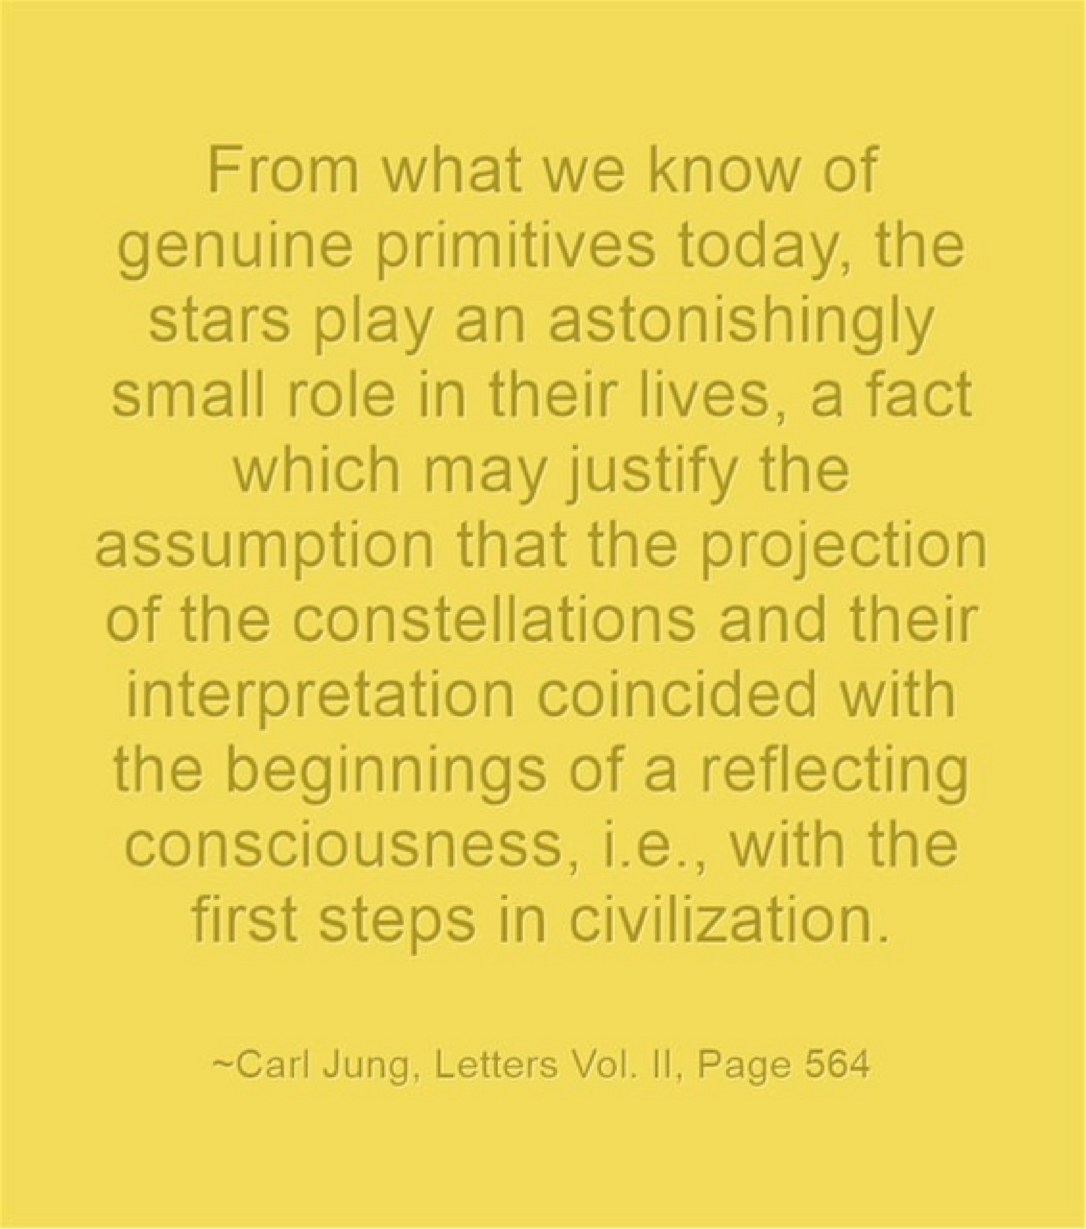
I cannot omit to remark that the diagnosis is not rarely hampered by the fact that it is chiefly extraverts who resent being called extraverts, as if it were a derogatory designation. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 564-565



Your question as to who invented the legends of the stars naturally cannot be answered. All sources are lacking. But from time immemorial, that is to say from the time of the ancient Egyptians and Babylonians, the stars and constellations have had their names.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 564

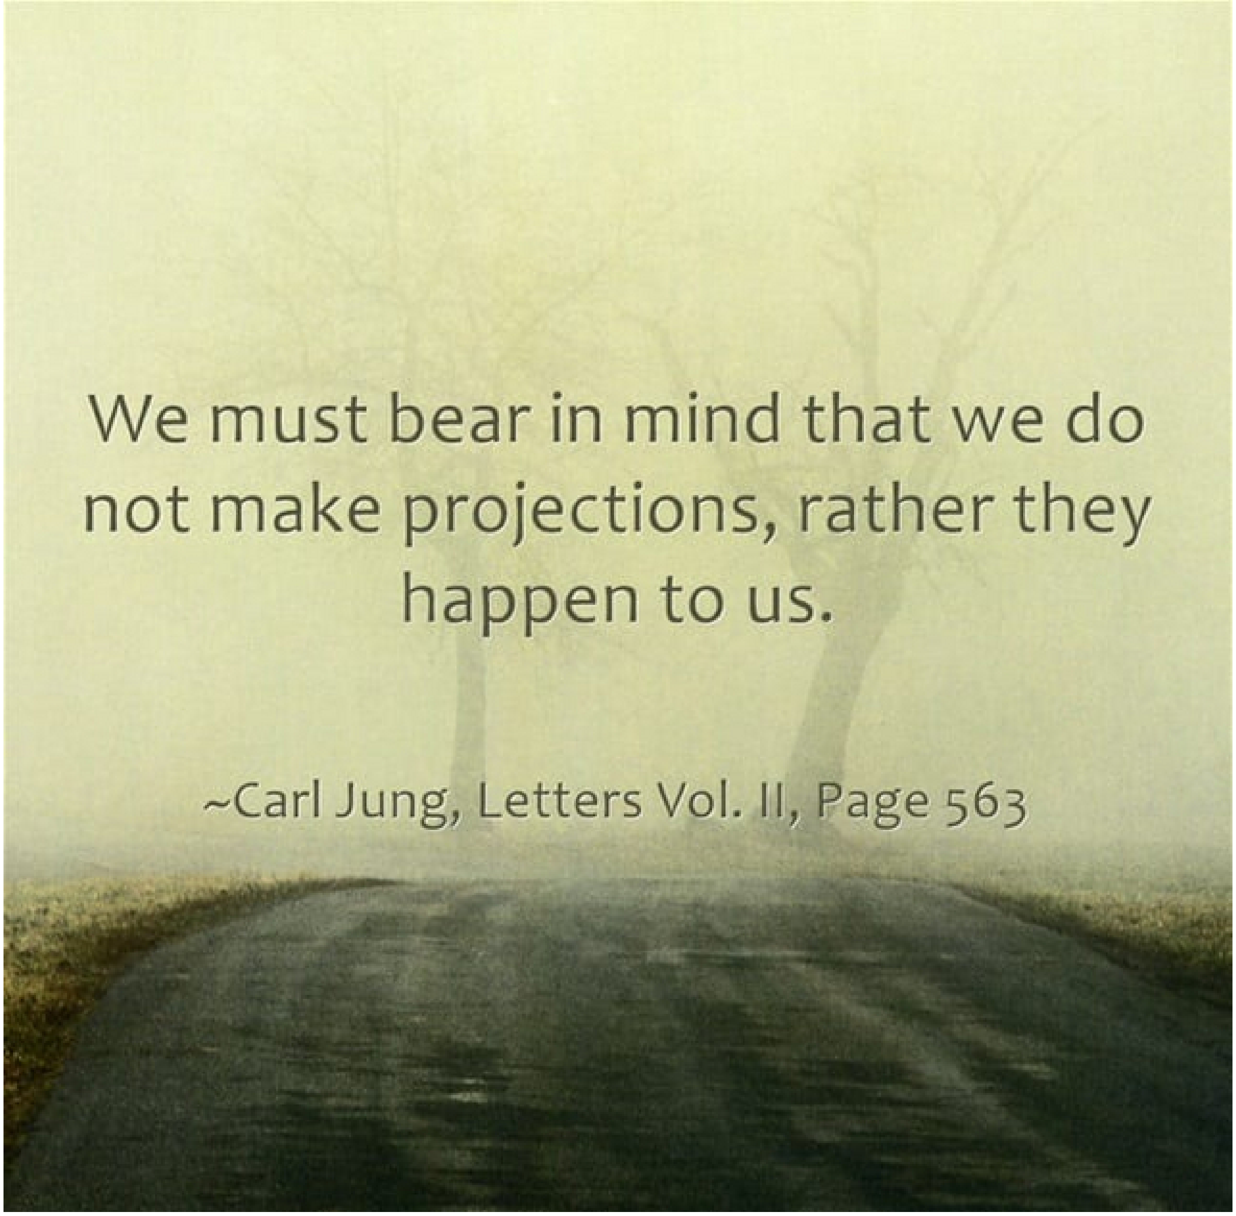
Your question as to who invented the legends of the stars naturally cannot be answered. All sources are lacking. But from time immemorial, that is to say from the time of the ancient Egyptians and Babylonians, the stars and constellations have had their names. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 563.



From what we know of genuine primitives today, the stars play an astonishingly small role in their lives, a fact which may justify the assumption that the projection of the constellations and their interpretation coincided with the beginnings of a reflecting consciousness, i.e., with the first steps in civilization.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 564

From what we know of genuine primitives today, the stars play an astonishingly small role in their lives, a fact which may justify the assumption that the projection of the constellations and their interpretation coincided with the beginnings of a reflecting consciousness, i.e., with the first steps in civilization. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 563.



We must bear in mind that we do not make projections, rather they happen to us.
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 563

We must bear in mind that we do not make projections, rather they happen to us. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 563.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/e7a83-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/aeb21-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/8be39-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/a9366-ggg.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/9d8ae-hhh.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/0e8c9-iii.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/8606c-jjj.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/43629-kkk.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/0b31d-lll.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/5dde7-mmm.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/1f3e2-nnn.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/8bb7f-ooo.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/328ee-ppp.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/39cf4-qqq.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/abc1e-rrr.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/dd0c4-sss.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/2fde8-ttt.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/bd243-uuu.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/3afa0-vvv.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/8c362-www.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/dc1a8-xxx.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/78841-yyy.jpg`

Carl Jung warns against the use of even non-addictive drugs by Americans. (2019-11-24 03:20)

[1]

[2]C. G. Jung – Richard Evans Interviews Transcript of the 1957 Films

Evans: There is certainly nothing mystical about the statements you have just been making. Now to pursue this further, another development that falls right in line with this whole discussion of psychosomatic medicine has been the use of drugs to deal with psychological problems. Of course, historically drugs have been used a great deal by people to try to forget their troubles, to relieve pain, etc. However, a particular development has been the so-called non-addictive tranquilizing drugs. These, of course, became prominent in France with the drug, chlorpromazine. Then followed such drugs as reserpine-serpentina, and a great variety of milder tranquilizers, known by such trade names as Miltown and Equinal. They are now being administered very freely to patients by general practitioners and internists. In other words, not only are the stronger tranquilizers being administered to mentally ill patients such as schizophrenics, but to a great extent today these drugs are being dispensed almost as freely as aspirins to reduce everyday tensions.

Jung: This practice is very dangerous.

Evans: Why do you think this is dangerous? These drugs are supposed to be nonaddictive.

Jung: It’s just like the compulsion that is caused by morphine or heroin. It becomes a habit. You don’t know what you do, you see, when you use such drugs. It is like the abuse of narcotics.

Evans: But the argument is that these are not habit-forming; they are not physiologically addictive.

Jung: Oh, yes, that's what one says.

Evans: But you feel that psychologically there is still addiction?

Jung: Yes. For instance, there are many drugs that don't produce habits, the kind of habits that morphine does; yet it becomes a different kind of habit, a psychical habit, and that is just as bad as anything else.

Evans: Have you actually seen any patients or had any contact with individuals who have been taking these particular drugs, these tranquilizers?

Jung: I can't say. You see, with us there are very few. In America there are all the little powders and the tablets. Happily enough, we are not yet so far. You see, American life is in a subtle way so one-sided and so uprooted that you must have something with which to compensate the real nature of man. You have to pacify your unconscious all along the line because it is in absolute uproar; so at the slightest provocation you have a big moral rebellion in America. Look at the rebellion of modern youth in America, the sexual rebellion, and all that. These rebellions occur because the real, natural man is just in open rebellion against the utterly inhuman form of American life. Americans are absolutely divorced from nature in a way, and that accounts for that drug abuse.

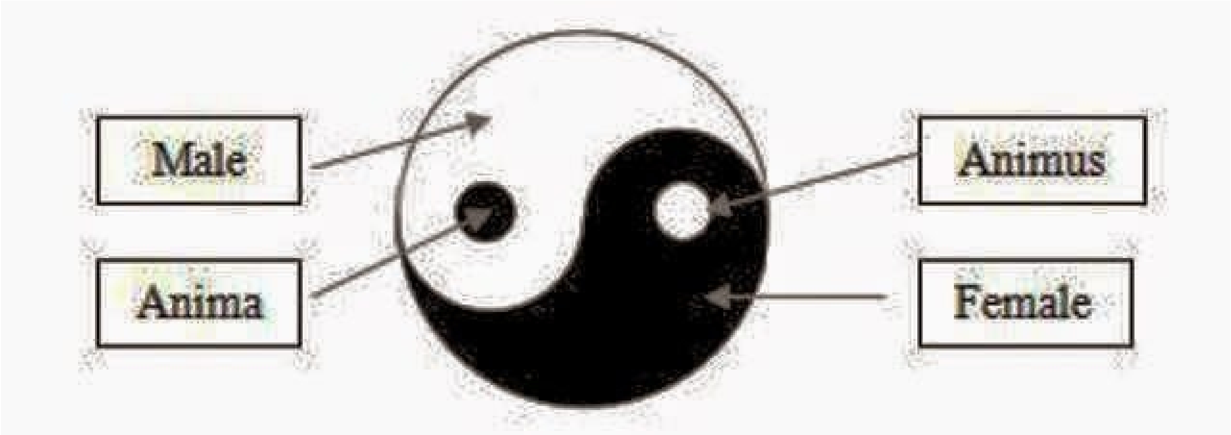
Evans: But what about the treatment of individuals who are seriously mentally ill? We have the problem of hospitalized, psychotic patients. For instance, certain schizophrenics are so withdrawn that they are virtually impossible to interact with in psychotherapy; so in many hospitals in the United States, drugs such as chlorpromazine have been used in order to render many such patients more amenable to psychotherapy. I don't think most of our practitioners believe the drugs cure the patients in themselves, but they at least make the patient more amenable to therapy.

Jung: Yes, the only question is whether that amenability is a real thing or drug-induced. I am sure that any kind of suggestive treatment will have effect, because these people simply become suggestible. You see, any drug or shock in the mind will lower stamina, making these people accessible to suggestion. Then, of course, they can be led, can be made into something, but it is not a very happy result. Carl Jung; Conversations with C.G. Carl Jung

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/9874c-drug.jpg`
2. `http://gnosis.org/Evans-Jung-Interview/evans5.html`

Carl Jung on the Anima and Animus (2019-11-24 03:28)

[1]



[2]Carl Jung - AION CW 9ii

III. The Syzygy: Anima and Animus

What, then, is this projection-making factor? The East calls it the "Spinning Woman" Maya, who creates illusion by her dancing. Had we not long since known it from the symbolism of dreams, this hint from the Orient would put us on the right track: the enveloping, embracing, and devouring element points unmistakably to the mother, that is, to the son's relation to the real mother, to her imago, and to the woman who is to become a mother for him.

His Eros is passive like a child's; he hopes to be caught, sucked in, enveloped, and devoured.

He seeks, as it were, the protecting, nourishing, charmed circle of the mother, the condition of the infant released from every care, in which the outside world bends over him and even forces happiness upon him. No wonder the real world vanishes from sight!

If this situation is dramatized, as the unconscious usually dramatizes it, then there appears before you on the psychological stage a man living regressively, seeking his childhood and his mother, fleeing from a cold cruel world which denies him understanding.

Often a mother appears beside him who apparently shows not the slightest concern that her little son should become a man, but who, with tireless and self-immolating effort, neglects nothing that might hinder him from growing up and marrying.

You behold the secret conspiracy between mother and son, and how each helps the other to betray life.

Where does the guilt lie? With the mother, or with the son? Probably with both.

The unsatisfied longing of the son for life and the world ought to be taken seriously.

There is in him a desire to touch reality, to embrace the earth and fructify the field of the world. But he makes no more than a series of fitful starts, for his initiative as well as his staying power are crippled by the secret memory that the world and happiness may be had as a gift from the mother.

The fragment of world which he, like every man, must encounter again and again is never quite the right one, since it does not fall into his lap, does not meet him half way, but remains resistant, has to be conquered, and submits only to force.

It makes demands on the masculinity of a man, on his ardour, above all on his courage and resolution when it comes to throwing his whole being into the scales.

For this he would need a faithless Eros, one capable of forgetting his mother and undergoing the pain of relinquishing the first love of his life.

The mother, foreseeing this danger, has carefully inculcated into him the virtues of faithfulness, devotion, loyalty, so as to protect him from the moral disruption which is the risk of every life adventure.

He has learnt these lessons only too well, and remains true to his mother. This naturally causes her the deepest anxiety (when, to her greater glory, he turns out to be a homosexual, for example) and at the same time affords her an unconscious satisfaction that is positively mythological.

For, in the relationship now reigning between them, there is consummated the immemorial and most sacred archetype of the marriage of mother and son.

What, after all, has commonplace reality to offer, with its registry offices, pay envelopes, and monthly rent, that could outweigh the mystic awe of the hieros games?

Or the star-crowned woman whom the dragon pursues, or the pious obscurities veiling the marriage of the Lamb?

This myth, better than any other, illustrates the nature of the collective unconscious.

At this level the mother is both old and young, Demeter and Persephone, and the son is spouse and sleeping suckling rolled into one.

The imperfections of real life, with its laborious adaptations and manifold disappointments, naturally cannot compete with such a state of indescribable fulfilment.

In the case of the son, the projection-making factor is identical with the mother-imago, and this is consequently taken to be the real mother.

The projection can only be dissolved when the son sees that in the realm of his psyche there is an image not only of the mother but of the daughter, the sister, the beloved, the heavenly goddess, and the chthonic Baubo.

Every mother and every beloved is forced to become the carrier and embodiment of this omnipresent and ageless image, which corresponds to the deepest reality in a man.

It belongs to him, this perilous image of Woman; she stands for the loyalty which in the interests of life he must sometimes forgo; she is the much needed compensation for the risks, struggles, sacrifices that all end in disappointment; she is the solace for all the bitterness of life.

And, at the same time, she is the great illusionist, the seductress, who draws him into life with her Maya and not only into life's reasonable and useful aspects, but into its frightful paradoxes and ambivalences where good and evil, success and ruin, hope and despair, counterbalance one another.

Because she is his greatest danger she demands from a man his greatest, and if he has it in him she will receive it.

This image is "My Lady Soul," as Spitteler called her.

I have suggested instead the term "anima," as indicating something specific, for which the expression "soul" is too general and too vague.

The empirical reality summed up under the concept of the anima forms an extremely dramatic content of the unconscious.

It is possible to describe this content in rational, scientific language, but in this way one entirely fails to express its living character.

Therefore, in describing the living processes of the psyche, I deliberately and consciously give preference to a dramatic, mythological way of thinking and speaking, because this is not only more expressive but also more exact than an abstract scientific terminology, which is wont to toy with the notion that its theoretic formulations may one fine day be resolved into algebraic equations.

The projection-making factor is the anima, or rather the unconscious as represented by the anima.

Whenever she appears, in dreams, visions, and fantasies, she takes on personified form, thus demonstrating that the factor she embodies possesses all the outstanding characteristics of a feminine being.

She is not an invention of the conscious, but a spontaneous product of the unconscious. Nor is she a substitute figure for the mother.

On the contrary, there is every likelihood that the numinous qualities which make the mother-imago so dangerously powerful derive from the collective archetype of the anima, which is incarnated anew in every male child.

Since the anima is an archetype that is found in men, it is reasonable to suppose that an equivalent archetype must be present in women; for just as the man is compensated by a feminine element, so woman is compensated by a masculine one.

I do not, however, wish this argument to give the impression that these compensatory relationships were arrived at by deduction.

On the contrary, long and varied experience was needed in order to grasp the nature of anima and animus empirically.

Whatever we have to say about these archetypes, therefore, is either directly verifiable or at least rendered probable by the facts.

At the same time, I am fully aware that we are discussing pioneer work which by its very nature can only be provisional.

Just as the mother seems to be the first carrier of the projection-making factor for the son, so is the father for the daughter.

Practical experience of these relationships is made up of many individual cases presenting all kinds of variations on the same basic theme.

A concise description of them can, therefore, be no more than schematic.

Woman is compensated by a masculine element and therefore her unconscious has, so to speak, a masculine imprint.

This results in a considerable psychological difference between men and women, and accordingly I have called the projection-making factor in women the animus, which means mind or spirit.

The animus corresponds to the paternal Logos just as the anima corresponds to the maternal Eros.

But I do not wish or intend to give these two intuitive concepts too specific a definition.

I use Eros and Logos merely as conceptual aids to describe the fact that woman's consciousness is characterized more by the connective quality of Eros than by the discrimination and cognition associated with Logos. In men, Eros, the function of relationship, is usually less developed than Logos. In women, on the other hand, Eros is an expression of their true nature, while their Logos is often only a regrettable accident.

It gives rise to misunderstandings and annoying interpretations in the family circle and among friends.

This is because it consists of opinions instead of reflections, and by opinions I mean a priori assumptions that lay claim to absolute truth.

Such assumptions, as everyone knows, can be extremely irritating.

As the animus is partial to argument, he can best be seen at work in disputes where both parties know they are tight.

Men can argue in a very womanish way, too, when they are anima-possessed and have thus been transformed into the animus of their own anima.

With them the question becomes one of personal vanity and touchiness (as if they were females); with women it is a question of power, whether of truth or justice or some other "ism" for the dressmaker and hairdresser have already taken care of their vanity.

The "Father" (i.e., the sum of conventional opinions) always plays a great role in female argumentation.

No matter how friendly and obliging a woman's Eros may be, no logic on earth can shake her if she is ridden by the animus.

Often the man has the feelingand he is not altogether wrong that only seduction or a beating or rape would have the necessary power of persuasion.

He is unaware that this highly dramatic situation would instantly come to a banal and unexciting end if he were to quit the field and let a second woman carry on the battle (his wife, for instance, if she herself is not the fiery war horse).

This sound idea seldom or never occurs to him, because no man can converse with an animus for five minutes without becoming the victim of his own anima.

Anyone who still had enough sense of humour to listen objectively to the ensuing dialogue would be staggered by the vast number of commonplaces, misapplied truisms, cliches from newspapers and novels, shop-soiled platitudes of every description interspersed with vulgar abuse and brain-splitting lack of logic.

It is a dialogue which, irrespective of its participants, is repeated millions and millions of times in all the languages of the world and always remains essentially the same.

This singular fact is due to the following circumstance: when animus and anima meet, the animus draws his sword of power and the anima ejects her poison of illusion and seduction.

The outcome need not always be negative, since the two are equally likely to fall in love (a special instance of love at first sight).

The language of love is of astonishing uniformity, using the well-worn formulas with the utmost devotion and fidelity, so that once again the two partners find themselves in a banal collective situation.

Yet they live in the illusion that they are related to one another in a most individual way.

In both its positive and its negative aspects the anirna /animus relationship is always full of "animosity/' i.e., it is emotional, and hence collective.

Affects lower the level of the relationship and bring it closer to the common instinctual basis, which no longer has anything individual about it.

Very often the relationship runs its course heedless of its human performers, who afterwards do not know what happened to them.

Whereas the cloud of "animosity" surrounding the man is composed chiefly of sentimentality and resentment, in woman it expresses itself in the form of opinionated views, interpretations, insinuations, and misconstructions, which all have the purpose (sometimes attained) of severing the relation between two human beings.

The woman, like the man, becomes wrapped in a veil of illusions by her demon-familiar, and, as the daughter who alone understands her father (that is, is eternally right in everything), she is translated to the land of sheep, where she is put to graze by the shepherd of her soul, the animus.

Like the anima, the animus too has a positive aspect.

Through the figure of the father he expresses not only conventional opinion butequally what we call "spirit," philosophical or religious ideas in particular, or rather the attitude resulting from them.

Thus the animus is a psychopomp, a mediator between the conscious and the unconscious and a personification of the latter.

Just as the anima becomes, through integration, the Eros of consciousness, so the animus becomes a Logos; and in the same way that the anima gives relationship and relatedness to a man’s consciousness, the animus gives to woman’s consciousness a capacity for reflection, deliberation, and self-knowledge.

The effect of anima and animus on the ego is in principle the same.

This effect is extremely difficult to eliminate because, in the first place, it is uncommonly strong and immediately fills the ego-personality with an unshakable feeling o lightness and righteousness. In the second place, the cause of the effect is projected and appears to lie in objects and objective situations.

Both these characteristics can, I believe, be traced back to the peculiarities of the archetype.

For the archetype, of course, exists a priori. This may possibly explain the often totally irrational yet undisputed and indisputable existence of certain moods and opinions.

Perhaps these are so notoriously difficult to influence because of the powerfully suggestive effect emanating from the archetype. Consciousness is fascinated by it, held captive, as if hypnotized.

Very often the ego experiences a vague feeling of moral defeat and then behaves all the more defensively, defiantly, and self-righteously, thus setting up a vicious circle which only increases its feeling of inferiority.

The bottom is then knocked out of the human relationship, for, like megalomania, a feeling of inferiority makes mutual recognition impossible, and without this there is no relationship.

As I said, it is easier to gain insight into the shadow than into the anima or animus.

With the shadow, we have the advantage of being prepared in some sort by our education, which has always endeavoured to convince people that they are not one-hundred-per-cent pure gold.

So everyone immediately understands what is meant by "shadow," "inferior personality," etc.

And if he has forgotten, his memory can easily be refreshed by a Sunday sermon, his wife, or the tax collector. With the anima and animus, however, things are by no means so simple.

Firstly, there is no moral education in this respect, and secondly, most people are content to be self-righteous and prefer mutual vilification (if nothing worse!) to the recognition of their projections. Indeed, it seems a very natural state of affairs for men to have irrational moods and women irrational opinions.

Presumably this situation is grounded on instinct and must remain as it is to ensure that the Empedoclean game of the hate and love of the elements shall continue for all eternity.

Nature is conservative and does not easily allow her courses to be altered; she defends in the most stubborn way the inviolability of the preserves where anima and animus roam.

Hence it is much more difficult to become conscious of one’s anima/animus projections than to acknowledge one’s shadow side.

One has, of course, to overcome certain moral obstacles, such as vanity, ambition, conceit, resentment, etc., but in the case of projections all sorts of purely intellectual difficulties are added, quite apart from the contents of the projection, which one simply doesn’t know how to cope with.

And on top of all this there arises a profound doubt as to whether one is not meddling too much with nature’s business by prodding into consciousness things which it would have been better to leave asleep.

Although there are, in my experience, a fair number of people who can understand without special intellectual or moral difficulties what is meant by anima and animus, one finds very many more who have the greatest trouble in visualizing these empirical concepts as anything concrete.

This shows that they fall a little outside the usual range of experience. They are unpopular precisely because they seem unfamiliar.

The consequence is that they mobilize prejudice and become taboo like everything else that is unexpected.

So if we set it up as a kind of requirement that projections should be dissolved, because it is wholesomer that way and in every respect more advantageous, we are entering upon new ground. Up till now everybody has been convinced that the idea "my father," "my mother," etc., is nothing but a faithful reflection of the real parent, corresponding in every detail to the original, so that when someone says "my father" he means no more and no less than what his father is in reality.

This is actually what he supposes he does mean, but a supposition of identity by no means brings that identity about. This is where the fallacy of the enkekalymmenos ('the veiled one') comes in.

If one includes in the psychological equation X's picture of his father, which he takes for the real father, the equation will not work out, because the unknown quantity he has introduced does not tally with reality.

X has overlooked the fact that his idea of a person consists, in the first place, of the possibly very incomplete picture he has received of the real person and, in the second place, of the subjective modifications he has imposed upon this picture.

X's idea of his father is a complex quantity for which the real father is only in part responsible, an indefinitely large share falling to the son.

So true is this that every time he criticizes or praises his father he is unconsciously hitting back at himself, thereby bringing about those psychic consequences that overtake people who habitually disparage or overpraise themselves. If, however, X carefully compares his reactions with reality, he stands a chance of noticing that he has miscalculated The fallacy, which stems from Eubulidcs the Megarian, runs: "Can you recognize your father?" Yes. "Can you recognize this veiled one?"

No, "This veiled one is your father. Hence you can recognize your father and not recognize him," somewhere by not realizing long ago from his father's behaviour that the picture he has of him is a false one.

But as a rule X is convinced that he is right, and if anybody is wrong it must be the other fellow.

Should X have a poorly developed Eros, he will be either indifferent to the inadequate relationship he has with his father or else annoyed by the inconsistency and general Incomprehensibility of a father whose behaviour never really corresponds to the picture X has of him.

Therefore X thinks he has every right to feel hurt, misunderstood, and even betrayed.

One can imagine how desirable it would be in such cases to dissolve the projection.

And there are always optimists who believe that the golden age can be ushered in simply by telling people the right way to go.

But just let them try to explain to these people that they are acting like a dog chasing its own tail.

To make a person see the shortcomings of his attitude considerably more than mere "telling" is needed, for more is involved than ordinary common sense can allow.

What one is up against here is the kind of fateful misunderstanding which, under ordinary conditions, remains forever inaccessible to insight.

It is rather like expecting the average respectable citizen to recognize himself as a criminal.

I mention all this just to illustrate the order of magnitude to which the anima/animus projections belong, and the moral and intellectual exertions that are needed to dissolve them.

Not all the contents of the anima and animus are projected, however.

Many of them appear spontaneously in dreams and so on, and many more can be made conscious through active imagination.

In this way we find that thoughts, feelings, and affects are alive in us which we would never have believed possible.

Naturally, possibilities of this sort seem utterly fantastic to anyone who has not experienced them himself, for a normal person "knows what he thinks."

Such a childish attitude on the part of the "normal person" is simply the rule, so that no one without experience in this field can be expected to understand the real nature of anima and animus.

With these reflections one gets into an entirely new world of psychological experience, provided of course that one succeeds in realizing them in practice.

Those who do succeed can hardly fail to be impressed by all that the ego does not know and never has known.

This increase in self-knowledge is still very rare nowadays and is usually paid for in advance with a neurosis, if not with something worse.

The autonomy of the collective unconscious expresses itself in the figures of anima and animus.

They personify those of its contents which, when withdrawn from projection, can be integrated into consciousness.

To this extent, both figures represent -functions which filter the contents of the collective unconscious through to the conscious mind.

They appear or behave as such, however, only so long as the tendencies of the conscious and unconscious do not diverge too greatly.

Should any tension arise, these functions, harmless till then, confront the conscious mind in personified form and behave rather like systems split off from the personality, or like part souls.

This comparison is inadequate in so far as nothing previously belonging to the ego personality has split off from it; on the contrary, the two figures represent a disturbing accretion.

The reason for their behaving in this way is that though the contents of anima and animus can be integrated they themselves cannot, since they are archetypes.

As such they are the foundation stones of the psychic structure, which in its totality exceeds the limits of consciousness and therefore can never become the object of direct cognition.

Though the effects of anima and animus can be made conscious, they themselves are factors transcending consciousness and beyond the reach of perception and volition.

Hence they remain autonomous despite the integration of their contents, and for this reason they should be borne constantly in mind.

This is extremely important from the therapeutic standpoint, because constant observation pays the unconscious a tribute that more or less guarantees its co-operation.

The unconscious as we know can never be "done with" once and for all. It is, in fact, one of the most important tasks of psychic hygiene to pay continual attention to the symptomatology of unconscious contents and processes, for the good reason that the conscious mind is always in danger of becoming one-sided, of keeping to well-worn paths and getting stuck in blind alleys.

The complementary and compensating function of the unconscious ensures that these clangers, which are especially great in neurosis, can in some measure be avoided.

It is only under ideal conditions, when life is still simple and unconscious enough to follow the serpentine path of instinct without hesitation or misgiving, that the compensation works with entire success.

The more civilized, the more unconscious and complicated a man is, the less he is able to follow his instincts.

His complicated living conditions and the influence of his environment are so strong that they drown the quiet voice of nature.

Opinions, beliefs, theories, and collective tendencies appear in its stead and back up all the aberrations of the conscious mind. Deliberate attention should then be given to the unconscious so that the compensation can set to work.

Hence it is especially important to picture the archetypes of the unconscious not as a rushing phantasmagoria of fugitive images but as constant, autonomous factors, which indeed they are.

Both these archetypes, as practical experience shows, possess a fatality that can on occasion produce tragic results.

They are quite literally the father and mother of all the disastrous entanglements of fate and have long been recognized as such by the whole world.

Together they form a divine pair, one of whom, in accordance with his Logos nature, is characterized by pneuma and nous, rather like Hermes with his ever-shifting hues, while the other, in accordance with her Eros nature, wears the features of Aphrodite, Helen (Selene), Persephone, and Hecate.

Both of them are unconscious powers, "gods" in fact, as the ancient world quite rightly conceived them to be.

To call them by this name is to give them that central position in the scale of psychological values which has always been theirs whether consciously acknowledged or not; for their power grows in proportion to the degree that they remain unconscious.

Those who do not see them are in their hands, just as a typhus epidemic flourishes best when its source is undiscovered.

Even in Christianity the divine syzygy has not become obsolete, but occupies the highest place as Christ and his bride the Church.

Parallels like these prove extremely helpful in our attempts to find the right criterion for gauging the significance of these two archetypes. What we can discover about them from the conscious side is so slight as to be almost imperceptible.

It is only when we throw light into the dark depths of the psyche and explore the strange and tortuous paths of human fate that it gradually becomes clear to us how immense is the influence wielded by these two factors that complement our conscious life.

Recapitulating, I should like to emphasize that the integration of the shadow, or the realization of the personal unconscious, marks the first stage in the analytic process, and that without it a recognition of anima and animus is impossible.

The shadow can be realized only through a relation to a partner, and anima and animus only through a relation to the opposite sex, because only in such a relation do their projections become operative.

The recognition of anima or animus gives rise, in a man, to a triad, one third of which is transcendent: the masculine subject, the opposing feminine subject, and the transcendent anima. With a woman the situation is reversed.

The missing fourth element that would make the triad a quaternity is, in a man, the archetype of the Wise Old Man, which I have not discussed here, and in a woman the Chthonic Mother.

These four constitute a half immanent and half transcendent quaternity, an archetype which I have called the ’marriage quaternio.

The marriage quaternio provides a schema not only for the self but also for the structure of primitive society with its cross-cousin marriage, marriage classes, and division of settlements into quarters.

The self, on the other hand, is a God image, or at least cannot be distinguished from one. Of this the early Christian spirit was not ignorant, otherwise Clement of Alexandria could never have said that he who knows himself knows God. Carl Jung, Aion

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/5b940-anima.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Aion-Researches-Phenomenology-Collected-Works/dp/069101826X/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jun`

g+aion&qid=1574588049&sr=8-1

Dr. Jung’s “short” 3-6 hour walks at 63 years of age. (2019-11-24 03:38)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

[Dr. Jung’s “short” 3-6 hour walks at 63 years of age.]

To Edwin Schmid

Dear Colleague, 18 April 1938

I am doing excellently on your diet.

The "short" walks have already stretched out to 3-6 hours.

I can also go mountain-climbing again, which suits me fine. Yesterday I climbed about 8oo metres without difficulty, from 900 to 1700.

The heart is coping well, only the legs are a bit stiff afterwards.

Should I take only dextrose, for instance in tea and coffee?

l am scrubbing oil on myself with a hard brush.

I hope to get some sunbathing. Up there in the snow it was too cold.

I have also dug, spread manure, and set potatoes, and besides that have written a longish paper in English.

As you see, I am bursting with energy.

With very best thanks,

Yours sincerely,

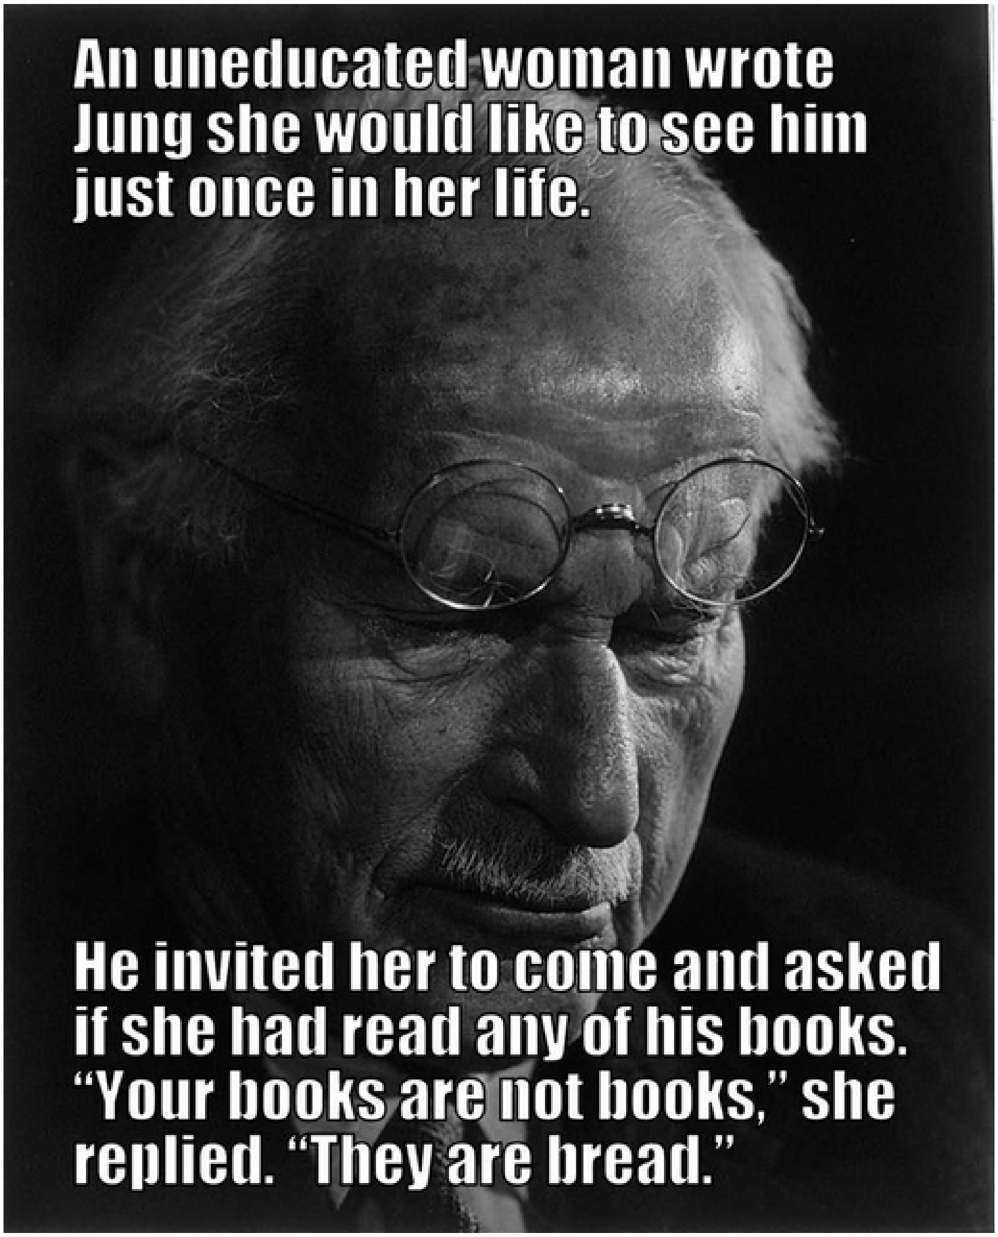
C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 244.

Note: [Dr. Schmid was treating Jung for the amoebic dysentery he contracted during his stay in India (Memories, p.280/262)]

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/f7840-walk.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574588414&sr=8-1`

"Your books are not books, Herr Professor. They are bread." (2019-11-24 03:47)

[1]



An uneducated woman wrote Jung she would like to see him just once in her life.
He invited her to come and asked if she had read any of his books. “Your books are not books,” she replied. “They are bread.”

[2]C. G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters (Bollingen Series XCVII)

I always remember a letter I received one morning, from a woman who wanted to see me just once in her life.

The letter made a very strong impression on me, I am not quite sure why. I invited her to come and she came.

She was very poor - poor intellectually too.

I don’t believe she had ever finished primary school.

She kept house for her brother; they ran a little newsstand.

I asked her kindly if she really understood my books which she said she had read. And she replied in this extraordinary way "Your books are not books, Herr Professor. They are bread."

And the little traveling salesman of women’s things who stopped me in the street and looked at me with immense eyes, saying "Are you really the man who writes those books? Are you truly the one who writes about these things no one knows? C.G. Jung Speaking, Page 402.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/02002-1bread.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Jung-Speaking-Interviews-Encounters-Bollingen/dp/B000MDINT0/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=william+mcguire+jung+speaking&qid=1574588695&sr=8-1`

Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-11-24 03:56)

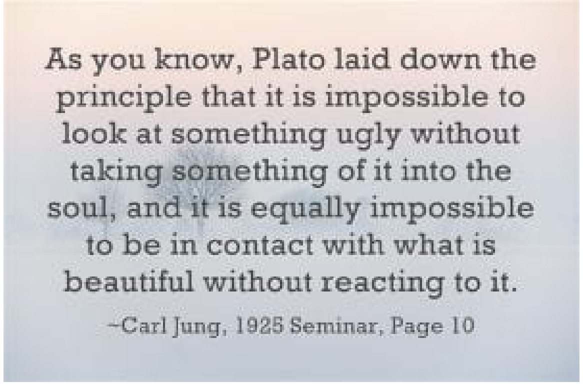
The analyst can never be sure that in making the patient throw away a wrong form, he is not going to throw away the contained value.

-~Carl Jung. 1925 Seminar. Page 10

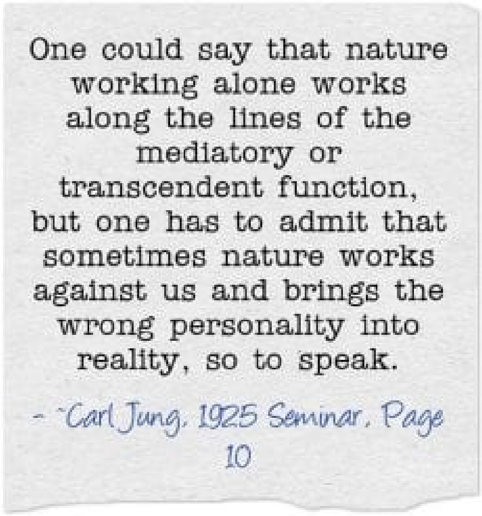
The analyst can never be sure that in making the patient throw away a wrong form, he is not going to throw away the contained value. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 10



As you know, Plato laid down the principle that it is impossible to look at something ugly without taking something of it into the soul, and it is equally impossible to be in contact with what is beautiful without reacting to it.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 10

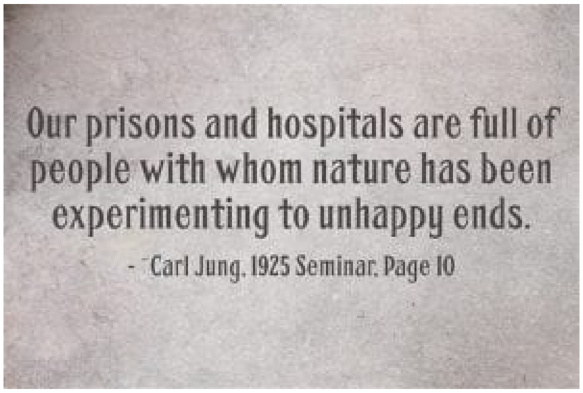
As you know, Plato laid down the principle that it is impossible to look at something ugly without taking something of it into the soul, and it is equally impossible to be in contact with what is beautiful without reacting to it. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 10



One could say that nature working alone works along the lines of the mediatory or transcendent function, but one has to admit that sometimes nature works against us and brings the wrong personality into reality, so to speak.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 10

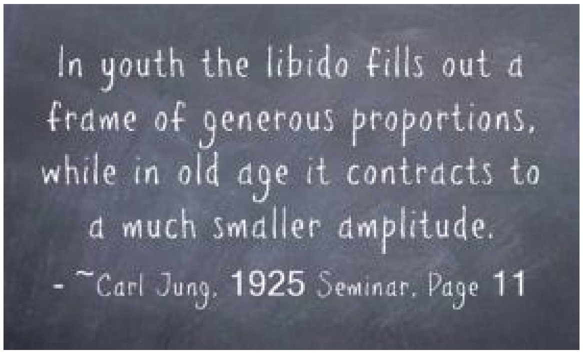
One could say that nature working alone works along the lines of the mediatory or transcendent function, but one has to admit that sometimes nature works against us and brings the wrong personality into reality, so to speak. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 10



Our prisons and hospitals are full of people with whom nature has been experimenting to unhappy ends.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 10

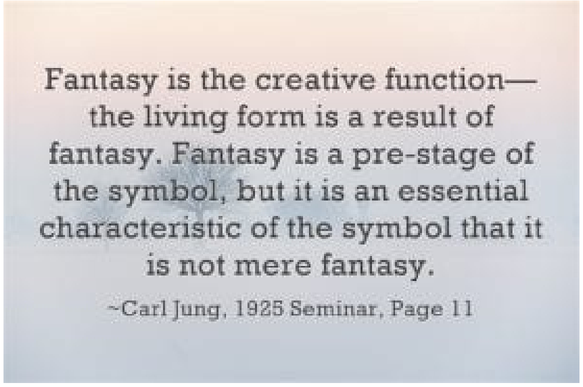
Our prisons and hospitals are full of people with whom nature has been experimenting to unhappy ends. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 10



In youth the libido fills out a frame of generous proportions, while in old age it contracts to a much smaller amplitude.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 11

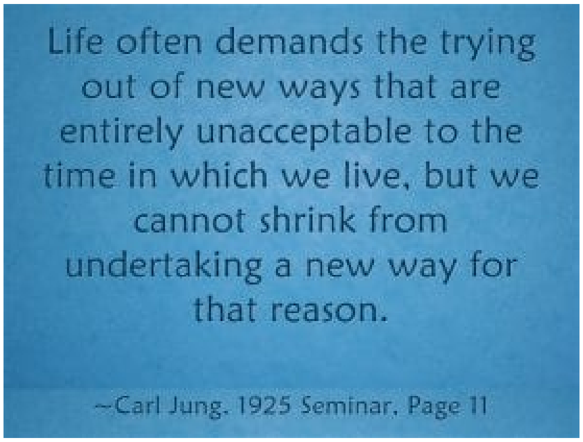
In youth the libido fills out a frame of generous proportions, while in old age it contracts to a much smaller amplitude. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 11



Fantasy is the creative function—the living form is a result of fantasy. Fantasy is a pre-stage of the symbol, but it is an essential characteristic of the symbol that it is not mere fantasy.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 11

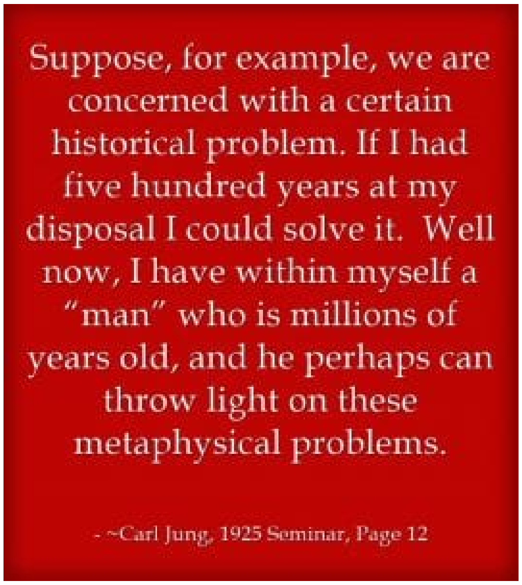
Fantasy is the creative function—the living form is a result of fantasy. Fantasy is a pre-stage of the symbol, but it is an essential characteristic of the symbol that it is not mere fantasy. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 11



Life often demands the trying out of new ways that are entirely unacceptable to the time in which we live, but we cannot shrink from undertaking a new way for that reason.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 11

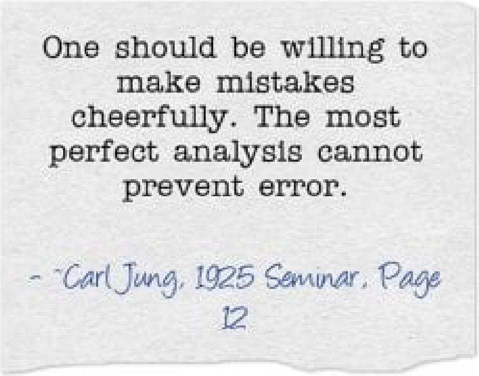
Life often demands the trying out of new ways that are entirely unacceptable to the time in which we live, but we cannot shrink from undertaking a new way for that reason. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 11



Suppose, for example, we are concerned with a certain historical problem. If I had five hundred years at my disposal I could solve it. Well now, I have within myself a "man" who is millions of years old, and he perhaps can throw light on these metaphysical problems.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 12

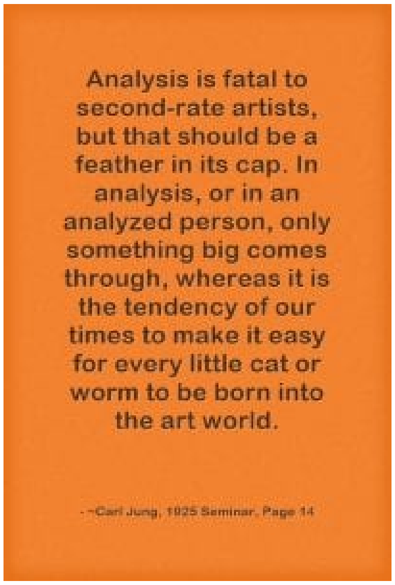
Suppose, for example, we are concerned with a certain historical problem. If I had five hundred years at my disposal I could solve it. Well now, I have within myself a “man” who is millions of years old, and he perhaps can throw light on these metaphysical problems. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 12



One should be willing to make mistakes cheerfully. The most perfect analysis cannot prevent error.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 12

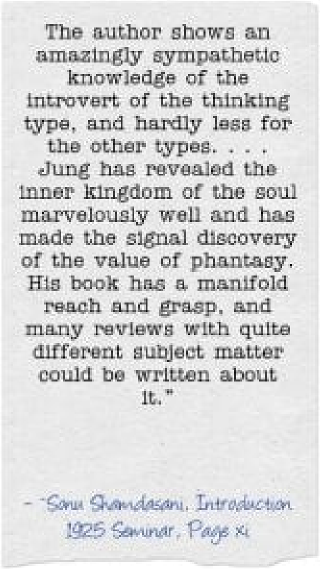
One should be willing to make mistakes cheerfully. The most perfect analysis cannot prevent error. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 13



Analysis is fatal to second-rate artists, but that should be a feather in its cap. In analysis, or in an analyzed person, only something big comes through, whereas it is the tendency of our times to make it easy for every little cat or worm to be born into the art world.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 14

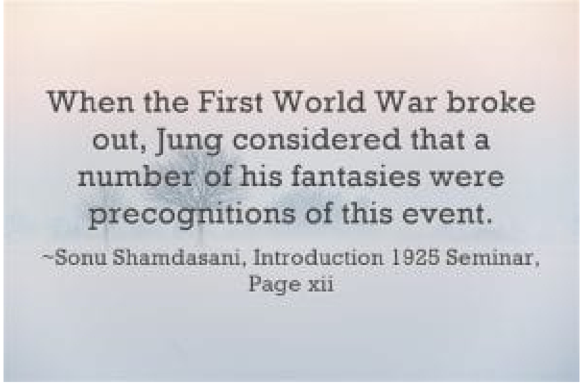
Analysis is fatal to second-rate artists, but that should be a feather in its cap. In analysis, or in an analyzed person, only something big comes through, whereas it is the tendency of our times to make it easy for every little cat or worm to be born into the art world. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 14



The author shows an amazingly sympathetic knowledge of the introvert of the thinking type, and hardly less for the other types. . . . Jung has revealed the inner kingdom of the soul marvelously well and has made the signal discovery of the value of phantasy. His book has a manifold reach and grasp, and many reviews with quite different subject matter could be written about it."

- ~Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xi

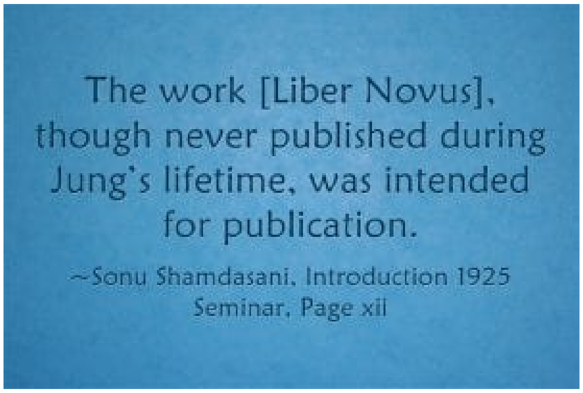
The author shows an amazingly sympathetic knowledge of the introvert of the thinking type, and hardly less for the other types. . . . Jung has revealed the inner kingdom of the soul marvelously well and has made the signal discovery of the value of phantasy. His book [Liber Novus] has a manifold reach and grasp, and many reviews with quite different subject matter could be written about it." Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xi



When the First World War broke out, Jung considered that a number of his fantasies were precognitions of this event.

~Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xii

When the First World War broke out, Jung considered that a number of his fantasies were precognitions of this event. Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xii

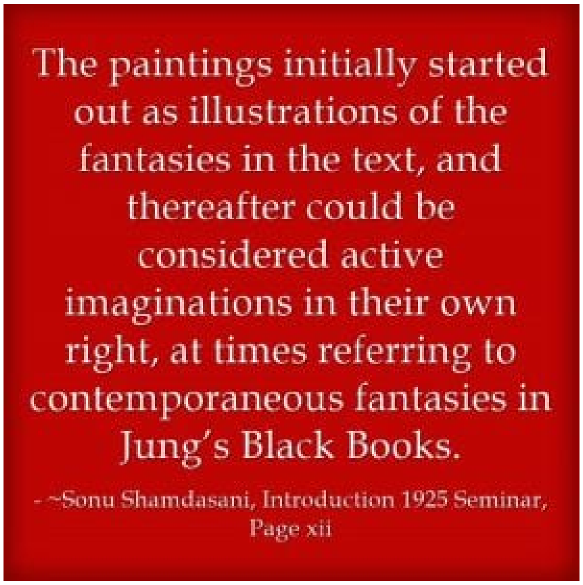


The work [Liber Novus], though never published during Jung's lifetime, was intended for publication.

~Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xii

The work [Liber Novus], though never published during Jung's lifetime, was intended for publication. Sonu

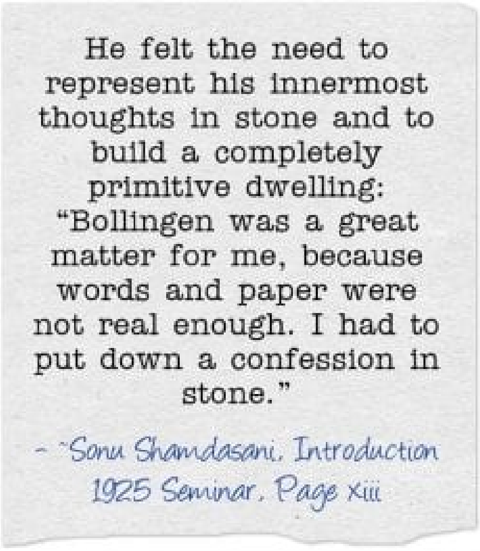
Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xii



The paintings initially started out as illustrations of the fantasies in the text, and thereafter could be considered active imaginations in their own right, at times referring to contemporaneous fantasies in Jung's Black Books.

- ~Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xii

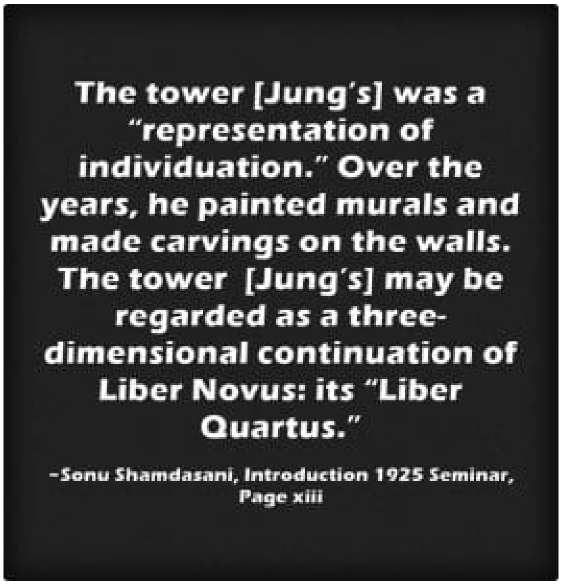
The paintings initially started out as illustrations of the fantasies in the text, and thereafter could be considered active imaginations in their own right, at times referring to contemporaneous fantasies in Jung's Black Books. Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xii



He felt the need to represent his innermost thoughts in stone and to build a completely primitive dwelling: "Bollingen was a great matter for me, because words and paper were not real enough. I had to put down a confession in stone."

- ~Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xiii

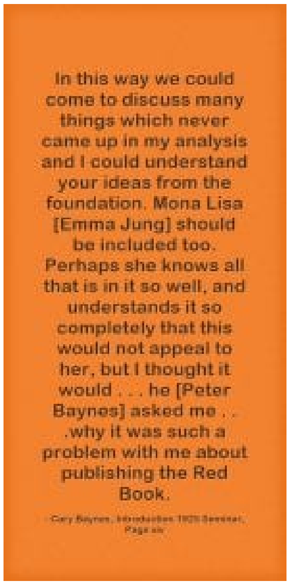
He [Jung] felt the need to represent his innermost thoughts in stone and to build a completely primitive dwelling: "Bollingen was a great matter for me, because words and paper were not real enough. I had to put down a confession in stone." Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xiii



The tower [Jung's] was a "representation of individuation." Over the years, he painted murals and made carvings on the walls. The tower [Jung's] may be regarded as a three-dimensional continuation of Liber Novus: its "Liber Quartus."

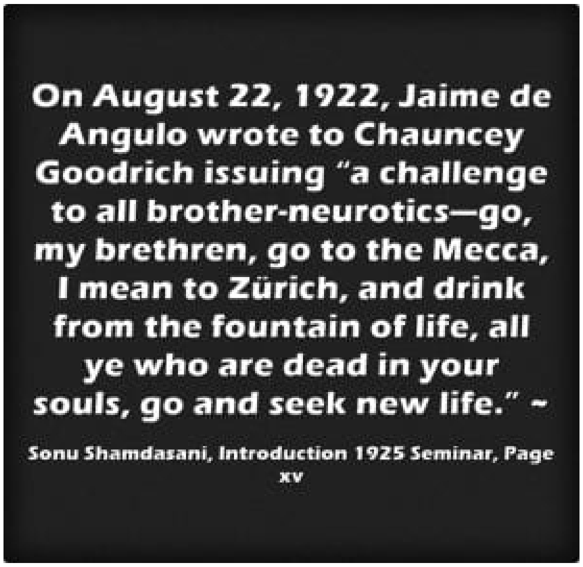
–Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xiii

The tower [Jung's] was a "representation of individuation." Over the years, he painted murals and made carvings on the walls. The tower [Jung's] may be regarded as a three-dimensional continuation of Liber Novus: its "Liber Quartus." Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xiii



In this way we could come to discuss many things which never came up in my analysis and I could understand your ideas from the foundation. Mona Lisa [Emma Jung] should be included too. Perhaps she knows all that is in it so well, and understands it so completely that this would not appeal to her, but I thought it would . . . he [Peter Baynes] asked me . . .why it was such a problem with me about publishing the Red Book.

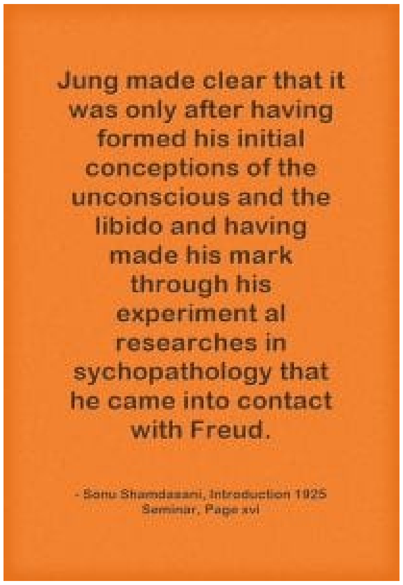
In this way we could come to discuss many things which never came up in my analysis and I could understand your ideas from the foundation. Mona Lisa [Emma Jung] should be included too. Perhaps she knows all that is in it so well, and understands it so completely that this would not appeal to her, but I thought it would . . . he [Peter Baynes] asked me . . .why it was such a problem with me about publishing the Red Book. Cary Baynes, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xiv



On August 22, 1922, Jaime de Angulo wrote to Chauncey Goodrich issuing “a challenge to all brother-neurotics—go, my brethren, go to the Mecca, I mean to Zürich, and drink from the fountain of life, all ye who are dead in your souls, go and seek new life.” ~

Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xv

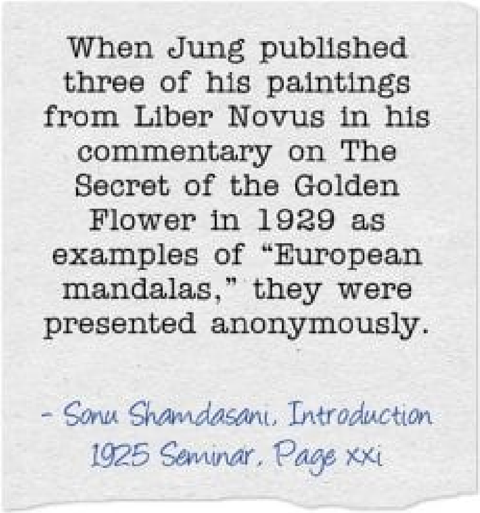
On August 22, 1922, Jaime de Angulo wrote to Chauncey Goodrich issuing “a challenge to all brother-neurotics—go, my brethren, go to the Mecca, I mean to Zürich, and drink from the fountain of life, all ye who are dead in your souls, go and seek new life.” Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xv



Jung made clear that it was only after having formed his initial conceptions of the unconscious and the libido and having made his mark through his experiment al researches in sychopathology that he came into contact with Freud.

- Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xvi

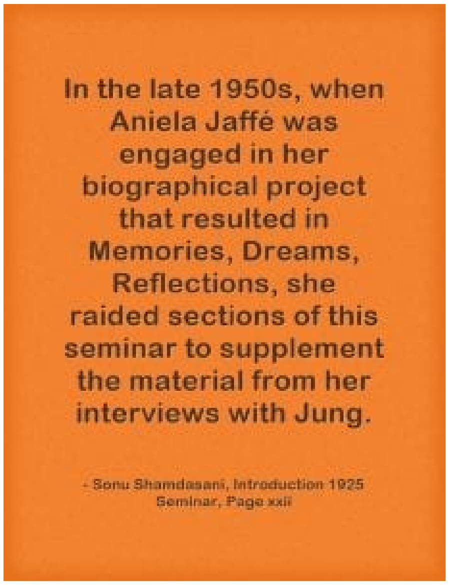
Jung made clear that it was only after having formed his initial conceptions of the unconscious and the libido and having made his mark through his experiment al researches in psychopathology that he came into contact with Freud. Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xvi



When Jung published three of his paintings from Liber Novus in his commentary on The Secret of the Golden Flower in 1929 as examples of “European mandalas,” they were presented anonymously.

- Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xxi

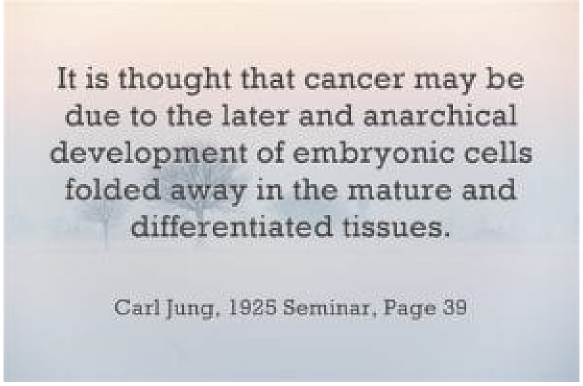
When Jung published three of his paintings from Liber Novus in his commentary on The Secret of the Golden Flower in 1929 as examples of “European mandalas,” they were presented anonymously.   Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xxi



In the late 1950s, when Aniela Jaffé was engaged in her biographical project that resulted in Memories, Dreams, Reflections, she raided sections of this seminar to supplement the material from her interviews with Jung.

- Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xxii

In the late 1950s, when Aniela Jaffé was engaged in her biographical project that resulted in Memories, Dreams, Reflections, she raided sections of this seminar to supplement the material from her interviews with Jung.   Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xxii



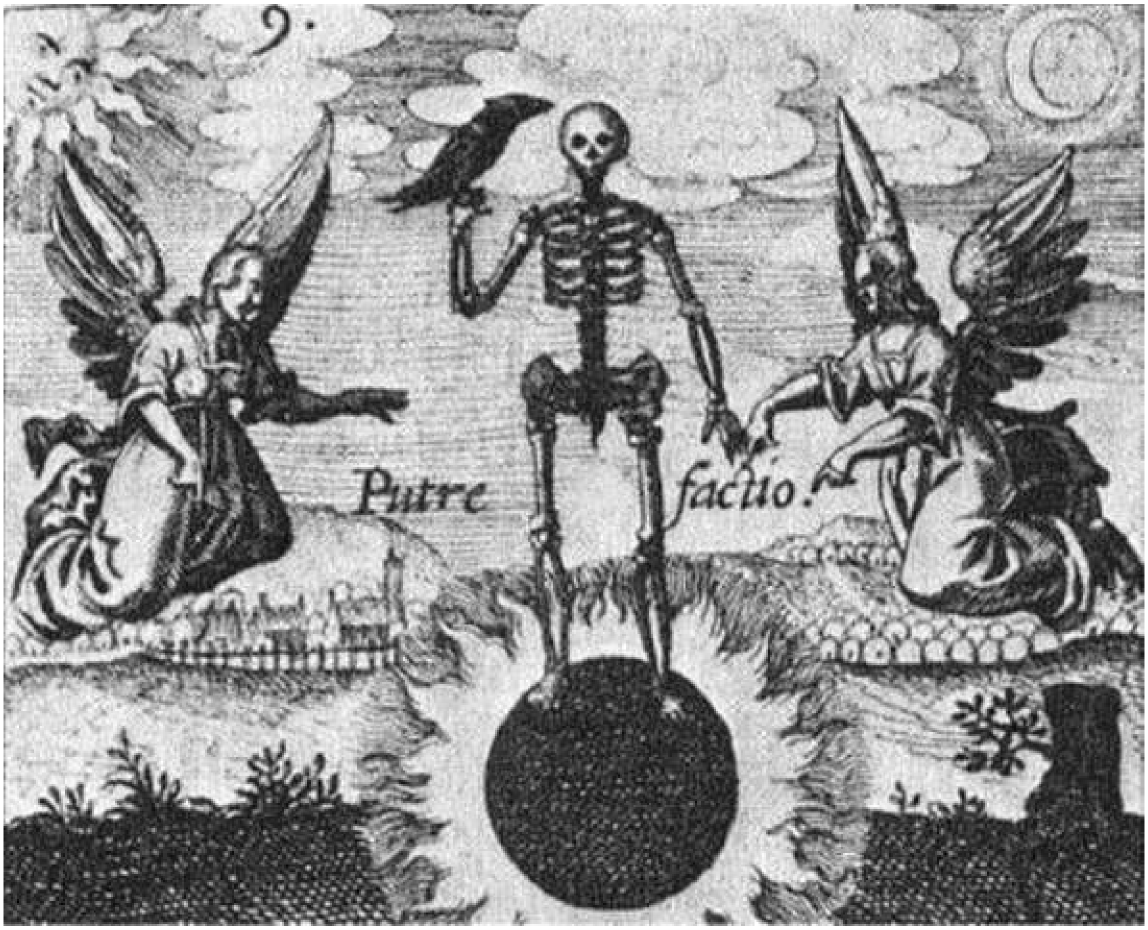
It is thought that cancer may be due to the later and anarchical development of embryonic cells folded away in the mature and differentiated tissues.

Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 39

It is thought that cancer may be due to the later and anarchical development of embryonic cells folded away in the mature and differentiated tissues. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 39.

Carl Jung on the Black Sun "Sol Niger." (2019-11-24 04:29)

[1]



[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

[Carl Jung on the Black Sun "Sol Niger."]

To Wellmann W. Schmied

Dear Sir, 5 November 1942

With regard to your question about the black sun, Baudelaire’s "soleil noir"is by no means an exception.

The idea of a counter earth occurs, for instance, in the Pythagorean system, and we find the sol niger in alchemy, also the ignis niger.

The corresponding idea of a black moon does not exist, because this would coincide with the new moon and so is already anticipated.

The moon plays a considerable role with women, while the sun vision occurs both with women and men.

The question of wo men’s initiation pictures is obscure in so far as the archetypal material in this respect is not nearly so extensive as men’s.

This for the simple reason that the initiations were evolved and handed down chiefly by men.

Nevertheless there are all sorts of clues in Greek mythology (also in primitive psychology).

I would particularly draw your attention to the figures of Hecate, Demeter, and Kore, and the Magna Mater.

It is this last figure that plays the most important and most repellent role in female initiations.

The "terrible" refers to her.

You will find something about it in Kerenyi and Jung: Einfiihrung in das Wesen der Mythologie (Pantheon Akademische Verlagsanstalt, Amsterdam and Leipzig, 1941).

Much of interest also in H. Thurnwald: Menschen der Siidsee (Enke Verlag, Stuttgart, 1937).

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 322-323.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/3962d-black.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574588414&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: That you find Kierkegaard "frightful" has warmed the cockles of my heart. (2019-11-24 04:30)

[1]

Kierkegaarde

To Rudolf Pannwitz

Dear Dr. Pannwitz, 27 March 1937

That you find Kierkegaard "frightful" has warmed the cockles of my heart.

I find him simply insupportable and cannot understand, or rather, I understand only too well, why the theological neurosis of our time has made such a fuss over him.

You are quite right when you say that the pathological is never valuable.

It does, however, cause us the greatest difficulties and for this reason we learn the most from it.

Moreover hysteria presents certain peculiarities of the normal person in such exaggerated form that even in their blindness the doctors, who as a rule know the least about psychology, could not help stumbling upon them.

I therefore chalk up the symptomatology of the neuroses as an involuntary achievement to man's credit, for which I am indeed grateful in my fashion.

I also agree with you that the normal person is infinitely more interesting and valuable.

Hence I have endeavoured to remove our "complex" psychology as quickly and completely as possible out of the realm of pathology.

However, as you have rightly seen, I have landed myself in enormous difficulties by framing general formulations which are intended to explain the whole field of human experience.

I had to keep to experiences that were directly accessible to me and compare them with data drawn from the whole history of the mind.

This gives rise to some degree of inexactitude which makes my efforts appear provisional.

It is perfectly clear to me that everything I do is pioneer work which has still to be followed by a real laying of foundations, but there are gratifying signs that others are beginning to make forays into this territory.

I enclose a little offprint which is of no further interest but only an attempt such as one might make to explain things to a doctor.

It is an essay included in the Eranos-Jahrbuch 1934 (Rhein Verlag, Zurich, 1935).

My letter is unfortunately overdue.

Illness and inordinate pressure of work have prevented me from writing until now.

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 231-232

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

Great Sites to visit:

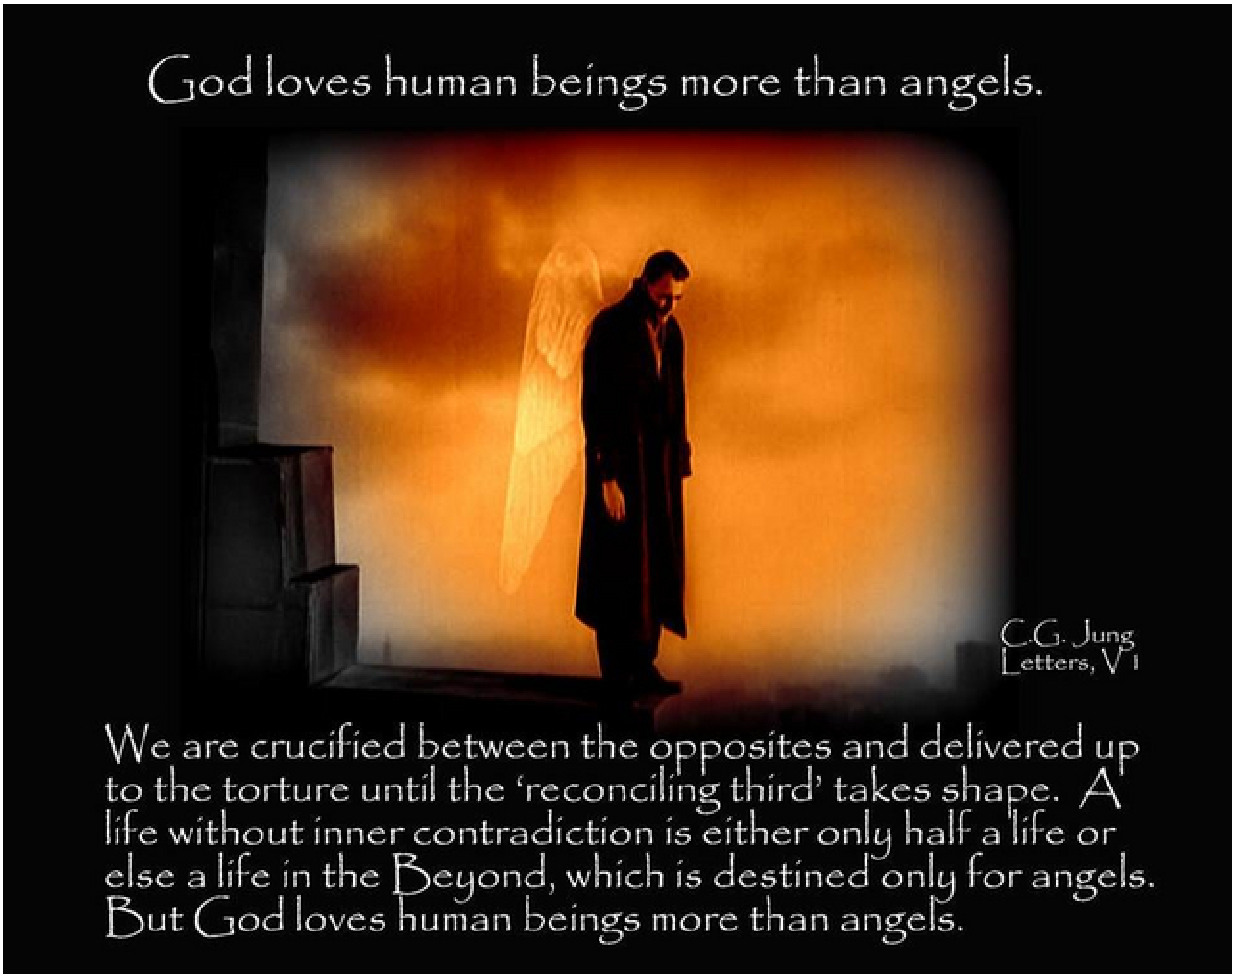
1. Jenna Lilla’s Path of the Soul http://jennalilla.org/
2. Steve Jung-Hearted Parker’s Jung Currents http://jungcurrents.com/
3. Frith Luton’s Jungian Dream Analysis and Psychotherapy: http://frithluton.com/articles/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/049ab-312bpannwitz.jpg`

2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574588414&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: But God loves human beings more than the angels. (2019-11-24 04:38)

[1]



God loves human beings more than angels.
C.G. Jung
Letters, V 1
We are crucified between the opposites and delivered up to the torture until the 'reconciling third' takes shape. A life without inner contradiction is either only half a life or else a life in the Beyond, which is destined only for angels. But God loves human beings more than angels.

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Olga Frobe-Kapteyn

Dear Frau Frobe, Bollingen, 20 August 1945

The opus consists of three parts: insight, endurance, and action. •

Psychology is needed only in the first part, but in the second and third parts moral strength plays the predominant role.

Your present situation is the result of pressure of circumstances which are unavoidable.

It is conflicts of duty that make endurance and action so difficult.

Your life's work for Eranos was unavoidable and right.

Nevertheless it conflicts with maternal duties which are equally unavoidable and right.

The one must exist, and so must the other.

There can be no resolution, only patient endurance of the opposites which ultimately spring from your own nature.

You yourself are a conflict that rages in itself and against itself, in order to melt its incompatible substances, the male and the female, in the fire of suffering, and thus create that fixed and unalterable form which is the goal of life.

Everyone goes through this mill, consciously or unconsciously, voluntarily or forcibly.

We are crucified between the opposites and delivered up to the torture until the "reconciling third" takes shape.

Do not doubt the rightness of the two sides within you, and let whatever may happen, happen.

Admit that your daughter is right in saying you are a bad mother, and defend your duty as a mother towards Eranos.

But never forget that Eranos is also the right thing and was latent within you from the beginning.

The apparently unendurable conflict is proof of the rightness of your life.

A life without inner contradiction is either only half a life or else a life in the Beyond, which is destined only for angels.

But God loves human beings more than the angels.

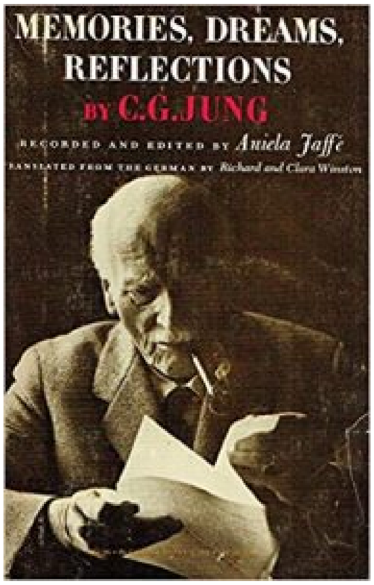
With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung, Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 375

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/e3259-1angels.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574588414&sr=8-1`

I never try to convert a patient to anything... (2019-11-24 04:42)



MEMORIES, DREAMS, REFLECTIONS
BY C.G.JUNG
RECORDED AND EDITED BY Aniela Jaffé
ANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN BY Richard and Clara Winston

[1]Memories, Dreams, Reflections

I never try to convert a patient to anything, and never exercise any compulsion. What matters most to me is that the patient should reach his own view of things. Under my treatment a pagan becomes a pagan and a Christian a Christian, a Jew a Jew, according to what his destiny prescribes for him. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections.

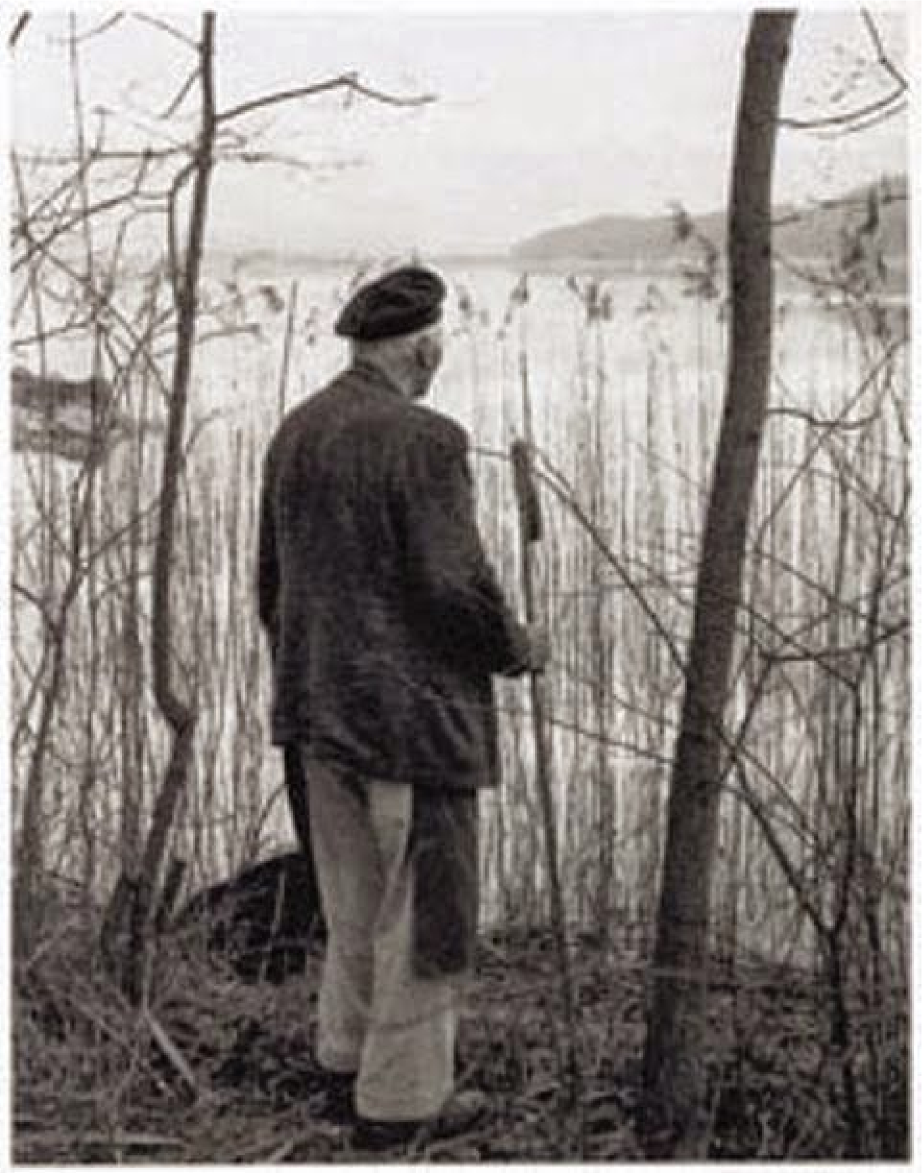
1. `https://www.amazon.com/Memories-Dreams-Reflections-C-G-Jung/dp/0394702689/ref=sr_1_3?crid=14R92ERX3BAVS&keywords=jung+memories+dreams+reflections&qid=1574589193`

Carl Jung: In the evening I light the old lamps... (2019-11-24 04:48)

[1]



[2]Memories, Dreams, Reflections

At times I am as laid out in the countryside and in the things themselves, and live in every tree, in the splashing of the waves, in the clouds, the animals that come and go, and in the things ... here is space for the spaceless Empire of the background.

I have refrained from electricity and heating itself stove and oven. In the evening I light the old lamps ... thoughts emerge, which date back to centuries and accordingly anticipate distant future. Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 229.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/25b86-2.jpg`

2. `https://www.amazon.com/Memories-Dreams-Reflections-C-G-Jung/dp/0394702689/ref=sr_1_3?crid=14R92ERX3BAVS&keywords=jung+memories+dreams+reflections&qid=1574589193`

Carl Jung: I got remarks of a new character—I was in analysis with a ghost and a woman. (2019-11-24 04:59)

[1]Introduction to Jungian Psychology: Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925

At first it was the negative aspect of the anima that most impressed me. I felt a little awed by her.

It was like the feeling of an invisible presence in the room one enters.

Then a new idea came to me: In putting down all this material for analysis, I was in effect writing letters to my anima, that is to a part of myself with a different viewpoint from my own.

I got remarks of a new character—I was in analysis with a ghost and a woman.

Every evening I wrote very conscientiously for I thought if I did not write it, there would be no way for the anima to get at it.

There is a tremendous difference in the assumption of telling something and the actual telling of it, a fact which I was once able to test out experimentally.

I told a man whom I was testing to think of something disagreeable, but to let it be something I did not know about.

I took his electric resistance in the so-called psycho-galvanic experiment, and there was very little change.

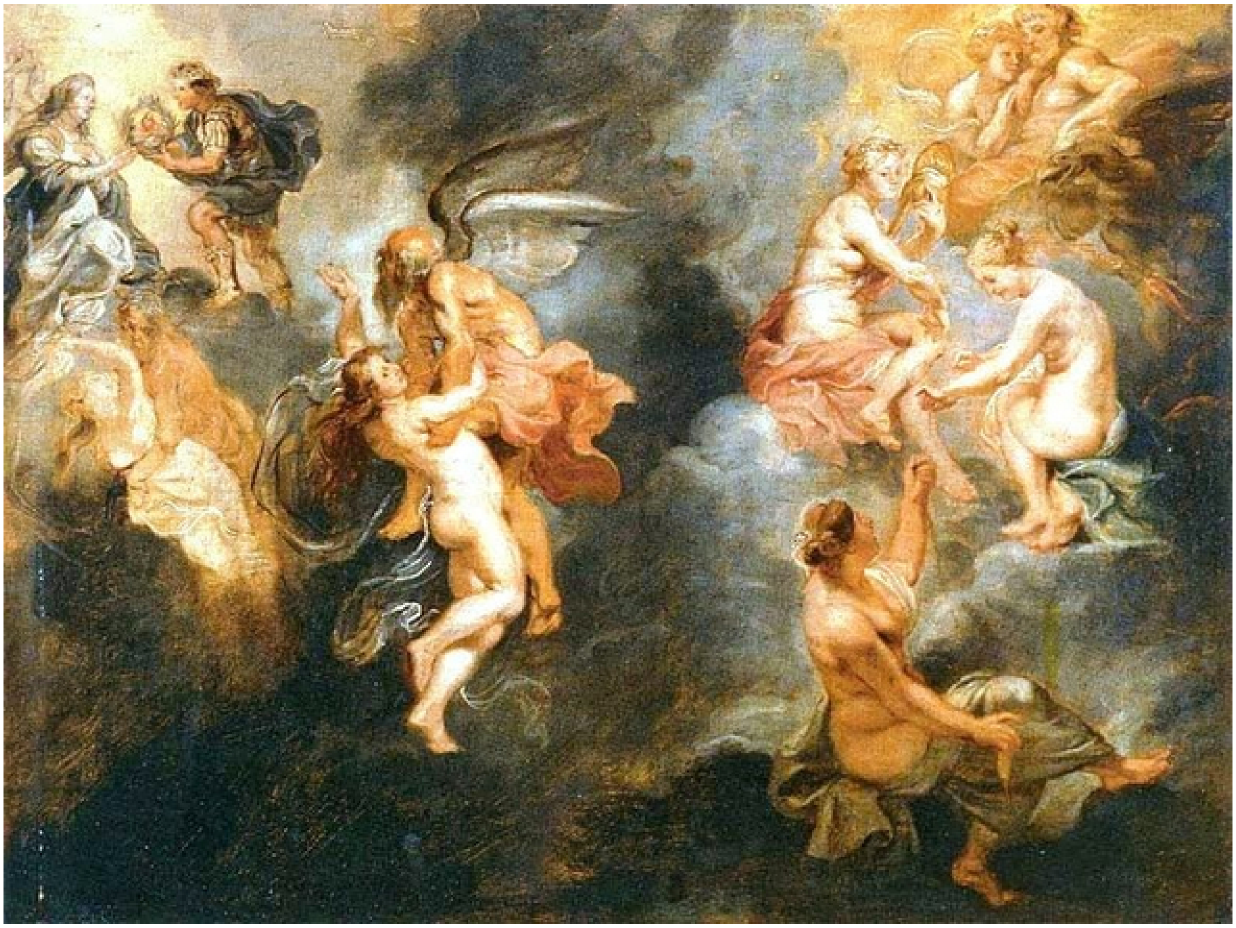
In some way I knew that he was thinking about something very disagreeable that had happened that morning, but something which I had found out only by accident, and of which he was confident I knew nothing.

I said to him, “Now I will tell you what that disagreeable thing was,” and as soon as I told him I got a tremendous reaction in the current. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 59-51

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+1925&qid=1574593854&sr=8-1`

Future generations dare not find themselves ... (2019-11-24 05:26)

[1]



[2]Two Essays on Analytical Psychology

Future generations dare not find themselves okay unless governed over by the bureaucracy, a stubborn church, or the "good" state

It is the duty of one who goes his own way to inform society of what he finds on his voyage of discovery, be it cooling water for the thirsty or the sandy wastes of unfruitful error.

The one helps, the other warns. Not the criticism of individual contemporaries will decide the truth or falsity of his discoveries, but future generations. There are things that are not yet true today, perhaps we dare not find them true, but tomorrow they may be.

So every man whose fate it is to go his individual way must proceed with hopefulness and watchfulness, ever conscious of his loneliness and its dangers. Carl Jung, "On the Psychology of the Unconscious" (1912). In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology P. 201.

Image: The Three Parcae Spinning the Fate of Marie de' Medici (1622-1625) by Peter Paul Rubens

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/fa376-fates.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Two-Essays-Analytical-Psychology-Jung/dp/1614277176/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1AUC15CTIYK3H&k` eywords=jung+two+essays&qid=1574594032&sprefix=jung+tw

We can see today that the entire alchemical procedure... (2019-11-24 05:30)

[1]

"The entire alchemical procedure for uniting the opposites could just as well represent the individuation process
of a single individual, though with the not unimportant difference that no single individual ever attains to the richness and scope of the alchemical symbolism.

The individual in his short life has at his disposal
only a limited amount of experience and limited powers of portrayal."

Mysterium Coniunctionis
Epilogue

www.jungquotes.com
Image: Splendor Solis

[2]Mysterium Coniunctionis (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.14)

"We can see today that the entire alchemical procedure for uniting the opposites could just as well represent the individuation process of a single individual, though with the not unimportant difference that no single individual ever attains to the richness & scope of the alchemical symbolism The individual in his short life has at his disposal only a limited amount of experience & limited powers of portrayal." Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 792

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/6c3bb-alchemical.jpg`
2. `http://Wecanseetodaythattheentirealchemicalprocedureforunitingtheoppositescouldjustaswellrepresenttheindividuationprocessofasingleindivi`

Carl Jung Depth Psychology Invites Patrons (2019-11-24 07:14)

the joy of holiday giving

[1]Carl Jung Depth Psychology Invites Patrons

Funds are being raised to pay for a one year subscription for the Carl Jung Depth Psychology Blog on WordPress.

Additionally o purchase further research materials related to the Life, Work and Legacy of Dr. Jung which have already been published or are in the process of being published.

Contributions also Support the Maintenance of the following sites wherein I actively promote the Life, Work and Legacy of Carl Jung:

Carl Jung Depth Psychology Blog [WordPress]

[2]Carl Jung Depth Psychology Facebook Group

[3]Carl Jung Depth Psychology on Pinterest

[4]Carl Jung Depth Psychology on Twitter

[5]Carl Jung Depth Psychology on LinkedIn

[6]Aniela Jaffe Facebook Page

[7]Barbara Hannah Facebook Page

[8]Carl Jung and Princeton University Press Facebook Page

[9]E.A. Bennet Facebook Page

[10]Jungian Books Group on Facebook

[11]Karl Kerenyi Facebook Page

[12]Marie Louise Von Franz Books Facebook Group

[13]Richard Wilhelm Facebook Page

[14]The Red Book by Carl Jung Facebook Group

[15]Sonu Shamdasani Facebook Page

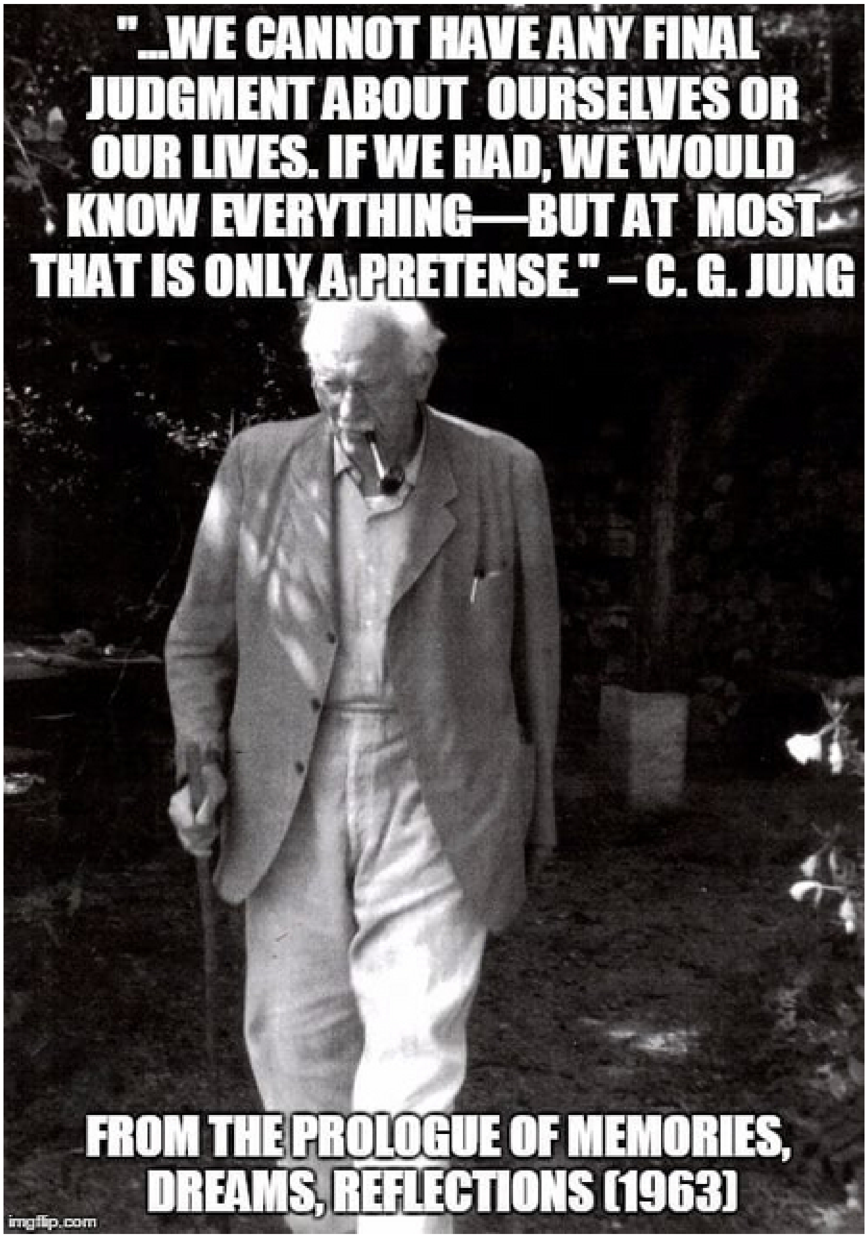
Patreon Site:

[16]Link to Patreon Donation Site

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/2019/11/14/carl-jung-depth-psychology-patrons-via-patreon/#.Xc2IjldKhPY
2. https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/
3. https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/pins/
4. https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/
5. https://www.linkedin.com/in/lewis-l-09aa6662/detail/recent-activity/
6. https://www.facebook.com/Aniela-Jaffe-1507926539471152/?fb_dtsg_ag=Adw7rhgKaQPWf7RvnL24de87WQ1uZSD3kdNDzVaCyBwqyA%3AAdzjx8WYnq2Nb6tXvLrK_oHyUgyGkSVqDDN44yi1F1v9
7. https://www.facebook.com/Barbara-Hannah-317459305124661/?fb_dtsg_ag=Adw7rhgKaQPWf7RvnL24de87WQ1uZSD3kdNDzVaCyBwqyA%3AAdzjx8WYnq2Nb6tXvLrK_oHyUgyGkSVqDDN44yi1F1v
8. https://www.facebook.com/CarlJungPublications/
9. https://www.facebook.com/EA-Bennett-352229564948049/?fb_dtsg_ag=Adw7rhgKaQPWf7RvnL24de87WQ1uZSD3kdNDzVaCyBwqyA%3AAdzjx8WYnq2Nb6tXvLrK_oHyUgyGkSVqDDN44yi1F1v9UQ
10. https://www.facebook.com/groups/1644635502430189/?fb_dtsg_ag=Adw7rhgKaQPWf7RvnL24de87WQ1uZSD3kdNDzVaCyBwqyA%3AAdzjx8WYnq2Nb6tXvLrK_oHyUgyGkSVqDDN44yi1F1v9UQ
11. https://www.facebook.com/Karl-Kerenyi-1484915891796424/?ref=br_rs&fb_dtsg_ag=Adw7rhgKaQPWf7RvnL24de87WQ1uZSD3kdNDzVaCyBwqyA%3AAdzjx8WYnq2Nb6tXvLrK_oHyUgyGkSVqDD
12. https://www.facebook.com/groups/688632314584444/?fb_dtsg_ag=Adw7rhgKaQPWf7RvnL24de87WQ1uZSD3kdNDzVaCyBwqyA%3AAdzjx8WYnq2Nb6tXvLrK_oHyUgyGkSVqDDN44yi1F1v9UQ
13. https://www.facebook.com/Richard-Wilhelm-1510076199249883/?fb_dtsg_ag=Adw7rhgKaQPWf7RvnL24de87WQ1uZSD3kdNDzVaCyBwqyA%3AAdzjx8WYnq2Nb6tXvLrK_oHyUgyGkSVqDDN44yi1F
14. https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/
15. https://www.facebook.com/profile.php?id=710684513
16. https://www.patreon.com/bePatron?u=11486251&redirect_uri=https%3A%2F%2Fcarljungdepthpsychologysite.blog%2F&utm_medium=widget

Carl Jung: The only question is whether what I tell is my fable, my truth. (2019-11-24 15:58)

[1]



"...WE CANNOT HAVE ANY FINAL JUDGMENT ABOUT OURSELVES OR OUR LIVES. IF WE HAD, WE WOULD KNOW EVERYTHING—BUT AT MOST THAT IS ONLY A PRETENSE." – C. G. JUNG
FROM THE PROLOGUE OF MEMORIES, DREAMS, REFLECTIONS (1963)
imgflip.com

Thus it is that I have now undertaken, in my eighty-third year, to tell my personal myth, I can only make direct statements, only "tell stories."

Whether or not the stories are "true" is not the problem.

The only question is whether what I tell is my fable, my truth.

An autobiography is so difficult to write because we possess no standards, no objective foundation, from which to judge ourselves.

There are really no proper bases for comparison.

I know that in many things I am not like others, but I do not know what I really am like.

Man cannot compare himself with any other creature; he is not a monkey, not a cow, not a tree.

I am a man.

But what is it to be that?

Like every other being, I am a splinter of the infinite deity, but I cannot contrast myself with any animal, any plant or any stone.

Only a mythical being has a range greater than man's.

How then can a man form any definite opinions about himself?

We are a psychic process which we do not control, or only partly direct.

Consequently, we cannot have any final judgment about ourselves or our lives.

If we had, we would know everything but at most that is only a pretense.

At bottom we never know how it has all come about.

The story of a life begins somewhere, at some particular point we happen to remember; and even then it was already highly complex.

We do not know how life is going to turn out.

Therefore the story has no beginning, and the end can only be vaguely hinted at. Carl Jung, MDR, Prologue, Pages 3-4.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/7c9a4-1chris.jpg`

Carl Jung on the “Lion” in a child’s dream (2019-11-24 17:05)

[1]

[Carl Jung on the “Lion” in a child’s dream]

Professor Jung:

The dream begins as follows: “I went into the forest,” meaning, I went into my darkness, where anything that cannot be explained comes from.

It could also have been still water—running water has a different meaning—or a labyrinth, a cave or the basement, the dark space of the house, the dark attic, the toilet.

For this is the place of fantasy; there creative work is done.

There are children who cannot defecate without fantasizing.

In the case of adults suffering from constipation, it is sometimes necessary to stir up again the fantasies that alone make them able to defecate.

In Kundalini yoga, Muladhara (Sanskrit, literally: root support) is the lowest chakra.

The Perineal chakra is situated in the hypogastrium (lower abdomen), the so-called cloacal zone.

There the Kundalini lives in her lotus.

She is the creative fantasy par excellence.

So going into the forest, to the dark place, means concentration on those regions of the body that belong precisely there, in this darkness.

A gloomy, evil darkness, filled with fantasies.

[2]

HONI · SOIT · QUI · MAL · Y · PENSE
DIEU · ET · MON · DROIT

And now there comes a lion, the devouring monster.

This is the instinctual life.

The child is 8 years old, already in prepuberty.

If a cathexis with libido happens here, a phenomenon of prepuberty may appear in the form of an immature sexual instinct, or this may happen in the form of a flooding with fantasies that only later in puberty will become actual sexual fantasies.

The lion is a kind of fantasy that grasps and completely devours the child.

All the images in this dream go back to primal situations.

In former times, the woods were really full of danger zones.

Robbers were in it. In dreams, the forest is the uncanny place, which is filled with the projections of fantasy:

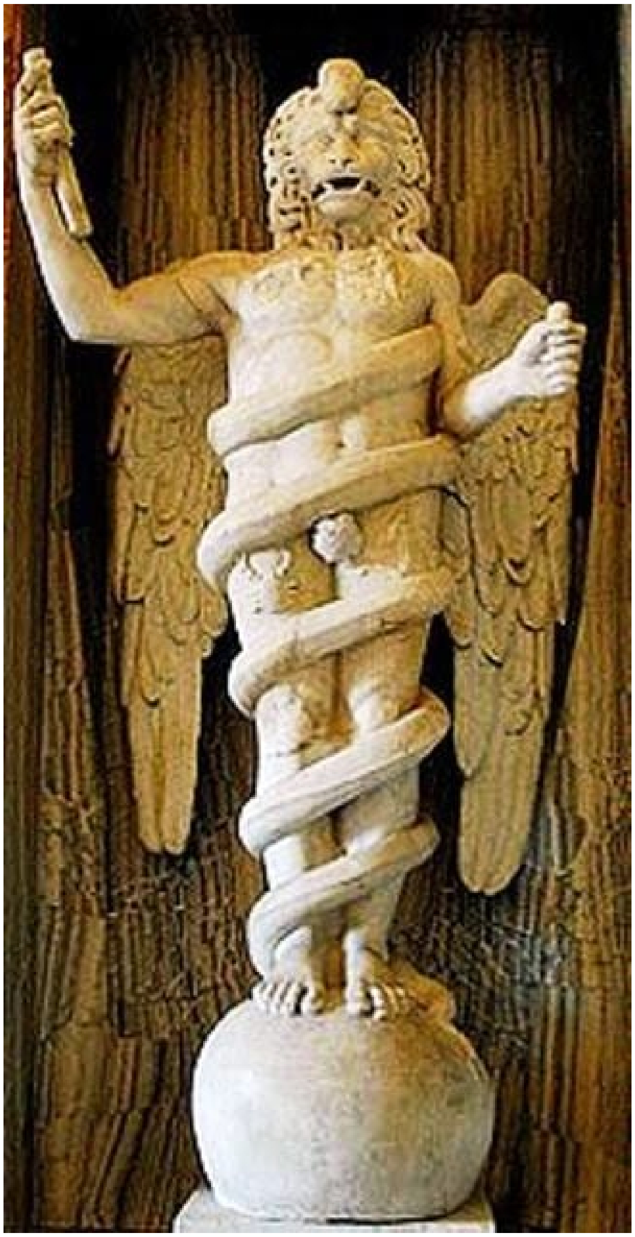
Pan, witches, wild hunters, Rübezahl, or any other delusion spreading panic-stricken fright.

The dreamer is 8 years old.

Between eight and nine years of age, the transition toward ego consciousness takes place.

The child frees herself from the closest ties to the familial milieu.

She already has experienced a part of reality.



The libido that had been tied to the parents is decathected, often introverted, goes into the unconscious, and arranges something there.

As to the lion: it is the king, the mighty instinctual energy, the fiery principle, the heat of the sun, desire.

In royal coats of arms it stands for great courage, strength, and power.

The deus leontocephalus is the god of time.

He appears at the climax of the zodiacal circle, at the end of July and the beginning of August.

He stands for fire.

The lion is also the symbol of Mark the Evangelist and of St. Hieronymus.

Most often it is depicted as the animal supporting the pillars of portals, the pulpit, or the font.

This lion, as a Christian symbol, is the sign for domesticated paganism and is meant to stand for the power of heathen Rome.

That is why the lion is the bearer of the pillar of the church.

The constellation of the Lion is the domicilium solis.

In the Mithras cult there were underground grottos, for example, at the Saalburg near Frankfurt-on-Main.

In these mythraeums, most often there stood a strange statue near the altar, a man's figure with a lion's head, with a snake coiled around it that laid its head on that of the lion.

This is the deus leontocephalus, that is, Aion, meaning infinitely long time, the god of time who combines the opposites.

This is an old Persian image.

In the north, the bear appears instead of the lion.

Originally these probably were animal masks.

In antiquity, in the Mithras cult one even went so far as to imitate the voices of animals.

It was believed that the god would hear better something roared in the voice of an animal; or one whistled and clacked one's tongue to attract him.

His animal attribute was thought to listen more to that.

This goes back to the fact that the gods were originally conceived as animals.

Another conception, that of god as a bird, is still found in Christendom: the dove of the Holy Spirit, corresponding to the feminine aspect of the Holy Spirit in early Christendom.

In the so-called Acts of St. Thomas, the Holy Spirit is simply the feminine side of the deity, the Woman God.

The lion is always goal oriented, a directed fire.

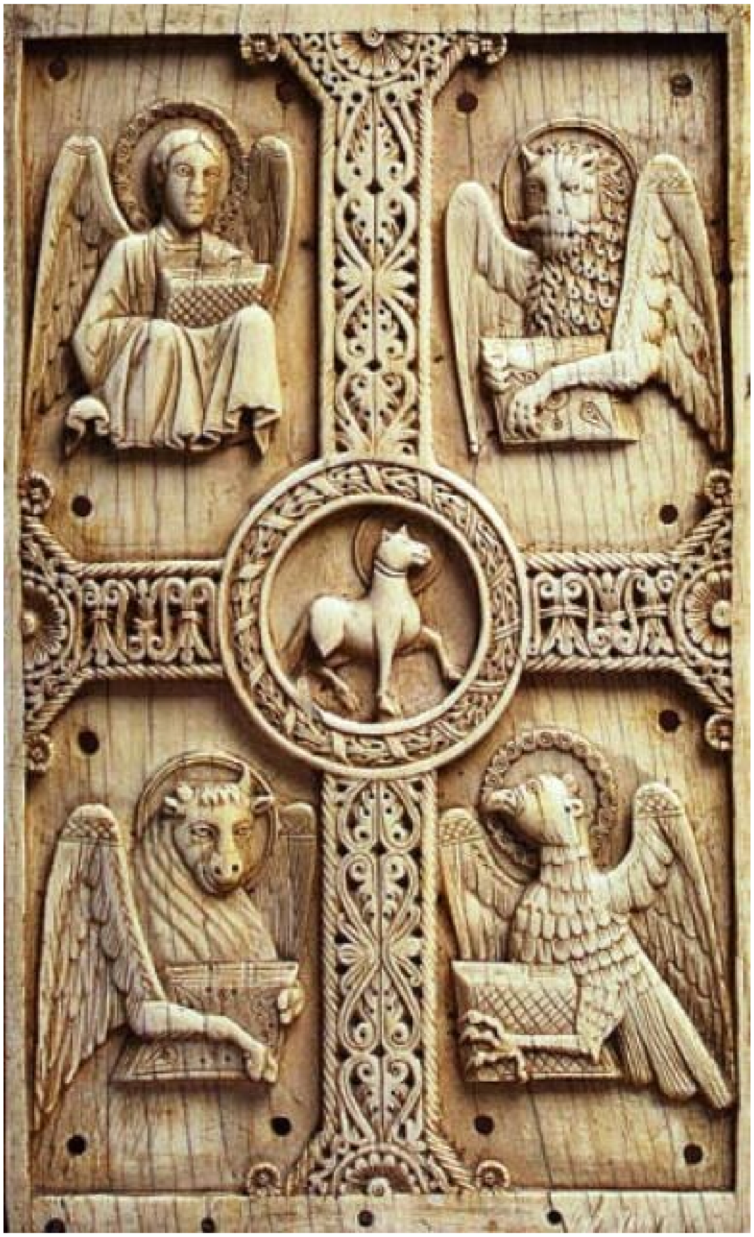
When a lion attacks, it always runs toward its target in a direct line.

It is, by the way, always interesting to know about the natural character of animals.

Whenever animals appear in dreams, read Brehm!

Our forebears knew even more about the life of animals.

[4]



The Rosicrucian conception of overcoming the lion is that of overcoming the instincts.

In alchemical tracts there are descriptions of how the lion’s paws are chopped off.

In the Mithras cult, as well as in The Epic of Gilgamesh, it is the bull that is overcome.

In our dream the lion embodies an instinctual force that the girl does not have under control.

We know only that she is overwhelmed by something instinctual, stronger than she is, by an instinctual force that is represented by a feared beast of prey.

She is the victim of an animal instinct.

The child then acquires a psychology that would no longer be appropriate for her age, but for an animal.

She regresses to an animal-like being.

The lion means all-consuming fire; that is why it is the symbol for the heat in August that burns all the vegetation.

So the child comes into a state of inexorable desire.

The desire will also play a role later on. Examples of such states are when the Malaysians go berserk or run amok.

The Maenads, those raving women, tear up young goats and eat them raw in Dionysian orgies.

The Indian goddess Kali has got teeth like a wild animal; she has drunk wine and blood and is dripping with blood and grease.

She is a raving lioness.

In most pictorial images, she is riding on a lion, or goes over the bodies of her male victims.

When she went into a fury, her husband Shiva was called.

He lay down among the bodies of her victims; she then came to him and recognized him, thus coming to her senses.

The consequence of the regression in this child was that she could not concentrate.

Regressing adults, too, can't concentrate, but revert to a primitive state.

Similarly, primitives, or civilized persons who stay primitive, cannot concentrate.

We also understand why the child wants to ride on the lion: this is the backside.

But then she fell off, that is, she falls down into those regions where one is completely being driven, loses consciousness, and is devoured by fantasies.

In primitives, this phenomenon leads to various measures of precaution out of fear of such emotional states.

The same may happen in the case of adults when they have all too lively fantasies or embarrassing ideas.

They fear those fantasies because they easily fall victim to them.

That is why one avoids speaking about certain things or thinking of something particular—because then one can be robbed of one’s soul or devoured by the fantasies.

When this happens to the child, it becomes clear that she can no longer follow in school or is superficial; her interest is occupied by an overpowering fantasy production.

Her interest vanishes and her achievements become unsatisfactory.

So here comes a well-known solution: when you are in this passive and vulnerable situation, you have to call in sick.

You are paralyzed; someone has to take care of you. If an adult happens to be devoured, he eventually has to call the doctor, so that the latter may carry him on his back, or accompany him and play the roles of mother and father, until he has found himself again.

In our dream, this happens when the mother brings the girl home and lays her down in her bed.

The bed is the place of shelter and care.

Now this is precisely the opposite of the situation at the beginning of the dream: originally the child wants to stroke the lion, just in the way little kids do.

She has started to play with her own force.

It is possible to lose consciousness to a certain extent during play, and then to become identical to this play.

So this is also dangerous.

We can, for instance, see that when primitives perform dances: eventually they become identical to their roles.

In play, the child becomes unconscious with the lion, and identical to it.

This means that she wants to assimilate the instinctual forces.

The center of the ego has to be equipped with the instinctual forces.

This, however, entails the dangers of the rapacious animal, namely, being devoured by it.

The same happens in the dream: what the mother takes home is precisely the child devoured by the lion.

The child has turned into a little lion, she has become an invisible lion child.

We find such ideas also in primitives: in some South American tribes, the humans turn into parrots.

Although they don't look like parrots, they feel like parrots. Carl Jung, Children's Dream Seminar, Pages 58-66.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/f1f47-1.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/a0510-2.gif`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/95f2c-3.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/c23b9-4.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/fed21-5.jpg`

Carl Jung on the "Dog." (2019-11-24 18:51)

[1]

[2]Children's Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940

[Carl Jung on the "Dog."]

The dog is the gravedigger who disposes of the bodies, as happened in ancient times in Persia.

There it was also customary to lead a dog to the bed of a dying person who then had to grant the dog a bite, presumably to appease him so that he spared his body.

Cerberus, too, is calmed by the honey cake of Heracles.

In the Mithras reliefs, a dog jumps up on the killed bull.

Cerberus is the guardian between life and death.

Anubis with the jackal head helps Isis to gather the dismembered and scattered body of Osiris, so that he can be incorporated by Osiris and reborn.

The dog helps with dying, and consequently also helps with rebirth.

In the present case, a man comes with a dog, and their appearance causes a transformation.

Unity, agreement, and evenness can work wonders.

Man and dog stand for a harmonious unit between man and animal, that is, between consciousness and less consciousness, to put it cautiously.

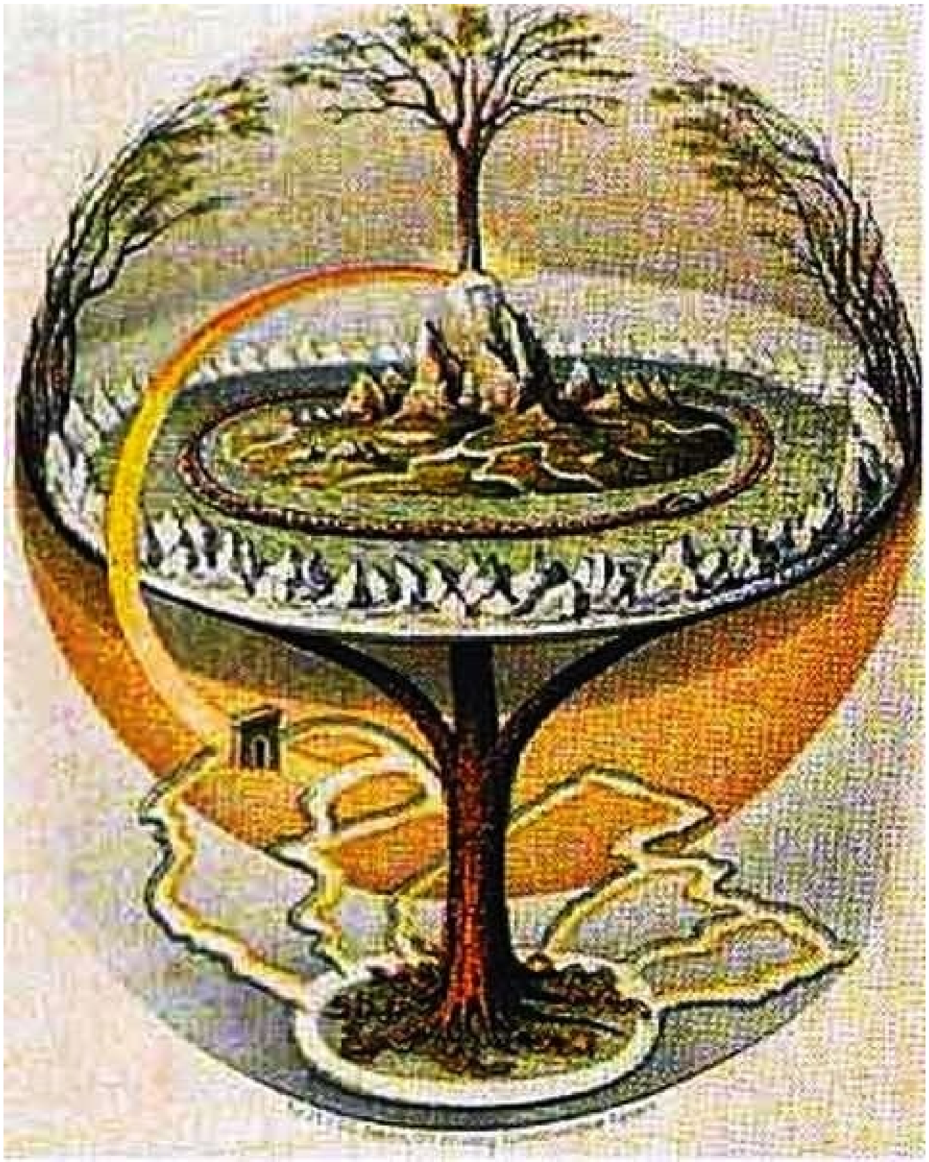
Strangely enough, by the way, one often speaks about human characteristics while meaning animal ones.

In this man-dog pair the unconscious (the consciously domesticated dog) is, so to speak, bound, and so the miracle can happen. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Page 45.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/1f972-dog.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-Seminar-1936-1940-Seminars/dp/0691148074/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+children+dreams&qid=1574672048&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung on the "Tree." (2019-11-25 04:15)

[1]



[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940

[Carl Jung on the “Tree.”]

The tree is the world tree.

Odin was hanged on a tree.

Also, the wood for the Christian cross comes from the tree of paradise.

Christ is crucified on the tree of life.

Strangely enough, the cross has a feminine meaning.

It symbolizes the woman, the cruel woman, in whose arms Christ died.

There is a legend that Mary talks to the cross, which she addresses as “mother cross,” how cruelly she would treat her son.

Here, too, the tree as a cross takes the place of the mother who, however, was completely depersonalized.

She is the mother of death.

The mother gives birth, and at the end of life, as earth, she again receives the dead in herself.

In a Maori myth, death is the old ancestress Hine-nui-te-po.

She sleeps with her mouth open.

Maui, the hero, wants to overpower her in order to defeat death.

He has arranged with all creatures that none of them make a sound when he creeps into her mouth.

But a little bird cannot stifle a laugh.

Hine-nui-te-po wakes up and snaps her mouth shut.

So that’s how Maui finds his fate.

The ancestress is in the past, but also in the future.

She is the beginning and the end.

The Madonna too, the heavenly mother, has her hellish counterpart in the devil’s grandmother; likewise, Kwannon, the goddess of mercy, has a hellish manifestation.

In the East it is not believed that deities can be good only.

Also the mother has got a reverse side, like the mirror; there she becomes the tree of the dead, in which the dead are buried.

A Germanic legend recounts: the last men on earth vanish again in the tree from which they originally came out.

There has to be a consciousness that mirrors the world; otherwise, the world would not exist at all.

The primitive man still had a premonition that the world will cease to exist when consciousness ceases to exist.

This will be when the forest reappears; Earth will belong to the forest.

The tree is the vegetative, unconscious life, which will emerge again when human consciousness has been extinguished.

Death, as he appears in the magic mirror, is a “hanging” [Aufhängung].

Hanging is a ritual in sacrifice.

Christ too was called the “hanged” by the pagans.

On the other hand, death is also characterized by the motif of dismembering.

This connection is also evidenced historically: the relation to Wotan and Dionysus.

Dionysus is the dismembered one. Carl Jung, Children’s Dreams Seminar, Pages 83-84.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/63938-tree.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-Seminar-1936-1940-Seminars/dp/0691148074/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+children+dreams&qid=1574672048&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: “But are good intentions enough to impress men?” (2019-11-25 04:23)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To the Secretary of the Union Mondiale de la Femme pour la Concorde
Internationale, Geneva

Dear Madame, 27 January 1941

I agree with you entirely that it would be desirable if we could make humanity more reasonable simply by instruction and by good intentions.

But are good intentions enough to impress men?

If they were impressionable, the last war with all its atrocities should have served as a lesson.

Yet we have to assume that it produced no effect since hardly a generation later everything is forgotten.

That is why it seems to me useless to try to educate men by talking to them and instructing them .

Men have to be gripped, because only those who are gripped can grip others.

Spirit cannot be learned, it is given to us by God's grace, which cannot be had by force or reason.

But if men if good will applied themselves to the solution of the conflicts and the causes of the conflicts in their own vicinity, and tried to free themselves from outside influences, they could at least set an example.

As we know, example is more effective than admonition.

In ten lectures I could not add anything at all to what I have just said.

I know that this way of looking at things is neither brilliant nor inspiring, and that-precisely because of its simplicity-it would not have any popular effect.

But since it is my conviction, I could not say anything else in speaking publicly.

This point of view being doubtless out of key with the aim of your organization, it seems to me that you would do better not to receive me among your lecturers.

Thanking you nevertheless for your amiable intention,

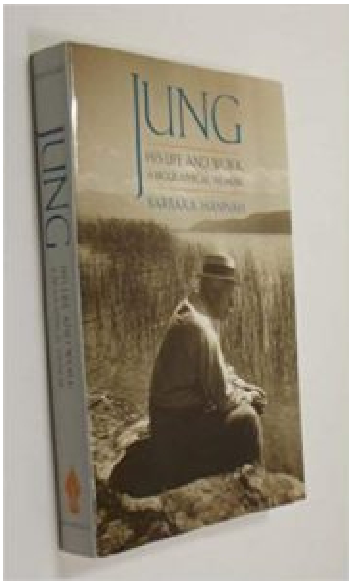
I am,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 293.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/bc11d-dove.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574673951&sr=8-1`

Barbara Hannah: Jung maintained that no child is born a tabula rasa. (2019-11-25 04:30)



[1]Jung: His Life and Work by Barbara Hannah

Jung maintained that no child is born a tabula rasa.

It is curious that, although this fact is well known and is now generally recognized in the innate “patterns of behavior” in animals, it still arouses strong opposition when it comes to human beings.

Both Freud and Adler, for instance, regarded the unconscious as a kind of rubbish heap onto which all that is found inconvenient is thrown, and that it therefore consists of material that once was conscious.

Jung fully recognized the existence of this layer, which he called the “personal unconscious,” but one of his greatest discoveries was the so-called “collective unconscious,” deep levels of the unconscious that are common to all mankind.

Jung once used a large colored diagram during a lecture to make the layers in the unconscious particularly clear.

The lowest level of all he called “the central fire” (life itself), and a spark from this fire ascends through all intervening levels into every living creature.

The next layer he called “animal ancestors in general,” and this is also represented in all the higher forms of life.

The next he called “primeval ancestors,” a level present in all mankind.

In the next layer the latter began to split up into large groups, such as Western or Asiatic man.

Key to Diagram

A. Individual (highest point)—Vermilion
B. Family—Crimson
C. Clan—Green
D. Nation—Yellow
E. Large group (e.g., Europe)—Ochre
F. Primeval ancestors—Light Brown
G. Animal ancestors in general—Dark Brown
H. Central fire—Vermilion

Up to this level the foundation, although it supplies most of the archetypal images which form the human "pattern of behavior," is much the same in any individual belonging to the same large group; with the layer of the nation considerable differences appear.

We need only look at the present state of the world to see how difficult it is for the peoples of the various nations to understand each other, and I have been struck, during my long experience of the many people of different nationalities who were drawn to Jung, and who still come to the C. G. Jung Institute in Zürich, by how necessary it is to have at least some knowledge of the national layers in order to understand the individual. Barbara Hannah, Jung His Life and Work, Pages, 42-46

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Jung-Life-Barbara-Hannah-1991-03-27/dp/B01FIWXWNQ/ref=sr_1_2?crid=2MX4LDT2FWSK9&keywords=barbara+hannah+jung+his+life&qid=1574689542&spre`

Carl Jung's view of "Vivisection." (2019-11-25 04:30)

Keystone-France via Getty Images

[2]Memories, Dreams, Reflections

What fascinated me most of all was the morphological point of view in the broadest sense.

With physiology it was just the opposite.

I found the subject thoroughly repellent because of vivisection, which was practiced merely for purposes of demonstration.

I could never free myself from the feeling that warm-blooded creatures were akin to us and not just cerebral automata.

Consequently I cut demonstration classes whenever I could.

I realized that one had to experiment on animals, but the demonstration of such experiments nevertheless seemed to me horrible, barbarous, and above all unnecessary.

I had imagination enough to picture the demonstrated procedures from a mere description of them.

My compassion for animals did not derive from the Buddhistic trimmings of Schopenhauer's philosophy, but rested on the deeper foundation of a primitive attitude of mind on an unconscious identity with animals.

At the time, of course, I was wholly ignorant of this important psychological fact.

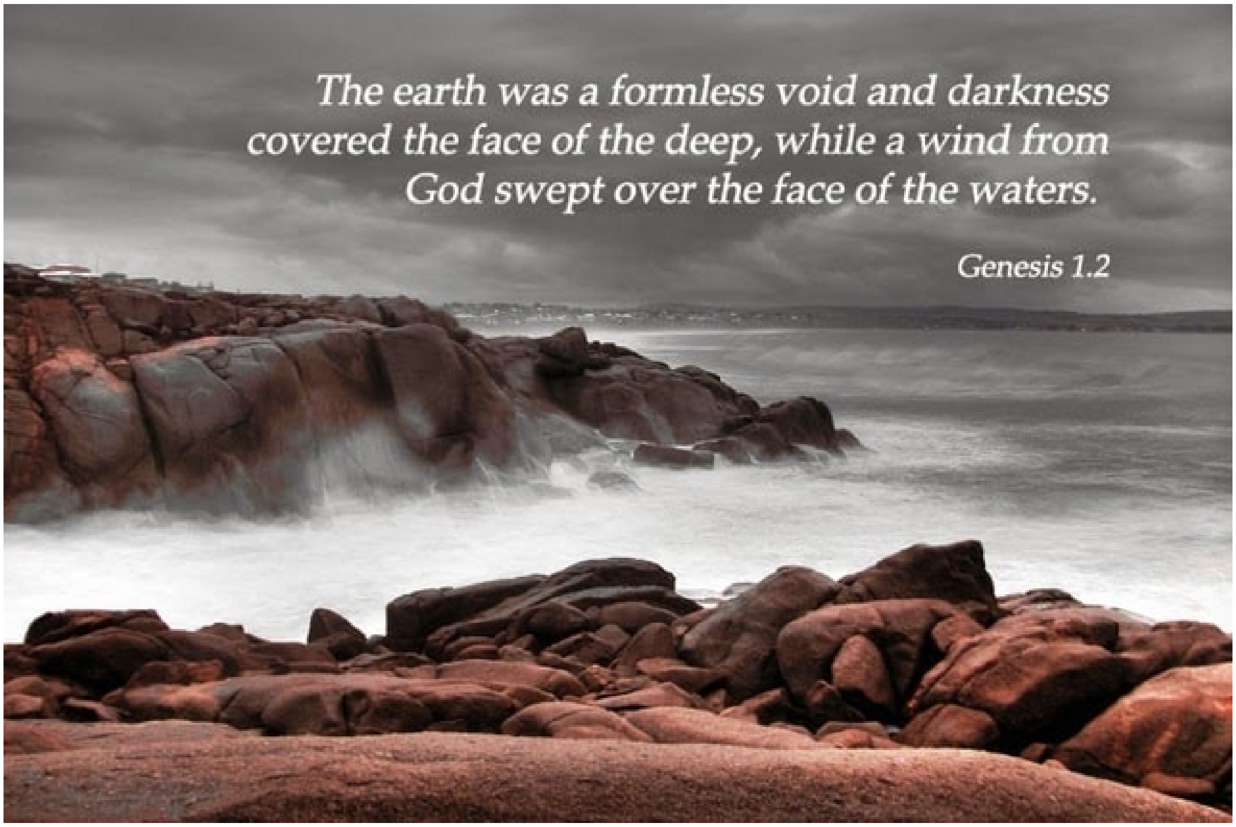
My repugnance for physiology was so great that my examination results in this subject were correspondingly poor.

Nevertheless, I scraped through. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 101.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/7967d-viva.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Memories-Dreams-Reflections-Publisher-Vintage/dp/B004X19L3E/ref=sr_1_2?crid=2BQCDOL0OR9E5&keywords=jung+memories+dreams+reflections&qid=1`

Carl Jung: “The spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters”—like the hen on the egg—He impregnated it. (2019-11-25 04:42)

[1]



The earth was a formless void and darkness covered the face of the deep, while a wind from God swept over the face of the waters.
Genesis 1.2

[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940

[Carl Jung: “The spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters”—like the hen on the egg—He impregnated it.]

Professor Jung: This idea also suggested itself to the classical Pythagorean and the Neoplatonist philosophers.

The Gnostics, too, had a sequence of stages of earth, water, air, and fire.

Dr. Frey: In modern astrology, other points are more important for the classification into stages.

In connection with the trigon, the following applies: in the fire trigon, for example, Aries represents the deepest, Leo the middle, and Sagittarius the highest stage.

In psychological terms, we could say that the first stage is the unconscious, the second what is colored by the ego, and the third one the superego.

The order in each trigon group results from the fact that in each respective case, the first signs—Sagittarius, Taurus, and so on—are more collective, more primitive, than the later ones.

Professor Jung: The idea of a sequence of stages is the image of a creative process: an emergence from the earth through water, through air, and through fire.

We find this image in those philosophers of Neo-Pythagorean and Neoplatonist orientation.

The four stages correspond psychologically to the four stages of individuation.

Earthly man—a Gnostic concept—is hylikos; then a higher development is psychikos, water and air in one.

The word “psyche” (soul) is connected to “physein” (Greek, to blow); psychos corresponds with psychros (Greek, cold, damp).

“The soul of a drunkard is moist,” says Heraclitus.

The soul oscillates between air and water.

It is always the go-between for the two principles marking the extremes: below there is earth, the material matter; above there is pneumatikos (spirit), air, and fire.

Dry, hot air—this is the spirit.

The psyche is originally moist vapor: brooding mist, a creature of the mist.

The air settles on the water, fertilizing.

“The spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters”—like the hen on the egg—He impregnated it.

The germ of fire enters man as his soul, as his life, and makes man warm; this is a kind of descensus of the spirit into matter.

The mysteries are about setting these germs of fire free again.

This is an idea that goes way back to megalithic times.

All initiations have had the goal of creating an immortal human being, surviving death.

This is always about peeling the immortal germ out of mortal nature, and giving this germ a form, that is, there is an effort, so to speak, to replace consciousness, identical with the ego, with the new, the spiritual man.

The dogmatic life of Christ demonstrated all of this: the transfiguration, when the fire man, the light man appears; the death, the rising again, the ascension into heaven.

This idea is also prominent in the teachings of Mani. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 100-101.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/31ac7-face.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-Seminar-1936-1940-Seminars/dp/0691148074/ref=sr_1_2?keywords=jung+children+dreams&qid=1574689916&sr=8-2`

---

one of five music renditions played at Dr. Jung's Funeral (2019-11-25 04:49)

This is one of five music renditions played at Dr. Jung's Funeral at the Friday, June 9, 1961 in the Reformed Church At Kusnacht

[1]

[2]Listen here

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/8fd8b-bach.jpg`
2. `https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=w1bza_bRFLo`

Carl Jung on why Prayers are very necessary (2019-11-25 04:54)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

Anonymous

Dear N. N., 10 September 1 943

Here I send you merely a greeting to tell you that I have understood your letter.

I have thought much about prayer.

It-prayers-are very necessary because it makes the Beyond we conjecture and think about an immediate reality, and transposes us into the duality of the ego and the dark Other.

One hears oneself speaking and can no longer deny that one has addressed "That."

The question then arises:

What will become of Thee and of Me? of the transcendental Thou and the immanent I?

The way of the unexpected, not-to-be expected, opens, fearful and unavoidable, with hope of a propitious turn or a defiant "I will not perish under the will of God unless I myself will it too."

Then only, so I feel, is God’s will made perfect.

Without me it is only his almighty will, a frightful fatality even in its grace, void of sight and hearing, void of knowledge for precisely that reason.

I go together with it, an immensely weighty milligram without which God had made his world in vain.

Best wishes,

Yours ever,

Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 338.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/ce375-prayer.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574690075&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: ...the collective man is subhuman... (2019-11-25 05:25)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Dr. Ed. Lauchenauer

Dear Dr. Lauchenauer, 16 January 1940

What the public still doesn't know and can't get into its head is that the collective man is subhuman, nothing but a beast-man, as was clearly demonstrated by the exquisite bestiality of the young German fighters during the Blitzkrieg in Poland.

Any organization in which the voice of the individual is no longer heard is in danger of degenerating into a subhuman monster.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung, Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 282.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/37792-sub.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574690075&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung and “Wolf Soul.” (2019-11-25 05:38)

[1]

“To confront a person with his shadow is to show him his own light.”
Carl Jung
www.jungquotes.com
Photo: Susan Burnstine

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

Anonymous

My dear Mrs. N., 6 September 1943

Your relation to Mrs. X. seems to be disturbed by the "wolf soul ."

As you pointed out, envy, competition, feelings of inferiority etc. arose between you.

With reference to myself there is also the factor of jealousy, the latter of a very elementary sort .

One is-helas-never at the end of that seemingly endless animal tail, which one cannot cut off but only tolerate or suffer.

Mrs. X. is less aware of it and takes what she knows more lightly, whereas you take it almost too seriously, at least with the whole weight of a hard fact.

It is however a "relative" fact.

With an introvert-on account of his inferior Eros -it weighs more and seems to be more important.

But the extravert should teach him to look a bit more away from it.

As Lord Beaconsfield said : "Important things are not so very important," etc.

She constellates your shadow naturally and it gives you a nice feeling of inferiority, thus far quite healthy.

Only don't take it too seriously and don't believe that Mrs. X. has not her private hell too.

Everybody has, but it is the extravert's particular game to show the least of trouble and to cause the most of it.

Don't rely too much on your inferior Eros, and keep even smarting relations.

You learn a lot from them .

If your animus misbehaves, then you have not used your feelings.

Social feelings are never 100 % pure gold but consist of about 40 % make-up.

This is no deception but an altruistic endeavor and produces a good conscience, a thing not to be despised.

Don't worry yourself too much (wolfishness against oneself).

Worry Mrs. X.

This is better.

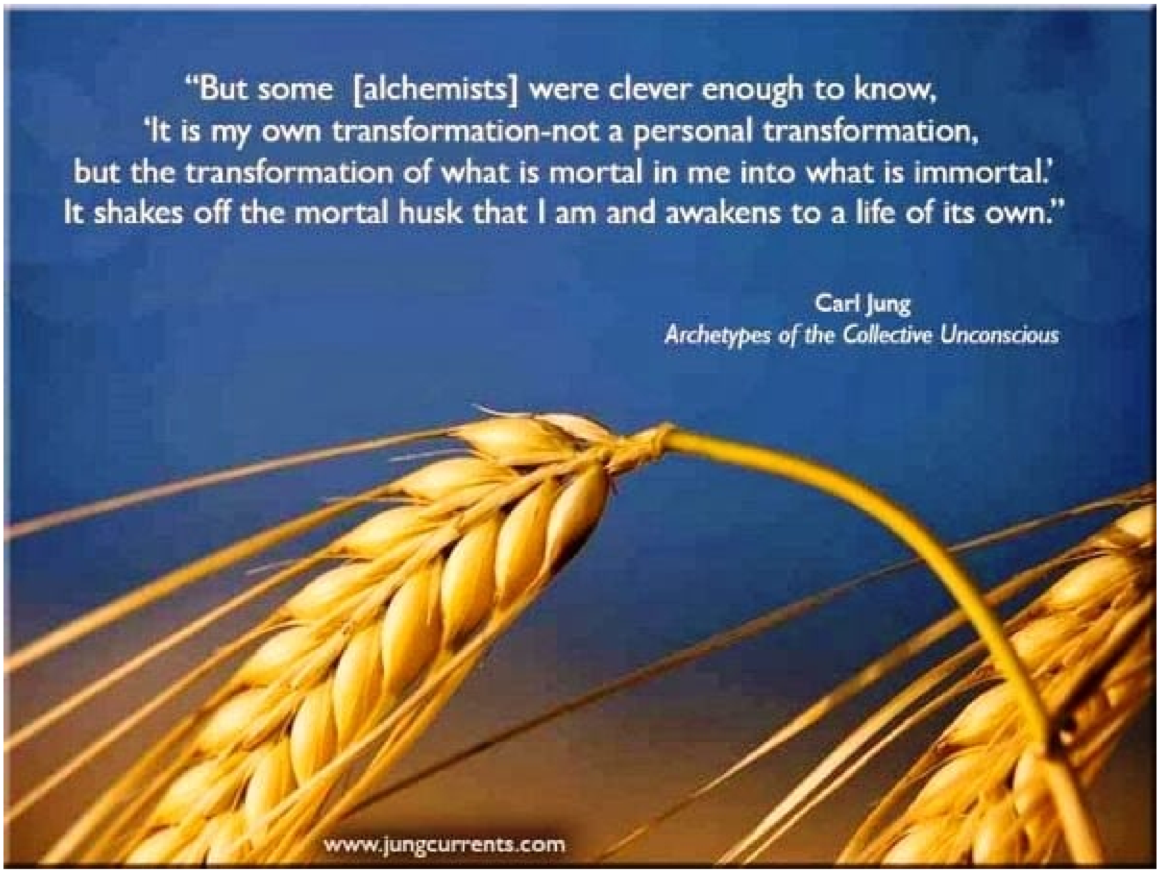
Yours cordially,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 337.

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/d27ed-confront.jpg
2. https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574690075&sr=8-1

It Shakes Off the Mortal Husk That I Am and Awakens to a Life of Its Own. (2019-11-26 04:07)

[1]



"But some [alchemists] were clever enough to know,
'It is my own transformation-not a personal transformation, but the transformation of what is mortal in me into what is immortal.'
It shakes off the mortal husk that I am and awakens to a life of its own."

Carl Jung
Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious

www.jungcurrents.com

[2]The Archetypes and The Collective Unconscious (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.9 Part 1)

Carl Jung: "It Shakes Off the Mortal Husk That I Am and Awakens to a Life of Its Own."

The alchemists saw it in the transformation of the chemical substance.

So if one of them sought transformation, he discovered it outside in matter, whose transformation cried out to him, as it were, "I am the transformation!"

But some were clever enough to know, "It is my own transformation-not a personal transformation, but the transformation of what is mortal in me into what is immortal.

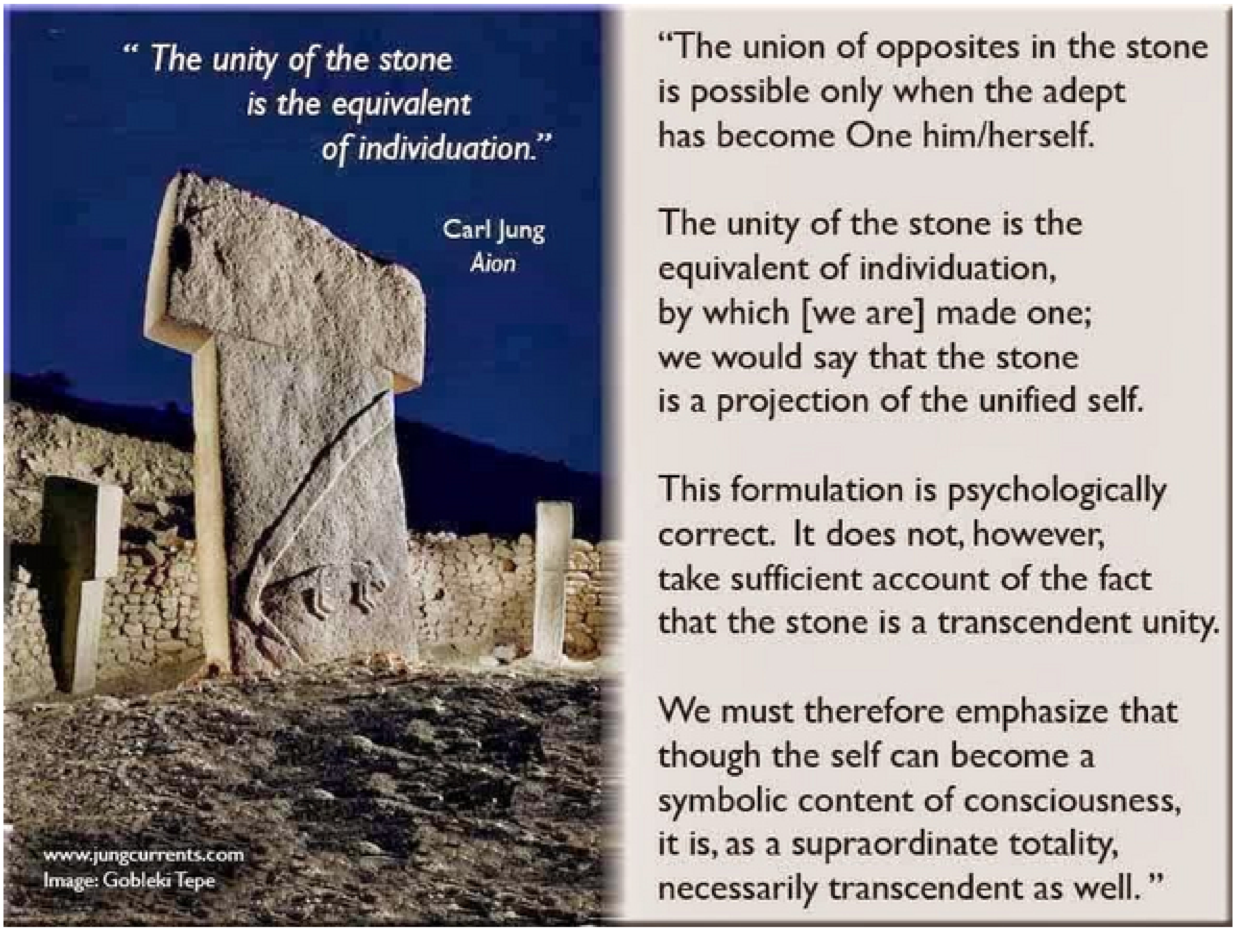
It shakes off the mortal husk that I am and awakens to a life of its own." Carl Jung, Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious; Paragraph 238.

http://jungcurrents.com/jung-mortal-husk-alchemy/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/5dd3b-shakes.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Archetypes-Collective-Unconscious-Collected-Works/dp/0691018332/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1LSLPXE7XEAQT&keywords=carl+jung+archetypes+and+the+colle`

The unity of the stone is the equivalent of individuation... (2019-11-26 04:12)

[1]



" The unity of the stone is the equivalent of individuation."

Carl Jung
Aion

"The union of opposites in the stone is possible only when the adept has become One him/herself.

The unity of the stone is the equivalent of individuation, by which [we are] made one; we would say that the stone is a projection of the unified self.

This formulation is psychologically correct. It does not, however, take sufficient account of the fact that the stone is a transcendent unity.

We must therefore emphasize that though the self can become a symbolic content of consciousness, it is, as a supraordinate totality, necessarily transcendent as well. "

www.jungcurrents.com
Image: Gobleki Tepe

[2]Aion: Researches into the Phenomenology of the Self (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.9 Part 2)

The unity of the stone is the equivalent of individuation, by which [we are] made one; we would say that the stone is a projection of the unified self.

This formulation is psychologically correct. It does not, however, take sufficient account of the fact that the stone is a transcendent unity.

We must therefore emphasize that though the self can become a symbolic content of consciousness, it is, as a supraordinate totality, necessarily transcendent as well."

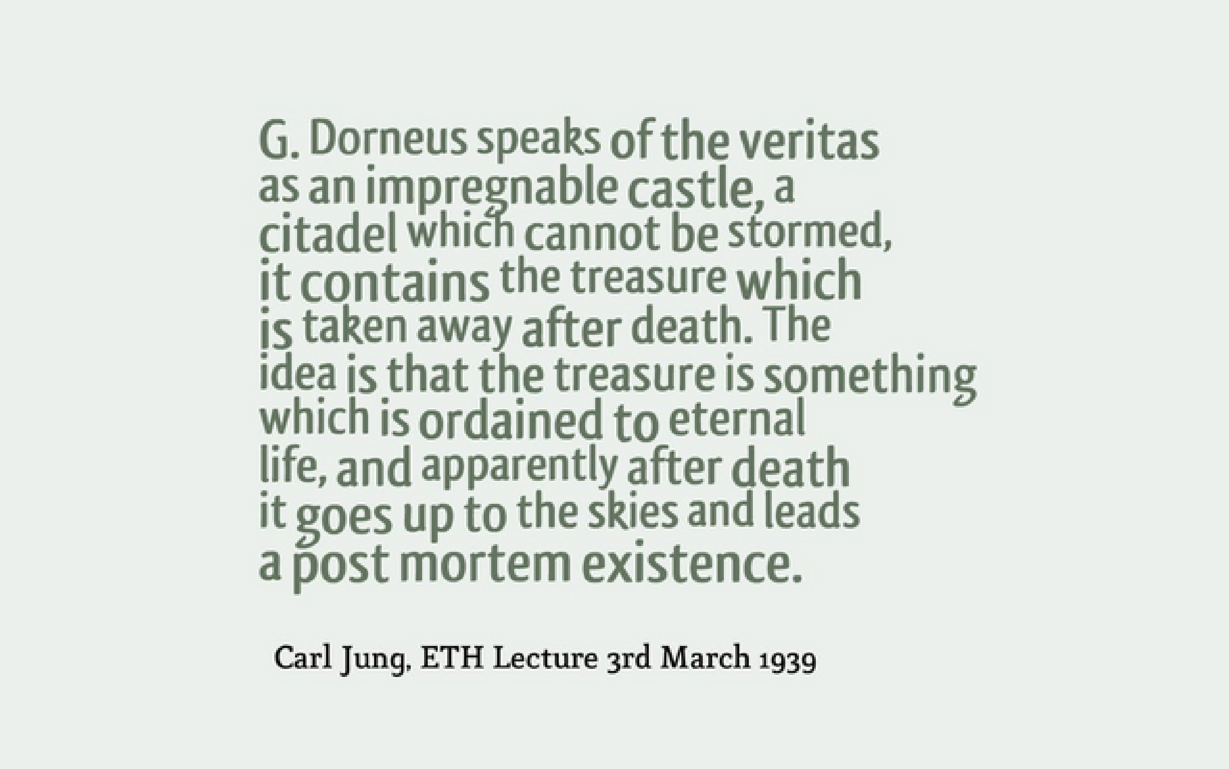
-Carl Jung, "The Alchemical Interpretation of the Fish," in Aion: Researches into the Phenomenology of the Self

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/a7281-aion.jpg`

2. https://www.amazon.com/Aion-Researches-Phenomenology-Collected-Works/dp/069101826X/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=carl+jung+aion&qid=1574760273&sr=8-1

Some Carl Jung Quotations LIV [ETH Lectures] (2019-11-26 04:30)

[1]



G. Dorneus speaks of the veritas as an impregnable castle, a citadel which cannot be stormed, it contains the treasure which is taken away after death. The idea is that the treasure is something which is ordained to eternal life, and apparently after death it goes up to the skies and leads a post mortem existence.

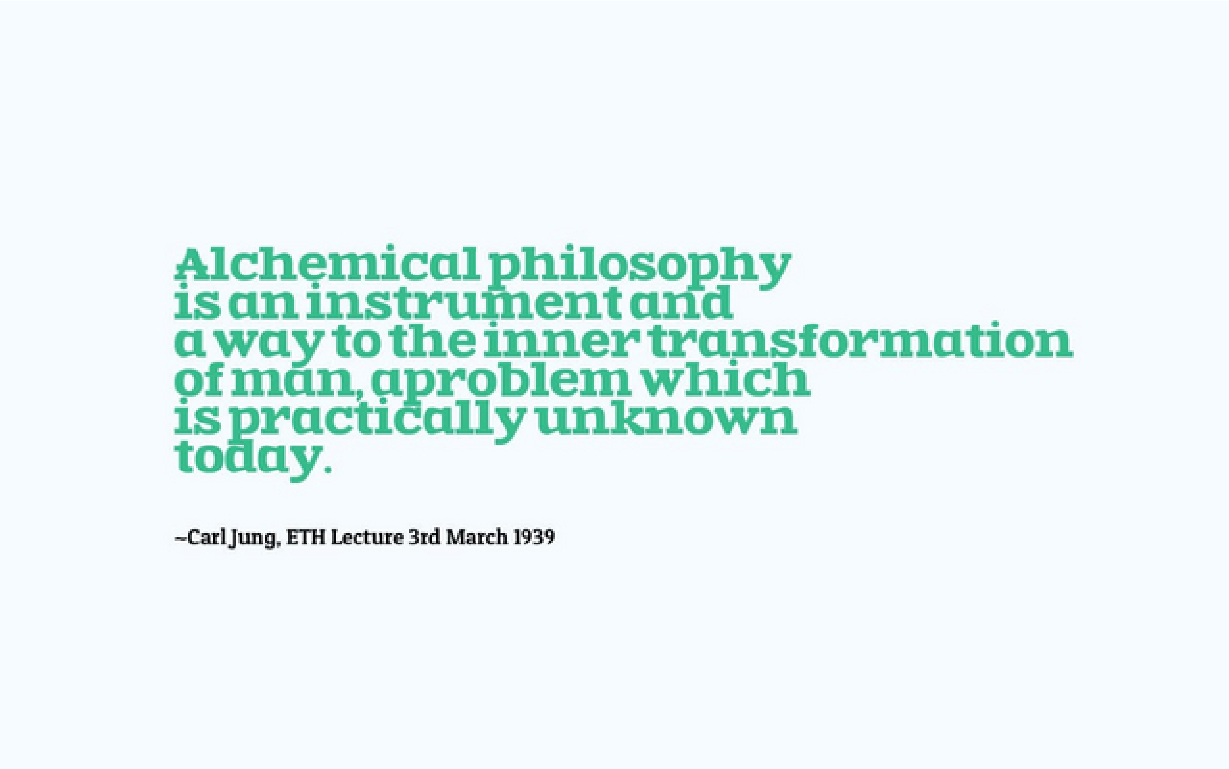
Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3rd March 1939

[2]Modern Psychology: C. G. Jung's Lectures at the ETH Zürich, 1933-1941

G. Dorneus speaks of the veritas as an impregnable castle, a citadel which cannot be stormed, it contains the treasure which is taken away after death. The idea is that the treasure is something which is ordained to eternal life, and apparently after death it goes up to the skies and leads a post mortem existence. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3rd

March 1939

[3]

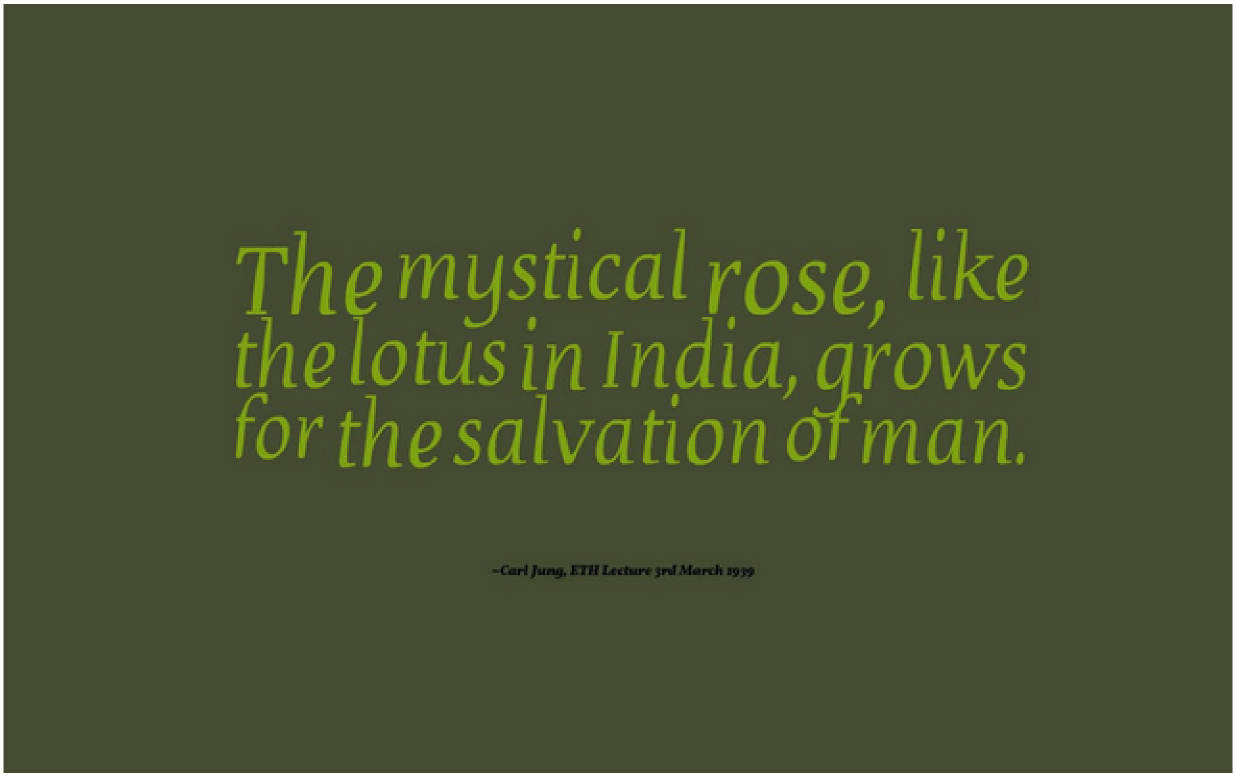


Alchemical philosophy is an instrument and a way to the inner transformation of man, a problem which is practically unknown today.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3rd March 1939

Alchemical philosophy is an instrument and a way to the inner transformation of man, a problem which is practically unknown today. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3rd March 1939

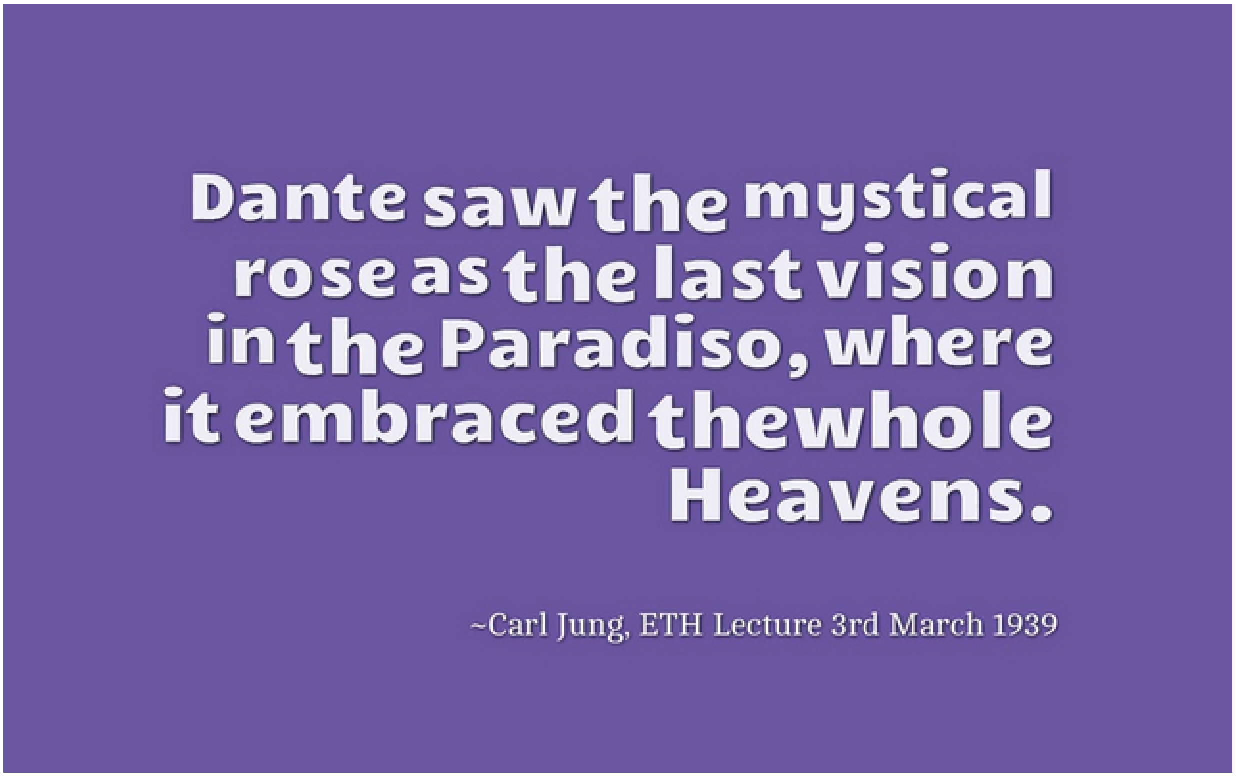
[4]



The mystical rose, like the lotus in India, grows for the salvation of man.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3rd March 1939

The mystical rose, like the lotus in India, grows for the salvation of man. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3rd March 1939



Dante saw the mystical rose as the last vision in the Paradiso, where it embraced thewhole Heavens.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3rd March 1939

Dante saw the mystical rose as the last vision in the Paradiso, where it embraced the whole Heavens. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3rd March 1939

but we find the chief parallel to the lotus in the hymnology of mary, where she is called the flower of heaven, the noble rose of heaven, the rose without thorn; she is also greeted as the sweet rose, etc.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3rd March 1939

But we find the chief parallel to the lotus in the hymnology of Mary, where she is called the flower of Heaven, the noble rose of Heaven, the rose without thorn; she is also greeted as the sweet rose, etc. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3rd March 1939

Mary is the bud which contains the becoming being that is undergoing transformation.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3rd March 1939

Mary is the bud which contains the becoming being that is undergoing transformation. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3rd March 1939.

The negro spirituals are tremendously alive, they belong to the most living religious expressions extant, which is a result of the tension between the opposites:
a highly developed religion on one side and complete primitivity
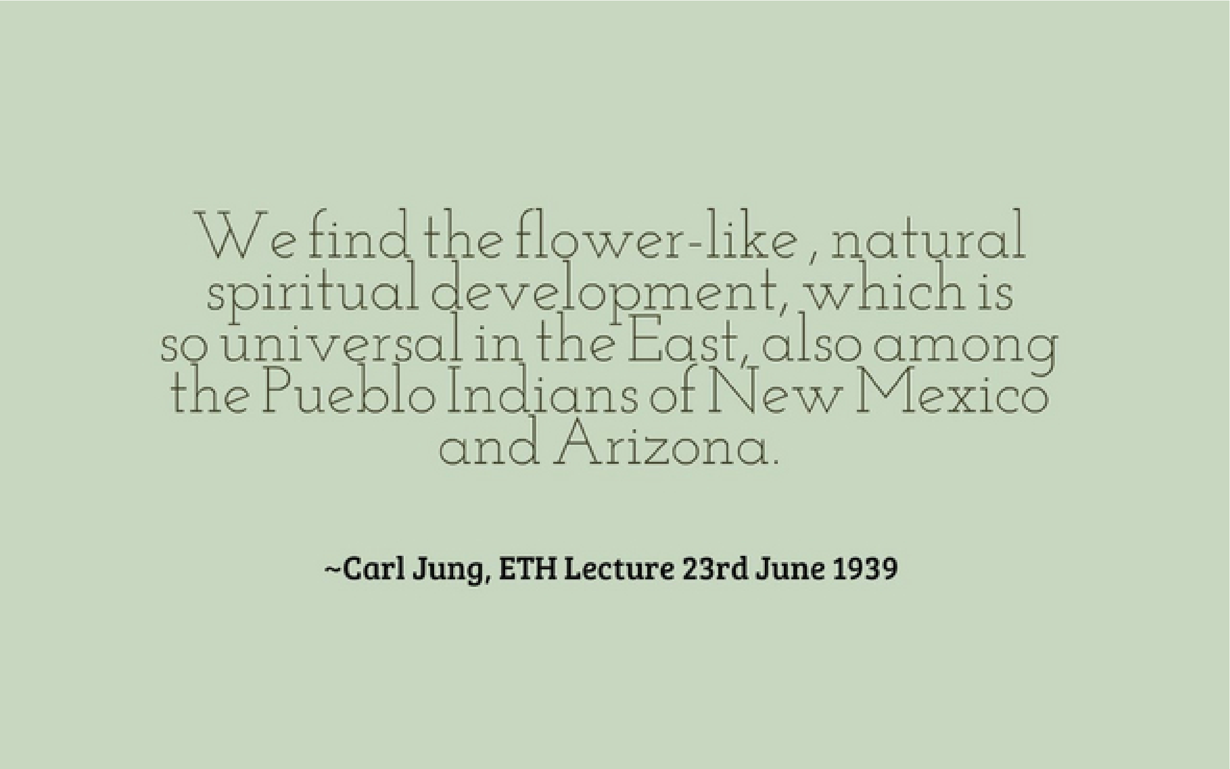
on the other.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 23rd June 1939

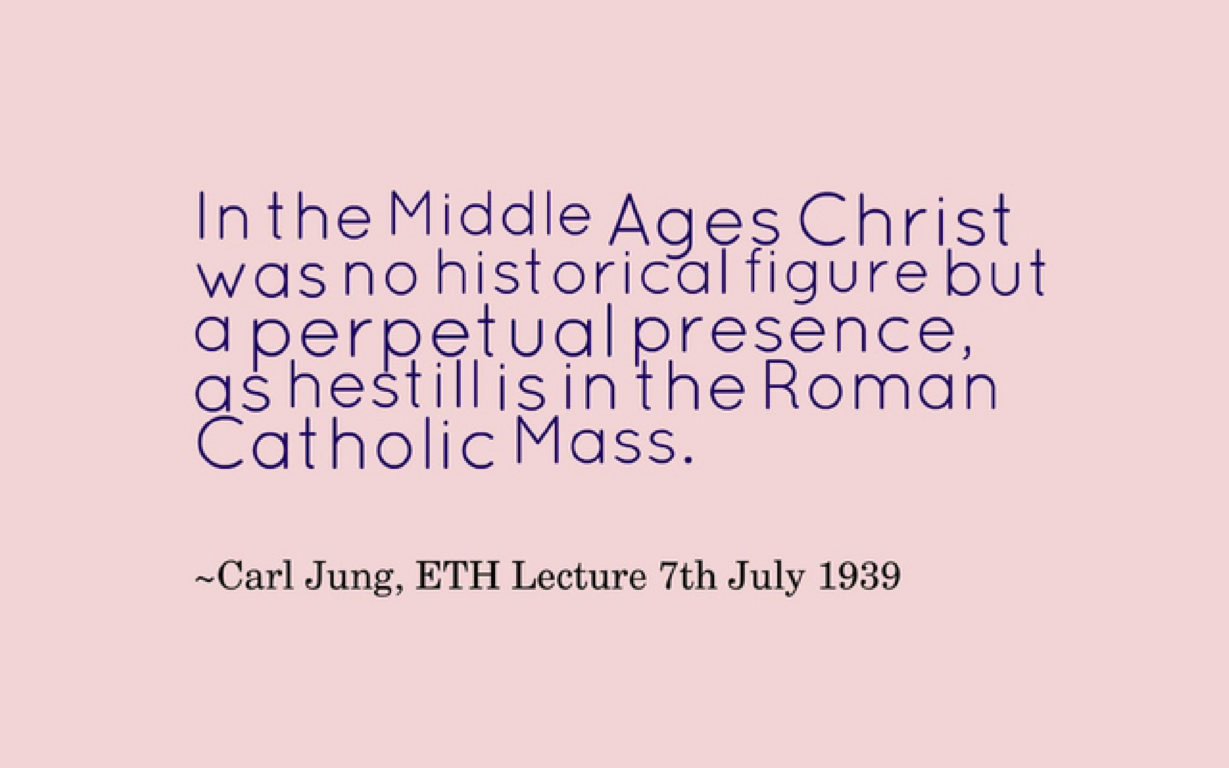
The negro spirituals are tremendously alive, they belong to the most living religious expressions extant, which is a result of the tension between the opposites: a highly developed religion on one side and complete primitivity on the other. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 23rd June 1939



We find the flower-like , natural spiritual development, which is so universal in the East, also among the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico and Arizona.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 23rd June 1939

We find the flower-like, natural spiritual development, which is so universal in the East, also among the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico and Arizona. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture Epilogue 23rd June 1939



In the Middle Ages Christ was no historical figure but a perpetual presence, as hestill is in the Roman Catholic Mass.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 7th July 1939

In the Middle Ages Christ was no historical figure but a perpetual presence, as hestill is in the Roman Catholic Mass. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 7th July 1939

Visions are spontaneous phenomena which spring from the unconscious and are a-moral. A moral standpoint is introduced by consciousness, it is impressed by a certain atmosphere and declares the visions to be good or bad.

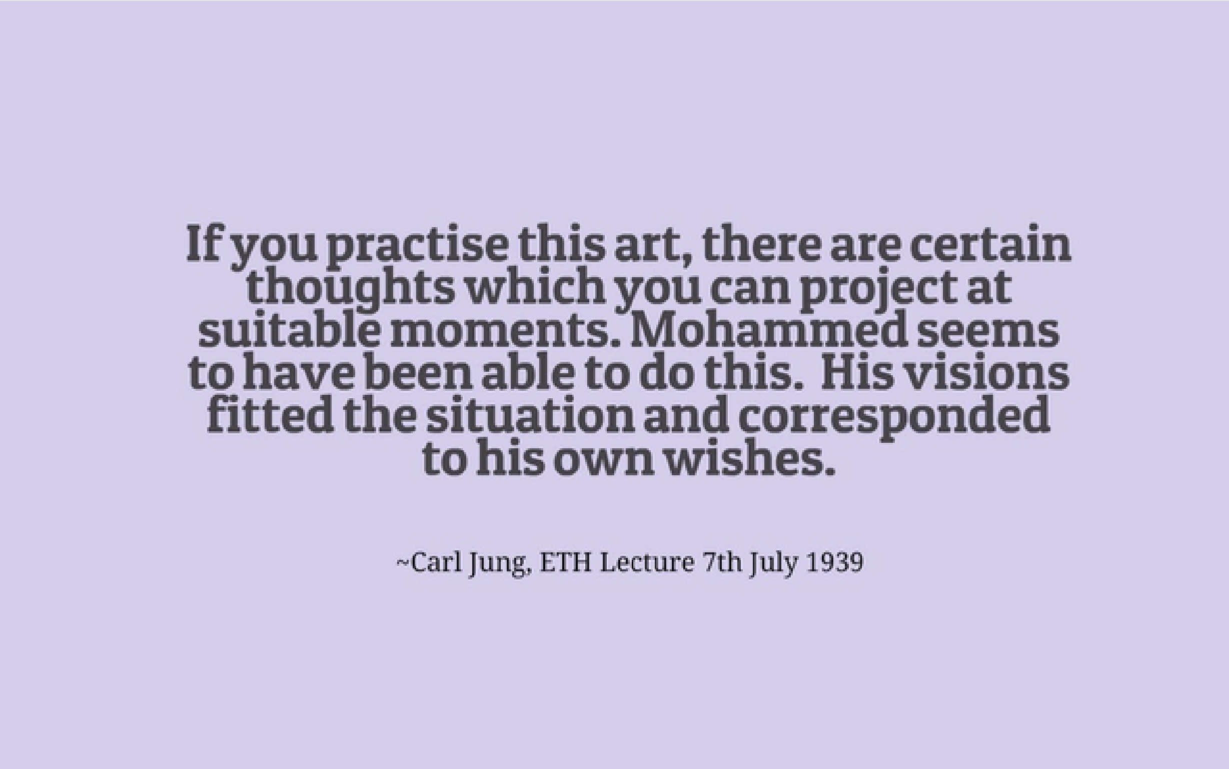
~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 7th July 1939

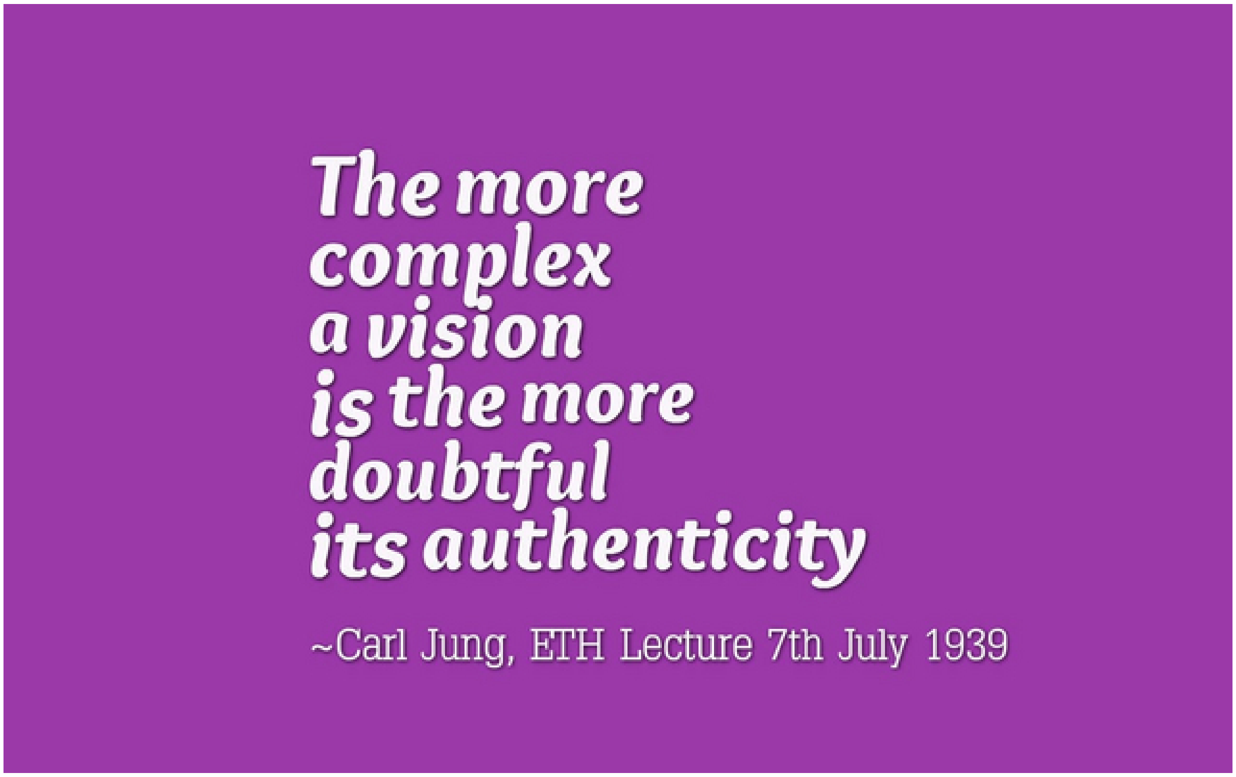
Visions are spontaneous phenomena which spring from the unconscious and are a-moral. A moral standpoint is introduced by consciousness, it is impressed by a certain atmosphere and declares the visions to be good or bad.
Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 7th July 1939



If you practise this art, there are certain thoughts which you can project at suitable moments. Mohammed seems to have been able to do this. His visions fitted the situation and corresponded to his own wishes.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 7th July 1939

If you practise this art, there are certain thoughts which you can project at suitable moments. Mohammed seems to have been able to do this. His visions fitted the situation and corresponded to his own wishes. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 7th July 1939

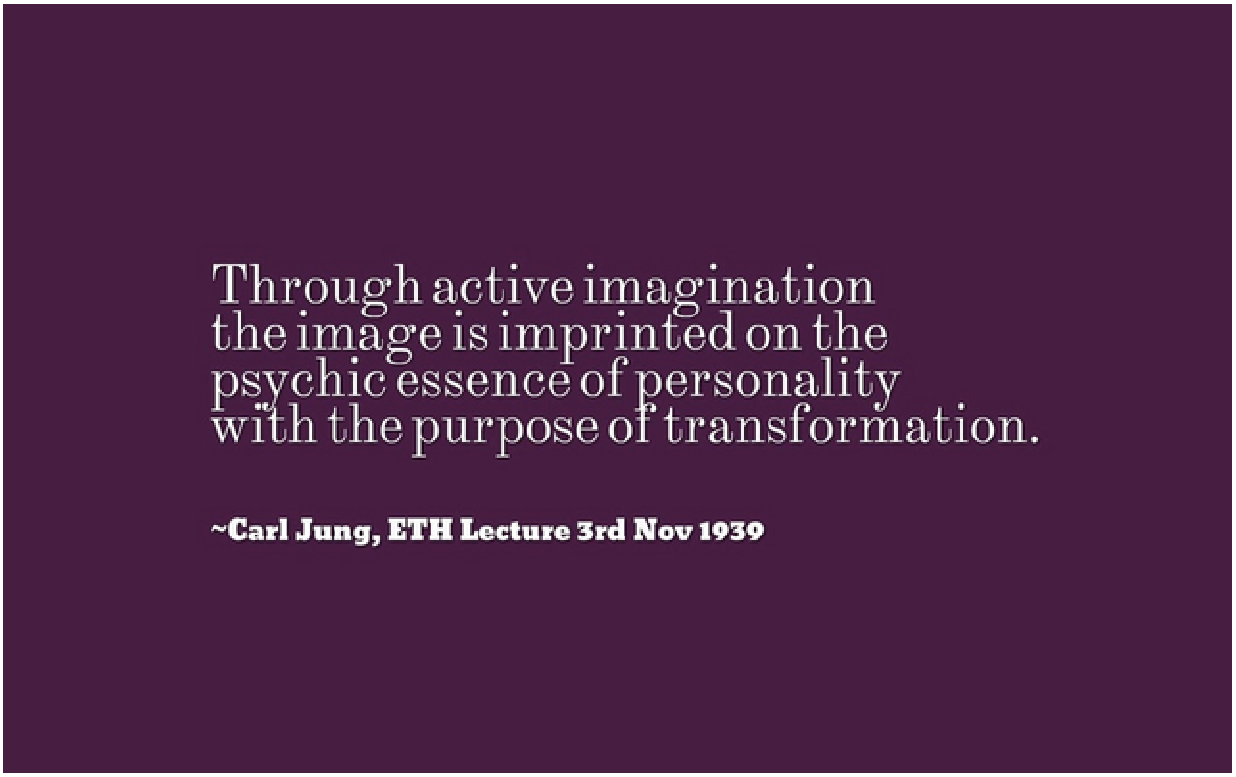


The more complex a vision is the more doubtful its authenticity

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 7th July 1939

The more complex a vision is the more doubtful its authenticity. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture, 7th July 1939

[14]



Through active imagination the image is imprinted on the psychic essence of personality with the purpose of transformation.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3rd Nov 1939

Through active imagination the image is imprinted on the psychic essence of personality with the purpose of transformation. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3rd Nov 1939

[15]

One of the great dangers of our time is the uprooted population in big towns, they live too near together and become completely collective.
The argument that man is raised by the community is False.

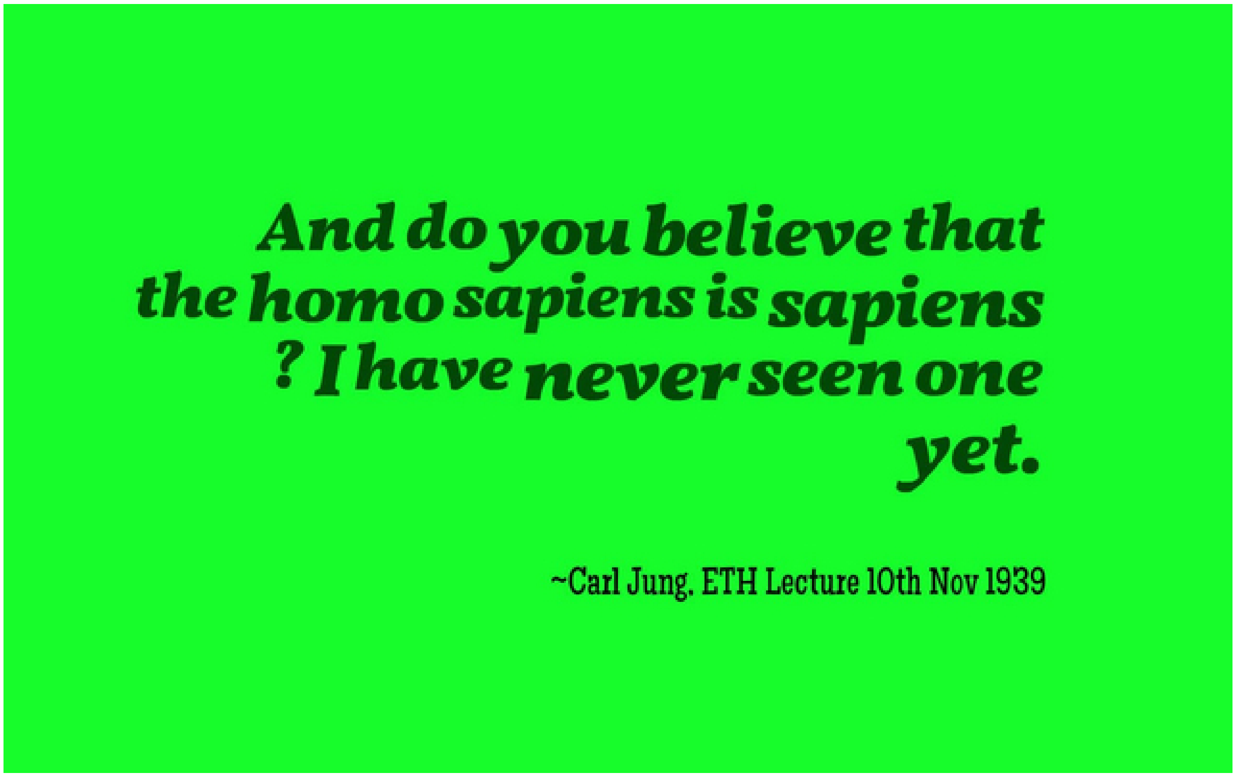
~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3rd Nov 1939

One of the great dangers of our time is the uprooted population in big towns, they live too near together and become completely collective. The argument that man is raised by the community is false. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 10th Nov 1939

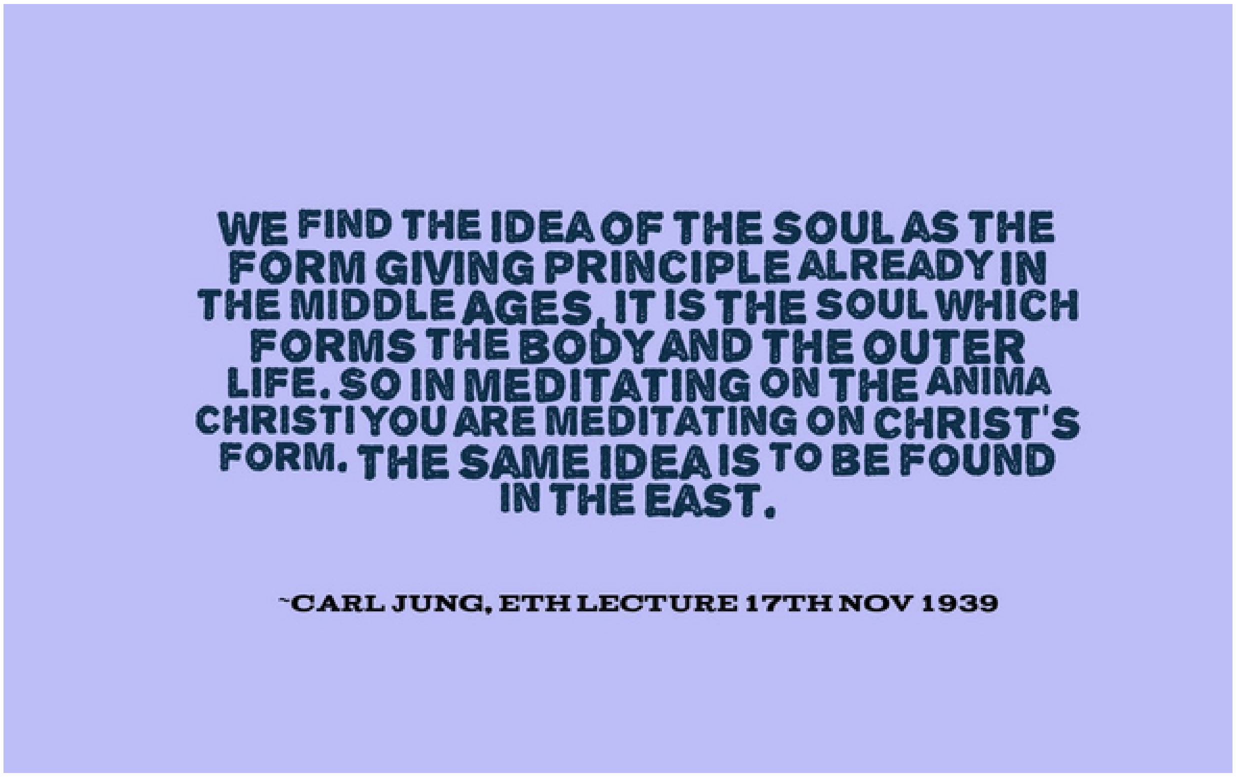
[16]



And do you believe that the homo sapiens is sapiens ? I have never seen one yet.

~Carl Jung. ETH Lecture 10th Nov 1939

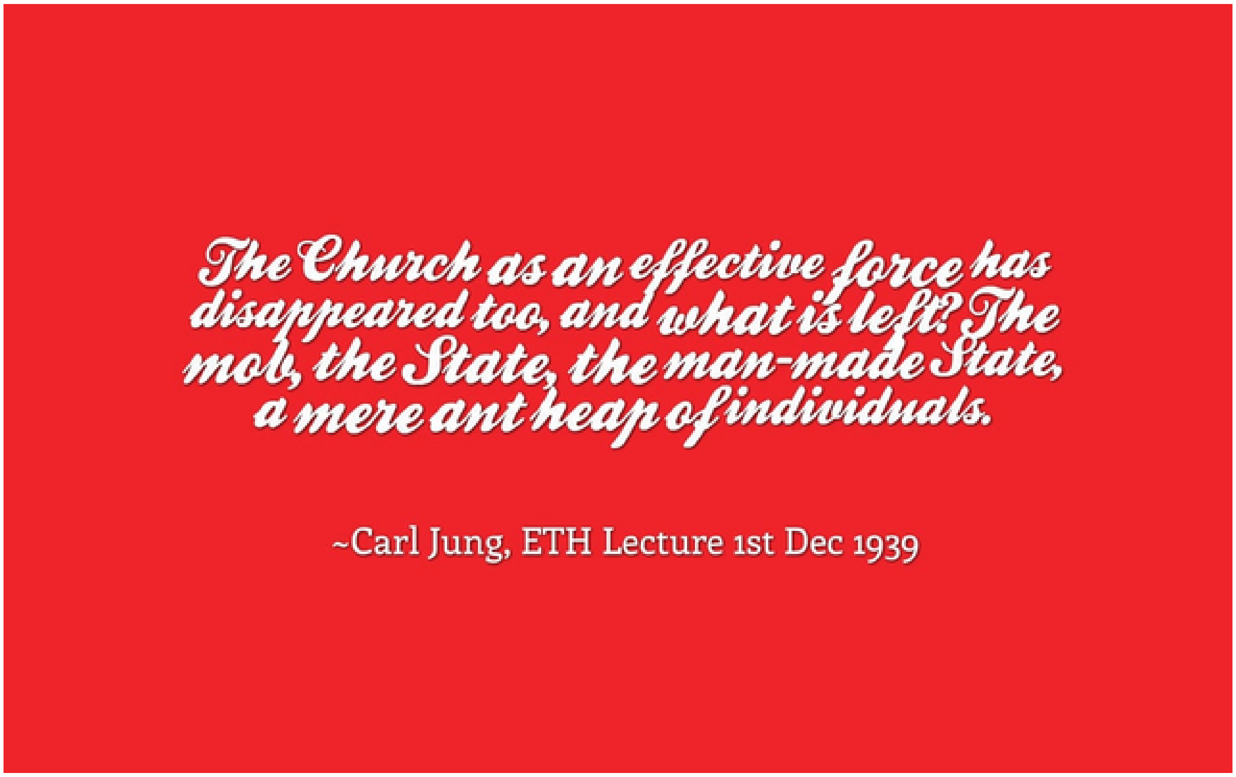
And do you believe that the homo sapiens is sapiens? I have never seen one yet. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 10th Nov 1939



WE FIND THE IDEA OF THE SOUL AS THE FORM GIVING PRINCIPLE ALREADY IN THE MIDDLE AGES, IT IS THE SOUL WHICH FORMS THE BODY AND THE OUTER LIFE. SO IN MEDITATING ON THE ANIMA CHRISTI YOU ARE MEDITATING ON CHRIST'S FORM. THE SAME IDEA IS TO BE FOUND IN THE EAST.

~CARL JUNG, ETH LECTURE 17TH NOV 1939

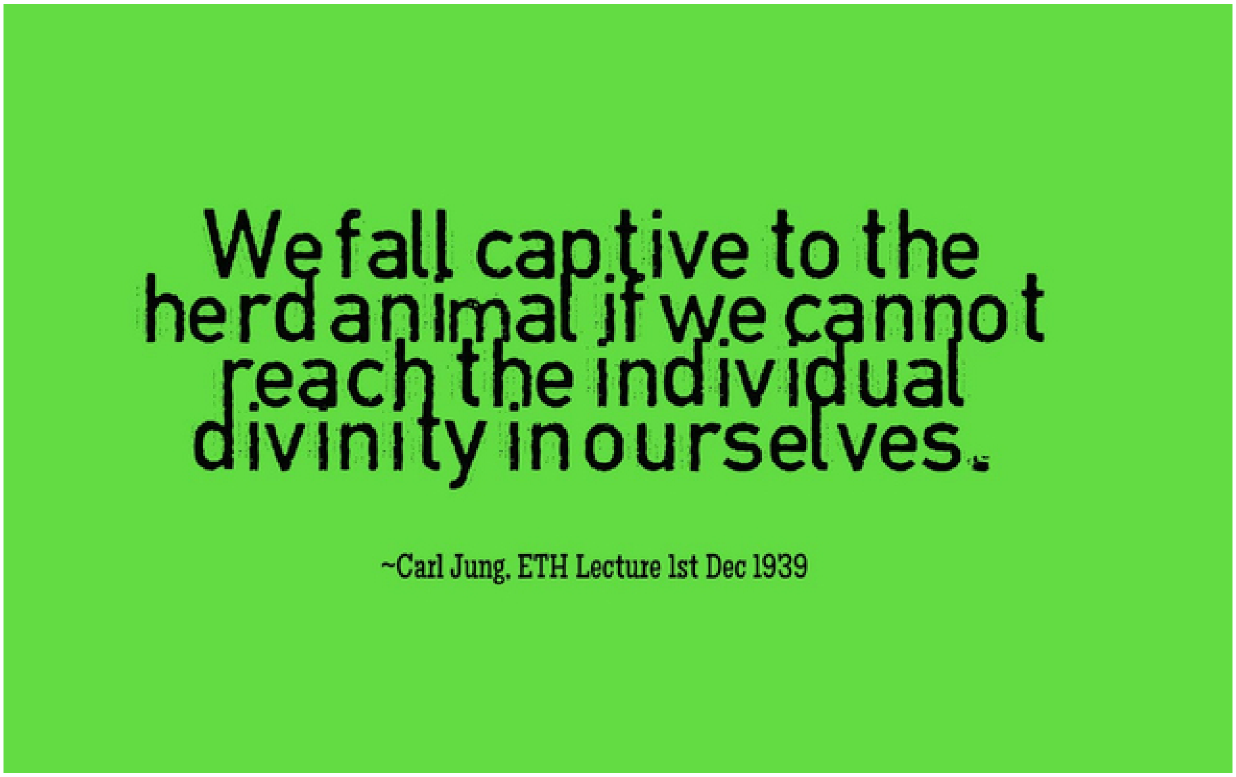
We find the idea of the soul as the form giving principle already in the Middle Ages, it is the soul which forms the body and the outer life. So in meditating on the Anima Christi you are meditating on Christ's form. The same idea is to be found in the East. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture17th Nov 1939



The Church as an effective force has disappeared too, and what is left? The mob, the State, the man-made State, a mere ant heap of individuals.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 1st Dec 1939

The Church as an effective force has disappeared too, and what is left? The mob, the State, the man-made State, a mere ant heap of individuals. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 1st Dec 1939



We fall captive to the herd animal if we cannot reach the individual divinity in ourselves.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 1st Dec 1939

We fall captive to the herd animal if we cannot reach the individual divinity in ourselves. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 1st Dec 1939

The feminine side of Christ is much emphasized in Christian iconology,
he is usually represented as a very feminine
man. The same characteristic was apparently attributed to his cousin, Mithras.

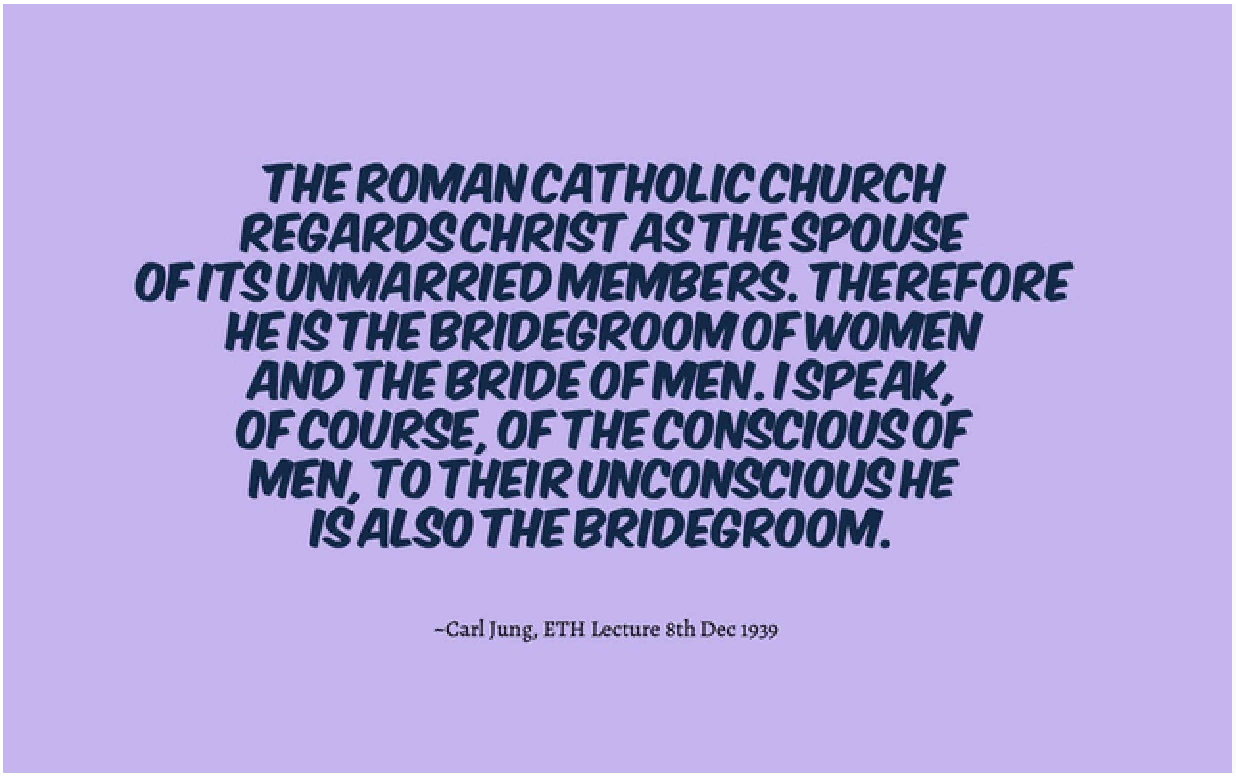
~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8th Dec 1939

The feminine side of Christ is much emphasized in Christian iconology, he is usually represented as a very feminine man. The same characteristic was apparently attributed to his cousin, Mithras. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8th Dec 1939



THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH
REGARDS CHRIST AS THE SPOUSE
OF ITS UNMARRIED MEMBERS. THEREFORE HE IS THE BRIDEGROOM OF WOMEN AND THE BRIDE OF MEN. I SPEAK,
OF COURSE, OF THE CONSCIOUS OF
MEN, TO THEIR UNCONSCIOUS HE IS ALSO THE BRIDEGROOM.

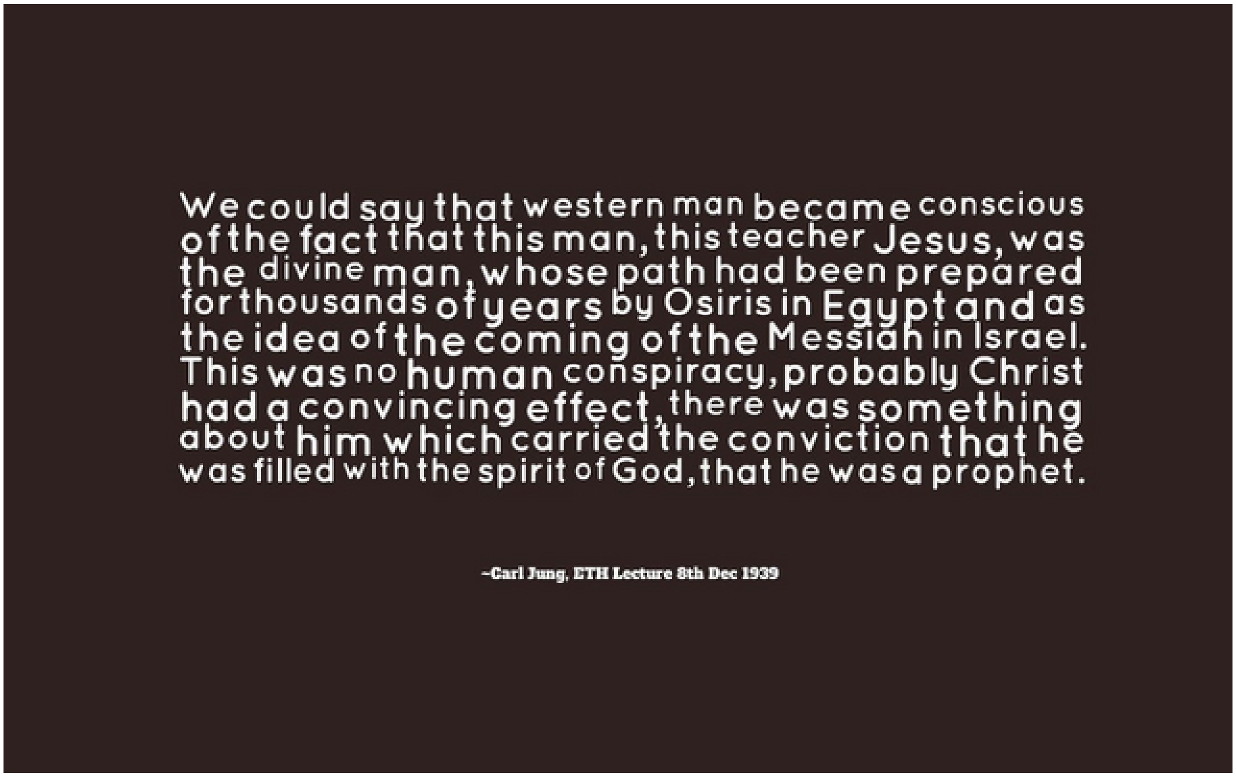
~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8th Dec 1939

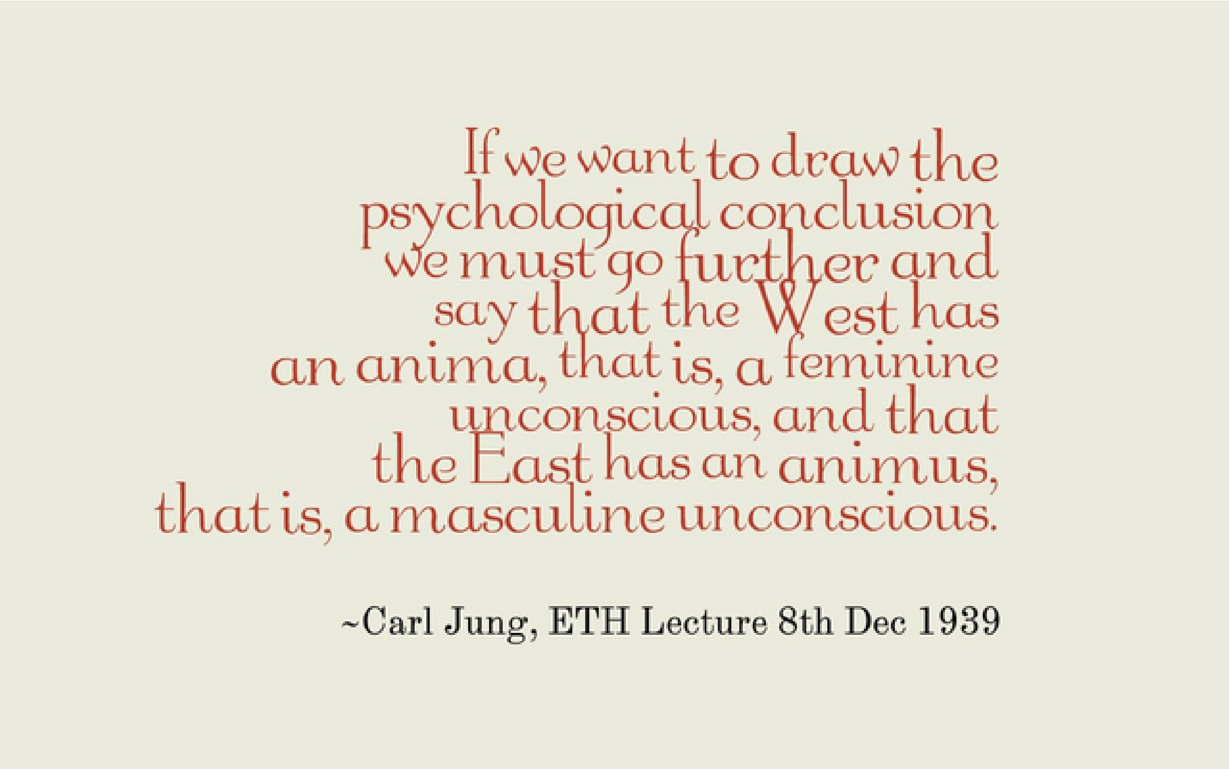
The Roman Catholic Church regards Christ as the spouse of its unmarried members. Therefore he is the bridegroom of women and the bride of men. I speak, of course, of the conscious of men, to their unconscious He is also the bridegroom. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8th Dec 1939



We could say that western man became conscious of the fact that this man, this teacher Jesus, was the divine man, whose path had been prepared for thousands of years by Osiris in Egypt and as the idea of the coming of the Messiah in Israel. This was no human conspiracy, probably Christ had a convincing effect, there was something about him which carried the conviction that he was filled with the spirit of God, that he was a prophet.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8th Dec 1939

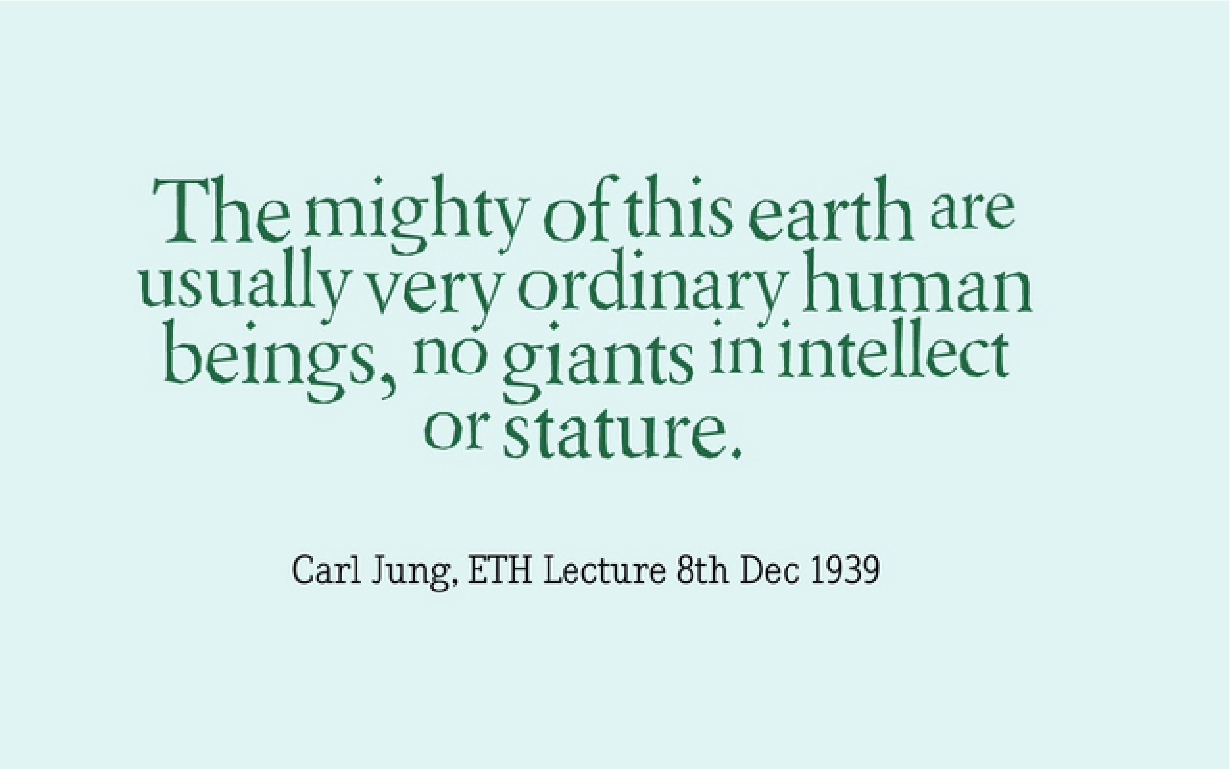
We could say that western man became conscious of the fact that this man, this teacher Jesus, was the divine man, whose path had been prepared for thousands of years by Osiris in Egypt and as the idea of the coming of the Messiah in Israel. This was no human conspiracy, probably Christ had a convincing effect, there was something about him which carried the conviction that he was filled with the spirit of God, that he was a prophet. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8th Dec 1939



If we want to draw the psychological conclusion we must go further and say that the West has an anima, that is, a feminine unconscious, and that the East has an animus, that is, a masculine unconscious.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8th Dec 1939

If we want to draw the psychological conclusion we must go further and say that the West has an anima, that is, a feminine unconscious, and that the East has an animus, that is, a masculine unconscious. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8th Dec 1939



The mighty of this earth are usually very ordinary human beings, no giants in intellect or stature.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8th Dec 1939

The mighty of this earth are usually very ordinary human beings, no giants in intellect or stature. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8th Dec 1939

In my opinion our attitude to the East is one of Europe's worst sins.
We ignore it or notice it in the wrong way. We are not alone on the earth.

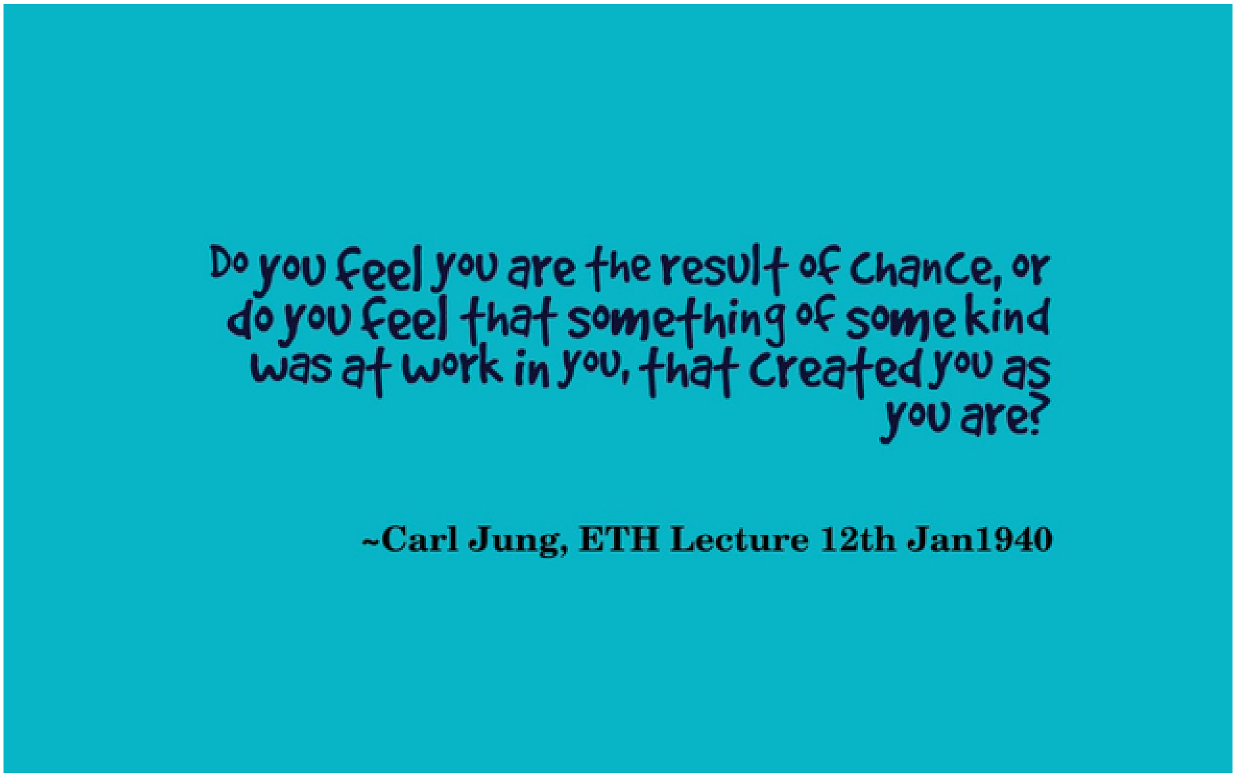
Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 15th Dec 1939

In my opinion our attitude to the East is one of Europe’s worst sins. We ignore it or notice it in the wrong way. We are not alone on the earth. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 15th Dec 1939



Do you feel you are the result of chance, or do you feel that something of some kind was at work in you, that created you as you are?

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 12th Jan1940

"Do you feel you are the result of chance, or do you feel that something of some kind was at work in you, that created you as you are?" Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 12th January 1940 a certain line of thought. for instance. is developed through a series of dreams; and i discover that i am the duplicate of my unconscious anticipation of myself; at the same moment i am filled with a sense of purpose as if a secret arrangement of my fate existed.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 12th Jan1940

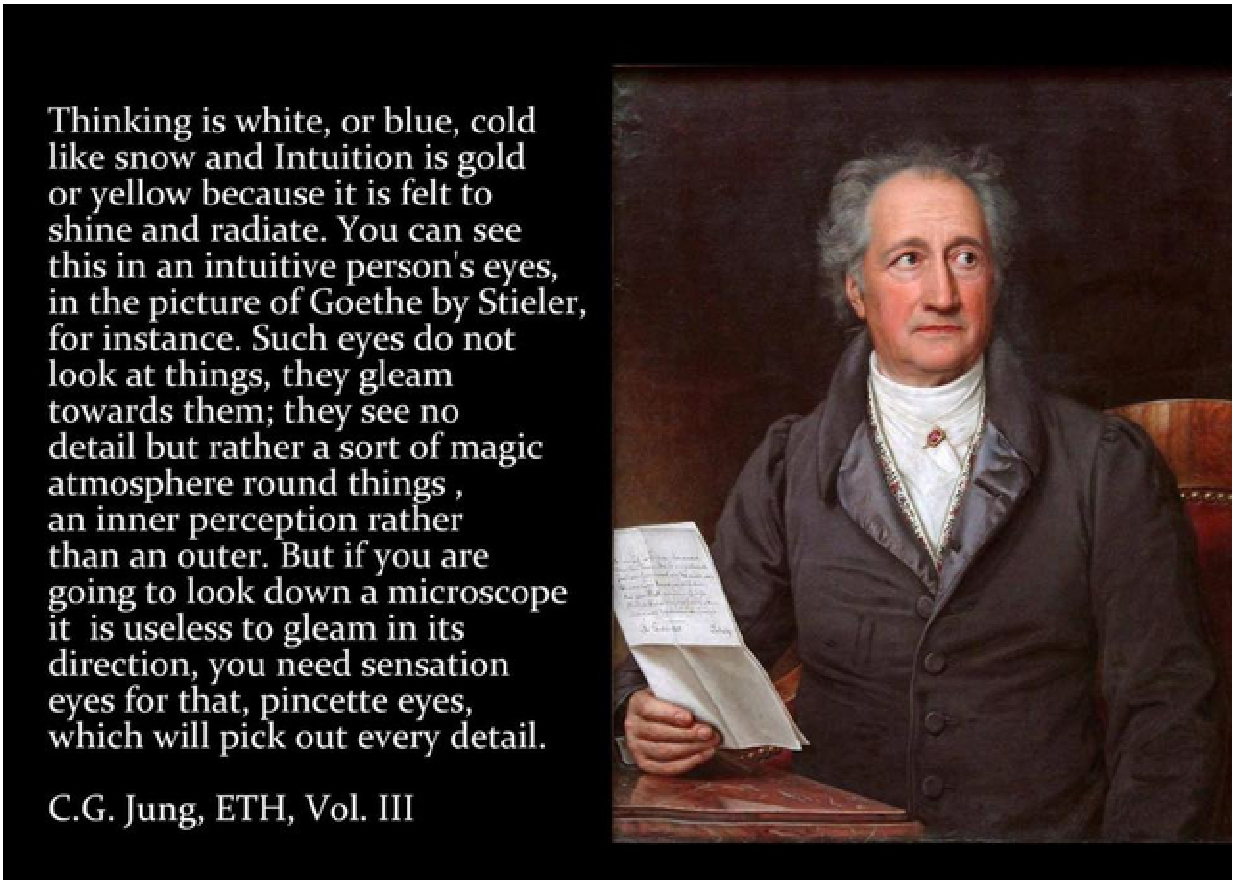
A certain line of thought, for instance, is developed through a series of dreams; and I discover that I am the duplicate of my unconscious anticipation of myself; at the same moment I am filled with a sense of purpose as if a secret arrangement of my fate existed. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 26th Jan 1940

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/5395c-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://philemonfoundation.org/current-projects/eth-lectures/`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/6a4b9-bbb.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/93886-ccc.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/b50bb-ddd.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/d6b52-eee.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/271e9-fff.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/48a27-ggg.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/f3e10-hhh.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/2d0e3-iii.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/66ea7-jjj.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/3a319-kkk.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/84e5f-lll.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/7d40a-mmm.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/65269-nnn.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/2cfc1-ooo.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/7979b-ppp.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/f9e8e-qqq.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/90942-rrr.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/59e75-sss.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/a03f2-ttt.jpg`

22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/557ca-uuu.jpg`
23. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/7efc7-vvv.jpg`
24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/3ff2f-www.jpg`
25. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/b3b45-xxx.jpg`
26. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/60128-yyy.jpg`
27. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/fbf93-zzz.jpg`

Carl Jung: The four colours attributed to the functions are based on certain feeling values (2019-11-26 04:46)

[1]



Thinking is white, or blue, cold like snow and Intuition is gold or yellow because it is felt to shine and radiate. You can see this in an intuitive person's eyes, in the picture of Goethe by Stieler, for instance. Such eyes do not look at things, they gleam towards them; they see no detail but rather a sort of magic atmosphere round things , an inner perception rather than an outer. But if you are going to look down a microscope it is useless to gleam in its direction, you need sensation eyes for that, pincette eyes, which will pick out every detail.

C.G. Jung, ETH, Vol. III

[2]Lectures Delivered at the ETH Zurich,

The four colours attributed to the functions are based on certain feeling values.

Feeling is red, this is connected with blood and fire, with passion and love which is supposed to be warm and glowing.

Sensation is green, this is connected with the earth and perceiving reality.

Thinking is white, or blue, cold like snow and Intuition is gold or yellow because it is felt to shine and radiate.

You can see this in an intuitive person's eyes, in the picture of Goethe by Stieler, for instance.

Such eyes do not look at things, they gleam towards them; they see no detail but rather a sort of magic atmosphere round things, an inner perception rather than an outer.

But if you are going to look down a microscope it is useless to gleam in its direction, you need sensation eyes for that, pincette eyes, which will pick out every detail. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture, 10Feb1939

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/e84d7-1gleam.jpg`
2. `https://philemonfoundation.org/eth-lectures-volume-1/`

Carl Jung : The unconscious assimilate the peculiar nature of the country. (2019-11-26 04:51)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To William G. Mather

Dear Professor Mather, 26 September 1945

Your letter interested me very much.

Your idea that primitive methods or religious exercises have something to do with the experience of the unconscious is perfectly correct.

I suppose you mean to say that these people are white people and not Hopi Indians or something of the sort that celebrate snake dances.

If I'm right in assuming that you mean white sectarians, then it is obviously a matter of the phenomenon peculiar to colonial settlers.

Inasmuch as civilized white people settle down on virgin soil their unconscious assimilates the peculiar nature of the country.

So much so that even their children begin to resemble to a certain extent the autochthonous population of that country.

In Africa and in India you observe a violent resistance in the white man against the primitive or exotic country in which he lives.

In Africa, for instance, I observed that the settlers there either hate that country or they just love it.

In either case (if they are real settlers, and not only transient officials that serve their 20 years of exile) they nolens volens begin to get assimilated by the soil and they develop a very curious mentality.

It is just as if the unconscious part of their psyche was sinking down into the peculiar phenomenon "going black."

You can observe how these people get lured away unconsciously from their civilized sphere.

Even in America you can observe similar things: for instance the students' most remarkable initiation ceremonies that above all resemble Indian rituals.

No wonder if sects show similar symptoms: in the case you mention the relation to snakes which always represents the integration of the chthonic (earth) element.

To the same chapter belongs the positive or negative emphasis on sex.

It is practically the same whether you emphasize sex through affirmation or negation.

It simply means sex is all-important.

If it is denied it simply means the chthonic element is all-important, yet in a hostile way.

In the other case it is understood as something positive.

The torture of the body, for instance, which is so frequent with primitives, shows merely the importance of the body.

And very often you cannot tell which is the greater pleasure: granting chthonic lusts or denying them.

All this has nothing to do with theology or other spiritual factors.

It is chiefly the question of the overwhelming tendency of the unconscious to get rooted in the soil.

You can observe similar phenomena in Europe, where nature can have an overwhelming influence, as for instance the sea or barren islands or lonely parts of the country or mountainous regions as in Switzerland.

In Switzerland we have many sects which have something in common with those of Wales and other mountainous parts of Britain.

Invariably they have mostly a very peculiar relation to sex either in a positive or a negative way.

Hoping I have answered your question to your satisfaction,

I remain,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1,

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b0988-colony.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=SU4TWDWQG4PV&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574763838&sprefix=jung+le%2`

Carl Jung Quotations [Most have Sources] (2019-11-26 05:06)

[1]

Carl Jung Quotations:

- All the works of man have their origin in creative fantasy. What right have we then to depreciate imagination?

- Creative powers can just as easily turn out to be destructive. It rests solely with the moral personality whether they apply themselves to good things or to bad. And if this is lacking, no teacher can supply it or take its place.

- Every form of addiction is bad, no matter whether the narcotic be alcohol, morphine or idealism.

- Great talents are the most lovely and often the most dangerous fruits on the tree of humanity. They hang upon the most slender twigs that are easily snapped off.

- I have always been impressed by the fact that there are a surprising number of individuals who never use their minds if they can avoid it, and an equal number who do use their minds, but in an amazingly stupid way.

- In studying the history of the human mind one is impressed again and again by the fact that the growth of the mind is the widening of the range of consciousness, and that each step forward has been a most painful and laborious achievement. One could almost say that nothing is more hateful to man than to give up even a particle of his unconsciousness. Ask those who have tried to introduce a new idea!

- It all depends on how we look at things, and not on how they are themselves.

- It is a fact that cannot be denied: the wickedness of others becomes our own wickedness because it kindles something evil in our own hearts.

- Knowledge rests not upon truth alone, but upon error also.

- Man needs difficulties; they are necessary for health.

- Masses are always breeding grounds of psychic epidemics.

- Nobody, as long as he moves about among the chaotic currents of life, is without trouble.

- Nothing has a stronger influence psychologically on their environment and especially on their children than the unlived life of the parent.

- Observance of customs and laws can very easily be a cloak for a lie so subtle that our fellow human beings are unable to detect it. It may help us to escape all criticism; we may even be able to deceive ourselves in the belief of our obvious righteousness. But deep down, below the surface of the average man's conscience, he hears a voice whispering, "There is something not right," no matter how much his rightness is supported by public opinion or by the moral code. Carl G. Jung, in the introduction to Frances G. Wickes' "Analysis der Kinderseele" (The Inner World of Childhood), 1931

- Our heart glows, and secret unrest gnaws at the root of our being.

- Religion is a defense against the experience of God.

- Show me a sane man, and I will cure him for you.

- Sometimes, indeed, there is such a discrepancy between the genius and his human qualities that one has to ask oneself whether a little less talent might not have been better.

- The Christian missionary may preach the gospel to the poor naked heathen, but the spiritual heathen who populate Europe have as yet heard nothing of Christianity.

- The creation of something new is not accomplished by the intellect but by the play instinct acting from inner necessity. The creative mind plays with the objects it loves.

- The debt we owe to the play of imagination is incalculable.

- The fact that artistic, scientific, and religious propensities still slumber peacefully together in the small child, or that with primitives the beginnings of art, science, and religion coalesce in the undifferentiated chaos of the magical mentality, or that no trace of 'mind' can be found in the natural instincts of animals - all this does nothing to prove the existence of a unifying principle which alone would justify a reduction of the one to the other. For if we go so far back into the history of the mind that the distinctions between its various fields of activity become altogether invisible, we do not reach an underlying principle of their unity, but merely an earlier, undifferentiated state in which no separate activities yet exist. But the elementary state is not an explanatory principle that would allow us to draw conclusions as to the nature of the later, more highly developed states, even though they must necessarily derive from it. A scientific attitude will always tend to overlook the peculiar nature of these more differentiated states in favor of their causal derivation, and will endeavor to subordinate them to a general but more elementary principle.

• The least of things with a meaning is worth more in life than the greatest of things without it. Carl Jung, "Modern Man in Search of a Soul"

• The meeting of two personalities is like the contact of two chemical substances: if there is any reaction, both are transformed.

• The pendulum of the mind alternates between sense and nonsense, not between right and wrong.

• The teacher pretended that algebra was a perfectly natural affair, to be taken for granted, whereas I didn’t even know what numbers were. Mathematics classes became sheer terror and torture to me. I was so intimidated by my incomprehension that I did not dare to ask any questions.

• The word "belief" is a difficult thing for me. I don’t believe. I must have a reason for a certain hypothesis. Either I know a thing, and then I know it - I don’t need to believe it.

• The word "happiness" would lose its meaning if it were not balanced by sadness.
• To me dreams are part of nature, which harbors no intention to deceive but expresses something as best it can.

• Understanding does not cure evil, but it is a definite help, inasmuch as one can cope with a comprehensible darkness.

• We cannot change anything unless we accept it. Condemnation does not liberate, it oppresses.

• Where love rules, there is no will to power, and where power predominates, love is lacking. The one is the shadow of the other. Carl Jung, "On the Psychology of the Unconsciousness", 1917

• Who has fully realized that history is not contained in thick books but lives in our very blood?

• Your vision will become clear only when you can look into your own heart. Who looks outside, dreams; who looks inside, awakes.

• It seems to be very hard for people to live with riddles or to let them live, although one would think that life is so full of riddles as it is that a few more things we cannot answer would make no difference. But perhaps it is just this that is so unendurable, that there are irrational things in our own psyche which upset the conscious mind in its illusory certainties by confronting it with the riddle of its existence. "The Philosophical Tree" (1945). In CW 13: Alchemical Studies. P. 307
• Everyone who becomes conscious of even a fraction of his unconscious gets outside his own time and social stratum into a kind of solitude. Mysterium Coniunctionis (1955) CW 14: P 258

• The dream is a little hidden door in the innermost and most secret recesses of the soul, opening into that cosmic night which was psyche long before there was any ego consciousness, and which will remain psyche no matter how far our ego-consciousness extends. For all ego-consciousness is isolated; because it separates and discriminates, it knows only particulars, and it sees only those that can be related to the ego. Its essence is limitation, even though it reaches to the farthest nebulae among the stars. All consciousness separates; but in dreams we put on the likeness of that more universal, truer, more eternal man dwelling in the darkness of primordial night. There he is still the whole, and the whole is in him, indistinguishable from nature and bare of all egohood. It is from these all-uniting depths that the dream arises, be it never so childish, grotesque, and immoral. "The Meaning of Psychology for Modern Man" (1933). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P.304

• A dream, like every element in the psychic structure, is a product of the total psyche. Hence we may expect to find in dreams everything that has ever been of significance in the life of humanity. just as human life is not limited to this or that fundamental instinct, but builds itself up from a multiplicity of instincts, needs, desires, and physical and psychic conditions, etc., so the dream cannot be explained by this or that element in it,' however beguilingly simple such an explanation may appear to be. We can be certain that it is incorrect, because no simple theory of instinct will ever be capable of grasping the human psyche, that mighty and mysterious thing, nor, consequently, its exponent, the dream. In order to do anything like justice to dreams, we need interpretive equipment that must be laboriously fitted together from all branches of the humane sciences. "General Aspects of Dream Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P. 527

• The primitives I observed in East Africa took it for granted that "big" dreams are dreamed only by "big" men - medicine-men, magicians, chiefs, etc. This may be true on a primitive level. But with us these dreams are dreamed also by simple people, more particularly when they have got themselves, mentally or spiritually, in a fix. "The Meaning of Psychology for Modern Man" (1933). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P.324

• Though dreams contribute to the self-regulation of the psyche by automatically bringing up everything that is repressed or neglected or unknown, their compensatory significance is often not immediately apparent because we still have only a very incomplete knowledge of the nature and the needs of the human psyche. There are psychological compensations that seem to be very remote from the problem on hand. In these cases one must always remember that every man, in a sense, represents the whole of humanity and its history. What was possible in the history of mankind at large is also possible on a small scale in every individual. What mankind has needed may eventually be needed by the individual too. It is therefore not surprising that religious compensations play a great role in dreams. That this is increasingly so in our time is a natural consequence of the prevailing materialism of our outlook. "General Aspects of Dream Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P. 483

• Anyone who wishes to interpret a dream must himself be on approximately the same level as the dream, for nowhere can he see anything more than what he is himself. "Marriage as a Psychological Relationship" (1925) In CW 17: The Development of the Personality. P. 324

• Dreams are as simple or as complicated as the dreamer is himself, only they are always a little bit ahead of the dreamer's consciousness. I do not understand my own dreams any better than any of you, for they are always somewhat beyond my grasp and I have the same trouble with them as anyone who knows nothing about dream interpretation. Knowledge is no advantage when it is a matter of one's own dreams. Analytical Psychology: Its Theory and Practice: The Tavistock Lectures. (1935). In CW 18: (retitled) The Tavistock Lectures. P. 122

• The struggle between light and darkness has broken out everywhere. The rift runs through the whole globe, and set the fire that is smoldering and glowing Germany ablaze wherever we look. The conflagration that broke out in Germany was the outcome of psychic conditions that are universal. Carl Gustav Jung, Civilization in Transition, Collected Works 10, par.485

• The people would never have been Deutsch taken in and carried away so completely if this figure had not been a reflected image of the collective hysteria Deutsch. Carl Gustav Jung, The Symbolic Life, Collected Works 18, par.1400

- Nobody is immune to a nationwide evil unless he is unshakably convinced of the danger of his own character being tainted by the same evil. Carl Gustav Jung, The Symbolic Life, Collected Works 18, par.1400

- The immunity of the nation depends entirely upon the existence of a leading minority immune to the evil and capable of combating the powerful suggestive effect. Carl Gustav Jung, The Symbolic Life, Collected Works 18, par.1400

- A political situation is the manifestation of a parallel psychological problem in millions of individuals. This problem is largely unconscious (which makes it a particularly dangerous one!) Carl Gustav Jung, Letters, vol.1 pg. 535

- The great events of world history are, at bottom, profoundly unimportant. In the last analysis, the essential thing is the life of the individual. This alone makes history, here alone do the great transformations first take place, and the whole future, the whole history of the world, ultimately spring as a gigantic summation from these hidden sources in individuals .In our most private and most subjective lives, we are not only the passive witnesses of our age, and its sufferers, but also its makers. We make our own epoch. Carl Gustav Jung, The Symbolic Life, Collected Works 18, par.1400

- Such a one knows that whatever is wrong in the world is so into himself, and if he only learns to deal with his own shadow, he has done something real for the world. He has succeeded in Shouldering at least at infinitesimal part of the gigantic, unsolved problems of our day. Carl Gustav Jung, Psychology and Religion. East and West, Collected Works 11, par.140

- Greater than all physical dangers are the tremendous effects of delusional ideas [...].The world powers that rule over humanity, for good or ill, are unconscious psychic factors, and it is they that bring unconsciousness into being [...].We are steeped in a world that was created by our own psyche. Carl Gustav Jung, The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche, Collected Works 8, par.747

- People will do anything, no matter how absurd, in order to avoid facing their own souls. They will practice Indian yoga and all its exercises, observe a strict regimen of diet, learn theosophy by heart, or mechanically repeat mystic text from the literature of the whole world - all because they cannot get on with themselves and have not slightest faith that anything useful could ever come out of their own souls. Thus the soul has been turned into a Nazareth Gradually from which nothing good can come. Therefore let us fetch it from the four corners of the earth - the more far-fetched and bizarre it is the better Carl Gustav Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, pg.99
- God always speaks mythologically. Carl Gustav Jung, Letters, vol.2 pg.9

- Only the mystics bring religion to what is creative itself. Carl Gustav Jung [LC 540]

- The great problem of our time is that we do not understand what is happening to the world. We are confronted with the darkness of our soul, the unconscious. Carl Gustav Jung, Letters, vol.2 pg.590

- As soon as people get together in masses and submerge the individual, the shadow is mobilized, and, as history shows, may even be personified and incarnated. Carl Gustav Jung, The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious, Collected Works, 9i, par.478

- The future of mankind depends very much upon the recognition of the shadow. Carl Gustav Jung, Letters, vol.1 pg.541

- Insanity is possession by an unconscious content that, as such, is not assimilatable to consciousness, nor can it be assimilated since the very existence of such contents is denied. Carl Gustav Jung, Alchemical Studies, Collected Works 13, par.53

- [If the unconscious is] [...] properly dealt with in one place only, it is influenced as a whole, i.e., simultaneously and everywhere. Carl Gustav Jung, Letters, vol.2 pg.595

- Just as the unconscious affects us, so the increase in our consciousness affects the unconscious. Carl Gustav Jung, Memories, Dreams and Reflections, pg.326

- Gradually only did I discover what the mandala really is: 'Formation, Transformation, Eternal Mind's eternal recreation '.And that is the self, the wholeness of the personality, which if all goes well, is harmonious but, which cannot tolerate self-deceptions. Carl Gustav Jung, Memories, Dreams, Reflections, pg.195-196, Revised edition. Ed Aniela Jaffe, Richard and Clara Winston Trans, New York, Vintage Books, 1989

- His craving for alcohol was the equivalent on a low level of the spiritual thirst of our being for wholeness, expressed in medieval language: The union with God Letter from Dr. Carl Jung to Bill Wilson, the co-founder of Alcoholics Anonymous, January 30, 1961

- The psychological rule says that when the intra situation is not made conscious, it happens outside, as fate. That is to say, when the individual remains undivided [not in touch with both the light AND dark parts of themselves] and does not become conscious of his inner opposite, the world must by force act out the conflict and be torn into opposing halves. Carl Gustav Jung, Collected Works 9ii, par.126, Christ, A Symbol of the Self

- Emotion is the chief source of all becoming-conscious. There can be no transforming of darkness into light and of apathy into movement without emotion. Carl Gustav Jung, Swiss psychiatrist, Psychological Aspects of the Mother Archetype, 1938

- Only after I had familiarized myself with alchemy did I realize that the unconscious is a process, and that the psyche is transformed or developed by the relationship of the ego to the contents of the unconscious. In individual cases that transformation can be read from dreams and fantasies. In collective life it has left its deposit principally in the various religious systems and their changing symbols. Through the study of these processes and collective transformation through understanding of alchemical symbolism I arrived at the central concept of my psychology: the process of individuation. Memories, Dreams, Reflections, pg.209, 1962

- There can be no resolution - only patient endurance - of the opposites which ultimately spring from your own nature. You yourself are a conflict that rages in itself and against itself in order to melt its incompatible substances, the male and the female in the fire of suffering and thus create that form which is the goal of life. Everyone goes through this mill - consciously or unconsciously, voluntarily or forcibly. We are crucified between the opposites and delivered up to the torture until this third reconciling takes shape. [...]

- Thurs doubt not happen the rightness of the two sides within you and let whatever may happen. The apparently unendurable conflict is proof of your life of the rightness of your life. A life without internal contradiction is either only half a life or a life in the beyond which is destined only for the Angels. But God loves human beings more than the Angels. Extracted from an extraordinary letter to a friend Mrs. Frobel, written at age 70 in 1945.

- Who judges us by our emotions, we offer to take the incomprehension, even against injustice. It also obliges us, the others not to judge according to the affect. Collected Works, Volume 6

- We see colors? But not wave lengths. Collected Works, Volume 6

- He [the teacher] has already learned that the emptiest head, parroting a method which can well be the best student. His whole environment speaks and lives there in front of him, all that success and happiness is outside and that one needed only the right method to achieve what you want. Collected Works, Volume 6

• It is a fact that me in my practical work confronts always overwhelming that the person is almost incapable of a different point of view to understand than his own or to apply. could [...] A basis for the settlement of the dispute the opinion of my be convinced that the recognition of types of settings, but not only the existence of such types, but also the fact that everyone is in his type too self-conscious to the degree that he of the complete understanding of the other position is incompetent. Collected Works, Volume 6

• It should be someone already has a much clouded vision or view of a very hazy distance, the human society, if he thinks that by uniform regulation of life an equal distribution of happiness could be achieved. Collected Works, Volume 6

• God of God [...] one God, from whom you did not know, because people forgot about him. We call him by name Abraxas .He is still indefinite as God and Devil. Septem Sermones ad Mortuos, 1916

• In general, a judgmental [judging] set observer will capture more of the conscious character, while a perceptive [perceiving] set observer is more influenced by the unconscious character, since the sentence is more interested in the conscious motivation of mental functioning, while the perception of more The mere happening registered. Collected Works, Volume 6

• Of course, thinks every time, all previous times had been biased, and now we think it more than ever, and has therefore just as wrong as all the previous times, thought so. How often have you experienced it, that the truth has been condemned? It’s sad but unfortunately true, that man learns nothing from history. This fact will cause us the most trouble, because when we are about in such dark somehow enlightened one thing to collect empirical data, we will find it quite sure where all the authorities have assured us that nothing could be found. Synchronicity acausality and occultism, dtv Verlag, Munich, 1990

• Again and again, events occurred that made me out of my normal everyday life also pushed into the unlimited "God’s world. “The expression "God’s World" that sounds sentimental for some ears had not this character for me. For "God’s World" was everything "superhuman", blinding light, and darkness of the abyss, the cold apathy of infinite time and space and the uncanny grotesque the irrational world of chance. "God" was all for me, not only edifying. Carl G. Jung and Aniela Jaffe, Memories, Dreams, Reflections by CG Jung , Autobiography of Carl Jung, Princeton University Press, June 2006

• In sleep, fantasy takes the form of dreams. But in waking life, too, we continue to dream beneath the threshold of consciousness, especially when under the influence of repressed or other unconscious complexes. "Problems of Modern Psychotherapy" (1929). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. pg. 125

• I have no theory about dreams; I do not know how dreams arise. And I am not at all sure that - my way of handling dreams even deserves the name of a "method." I share all your prejudices against dream-interpretation as the quintessence of uncertainty and arbitrariness. On the other hand, I know that if we meditate on a dream sufficiently long and thoroughly, if we carry it around with us and turn it over and over, something almost always comes of it. This something is not of course a scientific result to be boasted about or rationalized; but it is an important practical hint which shows the patient what the unconscious is aiming at. Indeed, it ought not to matter to me whether the result of my musings on the dream is scientifically verifiable or tenable; otherwise I am pursuing an ulterior-and therefore autoerotic-aim. I must content myself wholly with the fact that the result means something to the patient and sets his life in motion again. I may allow myself only one criterion for the result of my labors: does it work? As for my scientific hobby-my desire to know why it works-this I must reserve for my spare time. "The Aims of Psychotherapy" (1931). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. pg. 86

- No amount of skepticism and criticism has yet enabled me to regard dreams as negligible occurrences. Often enough they appear senseless, but it is obviously we who lack the sense and ingenuity to read the enigmatic message from the nocturnal realm of the psyche. Seeing that at least half our psychic existence is passed in that realm, and that consciousness acts upon our nightly life just as much as the unconscious overshadows our daily life, it would seem all the more incumbent on medical psychology to sharpen its senses by a systematic study of dreams. Nobody doubts the importance of conscious experience; why then should we doubt the significance of unconscious happenings? They also are part of our life, and sometimes more truly a part of it for weal or woe than any happenings of the day. "The Practical Use of Dream Analysis" (1934). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. pg. 325

- The dream has for the primitive an incomparably higher value than it has for civilized man. Not only does he talk a great deal about his dreams, he also attributes an extraordinary importance to them, so that it often seems as though he were unable to distinguish between them and reality. To the civilized man dreams as a rule appear valueless, though there are some people who attach great significance to certain dreams on account of their weird and impressive character. This peculiarity lends plausibility to the view that dreams are inspirations. "The Psychological Foundations of Belief in Spirits" (1920). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. pg. 574

- Dream psychology opens the way to a general comparative psychology from which we may hope to gain the same understanding of the development and structure of the human psyche as comparative anatomy has given us concerning the human body. "General Aspects of Dream Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. pg. 476

- The dream is often occupied with apparently very silly details, thus producing an impression of absurdity, or else it is on the surface so unintelligible as to leave us thoroughly bewildered. Hence we always have to overcome a certain resistance before we can seriously set about disentangling the intricate web through patient work. But when at last we penetrate to its real meaning, we find ourselves deep in the dreamer’s secrets and discover with astonishment that an apparently quite senseless dream is in the highest degree significant, and that in reality it speaks only of important and serious matters. This discovery compels rather more respect for the so-called superstition that dreams have a meaning, to which the rationalistic temper of our age has hitherto given short shrift. "On the Psychology of the Unconscious" (1953). In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology. pg. 24

- Dreams that form logically, morally, or aesthetically satisfying wholes are exceptional. Usually a dream is a strange and disconcerting product distinguished by many "bad" qualities, such as lack of logic, questionable morality, uncouth form, and apparent absurdity or nonsense. People are therefore only too glad to dismiss it as stupid, meaningless, and worthless. "On the Nature of Dreams" (1945). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. pg. 532

- Dreams are impartial, spontaneous products of the unconscious psyche, outside the control of the will. They are pure nature; they show us the unvarnished, natural truth, and are therefore fitted, as nothing else is, to give us back an attitude that accords with our basic human nature when our consciousness has strayed too far from its foundations and run into an impasse. "The Meaning of Psychology for Modern Man" (1933). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. pg. 317

- As in our waking state, real people and things enter our field of vision, so the dream-images enter like another kind of reality into the field of consciousness of the dream-ego. We do not feel as if we were producing the dreams, it is rather as if the dreams came to us. They are not subject to our control but obey their own laws. They are obviously autonomous psychic complexes which form themselves out of their own material. We do not know the source of their motives, and we therefore say that dreams come from the unconscious. In saying this, we assume that there are independent psychic complexes which elude our conscious control and come and go according to their own laws. "The Psychological Foundations of Belief in Spirits" (1920). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the

Psyche. pg. 580

- The dream shows the inner truth and reality of the patient as it really is: not as I conjecture it to be, and not as he would like it to be, but as it is. "The Practical Use of Dream Analysis" (1934). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. pg. 304

- The dream is specifically the utterance of the unconscious. Just as the psyche has a diurnal side which we call consciousness, so also it has a nocturnal side: the unconscious psychic activity which we apprehend as dreamlike fantasy. "The Practical Use of Dream Analysis" (1934). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. pg. 317
- The view that dreams are merely the imaginary fulfillments of repressed wishes is hopelessly out of date. There are, it is true, dreams which manifestly represent wishes or fears, but what about all the other things? Dreams may contain ineluctable truths, philosophical pronouncements, illusions, wild fantasies, memories, plans, anticipations, irrational experiences, even telepathic visions, and heaven knows what besides. "The Practical Use of Dream Analysis" (1934). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. pg. 317

- As against Freud's view that the dream is essentially a wish-fulfillment, I hold that the dream is a spontaneous self-portrayal, in symbolic form, of the actual situation in the unconscious. "General Aspects of Dream Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. pg. 505
- Never apply any theory, but always ask the patient how he feels about his dream images. For dreams are always about a particular problem of the individual about which he has a wrong conscious judgment. The dreams are the reaction to our conscious attitude in the same way that the body reacts when we overeat or do not eat enough or when we ill-treat it in some other way. Dreams are the natural reaction of the self-regulating psychic system. Analytical Psychology: Its Theory and Practice: The Tavistock Lectures. (1935). In CW 18: (retitled) The Tavistock Lectures. pg. 123

- I would not deny the possibility of parallel dreams, i.e., dreams whose meaning coincides with or supports the conscious attitude, but in my experience, at least, these are rather rare. Psychology and Alchemy (1944). CW 12: pg. 48

- To interpret the dream-process as compensatory is in my view entirely consistent with the nature of the biological process in general. Freud's view tends in the same direction, since he too ascribes a compensatory role to dreams in so far as they preserve sleep. . . . As against this, we should not overlook the fact that the very dreams which disturb sleep most-and these are not uncommon-have a dramatic structure which aims logically at creating a highly affective situation, and builds it up so efficiently that it unquestionably wakes the dreamer. Freud explains these dreams by saying that the censor was no longer able to suppress the painful affect. It seems to me that this explanation fails to do justice to the facts. Dreams which concern themselves in a very disagreeable manner with the painful experiences and activities of daily life and expose just the most disturbing thoughts with the most painful distinctness are known to everyone. It would, in my opinion, be unjustified to speak here of the dream's sleep-preserving, affect-disguising function. One would have to stand reality on its head to see in these dreams a confirmation of Freud's view. "General Aspects of Dream Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. pg. 485

- Much may be said for Freud's view as a scientific explanation of dream psychology. But I must dispute its completeness, for the psyche cannot be conceived merely in causal terms but requires also a final view. Only a combination of points of view-which has not yet been achieved in a scientifically satisfactory manner, owing to the enormous difficulties, both practical and theoretical, that still remain to be overcome-can give us a more complete conception of the nature of dreams. "General Aspects of Dream Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. pg. 473

- Dreams are often anticipatory and would lose their specific meaning on a purely causalistic view. They afford unmistakable information about the analytical situation, the correct understanding of which is of the greatest therapeutic importance. "The Practical Use of Dream Analysis" (1934). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. pg. 312

- It is only in exceptional cases that somatic stimuli are the determining factor. Usually they coalesce completely with the symbolical expression of the unconscious dream content; in other words, they are used as a means of expression. Not infrequently the dreams show that there is a remarkable inner symbolical connection between an undoubted physical illness a and a definite psychic problem, so that the physical disorder appears as a direct mimetic expression of the psychic situation. "General Aspects of Dream Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. pg. 502

- Considering a dream from the standpoint of finality, which I contrast with the causal standpoint of Freud, does not -as I would expressly like to emphasize-involve a denial of the dream's causes, but rather a different interpretation of the associative material gathered round the dream. The material facts remain the same, but the criterion by which they are judged is different. The question may be formulated simply as follows: What is the purpose of this dream? What effect is it meant to have? These questions are not arbitrary inasmuch as they can be applied to every psychic activity. Everywhere the question of the why" and the "wherefore" may be raised, because every organic structure consists of a complicated network of purposive functions, and each of these functions can be resolved into a series of individual facts with a purposive orientation. "General Aspects of Dream Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. pg. 465

- Another dream-determinant that deserves mention is telepathy. The authenticity of this phenomenon can no longer be disputed today. It is; of course, very simple to deny its existence without examining the evidence, but that is an unscientific procedure which is unworthy of notice. I have found by experience that telepathy does in fact influence dreams, as has been asserted since ancient times. Certain people are particularly sensitive in this respect and often have telepathically influenced dreams. But in acknowledging the phenomenon of telepathy I am not giving unqualified assent to the popular theory of action at a distance. The phenomenon undoubtedly exists, but the theory of it does not seem to me so simple. "The Practical Use of Dream Analysis" (1934). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. pg. 503

- On paper the interpretation of a dream may look arbitrary, muddled, and spurious; but the same thing in reality can be a little drama of unsurpassed realism. To experience a dream and its interpretation is very different from having a tepid rehash set before you on paper. Everything about this psychology is, in the deepest sense, experience; the entire theory, even where it puts on the most abstract airs, is the direct outcome of something experienced. "On the Psychology of the Unconscious" (1953). In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology. pg. 199

- The art of interpreting dreams cannot be learnt from books. Methods and rules are good only when we can get along without them. Only the man who can do it anyway has real skill, only the man of understanding really understands. "The Meaning of Psychology for Modern Man" (1933). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. pg. 327

- It is obvious that in handling "big" dreams intuitive guesswork will lead nowhere. Wide knowledge is required, such as a specialist ought to possess.' But no dream can be interpreted with knowledge alone. This knowledge, furthermore, should not be dead material that has been memorized; it must possess a living quality, and be infused with the experience of the person who uses it. Of what use is philosophical knowledge in the head, if one is not also a philosopher at heart? "The Meaning of Psychology for Modern Man" (1933). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. pg. 324

- One would do well to treat every dream as though it were a totally unknown object. Look at it from all sides, take it in your hand, carry it about with you, let your imagination play round it, and talk about it with other people. Primitives tell each other impressive dreams, in a public palaver if possible, and this custom is also attested in late antiquity, for all the ancient peoples attributed great significance to dreams ' Treated in this way, the dream suggests all manner of ideas and associations which lead us closer to its meaning. The ascertainment of the meaning is, I need hardly point out, an entirely arbitrary affair, and this is where the hazards begin. Narrower or wider limits will be set to the meaning, according to one's experience, temperament, and taste. Some people will be satisfied with little, for others much is still not enough. Also the meaning of the dream, or our interpretation of it, is largely dependent on the intentions of the interpreter, on what he expects the meaning to be or requires it to do. In eliciting the meaning he will involuntarily be guided by certain presuppositions, and it depends very much on the scrupulousness and honesty of the investigator whether he gains something by his interpretation or perhaps only becomes still more deeply entangled in his mistakes. "The Meaning of Psychology for Modern Man" (1933). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. pg. 320

• The psychological context of dream-contents consists in the web of associations in which the dream is naturally embedded. Theoretically we can never know anything in advance about this web, but in practice it is sometimes possible, granted long enough experience. Even so, careful analysis will never rely too much on technical rules; the danger of deception and suggestion is too great. In the analysis of isolated dreams above all, this kind of knowing in advance and making assumptions on the grounds of practical expectation or general probability is positively wrong. It should therefore be an absolute rule to assume that every dream, and every part of a dream, is unknown at the outset, and to attempt an interpretation only after carefully taking up the context. We can then apply the meaning we have thus discovered to the text of the dream itself and see whether this yields a fluent reading, or rather whether a satisfying meaning emerges. Psychology and Alchemy (1944). CW 12: pg. 48

• Everyone who analyses the dreams of others should constantly bear in mind that there is no simple and generally known theory of psychic phenomena, neither with regard to their nature, nor to their causes, nor to their purpose. We therefore possess no general criterion of judgment. We know that there are all kinds of psychic phenomena, but we know nothing certain about their essential nature. We know only that, though the observation of the psyche from any one isolated standpoint can yield very valuable results, it can never produce a satisfactory theory from which one could make deductions. The sexual theory and the wish theory, like the power theory, are valuable points of view without, however, doing anything like justice to the profundity and richness of the human psyche. Had we a theory that did, we could then content ourselves with learning a method mechanically. It would then be simply a matter of reading certain signs that stood for fixed contents, and for this it would only be necessary to learn a few semiotic rules by heart. Knowledge and correct assessment of the conscious situation would then be as superfluous as in the performance of a lumbar puncture. "General Aspects of Dream Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. pg. 498

• I call every interpretation which equates the dream images with real objects and interpretation on the objective level. In contrast to this is the interpretation which refers every part of the dream and all the actors in it back to the dreamer himself. This I call interpretation on the subjective level. Interpretation on the objective level is analytic, because it breaks down the dream content into memory complexes that refer to external situations. Interpretation on the subjective level is synthetic, because it detaches the underlying memory-complexes from their external causes, regards them as tendencies or components of the subject, and reunites them with that subject.... In this case, therefore, all the contents of the dream are treated as symbols for subjective contents. "On the Psychology of the Unconscious" (1953). In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology. pg. 130

• If our dreams reproduce certain ideas these ideas are primarily our ideas, in the structure of which our whole being is interwoven. They are subjective factors, grouping themselves as they do in the dream, and expressing this or that meaning, not for extraneous reasons but from the most intimate prompting of our psyche. The whole dreamwork is essentially subjective, and a dream is a theatre in which the dreamer is himself the scene, the player, the prompter, the producer, the author, the public, and the critic. ' "General Aspects of Dream Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. pg. 509

- If we want to interpret a dream correctly, we need a thorough knowledge of the conscious situation at that moment, because the dream contains its unconscious complement, that is, the material which the conscious situation has constellated in the unconscious. Without this knowledge it is impossible to interpret a dream correctly, except by a lucky fluke. "General Aspects of Dream Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. pg. 477

- The real difficulty begins -when the dreams do not point to anything tangible, and this they do often enough, especially when they hold anticipations of the future. I do not mean that such dreams are necessarily prophetic, merely that they feel the way, they "reconnoiter." These dreams contain inklings of possibilities and for that reason can never be made plausible to an outsider. "The Aims of Psychotherapy" (1931) In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. pg. 89

- Anyone sufficiently interested in the dream problem cannot have failed to observe that dreams also have a continuity forwards-if such an expression be permitted-since dreams occasionally exert a remarkable influence on the conscious mental life even of persons who cannot be considered superstitious or particularly abnormal. "General Aspects of Dream Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. pg. 444

- It is not denied in medieval ecclesiastical writings that a divine influx may occur in dreams, but this view is not exactly encouraged, and the Church reserves the right to decide whether a revelation is to be considered authentic or not. In spite of the Church's recognition that certain dreams are sent by God, she is disinclined, and even averse, to any serious concern with dreams, while admitting that some might conceivably contain an immediate revelation. Thus the change of mental attitude that has taken place in recent centuries is, from this point of view at least, not wholly unwelcome to the Church, because it effectively discouraged the earlier iintrospective attitude which favored a serious consideration of dreams and inner experiences. "Psychology and Religion" (1938). In CW 11: Psychology and Religion: West and East. pg. 32

- As individuals we are not completely unique, but are like all other men. Hence a dream with a collective meaning is valid in the first place for the dreamer, but it expresses at the same time the fact that his momentary problem is also the problem of other people. This is often of great practical importance; for there are countless people who are inwardly cut off from humanity and oppressed by the thought that nobody else has their problems. Or else they are those all-too-modest souls who, feeling themselves nonentities, have kept their claim to social recognition on too low a level. Moreover, every individual problem is somehow connected with the problem of the age, so that practically every subjective difficulty has to be viewed from the standpoint of the human situation as a whole. But this is permissible only when the dream really is a mythological one and makes use of collective symbols. "The Meaning of Psychology for Modern Man" (1933). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. pg. 323

- If, in addition to this, we bear in mind that the unconscious contains everything that is lacking to consciousness, that the unconscious therefore has a compensatory tendency, then we can begin to draw conclusions-provided, of course, that the dream does not come from too deep a psychic level. If it is a dream of this kind, it will as a rule contains mythological motifs, combinations of ideas or images which can be found in the myths of one's own folk or in those of other races. The dream will then have a collective meaning, a meaning which is the common property of mankind. "The Meaning of Psychology for Modern Man" (1933). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. pg. 322

- Just as the body bears the traces of its phylogenetic development, so also does the human mind. Hence there ' is nothing surprising about the possibility that the figurative language of dreams is a survival from an archaic mode of thought. "General Aspects of Dream Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. pg. 475

- As regards the much discussed symbolism of dreams, its evaluation varies according to whether it is considered from the causal or from the final standpoint. The causal approach of Freud starts from a desire or craving, that is, from the repressed dream-wish. This craving is always something comparatively simple and elementary, which can hide itself under manifold disguises.... Hence it is that the more rigorous adherents of the Freudian school have come to the point of interpreting-to give a gross example-pretty well all oblong objects in dreams as phallic symbols and all round or hollow objects as feminine symbols. "General Aspects of Dream Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. pg. 470

- I take the dream for what it is. The dream is such a difficult and complicated thing that I do not dare to make any assumptions about its possible cunning or its tendency to deceive. The dream is a natural occurrence, and there is no earthly reason why we should assume that it is a crafty device to lead us astray. It occurs when consciousness and will are to a large extent extinguished. It seems to be a natural product which is also found in people who are not neurotic. Moreover, we know so little about the psychology of the dream process that we must be more than careful when we introduce into its explanation elements that are foreign to the dream itself. "Psychology and Religion" (1938). In CW 11: Psychology and Religion: West and East. pg. 41

- Nature is often obscure or impenetrable, but she is not, like man, deceitful. We must therefore take it that the dream is just what it pretends to be, neither more nor less. IIf it shows something in a negative light, there is no reason for assuming that it is meant positively. "On the Psychology of the Unconscious" (1953). In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology. pg. 162

- I leave theory aside as much as possible when analyzing dreams-not entirely, of course, for we always need some theory to make things intelligible. It is on the basis of theory, for instance, that I expect dreams to have a meaning. I cannot prove in every case that this is so, for there are dreams which the doctor and the patient simply do not understand. But I have to make such a hypothesis in order to find courage to deal with dreams at all. "The Practical Use of Dream Analysis" (1934). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. pg. 318

- Every interpretation is a hypothesis, an attempt to read an unknown text. An obscure dream, taken in isolation, can hardly ever be interpreted with any certainty. For this reason I attach little importance to the interpretation of single dreams. A relative degree of certainty is reached only in the interpretation of a series of dreams, where the later dreams correct the mistakes we have made in handling those that went before. Also, the basic ideas and themes can be recognized much well in a dream-series. "The Practical Use of Dream Analysis" (1934). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. pg. 322

- Lack of conscious understanding does not mean that the dream has no effect at all. Even civilized man can occasionally observe that a dream which he cannot remember can slightly alter his mood for better or worse. Dreams can be "understood" to a certain extent in a subliminal way, and that is mostly how they work. "Approaching the Unconscious" In Man and His Symbols, Ed C.G. Jung (1964) Revised and included in CW 18 as "Symbols and the Interpretation of Dreams". pg. 52 (In CW)

- But when, you may rightly ask, is one sure of the interpretation? Is there anything approaching a reliable criterion for the correctness of an interpretation? This question, happily, can be answered in the affirmative. If we have made a wrong interpretation, or if it is somehow incomplete, we may be able to see it from the next dream. Thus, for example, the earlier motif will be repeated in clearer I form, or our interpretation may be deflated by some ironic paraphrase, or it may meet with straightforward violent opposition. Now supposing that these interpretations also go astray, the general inconclusiveness and futility of our procedure will make itself felt soon enough in the bleakness, sterility, and pointlessness of the undertaking, so that doctor and patient alike will be suffocated either by boredom or by doubt. Just as the reward of a correct interpretation is an uprush of life, so an incorrect one dooms them to deadlock, resistance, doubt, and mutual desiccation. "On the Psychology of the Unconscious" (1953). In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology. pg. 189

- When we consider the infinite variety of dreams, it is difficult to conceive that there could ever be a method or a technical procedure which would lead to an infallible result. It is, indeed, a good thing that no valid method exists, for otherwise the meaning of the dream would be limited in advance and would lose precisely that virtue which makes dreams so valuable for therapeutic purposes -their ability to offer new points of view. "The Meaning of Psychology for Modern Man" (1933). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. pg. 319

- The use of dream-analysis in psychotherapy is still a much debated question. Many practitioners find it indispensable in the treatment of neuroses, and consider that the dream is a function whose psychic importance is equal to that of the conscious mind itself. Others, on the contrary, dispute the value of dream-analysis and regard dreams as a negligible by-product of the psyche. Obviously, if a person holds the view that the unconscious plays a decisive part in the aetiology of neuroses, he will attribute a high practical importance to dreams as direct expressions of the unconscious. Equally obviously, if he denies the unconscious or at least thinks it aetiologically insignificant, he will minimize the importance of dream-analysis. "The Meaning of Psychology for Modern Man" (1933). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. pg. 322

- To concern ourselves with dreams is a way of reflecting on ourselves-a way of self-reflection. It is not our ego-consciousness reflecting on itself; rather, it turns its attention to the objective actuality of the dream as a communication or message from the unconscious, unitary soul of humanity. It reflects not on the ego but on the self; it recollects that strange self, alien to the ego, which was ours from the beginning, the trunk from which the ego grew. It is alien to us because we have estranged ourselves from it through the aberrations of the conscious mind. "The Meaning of Psychology for Modern Man" (1933). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. pg. 318

- ". . . The development of consciousness is the burden, the suffering, and the blessing of humankind." C.G. Jung, 1955

- "A dream that is not understood remains a mere occurrence; understood it becomes a living experience." C.G. Jung CW11: 497

- The goal of the individuation process is the synthesis of the self." C.G. Jung CW 9i: 278

- "In every adult there lurks a child–an eternal child, something that is always becoming, is never completed, and calls for unceasing care, attention, and education. That is the part of the personality which wants to develop and become whole." -C. G. Jung CW17: 286

- The rational attitude which permits us to declare objective values as valid at all is not the work of the individual subject, but the product of human history.
Most objective values-and reason itself-are firmly established complexes of ideas handed down through the ages. Countless generations have labored at their organization with the same necessity with which the living organism reacts to the average, constantly recurring environmental conditions, confronting them with corresponding functional complexes, as the eye, for instance, perfectly corresponds to the nature of light. . . . Thus the laws of reason are the laws that designate and govern the average, "correct," adapted attitude. Everything is "rational" that accords with these laws, everything that contravenes them is "irrational."[Definitions, ibid” par. 785f.]

- These images are naturally only anticipations of a wholeness which is, in principle, always just beyond our reach. Also, they do not invariably indicate a subliminal readiness on the part of the patient to realize that wholeness consciously, at a later stage; often they mean no more than a temporary compensation of chaotic confusion.[The Psychology of the Transference," CW 16, par. 536.]

- The invasion of evil signifies that something previously good has turned into something harmful . . . the ruling moral principle, although excellent to begin with, in time loses its essential connection with life, since it no longer embraces life’s variety and abundance. What is rationally correct is too narrow a concept to grasp life in its totality and give it permanent expression. (C. G. Jung, Answer to Job)

- The book of Job is a landmark in the long historical development of a divine drama. At the time the book was written, there were already many testimonies which had given a contradictory picture of Yahweh—the picture of a God who knew no moderation in his emotions and suffered precisely from this lack of moderation. He himself admitted that he was eaten up with rage and jealousy and that this knowledge was painful to him. Insight existed along with cruelty, creative power along with destructiveness. Everything was there, and none of these qualities was an obstacle to the other. Such a condition is only conceivable either when no reflecting consciousness is present at all, or when the capacity for reflection is very feeble and a more or less adventitious phenomenon. A condition of this sort can only be described as amoral. (Book of Job, Para. 560)

- From the ancient records we know that the divine drama was enacted between God and his people, who were betrothed to him, the masculine dynamis, like a woman, and over whose faithfulness he watched jealously. A particular instance of this is Job, whose faithfulness is subjected to a savage test. As I have said, the really astonishing thing is how easily Yahweh gives in to the insinuations of Satan. If it were true that he trusted Job perfectly, it would be logical for Yahweh to defend him, unmask the malicious slanderer, and make him pay for his defamation of God's faithful servant. But Yahweh never thinks of it, not even after Job's innocence has been proved. We hear nothing of a rebuke or disapproval of Satan. Therefore we cannot doubt Yahweh's connivance. His readiness to deliver Job into Satan's murderous hands proves that he doubts Job precisely because he projects his own tendency to unfaithfulness upon a scapegoat. There is reason to suspect that he is about to loosen his matrimonial ties with Israel but hides this intention from himself. (Book of Job; Para. 616)

- "Yahweh [God] must become man precisely because he has done man a wrong. He, the guardian of justice, knows that every wrong must be expiated, and Wisdom knows that moral law is above even him. Because his creature has surpassed him he must regenerate himself" (Book of Job; Para. 640)

- "Even the enlightened person remains what he is, and is never more than his own limited ego before the One who dwells within him, whose form has no knowable boundaries, who encompasses him on all sides, fathomless as the abysms of the earth and vast as the sky" (Book of Job, Para. 758).

- The little world of childhood with its familiar surroundings is a model of the greater world. The more intensively the family has stamped its character upon the child, the more it will tend to feel and see its earlier miniature world again in the bigger world of adult life. Naturally this is not a conscious, intellectual process. The Theory of Psychoanalysis (1913)

- There is no question but that Hitler belongs in the category of the truly mystic medicine man. As somebody commented about him at the last Nürnberg party congress, since the time of Mohammed nothing like it has been seen in this world. His body does not suggest strength. The outstanding characteristic of his physiognomy is its dreamy look. I was especially struck by that when I saw pictures taken of him in the Czechoslovakian crisis; there was in his eyes the look of a seer. This markedly mystic characteristic of Hitler's is what makes him do things which seem to us illogical, inexplicable, and unreasonable. ... So you see, Hitler is a medicine man, a spiritual vessel, a demi-deity or, even better, a myth. During an interview with H. R. Knickerbocker, first published in Hearst's International Cosmopolitan (January 1939), in which Jung was asked to diagnose Adolf Hitler, Benito Mussolini, and Joseph Stalin, later published in Is Tomorrow Hitler's? (1941), by H. R. Knickerbocker, also published in The Seduction of Unreason: The Intellectual Romance with Fascism (2004) by Richard Wolin, Ch. 2: Prometheus Unhinged: C. G. Jung and the Temptations of Aryan Religion, p. 75

No nation keeps its word. A nation is a big, blind worm, following what? Fate perhaps. A nation has no honor; it has no word to keep. ... Hitler is himself the nation. That incidentally is why Hitler always has to talk so loud, even in private conversation — because he is speaking with 78 million voices. During an interview with H. R.

Knickerbocker (1939), quoted in A Life of Jung (2002) by Ronald Hayman, p. 360

- No one can flatter himself that he is immune to the spirit of his own epoch, or even that he possesses a full understanding of it. Irrespective of our conscious convictions, each one of us, without exception, being a particle of the general mass, is somewhere attached to, colored by, or even undermined by the spirit which goes through the mass. Freedom stretches only as far as the limits of our consciousness. Paracelsus the Physician (1942)

- We are so captivated by and entangled in our subjective consciousness that we have forgotten the age-old fact that God speaks chiefly through dreams and visions. The Symbolic Life (1953); also in Man and His Symbols (1964)

- The unconscious is not just evil by nature, it is also the source of the highest good: not only dark but also light, not only bestial, semihuman, and demonic but superhuman, spiritual, and, in the classical sense of the word, "divine." The Practice of Psychotherapy, p. 364 (1953)

- Our blight is ideologies — they are the long-expected Antichrist! The Tibetan Book of the Great Liberation (1954)

- Even if the whole world were to fall to pieces, the unity of the psyche would never be shattered. And the wider and more numerous the fissures on the surface, the more the unity is strengthened in the depths. Civilization in Transition (1964)

- One of the most difficult tasks men can perform, however much others may despise it, is the invention of good games and it cannot be done by men out of touch with their instinctive selves. Jung and the Story of Our Time, Laurens van der Post (1977)

- That higher and "complete" man is begotten by the "unknown" father and born from Wisdom, and it is he who, in the figure of the puer aeternus—"vultu metabolism albums et ater"—represents our totality, which transcends consciousness. It was this boy into whom Faust had to change, abandoning his inflated onesidedness which saw the devil only outside. Christ’s "Except ye become as little children" is a prefiguration of this, for in them the opposites lie close together; but what is meant is the boy who is born from the maturity of the adult man, and not the unconscious child we would like to remain. Answer to Job, R. Hull, trans. (1984), pp. 157-158

- Any theory based on experience is necessarily statistical; that is to say, it formulates an ideal average which abolishes all exceptions at either end of the scale and replaces them by an abstract mean. This mean is quite valid though it need not necessarily occur in reality. Despite this it figures in the theory as an unassailable fundamental fact. ... If, for instance, I determine the weight of each stone in a bed of pebbles and get an average weight of 145 grams, this tells me very little about the real nature of the pebbles. Anyone who thought, on the basis of these findings, that he could pick up a pebble of 145 grams at the first try would be in for a serious disappointment. Indeed, it might well happen that however long he searched he would not find a single pebble weighing exactly 145 grams. The statistical method shows the facts in the light of the ideal average but does not give us a picture of their empirical reality. While reflecting an indisputable aspect of reality, it can falsify the actual truth in a most misleading way. The Undiscovered Self p 6

- Just as man as a social being, cannot in the long run exist without a tie to the community, so the individual will never find the real justification for his existence, and his own spiritual and moral autonomy, anywhere except in an extramundane principle capable of relativizing the overpowering influence of external factors. The Undiscovered Self p 23

- It is astounding that man, the instigator, inventor and vehicle of all these developments, the originator of all judgments and decisions and the planner of the future must make himself such a quantité negligeable. The Undiscovered Self p 45

- You can take away a man's gods, but only to give him others in return. The Undiscovered Self p 63

- The seat of faith, however, is not consciousness but spontaneous religious experience, which brings the individual's faith into immediate relation with God. Here we must ask: Have I any religious experience and immediate relation to God, and hence that certainty which will keep me, as an individual, from dissolving in the crowd? The Undiscovered Self p 85

- Reason alone does not suffice. The Undiscovered Self p 98

- We are living in what the Greeks called the right time for a "metamorphosis of the gods," i.e. of the fundamental principles and symbols. This peculiarity of our time, which is certainly not of our conscious choosing, is the expression of the unconscious man within us who is changing. Coming generations will have to take account of this momentous transformation if humanity is not to destroy itself through the might of its own technology and science. The Undiscovered Self p 110

- The dynamic principle of fantasy is play, a characteristic also of the child, and as such it appears inconsistent with the principle of serious work. But without this playing with fantasy any creative work has ever yet come to birth. The debt we owe to the play of imagination is incalculable. It is therefore short-sighted to treat fantasy, on account of its risky or unacceptable nature, as a thing of little worth. Psychological Types Ch. 1, p. 82

- The great problems of life — sexuality, of course, among others — are always related to the primordial images of the collective unconscious. These images are really balancing or compensating factors which correspond with the problems life presents in actuality. This is not to be marveled at, since these images are deposits representing the accumulated experience of thousands of years of struggle for adaptation and existence. Psychological Types Ch. 5, p. 271

- We should not pretend to understand the world only by the intellect; we apprehend it just as much by feeling. Therefore, the judgment of the intellect is, at best, only the half of truth, and must, if it be honest, also come to an understanding of its inadequacy. Psychological Types Conclusion, p. 628

- The woman is increasingly aware that love alone can give her full stature, just as the man begins to discern that spirit alone can endow his life with its highest meaning. Fundamentally, therefore, both seek a psychic relation to the other, because love needs the spirit, and the spirit love, for their fulfillment. Contributions to Analytical Psychology p. 185

- Seldom, or perhaps never, does a marriage develop into an individual relationship smoothly and without crises; there is no coming to consciousness without pain. Contributions to Analytical Psychology p. 193

- No language exists that cannot be misused... Every Interpretation is hypothetical, for it is a mere attempt to read an unfamiliar text. p 11 & 14

- It is in applied psychology, if anywhere, that today we should be modest and grant validity to a number of apparently contradictory opinions; for we are still far from having anything like a thorough knowledge of the human psyche, that most challenging field of scientific enquiry. For the present we have merely more or less plausible opinions that defy reconciliation. Modern Man in Search of a Soul p. 57

- The great decisions of human life have as a rule far more to do with the instincts and other mysterious unconscious factors than with conscious will and well-meaning reasonableness. The shoe that fits one person pinches another; there is no recipe for living that suits all cases. Each of us carries his own life-form—an indeterminable form which cannot be superseded by any other. Modern Man in Search of a Soul p. 69

• Aging people should know that their lives are not mounting and unfolding but that an inexorable inner process forces the contraction of life. For a young person it is almost a sin — and certainly a danger — to be too much occupied with him; but for the aging person it is a duty and a necessity to give serious attention to him. Modern Man in Search of a Soul p. 125

• Every civilized human being, whatever his conscious development, is still an archaic man at the deeper levels of his psyche. Just as the human body connects us with the mammals and displays numerous relics of earlier evolutionary stages going back to even the reptilian age, so the human psyche is likewise a product of evolution which, when followed up to its origins, show countless archaic traits. Modern Man in Search of a Soul p.126

• No psychic value can disappear without being replaced by another of equivalent intensity. Modern Man in Search of a Soul p. 209

• A more or less superficial layer of the unconscious is undoubtedly personal. I call it the "personal unconscious". But this personal layer rests upon a deeper layer, which does not derive from personal experience and is not a personal acquisition but is inborn. This deeper layer I call the "collective unconscious". I have chosen the term "collective" because this part of the unconscious is not individual but universal; in contrast to the personal psyche, it has contents and modes of behavior that are more or less the same everywhere and in all individuals. The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious p. 3-4

• Why is psychology the youngest of the empirical sciences? Why have we not long since discovered the unconscious and raised up its treasure-house of eternal images? Simply because we had a religious formula for everything psychic — and one that is far more beautiful and comprehensive than immediate experience. Though the Christian view of the world has paled for many people, the symbolic treasure-rooms of the East are still full of marvels that can nourish for a long time to come the passion for show and new clothes. What is more, these images — are they Christian or Buddhist or what you will — are lovely, mysterious, and richly intuitive. The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious p.7-8

• Whereas the personal unconscious consists for the most part of "complexes", the content of the collective unconscious is made up essentially of "archetypes". The concept of the archetype, which is an indispensable correlate of the idea of the collective unconscious, indicates the existence of definite forms in the psyche which seem to be present always and everywhere. Mythological research calls them 'motifs'; in the psychology of primitives they correspond to Levy-Bruhl's concept of "representations collectives," and in the field of comparative religion they have been defined by Hubert and Mauss as 'categories of the imagination'... My thesis, then, is as follows: In addition to our immediate consciousness, which is of a thoroughly personal nature and which we believe to be the only empirical psyche (even if we tack on the personal unconscious as an appendix), there exists a second psychic system of a collective, universal, and impersonal nature which is identical in all individuals. The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious p.42-43

• We must now turn to the question of how the existence of archetypes can be proved. Since archetypes are supposed to produce certain psychic forms, we must discuss how and where one can get hold of the material demonstrating these forms. The main source, then, is dreams, which have the advantage of being involuntary, spontaneous products of nature not falsified by any conscious purpose. By questioning the individual one can ascertain which of the motifs appearing in the dream are known to him... Consequently, we must look for motifs which could not possibly be known to the dreamer and yet behave functionally of the archetype known from historical sources. The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious p. 48

• All ages before ours believed in gods in some form or other. Only an unparalleled impoverishment in symbolism could enable us to rediscover the gods as psychic factors, which is to say, as archetypes of the unconscious. No doubt this discovery is hardly credible as yet. The Integration of the Personality p. 72

• If there is anything that we wish to change in the child, we should first examine it and see whether it is not something that could better be changed in ourselves. The Integration of the Personality p. 285

• This world is empty to him alone who does not understand how to direct his libido towards objects, and to render them alive and beautiful for himself, for Beauty does not indeed lie in things, but in the feeling that we give to them. The Psychology of the Unconscious

• The erotic instinct is something questionable, and will always be so whatever a future set of laws may have to say on the matter. It belongs, on the one hand, to the original animal nature of man, which will exist as long as man has an animal body. On the other hand, it is connected with the highest forms of the spirit. But it blooms only when the spirit and instinct are in true harmony. If one or the other aspect is missing, then an injury occurs, or at least there is a one-sided lack of balance which easily slips into the pathological. Too much of the animal disfigures the civilized human being; too much culture makes a sick animal. The Psychology of the Unconscious

• Every archetype is capable of endless development and differentiation. It is therefore possible for it to be more developed or less. In an outward form of religion where all the emphasis is on the outward figure (hence where we are dealing with a more or less complete projection) the archetype is identical with externalized ideas but remains unconscious as a psychic factor. When an unconscious content is replaced by a projected image to that extent, it is cut off from all participation in an influence on the conscious mind. Hence it largely forfeits its own life, because prevented from exerting the formative influence on consciousness natural to it; what is more, it remains in its original form — unchanged, for nothing changes in the unconscious. Psychology and Alchemy

• The conscious mind allows itself to be trained like a parrot, but the unconscious does not — which is why St. Augustine thanked God for not making him responsible for his dreams. Psychology and Alchemy p. 51

• We shall naturally look round in vain the macrophysical world for acausal events, for the simple reason that we cannot imagine events that are connected non-causally and are capable of a non-causal explanation. But that does not mean that such events do not exist... The so-called "scientific view of the world" based on this can hardly be anything more than a psychologically biased partial view which misses out all those by no means unimportant aspects that cannot be grasped statistically. Synchronicity: An Acausal Connecting Principle p. 5

• Primitive superstition lies just below the surface of even the most tough-minded individuals, and it is precisely those who most fight against it who are the first to succumb to its suggestive effects. Synchronicity: An Acausal Connecting Principle p. 25

• Naturally, every age thinks that all ages before it were prejudiced, and today we think this more than ever and are just as wrong as all previous ages that thought so. How often have we not seen the truth condemned! It is sad but unfortunately true that man learns nothing from history. Synchronicity: An Acausal Connecting Principle p. 33

• This grasping of the whole is obviously the aim of science as well, but it is a goal that necessarily lies very far off because science, whenever possible, proceeds experimentally and in all cases statistically. Experiment, however, consists in asking a definite question which excludes as far as possible anything disturbing and irrelevant. It makes conditions, imposes them on Nature, and in this way forces her to give an answer to a question devised by man. She is prevented from answering out of the fullness of her possibilities since these possibilities are restricted as far as partible. For this purpose there is created in the laboratory a situation which is artificially restricted to the question which compels Nature to give an unequivocal answer. The workings of Nature in her unrestricted wholeness are completely excluded. If we want to know what these workings are, we need a method of inquiry which imposes the fewest possible conditions, or if possible no conditions at all, and then leave Nature to answer out of her fullness. Synchronicity: An Acausal Connecting Principle p. 35

• My example concerns a young woman patient who, in spite of efforts made on both sides, proved to be psychologically inaccessible. The difficulty lay in the fact that she always knew better about everything. Her excellent education had provided her with a weapon ideally suited to this purpose, namely a highly polished Cartesian rationalism with an impeccably "geometrical" idea of reality. After several fruitless attempts to sweeten her rationalism with a somewhat more human understanding, I had to confine myself to the hope that something unexpected and irrational would turn up, something that burst the intellectual retort into which she had sealed herself. Well, I was sitting opposite of her one day, with my back to the window, listening to her flow of rhetoric. She had an impressive dream the night before, in which someone had given her a golden scarab-a costly piece of jewelery. While she was still telling me this dream, I heard something behind me gently gently tapping on the window. I turned round and saw that it was a fairly large flying insect that was knocking against the window from outside in the obvious effort to get into the dark room. This seemed to me very strange. I opened the window and immediately and caught the insect in the air as it flew in. It was a scarabaeid beetle, or common rose-chafer, whose gold-green color most nearly resembles that of a golden scarab. I handed the beetle to my patient with the words "Here is your scarab." This broke the ice of her intellectual resistance. The treatment could now be continued with satisfactory results. Synchronicity: An Acausal Connecting Principle p. 110

• Life has always seemed to me like a plant that lives on its rhizome. Its true life is invisible, hidden in the rhizome. The part that appears above ground lasts only a single summer. What we see is the blossom, which passes. The rhizome remains. Memories, Dreams, Reflections, Closing lines of the preface.

• I know every numbskull will babble on about "black man," "man-eater," "chance," and "retrospective interpretation," in order to banish something terribly inconvenient that might sully the familiar picture of childhood innocence. Ah, these good, efficient, healthy-minded people, they always remind me of those optimistic tadpoles who bask in a puddle in the sun, in the shallowest of waters, crowding together and amiably wriggling their tails, totally unaware that the next morning the puddle will have dried up and left them stranded. Memories, Dreams, Reflections p. 14

• Sometimes I had an overwhelming urge to speak, not about that, but only to hint that there were some curious things about me which no one knew of. I wanted to find out whether other people had undergone similar experiences. I never succeeded in discovering so much as a trace of them in others. As a result, I had the feeling that I was outlawed or elect, accursed or blessed. Memories, Dreams, Reflections p. 41

• My interests drew me in different directions. On the one hand I was powerfully attracted by science, with its truths based on facts; on the other hand I was fascinated by everything to do with comparative religion. [...] In science I missed the factor of meaning; and in religion, that of empiricism. Memories, Dreams, Reflections p. 72

• Because we cannot discover God’s throne in the sky with a radio-telescope or establish (for certain) that a beloved father or mother is still about in a more or less corporeal form, people assume that such ideas are "not true." I would rather say that they are not "true" enough, for these are conceptions of a kind that have accompanied human life from prehistoric times, and that still break through into consciousness at any provocation. Man and His Symbols

• Modern man may assert that he can dispense with them, and he may bolster his opinion by insisting that there is no scientific evidence of their truth. But since we are dealing with invisible and unknowable things (for God is beyond human understanding, and there is no mean of proving immortality), why should we bother with evidence?

Man and His Symbols p. 75-76

• To this question there is a positive answer only when the individual is willing to fulfill the demands of rigorous self-examination and self-knowledge. If he follows through his intention, he will not only discover some important truths about himself, but will also have gained a psychological advantage: he will have succeeded in deeming himself worthy of serious attention and sympathetic interest. He will have set his hand, as it were, to a declaration, of his own human dignity and taken the first step towards the foundations of his consciousness – that is, towards the unconscious, the only accessible source of religious experience. (Carl Jung, The Undiscovered Self)
• This is certainly not to say that what we call the unconscious is identical with God or is set up in his place. It is the medium from which the religious experience seems to flow. As to what the further cause of such an experience may be, the answer to this lies beyond the range of human knowledge. Knowledge of God is a transcendental problem. (Carl Jung, The Undiscovered Self)

• The religious person enjoys a great advantage when it comes to answering the crucial question that hangs over our time like a threat: he has a clear idea of the way his subjective existence is grounded in his relation to "God". I put the word "God" in quotes in order to indicate that we are dealing with an anthropomorphic idea whose dynamism and symbolism are filtered through the medium of the unconscious psyche. Anyone who wants to can at least draw near to the source of such experiences, no matter whether he believes in God or not. Without this approach it is only in rare cases that we witness those miraculous conversions of which Paul's Damascus experience is the prototype. (Carl Jung, The Undiscovered Self)

• That religious experiences exist no longer needs proof. But it will always remain doubtful whether what metaphysics and theology call God and the gods is the real ground of these experiences. The question is idle, actually, and answers itself by reason of the subjectively overwhelming numinosity of the experience. Anyone who has had it is seized by it and therefore not in a position to indulge in fruitless metaphysical or epistemological speculations. Absolute certainty brings its own evidence and has no need of anthropomorphic proofs. (Carl Jung, The Undiscovered Self)

• Instincts...are highly conservative and of extreme antiquity as regards both their dynamism and their form. Their forms, when represented to the mind, appears as an image which expresses the nature of the instinctive impulse visually and concretely, like a picture ... (Carl Jung, The Undiscovered Self)

• Instinct is anything but a blind and indefinite impulse, since it proves to be attuned and adapted to a definite external situation. This latter circumstance gives it its specific and irreducible form. Just as instinct is original and hereditary, so too, its form is age-old, that is to say, archetypal. It is even older and more conservative than the body's form. (Carl Jung, The Undiscovered Self)

• These biological considerations naturally apply also to Homo sapiens, who still remain within the framework of general biology despite the possession of consciousness, will, and reason. The fact that our conscious activity is rooted in instinct and derives from it its dynamism, as well as the basic features of its ideational forms, has the same significance for human psychology as for all other members of the animal kingdom. (Carl Jung, The Undiscovered Self)

• Human knowledge consists essentially in the constant adaptation of the primordial pattern of ideas that were given us 'a priori'. These need certain modifications, because, in their original form, they are suited to an archaic mode of life, but not to the demands of a specifically differentiated (modern) environment. If the flow of instinctive dynamism into our life is to be maintained, as is absolutely necessary for our existence, then it is imperative that we remold these archetypal forms into ideas which are adequate to the challenge of the present.... (Carl Jung, The Undiscovered Self)

• Nothing estranges man more from the ground plan of his instincts than his learning capacity, which turns out to be a genuine drive toward progressive transformations of human modes of behavior. It, more than anything else, is responsible for the altered conditions of our existence and the need for new adaptations which civilization brings. It is also the source of numerous psychic disturbances and difficulties occasioned by man's progressive alienation from his instinctual foundation, i.e., by his up rootedness and identification with his conscious knowledge of himself, by his concern with consciousness at the expense of the unconscious. The result is that modern man can know himself only in so far as he can become conscious of himself.... (Carl Jung, The Undiscovered Self)

• This task is so exacting and its fulfillment so advantageous, that he forgets himself in the process, losing sight of his instinctual nature and putting his own conception of himself in place of his real being. In this way he slips imperceptibly into a purely conceptual world where the products of his conscious activity progressively replace reality. (Carl Jung, The Undiscovered Self)

• Separation from his instinctual nature inevitably plunges civilized man into the conflict between conscious and unconscious, spirit and nature, knowledge and faith ... In contrast to the subjectivism of the conscious mind, the unconscious is objective, manifesting itself mainly in the form of contrary feelings, fantasies, emotions, impulses and dreams, none of which one makes oneself, but which come upon one objectively ... The religious person, so far as one can judge, stands directly under the influence of the reaction from the unconscious. (Carl Jung, The Undiscovered Self)

• If the Creator were conscious of Himself, He would not need conscious creatures; nor is it probable that the extremely indirect methods of creation, which squander millions of years upon the development of countless species and creatures, are the outcome of purposeful intention. Natural history tells us of a haphazard and casual transformation of species over hundreds of millions of years of devouring and being devoured. The biological and political history of man is an elaborate repetition of the same thing. But the history of the mind offers a different picture. Here the miracle of reflecting consciousness intervenes – the second cosmogony [ed. note: what Teilhard de Chardin called the origin of the "noosphere," the layer of "mind"]. The importance of consciousness is so great that one cannot help suspecting the element of meaning to be concealed somewhere within all the monstrous, apparently senseless biological turmoil, and that the road to its manifestation was ultimately found on the level of warm-blooded vertebrates possessed of a differentiated brain – found as if by chance, unintended and unforeseen, and yet somehow sensed, felt and groped for out of some dark urge. Memories, Dreams and Reflections [p. 339]

• A man's foremost interest should be his work. But [for] a woman-man are her work and her business. Yes, I know it sounds like a convenient philosophy of the selfish male when I say that. But marriage means a home. And home is like a nest- not enough room for both birds at once. One sits inside, the other perches on the edge and looks about and attends to all outside business. Carl Jung, in Men, Women, and God (C.G. Jung Speaking, 1955)

• Alchemy has performed for me the great and invaluable service of providing material in which my experience could find sufficient room, and has thereby made it possible for me to describe the individuation process at least in its essential aspects. C.G. Jung Mysterium Coniunctionis; Paragraph 792.

• "Insofar as society is itself composed of de-individualized human beings, it is completely at the mercy of ruthless individualists. Let it band together into groups and organizations as much as it likes – it is just this banding together and the resultant extinction of the individual personality that makes it succumb so readily to a dictator. A million zeros joined together do not, unfortunately, add up to one. Ultimately everything depends on the quality of the individual, but our fatally shortsighted age things only in terms of large numbers and mass organizations, though one would think that the world had seen more than enough of what a well-disciplined mob can do in the hands of a single madman... People go on blithely organizing and believing in the sovereign remedy of mass action, without the least consciousness of the fact that the most powerful organizations in the world can be maintained only by the greatest ruthlessness of their leaders and the cheapest of slogans. Carl Jung"; The Undiscovered Self

• A human being would certainly not grow to be seventy or eighty years old if this longevity had no meaning for the species. The afternoon of human life must also have a significance of its own and cannot be merely a pitiful appendage to life's morning. The significance of the morning undoubtedly lies in the development of the individual, our entrenchment in the outer world, the propagation of our kind, and the care of our children. This is the obvious purpose of nature. But when this purpose has been attained -and more than attained-shall the earning of money, the extension of conquests, and the expansion of life go steadily on beyond the bounds of all reason and sense?

• Whoever carries over into the afternoon the law of the morning, or the natural aim, must pay for it with damage to his soul, just as surely as a growing youth who tries to carry over his childish egoism into adult life must pay for this mistake with social failure.; Carl Jung; In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche; The Stages of Life; Page 787.

• The discovery of the value of human personality is reserved for a riper age. For young people the search for personality values is very often a pretext for evading their biological duty. Conversely, the exaggerated longing of an older person for the sexual values of youth is a short-sighted and often cowardly evasion of a duty which demands recognition of the value of personality and submission to the hierarchy of cultural values. The young neurotic shrinks back in terror from the expansion of life's duties, the old one from the dwindling of the treasures he has attained. C.G. Jung, CW 4: Freud and Psychoanalysis, Page 664.

• Experience has taught me to keep away from therapeutic methods as much as from diagnoses. The enormous variation among individuals and their neuroses has set before me the ideal of approaching each case with a minimum of prior assumptions. The ideal would naturally be to have no assumptions at all. But this is impossible even if one exercises the most rigorous self-criticism, for one is oneself the biggest of all one's assumptions, and the one with the gravest consequences. Try as we may to have no assumptions and to use no ready-made methods, the assumption that I myself am will determine my method: as I am, so will I proceed. "The Realities of Practical Psychotherapy" (1937). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. P.543

• An ancient adept has said: "If the wrong man uses the right means, the right means work in the wrong way." This Chinese saying, unfortunately only too true, stands in sharp contrast to our belief in the "right" method irrespective of the man who applies it. In reality, everything depends on the man and little or nothing on the method. The Secret of the Golden Flower. Commentary by C. G. Jung (1931). In CW 18: P.4

• Nobody should play with analysis as with an easy tool. Those who write superficial and cheap books about the subject are either unconscious of the far-reaching effects of analytical treatment or else ignorant of the real nature of the human soul. Contributions to Analytical Psychology. (1928)

• We would do well to abandon from the start any attempt to apply ready-made solutions and warmed-up generalities of which the patient knows just as much as the doctor. Long experience has taught me not to know anything in advance and not to know better, but to let the unconscious take precedence. Our instincts have ridden so infinitely many times, unharmed, over the problems that arise [in later] life that we may be sure the transformation processes which make the transition possible have long been prepared in the unconscious and are only waiting to be released. "A Study in the Process of Individuation" (1934) In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P.528

• The remarkable potency of unconscious contents always indicates a corresponding weakness in the conscious mind and its functions. It is as though the latter were threatened with impotence. For primitive man this danger is one of the most terrifying instances of "magic." So we can understand why this secret fear is also to be found among civilized people. In serious cases it is the secret fear of going mad; in less serious, the fear of the unconscious-a fear which even the normal person exhibits in his resistance to psychological views and explanations. This resistance borders on the grotesque when it comes to scouting all psychological explanations of art, philosophy, and religion, as though the human psyche had, or should have, absolutely nothing to do with these things. The doctor knows these well-defended zones from his consulting hours: they are reminiscent of island fortresses from which the neurotic tries to ward off the octopus. ("Happy Neurosis Island," as one of my patients called his conscious state!) The doctor is well aware that the patient needs an island and would be lost without it. It serves as a refuge for his consciousness and as the last stronghold against the threatening embrace of the unconscious. The same is true of the normal person's taboo regions which psychology must not touch. But since no war was ever won on the defensive, one must, in order to terminate hostilities, open negotiations with the enemy and see what his terms really are. Such is the intention of the doctor who volunteers to act as a mediator. He is far from wishing to disturb the somewhat precarious island idyll or pull down the fortifications. On the contrary, he is thankful that somewhere a firm foothold exists that does not first have to be fished up out of the chaos, always a desperately difficult task. He knows that the island is a bit cramped and that life on it is pretty meager and plagued with all sorts of imaginary wants because too much life has been left outside, and that as a result a terrifying monster is created, or rather is roused out of its slumbers. He also knows that this seemingly alarming animal stands in a secret compensatory relationship to the island and could supply everything that the island lacks. "The Psychology of Transference" (1946). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. P.374

• Practical medicine is and has always been an art, and the same is true of practical analysis. True art is creation, and creation is beyond all theories. That is why I say to any beginner: Learn your theories as well as you can, but put them aside when you touch the miracle of the living soul. Not theories but your own creative individuality alone must decide. Contributions to Analytical Psychology. (1928)
• The patient is there to be treated and not to verify a theory. For that matter, there is no single theory in the whole field of practical psychology that cannot on occasion be proved to be basically wrong. In particular, the view that the patient's resistances are in no circumstances) justified is completely fallacious. The resistance might very well prove that the treatment rests on false assumptions. "Fundamental Questions of Psychotherapy" (1951). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. P.237

• One has to remind oneself again and again that in therapy it is more important for the patient to understand than for the analyst's theoretical expectations to be satisfied. The patient's resistance to the analyst is not necessarily wrong; it is rather a sign that something does not "click." Either the patient is not yet at a point where he would be able to understand, or the interpretation does not fit. In Man and His Symbols. (1964) Essay re-titled "Symbols and the Interpretation of Dreams" In CW 18: P.61

• Neither our modern medical training nor academic psychology and philosophy can equip the doctor with the necessary education, or with the means, to deal effectively and understandingly with the often very urgent demands of his psycho-therapeutic practice. It therefore behooves us, unembarrassed by our shortcomings as amateurs of history, to go to school once more with the medical philosophers of a distant past, when body and soul had not yet been wrenched asunder into different faculties. Although we are specialists par excellence, our specialized field, oddly enough, drives us to universalism and to the complete overcoming of the specialist attitude, if the totality of body and soul is not to be just a matter of words. "Psychotherapy and a Philosophy of Life" (1943). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. P.190

• Even the so-called highly scientific suggestion therapy employs the wares of the medicine-man and the exorcising shaman. And why not? The public is not much more advanced either and continues to expect miraculous cures from the doctor. And indeed, we must rate those doctors - wise in every sense - who know how to surround themselves with the aura of a medicine-man. They have not only the biggest practices but also get the best results. This is because, apart from the neuroses, countless physical illnesses are tainted and complicated with psychic material to an unsuspected degree. The medical exorcist betrays by his whole demeanor his full appreciation of that psychic component when he gives the patient the opportunity of fixing his faith firmly on the mysterious personality of the doctor. In this way he wins the sick man's mind, which from then on helps him to restore his body to health. The cure works best when the doctor himself believes in his own formula, otherwise he may be overcome by scientific doubt and so lose the proper convincing tone. In CW 4: Freud and Psychoanalysis. P.578

• As a doctor it is my task to help the patient to cope with life. I cannot presume to pass judgment on his final decisions, because I know from experience that all coercion-be it suggestion, insinuation, or any other method of persuasion-ultimately proves to be nothing but an obstacle to the highest and most decisive experience of all, which is to be alone with his own self, or whatever else one chooses to call the objectivity of the psyche. The patient must be alone if he is to find out what it is that supports him when he can no longer support himself. Only this experience can give him an indestructible foundation. Psychology and Alchemy (1944) CW 12: P.32

- People whose own temperaments offer problems are often neurotic, but it would be a serious misunderstanding to confuse the existence of problems with neurosis. There is a marked difference between the two in that the neurotic is ill because he is unconscious of his problems, while the person with a difficult temperament suffers from his conscious problems without being ill. "The Stages of Life" (1930). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.763

- The greatest mistake an analyst can make is to assume that his patient has a psychology similar to his own. "General Aspects of Dream Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.498

- No psychotherapist should lack that natural reserve which prevents people from riding roughshod over mysteries they do not understand and trampling them flat. This reserve will enable him to pull back in good time when he encounters the mystery of the patient's difference from himself, and to avoid the danger - unfortunately only too real - of committing psychic murder in the name of therapy. For the ultimate cause of a neurosis is something positive which needs to be safeguarded for the patient; otherwise he suffers a psychic loss, and the result of the treatment is at best a defective cure. "The Realities of Practical Psychotherapy" (1937). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. P.564

- Medicine in the hand of a fool was ever poison and death. Just as we demand from a surgeon, besides his technical knowledge, a skilled hand, courage, presence of mind, and power of decision, so we must expect from an analyst a very serious and thorough psychoanalytic training of his own personality before we are willing to entrust a patient to him. I would even go so far as to say that the acquisition and practice of the psychoanalytic technique presuppose not only a specific psychological gift but in the very first place a serious concern with the molding of one's own character. "The Theory of Psychoanalysis" (1913). In CW 4: Freud and Psychoanalysis. P.450

- Each new case that requires thorough treatment is pioneer work, and every trace of routine then proves to be a blind alley. Consequently the higher psychotherapy is a most exacting business, and sometimes it sets tasks which challenge not only our understanding or our sympathy but the whole man. The doctor is inclined to demand this total effort from his patients, yet he must realize that this same demand only works if he is aware that it also applies to himself. "The Psychology of Transference" (1946). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. P.367

- There are analysts who believe that they can get along without self-analysis. This is Munchausen psychology, and they will certainly remain stuck. They forget that one of the most important therapeutically effective factors is subjecting you to the objective judgment of another. As regards ourselves we remain blind, despite everything and everybody. "The Theory of Psychoanalysis" (1913). In CW 4: Freud and Psychoanalysis. P.449

- The object of therapy is not the neurosis but the man who has the neurosis. We have long known, for instance, that a cardiac neurosis comes not from the heart, as the old medical mythology would have it, but from the mind of the sufferer. Nor does it come from some obscure corner of the unconscious, as many psychotherapists still struggle to believe; it comes from the totality of a man's life and from all the experiences that have accumulated over the years and decades, and finally, not merely from his life as an individual but from his psychic experience within the family or even the social group. "The State of Psychotherapy Today" (1934). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P.337

- The whole nature of man presupposes woman, both physically and spiritually. His system is tuned into woman from the start, just as it is prepared for a quite definite world where there is water, light, air, salt, carbohydrates etc... "Two Essays in Analytical Psychology" In CW 7: P. 188

- The more remote and unreal the personal mother is, the more deeply will the son’s yearning for her clutch at his soul, awakening that primordial and eternal image of the mother for whose sake everything that embraces, protects, nourishes, and helps assumes maternal form, from the Alma Mater of the university to the personification of cities, countries, sciences and ideals "Paracelsus as a Spiritual Phenomenon" (1942) In CW 13: Alchemical Studies P.47

- A mother-complex is not got rid of by blindly reducing the mother to human proportions. Besides that we run the risk of dissolving the experience "Mother" into atoms, thus destroying something supremely valuable and throwing away the golden key which a good fairy laid in our cradle. That is why mankind has always instinctively added the pre-existent divine pair to the personal parents-the "god “father and "god"-mother of the newborn child-so that, from sheer unconsciousness or shortsighted rationalism, he should never forget himself so far as to invest his own parents with divinity. "Psychological Aspects of the Mother Archetype" (1939) In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious P.172

- What can a man say about woman, his own opposite? I mean of course something sensible that is outside the sexual program, free of resentment, illusion, and theory. Where is the man to be found capable of such superiority? Woman always stands just where the man’s shadow falls, so that he is only too liable to confuse the two. Then, when he tries to repair this misunderstanding, he overvalues her and believes her the most desirable thing in the world. "Women in Europe" (1927). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P. 236

- The overdevelopment of the maternal instinct is identical with that well-known image of the mother which has been glorified in all ages and all tongues. This is the mother love which is one of the most moving and unforgettable memories of our lives, the mysterious root of all growth and change; the love that means homecoming, shelter, and the long silence from which everything begins and in which everything ends. Intimately known and yet strange like Nature, lovingly tender and yet cruel like fate, ’oyous and untiring giver of life-mater dolorosa and mute implacable portal that closes upon the dead. Mother is mother love, my experience and my secret. Why risk saying too much, too much that is false and inadequate and beside the point, about that human being who was our mother, the accidental carrier of that great experience which includes herself and me and all mankind, and indeed the whole of created nature, the experience of life whose children we are? The attempt to say these things has always been made, and probably always will be; but a sensitive person cannot in all fairness load that enormous burden of meaning, responsibility, duty, heaven and hell, on to the shoulders of one frail and fallible human being-so deserving of love, indulgence, understanding, and forgiveness-who was our mother. He knows that the mother carries for us that inborn image of the mater nature and mater spiritualis, of the totality of life of which we are a small and helpless part. "Psychological Aspects of the Mother Archetype" (1939) In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious P.172

- Since [in the Middle Ages] the psychic relation to woman was expressed in the collective worship of Mary, the image of woman lost a value to which human beings had a natural right. This value could find its natural expression only through individual choice, and it sank into the unconscious when the individual form of expression was replaced by a collective one. In the unconscious the image of woman received an energy charge that activated the archaic and infantile dominants. And since all unconscious contents, when activated by dissociated libido, are projected upon the external object, the devaluation of the real woman was compensated by daemonic features. She no longer appeared as an object of love, but as a persecutor or witch. The consequence of increasing Mariolatry was the witch hunt, that indelible blot on the later Middle Ages. Psychological Types (1921), CW 6. P.344

- As long as a woman is content to be a femme a homme, she has no feminine individuality. She is empty and merely glitters - a welcome vessel for masculine projections. Woman as a personality, however, is a very different thing: here illusion no longer works. So that when the question of personality arises, which is as a rule the painful fact of the second half of life, the childish form of the self, disappears too. "Psychological Aspects of the Kore" (1941) In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P.355

- The conscious side of woman corresponds to the emotional side of man, not to his "mind." Mind makes up the soul, or better, the "animus" of woman, and just as the anima of a man consists of inferior relatedness, full of affect, so the animus of woman consists of inferior judgments, or better, opinions. The Secret of the Golden Flower. (Das Geheimnis der Goldenen Blute) 1929. Commentary by C.G. Jung in CW 13: Alchemical Studies. P.60

- For a woman, the typical danger emanating from the unconscious comes from above, from the "spiritual" sphere personified by the animus, whereas for a man it comes from the chthonic realm of the "world and woman," i.e., the anima projected on to the world. "A Study in the Process of Individuation" (1934) In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P. 559

- No man can converse with an animus for five minutes without becoming the victim of his own anima. Anyone who still had enough sense of humor to listen objectively to the ensuing dialogue would be staggered by the vast number of commonplaces, misapplied truisms, clichés from newspapers and novels, shop-soiled platitudes of every description interspersed with vulgar abuse and brain splitting lack of logic. It is a dialogue which, irrespective of its participants, is repeated millions and millions of times in all the languages of the world and always remains essentially the same. Aion (1951). CW 9, Part II: Page 29

- Archetypes are like riverbeds which dry up when the water deserts them, but which it can find again at any time. An archetype is like an old watercourse along which the water of life has flowed for centuries, digging a deep channel for itself. The longer it has flowed in this channel the more likely it is that sooner or later the water will return to its old bed. "Wotan" (1936). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P. 395

- It is in my view a great mistake to suppose that the psyche of a new-born child is a tabula rasa in the sense that there is absolutely nothing in it. In so far as the child is born with a differentiated brain that is predetermined by heredity and therefore individualized, it meets sensory stimuli coming from outside not with any aptitudes, but with specific ones, and this necessarily results in a particular, individual choice and pattern of apperception. These aptitudes can be shown to be inherited instincts and preformed patterns, the latter being the a priori and formal conditions of apperception that are based on instinct. Their presence gives the world of the child and the dreamer its anthropomorphic stamp. They are the archetypes, which direct all fantasy activity into its appointed paths and in this way produce, in the fantasy-images of children's dreams as well as in the delusions of schizophrenia, astonishing mythological parallels such as can also be found, though in lesser degree, in the dreams of normal persons and neurotics. It is not, therefore, a question of inherited ideas but of inherited possibilities of ideas. "Concerning the Archetypes with Special Reference to the Anima Concept" (1936) In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P. 136

- The original structural components of the psyche are of no less surprising uniformity than are those of the visible body. The archetypes are, so to speak, organs of the pre-rational psyche. They are eternally inherited forms and ideas which have at first no specific content. Their specific content only appears in the course of the individual's life, when personal experience is taken up in precisely this form. The Tibetan Book of the Dead. Foreword by C.G. Jung. (1954) In CW 11: Psychology and Religion: West and East. P. 845

- Archetypes were, and still are, living psychic forces that demand to be taken seriously, and they have a strange way of making sure of their effect. Always they were the bringers of protection and salvation, and their violation has as its consequence the "perils of the soul" known to us from the psychology of primitives. Moreover, they are the infallible causes of neurotic and even psychotic disorders, behaving exactly like neglected or maltreated physical organs or organic functional systems. "The Psychology of the Child Archetype" (1940). In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P. 266

- All the most powerful ideas in history go back to archetypes. This is particularly true of religious ideas, but the central concepts of science, philosophy, and ethics are no exception to this rule. In their present form they are variants of archetypal ideas, created by consciously applying and adapting these ideas to reality. For it is the function of consciousness not only to recognize and assimilate the external world through the gateway of the senses, but to translate into visible reality the world within us. "The Structure of the Psyche" (1927). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.342

- I have often been asked where the archetype comes from and whether it is acquired or not. This question cannot be answered directly. Archetypes are, by definition, factors and motifs that arrange the psychic elements into certain images, characterized as archetypal, but in such a way that they can be recognized only from the effects they produce. They exist pre-consciously, and presumably they form the structural dominants of the psyche in general. They may be compared to the invisible presence of the crystal lattice in a saturated solution. As a priori conditioning factors they represent a special, psychological instance of the biological "pattern of behavior," which gives all living organisms their specific qualities. Just as the manifestations of this biological ground plan may change in the course of development, so also can those of the archetype. Empirically considered, however, the archetype did not ever come into existence as a phenomenon of organic life, but entered into the picture with life itself. "A Psychological Approach to the Dogma of the Trinity" (1942). In CW 11: Psychology and Religion: West and East. P. 222

- To the extent that the archetypes intervene in the shaping of conscious contents by regulating, modifying, and motivating them, they act like instincts. It is therefore very natural to suppose that these factors are connected with the instincts and to inquire whether the typical situational patterns which these collective form-principles apparently represent are not in the end identical with the instinctual patterns, namely, with the patterns of behavior. "On the Nature of the Psyche" (1947). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.404

- The archetype or primordial image might suitably be described as the instinct’s perception of itself, or as the self portrait of the instinct, in exactly the same way as consciousness is an inward perception of the objective life-process. "Instinct and the Unconscious" (1919). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche P.277

- We must constantly bear in mind that what we mean by "archetype" is in itself irrepresentable, but has effects which make visualizations of it possible, namely, the archetypal images and ideas. We meet with a similar situation in physics: there the smallest particles are themselves irrepresentable but have effects from the nature of which we can build up a model. The archetypal image, the motif or mythologem, is a construction of this kind. "On the Nature of the Psyche" (1947). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.417

- Sooner or later nuclear physics and the psychology of the unconscious will draw closer together as both of them, independently of one another and from opposite directions, push forward into transcendental territory, the one with the concept of the atom, the other with that of the archetype. Aion (1951). CW 9: Part II: P. 412

- Just as the "psychic infra-red," the biological instinctual psyche, gradually passes over into the physiology of the organism and thus merges with its chemical and physical conditions, so the "psychic ultra-violet," the archetype, describes a field which exhibits none of the peculiarities of the physiological and yet, in the last analysis, can no longer be regarded as psychic. "On the Nature of the Psyche" (1947). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.420

- Man’s capacity for consciousness alone makes him man. "On the Nature of the Psyche" (1947). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.412

- Without consciousness there would, practically speaking, be no world, for the world exists for us only in so far as it is consciously reflected by a psyche. Consciousness is a precondition of being. Thus the psyche is endowed with the dignity of a cosmic principle, which philosophically and in fact gives it a position co-equal with the principle of physical being. The carrier of this consciousness is the individual, who does not produce the psyche of his own volition but is, on the contrary, performed by it and nourished by the gradual awakening of consciousness during childhood. If therefore the psyche is of overriding empirical importance, so also is the individual, who is the only immediate manifestation of the psyche. "The Undiscovered Self" (1957). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P. 528

• In the same way that the State has caught the individual, the individual imagines that he has caught the psyche and holds her in the hollow of his hand. He is even making a science of her in the absurd supposition that the intellect, which is but a part and a function of the psyche, is sufficient to comprehend the much greater whole. In reality the psyche is the mother and the maker, the subject and even the possibility of consciousness itself. It reaches so far beyond the boundaries of consciousness that the latter could easily be compared to an island in the ocean. Whereas the island is small and narrow, the ocean is immensely wide and deep and contains a life infinitely surpassing, in kind and degree, anything known on the island - so that if it is a question of space, it does not matter whether the gods are "inside" or "outside." It might be objected that there is no proof that consciousness is nothing more than an island in the ocean. Certainly it is impossible to prove this, since the known range of consciousness is confronted with the unknown extension of the unconscious, of which we only know that it exists and by the very fact of its existence exerts a limiting effect on consciousness and its freedom. "Psychology and Religion" (1938). In CW 11: Psychology and Religion: West and East. P. 141

• Our consciousness does not create itself-it wells up from unknown depths. In childhood it awakens gradually, and all through life it wakes each morning out of the depths of sleep from an unconscious condition. "The Psychology of Eastern Meditation" (1943). In CW 11: Psychology and Religion: West and East. P.935
• Just as conscious contents can vanish into the unconscious, other contents can also arise from it. Besides a majority of mere recollections, really new thoughts and creative ideas can appear which have never been conscious before. They grow up from the dark depths like a lotus. "Approaching the Unconscious" In Man and His Symbols (1964), In CW 18: P.37

• If one reflects upon what consciousness really is, one is deeply impressed by the extremely wonderful fact that an event which occurs outside in the cosmos produces simultaneously an inner image. Thus it also occurs within; in other words, it becomes conscious. From the Basel Seminar (1934)

• It is just man’s turning away from instinct-his opposing himself to instinct-that creates consciousness. Instinct is nature and seeks to perpetuate nature, whereas consciousness can only seek culture or its denial. Even when we turn back to nature, inspired by a Rousseaueseque longing, we "cultivate" nature. As long as we are still submerged in nature we are unconscious, and we live in the security of instinct which knows no problems. Everything in us that still belongs to nature shrinks away from a problem, for its name is doubt, and wherever doubt holds sway there is uncertainty and the possibility of divergent ways. And where several ways seem possible, there we have turned away from the certain guidance of instinct and are handed over to fear. For consciousness is now called upon to do that which nature has always done for her children namely, to give a certain, unquestionable, and unequivocal decision. And here we are beset by an all-too-human fear that consciousness-our Promethean conquest-may in the end not be able to serve us as well as nature. "The Stages of Life" (1930). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P. 750

• Every advance, every conceptual achievement of mankind, has been connected with an advance in self-awareness: man differentiated himself from the object and faced Nature as something distinct from her. Any reorientation of psychological attitude will have to follow the same road. "General Aspects of Dream Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P. 523

• Whatever name we may put to the psychic background, the fact remains that our consciousness is influenced by it in the highest degree, and all the more so the less we are conscious of it. The layman can hardly conceive how many his inclinations, moods, and decisions are influenced by the dark forces of his psyche and how dangerous or helpful they may be in shaping his destiny. Our cerebral consciousness is like an actor who has forgotten that he is playing a role. But when the play comes to an end, he must remember his own subjective reality, for he can no longer continue to live as Julius Caesar or as Othello, but only as himself, from whom he has become estranged by a momentary sleight of consciousness. He must know once again that he was merely a figure on the stage who was playing a piece by Shakespeare, and that there was a producer as well as a director in the background who, as always, will have something very important to say about his acting. "Zur Umerziehung des deutschen Volkes" (On the Re-education of the Germans). In Basler Nachrichten, Nr. 486, 16 November 1946. P.332

• It suits our hypertrophied and hubristic modern consciousness not to be mindful of the dangerous autonomy of the unconscious and to treat it negatively as an absence of consciousness. The hypothesis of invisible gods or daemons would be, psychologically, a far more appropriate formulation, even though it would be an anthropomorphic projection. But since the development of consciousness requires the withdrawal of all the projections we can lay our hands on, it is not possible to maintain any non-psychological doctrine about the gods. If the historical process of world despiritualization continues as hitherto, then everything of a divine or daemonic character outside us must return to the psyche, to the inside of the unknown man, whence it apparently originated. "Psychology and Religion" (1938). In CW 11: Psychology and Religion: West and East. P 141

• The union of opposites on a higher level of consciousness is not a rational thing, nor is it a matter of will; it is a process of psychic development that expresses itself in symbols. C.G. Jung; Collected Works 13; Alchemical Studies; Page 16

• "The real mystery does not behave mysteriously or secretively; it speaks a secret language, it adumbrates itself by a variety of images which all indicate its true nature. I am not speaking of a secret personally guarded by someone, with a content known to its possessor, but of a mystery, a matter or circumstance which is "secret," i.e., known only through vague hints but essentially unknown. The real nature of matter was unknown to the alchemist: he knew it only in hints. In seeking to explore it he projected the unconscious into the darkness of matter in order to illuminate it. In order to explain the mystery of matter he projected yet another mystery - his own psychic background -into what was to be explained: Obscurum per obscurius, ignotum per ignotius! This procedure was not, of course, intentional; it was an involuntary occurrence." Psychology and Alchemy (Part 3, Chapter 2.1)

• "I am therefore inclined to assume that the real root of alchemy is to be sought less in philosophical doctrines than in the projections of individual investigators. I mean by this that while working on his chemical experiments the operator had certain psychic experiences which appeared to him as the particular behavior of the chemical process. Since it was a question of projection, he was naturally unconscious of the fact that the experience had nothing to do with matter itself (that is, with matter as we know it today). He experienced his projection as a property of matter; but what he was in reality experiencing was his own unconscious. In this way he recapitulated the whole history of mankind’s knowledge of nature.... Such projections repeat themselves whenever man tries to explore an empty darkness and involuntarily fills it with living form. “Psychology and Alchemy (Part 3, Chapter 2.1).

• "When the alchemist speaks of Mercurius, on the face of it he means quicksilver (mercury), but inwardly he means the world-creating spirit concealed or imprisoned in matter. The dragon is probably the oldest pictoral symbol in alchemy of which we have documentary evidence. It appears as the Ouroboros, the tail-eater, in the Codex Marcianus, which dates from the tenth or eleventh century, together with the legend ’the One, the All’. Time and again the alchemists reiterate that the opus proceeds from the one and leads back to the one, that it is a sort of circle like a dragon biting its own tail. For this reason the opus was often called circulare (circular) or else rota (the wheel). Mercurius stands at the beginning and end of the work: he is the prima materia, the caput corvi, and the nigredo; as dragon he devours himself and as dragon he dies, to rise again in the lapis. He is the play of colors in the cauda pavonis and the division into the four elements. He is the hermaphrodite that was in the beginning that splits into the classical brother-sister duality and is reunited in the coniunctio, to appear once again at the end in the radiant form of the lumen novum, the stone. He is metallic yet liquid, matter yet spirit, cold yet fiery, poison and yet healing draught - a symbol uniting all the opposites." Psychology and Alchemy (Part 3, Chapter 3.1).

• "Now, all these myth-pictures represent a drama of the human psyche on the further side of consciousness, showing man as both the one to be redeemed and the redeemer. The first formulation is Christian, the second alchemical. In the first case man attributes the need of redemption to himself and leaves the work of redemption, the actual opus, to the autonomous divine figure; in the latter case man takes upon himself the duty of carrying out the redeeming opus, and attributes the state of suffering and consequent need of redemption to the anima mundi imprisoned in matter. In both cases redemption is a work. In Christianity it is the life and death of the God-man which, by a unique sacrifice, bring about the reconciliation of man, who craves redemption and is sunk in materiality, with God. The mystical effect of the God-man's self-sacrifice extends, broadly speaking, to all men, though it is efficacious only for those who submit through faith or are chosen by divine grace; but in the Pauline acceptance it acts as an apocatastasis and extends also to non-human creation in general, which, in its imperfect state, awaits redemption like the merely natural man." Psychology and Alchemy (Part 3, Chapter 3.3).

• "From this point of view, alchemy seems like a continuation of Christian mysticism carried on in the subterranean darkness of the unconscious.... But this unconscious continuation never reached the surface, where the conscious mind could have dealt with it. All that appeared in consciousness were the symbolic symptoms of the unconscious process. Had the alchemist succeeded in forming any concrete idea of his unconscious contents, he would have been obliged to recognize that he had taken the place of Christ - or, to be more exact, that he regarded not as ego but as self, had taken over the work of redeeming not man but God. He would then have had to recognize not only himself as the equivalent of Christ, but Christ as a symbol of the self. This tremendous conclusion failed to dawn on the medieval mind." Psychology and Alchemy (Part 3, Chapter 5.1).

• The concept of archetypes as the mode of expression of the collective unconscious is discussed. In addition to the purely personal unconscious hypothesized by Freud, a deeper unconscious level is felt to exist. This deeper level manifests itself in universal archaic images expressed in dreams, religious beliefs, myths, and fairytales. The archetypes, as unfiltered psychic experience, appear sometimes in their most primitive and naive forms (in dreams), sometimes in a considerably more complex form due to the operation of conscious elaboration (in myths). Archetypal images expressed in religious dogma in particular are thoroughly elaborated into formalized structures which, while by expressing the unconscious in a circuitous manner, prevent direct confrontation with it. Since the Protestant Reformation rejected nearly all of the carefully constructed symbol structures, man has felt increasingly isolated and alone without his gods; at a loss to replenish his externalized symbols, he must turn to their source in the unconscious. The search into the unconscious involves confronting the shadow, man's hidden nature; the anima/animus, a hidden opposite gender in each individual; and beyond, the archetype of meaning. These are archetypes susceptible to personification; the archetypes of transformation, which express the process of individuation itself, are manifested in situations. As archetypes penetrate consciousness, they influence the perceived experience of normal and neurotic people; a too powerful archetype may totally possess the individual and cause psychosis. The therapeutic process takes the unconscious archetypes into account in two ways: they are made as fully conscious as possible, and then synthesized with the conscious by recognition and acceptance. It is observed that since modern man has a highly developed ability to dissociate, simple recognition may not be followed by appropriate action; it is thus felt that moral judgment and counsel is often required in the course of treatment. Archetypes of the collective unconscious. From Collected Works of C. G. Jung , Vol. 9, Part 1, 2nd ed., Princeton University Press, 1968. 451 p. (p. 3-41).

• The definition, modes of manifestation and function of the collective unconscious are discussed. In addition to the personal unconscious generally accepted by medical psychology, the existence of a second psychic system of a universal and impersonal nature is postulated. This collective unconscious is considered to consist of preexistent thought forms, called archetypes, which give form to certain psychic material which then enters the conscious. Archetypes are likened to instinctual behavior patterns. Examples of ideas such as the concept of rebirth, which occur independently in various cultures and ages, are advanced as evidence for the collective unconscious. It is felt that there are as many archetypes as there are recurring situations in life, that when a situation occurs that corresponds to a particular archetype, the archetype presses for completion like an instinctual drive; resistance to its expression may result in neurosis. The existence of archetypes is demonstrated in the analysis of adult and childhood dreams, active imagination, psychotic delusions, and fantasies produced in the trance state. A case history of a paranoid schizophrenic is examined in terms of the manifestation of archetypes in the patient's delusional system. Concerning the archetypes, with special reference to the anima concept. From Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Vol. 9, Part 1., 2nd ed., Princeton University Press, 1968. 451 p. (p. 54-72).

• The formulation of the archetypes is described as an empirically derived concept, like that of the atom; it is a concept based not only on medical evidence but on observations of mythical, religious and literary phenomena, these archetypes are considered to be primordial images, spontaneous products of the psyche which do not reflect any physical process, but are reflected in them. It is noted that while the theories of materialism would explain the psyche as an epiphenomenon of chemical states in the brain, no proof has yet been found for this hypothesis; it is considered more reasonable to view psychic production as a generating rather than a generated factor. The anima is the feminine aspect of the archetypal male/female duality whose projections in the external world can be traced through myth, philosophy and religious doctrine. This duality is often represented in mythical syzygy symbols, which are expressions of parental imagos; the singular power of this particular archetype is considered due to an unusually intense repression of unconscious material concerning the parental imagos. Archetypal images are described as preexistent, available and active from the moment of birth as possibilities of ideas which are subsequently elaborated by the individual. The anima image in particular is seen to be active in childhood, projecting superhuman qualities on the mother before sinking back into the unconscious under the influence of external reality. In a therapeutic sense, the concept of the anima is considered critical to the understanding of male psychology. There is really a curious coincidence between astrological and psychological facts, so that one can isolate time from the characteristics of an individual, and also, one can deduce characteristics from a certain time. Therefore we have to conclude that what we call psychological motives are in a way identical with star positions . . . We must form a peculiar hypothesis. This hypothesis says that the dynamics of our psyche is not just identical with the position of the stars . . . better to assume that it is a phenomenon of time - Carl G. Jung in 1929

• While studying astrology I have applied it to concrete cases many times. ... The experiment is most suggestive to a versatile mind, unreliable in the hands of the unimaginative, and dangerous in the hands of a fool, as those intuitive methods always are. . . . It is an apt tool only when used intelligently. - C. G. Jung: Letters, volume 2, 1951-1961, pages 463-464, letter to Robert L. Kroon, 15 November 1958.

• No analysis is capable of banishing all unconsciousness forever. The analyst must go on learning endlessly, and never forget that each new case brings new problems to light and thus gives rise to unconscious assumptions that have never before been constellated. We could say, without too much exaggeration, that a good half of every treatment that probes at all deeply consists in the doctor's examining himself, for only what he can put right in himself can he hope to put right in the patient. It is no loss, either, if he feels that the patient is hitting him, or even scoring off him: it is his own hurt that gives the measure of his power to heal. This, and nothing else, is the meaning of the Greek myth of the wounded physician. ["Fundamental Questions of Psychotherapy," ibid. para. 239.]

• What happens in the association test also happens in every discussion between two people. . . . The discussion loses its objective character and its real purpose, since the constellated complexes frustrate the intentions of the speakers and may even put answers into their mouths which they can no longer remember afterwards.[A Review of the Complex Theory," ibid., par. 199.]

• Our conscious intentions and actions are often frustrated by unconscious processes whose very existence is a continual surprise to us. We make slips of the tongue and slips in writing and unconsciously do things that betray our most closely guarded secrets-which are sometimes unknown even to ourselves. . . . These phenomena can . . . be demonstrated experimentally by the association tests, which are very useful for finding out things that people cannot or will not speak about.[The Structure of the Psyche," CW 8, par. 296.]

• The will is a psychological phenomenon that owes its existence to culture and moral education, but is largely lacking in the primitive mentality. [Definitions," CW 6, par. 844.]

• The realization of the self, which would logically follow from recognition of its supremacy, leads to a fundamental conflict, to a real suspension between opposites (reminiscent of the crucified Christ hanging between two thieves), and to an approximate state of wholeness that lacks perfection. . . . The individual may strive after perfection . . . but must suffer from the opposite of his intentions for the sake of his completeness. ["Christ, A Symbol of the Self, ibid” par. 123.]

• Although "wholeness" seems at first sight to be nothing but an abstract idea (like anima and animus), it is nevertheless empirical in so far as it is anticipated by the psyche in the form of spontaneous or autonomous symbols. These are the quaternity or mandala symbols, which occur not only in the dreams of modern people who have never heard of them, but are widely disseminated in the historical records of many peoples and many epochs. Their significance as symbols of unity and totality is amply confirmed by history as well as by empirical psychology. [The Self, ibid” par. 59.]
• Unconsciousness is the primal sin, evil itself, for the Logos. ["Psychological Aspects of the Mother Archetype, ibid” par. 178.]

• An extreme state of unconsciousness is characterized by the predominance of compulsive instinctual processes, the result of which is either uncontrolled inhibition or a lack of inhibition throughout. The happenings within the psyche are then contradictory and proceed in terms of alternating, non-logical antitheses. In such a case the level of consciousness is essentially that of a dream-state. A high degree of consciousness, on the other hand, is characterized by a heightened awareness, a preponderance of will, directed, rational behavior, and an almost total absence of instinctual determinants. The unconscious is then found to be at a definitely animal level. The first state is lacking in intellectual and ethical achievement, the second lacks naturalness. ["Psychological Factors in Human Behavior," CW 8, par. 249.]

• The greatest danger about unconsciousness is proneness to suggestion. The effect of suggestion is due to the release of an unconscious dynamic, and the more unconscious this is, the more effective it will be. Hence the ever-widening split between conscious and unconscious increases the danger of psychic infection and mass psychosis. [The Structure and Dynamics of the Self," CW 9ii, par. 390.]

• So defined, the unconscious depicts an extremely fluid state of affairs: everything of which I know, but of which I am not at the moment thinking; everything of which I was once conscious but have now forgotten; everything perceived by my senses, but not noted by my conscious mind; everything which, involuntarily and without paying attention to it, I feel, think, remember, want, and do; all the future things that are taking shape in me and will sometime come to consciousness: all this is the content of the unconscious.[On the Nature of the Psyche," CW 8, par. 382.]

• The unconscious is useless without the human mind. It always seeks its collective purposes and never your individual destiny. [C.G. Jung Letters, vol. 1, p. 283.]

• Consciousness should defend its reason and protect itself, and the chaotic life of the unconscious should be given the chance of having its way too–as much of it as we can stand. This means open conflict and open collaboration at once. That, evidently, is the way human life should be. It is the old game of hammer and anvil: between them the patient iron is forged into an indestructible whole, an "individual."[Conscious, Unconscious, and Individuation," CW 9i, par. 522.]

• The unconscious processes that compensate the conscious ego contain all those elements that are necessary for the self-regulation of the psyche as a whole. On the personal level, these are the not consciously recognized personal motives which appear in dreams, or the meanings of daily situations which we have overlooked, or conclusions we have failed to draw, or affects we have not permitted, or criticisms we have spared ourselves.[The Function of the Unconscious," CW 7, par. 275.]

• The demands of the unconscious then force themselves imperiously on consciousness and bring about a disastrous split which shows itself in one of two ways: either the subject no longer knows what he really wants and nothing interests him, or he wants too much at once and has too many interests, but in impossible things. [General Description of the Types," CW 6, par. 573.

• The unconscious . . . is the source of the instinctual forces of the psyche and of the forms or categories that regulate them, namely the archetypes. [The Structure of the Psyche," CW 8, par. 342.]

• The concept of the unconscious is for me an exclusively psychological concept, and not a philosophical concept of a metaphysical nature. In my view the unconscious is a psychological borderline concept, which covers all psychic contents or processes that are not conscious, i.e., not related to the ego in any perceptible way. My justification for speaking of the existence of unconscious processes at all is derived simply and solely from experience. [Definitions," CW 6, par. 837.]

• They remain in a more or less primitive and infantile state, often only half conscious, or even quite unconscious. The relatively undeveloped functions constitute a specific inferiority which is characteristic of each type and is an integral part of his total character. The one-sided emphasis on thinking is always accompanied by an inferiority of feeling, and differentiated sensation is injurious to intuition and vice versa. [A Psychological Theory of Types, ibid” par. 955.]

• Generally speaking, a judging observer [thinking or feeling type] will tend to seize on the conscious character, while a perceptive observer [sensation type or intuitive] will be more influenced by the unconscious character, since judgment is chiefly concerned with the conscious motivation of the psychic process, while perception registers the process itself.["General Description of the Types," ibid., par. 576.]

• In this way we can orient ourselves with respect to the immediate world as completely as when we locate a place geographically by latitude and longitude. The four functions are somewhat like the four points of the compass; they are just as arbitrary and just as indispen-sable. Nothing prevents our shifting the cardinal points as many degrees as we like in one direction or the other, or giving them differ-ent names. It is merely a question of convention and intelligibility. But one thing I must confess: I would not for anything dispense with this compass on my psychological voyages of discovery. ["A Psychological Theory of Types," CW 6, pars. 958f.]

• [Introversion] is normally characterized by a hesitant, reflective, retiring nature that keeps itself to itself, shrinks from objects, is always slightly on the defensive and prefers to hide behind mistrustful scru-tiny. [Extraversion] is normally characterized by an outgoing, candid, and accommodating nature that adapts easily to a given situation, quickly forms attachments, and, setting aside any possible misgivings, will often venture forth with careless confidence into unknown situations. In the first case obviously the subject, and in the second the object, is all-important. ["The Problem of the Attitude-Type," CW 7, par. 62.]

• First and foremost, it is a critical tool for the research worker, who needs definite points of view and guidelines if he is to reduce the chaotic profusion of individual experiences to any kind of order. . . . Secondly, a typology is a great help in understanding the wide variations that occur among individuals, and it also furnishes a clue to the fundamental differences in the psychological theories now current. Last but not least, it is an essential means for determining the "personal equation" of the practicing psychologist, who, armed with an exact knowledge of his differentiated and inferior functions, can avoid many serious blunders in dealing with his patients. ["Psychological Typology, ibid” par. 986.]

• As a rule, whenever such a falsification of type takes place . . . the individual becomes neurotic later, and can be cured only by developing the attitude consonant with his nature.["General Description of the Types," ibid., par. 560.]

• [The] function-types, which one can call the thinking, feeling, sensation, and intuitive types, may be divided into two classes according to the quality of the basic function, i.e., into the rational and the irrational. The thinking and feeling types belong to the former class, the sensation and intuitive types to the latter. A further division into two classes is permitted by the predominant trend of the movement of libido, namely introversion and extraversion. ["Definitions," CW 6, par. 835.]

• [The trickster] is a forerunner of the savior . . . . He is both subhuman and superhuman, a bestial and divine being, whose chief and most alarming characteristic is his unconsciousness. ["On the Psychology of the Trickster-Figure," CW 9i, par. 472].

• The so-called civilized man has forgotten the trickster. He remembers him only figuratively and metaphorically, when, irritated by his own ineptitude, he speaks of fate playing tricks on him or of things being bewitched. He never suspects that his own hidden and apparently harmless shadow has qualities whose dangerousness exceeds his wildest dreams. [Ibid. par. 478.]

• Everyone is now a stranger among strangers. Kinship libido-which could still engender a satisfying feeling of belonging together, as for instance in the early Christian communities-has long been deprived of its object. But, being an instinct, it is not to be satisfied by any mere substitute such as a creed, party, nation, or state. It wants the human connection. That is the core of the whole transference phenomenon, and it is impossible to argue it away, because relationship to the self is at once relationship to our fellow man, and no one can be related to the latter until he is related to himself.["The Psychology of the Transference," CW 16, par. 445.]

• The patient is bound to the analyst by ties of affection or resistance and cannot help following and imitating his psychic attitude. By this means he feels his way along (empathy). And with the best will in the world and for all his technical skill the analyst cannot prevent it, for empathy works surely and instinctively in spite of conscious judgment, be it never so strong.["Some Crucial Points in Psychoanalysis," CW 4, par. 661.]

• The suitably trained analyst mediates the transcendent function for the patient, i.e., helps him to bring conscious and unconscious together and so arrive at a new attitude. . . . The patient clings by means of the transference to the person who seems to promise him a renewal of attitude; through it he seeks this change, which is vital to him, even though he may not be conscious of doing so. For the patient, therefore, the analyst has the character of an indispensable figure absolutely necessary for life. ["The Transcendent Function," CW 8, par. 146.]

• The transference phenomenon is an inevitable feature of every thorough analysis, for it is imperative that the doctor should get into the closest possible touch with the patient's line of psychological development. [Ibid. par. 283.]

• We do not work with the "transference to the analyst," but against it and in spite of it. ["Some Crucial Points in Psychoanalysis," CW 4, par. 601.]

• Transference is always a hindrance; it is never an advantage. ["The Tavistock Lectures," CW 18, par. 349.]

• Medical treatment of the transference gives the patient a priceless opportunity to withdraw his projections, to make good his losses, and to integrate his personality. [The Psychology of the Transference," CW 16, par. 420.]

• An exclusively sexual interpretation of dreams and fantasies is a shocking violation of the patient's psychological material: infantile-sexual fantasy is by no means the whole story, since the material also contains a creative element, the purpose of which is to shape a way out of the neurosis. ["The Therapeutic Value of Abreaction," CW 16, par. 277.]

• For one type of person (called the infantile-rebel) a positive transference is, to begin with, an important achievement with a healing significance; for the other (the infantile-obedient) it is a dangerous backsliding, a convenient way of evading life's duties. For the first a negative transference denotes increased insubordination, hence a backsliding and an evasion of life's duties, for the second it is a step forward with a healing significance. ["Some Crucial Points in Psychoanalysis," CW 4, par. 659.]

• Unconscious contents are invariably projected at first upon concrete persons and situations. Many projections can ultimately be integrated back into the individual once he has recognized their subjective origin; others resist integration, and although they may be detached from their original objects, they thereupon transfer themselves to the doctor. Among these contents the relation to the parent of opposite sex plays an important part, i.e., the relation of son to mother, daughter to father, and also that of brother to sister. ["The Psychology of the Transference," CW 16, par. 357.]

• Once the projections are recognized as such, the particular form of rapport known as the transference is at an end, and the problem of individual relationship begins. [The Therapeutic Value of Abreaction, ibid" par. 287.]

• If the mediatory product remains intact, it forms the raw material for a process not of dissolution but of construction, in which thesis and antithesis both play their part. In this way it becomes a new content that governs the whole attitude, putting an end to the division and forcing the energy of the opposites into a common channel. The standstill is overcome and life can flow on with renewed power towards new goals. [Ibid. par. 827.]

• From the activity of the unconscious there now emerges a new content, constellated by thesis and antithesis in equal measure and standing in a compensatory relation to both. It thus forms the middle ground on which the opposites can be united. If, for instance, we conceive the opposition to be sensuality versus spirituality, then the mediatory content born out of the unconscious provides a welcome means of expression for the spiritual thesis, because of its rich spiritual associations, and also for the sensual antithesis, because of its sensuous imagery. The ego, however, torn between thesis and antithesis, finds in the middle ground its own counterpart, its sole and unique means of expression, and it eagerly seizes on this in order to be delivered from its division.["Definitions," CW 6, par. 825.]

• Once the unconscious content has been given form and the meaning of the formulation is understood, the question arises as to how the ego will relate to this position, and how the ego and the unconscious are to come to terms. This is the second and more important stage of the procedure, the bringing together of opposites for the production of a third: the transcendent function. At this stage it is no longer the unconscious that takes the lead, but the ego. [Ibid. par. 181.]

• When there is full parity of the opposites, attested by the ego's absolute participation in both, this necessarily leads to a suspension of the will, for the will can no longer operate when every motive has an equally strong counter motive. Since life cannot tolerate a standstill, a damming up of vital energy results, and this would lead to an insupportable condition did not the tension of opposites produce a new, uniting function that transcends them. This function arises quite naturally from the regression of libido caused by the blockage. [Ibid. par. 824.]
• The tendencies of the conscious and the unconscious are the two factors that together make up the transcendent function. It is called "transcendent" because it makes the transition from one attitude to another organically possible. [The Transcendent Function," CW 8, par. 145.]

• Active thinking is an act of the will; passive thinking is a mere occurrence. In the former case, I submit the contents of ideation to a voluntary act of judgment; in the latter, conceptual connections establish themselves of their own accord, and judgments are formed that may even contradict my intention. . . . Active thinking, accordingly, would correspond to my concept of directed thinking. Passive thinking . . . I would call . . . intuitive thinking. ["Definitions, ibid" par. 830.]

- The capacity for directed thinking I call intellect; the capacity for passive or undirected thinking I call intellectual intuition. [Ibid. par. 832.]

- Thinking, if it is to be real thinking and true to its own principle, must rigorously exclude feeling. This, of course, does not do away with the fact that there are individuals whose thinking and feeling are on the same level, both being of equal motive power for consciousness. But in these cases there is also no question of a differentiated type, but merely of relatively undeveloped thinking and feeling. ["General Description of the Types," CW 6, par. 667.

- As a rule it occurs when the analysis has constellated the opposites so powerfully that a union or synthesis of the personality becomes an imperative necessity. . . . [This situation] requires a real solution and necessitates a third thing in which the opposites can unite. Here the logic of the intellect usually fails, for in a logical antithesis there is no third. The "solvent" can only be of an irrational nature. In nature the resolution of opposites is always an energic process: she acts symbolically in the truest sense of the word, doing something that expresses both sides, just as a waterfall visibly mediates between above and below. [The Conjunction," CW 14, par. 705.]

- It is not only possible but fairly probable, even, that psyche and matter are two different aspects of one and the same thing. The synchronicity phenomena point, it seems to me, in this direction, for they show that the nonpsychic can behave like the psychic, and vice versa, without there being any causal connection between them. [Ibid. par. 418.]

- The very diverse and confusing aspects of these phenomena are, so far as I can see at present, completely explicable on the assumption of a psychically relative space-time continuum. As soon as a psychic content crosses the threshold of consciousness, the synchronistic marginal phenomena disappear, time and space resume their accustomed sway, and consciousness is once more isolated in its subjectivity. . . . Conversely, synchronistic phenomena can be evoked by putting the subject into an unconscious state. [On the Nature of the Psyche," CW 8, par. 440.]

- Synchronicity . . . consists of two factors: a) an unconscious image comes into consciousness either directly (i.e., literally) or indirectly (symbolized or suggested) in the form of a dream, idea, or premonition. b) An objective situation coincides with this content. The one is as puzzling as the other. ["Synchronicity: An Acausal Connecting Principle, ibid” par. 858.]

- How are we to explain religious processes, for instance, whose nature is essentially symbolical? In abstract form, symbols are religious ideas; in the form of action, they are rites or ceremonies. They are the manifestation and expression of excess libido. At the same time they are stepping-stones to new activities, which must be called cultural in order to distinguish them from the instinctual functions that run their regular course according to natural law. ["On Psychic Energy," CW 8, par. 91.]

- There are, of course, neurotics who regard their unconscious products, which are mostly morbid symptoms, as symbols of supreme importance. Generally, however, this is not what happens. On the contrary, the neurotic of today is only too prone to regard a product that may actually be full of significance as a mere "symptom. [Definitions, CW 6, par. 821.]

- Psychic development cannot be accomplished by intention and will alone; it needs the attraction of the symbol, whose value quantum exceeds that of the cause. But the formation of a symbol cannot take place until the mind has dwelt long enough on the elementary facts. That is to say until the inner or outer necessities of the life-process have brought about a transformation of energy. ["On Psychic Energy," CW 8, par. 47.]

- The interpretation of the cross as a symbol of divine love is semiotic, because "divine love" describes the fact to be expressed better and more aptly than a cross, which can have many other meanings. On the other hand, an interpretation of the cross is symbolic when it puts the cross beyond all conceivable explanations, regarding it as expressing an as yet unknown and incomprehensible fact of a mystical or transcendent, i.e., psychological, nature, which simply finds itself most appropriately represented in the cross.[Ibid., par. 815.]

- Every psychological expression is a symbol if we assume that it states or signifies something more and other than itself which eludes our present knowledge. [Definitions," CW 6, par. 817.]

- When the man has made enough money, or if a fine legacy should drop from the skies and external necessity no longer presses, then they have time to occupy themselves with one another. Hitherto they stood back to back and defended themselves against necessity. But now they turn face to face and look for understanding-only to discover that they have never understood one another. Each speaks a different language. Then the conflict between the two types begins. This struggle is envenomed, brutal, full of mutual depreciation, even when conducted quietly and in the greatest intimacy. For the value of the one is the negation of value for the other. [Definitions," CW 6, par. 817.]

- Either type has a predilection to marry its opposite, each being unconsciously complementary to the other. . . . The one takes care of reflection and the other sees to the initiative and practical action. When the two types marry, they may affect an ideal union. So long as they are fully occupied with their adaptation to the manifold external needs of life they fit together admirably. ["The Problem of the Attitude-Type," CW 7, par. 80.]

- The "supraordinate personality" is the total man, i.e., man as he really is, not as he appears to himself. . . . I usually describe the supraordinate personality as the "self," thus making a sharp distinction between the ego, which, as is well known, extends only as far as the conscious mind, and the whole of the personality, which includes the unconscious as well as the conscious component. The ego is thus related to the self as part to whole. To that extent the self is supraordinate. [The Psychological Aspects of the Kore," CW 9i, pars. 314f.]

- The part of the unconscious which is designated as the subtle body becomes more and more identical with the functioning of the body, and therefore it grows darker and darker and ends in the utter darkness of matter. . . . Somewhere our unconscious becomes material, because the body is the living unit, and our conscious and our unconscious are embedded in it: they contact the body. Somewhere there is a place where the two ends meet and become interlocked. And that is the [subtle body] where one cannot say whether it is matter, or what one calls "psyche."[Nietzsche's Zarathustra, vol. 1, p. 441.]

- To establish a really mature attitude, he has to see the subjective value of all these images which seem to create trouble for him. He has to assimilate them into his own psychology; he has to find out in what way they are part of himself; how he attributes for instance a positive value to an object, when as a matter of fact it is he who could and should develop this value. And in the same way, when he projects negative qualities and therefore hates and loathes the object, he has to discover that he is projecting his own inferior side, his shadow, as it were, because he prefers to have an optimistic and one-sided image of himself. [Definitions," CW 6, par. 813.]

- Interpretation of an unconscious product on the subjective level reveals the presence of subjective judgments and tendencies of which the object is made the vehicle. When, therefore, an object-imago appears in an unconscious product, it is not on that account the image of a real object; it is far more likely that we are dealing with a subjective functional complex. Interpretation on the subjective level allows us to take a broader psychological view not only of dreams but also of literary works, in which the individual figures then appear as representatives of relatively autonomous functional complexes in the psyche of the author. [Definitions," CW 6, par. 813.]

- Although this peculiarity is most clearly observable in psychopathology, fundamentally it is a normal phenomenon, which can be recognized with the greatest ease in the projections made by the primitive psyche. The tendency to split means that parts of the psyche detach themselves from consciousness to such an extent that they not only appear foreign but lead an autonomous life of their own. It need not be a question of hysterical multiple personality, or schizophrenic alterations of personality, but merely of so-called "complexes" that come entirely within the scope of the normal. ["Psychological Factors in Human Behavior," CW 8, par. 253].

- From the psychological point of view, the phenomenon of spirit, like every autonomous complex, appears as an intention of the unconscious superior to, or at least on a par with, intentions of the ego. If we are to do justice to the essence of the thing we call spirit, we should really speak of a "higher" consciousness rather than of the unconscious. ["Spirit and Life," CW 8, par. 643.]

- The common modern idea of spirit ill accords with the Christian view, which regards it as the summum bonum, as God himself. To be sure, there is also the idea of an evil spirit. But the modern idea cannot be equated with that either, since for us spirit is not necessarily evil; we would have to call it morally indifferent or neutral. [The Phenomenology of the Spirit in Fairytales," CW 9i, par. 394.]

- In that event, the persona, being unconscious, will be projected on a person of the same sex, thus providing a foundation for many cases of open or latent homosexuality, and of father-transferences in men or mother-transferences in women. In such cases there is always a defective adaptation to external reality and a lack of relatedness, because identification with the soul produces an attitude predominantly oriented to the perception of inner processes. [Ibid. par. 809.]
- For an idealistic woman, a depraved man is often the bearer of the soul-image; hence the "savior-fantasy" so frequent in such cases. The same thing happens with men, when the prostitute is surrounded with the halo of a soul crying for succor. [Ibid. par. 811.]

- Wherever an impassioned, almost magical, relationship exists between the sexes, it is invariably a question of a projected soul-image. Since these relationships are very common, the soul must be unconscious just as frequently. [Definitions," CW 6, par. 809.]

- The "soul" which accrues to ego-consciousness during the opus has a feminine character in the man and a masculine character in a woman. His anima wants to reconcile and unite; her animus tries to discern and discriminate. [The Psychology of the Transference," CW 16, par. 522.]

- I have been compelled, in my investigations into the structure of the unconscious, to make a conceptual distinction between soul and psyche. By psyche I understand the totality of all psychic processes, conscious as well as unconscious. By soul, on the other hand, I understand a clearly demarcated functional complex that can best be described as a "personality." [Definitions," CW 6, par. 797]

- The shadow is merely somewhat inferior, primitive, unadapted, and awkward; not wholly bad. It even contains childish or primitive qualities which would in a way vitalize and embellish human existence, but-convention forbids! [Psychology and Religion," CW 11, par. 134.]

- If it has been believed hitherto that the human shadow was the source of all evil, it can now be ascertained on closer investigation that the unconscious man, that is, his shadow, does not consist only of morally reprehensible tendencies, but also displays a number of good qualities, such as normal instincts, appropriate reactions, realistic insights, creative impulses, etc. [Conclusion," CW 9ii, par. 423.]
- Confrontation with the shadow produces at first a dead balance, a standstill that hampers moral decisions and makes convictions ineffective or even impossible. Everything becomes doubtful. [Ibid. par. 708.]

- It is a therapeutic necessity, indeed, the first requisite of any thorough psychological method, for consciousness to confront its shadow. In the end this must lead to some kind of union, even though the union consists at first in an open conflict, and often remains so for a long time. It is a struggle that cannot be abolished by rational means. When it is willfully repressed it continues in the unconscious and merely expresses itself indirectly and all the more dangerously, so no advantage is gained. The struggle goes on until the opponents run out of breath. What the outcome will be can never be seen in advance. The only certain thing is that both parties will be changed. ["Rex and Regina," CW 14, par. 514.]

• Although, with insight and good will, the shadow can to some extent be assimilated into the conscious personality, experience shows that there are certain features which offer the most obstinate resistance to moral control and prove almost impossible to influence. These resistances are usually bound up with projections, which are not recognized as such, and their recognition is a moral achievement beyond the ordinary. While some traits peculiar to the shadow can be recognized without too much difficulty as one’s personal qualities, in this case both insight and good will are unavailing because the cause of the emotion appears to lie, beyond all possibility of doubt, in the other person. [Ibid. par. 16.]

• Concrete sensation never appears in "pure" form, but is always mix-ed up with ideas, feelings, thoughts. . . . The concrete sensation of a flower . . . conveys a perception not only of the flower as such, but also of the stem, leaves, habitat, and so on. It is also instantly mingled with feeling of pleasure or dislike which the sight of the flower evokes, or with simultaneous olfactory perceptions, or with thoughts about its botanical classification, etc. But abstract sensation immediately picks out the most salient sensuous attribute of the flower, its brilliant redness, for instance, and makes this the sole or at least the principle content of consciousness, entirely detached from all other admixtures. Abstract sensation is found chiefly among artists. Like every abstraction, it is a product of functional differentiation. [Ibid. par. 794.]

• Sensation must be strictly differentiated from feeling, since the latter is an entirely different process, although it may associate itself with sensation as "feeling-tone." Sensation is related not only to external stimuli but to inner ones, i.e., to changes in the internal organic processes. [Definitions," CW 6, par. 792.]

• An attitude that seeks to do justice to the unconscious as well as to one’s fellow human beings cannot possibly rest on knowledge alone, in so far as this consists merely of thinking and intuition. It would lack the function that perceives values, i.e., feeling, as well as the function du réel, i.e., sensation, the sensible perception of reality. ["the Psychology of the Transference," CW 16, par.486.]

• (1) Consciousness possesses a threshold intensity which its contents must have attained, so that all elements that are too weak remain in the unconscious.
(2) Consciousness, because of its directed functions, exercises an inhibition (which Freud calls censorship) on all incompatible material, with the result that it sinks into the unconscious.

(3) Consciousness constitutes the momentary process of adaptation, whereas the unconscious contains not only all the forgotten material of the individual’s own past, but all the inherited behavior traces constituting the structure of the mind [i.e., archetypes].

(4) The unconscious contains all the fantasy combinations which have not yet attained the threshold intensity, but which in the course of time and under suitable conditions will enter the light of consciousness. ["The Transcendent Function," CW 8, par. 132.]

• The psyche does not merely react; it gives its own specific answer to the influences at work upon it. [Some Crucial Points in Psychoanalysis," CW 4, par. 665.]

• The ego cannot help discovering that the afflux of unconscious contents has vitalized the personality, enriched it and created a figure that somehow dwarfs the ego in scope and intensity. . . . Naturally, in these circumstances there is the greatest temptation simply to follow the power-instinct and to identify the ego with the self-outright, in order to keep up the illusion of the ego's mastery. . . . [But] the self has a functional meaning only when it can act compensatory to ego-consciousness. If the ego is dissolved in identification with the self, it gives rise to a sort of nebulous superman with a puffed-up ego. [On the Nature of the Psyche," CW 8, par. 430.]

• The self appears in dreams, myths, and fairytales in the figure of the "supraordinate personality," such as a king, hero, prophet, savior, etc., or in the form of a totality symbol, such as the circle, square, quadratura circuli, cross, etc. When it represents a complexio oppositorum, a union of opposites, it can also appear as a united duality, in the form, for instance, of Tao as the interplay of yang and yin, or of the hostile brothers, or of the hero and his adversary (arch-enemy, dragon), Faust and Mephistopheles, etc. Empirically, therefore, the self appears as a play of light and shadow, although conceived as a totality and unity in which the opposites are united. [Definitions," CW 6, par. 790.]

• As an empirical concept, the self designates the whole range of psychic phenomena in man. It expresses the unity of the personality as a whole. But in so far as the total personality, on account of its unconscious component, can be only in part conscious, the concept of the self is, in part, only potentially empirical and is to that extent a postulate. In other words, it encompasses both the experienceable and the inexperienceable (or the not yet experienced). . . . It is a transcendental concept, for it presupposes the existence of unconscious factors on empirical grounds and thus characterizes an entity that can be described only in part. ["Definitions," CW 6, par. 789.]

• The self is not only the center, but also the whole circumference which embraces both conscious and unconscious; it is the center of this totality, just as the ego is the center of consciousness. ["Introduction," CW 12, par. 44.]

• One must give up the retrospective longing which only wants to resuscitate the torpid bliss and effortlessness of childhood. [The Sacrifice," CW 5, par. 643.]
• For him who looks backwards the whole world, even the starry sky, becomes the mother who bends over him and enfolds him on all sides, and from the renunciation of this image, and of the longing for it, arises the picture of the world as we know it today. [Ibid. par. 646.]

• The general rule should be that the weakness of the conscious attitude is proportional to the strength of the resistance. When, therefore, there are strong resistances, the conscious rapport with the patient must be carefully watched, and-in certain cases-his conscious attitude must be supported to such a degree that, in view of later developments, one would be bound to charge oneself with the grossest inconsistency. That is inevitable, because one can never be too sure that the weak state of the patient's conscious mind will prove equal to the subsequent assault of the unconscious. In fact, one must go on supporting his conscious (or, as Freud thinks, "repres-sive") attitude until the patient can let the "repressed" contents rise up spontaneously. [The Psychology of the Unconscious," CW 16, par. 381.]

• In the course of development following puberty, consciousness is confronted with affective tendencies, impulses, and fantasies which for a variety of reasons it is not willing or not able to assimilate. It then reacts with repression in various forms, in the effort to get rid of the troublesome intruders. The general rule is that the more negative the conscious attitude is, and the more it resists, devalues, and is afraid, the more repulsive, aggressive, and frightening is the face which the dissociated content assumes.["The Philosophical Tree," CW 13, par. 464.]

• Repression is a process that begins in early childhood under the moral influence of the environment and continues through life. ["The Personal and the Collective Unconscious," CW 7, par. 202.]

• Repression causes what is called a systematic amnesia, where only specific memories or groups of ideas are withdrawn from recollection. In such cases a certain attitude or tendency can be detected on the part of the conscious mind, a deliberate intention to avoid even the bare possibility of recollection, for the very good reason that it would be painful or disagreeable [Analytical Psychology and Education," CW 17, par. 199a.]

- This spirit is an autonomous psychic happening, a hush that follows the storm, a reconciling light in the darkness of man's mind, secretly bringing order into the chaos of his soul. ["A Psychological Approach to the Trinity," CW 11, par. 260.]
- A creed is a confession of faith intended chiefly for the world at large and is thus an intramundane affair, while the meaning and purpose of religion lie in the relationship of the individual to God (Christianity, Judaism, and Islam) or to the path of salvation and liberation (Buddhism). [Ibid. par. 507.]

- We might say . . . that the term "religion" designates the attitude peculiar to a consciousness which has been changed by experience of the numinosum. ["Psychology and Religion," CW 11, par. 9.]

- Take as an example a businessman who takes too great a risk and consequently goes bankrupt. If he does not allow himself to be discouraged by this depressing experience, but, undismayed, keeps his former daring, perhaps with a little salutary caution added; his wound will be healed without permanent injury. But if, on the other hand, he goes to pieces, abjures all further risks, and laboriously tries to patch up his social reputation within the confines of a much more limited personality, doing inferior work with the mentality of a scared child, in a post far below him, then, technically speaking, he will have restored his persona in a regressive way. . . . Formerly perhaps he wanted more than he could accomplish; now he does not even dare to attempt what he has it in him to do. [Ibid. par. 254.]

- The regressive restoration of the persona is a possible course only for the man who owes the critical failure of his life to his own inflatedness. With diminished personality, he turns back to the measure he can fill. But in every other case resignation and self-belittlement are an evasion, which in the long run can be kept up only at the cost of neurotic sickliness. [Ibid. par. 259.]

- It is precisely the strongest and best among men, the heroes, who give way to their regressive longing and purposely expose themselves to the danger of being devoured by the monster of the maternal abyss. But if a man is a hero, he is a hero because, in the final reckoning, he did not let the monster devour him, but subdued it, not once but many times. Victory over the collective psyche alone yields the true value-the capture of the hoard, the invincible weapon, the magic talisman, or whatever it be that the myth deems most desirable.[The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious," CW 7, par. 261.]

- Regarded causally, regression is determined, say, by a "mother fixation." But from the final standpoint the libido regresses to the imago of the mother in order to find there the memory associations by means of which further development can take place, for instance from a sexual system into an intellectual or spiritual system. The first explanation exhausts itself in stressing the importance of the cause and completely overlooks the final significance of the regressive process. From this angle the whole edifice of civilization becomes a mere substitute for the impossibility of incest. But the second explanation allows us to foresee what will follow from the regression, and at the same time it helps us to understand the significance of the memory-images that have been reactivated. ["On Psychic Energy," CW 8, par. 65 . . .]

- If thinking fails as the adapted function, because it is dealing with a situation to which one can adapt only by feeling, then the unconscious material activated by regression will contain the missing feeling function, although still in embryonic form, archaic and undeveloped. Similarly, in the opposite type, regression would activate a thinking function that would effectively compensate the inadequate feeling. ["On Psychic Energy," CW 8, par. 65.]

- Ordinarily we do not think of "reflection" as ever having been instinctive, but associate it with a conscious state of mind. Reflexio means "bending back" and, used psychologically, would denote the fact that the reflex which carries the stimulus over into its instinctive discharge is interfered with by psychization. . . . Thus in place of the compulsive act there appears a certain degree of freedom, and in place of predictability a relative unpredictability as to the effect of the impulse.["Psychological Factors in Human Behavior," CW 8, par. 241.]

• The neuroses of the young generally come from a collision between the forces of reality and an inadequate, infantile attitude, which from the causal point of view is characterized by an abnormal dependence on the real or imaginary parents, and from the teleological point of view by unrealizable fictions, plans, and aspirations. Here the reductive methods of Freud and Adler are entirely in place. [The Problem of the Attitude-Type," CW 7, par. 88.]

• When animus and anima meet, the animus draws his sword of power and the anima ejects her poison of illusion and seduction. The outcome need not always be negative, since the two are equally likely to fall in love (a special instance of love at first sight). Aion (1951). CW 9, Part II: P.338.30

• "We no longer live on what we have, but on promises, no longer in the present day, but in the darkness of the future, which, we expect, will at last bring the proper sunrise. We refuse to recognize that everything better is purchased at the price of something worse; that, for example, the hope of greater freedom is canceled out by increased enslavement to the state, not to speak of the terrible perils to which the most brilliant discoveries of science expose us. The less we understand of what our [forebears] sought, the less we understand ourselves, and thus we help with all our might to rob the individual of his roots and his guiding instincts, so that he becomes a particle in the mass, ruled only by what Neitzche called the spirit of gravity. (p.236)" — C.G. Jung (Memories, Dreams, Reflections)

• "With a truly tragic delusion," Carl Jung noted, "these theologians fail to see that it is not a matter of proving the existence of the light, but of blind people who do not know that their eyes could see. It is high time we realized that it is pointless to praise the light and preach it if nobody can see it. It is much more needful to teach people the art of seeing." — C.G. Jung

• "I am no longer alone with myself, and I can only artificially recall the scary and beautiful feeling of solitude. This is the shadow side of the fortune of love." — C.G. Jung

• "Faith, hope, love, and insight are the highest achievements of human effort. They are found-given-by experience." — C.G. Jung (Modern Man in Search of a Soul)
• "The bigger the crowd, the more negligible the individual." — C.G. Jung (The Undiscovered Self)

• "The fact that a man who goes his own way ends in ruin means nothing...He must obey his own law, as if it were a daemon whispering to him of new and wonderful paths...There are not a few who are called awake by the summons of the voice, whereupon they are at once set apart from the others, feeling themselves confronted with a problem about which the others know nothing. In most cases it is impossible to explain to the others what has happened, for any understanding is walled off by impenetrable prejudices. "You are no different from anybody else," they will chorus or, "there's no such thing," and even if there is such a thing, it is immediately branded as "morbid"...He is at once set apart and isolated, as he has resolved to obey the law that commands him from within. "His own law!" everybody will cry. But he knows better: it is the law...The only meaningful life is a life that strives for the individual realization–absolute and unconditional–of its own particular law...To the extent that a man is untrue to the law of his being...he has failed to realize his own life's meaning.

• The undiscovered vein within us is a living part of the psyche; classical Chinese philosophy names this interior way "Tao," and likens it to a flow of water that moves irresistibly towards its goal. To rest in Tao means fulfillment, wholeness, one's destination reached, one's mission done; the beginning, end, and perfect realization of the meaning of existence innate in all things." — C.G. Jung

• "I have treated many hundreds of patients. Among those in the second half of life - that is to say, over 35 -

there has not been one whose problem in the last resort was not that of finding a religious outlook on life. It is safe to say that every one of them fell ill because he had lost that which the living religions of every age have given their followers, and none of them has really been healed who did not regain his religious outlook." — C.G. Jung (Modern Man in Search of a Soul)
• The people who fancy they are sure of themselves are the ones who are truly unsure. Our whole life is unsure, so a feeling of unsureness is much nearer to the truth than the illusion and bluff of sureness. In the long run it is the better adapted man who triumphs, not the wrongly self-confident, who is at the mercy of dangers from without and within. - "Depth Psychology and Self-Knowledge" In DU III:9 September 1943. In CW 18: P.18

• "The girl dreams she is dangerously ill. Suddenly birds come out of her skin and cover her completely ... Swarms of gnats obscure the sun, the moon, and all the stars except one. That one start falls upon the dreamer." — C.G. Jung (Man and His Symbols)

• "Art is a kind of innate drive that seizes a human being and makes him its instrument. The artist is not a person endowed with free will who seeks his own ends, but one who allows art to realize its purpose through him. As a human being he may have moods and a will and personal aims, but as an artist he is "man" in a higher sense— he is "collective man"— one who carries and shapes the unconscious, psychic forms of mankind." — C.G. Jung

• "If one does not understand a person, one tends to regard him as a fool" — C.G. Jung

• "That which compels us to create a substitute for ourselves is not the external lack of objects, but our incapacity to lovingly include a thing outside of ourselves" — C.G. Jung (Symbols of Transformation

• "The sure path can only lead to death." — C.G. Jung

• "We are born at a given moment, in a given place, and like vintage years of wine, we have the qualities of the year and of the season in which we are born." — C.G. Jung

• "I am an orphan, alone: nevertheless I am found everywhere. I am one, but opposed to myself. I am youth and old man at one and the same time. I have known neither father nor mother, because I have had to be fetched out of the deep like a fish, or fell like a white stone from heaven. In woods and mountains I roam, but I am hidden in the innermost soul of man. I am mortal for everyone, yet I am not touched by the cycle of aeons." — C.G. Jung

• "I deliberately and consciously give preference to a dramatic, mythological way of thinking and speaking, because this is not only more expressive but also more exact than an abstract scientific terminology, which is wont to toy with the notion that its theoretic formulations may one fine day be resolved into algebraic equations." — C.G. Jung

• "The gods have become our diseases." — C.G. Jung

• "Shame is a soul eating emotion." — C.G. Jung

• Religions are a substitute for legitimate suffering" — C.G. Jung

• "Philemon and other figures of my fantasies brought home to me the crucial insight that there are things in the psyche which I do not produce, but which produce themselves and have their own life. Philemon represented a force which was not myself. In my fantasies I held conversations with him, and he said things which I had not consciously thought. For I observed clearly that it was he who spoke, not I. He said I treated thoughts as if I generated them myself, but in his view thoughts were like animals in the forest, or people in a room, or birds in the air, and added, “If you should see people in a room, you would not think that you had made those people, or that you were responsible for them.” It was he who taught me psychic objectivity, the reality of the psyche. Through him the distinction was clarified between myself and the object of my thought. He confronted me in an objective manner, and I understood that there is something in me which can say things that I do not know and do not intend, things which may even be directed against me." — C.G. Jung (Memories, Dreams, Reflections)

- "Space flights are merely an escape, a fleeing away from oneself, because it is easier to go to Mars or to the moon than it is to penetrate one's own being." — C.G. Jung

- "I am astonished, disappointed, pleased with myself. I am distressed, depressed, and rapturous. I am all these things at once, and cannot add up the sum. I am incapable of determining ultimate worth or worthlessness; I have no judgment about myself and my life. There is nothing I am quite sure about. I have no definite convictions - not about anything, really. I know only that I was born and exist, and it seems to me that I have been carried along. I exist on the foundation or something I do not know." — C.G. Jung

- "If we feel our way into the human secrets of the sick person, the madness also reveals its system, and we recognize in the mental illness merely an exceptional reaction to emotional problems which are not strange to us. –"The Content of the Psychoses" — C.G. Jung (The Psychogenesis of Mental Disease)

- "God has fallen out of containment in religion and into human hearts—God is incarnating. Our whole unconscious is in an uproar from the God Who wants to know and to be known." — C.G. Jung

- "The time is a critical one, for it marks the beginning of the second half of life, when a metanoia, a mental transformation, not infrequently occurs. (on being 36 yrs old)" — C.G. Jung (Symbols of Transformation)

- "Those that look outside dream, those that look inside Awaken." — C.G. Jung

- "Often the hands will solve a mystery that the intellect has struggled with in vain." — C.G. Jung

- "What we do not make conscious emerges later as fate." — C.G. Jung

- "Nature has no use for the plea that one 'did not know'." — C.G. Jung

- "The years... when I pursued the inner images were the most important time of my life. Everything else is to be derived from this. It began at that time, and the later details hardly matter anymore. My entire life consisted in elaborating what had burst forth from the unconscious and flooded me like an enigmatic stream and threatened to break me. That was the stuff and material for more than only one life. Everything later was merely the outer classification, the scientific elaboration, and the integration into life. But the numinous beginning, which contained everything, was then." — C.G. Jung

- "For two personalities to meet is like mixing two chemical substances: if there is any combination at all, both are transformed." — C.G. Jung (Psychological Reflections: A New Anthology of His Writings 1905-61)

- "I have never since entirely freed myself of the impression that this life is a segment of existence which is enacted in a three-dimensional boxlike universe especially set up for it." — C.G. Jung

- "But what will he do when he sees only too clearly why his patient is ill; when he sees that it arises from his having no love, but only sexuality; no faith, because he is afraid to grope in the dark; no hope, because he is disillusioned by the world and by life; and no understanding, because he has failed to read the meaning of his own existence?" — C.G. Jung (Modern Man in Search of a Soul)

- "When religion stops talking about animals it will be all downhill." — C.G. Jung

- "Midlife is the time to let go of an over dominant ego and to contemplate the deeper significance of human existence." — C.G. Jung

- "...it seemed to me I was living in an insane asylum of my own making. I went about with all these fantastic figures: centaurs, nymphs, satyrs, gods and goddesses, as though they were patients and I was analyzing them. I read a Greek or Negro myth as if a lunatic were telling me his anamnesis." — C.G. Jung (Analytical Psychology, Its Theory and Practice: The Tavistock Lectures)

- "Only in the first hour of the night can I become human, while the male dove is busy with the twelve dead.' –Black Book 2" — C.G. Jung

- "Heaven has become for us the cosmic space of the physicists... But 'the heart glows,' and a secret unrest gnaws at the roots of our being." — C.G. Jung

- "We do not know whether Hitler is going to found a new Islam. He is already on the way; he is like Mohammad. The emotion in Germany is Islamic; warlike and Islamic. They are all drunk with wild god. That can be the historic future." — C.G. Jung (The Symbolic Life: Miscellaneous Writings)

- "The Wrong we have Done, Thought, or Intended Will wreak its Vengeance on Our Souls." — C.G. Jung

- "Image is psyche." — C.G. Jung

- "Whatever is not conscious will be experienced as fate." — C.G. Jung

- "When you succeed in awakening the Kundalini, so that it starts to move out of its mere potentiality, you necessarily start a world which is totally different from our world. It is the world of eternity." — C.G. Jung

- "Children are educated by what the grown-up is and not by his talk." — C.G. Jung
- "We had a [schizophrenic] patient with whom it was impossible to carry on a sane conversation; he produced only a crazy mixture of delusional ideas and queer words. This man once went down with a serious physical illness, and I expected it would be very difficult to treat him. But not at all. He was entirely changed; he became friendly and obliging, and carried out all the doctor's orders with patience and gratitude. His eyes lost their evil darting looks, and shone quietly and with understanding. One morning I came to his room with the usual greeting: "Good morning, how are you?" But the patient forestalled me with his well-known refrain: "Here comes another of the dog and monkey troupe wanting to play the Savior." Then I knew his physical trouble was over. From that moment the whole of his reason was as if blown away again." ("The Content of the Psychoses", 1908)

- - "The dogma that "mental diseases are diseases of the brain" is a hangover from the materialism of the 1870s. It has become a prejudice which hinders all progress, with nothing to justify it." ("General Aspects of Dream Psychology", 1916)

- - "The moment of the outbreak of neurosis is not just a matter of chance; as a rule it is most critical. It is usually the moment when a new psychological adjustment, that is, a new adaptation, is demanded." ("Psychoanalysis and Neurosis", 1916)

- - "What youth found and must find outside, the man of life's afternoon must find within himself." ("Two Essays on Analytical Psychology", 1917)

- - "Where love reigns, there is no will to power; and where the will to power is paramount, love is lacking." ("Two Essays on Analytical Psychology", 1917)

• - "[Visions] are like dreams, only they occur in the waking state." (“The Psychological Foundations of Belief in Sprits", 1920)

• - "The more a man’s life is shaped by the collective norm, the greater is his individual immorality." ("Psychological Types", 1921)

• - "The more intelligent and cultured a man is, the more subtly he can humbug himself." (from "Analytical Psychology and Education", 1924)

• - "One can easily throw dust into one’s own eyes with theories." ("Analytical Psychology and Education", 1924)

• - "Consciousness rises out of the depths of unconscious psychic life, at first like separate islands, ’which gradually unite to form a "continent," a continuous landmass of consciousness. Progressive mental development means, in effect, extension of consciousness." ("The Development of Personality", 1925)

• - "Any attempt to create a spiritual attitude by splitting off and suppressing the instincts is a falsification. Nothing is more repulsive than a furtively prurient spirituality; it is just as unsavory as gross sensuality. ... Both [spirituality and sensuality] must live, each drawing life from the other." ("Marriage as a Psychological Relationship", 1925)

• - "First it was passion, and then it became duty, and finally an intolerable burden." (“Marriage as a Psychological Relationship", 1925)

• - "History is not contained in thick books but lives in our very blood." (from "Woman in Europe", 1927)

• - "No one can make history who is not willing to risk everything for it, to carry the experiment with his own life through to the bitter end, and to declare that his life is not a continuation of the past but a new beginning." (from "Woman in Europe", 1927)
• - "Conscious and unconscious are not necessarily in opposition to one another, but complement one another to form a totality, which is the self." (from "The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious", 1928)

• - "His uncertainty forces the enthusiast to puff up his truths, of which he feels none too sure, and to win proselytes to his side in order that his followers may prove to himself the value and trustworthiness of his own convictions. ... Only when convincing someone else does he feel safe from gnawing doubts?" (from "The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious", 1928)

• - "Identification with one’s office or one’s title is very attractive. ... In vain would one look for a personality behind the husk. Underneath all the padding one would find a very pitiable little creature. That is why the office-or whatever this outer husk may be-is so attractive: it offers easy compensation for personal deficiencies." (from "The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious", 1928)

• - "Our admiration for great organizations dwindles when once we become aware of the other side of the wonder: the tremendous piling up and accentuation of all that is primitive in man, and the unavoidable destruction of his individuality in the interests of the monstrosity that every great organization in fact is. The man of today, who resembles more or less the collective ideal has made his heart into a den of murderers ... even though he himself is not in the least disturbed by it." (from "The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious", 1928)

• - "The unconscious [at times] produces contents which are valid not only for the person concerned, but for others as well, in fact for a great many people and possible for all." (from "The Relations between the Ego and the

Unconscious", 1928)
- - "Our fearsome gods have only changed their names: they now rhyme with—ism." (from "The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious", 1928)

- - "Since society as a whole needs the magically effective figure, it uses the needful will to power in the individual, and the will to submit in the mass, as a vehicle, and thus brings about the creation of personal prestige." (from "The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious", 1928)

- - "Without freedom there can be no morality." (from "The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious", 1928)
- - "All religions are therapies for the sorrows and disorders of the soul." (from "Commentary to The Secret of the Golden Flower", 1929)

- - "By understanding the unconscious we free ourselves from its domination." (from "Commentary to The Secret of the Golden Flower", 1929)

- - "[Life's greatest problems] can never by solved but only outgrown." (from "Commentary to The Secret of the Golden Flower", 1929)

- - "Science is not... a perfect instrument, but it is a superb and invaluable tool that works harm only when taken as an end in itself." (from "Commentary to The Secret of the Golden Flower", 1929)

- - "To translate meaning into life ... is to realize the Tao." (from "Commentary to The Secret of the Golden Flower", 1929)

- - "Nothing exerts a stronger psychic effect upon the environment, and especially upon children, than the [unlived] life [of] the parents." (from "Paracelsus", 1929)
- - "The biographies of great artists make it abundantly clear that the creative urge is often so imperious that it battens on their humanity and yokes everything to the service of the work, even at the cost of health and ordinary human happiness. The unborn work in the psyche of the artist is a force of nature that achieves its end either with tyrannical might or with the subtle cunning of nature herself, quite regardless of the personal fate of the man who is its vehicle." (from "The Spirit in Man, Art, and Literature", 1930)

- - "The tyrannical demagogue Moses." (from "The Spirit in Man, Art, and Literature", 1930)

- - "The nearer we approach to the middle of life, and the better we have succeeded in entrenching ourselves in our personal attitudes and social positions, the more it appears as if we had discovered the right course and the right ideals and principles of behavior. For this reason we suppose them to be eternally valid, and make a virtue of unchangeably clinging to them." (from "The Stages of Life", 1931)

- - "Sentimentality is the superstructure erected upon brutality." (from "'Ulysses': A Monologue", 1932)

- - "In [the Middle Ages] they spoke of the devil, today we call it a neurosis." (from "The Meaning of Psychology for Modern Man", 1933)

- - "A special ability means a heavy expenditure of energy in a particular direction, with a consequent drain from some other side of life." (from "Modern Man in Search of a Soul", 1933)

- - "The archetypal image of the wise man, the savior or redeemer, lies buried and dormant in man's unconscious since the dawn of culture; it is awakened whenever the times are out of joint and a human society is committed to a serious error." (from "Modern Man in Search of a Soul", 1933)

- - "Faith cannot be made: it is in the truest sense a gift of grace." (from "Modern Man in Search of a Soul", 1933)

- - "It is ... only in the state of complete abandonment and loneliness that we experience the helpful powers of our own natures." (from "Modern Man in Search of a Soul", 1933)

- - "Neurosis is an inner cleavage-the state of being at war with one- self. ... What drives people to war with themselves is the intuition or the knowledge that they consist of two persons in opposition to one another." (from "Modern Man in Search of a Soul", 1933)

- - "The primordial experience is the source of [creativity]. ... In itself it offers no words or images, for it is a vision seen "as in a glass, darkly." It is merely a deep presentiment that strives to find expression. It is like a whirlwind that seizes everything within reach and, by carrying it aloft, assume a visible shape." (from "Modern Man in Search of a Soul", 1933)

- - "[The unconscious] is dangerous only when our conscious attitude towards it becomes hopelessly false. And this danger grows in the measure that we practice repressions. But as soon as the patient begins to assimilate the contents that were previously unconscious, the danger from the side of the unconscious diminishes." (from "Modern Man in Search of a Soul", 1933)

- - "We are susceptible only to those suggestions with which we are already secretly in accord." (from "Modern Man in Search of a Soul", 1933)

- - "Whereas I formerly believed it to be my bounden duty to call other persons to order, I now admit that I need calling to order myself." (from "Modern Man in Search of a Soul", 1933)

- - "The descent into the depths always seems to precede the ascent." (from "The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious", 1934)

- - "To ask the right question is already half the solution of a problem." (from "The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious", 1934)

- This confrontation is the first test of courage on the inner way, a test sufficient to frighten off most people." (from "The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious", 1934)

- - "The inner voice is at once our greatest danger and an indispensable help." (from "The Development of Personality", 1934)

- - "It is only our deeds that reveal who we are." (from "The Development of Personality", 1934)

- - "To the man in the street it has always seemed miraculous that anyone should turn aside from the beaten track with its known destinations, and strike out on the steep and narrow path leading into the unknown. Hence it was always believed that such a man, if not actually, crazy, was possessed by a demon or a god; for the miracle of a man being able to act otherwise than as humanity has always acted could only be explained by the gift of demonic power or divine spirit." (from "The Development of Personality", 1934)
- - "The doctor should not strive to heal at all costs. One has to be exceedingly careful not to impose one’s own will and conviction on the patient. ... Sometimes it is really a question whether you are allowed to rescue a man from the fate he must undergo for the sake of his further development." (from "Analytical Psychology: Its Theory and Practice", 1935)

• - "There is no recrossing the Rubicon." (from "Individual Dream Symbolism in Relation to Alchemy", 1935)

• - "[In] the Christian reformation of the Jewish concept of the Deity, the morally ambiguous Yahweh became an exclusively good God, while everything evil was united in the devil. ... The moral splitting of the divinity into two halves." (from "Psychological Aspects of the Mother Archetype", 1938)

• - "Nature is not at all lenient with sinners who are unconscious of their sins. She punishes them just as severely as if they had committed a conscious offense." (from "Psychology and Religion", 1938)

• - "No matter what the world thinks about religious experience, the one who has it possesses a great treasure, a thing that has become for him a source of life, meaning, and beauty, and that has given a new splendor to the world and to mankind. ... Where is the criterion by which you could say that such a life is not legitimate, that such an experience is not valid?" (from "Psychology and Religion", 1938)

• - "Religious experience is absolute; it cannot be disputed. You can only say that you have never had such an experience, whereupon your opponent will reply: "Sorry, I have." And there the discussion will end." (from "Psychology and Religion", 1938)

• - "What is ordinarily called "religion" is a substitute. ... The substitute has the obvious purpose of replacing immediate [religious] experience by a choice of suitable symbols supported by an organized dogma and ritual." (from "Psychology and Religion", 1938)

• - "In psychotherapy, enthusiasm is the secret of success." (from "On the Psychogenesis of Schizophrenia", 1939)
• - "[The psychiatrist] is inclined to suspect the mental sanity of anybody who sees more than plain madness in the ravings of a lunatic." (from "On the Psychogenesis of Schizophrenia", 1939)
• - "The dreams of redemption, whereby God descends into the human realm and man mounts up to the realm of divinity." (from "A Psychological Approach to the Dogma of the Trinity", 1942)
• - "Just as man was once revealed out of God, so, when the circle closes, God may be revealed out of man." (from "A Psychological Approach to the Dogma of the Trinity", 1942)

• - "If God wishes to be born as man and to unite mankind in the fellowship of the Holy Ghost, He suffers the terrible torment of having to bear the world in its reality. It is a crux; indeed, He Himself is His own cross. The world is God's suffering, and every individual human being who wishes even to approach his own wholeness knows very well that this means bearing his own cross. But the eternal promise for him who bears his own cross is the Paraclete." (from "A Psychological Approach to the Dogma of the Trinity", 1942)

• - "We are the manner in which the Lord is born." (from "A Psychological Approach to the Dogma of the Trinity", 1942)

• - "The greater the tension, the greater is the potential. Great energy springs from a correspondingly great tension of opposites." (from "Alchemical Studies", 1942)

• - "Nature must not win the game, but she cannot lose." (from "Alchemical Studies", 1942)
• - "Excellence ... exposes him to a great many risks, the chief of which is an exaggerated self-confidence." (from "The Development of Personality", 1942)

• - "Personality can never develop unless the individual chooses his own way, consciously and with moral deliberation." (from "The Development of Personality", 1942)

• - "Without necessity nothing budges, the human personality least of all. It is tremendously conservative, not to say torpid. Only acute necessity is able to rouse it. The developing personality obeys no caprice, no command, no insight, only brute necessity." (from "The Development of Personality", 1942)

• - "An understanding heart is everything, in a teacher. ... One looks back with appreciation to the brilliant teachers, but with gratitude to those who touched our human feelings. The curriculum is so much necessary raw material, but warmth is the vital element for the growing plant and for the soul of the child." (from "The Gifted Child", 1942)

• - "Christian civilization has proved hollow to a terrifying degree: it is all veneer, but the inner man has remained untouched, and therefore unchanged. His soul is out of key with his external beliefs; in his soul the Christian has not kept pace with external developments. Yes, everything is to be found outside-in image and in word, in Church and Bible-but never inside. Inside reign the archaic gods, supreme as of old." (from "Psychology and Alchemy", 1944)

• - "Everything that the modern mind cannot define it regards as insane." (from "Psychology and Alchemy", 1944)

• - "Once the exploration of the unconscious has [begun] ... , the individual is confronted with the abysmal contradictions of human nature, and this confrontation in turn leads to the possibility of a direct experience of light and darkness, of Christ and the devil." (from "Psychology and Alchemy", 1944)

• - "Everything living strives for wholeness." (from "On the Nature of Dreams", 1945)

• - "The dream may either repudiate the dreamer in a most painful way, or bolster him up morally. The first is likely to happen to people who ... have too good an opinion of themselves; the second to those whose self-valuation is too low." (from "On the Nature of Dreams", 1945)

• - "Out of opposition, a new birth." (from "Psychology of the Transference", 1946)

• - "Individuation does not shut one out from the world, but gathers the world to oneself." (from "On the Nature of the Psyche", 1947)

• - "The spirit ... is two-faced and paradoxical: a great help and an equally great danger." (from "On the Nature of the Psyche", 1947)

• - "Intuition [is] perception via the unconscious." (from "The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious", 1950)

• - "Real increase of personality means consciousness of an enlargement that flows from inner sources." (from "The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious", 1950)

• - "At present we educate people only up to the point where they can earn a living and marry; then education ceases altogether, as though a complete mental outfit had been acquired. ... Vast numbers of men and women thus spend their entire lives in complete ignorance of the most important things." (from "The Development of Personality", 1954)

• - "The brain is viewed as an appendage of the genital glands." (from "The Old Wise Man" published in Time, 1955)

• - "I could not say I believe. I know! I have had the experience of being gripped by something stronger than myself, something that people call God." (from "The Old Wise Man" published in Time, 1955)

- - "As at the beginning of the Christian Era, so again today we are faced with the problem of the moral backwardness which has failed to keep pace with our scientific, technical and social developments." (from "The Undiscovered Self", 1957)

- - "The Christian symbol is a living thing that carries in itself the seeds of further development." (from "The Undiscovered Self", 1957)

- - "It is in the nature of political bodies always to see the evil in the opposite group, just as the individual has an ineradicable tendency to get rid of everything he does not know and does not want to know about himself by foisting it off on somebody else.

- Nothing has a more divisive and alienating effect upon society than this moral complacency and lack of responsibility, and nothing promotes understanding and rapprochement more than the mutual withdrawal of projections." (from "The Undiscovered Self", 1957)

- - "Wherever justice is uncertain and police spying and terror are at work, human beings fall into isolation, which, of course, is the aim and purpose of the dictator State, since it is based on the greatest possible accumulation of depotentiated social units." (from "The Undiscovered Self", 1957)

- - "Yahweh is both just and unjust, kindly and cruel, truthful and deceitful." (from "A Psychological View of Conscience", 1958)

- - "Within each one of us there is another whom we do not know. He speaks to us in dreams and tells us how differently he sees us from how we see ourselves. When, therefore, we find ourselves in a difficult situation, to which there is no solution, he can sometimes kindle a light that radically alters our attitude, the very attitude that led us into the difficult situation." (from "Civilization in Transition", 1958)
- - "Conscience itself [asserts] that it is a voice of God." (from "Civilization in Transition", 1958)

- - "It seems to me ... that external circumstances often serve as occasions for a new attitude to life and the world, long prepared in the unconscious, to become manifest." (from "The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche", 1960)

- - "Not all dreams are of equal importance. Even primitives distinguish between "little" and "big" dreams. ... "Little" dreams are the nightly fragments of fantasy coming from the subjective and personal sphere, and their meaning is limited to the affairs of everyday. That is why such dreams are easily forgotten, just because their validity extends no further than the day-to-day fluctuations of the psychic balance. Significant dreams, on the other hand, are often remembered for a lifetime, and not infrequently prove to be the richest jewel in the treasure house of psychic experience." (from "The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche", 1960)

- - "The real existence of an enemy upon whom one can foist off everything evil is an enormous relief to one's conscience. You can then at least say, without hesitation, which the devil is; you are quite certain that the cause of your misfortune is outside, and not in your own attitude." (from "The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche", 1960)

- - "The more uncertain I have felt about myself, the more there has grown up in me a feeling of kinship with all things. In fact, it seems to me as if that alienation which so long separated me from the world has become transferred into my own inner world, and has revealed to me an unexpected unfamiliarity with myself." (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)

• - "A dogma, an indisputable confession of faith, is set up only when the aim is to suppress doubts once and for all. But that no longer has anything to do with scientific judgment; only with a personal power drive." (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)
• - "A fact which can [not] be scientifically verified . . . finds no place in an official view of the world." (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)

• - "All my writings may be considered tasks imposed from within, their source was a fateful compulsion. What I wrote were things that assailed me from within myself. I permitted the spirit that moved me to speak out." (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)

• - "As far we can discern, the sole purpose of human existence is to kindle a light in the darkness of mere being." (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)

• - "The crucial point is that I confront the patient as one human being to another. Analysis is a dialogue demanding two partners. ... The doctor has something to say, but so has the patient." (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)

• - "Freud had a dream-I would not think it right to air the problem it involved. I interpreted it as best I could, but added that a great deal more could be said about it if he would supply me with some additional details from his private life. Freud’s response to these words was a curious look-a look of the utmost suspicion. Then he said, "But I cannot risk my authority!" At that moment he lost it altogether. That sentence burned itself into my memory; and in it the end of our relationship was already foreshadowed. Freud was placing personal authority above truth." (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)

• - "From the beginning I had a sense of destiny, as though my life was assigned to me by fate and had to be fulfilled. This gave me an inner security, and though I could never prove it to myself, it proved itself to me. I did not have this certainty, if had me. Nobody could rob me of the conviction that it was enjoined upon me to do what God wanted and not what I wanted. That gave me the strength to go my own way. Often I had the feeling that in all decisive matters I was no longer among men, but was alone with God." (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)

• - "I regret many follies which sprang from my obstinacy; but without that trait I would not have reached my goal." (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)

• - "I prefer the term "the unconscious," knowing that I might equally well speak of "God" or "daimon" if I wished to express myself in mythic language." (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)

• - "If a man knows more than others, he becomes lonely." (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)

• - "The kernel of all jealousy is lack of love." (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)

• - "The majority of my patients consisted not of believers but of those who had lost their faith. The ones who came to me were the lost sheep." (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)

• - "Man always has some mental reservation, even in the face of divine decrees. Otherwise, where would be his freedom? And what would be the use of that freedom if it could not threaten Him who threatens it?" (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)

• - "Myth is the revelation of divine life in man. It is not we who invent myth; rather it speaks to us as a Word of God." (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)

- - "Nothing so promotes the growth of consciousness as [the] inner confrontation of opposites." (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)

- - "Those inner states were so fantastically beautiful that by comparison this world appeared downright ridiculous. ...

- It is impossible to convey the beauty and intensity of emotion during those visions. They were the most tremendous things I have ever experienced." (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)

- - "Under the impress of Freud's personality I had, as far as possible, cast aside my own judgments and repressed my criticisms. That was the prerequisite for collaborating with him." (from "Memories, Dreams, Reflections", 1962)

- - "As any change must begin somewhere, it is the single individual who will experience it and carry it through. The change must indeed begin with an individual; it might be any one of us. Nobody can afford to look round and to wait for somebody else to do what he is loath to do himself." (from "Man and His Symbols", 1964)

- - "No judgment can be considered to be final in which its reversibility has not been taken into account." (from "Man and His Symbols", 1964)

- - "The two fundamental points in dealing with dreams are these: First, the dream should be treated as a fact, about which one must make no previous assumption except that it somehow makes sense; and second, the dream is a specific expression of the unconscious." (from "Man and His Symbols", 1964)

- - "A decent oligarchy-call it aristocracy if you like-is the most ideal form of government. It depends on the quality of a nation whether they evolve a decent oligarchy or not. ...

- Without the aristocratic ideal there is no stability. You in England owe it to the "gentlemen" that you possess the world." (from "C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters" edited by William McGuire and R. F. C. Hull)

- - "Free will is doing gladly and freely that which one must do." (from "C. G.Jung, Emma Jung and Toni Wolff: A Collection of Remembrances" edited by Feme Jensen)

- - "If left to himself, [man] can naturally bring about his own salvation. Who has produced Christ? Who has produced Buddha?" (from "C. G.Jung, Emma Jung and Toni Wolff: A Collection of Remembrances" edited by Feme Jensen)

- - "The right time comes when one is ready." (from "C. G.Jung, Emma Jung and Toni Wolff: A Collection of Remembrances" edited by Feme Jensen)

- - "The world hangs on a thin thread, and that thread is the psyche of man." (from "Conversations with Carl Jung, and Reactions from Ernest Jone" by Richard I. Evans)

- - "[One of my patients] dreamed that she was commanded to descend into "a pit filled with hot stuff." This she did, till only one shoulder was sticking out of the pit. Then Jung came along, pushed her right down into the hot stuff, exclaiming "Not out but through!"" (from "From the Life and Work of C. G. Jung" by Aniela Jaffe)

- Eros is a superhuman power which, like nature herself, allows itself to be conquered and exploited as though it were impotent. But triumph over nature is dearly paid for. Nature requires no explanations of principle, but asks only for tolerance and wise measure. "Eros is a mighty daemon," as the wise Diotima said to Socrates. We shall never get the better of him, or only to our own hurt. He is not the whole of our inward nature, though he is at least one of its essential aspects. Two Essays on Analytical Psychology, CW 7 (1957). "On the Psychology of the Unconscious" P.32f

• The persona, the ideal picture of a man as he should be, is inwardly compensated by feminine weakness, and as the individual outwardly plays the strong man, so he becomes inwardly a woman, i.e., the anima, for it is the anima that reacts to the persona. But because the inner world is dark and invisible to the extraverted consciousness, and because a man is all the less capable of conceiving his weaknesses the more he is identified with the persona, the persona's counterpart, the anima, remains completely in the dark and is at once projected, so that our hero comes under the heel of his wife's slipper. If this results in a considerable increase of her power, she will acquit herself none too well. She becomes inferior, thus providing her husband with the welcome proof that it is not he, the hero, who is inferior in private, but his wife. In return the wife can cherish the illusion, so attractive to many, that at least she has married a hero, unperturbed by her own uselessness. This little game of illusion is often taken to be the whole meaning of life. Two Essays on Analytical Psychology, CW 7 (1957). "The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious" P.309

• The discussion of the sexual problem is only a somewhat crude prelude to a far deeper question, and that is the question of the psychological relationship between the sexes. In comparison with this the other pales into insignificance, and with it we enter the real domain of woman. Woman's psychology is founded on the principle of Eros, the great binder and loosener, whereas from ancient times the ruling principle ascribed to man is Logos. "Woman in Europe" (1927). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P.254

• Whereas logic and objectivity are usually the predominant features of a man's outer attitude, or are at least regarded as ideals, in the case of a woman it is feeling. But in the soul it is the other way round: inwardly it is the man who feels, and the woman who reflects. Hence a man's greater liability to total despair, while a woman can always find comfort and hope; accordingly a man is more likely to put an end to himself than a woman. However much a victim of social circumstances a woman may be, as a prostitute for instance, a man is no less a victim of impulses from the unconscious, taking the form of alcoholism and other vices. Psychological Types (1921). CW 6. P.805

• The woman who fights against her father still has the possibility of leading an instinctive, feminine existence, because she rejects only what is alien to her. But when she fights against the mother she may, at the risk of injury to her instincts, attain to greater consciousness, because in repudiating the mother she repudiates all that is obscure, instinctive, ambiguous, and unconscious in her own nature. "Psychological Aspects of the Mother Archetype" (1939). In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P. 186

• Every father is given the opportunity to corrupt his daughter's nature, and the educator, husband, or psychiatrist then has to face the music. For what has been spoiled by the father can only be made good by a father, just as what has been spoiled by the mother can only be repaired by a mother. The disastrous repetition of the family pattern could be described as the psychological original sin, or as the curse of the Atrides running through the generations. Mysterium Coniunctionis (1955) CW 14: P. 232

• It is a woman's outstanding characteristic that she can do anything for the love of a man. But those women who can achieve something important for the love of a thing are most exceptional, because this does not really agree with their nature. Love for a thing is a man's prerogative. But since masculine and feminine elements are united in our human nature, a man can live in the feminine part of himself, I and a woman in her masculine part. None the less the feminine element in man is only something in the background, as is the masculine element in woman. If one lives out the opposite sex in oneself one is living in one's own background, and one's real individuality suffers. A man should live as a man and a woman as a woman. "Woman in Europe" (1927) In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P. 243

• Unconscious assumptions or opinions are the worst enemy of woman; they can even grow into a positively demonic passion that exasperates and disgusts men, and does the woman herself the greatest injury by gradually smothering the charm and meaning of her femininity and driving it into the background. Such a development naturally ends in profound psychological disunion, in short, in a neurosis. “Woman in Europe" (1927) In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P.245

• As the animus is partial to argument, he can best be seen at work in disputes where both parties know they are right. Men can argue in a very womanish way, too, when they are anima - possessed and have thus been transformed into the animus of their own anima. Aion (1951). CW 9, Part II: P.29

• If, as happens in long and difficult treatments, the analyst observes a series of dreams often running into hundreds, there gradually forces itself upon him a phenomenon which, in an isolated dream, would remain hidden behind the compensation of the moment. This phenomenon is a kind of developmental process in the personality itself. At first it seems that each compensation is a momentary adjustment of one-sidedness or an equalization of disturbed balance. But with deeper insight and experience, these apparently separate acts of compensation arrange themselves into a kind of plan. They seem to hang together and in the deepest sense to be subordinated to a common goal, so that a long dream-series no longer appears as a senseless string of incoherent and isolated happenings, but resembles the successive steps in a planned and orderly process of development. I have called this unconscious process spontaneously expressing itself in the symbolism of a long dream-series the individuation process. "On the Nature of Dreams" (1945). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. pg. 550

• Archetypes are complexes of experience that come upon us like fate, and their effects are felt in our most personal life. The anima no longer crosses our path as a goddess, but, it may be, as an intimately personal misadventure, or perhaps as our best venture. When, for instance, a highly esteemed professor in his seventies abandons his family and runs off with a young red-headed actress, we know that the gods have claimed another victim. "Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious" (1935). In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P. 62
• Every man carries within him the eternal image of woman, not the image of this or that particular woman, but a definite feminine image. This image is fundamentally unconscious; an hereditary factor of primordial origin engraved in the living organic system of the man, an imprint or "archetype" of all the ancestral experiences of the female, a deposit, as it were, of all the impressions ever made by woman-in short, an inherited system of psychic adaptation. Even if no women existed, it would still be possible, at any given time, to deduce from this unconscious image exactly how a woman would have to be constituted psychically. The same is true of the woman: she too has her inborn image of man." Marriage as a Psychological Relationship" (1925) In CW 17: The Development of the Personality. P.338

• With a little self-criticism one can see through the shadow-so far as its nature is personal. But when it appears as an archetype, one encounters the same difficulties as with anima and animus. In other words, it is quite within the bounds of possibility for a man to recognize the relative evil of his nature, but it is a rare and shattering experience for him to gaze into the face of absolute evil. ["The Shadow, ibid” par. 19.]

• The persona is a complicated system of relations between individual consciousness and society, fittingly enough a kind of mask, designed on the one hand to make a definite impression upon others, and, on the other, to conceal the true nature of the individual. "The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious" (1928). In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology. P.305

• Whoever looks into the mirror of the water will see first of all his own face. Whoever goes to himself risks a confrontation with himself. The mirror does not flatter; it faithfully shows whatever looks into it; namely, the face we never show to the world because we cover it with the persona, the mask of the actor. But the mirror lies behind the mask and shows the true face. "Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious" (1935). In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P.43

• Every calling or profession has its own characteristic persona. It is easy to study these things nowadays, when the photographs of public personalities so frequently appear in the press. A certain kind of behavior is forced on them by the world, and professional people endeavor to come up to these expectations. Only, the danger is that they become identical with their personas-the professor with his text-book, the tenor with his voice. Then the damage is done; henceforth he lives exclusively against the background of his own biography. . . . The garment of Deianeira has grown fast to his skin, and a desperate decision like that of Heracles is needed if he is to tear this Nessus shirt from his body and step into the consuming fire of the flame of immortality, in order to transform himself into what he really is. One could say, with a little exaggeration, that the persona is that which in reality one is not, but which oneself as well as others think one is. "Concerning Rebirth" (1940). In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P.221

• I once made the acquaintance of a very venerable personage - in fact, one might easily call him a saint. I stalked round him for three whole days, but never a mortal failing did I find in him. My feeling of inferiority grew ominous, and I was beginning to think seriously of how I might better myself. Then, on the fourth day, his wife came to consult me.... Well, nothing of the sort has ever happened to me since. But this I did learn: that any man who becomes one with his persona can cheerfully let all disturbances manifest themselves through his wife without her noticing it, though she pays for her self-sacrifice with a bad neurosis. "The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious" (1928). In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology. P.306

• Since the differentiated consciousness of civilized man has been granted an effective instrument for the practical realization of its contents through the dynamics of his will, there is all the more danger, the more he trains his will, of his getting lost in one-sidedness and deviating further and further from the laws and roots of his being. "The Psychology of the Child Archetype" (1940) In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P.276

• When there is a marked change in the individual’s state of consciousness, the unconscious contents which are thereby constellated will also change. And the further the conscious situation moves away from a certain point of equilibrium, the more forceful and accordingly the more dangerous become the unconscious contents that are struggling to restore the balance. This leads ultimately to a dissociation: on the one hand, ego-consciousness makes convulsive efforts to shake off an invisible opponent (if it does not suspect its next-door neighbor of being the devil!), while on the other hand it increasingly falls victim to the tyrannical will of an internal "Government opposition" which displays all the characteristics of a daemonic subman and superman combined. When a few million people get into this state, it produces the sort of situation which has afforded us such an edifying object-lesson every day for the last ten years.* These contemporary events betray their psychological background by their very singularity. The insensate destruction and devastation are a reaction against the deflection of consciousness from the point of equilibrium. For an equilibrium does in fact exist between the psychic ego and non-ego, and that equilibrium is a religion a "careful consideration" of ever-present unconscious forces which we neglect at our peril. "The Psychology of Transference" (1946). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. P.394 *The years 1935-1945

• Nothing is so apt to challenge our self-awareness and alertness as being at war with oneself. One can hardly think of any other or more effective means of waking humanity out of the irresponsible and innocent half-sleep of the primitive mentality and bringing it to a state of conscious responsibility. "Psychological Typology" (1936). In CW 6: Psychological Types. P. 964

• Hidden in the neurosis is a bit of still undeveloped personality, a precious fragment of the psyche lacking which a man is condemned to resignation, bitterness, and everything else that is hostile to life. A psychology of neurosis that sees only the negative elements empties out the baby with the bath-water, since it neglects the positive meaning and value of these "infantile’ i.e., creative-fantasies. "The State of Psychotherapy Today" (1934). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P.355

• We yield too much to the ridiculous fear that we are at bottom quite impossible beings, that if everyone were to appear as he really is a frightful social catastrophe would ensue. Many people today take "man as he really is" to mean merely the eternally discontented, anarchic, rapacious element in human beings, quite forgetting that these same human beings have also erected those firmly established forms of civilization which possess greater strength and stability than all the anarchic undercurrents. The strengthening of his social personality is one of the essential conditions for man's existence. Were it not so, humanity would cease to be. The selfishness and rebelliousness we meet in the neurotic's psychology are not "man as he really is" but an infantile distortion. In reality the normal man is "civic minded and moral"; he created his laws and observes them, not because they are imposed on him from without-that is a childish delusion-but because he loves law and order more than he loves disorder and lawlessness. "Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious" (1935). In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P.442

- The true genius nearly always intrudes and disturbs. He speaks to a temporal world out of a world eternal. He says the wrong things at the right time. Eternal truths are never true at any given moment in history. The process of transformation has to make a halt in order to digest and assimilate the utterly impractical things that the genius has produced from the storehouse of eternity. Yet the genius is the healer of his time, because anything he reveals of eternal truth is healing. "What India Can Teach Us" (1939). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P. 1004

- The genius will come through despite everything, for there is something absolute and indomitable in his nature. The so-called "misunderstood genius" is rather a doubtful phenomenon. Generally he turns out to be a good-for-nothing who is forever seeking a soothing explanation of himself. "The Gifted Child" (1943). In CW 17: The Development of Personality. P. 248

- Whoever speaks in primordial images speaks with a thousand voices; he enthralls and overpowers, while at the same time he lifts the idea he is seeking to express out of the occasional and the transitory into the realm of the ever enduring. He transmutes our personal destiny into the destiny of mankind, and evokes in us all those beneficent forces that ever and anon have enabled humanity to find a refuge from every peril and to outlive the longest night. "On the Relation of Analytical Psychology of Poetry" (1922). In CW 15: The Spirit in Man, Art and Literature. P.129

- To be "normal" is the ideal aim for the unsuccessful, for all those who are still below the general level of adaptation. But for people of more than average ability, people who never found it difficult to gain successes and to accomplish their share of the world's work-for them the moral compulsion to be nothing but normal signifies the bed of Procrustes-deadly and insupportable boredom, a hell of sterility and hopelessness. "Problems of Modern Psychotherapy" (1929). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. P. 161

- Nothing in us ever remains quite contradicted, and consciousness can take up no position which will not call up, somewhere in the dark corners of the psyche, a negation or a compensatory effect, approval or resentment. This process of coming to terms with the Other in us is well worth while, because in this way we get to know aspects of our nature which we would not allow anybody else to show us and which we ourselves would never have admitted. Mysterium Coniunctionis (1955) CW 14: P. 706
- The "other" in us always seems alien and unacceptable; but if we let ourselves be aggrieved the feeling sinks in, and we are the richer for this little bit of self-knowledge. "Psychological Aspects of the Kore" (1941). In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious. P. 918

- If we do not fashion for ourselves a picture of the world, we do not see ourselves either, who are the faithful reflections of that world. Only when mirrored in our picture of the world can we see ourselves in the round? Only in our creative acts do we step forth into the light and see ourselves whole and complete. Never shall we put any face on the world other than our own, and we have to do this precisely in order to find ourselves. For higher than science or art as an end in itself stands man, the creator of his instruments. "Analytical Psychology and Weltanschauung" (1928). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.737

- Unfortunately there can be no doubt that man is, on the whole, less good than he imagines himself or wants to be. Everyone carries a shadow, and the less it is embodied in the individual's conscious life, the blacker and denser it is. If an inferiority is conscious, one always has a chance to correct it. Furthermore, it is constantly in contact with other interests, so that it is continually subjected to modifications. But if it is repressed and isolated from consciousness, it never gets corrected. "Psychology and Religion" (1938). In CW 11: Psychology and Religion: West and East. P.131

- It is a frightening thought that man also has a shadow side to him, consisting not just of little weaknesses and foibles, but of a positively demonic dynamism. The individual seldom knows anything of this; to him, as an individual, it is incredible that he should ever in any circumstances go beyond himself. But let these harmless creatures form a mass, and there emerges a raging monster; and each individual is only one tiny cell in the monster's body, so that for better or worse he must accompany it on its bloody rampages and even assist it to the utmost. Having a dark suspicion of these grim possibilities, man turns a blind eye to the shadow-side of human nature. Blindly he strives against the salutary dogma of original sin, which is yet so prodigiously true. Yes, he even hesitates to admit the conflict of which he is so painfully aware. "On the Psychology of the Unconscious" (1912). In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology. P.35

- If you imagine someone who is brave enough to withdraw all his projections, then you get an individual who is conscious of a pretty thick shadow. Such a man has saddled himself with new problems and conflicts. He has become a serious problem to himself, as he is now unable to say that they do this or that, they are wrong, and they must be fought against. He lives in the "House of the Gathering." Such a man knows that whatever is wrong in the world is in himself, and if he only learns to deal with his own shadow he has done something real for the world. He has succeeded in shouldering at least an infinitesimal part of the gigantic, unsolved social problems of our day. "Psychology and Religion" (1938). In CW 11: Psychology and Religion: West and East. P.140

- There is a deep gulf between what a man is and what he represents, between what he is as an individual and what he is as a collective being. His function is developed at the expense of the individuality. Should he excel, he is merely identical with his collective function; but should he not, then, though he may be highly esteemed as a function in society, his individuality is wholly on the level of his inferior, undeveloped functions, and he is simply a barbarian, while in the former case he has happily deceived himself as to his actual barbarism. Psychological Types (1921). CW 6: P.III

- Taking it in its deepest sense, the shadow is the invisible saurian tail that man still drags behind him. Carefully amputated, it becomes the healing serpent of the mysteries. Only monkeys parade with it. The Integration of the Personality. (1939)
- How else could it have occurred to man to divide the cosmos, on the analogy of day and night, summer and winter, into a bright day-world and a dark night-world peopled with fabulous monsters, unless he had the prototype of such a division in himself, in the polarity between the conscious and the invisible and unknowable unconscious? Primitive man's perception of objects is conditioned only partly by the objective behavior of the things themselves, whereas a much greater part is often played by intrapsychic facts which are not related to the external objects except by way of projection. This is due to the simple fact that the primitive has not yet experienced that ascetic discipline of mind known to us as the critique of knowledge. To him the world is a more or less fluid phenomenon within the stream of his own fantasy, where subject and object are undifferentiated and in a state of mutual interpenetration. "Psychological Aspects of the Mother Archetype" (1939) In CW 9, Part 1: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P. 187

- We carry our past with us, to wit, the primitive and inferior man with his desires and emotions, and it is only with an enormous effort that we can detach ourselves from this burden. If it comes to a neurosis, we invariably have to deal with a considerably intensified shadow. And if such a person wants to be cured it is necessary to find a way in which his conscious personality and his shadow can live together. "Answer to Job" (1952). In CW 11: Psychology and Religion: West and East. P.12

• The world is as it ever has been, but our consciousness undergoes peculiar changes. First, in remote times (which can still be observed among primitives living today), the main body of psychic life was apparently in human and in nonhuman objects: it was projected, as we should say now. Consciousness can hardly exist in a state of complete projection. At most it would be a heap of emotions. Through the withdrawal of projections, conscious knowledge slowly developed. Science, curiously enough, began with the discovery of astronomical laws, and hence with the withdrawal, so to speak, of the most distant projections. This was the first stage in the despiritualization of the world. One step followed another: already in antiquity the gods were withdrawn from mountains and rivers, from trees and animals. Modern science has subtilized its projections to an almost unrecognizable degree, but our ordinary life still swarms with them. You can find them spread out in the newspapers, in books, rumors, and ordinary social gossip. All gaps in our actual knowledge are still filled out with projections. We are still so sure we know what other people think or what their true character is. "Psychology and Religion" (1938) In CW II: Psychology and Religion: West and East. P. 140

• When we must deal with problems, we instinctively resist trying the way that leads through obscurity and darkness. We wish to hear only of unequivocal results, and completely forget that these results can only be brought about when we have ventured into and emerged again from the darkness. But to penetrate the darkness we must summon all the powers of enlightenment that consciousness can offer. "The Stages of Life" (1930). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.752

• Everything that man should, and yet cannot, be or do- be it in a positive or negative sense - lives on as a mythological figure and anticipation alongside his consciousness, either as a religious projection or-what is still more dangerous - as unconscious contents which then project themselves spontaneously into incongruous objects, e.g., hygienic and other "Salvationist" doctrines or practices. All these are so many rationalized substitutes for mythology, and their unnaturalness does more harm than good. "The Psychology of the Child Archetype" (1940). In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P.287

• The hero's main feat is to overcome the monster of darkness: it is the long-hoped-for and expected triumph of consciousness over the unconscious. The coming of consciousness was probably the most tremendous experience of primeval times, for with it a world came into being whose existence no one had suspected before. "And God said, 'Let there be light"' is the projection of that immemorial experience of the separation of consciousness from the unconscious. "The Psychology of the Child Archetype" (1940). In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P.284

• The symbol is a living body, corpus et anima; hence the "child" is such an apt formula for the symbol. The uniqueness of the psyche can never enter wholly into reality; it can only be realized approximately, though it still remains the absolute basis of all consciousness. The deeper "layers" of the psyche lose their individual uniqueness as they retreat farther and farther into darkness. "Lower down," that is to say as they approach the autonomous functional systems, they become increasingly collective until they are universalized and extinguished in the body's materiality, i.e., in chemical substances. The body's carbon is simply carbon. Hence "at bottom" the psyche is simply "world." In this sense I hold Kerenyi to be absolutely right when he says that in the symbol the world itself is speaking. The more archaic and "deeper," that is the more physiological, the symbol is, the more collective and universal, the more "material" it is. The more abstract, differentiated, and specified it is, and the more its nature approximates to conscious uniqueness and individuality, the more it sloughs off its universal character. Having finally attained full consciousness, it runs the risk of becoming a mere allegory which nowhere oversteps the bounds of conscious comprehension, and is then exposed to all sorts of attempts at rationalistic and therefore inadequate explanation. "The Psychology of the Child Archetype" (1940). In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P.291

• The masculinity of the woman and the femininity of the man are inferior, and it is regrettable that the full value of their personalities should be contaminated by something that is less valuable. On the other hand, the shadow belongs to the wholeness of the personality: the strong man must somewhere be weak, somewhere the clever man must be stupid, otherwise he is too good to be true and falls back on pose and bluff. Is it not an old truth that woman loves the weaknesses of the strong man more than his strength, and the stupidity of the clever man more than his cleverness? Die Anima als Schicksalsproblem des Mannes (1963) Foreword by C.G. Jung. In CW 18 261

• To remain a child too long is childish, but it is just as childish to move away and then assume that childhood no longer exists because we do not see it. But if we return to the "children's land" we succumb to the fear of becoming childish, because we do not understand that everything of psychic origin has a double face. One face looks forward, the other back. It is ambivalent and therefore symbolic, like all living reality. Psychology and Alchemy (1944). CW 12. P.74

• No, the demons are not banished; that is a difficult task that still lies ahead. Now that the angel of history has abandoned the Germans,* the demons will seek a new victim. And that won't be difficult. Every man who loses his shadow, every nation that falls into self-righteousness, is their prey.... We should not forget that exactly the same fatal tendency to collectivization is present in the victorious nations as in the Germans that they can just as suddenly become a victim of the demonic powers. "The Postwar Psychic Problems of the Germans" (1945) *Written 1945.

• Just as we tend to assume that the world is as we see it, we naively suppose that people are as we imagine them to be. In this latter case, unfortunately, there is no scientific test that would prove the discrepancy between perception and reality. Although the possibility of gross deception is infinitely greater here than in our perception of the physical world, we still go on naively projecting our own psychology into our fellow human beings. In this way everyone creates for himself a series of more or less imaginary relationships based essentially on projection. "General Aspects of Dream Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.507

• The change of character brought about by the uprush of collective forces is amazing. A gentle and reasonable being can be transformed into a maniac or a savage beast. One is always inclined to lay the blame on external circumstances, but nothing could explode in us if it had not been there. As a matter of fact, we are constantly living on the edge of a volcano, and there is, so far as we know, no way of protecting ourselves from a possible outburst that will destroy everybody within reach. It is certainly a good thing to preach reason and common sense, but what if you have a lunatic asylum for an audience or a crowd in a collective frenzy? There is not much difference between them because the madman and the mob are both moved by impersonal, overwhelming forces. "Psychology and Religion" (1938). In CW 11: Psychology and Religion: West and East. P.25

• It is the face of our own shadow that glowers at us across the Iron Curtain. Man and His Symbols. In CW 18: P.85

• Whenever contents of the collective unconscious become activated, they have a disturbing effect on the conscious mind, and contusion ensues. If the activation is due to the collapse of the individual's hopes and expectations, there is a danger that the collective unconscious may take the place of reality. This state would be pathological. If, on the other hand, the activation is the result of psychological processes in the unconscious of the people, the individual may feel threatened or at any rate disoriented, but the resultant state is not pathological, at least so far as the individual is concerned. Nevertheless, the mental state of the people as a whole might well be compared to a psychosis. "The Psychological Foundation for the Belief in Spirits (1920). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.595

• The individual ego could be conceived as the commander of a small army in the struggle with his environments war not infrequently on two fronts, before him the struggle for existence, in the rear the struggle against his own rebellious instinctual nature. Even to those of us who are not pessimists our existence feels more like a struggle than anything else. The state of peace is a desideratum, and when a man has found peace with himself and the world it is indeed a noteworthy event. "Analytical Psychology and Weltanschauung" (1928) In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.693

• If a man is endowed with an ethical sense and is convinced of the sanctity of ethical values, he is on the surest road to a conflict of duty. And although this looks desperately like a moral catastrophe, it alone makes possible a higher differentiation of ethics and a broadening of consciousness. A conflict of duty forces us to examine our conscience and thereby to discover the shadow. Depth Psychology and a New Ethic. (1949). In CW 18. P.17

• The shadow is a moral problem that challenges the whole ego-personality, for no one can become conscious of the shadow without considerable moral effort. To become conscious of it involves recognizing the dark aspects of the personality as present and real. This act is the essential condition for any kind of self-knowledge. Aion (1951). CW 9, Part II: P.14

• To confront a person with his shadow is to show him his own light. Once one has experienced a few times what it is like to stand judgingly between the opposites, one begins to understand what is meant by the self. Anyone who perceives his shadow and his light simultaneously sees himself from two sides and thus gets in the middle. "Good and Evil in Analytical Psychology" (1959). In CW 10. Civilization in Transition. P.872

• Filling the conscious mind with ideal conceptions is a characteristic of Western theosophy, but not the confrontation with the shadow and the world of darkness. One does not become enlightened by imagining figures of light, but by making the darkness conscious. "The Philosophical Tree" (1945). In CW 13: Alchemical Studies. P.335

• A man who is unconscious of himself acts in a blind, instinctive way and is in addition fooled by all the illusions that arise when he sees everything that he is not conscious of in himself coming to meet him from outside as projections upon his neighbor. "The Philosophical Tree" (1945). In CW 13: Alchemical Studies. P.335
• The "other" may be just as one-sided in one way as the ego is in another. And yet the conflict between them may give rise to truth and meaning-but only if the ego is willing to grant the other its rightful personality. "Concerning Rebirth" (1940) In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious. P.237

• Good does not become better by being exaggerated, but worse, and a small evil becomes a big one through being disregarded and repressed. The shadow is very much a part of human nature, and it is only at night that no shadows exist. "A Psychological Approach to the Dogma of the Trinity" (1942) In CW 11: Psychology and Religion: West and East. P.286

• We know that the wildest and most moving dramas are played not in the theatre but in the hearts of ordinary men and women who pass by without exciting attention, and who betray to the world nothing of the conflicts that rage within them except possibly by a nervous breakdown. What is so difficult for the layman to grasp is the fact that in most cases the patients themselves have no suspicion whatever of the internecine war raging in their unconscious. If we remember that there are many people who understand nothing at all about themselves, we shall be less surprised at the realization that there are also people who are utterly unaware of their actual conflicts. "New Paths in Psychology" (1912). In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology. P.425

• In reality, the acceptance of the shadow-side of human nature verges on the impossible. Consider for a moment what it means to grant the right of existence to what is unreasonable, senseless, and evil! Yet it is just this that the modern man insists upon. He wants to live with every side of himself-to know what he is. That is why he casts history aside. He wants to break with tradition so that he can experiment with his life and determine what value and meaning things have in themselves, apart from traditional presuppositions. "Psychotherapist or the Clergy" (1932). In CW 11: Psychology and Religion: West and East.

• All psychic processes whose energies are not under conscious control are instinctive.[Definitions," CW 6, par. 765.]

• Instincts in their original strength can render social adaptation almost impossible.["The Transcendent Function," CW 8, par. 161.]

• Instinct is not an isolated thing, nor can it be isolated in practice. It always brings in its train archetypal contents of a spiritual nature, which are at once its foundation and its limitation. In other words, an instinct is always and inevitably coupled with something like a philosophy of life, however archaic, unclear, and hazy this may be. Instinct stimulates thought, and if a man does not think of his own free will, then you get compulsive thinking, for the two poles of the psyche, the physiological and the mental, are indissolubly connected. ["Psychotherapy and a Philosophy of

• The ritual act [of the Mass] consecrates both the gift and the givers. It commemorates and represents the Last Supper which our Lord took with His disciples, the whole Incarnation, Passion, Death and Resurrection of Christ. But from the point of view of the divine, this anthropomorphic action is only the outer shell of husk in which what is really happening is not a human action at all but a divine event. Carl Jung; Psychology and Religion

• Wherever the [low] magical aspect of a rite tends to prevail, it brings the rite nearer to satisfying the individual ego's blind greed for power, and thus breaks up the mystical body of the Church into separate units. Where on the other hand, the rite is conceived as the action of God himself, the human participants have only an incidental or "ministering" significance. Carl Jung; Psychology and Religion.
• The dichotomy of God into divinity and humanity and his return to himself in the sacrificial act hold out the comforting doctrine that in man's own darkness there is hidden a light that shall once again return to its source, and that this light actually wanted to descend into the darkness in order to deliver the Enchained One who languishes there, and lead him to light everlasting. Carl Jung; Psychology and Religion

• Our aim is to create a wider personality whose center of gravity does not necessarily coincide with the ego, but which, on the contrary, may even thwart the ego-tendencies. Like a magnet, the new center attracts to itself that which is proper to it, the 'signs of the Father', namely everything that pertains to the original and unalterable character of the individual ground-plan. .Carl Jung; Psychology and Religion

• The same knowledge, formulated differently to suit the age they lived in, was possessed by the Gnostics. ...Man's consciousness was created to the end that it may recognize its descent from a higher unity; pay due and careful regard to this source; execute its commands intelligently and responsibly; and thereby afford the psyche as a whole the optimum degree of life and development. I am addressing myself to those many people for whom the light has gone out, the mystery has faded, and God is dead. To gain an understanding of religious matters,...that is left us today as the psychological approach. ...All opposites are of God, therefore man must bend to this burden; and in so doing he finds that God in his 'oppositeness' has taken possession of him, incarnated himself in him. He has become a vessel filled with God and with Divine conflict. Carl Jung; Psychology and Religion.

• The God of words is cold and dead and shines from afar like the moon, mysteriously and inaccessibly: Let the word return to its creator, to man, and thus the word will be heightened in man. Man should be light, limits, measure. May he be your fruit, for which you longingly reach. The darkness does not comprehend the word, but rather man; indeed, it seizes him, since he himself is a piece of the darkness. Not from the word down to man, but from the word up to man: that is what the darkness comprehends. The darkness is your mother; she behooves reverence, since the mother is dangerous. She has power over you, since she gave birth to you. Honor the darkness as the light, and you will illumine your darkness. Carl Jung; Red Book.

• The spirit of this time has condemned us to haste. You have no more futurity and no more past if you serve the spirit of this time. We need the life of eternity. We bear the future and the past in the depths. The future is old and the past is young. You serve the spirit of this time, and believe that you are able to escape the spirit of the depths. But the depths do not hesitate any longer and will force you into the mysteries of Christ. It belongs to this mystery that man is not redeemed through the hero, but becomes a Christ himself The antecedent example of the saints symbolically teaches us this.

- Whoever wants to see will see badly: It was my will that deceived me. It was my will that provoked the huge uproar among the daimons. Should I therefore not want anything? I have, and I have fulfilled my will as well as I could, and thus I fed everything in me that strived. In the end I found that I wanted myself in everything, but without looking for ,myself Therefore I no longer wanted to seek myself outside of myself but within. Then I wanted to grasp myself and then I wanted to go on again, without knowing what I wanted, and thus I fell into the mystery: Should I therefore not want anything anymore? You wanted this war. That is good. If you had not, then the evil of this war would be small. But with your wanting you make the evil great. If you do not succeed in producing the greatest evil out of this war, you will never learn the violent deed and learn to overcome fighting what lies outside you. Therefore it is good if you want this greatest evil with your whole heart. You are Christians and run after heroes, and wait for redeemers who should take the agony on themselves for you, and totally spare you Golgotha. With that you pile up a mountain of Calvary over all Europe. If you succeed in making a terrible evil out of this war and throw innumerable victims into this abyss, this is good, since it makes each of you ready to sacrifice himself For as I, you draw close to the accomplishment of Christ's mystery. Carl Jung; Red Book

The God of words is cold and dead and shines from afar like the moon, mysteriously and inaccessibly: Let the word return to its creator, to man, and thus the word will be heightened in man. Man should be light, limits, measure. May he be your fruit, for which you longingly reach. The darkness does not comprehend the word, but rather man; indeed, it seizes him, since he himself is a piece of the darkness. Not from the word down to man, but from the word up to man: that is what the darkness comprehends. The darkness is your mother; she behooves reverence, since the mother is dangerous. She has power over you, since she gave birth to you. Honor the darkness as the light, and you will illumine your darkness. Carl Jung; Red Book.

Through uniting with the Self we reach the God.
I must say this, not with reference to the opinions of the ancients or this or that authority; but because I have experienced it. It has happened thus in me. And it certainly happened in a way that I neither expected nor wished for. The experience of the God in this form was unexpected and unwanted. I wish I could say it was a deception and only too willingly would I disown this experience. But I cannot deny that it has seized me beyond all measure and steadily goes on working in me. So if it is a deception, then deception is my God. Moreover, the God is in the deception. And if this were already the greatest bitterness that could happen to me, I would have to confess to this experience and recognize the God in it. No insight or objection is so strong that it could surpass the strength of this experience. And even if the God had revealed himself in a meaningless abomination, I could only avow that I have experienced the God in it. I even know that it is not too difficult to cite a theory that would sufficiently explain my experience and join it to the already known. I could furnish this theory myself and be satisfied in intellectual terms, and yet this theory would be unable to remove even the smallest part of the knowledge that I have experienced the God. I recognize the God by the unshakeableness of the experience. I cannot help but recognize him by the experience. I do not want to believe it, I do not need to believe it, nor could I believe it. How can one believe such? My mind would need to be totally confused to believe such things. Given their nature, they are most improbable. Not only improbable but also impossible for our understanding. Only a sick brain could produce such deceptions. I am like those sick persons who have been overcome by delusion and sensory deception. But I must say that the God makes us sick. I experience the God in sickness. A living God afflicts our reason like a sickness. He fills the soul with intoxication. He fills us with reeling chaos.
How many will the God break?
The God appears to us in a certain state of the soul. Therefore we reach the God through the Self. Not the Self is God, although we reach the God through the Self. The God is behind the Self above the Self the Self itself when he appears. But he appears as our sickness, from which we must heal ourselves. We must heal ourselves from the God, since he is also our heaviest wound. For in the first instance the God's power resides entirely in the Self since the self is completely in the God, because we were not with the Self We must draw the Self to our side. Therefore we must wrestle with the God for the self Since the God is an unfathomable powerful movement that sweeps away the Self into the boundless, into dissolution. Hence when the God appears to us we are at first powerless, captivated, divided, sick, poisoned with the strongest poison, but drunk with the highest health.

Yet we cannot remain in this state, since all the powers of our body are consumed like fat in the flames. Hence we must strive to free the self from the God, so that we can live. It is certainly possible and even quite easy for our reason to deny the God and to speak only of sickness. Thus we accept the sick part and can also heal it. But it will be a healing with loss. We lose a part of life. We go on living, but as ones lamed by the God. Where the fire blazed dead ashes lie.
I believe that we have the choice: I preferred the living wonders of the God. I daily weigh up my whole life and I continue to fiery brilliance of the God as a higher and fuller life than the ashes of rationality. The ashes are suicide to me. I could perhaps put out the fire but I cannot deny to myself the experience of the God. Nor can I cut myself off from this experience. I also do not want to, since I want to live. My life wants itself whole.
Therefore I must serve my Self I must win it in this way. But I must win it so that my life will become whole. For it seems to me to be sinful to deform life where there is yet the possibility to live it fully. The service of the Self is therefore divine service and the service of mankind. If I carry myself I relieve mankind of myself and heal my Self from the God. I must free my Self from the God, since the God I experienced is more than love; he is also hate, he is more than beauty, he is also the abomination, he is more than wisdom, he is also meaninglessness, he is more than power, he is also powerlessness, he is more than omnipresence, he is also my creature. Carl Jung; Red Book.

What serviceable forms rise from your body, you thieving abyss! These appear as elemental spirits, dressed in wrinkled garb, Cabiri, with delightful misshapen forms, young and yet old, dwarfish, shriveled, unspectacular bearers of secret arts, possessors of ridiculous wisdom, first formations of the unformed gold, worms that crawl from the liberated egg of the Gods, incipient ones, unborn, still invisible. What should your appearance be to us? What new arts do you bear up from the inaccessible treasure chamber, the sun yoke from the egg of the Gods You still have roots in the soil like plants and you are animal faces of the human body; you are foolishly sweet, uncanny, primordial, and earthly. We cannot grasp your essence, you gnomes, you object souls. You have your origin in the lowest. Do you want to become giants, you Tom Thumbs? Do you belong to the followers of the son of the earth? Are you the earthly feet of the Godhead? What do you want? Speak!"
The Cabiri: "We come to greet you as the master of the lower nature."
I: ”Are you speaking to me? Am I your master?"
The Cabiri: "You were not, but you are now."
I: "So you declare. And so be it. Yet what should I do with your following?"
The Cabiri: "We carry what is not to be carried from below to above. We are the juices that rise secretly, not by force, but sucked out of inertia and affixed to what is growing. We know the unknown ways and the inexplicable laws of living matter. We carry up what slumbers in the earthly; what is dead and yet enters into the living. We do this slowly and easily; what you do in vain in your human way. We complete what is impossible for you."
I: "What should I leave to you? Which troubles can I transfer to you? What should I not do, and what do you do better?"
The Cabiri: "You forget the lethargy of matter. You want to pull up with your own force what can only rise slowly; ingesting itself affixed to itself from within. Spare yourself the trouble, or you will disturb our work."
I: "Should I trust you, you untrustworthy ones, you slaves and slave souls? Get to work. Let it be so." Carl Jung; Red Book.

My soul speaks to me in a bright voice: "The door should be lifted off its hinges to provide a free passage between here and there, between yes and no, between above and below, between left and right. Airy passages should be built between all opposed things, light smooth streets should lead from one pole to the other. Scales should be set up, whose pointer sways gently A flame should burn that cannot be blown out by the wind. A stream should flow to its deepest goal. The herds of wild animals should move to their feeding grounds along their old game paths. Life should proceed, from birth to death, from death to birth, unbroken like the path of the sun. Everything should proceed on this path." Carl Jung; Red Book.

Selfish desire ultimately desires itself You find yourself in your desire, so do not say that desire is vain. If you desire yourself you produce the divine son in your embrace with yourself Your desire is the father of the God, your self is the mother of the God, but the son is the new God, your master. If you embrace your self then it will appear to you as if the world has become cold and empty The coming God moves into this emptiness. If you are in your solitude, and all the space around you has become cold and unending, then you have moved far from men, and at the same time you have come near to them as never before. Selfish desire only" apparently led you to men, but in reality it led you away from them and in the end to yourself which to you and to others was the most remote. But now, if you are in solitude, your God leads you to the God of others, and through that to the true neighbor, to the neighbor of the self in others. Carl Jung; Red Book.

We need the coldness of death to see clearly. Life wants to live and to die, to begin and to end. You are not forced to live eternally; but you can also die, since there is a will in you for both. Life and death must strike a balance in your existence. Today’s men need a large slice of death, since too much incorrectness lives in them, and too much correctness died in them. What stays in balance is correct, what disturbs balance is incorrect. But if balance has been attained, then that which preserves it is incorrect and that which disturbs it is correct. Balance is at once life and death. For the completion of life a balance with death is fitting. If I accept death, then my tree greens, since dying increases life. If I plunge into the death encompassing the world, then my buds break open. How much our life needs death! Carl Jung; Red Book.

Joy at the smallest things comes to you only when you have accepted death. But if you look out greedily for all that you could still live, then nothing is great enough for your pleasure, and the smallest things that continue to surround you are no longer a joy. Therefore I behold death, since it teaches me how to live. If you accept death, it is altogether like a frosty night and an anxious misgiving, but a frosty night in a vineyard full of sweet grapes. You will soon take pleasure in your wealth. Death ripens. One needs death to be able to harvest the fruit. Without death, life would be meaningless, since the long-lasting rises again and denies its own meaning. To be, and to enjoy your being, you need death, and limitation enables you to fulfill your being. Carl Jung; Red Book.

Some have their reason in thinking, others in feeling. Both are servants of Logos, and in secret become worshipers of the serpent. Carl Jung; Red Book

You gain everything from the God whom you bear, but not his weapon, since he crushed it. He who conquers needs weapons. But what else do you want to conquer? You cannot conquer more than the earth. And what is the earth? It is round all over and hangs like a drop in the cosmos. You will not reach the sun, and your power will not even extend to the barren moon; you will conquer neither the sea, nor the snow on the poles, nor the sands of the desert, but only a few spots on the green earth. You will not conquer anything for any length of time. Your power will turn into dust tomorrow, for above all-at the very least you must conquer death. So do not be a fool, throw down your weapon. God himself smashed his weapon. Armor is enough to protect you from fools who still suffer from the need to conquer. God’s armor will make you invulnerable and invisible to the worst fools. Carl Jung; Red Book

January 10, 1914. In Black Book 3, Jung wrote:
"It appears as if something has been achieved through this memorable event. But it is incalculable where this will all lead. I hardly dare say that Izdubar’s fate is grotesque and tragic, for that is what our most precious life is. It is the first attempt to elevate this truth to a system. He rightly deserves a place among the immortal. What lies in the middle is the truth. It has many faces; one is certainly comical, another sad, a third evil, a fourth tragic, a fifth funny; a sixth is a grimace, and so forth. Should one of these faces become particularly obtrusive, we thus recognize that we have deviated from certain truth and approach an extreme that constitutes a definite impasse should we decide to pursue this route. It is a murderous task to write the wisdom of real life, particularly if one has committed many years to serious scientific research. What proves to be most difficult is to grasp the playfulness of life (the childish, so to speak). All the manifold sides of life, the great, the beautiful, the serious, the black, the devilish, the good, the ridiculous, the grotesque are fields of application which each tend to wholly absorb the beholder or describer.
Our time requires something capable of regulating the mind. Just as the concrete world has expanded from the limitedness of the ancient outlook to the immeasurable diversity of our modern outlook, the world of intellectual possibilities has developed to unfathomable diversity. Infinitely long paths, paved with thousands of thick volumes, lead from one specialization to another. Soon no one will be able to walk down these paths anymore. And then only specialists will remain. More than ever we require the living truth of the life of the mind, of something capable of providing firm guidance” Carl Jung; Red Book

"Somewhere there was once a Flower, a Stone, a Crystal, a Queen, A King, a Palace, a Lover and his Beloved, and this was long ago, on an Island somewhere in the ocean five thousand years ago... Such is Love, the Mystic Flower of the Soul. This is the Center, the Self..." -C.G. Jung

But this was the vision that I did not want to see, the horror that I did not want to live: A sickening feeling of nausea sneaks up on me, and abominable, perfidious serpents wind their way slowly and cracklingly through parched undergrowth; they hang down lazily and disgustingly lethargic from the branches, looped in dreadful knots. I am reluctant to enter this dreary and unsightly valley; where the bushes stand in arid stony defiles. The valley looks so normal, its air smells of crime, of foul, cowardly deeds. I am seized by disgust and horror. I walk hesitantly over the boulders, avoiding every dark place for fear of treading on a serpent. The sun shines weakly out of a gray and distant sky; and all the leaves are shriveled. A marionette with a broken head lies before me amidst the stones-a few steps further, a small apron and then behind the bush, the body of a small girl-covered with terrible wounds-smeared with blood. One foot is clad with a stocking and shoe, the other is naked and gorily crushed-the head-where is the head? The head is a mash of blood with hair and whitish pieces of bone, surrounded by stones smeared with brain and blood. My gaze is captivated by this awful sight-a shrouded figure, like that of a woman, is standing calmly next to the child; her face is covered by an impenetrable veil. She asks me:

Soul: "What then do you say?"
I: "What should I say? This is beyond words."
Soul: "Do you understand this?"
I: "I refuse to understand such things. I can’t speak about them without becoming enraged."
Soul: "Why become enraged? You might as well rage every day of your life, for these and similar things occur every day."
I: "But most of the time we don’t see them."
Soul: "So knowing that they happen is not enough to enrage you?"
I: "If I merely have knowledge of something, it’s easier and simpler. The horror is less real if all I have is knowledge."
Soul: "Step nearer and you will see that the body of the child has been cut open; take out the liver."
I: "I will not touch this corpse. If someone witnessed this, they would think that I’m the murderer."
Soul: "You are cowardly; take out the liver."
I: "Why should I do this? This is absurd."
Soul: "I want you to remove the liver. You must do it."
I: "Who are you to give me such an order?"
Soul: "I am the soul of this child. You must do this for my sake."
I: "I don’t understand, but I’ll believe you and do this horrific and absurd deed." I reach into the child’s visceral cavity-it is still warm-the liver is still firmly attached - I take my knife and cut it free of the ligaments. Then I take it out and hold it with bloody hands toward the figure.
Soul: "I thank you."
I: "What should I do?"
Soul: "You know what the liver means, and you ought to perform the healing act with it."
I: "What is to be done?"
Soul: "Take a piece of the liver, in place of the whole, and eat it."
I: "What are you demanding? This is absolute madness. This is desecration, necrophilia. You make me a guilty party to this most hideous of all crimes."
Soul: "You have devised the most horrible torment for the murderer, which. could atone for his act. There is only one atonement: abase yourself and eat."

I: "I cannot- I refuse- I cannot participate in this horrible guilt."
Soul: "You share in this guilt."
I: "I? Share in this guilt?"
Soul: "You are a man, and a man has committed this deed."
I: "Yes, I am a man-I curse whoever did this for being a man, and I curse myself for being a man."
Soul: "So, take part in his act, abase yourself and eat. I need atonement."
I: "So shall it be for your sake, as you are the soul of this child."
I kneel down on the stone, cut off a piece of the liver and put it in my mouth. My gorge rises-tears burst from my eyes cold sweat covers my brow-a dull sweet taste of blood-I swallow with desperate efforts-it is impossible-once again and once again- I almost faint-it is done. The horror has been accomplished.
Soul: "I thank you."
She throws her veil back-a beautiful maiden with ginger hair.
Soul: "Do you recognize me?"
I: "How strangely familiar you are! Who are you?"
Soul: "I am your soul."
Surely this red one was the devil, but my devil. That is, he was my joy, the joy of the serious person, who keeps watch alone on the high tower-his red-colored, red-scented, warm bright red joy. Not the secret joy in his thoughts and in his looking, but that strange joy of the world that comes unsuspected like a warm southerly wind with swelling fragrant blossoms and the ease of living. You know it from your poets, this seriousness, when they expectantly look toward what happens in the depths, sought out first of all by the devil because of their spring-like joy. It picks up men like a wave and drives them forth. Whoever tastes this joy forgets himself And there is nothing sweeter than forgetting oneself And not a few have forgotten what they are. But even more have taken root so firmly that not even the rosy wave is able to uproot them. They are petrified and too heavy, while the others are too light.
I earnestly confronted my devil and behaved with him as with a real person. This I learned in the Mysterium: to take seriously every unknown wanderer who personally inhabits the inner world, since they are real because they are effectual. It does not help that we say in the spirit of this time: there is no devil. There was one with me. This took place in me. I did with him what I could. I could speak with him. A religious conversation is inevitable with the devil, since he demands it, if one does not want to surrender to him unconditionally. Because religion is precisely what the devil and I cannot agree about. I must have it out with him, as I cannot expect that he as an independent personality would accept my standpoint without further ado. I would be fleeing if I did not try to come to an understanding with him. If ever you have the rare opportunity to speak with the devil, then do not forget to confront him in all seriousness. He is your devil after all. The devil as the adversary is your own other standpoint; he tempts you and sets a stone in your path where you least want it.

Taking the devil seriously does not mean going over to his side, or else one becomes the devil. Rather it means coming to an understanding. Thereby you accept your other standpoint. With that the devil fundamentally loses ground, and so do you. And that may be well and good.
Although the devil very much abhors religion for its particular solemnity and candor, it has become apparent, however, that it is precisely through religion that the devil can be brought to an understanding. What I said about dancing struck him because I spoke about something that belonged in his own domain. He fails to take seriously only what concerns others because that is the peculiarity of all devils. In such a manner, I arrive at his seriousness, and with this we reach common / ground where understanding is possible. The devil is convinced that dancing is neither lust nor madness, but an expression of joy, which is something proper to neither one nor the other. In this I agree with the devil. Therefore he humanizes himself before my eyes. But I turn green like a tree in spring. Carl Jung; Red Book.
How beautiful it is here! The reddish color of the stones is wonderful; they reflect the glow of a hundred thousand past suns these small grains of sand have rolled in fabulous primordial oceans, over them swam primordial monsters with forms never beheld before. Where were you, man, in those days? On this warm sand lay your childish primordial animal ancestors, like children snuggling up to their mother. Oh, mother stone, I love you, I lie snuggled up against your warm body, your late child. Blessed be you, ancient mother. Yours is my heart and all glory and power-Amen. Carl Jung; Red Book.

I know that you would like to hear the tidings of he whom things have not lived, but who lived and fulfilled himself. For you are a son of the earth, sucked dry by the suckling earth, that can suck nothing out of itself, but suckles only from the sun. Therefore you would like to have tidings of the son of the sun, which shines and does not suckle. / You would like to hear of the son of God, who shone and gave, who begot, and to whom life was born again, as the earth bears the sun green and colorful children.
You would like to hear of him, the radiating savior, who as a son of the sun cut through the webs of the earth, who sundered the magic threads and released those in bondage, who owned himself and was no one's servant, who sucked no one dry, and whose treasure no one exhausted. You would like to hear of him who was not darkened by the shadow of earth, but illuminated it, who saw the thoughts of all, and whose thoughts no one guessed, who possessed in himself the meaning of all things, and whose meaning no thing could express. Carl Jung; Red Book.

The solitary went into the desert to find himself But he did not want to find himself but rather the manifold meaning of holy scripture. You can suck the immensity of the small and the great into yourself and you will become emptier and emptier, since immense fullness and immense emptiness are one and the same. He wanted to find what he needed in the outer. But you find manifold meaning only in yourself not in things, since the manifoldness of meaning is not something that is given at the same time, but is a succession of meanings. The meanings that follow one another do not lie in things, but lie in you, who are . subject to many changes, insofar as you take part in life. Things also change, but you do not notice this if you do not change. But if you change, the countenance of the world alters. The manifold sense of things is your manifold sense. It is useless to fathom it in things. And this probably explains why the solitary went into the desert, and fathomed the thing but not himself And therefore what happened to every desirous solitary also happened to him: the devil came to him with smooth tongue and clear reasoning and knew the right word at the right moment. He lured him to his desire. I had to appear to him as the devil, since I had accepted my darkness. I ate the earth and I drank the sun, and I became a greening tree that stands alone and grows. Carl Jung; Red Book.

What about masculinity? Do you know how much femininity man lacks for completeness Do you know how much masculinity woman lacks for completeness You seek the feminine in women and the masculine in men. And thus there are always only men and women. But where are people You, man, should not seek the feminine in women, but seek and recognize it in yourself as you possess it from the beginning. It pleases you, however, to play at manliness, because it travels on a well-worn track. You, woman, should not seek the masculine in men, but assume the masculine in yourself since you possess it from the beginning. But it amuses you and is easy to play at femininity; consequently man despises you because he despises his femininity. But humankind is masculine and feminine, not just man or woman. You can hardly say of your soul what sex it is. But if you pay close attention, you will see that the most masculine man has a feminine soul, and the most feminine woman has a masculine soul. The more manly you are, the more remote from you is what woman really is, since the feminine in yourself is alien and contemptuous. Carl Jung; Red Book.

If you take a piece of joy from the devil and set off on adventures with it, you accept your pleasure. But pleasure immediately attracts everything you desire, and then you must decide whether your pleasure spoils or enhances you. If you are of the devil, you will grope in blind desire after the manifold, and it will lead you astray. But if you remain with yourself as a man who is himself and not of the devil, then you will remember your humanity. You will not behave toward women per se as a man, but as a human being, that is to say; as if you were of the same sex as her. You will recall your femininity. It may seem to you then as if you were unmanly; stupid, and feminine so to speak. But you must accept the ridiculous, otherwise you will suffer distress, and there will come a time, when you are least observant, when it will suddenly round on you and make you ridiculous. It is bitter for the most masculine man to accept his femininity; since it appears ridiculous to him, powerless and tawdry.
Yes, it seems as if you have lost all virtue, as if you have fallen into debasement. It seems the same way to the woman who accepts her masculinity. Yes, it seems to you like enslavement. You are a slave of what you need in your soul. The most masculine man needs women, and he is consequently their slave. Become a woman yourself; and you will be saved from slavery to woman. You are abandoned without mercy to woman so long as you cannot fend off mockery with all your masculinity. It is good for you once to put on women's clothes: people will laugh at you, but through becoming a woman you attain freedom from women and their tyranny. The acceptance of femininity leads to completion. The same is valid for the woman who accepts her masculinity. The feminine in men is bound up with evil. I find it on the way of desire. The masculine in the woman is bound up with evil. Therefore people hate to accept their own other. But if you accept it, that which is connected with the perfection of men comes to pass: namely; that when you become the one who is mocked, the white bird of the soul comes flying. It was far away; but your humiliation attracted it. The mystery draws near to you, and things happen around you like. miracles. A gold luster shines, since the sun has risen from its grave. As a man you have no soul, since it is in the woman; as a woman you have no soul, since it is in the man. But if you become a human being, then your soul comes to you. Carl Jung; Red Book.

Therefore, because I rise above gendered masculinity and yet do not exceed the human, the feminine that is contemptible to me transforms itself into a meaningful being. This is the most difficult thing-to be beyond the gendered and yet remain within the human. If you rise above the gendered with the help of a general rule, you become the same as that rule and overreach the human. Therefore you become dry; hard, and inhuman. Carl Jung; Red Book.

A thinker should fear Salome, since she wants his head, especially if he is a holy man. A thinker cannot be a holy person, otherwise he loses his head. It does not help to hide oneself in thought. There the solidification overtakes you. You must turn back to motherly forethought to obtain renewal. But forethought leads to Salome.
Because I was a thinker and caught sight of the hostile principle of pleasure from forethinking, it appeared to me as Salome. If I had been one who felt, and had groped my way toward forethinking, then it would have appeared to me as a serpent-encoiled daimon, if I had actually seen it. But I would have been blind. Therefore I would have felt only slippery, dead, dangerous, allegedly overcome, insipid, and mawkish things, and I would have pulled back with the same shudder I felt in turning from Salome.
The thinker's passions are bad, therefore he has no pleasure. The thoughts of one who feels are bad, therefore he has no thoughts. He who prefers to think than to feel, leaves his feeling to rot ,in darkness. It does not grow ripe, but in moldiness produces sick tendrils that do not reach the light. He who prefers to feel than to think leaves his thinking in darkness, where it spins its nets in gloomy places, desolate webs in which mosquitos and gnats become enmeshed. The thinker feels the disgust of feeling since the feeling in him is mainly disgusting. The one who feels thinks the disgust of thinking, since the thinking in him is mainly disgusting. So the serpent lies between the thinker and the one who feels. They are each other's poison and healing. Carl Jung; Red Book

Everything to come was already in images: to find their soul, the ancients went into the desert. This is an image. The ancients lived their symbols, since the world had not yet become real for them. Thus they went into the solitude of the desert to teach us that the place of the soul is a lonely desert. There they found the abundance of visions, the fruits of the desert, the wondrous flowers of the soul. Think diligently about the images that the ancients have left behind. They show the way of what is to come. look back at the collapse of empires, of growth and death, of the desert and monasteries, they are the images of what is to come. Everything has been foretold. But who knows how to interpret it?
When you say that the place of the soul is not, then it is not. But if you say that it is, then it is. Notice what the ancients said in images: the word is a creative act. The ancients said: in the beginning was the Word. Consider this and think upon it. Carl Jung; Red Book.

When the desert begins to bloom, it brings forth strange plants. You will consider yourself mad, and in a certain sense you will in fact be mad. To the extent that the Christianity of this time lacks madness, it lacks divine life. Take note of what the ancients taught us in images: madness is divine. But because the ancients lived this image concretely in events, it became a deception for us, since we became masters of the reality of the world. It is unquestionable: if you enter into the world of the soul, you are like a madman, and a doctor would consider you to be sick. What I say here can be seen as sickness, but no one can see it as sickness more than I do. Carl Jung; Red Book.

Love, soul, and God are beautiful and terrible. The ancients brought over some of the beauty of God into this world, and this world became so beautiful that it appeared to the spirit of the time to be fulfillment, and better than the bosom of the Godhead. Carl Jung; Red Book.

Depths and surface should mix so that new life can develop. Yet the new life does not develop outside of us, but within us. What happens outside us in these days is the image that the peoples live in events, to bequeath this image immemorially to far-off times so that they might learn from it for their own way; just as we learned from the images that the ancients had lived before us in events.
Life does not come from events, but from us. Everything that happens outside has already been. Carl Jung; Red Book.

After death on the cross Christ went into the underworld and became Hell. So he took on the form of the Antichrist, the dragon. The image of the Antichrist, which has come down to us from the ancients, announces the new God, whose coming the ancients had foreseen. Carl Jung; Red Book.

How else could Christ have saved his Antichrist? Read the unknown books of the ancients, and you will learn much from them. Notice that Christ did not remain in Hell, but rose to the heights in the beyond. Carl Jung; Red Book.
And thus the image of the ancients is fulfilled: I pursued my soul to kill the child in it. For I am also the worst enemy of my God. But I also recognized that my enmity is decided upon in the God. He is mockery and hate and anger, since this is also a way of life. Carl Jung; Red Book.

The “going out” of the souls from the Primordial Man can be understood as the projection of a psychic integration process: the saving wholeness of the inner man-i.e., the “Messiah” – cannot come about until all parts of the psyche have been made conscious. Carl Jung; Mysterium Coniunctionis; Page 414.

Just as Christ was crucified between the two thieves, our lowest lies on either side of our way. And just as one thief went to Hell and the other rose up to Heaven, the lowest in us will be sundered in two halves on the day of our judgment. The one is destined for damnation and death, and the other will rise up. But it will take a long time until you see what is destined for death and what is destined for life, since the lowest in you is still unseparated and one, and in a deep sleep. Carl Jung; Red Book Our psychology is a science . . . Plenty of unqualified persons are sure to push their way in and commit the greatest follies . . . Our aim is simply and solely scientific knowledge . . . If religion and morality are blown to pieces in the process, so much the worse for them . . . Knowledge is a force of nature that goes its way irresistibly from inner necessity. - Essay Included in CW 18: P. 314
Give no guarantee of objective knowledge. What we do not understand in ourselves we do not understand in the other person either. So there is plenty to ensure that his image will be for the most part subjective. As we know, even an intimate friendship is no guarantee of objective knowledge. - "General Aspects of Dreams Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.508

Future generations dare not find themselves okay unless governed over by the bureaucracy, a stubborn church, or the "good" state
It is the duty of one who goes his own way to inform society of what he finds on his voyage of discovery, be it cooling water for the thirsty or the sandy wastes of unfruitful error. The one helps, the other warns. Not the criticism of individual contemporaries will decide the truth or falsity of his discoveries, but future generations. There are things that are not yet true today, perhaps we dare not find them true, but tomorrow they may be. So every man whose fate it is to go his individual way must proceed with hopefulness and watchfulness, ever conscious of his loneliness and its dangers. - "On the Psychology of the Unconscious" (1912). In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology P. 201

Nobody can fall so low unless he has a great depth. If such a thing can happen to a man, it challenges his best and highest on the other side; that is to say, this depth corresponds to a potential height, and the blackest darkness to a hidden light. - "On the Re-education of the Germans" (1946). In Basler Nachrichten, Nr. 486, November 16.
It is difficult to gauge the spirit of one's own time; but, if we observe the trend of art, of style, and of public taste, and see what people read and write, what sort of societies they found, what "questions" are the order of the day, what the Philistines fight against, we shall find that in the long catalogue of our present social questions by no means the last is the so-called "sexual question." This is discussed by men and women who challenge the existing sexual morality and who seek to throw off the burden of moral guilt which past centuries have heaped upon Eros. One cannot simply deny the existence of these endeavors nor condemn then as indefensible; they exist, and probably have adequate grounds for their existence. It is more interesting and more useful to examine carefully the underlying causes of these contemporary movements than to join in the lamentations of the professional mourners of morality who prophesy the moral downfall of humanity. - "New Paths in Psychology" (1912). CW 7: Two Essays in Analytical Psychology. P. 427

If we try to extract the common and essential factors from the almost inexhaustible variety of individual problems found in the period of youth, we meet in all cases with one particular feature: a more or less patent clinging to the childhood level of consciousness, a resistance to the fateful forces in and around us which would involve us in the world. Something in us wishes to remain a child, to be unconscious or, at most, conscious only of the ego; to reject everything strange, or else subject it to our will; to do nothing, or else indulge our own craving for pleasure or power. In all this there is something of the inertia of matter; it is a persistence in the previous state whose range of consciousness is smaller, narrower, and more egoistic than that of the dualistic phase. For here the individual is faced with the necessity of recognising and accepting what is different and strange as a part of his own life, as a kind of "also-I." - "The Stages of Life" (1930). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P. 764

When we say that it is egoistic or "morbid" to be preoccupied with oneself; one's own company is the worst, "it makes you melancholy" - such are the glowing testimonials accorded to our human make-up. They are evidently deeply ingrained in our Western minds. Whoever thinks in this way has obviously never asked himself what possible pleasure other people could find in the company of such a miserable coward. - "The Relations Between the Ego and the Unconscious" (1953) In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology. P.323

Just as the "psychic infra-red," the biological instinctual mind, gradually passes over into the physiology of the organism and thus merges with its chemical and physical conditions, so the "psychic ultra-violet," the archetype, describes a field which exhibits none of the peculiarities of the physiological and yet, in the last analysis, can no longer be regarded as psychic. - "On the Nature of the Psyche" (1947). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.420

The small world of the child, the family milieu, is the model for the big world. The more intensely the family sets its stamp on the child, the more he will be emotionally inclined, as an adult, to see in the great world his former small world. Of course this must not be taken as a conscious intellectual process. On the contrary, the patient feels and sees the difference between now and then, and tries as well as he can to adapt himself. Perhaps he will even believe himself perfectly adapted, since he may be able to grasp the situation intellectually, but that does not prevent his emotions from lagging far behind his intellectual insight. - "The Theory of Psychoanalysis" (1913). In CW 4: Freud and Psychoanalysis. P. 312.

It often helps to discriminate by much sound, common sense or side with the winners over you at the time, as long as you lack experience and much skill The tendency to separate the opposites as much as possible and to strive for singleness of meaning is absolutely necessary for clarity of consciousness, since discrimination is of its essence. But when the separation is carried so far that the complementary opposite is lost sight of, and the blackness of the whiteness, the evil of the good, the depth of the heights, and so on, is no longer seen, the result is one-sidedness, which is then compensated from the unconscious without our help. - Mysterium Coniunctionis (1955). CW 14: 470

Reason can give a man equilibrium only if his reason is already an equilibrating organ. But for how many individuals and at what periods in history has it been that? As a rule, a man needs the opposite of his actual situation to force him to find his place in the middle. For the sake of mere reason he can never forgo life's riches and the sensuous appeal of the immediate situation. Against the power and delight of the temporal he must set the joy of the eternal, and against the passion of the sensual the ecstasy of the spiritual. The undeniable reality of the one must be matched by the compelling power of the other. - Psychological Types (1921). CW 6. P.386

The hero's main feat is to overcome the monster of darkness: it is the long-hoped-for and expected triumph of consciousness over the unconscious. The coming of consciousness was probably the most tremendous experience of primeval times, for with it a world came into being whose existence no one had suspected before. "And God said, 'Let there be light"' is the projection of that immemorial experience of the separation of consciousness from the unconscious. - "The Psychology of the Child Archetype" (1940). In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P.284

It is hard to believe that this teeming world is too poor to provide an object for human love - it offers boundless opportunities to everyone. It is rather the inability to love which robs a person of these opportunities. The world is empty only to him who does not know how to direct his libido towards things and people, and to render them alive and beautiful. What compels us to create a substitute from within ourselves is not an external lack, but our own inability to include anything outside ourselves in our love. Certainly the difficulties and adversities of the struggle for existence may oppress us, yet even the worst conditions need not hinder love; on the contrary, they often spur us on to greater efforts. - Symbols of Transformation (1952). CW 5: P.253

Myths are miracle tales . . . In the everyday world of consciousness such things hardly exist; that is to say, until 1933. Only lunatics would have been found in possession of living fragments of mythology. After this date the world of heroes and monsters spread like a devastating fire over whole nations, proving that the strange world of myth had suffered no loss of vitality during the centuries of reason and enlightenment. If metaphysical ideas no longer have . . . a fascinating effect . . ., this is certainly . . . simply and solely (due) to the fact that (some symbols) express what is now welling up from the unconscious as the end-result of the development of Christian consciousness through the centuries . . . a false spirit of arrogance, hysteria, . . ., criminal amorality, and . . . a purveyor of shoddy spiritual goods, . . . philosophical stutterings, and Utopian humbug . . . That is what the post-Christian spirit looks like. - Aion (1951) CW 9, Part II: P.66

The young British man can have only an incomplete understanding of himself and others . . . the first step in a very long climb.The young person of marriageable age does, of course, possess an ego-consciousness (girls more than men, as a rule), but, since he has only recently emerged from the mists of original unconsciousness, he is certain to have wide areas which still lie in the shadow and which preclude to that extent the formation of psychological relationship. This means, in practice, that the young man (or woman) can have only an incomplete understanding of himself and others, and is therefore imperfectly informed as to his, and their, motives. As a rule the motives he acts from are largely unconscious. Subjectively, of course, he thinks himself very conscious and knowing, for we constantly overestimate the existing content of consciousness, and it is a great and surprising discovery when we find that what we had supposed to be the final peak is nothing but the first step in a very long climb. - "Marriage as a Psychological Relationship" (1925). In CW 17: The Development of Personality. P.327

Widely accepted ideas are never the personal property of their so-called author; on the contrary, he is the bondservant of his ideas. Impressive ideas which are hailed as truths have something peculiar about them. AlthoAlthough they come into being at a definite time, they are and have always been timeless; they arise from that realm of creative psychic life out of which the ephemeral mind of the single human being grows like a plant that blossoms, bears fruit and seed, and then withers and dies. Ideas spring from something greater than the personal human being. Man does not make his ideas; we could say that man’s ideas make him. - "Freud and Jung: Contrasts" (1929) In CW 4: Freud and Psychoanalysis. P.769

The healthy man does not torture others - generally it is the tortured who turn into torturers. - "Return to the Simple Life" In CW 18: P.56

We do not devalue statements that originally were intended to be metaphysical when we demonstrate their psychic nature; on the contrary, we confirm their factual character. But, by treating them as psychic phenomena, we remove them from the inaccessible realm of metaphysics, about which nothing verifiable can be said, and this disposes of the impossible question as to whether they are "true" or not. We take our stand simply and solely on the facts, recognizing that the archetypal structure of the unconscious will produce, over and over again and irrespective of tradition, those figures which reappear in the history of all epochs and all peoples, and will endow them with the same significance and numinosity that have been theirs from the beginning. - Mysterium Coniuntionis (1955). CW 14: P.558

The world exists for us only in so far as it is consciously reflected by a mind . . . Thus the mind is endowed with the dignity of a cosmic principle, which . . . gives it a position co-equal with the principle of physical being. The carrier of this consciousness is the individual, who . . . preformed by it and nourished by the gradual awakening of consciousness during childhood. If therefore the mind is of overriding empirical importance, so also is the individual, who is the only immediate manifestation of the mind. - "The Undiscovered Self" (1957). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P. 528

Merely living for the present does not make us modern, but being greatly aware inside the present, The man we call modern, the man who is aware of the immediate present, is by no means the average man. He is rather the man who stands upon a peak, or at the very edge of the world, the abyss of the future before him, above him the heavens, and below him the whole of mankind with a history that disappears in primeval mists. The modern man - or, let us say again, the man of the immediate present-is rarely met with, for he must be conscious to a superlative degree. Since to be wholly of the present means to be fully conscious of one’s existence as a man, it requires the most intensive and extensive consciousness, with a minimum of unconsciousness. It must be clearly understood that the mere fact of living in the present does not make a man modern, for in that case everyone at present alive would be so. He alone is modern who is fully conscious of the present. - "The Spiritual Problem of Modern Man" (1928) In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P. 149

Since the aims of the second half of life are different from those of the first, to linger too long in the youthful attitude produces a division of the will. Consciousness still presses forward in obedience, as it were, to its own inertia, but the unconscious lags behind, because the strength and inner resolve needed for further expansion have been sapped. This disunity with oneself begets discontent, and since one is not conscious of the real state of things one generally projects the reasons for it upon one’s partner. A critical atmosphere thus develops, the necessary prelude to conscious realisation. - "Marriage as a Psychological Relationship" (1925). In CW 17: The Development of the Personality. P. 331

Faking can be understood as outlets of unconscious psychic forces
Enlightenment may have destroyed the spirits of nature, but not the psychic factors that correspond to them, such as . . . lack of criticism, . . . propensity to superstition and prejudice - in short, all those qualities which make possession possible. . . . Psychic conditions which breed demons are as actively at work as ever. The demons have not really disappeared but have merely taken on another form: they have become unconscious psychic forces. - "After the Catastrophe" (1945). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P.431

Be prepared to accept the view that spirit is not absolute, but something relative that needs completing and perfecting through life. - "Spirit and Life" (1926). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P. 645

The persona, the anima, and the little game of illusion that gives meaning to many lives due to getting incapacitated somehow the persona, the ideal picture of a man as he should be, is inwardly compensated by feminine weakness, and as the individual outwardly plays the strong man, so he becomes inwardly a woman, i.e., the anima, for it is the anima that reacts to the persona. But because the inner world is dark and invisible to the extroverted consciousness, and because a man is all the less capable of conceiving his weaknesses the more he is identified with the persona, the persona's counterpart, the anima, remains completely in the dark and is at once projected, so that our hero comes under the heel of his wife's slipper. If this results in a considerable increase of her power, she will acquit herself none too well. She becomes inferior, thus providing her husband with the welcome proof that it is not he, the hero, who is inferior in private, but his wife. In return the wife can cherish the illusion, so attractive to many, that at least she has married a hero, unperturbed by her own uselessness. This little game of illusion is often taken to be the whole meaning of life. - Two Essays on Analytical Psychology, CW 7 (1957). "The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious" P.309

The psychic life of civilized man . . . is full of problems; we cannot even think of it except in terms of problems. Our psychic processes are made up to a large extent of reflections, doubts, experiments, all of which are almost completely foreign to the unconscious, instinctive mind of primitive man. It is the growth of consciousness which we must thank for the existence of problems; they are the Danaan gift of civilization. - "The Stages of Life" (1930). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P. 750

There is a risk the customary treatment evolved its sets of tact on top of old hypocrisy Nowadays we have no real sexual morality . . . We are not yet far enough advanced to distinguish between moral and immoral behaviour in the realm of free sexual activity. This is clearly expressed in the customary treatment . . . of unmarried mothers. All the repulsive hypocrisy, the . . . prostitution and . . . venereal diseases, we owe to the barbarous . . . inability to develop a finer moral sense for the enormous psychological differences that exist in the domain of free sexual activity. - In CW 4: Freud and Psychoanalysis. P.666

Up till now, too much was accounted for in terms of spirit. . . . We would say: most likely we are now making exactly the same mistake on the other side. We delude ourselves with the thought that we know much more about matter than about a "metaphysical" mind or spirit, and so we overestimate material causation and believe that it alone affords us a true explanation of life. But matter is just as inscrutable as mind. As to the ultimate things we can know nothing. - "Basic Postulates of Analytical Psychology" (1931). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.657

The conflict between nature and spirit is itself a reflection of the paradox of psychic life. This reveals a physical and a spiritual aspect which appear a contradiction because, ultimately, we do not understand the nature of psychic life itself. Whenever, with our human understanding, we want to make a statement about something which in the last analysis we have not grasped and cannot grasp, then we must, if we are honest, be willing to contradict ourselves, we must pull this something into its antithetical parts in order to be able to deal with it at all. The conflict between the physical and the spiritual aspects only shows that psychic life is in the last analysis an incomprehensible "something." - "Basic Postulates of Analytical Psychology" (1931). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.680

Modern man . . . is sorely enough beset by his own bad conscience, and wants rather to know how he is to reconcile himself with his own nature - how he is to love the enemy in his own heart and call the wolf his brother. - "Psychotherapists or the Clergy" (1932). In CW 11: Psychology and Religion: West and East. P.523
It is undoubtedly true that instinctually conflicts with our moral views most frequently and most conspicuously in the realm of sex. The conflict between infantile instinctually and ethics can never be avoided. It is, it seems to me, the sine qua non of psychic energy. - "On Psychic Energy" (1928). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of Psyche. P.105

Not only in the psychic man is there something unknown, but also in the physical. We should be able to include this unknown quantity in a total picture of man, but we cannot. Man himself is partly empirical, partly transcendental . . . Also, we do not know whether what we on the empirical plane regard as physical may not, in the Unknown beyond our experience, be identical with what on this side of the border we distinguish from the physical as psychic. - Mysterium Coniunctionis (1955). CW 14: P.765

Anyone who has lost the historical symbols and cannot be satisfied with substitutes is certainly in a very difficult position today: before him there yawns the void, and he turns away from it in horror. What is worse, the vacuum gets filled with absurd political and social ideas, which one and all are distinguished by their spiritual bleakness. But if he cannot get along with these pedantic dogmatisms, he sees himself forced to be serious for once with his alleged trust in God, though it usually turns out that his fear of things going wrong if he did so is even more persuasive. - "Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious" (1935). In CW 9, Part I: Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious. P.28

Love . . . is of fundamental importance in human life and . . . of far greater significance than the individual suspects. - "On the Psychology of the Unconscious" (1912) In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology. P. 14. P.218

Take for comparison the daily course of the sun-but a sun that is endowed with human feeling and man’s limited consciousness. In the morning it rises from the nocturnal sea of unconsciousness and looks upon the wide, bright world which lies before it in an expanse that steadily widens the higher it climbs in the firmament. In this extension of its field of action caused by its own rising, the sun will discover its significance; it will see the attainment of the greatest possible height, and the widest possible dissemination of its blessings, as its goal. In this conviction the sun pursues its course to the unforeseen zenith-unforeseen, because its career is unique and individual, and the culminating point could not be calculated in advance. At the stroke of noon the descent begins. And the descent means the reversal of all the ideals and values that were cherished in the morning. - "The Stages of Life" (1930). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P. 778

"The need for mythic statement is satisfied when we frame a view of the world which adequately explains the meaning of human existence in the cosmos, a view which springs from our psychic wholeness. Jung, C.G. (1961). Memories, Dreams, Reflections. New York: Vintage Books. p. 340.

The danger that faces us today is that the whole of reality will be replaced by words. This accounts for that terrible lack of instinct in modern man, particularly the city-dweller. He lacks all contact with life and the breath of nature. He knows a rabbit or a cow only from the illustrated paper, the dictionary, or the movies, and thinks he knows what it is really like-and is then amazed that cowsheds "smell," because the dictionary didn’t say so. - "Good and Evil in Analytical Psychology" (1959). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P.882

Our personal psychology is just a thin skin, a ripple on the ocean of collective psychology. The powerful factor, the factor which changes our whole life, which changes the surface of our known world, which makes history, is collective psychology, and collective psychology moves according to laws entirely different from those of our consciousness. The archetypes are the great decisive forces, they bring about the real events, and not our personal reasoning and practical intellect . . . The archetypal images decide the fate of man. - Analytical Psychology: Its Theory and Practice: The Tavistock Lectures (1935). In CW 18: (retitled) "The Tavistock Lectures" P. 183

Becoming conscious spells being more alone inside oneself - more individuated, or isolated, possibly estranged. Any of these things can happen, in principle Everyone who becomes conscious of even a fraction of his unconscious gets outside his own time and social stratum into a kind of solitude. - Mysterium Coniunctionis (1955) CW 14: P 258

From the road to hell: Who promises everything also promises too much. (The road to hell is paved with good intentions too)

The man who promises everything is sure to fulfill nothing, and everyone who promises too much is in danger of using evil means in order to carry out his promises, and is already on the road to perdition. - "After the Catastrophe" (1945). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P. 413.

Normal sex life, as a shared experience with apparently similar aims, further strengthens the feeling of unity and identity. This state is described as one of complete harmony, and is extolled as a great happiness ("one heart and one soul")-not without good reason, since the return to that original condition of unconscious oneness is like a return to childhood. Hence the childish gestures of all lovers. Even more is it a return to the mother's womb, into the teeming depths of an as yet unconscious creativity. It is, in truth, a genuine and incontestable experience of the Divine, whose transcendent force obliterates and consumes everything individual; a real communion with life and the impersonal power of fate. - "Marriage as a Psychological Relationship" (1925). In CW 17: The Development of Personality. P.330

The great problems of life, including of course sex, are always related to the primordial images of the collective unconscious. These images are balancing and compensating factors that correspond to the problems which life confronts us with in reality. This is no matter for astonishment, since these images are deposits of thousands of years of experience of the struggle for existence and for adaptation. Every great experience in life, every profound conflict, evokes the accumulated treasure of these images and brings about their inner constellation. But they become accessible to consciousness only when the individual possesses so much self-awareness and power of understanding that he also reflects on what he experiences instead of just living it blindly. In the latter event he actually lives the myth and the symbol without knowing it. - Psychological Types (1921). CW 6: P. 373

The world comes into being when man discovers it. But he only discovers it when he sacrifices his containment in the primal mother, the original state of unconsciousness. - Symbols of Transformation. (1952). CW 5: P.652

Every individual needs revolution, inner division, overthrow of the existing order, and renewal, but not by forcing these things upon his neighbours under the hypocritical cloak of Christian love or the sense of social responsibility or any of the other beautiful euphemisms for unconscious urges to personal power. Individual self-reflection, return of the individual to the ground of human nature, to his own deepest being with its individual and social destiny here is the beginning of a cure for that blindness which reigns at the present hour. - "On the Psychology of the Unconscious" (1912). In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology P. 5

All that is not encompassed by our knowledge, so that we are not in a position to make any statements about its total nature. Microphysics is feeling its way into the unknown side of matter, just as complex psychology is pushing forward into the unknown side of the mind. Both lines of investigation have yielded findings which can be conceived only by means of antinomies, and both have developed concepts which display remarkable analogies. If this trend should become more pronounced in the future, the hypothesis of the unity of their subject-matters would gain in probability. Of course there is little or no hope that the unitary Being can ever be conceived, since our powers of thought and language permit only of antinomian statements. But this much we do know beyond all doubt, that empirical reality has a transcendental background. - Mysterium Coniunctionis (1955). CW 14: P.768

In my naturally limited experience there are, among people of maturer age, very many for whom the development of individuality is an indispensable requirement. Hence I am privately of the opinion that it is just the mature person who, in our times, has the greatest need of some further education in individual culture after his youthful education in school or university has moulded him on exclusively collective lines and thoroughly imbued him with the collective mentality. - "On Psychic Energy" (1928). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P. 112

Most men and dogs are erotically blind and decisive ones at that Most men are erotically blinded - they commit the unpardonable mistake of confusing Eros with sex. A man thinks he possesses a woman if he has her sexually. He never possesses her less, for to a woman the Eros-relationship is the real and decisive one. For her, marriage is a relationship with sex thrown in as an accompaniment. - "Woman in Europe" (1927). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P.255

Anyone who wants to know the human mind will learn next to nothing from experimental psychology. He would be better advised to put away his scholar’s gown, bid farewell to his study, and wander with human heart through the world. There, in the horrors of prisons, lunatic asylums and hospitals, in drab suburban pubs, in brothels and gambling-hells, in the salons of the elegant, the Stock Exchanges, Socialist meetings, churches, revivalist gatherings and ecstatic sects, through love and hate, through the experience of passion in every form in his own body, he would reap richer stores of knowledge than text-books a foot thick could give him, and he will know how to doctor the sick with real knowledge of the human soul. - "New Paths in Psychology" In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology. P.409

The man who has attained consciousness of the present is solitary. The "modern" man has at all times been so, for every step towards fuller consciousness removes him further from his original, purely animal participation mystique with the herd, from submersion in a common unconsciousness. Every step forward means tearing oneself loose from the maternal womb of unconsciousness in which the mass of men dwells. - "The Spiritual Problems of Modern Man" (1928). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P. 150

To speak of the morning and spring, of the evening and the autumn of life is not mere sentimental jargon. We thus give expression to psychological truths, and even more to physiological facts. - "The Stages of Life" (1930). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P. 780

So far mythologists have always helped themselves out with solar, lunar, meteorological, vegetal, and other ideas of the kind. The fact that myths are first and foremost psychic phenomena that reveal the nature of the soul is something they have absolutely refused to see until now. Primitive man is not much interested in objective explanations of the obvious, but he has an imperative need or rather, his unconscious mind has an irresistible urge-to assimilate all outer sense experiences to inner, psychic events. It is not enough for the primitive to see the sun rise and set; this external observation must at the same time be a psychic happening: the sun in its course must represent the fate of a god or hero who, in the last analysis, dwells nowhere except in the soul of man. All the mythologised processes of nature, such as summer and winter, the phases of the moon, the rainy seasons, and so forth, are in no sense allegories of these objective occurrences; rather they are symbolic expressions of the inner, unconscious drama of the mind which becomes accessible to man’s consciousness by way of projection - that is, mirrored in the events of nature. - "Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious" (1935). In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P.7

There are many people who are only partially conscious. Even among absolutely civilized Europeans there is a disproportionately high number of abnormally unconscious individuals who spend a great part of their lives in an unconscious state. They know what happens to them, but they do not know what they do or say. They cannot judge of the consequences of their actions. These are people who are abnormally unconscious, that is, in a primitive state. What then finally makes them conscious? If they get a slap in the face, then they become conscious; something really happens, and that makes them conscious. They meet with something fatal and then they suddenly realise what they are doing . - From the "Basel Seminar" (1934)

The high ideal of educating the personality is not for children: for what is usually meant by personality - a well-rounded psychic whole that is capable of resistance and abounding in energy - is an adult ideal. It is only in an age like ours, when the individual is unconscious of the problems of adult life, or - what is worse - when he consciously shirks them, that people could wish to foist this ideal on to childhood. - "The Development of the Personality" (1934). In CW 17: The Development of the Personality. P.286

Only a life lived in a certain spirit is worth living. It is a remarkable fact that a life lived entirely from the ego is dull not only for the person himself but for all concerned. - "Spirit and Life" (1926). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P. 645

He who is rooted in the soil endures. Alienation from the unconscious and from its historical conditions spells rootlessness. That is the danger that lies in wait for the conqueror of foreign lands, and for every individual who, through one-sided allegiance to any kind of -ism, loses touch with the dark, maternal, earthy ground of his being. - "Mind and Earth" (1927). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P. 103
The stirring up of conflict is a Lucipherian virtue in the true sense of the word. Conflict engenders fire, the fire of affects and emotions, and like every other fire it has two aspects, that of combustion and that of creating light. On the one hand, emotion is the alchemical fire whose warmth brings everything into existence and whose heat burns all superfluities to ashes (omnes superfluitates comburit). But on the other hand, emotion is the moment when steel meets flint and a spark is struck forth, for emotion is the chief source of consciousness. There is no change from darkness to light or from inertia to movement without emotion. - "Psychological Aspects of the Mother Archetype" (1939). In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P. 179

If we wish to stay on the heights we have reached, we must struggle all the time to consolidate our consciousness and its attitude. But we soon discover that this praiseworthy and apparently unavoidable battle with the years leads to stagnation and desiccation of soul. Our convictions become platitudes ground out on a barrel-organ, our ideals become starchy habits, enthusiasm stiffens into automatic gestures. The source of the water of life seeps away. We ourselves may not notice it, but everybody else does, and that is even more painful. If we should risk a little introspection, coupled perhaps with an energetic attempt to be honest for once with ourselves, we may get a dim idea of all the wants, longings, and fears that have accumulated down there-a repulsive and sinister sight. The mind shies away, but life wants to flow down into the depths. Fate itself seems to preserve us from this, for each of us has a tendency to become an immovable pillar of the past. - Symbols of Transformation (1952). CW 5: P. 553

If there is anything that we wish to change in our children, we should first examine it and see whether it is not something that could better be changed in ourselves. Take our enthusiasm for pedagogics. It may be that the boot is on the other leg. It may be that we misplace the pedagogical need because it would be an uncomfortable reminder that we ourselves are still children in many respects and still need a vast amount of educating. - "The Development of the Personality" (1934). In CW 17: The Development of the Personality. P.287

Emptiness is a great feminine secret. It is something absolutely alien to man; the chasm, the unplumbed depths, the yin. The pitifulness of this vacuous nonentity goes to his heart (I speak here as a man), and one is tempted to say that this constitutes the whole "mystery" of woman. Such a female is fate itself. A man may say what he likes about it; be for it or against it, or both at once; in the end he falls, absurdly happy, into this pit, or, if he does not, he has missed and bungled his only chance of making a man of himself. In the first case one cannot disprove his foolish good luck to him, and in the second one cannot make his misfortune seem plausible. "The Mothers, the Mothers, how eerily it sounds!" - "Psychological Aspects of the Mother Archetype" (1939). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.183
If you want to learn the greatest lesson India can teach you, wrap yourself in the cloak of your moral superiority, go to the Black Pagoda of Konarak, sit down in the shadow of the mighty ruin that is still covered with the most amazing collection of obscenities, read Murray’s cunning old Handbook for India, which tells you how to be properly shocked by this lamentable state of affairs, and how you should go into the temples in the evening, because in the lamplight they look if possible "more (and how beautifully!) wicked"; and then analyse carefully and with the utmost honesty all your reactions, feelings, and thoughts. It will take you quite a while, but in the end, if you have done good work, you will have learned something about yourself, and about the white man in general, which you have probably never heard from anyone else. - "What India Can Teach Us" (1939). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P.1013
To find out what is truly individual in ourselves, profound reflection is needed; and suddenly we realize how uncommonly difficult the discovery of individuality in fact is. - "The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious" (1928). In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology. P. 242

The psychology of the individual can never be exhaustively explained from himself alone: a clear recognition is needed of the way it is also conditioned by historical and environmental circumstances. His individual psychology is not merely a physiological, biological, or personal problem; it is also a contemporary problem. - Psychological Types (1921). CW 6: P. 717

Every science is a function of the mind, and all knowledge is rooted in it. The mind is the greatest of all cosmic wonders. - "On the Nature of the Psyche" (1947). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.357

A person must pay dearly for the divine gift of creative fire. It is as though each of us was born with a limited store of energy. In the artist, the strongest force in his make-up, that is, his creativeness, will seize and all but monopolize this energy, leaving so little over that nothing of value can come of it. The creative impulse can drain him of his humanity to such a degree that the personal ego can exist only on a primitive or inferior level and is driven to develop all sorts of defects-ruthlessness, selfishness ("autoeroticism"), vanity, and other infantile traits. These inferiorities are the only means by which it can maintain its vitality and prevent itself from being wholly depleted. - "Psychology and Literature" (1930). In CW 15: The Spirit in Man, Art and Literature. P. 158

A psychology that treats the mind as an epiphenomenon would better call itself brain-psychology, and remain satisfied with the meager results that such a psycho-physiology can yield. The mind deserves to be taken as a phenomenon in its own right; there are no grounds at all for regarding it as a mere epiphenomenon, dependent though it may be on the functioning of the brain. One would be as little justified in regarding life as an epiphenomenon of the chemistry of carbon compounds. - "On Psychic Energy" (1928). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. pp.10
You always become the thing you fight the most. - "Diagnosing the Dictators." In Hearst's International Cosmopolitan, January 1939 pp.22

The mind is a self-regulating system that maintains its equilibrium just as the body does. Every process that goes too far immediately and inevitably calls forth compensations, and without these there would be neither a normal metabolism nor a normal mind. In this sense we can take the theory of compensation as a basic law of psychic behavior. Too little on one side results in too much on the other. - "The Practical Use of Dream Analysis" (1934). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. P.330

Although biological instinctive processes contribute to the formation of personality, individuality is nevertheless essentially different from collective instincts; indeed, it stands in the most direct opposition to them, just as the individual as a personality is always distinct from the collective. His essence consists precisely in this distinction. Every ego-psychology must necessarily exclude and ignore just the collective element that is bound to a psychology of instinct, since it describes that very process by which the ego becomes differentiated from collective drives. - Psychological Types (1921). CW 6. P.88

We all have a great need to be good ourselves, and occasionally we like to show it by the appropriate actions. If good can come of evil self-interest, then the two sides of human nature have co-operated. But when in a fit of enthusiasm we begin with the good, our deep-rooted selfishness remains in the background, unsatisfied and resentful, only waiting for an opportunity to take its revenge in the most atrocious way. - "Return to the Simple Life" In DU I:3 (May 1941) In CW 18: P. 56

There would appear to be a sort of conscience in mankind which severely punishes everyone who does not somehow and at some time, at whatever cost to his virtuous pride, cease to defend and assert himself, and instead confess himself fallible and human. Until he can do this, an impenetrable wall shuts him off from the vital feeling that he is a man among other men. - "Problems of Modern Psychotherapy" (1929). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. P.132

Western man is held in thrall by the "ten thousand things"; he sees only particulars, he is ego-bound and thing-bound, and unaware of the deep root of all being. Eastern man, on the other hand, experiences the world of particulars, and even his own ego, like a dream; he is rooted essentially in the "Ground," which attracts him so powerfully that his relations with the world are relativized to a degree that is often incomprehensible to us. - Psychology and Alchemy (1944). CW 12: P.8

In the case of psychological suffering, which always isolates the individual from the herd of so-called normal people, it is of the greatest importance to understand that the conflict is not a personal failure only, but at the same time a suffering common to all and a problem with which the whole epoch is burdened. This general point of view lifts the individual out of himself and connects him with humanity. - Analytical Psychology: Its Theory and Practice: The Tavistock Lectures. (1935). In CW 18 (retitled) "The Tavistock Lectures" P.116

Utterly impractical things India can teach us is there to intrude and disturb North Americans The true genius nearly always intrudes and disturbs. He speaks to a temporal world out of a world eternal. He says the wrong things at the right time. Eternal truths are never true at any given moment in history. The process of transformation has to make a halt in order to digest and assimilate the utterly impractical things that the genius has produced from the storehouse of eternity. Yet the genius is the healer of his time, because anything he reveals of eternal truth is healing. - "What India Can Teach Us" (1939). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P. 1004

I know nothing of a "super-reality." Reality contains everything I can know, for everything that acts upon me is real and actual. If it does not act upon me, then I notice nothing and can, therefore, know nothing about it. Hence I can make statements only about real things, but not about things that are unreal, or surreal, or subreal. Unless, of course, it should occur to someone to limit the concept of reality in such a way that the attribute "real" applied only to a particular segment of the world’s reality. This restriction to the so-called material or concrete reality of objects perceived by the senses is a product of a particular way of thinking-the thinking that underlies "sound common sense" and our ordinary use of language. It operates on the celebrated principle "Nihil est in intellectu quod non antea fuerit in sensu," regardless of the fact that there are very many things in the mind which did not derive from the data of the senses. According to this view, everything is "real" which comes, or seems to come, directly or indirectly from the world revealed by the senses. This limited picture of the world is a reflection of the one-sidedness of Western man. - "The Real and the Surreal" (1933). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.745

The Christian West considers man to be wholly dependent upon the grace of God, or at least upon the Church as the exclusive and divinely sanctioned earthly instrument of man’s redemption. The East, however, insists that man is the sole cause of his higher development, for it believes in "self- liberation." - The Tibetan Book of the Great Liberation (1954). Psychological Commentary (written in 1939) by C.G. Jung In CW 11: Psychology and Religion: West and East. P.770

The office I hold is certainly my special activity; but it is also a collective factor that has come into existence historically through the co-operation of many people and whose dignity rests solely on collective approval. When, therefore, I identify myself with my office or title, I behave as though I myself were the whole complex of social factors of which that office consists, or as though I were not only the bearer of the office, but also and at the same time the approval of society. I have made an extraordinary extension of myself and have usurped qualities which are not in me but outside Me. - "The Relations Between the Ego and the Unconscious" (1953) In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology. P.227

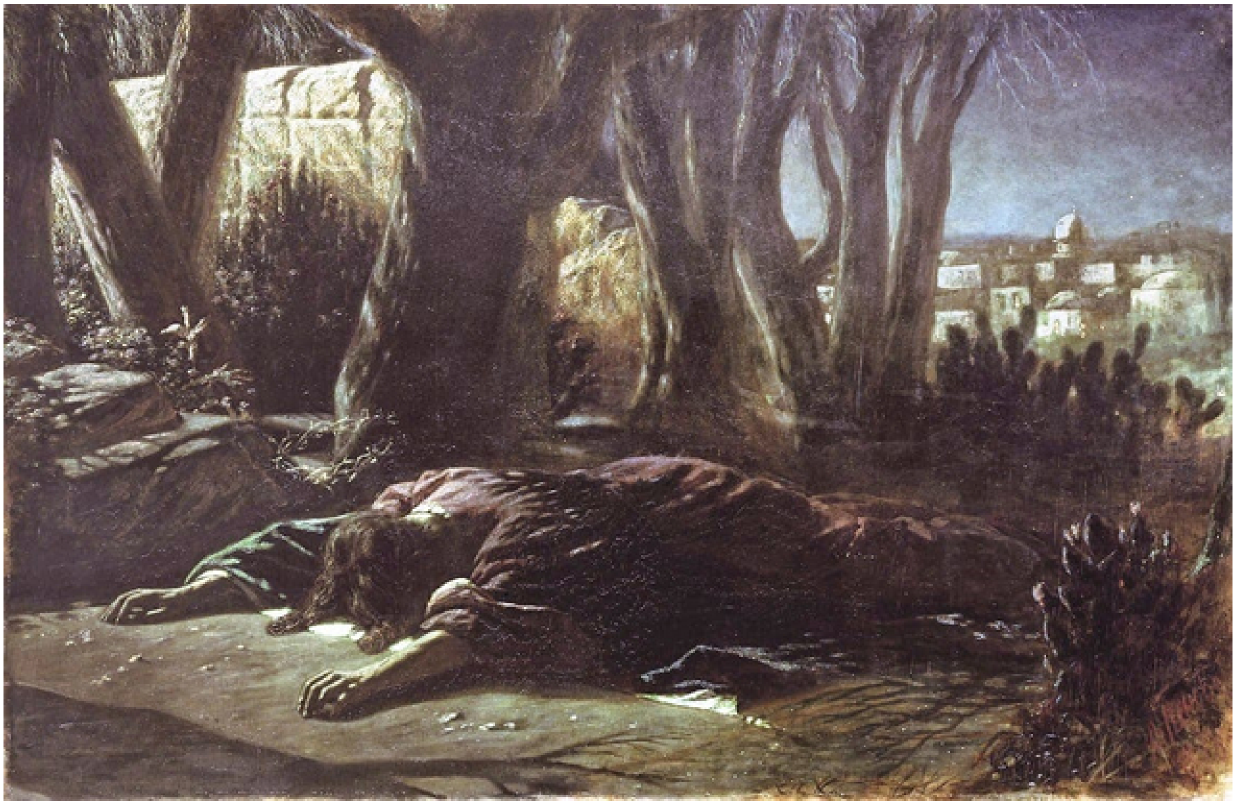
The middle period of life is a time of enormous psychological importance. The child begins its psychological life within very narrow limits, inside the magic circle of the mother and the family. With progressive maturation it widens its horizon and its own sphere of influence; its hopes and intentions are directed to extending the scope of personal power and possessions; desire reaches out to the world in ever-widening range; the will of the individual becomes more and more identical with the natural goals pursued by unconscious motivations. Thus man breathes his own life into things, until finally they begin to live of themselves and to multiply; and imperceptibly he is overgrown by them. Mothers are overtaken by their children, men by their own creations, and what was originally brought into being only with labour and the greatest effort can no longer be held in check. First it was passion, then it became duty, and finally an intolerable burden, a vampire that fattens on the life of its creator. - "Marriage as a Psychological Relationship" (1925). In CW 17: The Development of the Personality. P. 331

This is a solution, in other words it furthers progress that can be irrespective of one path Every advance in culture is, psychologically, an extension of consciousness, a coming to consciousness that can take place only through discrimination. Therefore an advance always begins with individuation, that is to say with the individual, conscious of his isolation, cutting a new path through hitherto untrodden territory. To do this he must first return to the fundamental facts of his own being, irrespective of all authority and tradition, and allow himself to become conscious of his distinctiveness. If he succeeds in giving collective validity to his widened consciousness, he creates a tension of opposites that provides the stimulation which culture needs for its further progress. - "On Psychic Energy" (1928). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P. 111

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/11/8f219-library.jpg`

Carl Jung: “If Christ in Gethsemane had no fear, then his passion is null and void…” (2019-11-26 05:13)

[1]



[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

[Carl Jung: "If Christ in Gethsemane had no fear, then his passion is null and void…"]

To Pastor Fritz Buri

Dear Pastor Buri, 10 December 1945

Very many thanks for kindly sending me your book, Die religiose Ueberwindung der Angst.

I have been waiting for a rejoinder to Pfister's book from theological quarters.

I myself cannot agree with Pfister.

First and foremost because fear is a fundamental reaction of nature.

Kierkegaard's view that animals have no fear is totally disproved by the facts.

There are whole species which consist of nothing but fear.

A creature that loses its fear is condemned to death.

When "cured" by missionaries of their natural and justified fear of demons, primitives degenerate.

I have seen enough of this in Africa whatever the missionaries may say.

Anyone who is afraid has reason to be.

There are not a few patients who have to have fear driven into them because their instincts have atrophied.

A man who has no more fear is on the brink of the abyss.

Only if he suffers from a pathological excess of fear can he be cured with impunity.

Second, where the religions are concerned, they deliver from fear and at the same time create fear, even Christianity, and that is right because one person has too much, another too little.

Absolute deliverance from fear is a complete absurdity.

What about the fear of God?

Doesn’t God ordain fearful things?

Has Pfister no fear if both legs are broken for him and in the end he must dangle from a meat-hook through his chin?

Does no fear warn him of danger to body and soul?

Has he no fear for the life of his sick child?

A man without fear is a superman. I don’t like supermen.

They are not even likeable.

If Christ in Gethsemane had no fear, then his passion is null and void and the believer can subscribe to docetism!

Third, religions are not by any means mere fear-constructs.

Far be it from me to deny the existence of apotropaisms, but like all religious phenomena, they go back to something that the biologist can only describe as a basic instinct of human nature.

His science does not entitle him to assert that religions are revelations of the divine spirit, which they very easily might be although we are unable to prove it.

In this sense I must describe every religious idea as a "fiction" since, formally at any rate, it is a conflation of imaginative possibilities.

On the other hand, we can be sure that it is not motivated by any conscious intention, rather it "happens" to man on an unconscious level (unconscious=unknown) .

That is the utmost science can establish .

The wonder does not lie in the content of the "fiction" but in the existence of the fiction, even if it should be a conscious device used for illegitimate purposes (e.g., banishing fear.)

But it is putting the cart before the horse to explain all dogmas and rites as apotropaic fear-constructs.

It is not only a scandal if theologians entertain such notions, but psychologically false as everyone knows who has had a religious experience, and as is also proved by the investigation of primitive rites.

It verges directly on atheism to try to reduce the religious function to anything other than itself . . . .

Fourth, as a psychotherapist I do not by any means try to deliver my patients from fear.

Rather, I lead them to the reason for their fear, and then it becomes clear that it is justified. (I could tell you a few instructive stories in this respect!)

If my patient understands religious language, I say to him: Well, don't try to escape this fear which God has given you, but try to endure it to the end-sine poena nulla gratia!4

I can say this because I believe I am a religious man and because I know with scientific certainty that my patient hasn't invented his fear but that it is preordained.

By whom or what?

By the unknown.

The religious man calls this absconditum "God," the scientific intellect calls it the unconscious.

Deriving fear from repression is a neurotic speculation, an apotropaism invented for cowards; a pseudo-scientific myth in so far as it declares a basic biological instinct unreal and twists it into an Ersatz-formation.

One could just as well explain life as a flight from death or love as an evasion of the hate which one hasn't the courage to muster.

They are neurotic artifices with which one diddles hysterics out of the only meaning they have (which lies precisely in their neurosis), naturally with the best but unendurably shallow intentions.

I hope you will not take it amiss if I hazard the conjecture that you may have read rather too little of me.

I infer this from the difficulties which my manner of expression seems to cause you.

Fictio and imaginatio have for me their original, full meaning as important activities that concern not only man but God. (Deus imaginatur mundum. Trinitas imaginata in creatura.)

Formal dogma is fictios imaginatio; but its origin, its very existence, is a revelation of hidden contents which are not in accord with the mundus sensibilis. (Hence Tertullian' s unsurpassa ble paradox.)

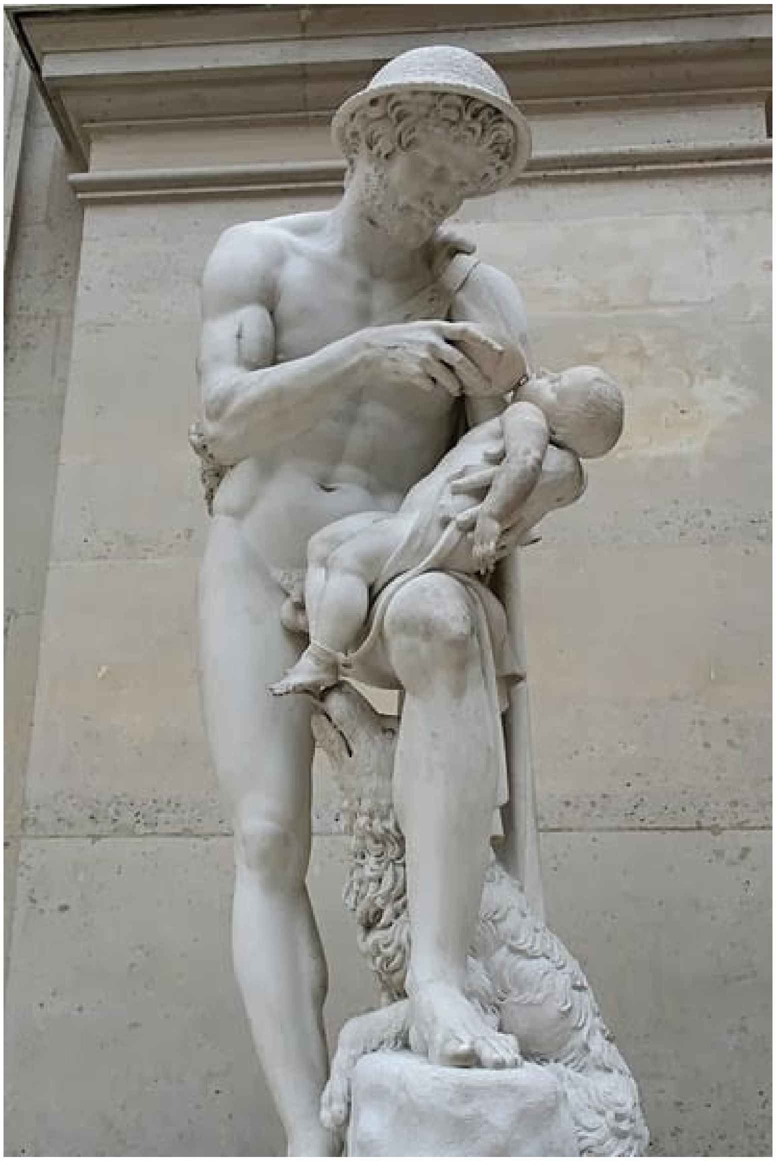
In the hope that it will make my standpoint somewhat clearer to you I am taking the liberty of sending you my little book Psychology and Religion, as a token of gratitude for the rich stimulation your book has afforded me.

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 398-401.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/92b8b-gethsemane.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=SU4TWDWQG4PV&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574763838&sprefix=jung+le%2`

It is important to have a secret, a premonition of things unknown. (2019-11-26 05:18)



[2]Memories, Dreams, Reflections

It is important to have a secret, a premonition of things unknown.

It fills life with something impersonal, a numinosum.

A man who has never experienced that has missed something important.

He must sense that he lives in a world which in some respects is mysterious; that things happen and can be experienced which remain inexplicable; that not everything which happens can be anticipated.

The unexpected and the incredible belong in this world.

Only then is life whole. For me the world has from the beginning been infinite and ungraspable. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 356.

Image: Oedipus in the arms of Phorbas.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/80027-arms.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Memories-Dreams-Reflections-Publisher-Vintage/dp/B004X19L3E/ref=sr_1_2?crid=330E1D9TGIHZQ&keywords=jung+memories+dreams+reflections&qid=1`

Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-11-26 05:19)

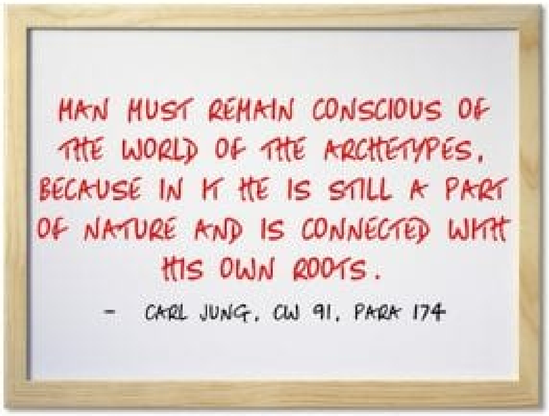
The archetype—let us never forget this—is a psychic organ present in all of us.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 271

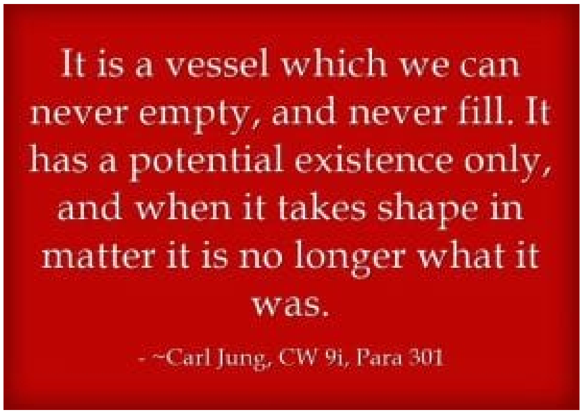
The archetype—let us never forget this—is a psychic organ present in all of us.   Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 271



MAN MUST REMAIN CONSCIOUS OF THE WORLD OF THE ARCHETYPES, BECAUSE IN IT HE IS STILL A PART OF NATURE AND IS CONNECTED WITH HIS OWN ROOTS.

- CARL JUNG, CW 9I, PARA 174

Man must remain conscious of the world of the archetypes, because in it he is still a part of Nature and is connected with his own roots. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 174



It is a vessel which we can never empty, and never fill. It has a potential existence only, and when it takes shape in matter it is no longer what it was.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 301

It [Archetype] is a vessel which we can never empty, and never fill. It has a potential existence only, and when it takes shape in matter it is no longer what it was. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 301

The archetypes are imperishable elements of the unconscious, but they change their shape continually.
~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 301

The archetypes are imperishable elements of the unconscious, but they change their shape continually. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 301

A complex can be really overcome only if it is lived out to the full.
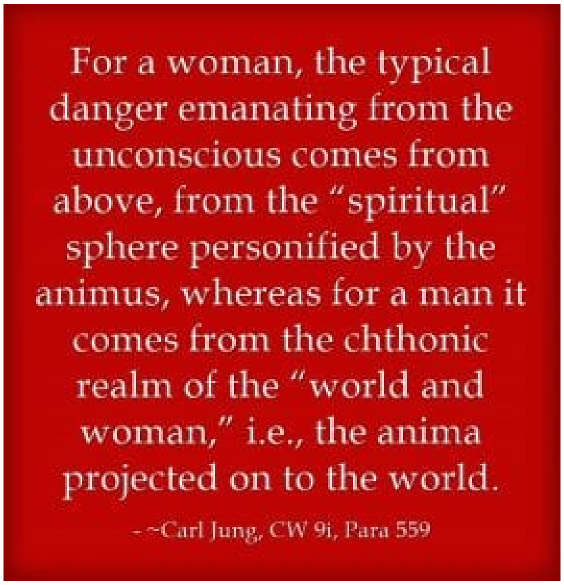
- ~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para
184

A complex can be really overcome only if it is lived out to the full. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 184

The shadow is a living part of the personality and therefore wants to live with it in some form.

~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 44

The shadow is a living part of the personality and therefore wants to live with it in some form. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 44.



For a woman, the typical danger emanating from the unconscious comes from above, from the “spiritual” sphere personified by the animus, whereas for a man it comes from the chthonic realm of the “world and woman,” i.e., the anima projected on to the world.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 559

For a woman, the typical danger emanating from the unconscious comes from above, from the “spiritual” sphere personified by the animus, whereas for a man it comes from the chthonic realm of the “world and woman,” i.e., the anima projected on to the world. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 559

The “child” is born out of the womb of the unconscious, begotten out of the depths of human nature, or rather out of living Nature herself.

~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 289

The “child” is born out of the womb of the unconscious, begotten out of the depths of human nature, or rather out of living Nature herself. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 289

An unconscious Eros always expresses itself as will to power.

~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 167

An unconscious Eros always expresses itself as will to power. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 167

The urge and compulsion to self-realization is a law of nature and thus of invincible power, even though its effect, at the start, is insignificant and improbable.

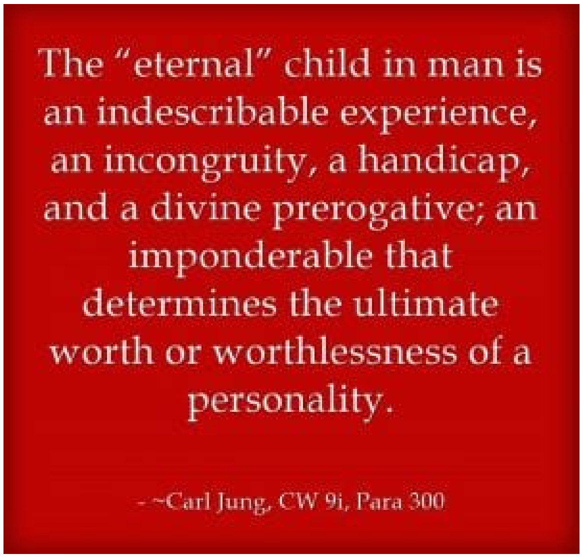
~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 289

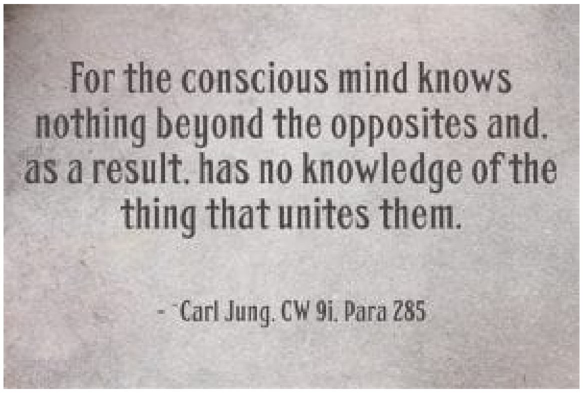
The urge and compulsion to self-realization is a law of nature and thus of invincible power, even though its effect, at the start, is insignificant and improbable. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 289



The “eternal” child in man is an indescribable experience, an incongruity, a handicap, and a divine prerogative; an imponderable that determines the ultimate worth or worthlessness of a personality.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 300

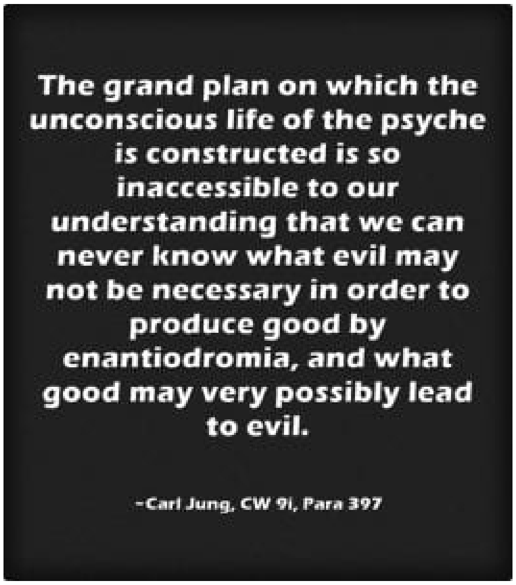
The “eternal” child in man is an indescribable experience, an incongruity, a handicap, and a divine prerogative; an imponderable that determines the ultimate worth or worthlessness of a personality. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 300



For the conscious mind knows nothing beyond the opposites and, as a result, has no knowledge of the thing that unites them.

- Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 285

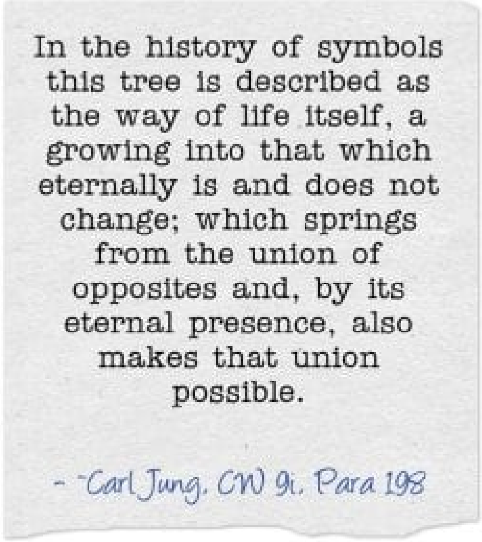
For the conscious mind knows nothing beyond the opposites and, as a result, has no knowledge of the thing that unites them. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 285



The grand plan on which the unconscious life of the psyche is constructed is so inaccessible to our understanding that we can never know what evil may not be necessary in order to produce good by enantiodromia, and what good may very possibly lead to evil.

~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 397

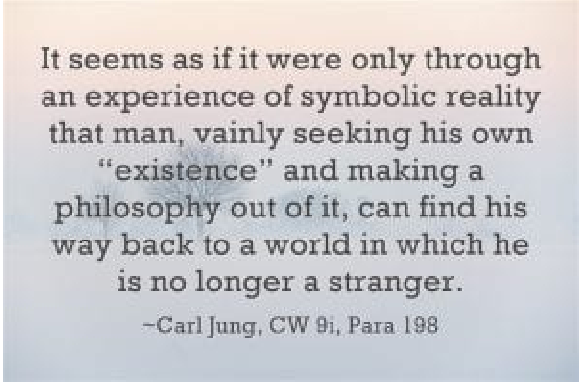
The grand plan on which the unconscious life of the psyche is constructed is so inaccessible to our understanding that we can never know what evil may not be necessary in order to produce good by enantiodromia, and what good may very possibly lead to evil. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 397



In the history of symbols this tree is described as the way of life itself, a growing into that which eternally is and does not change; which springs from the union of opposites and, by its eternal presence, also makes that union possible.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 198

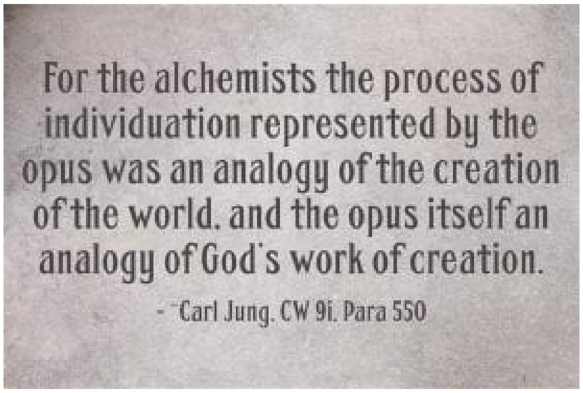
In the history of symbols this tree is described as the way of life itself, a growing into that which eternally is and does not change; which springs from the union of opposites and, by its eternal presence, also makes that union possible. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 198



It seems as if it were only through an experience of symbolic reality that man, vainly seeking his own "existence" and making a philosophy out of it, can find his way back to a world in which he is no longer a stranger.

~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 198

It seems as if it were only through an experience of symbolic reality that man, vainly seeking his own "existence" and making a philosophy out of it, can find his way back to a world in which he is no longer a stranger. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 198



For the alchemists the process of individuation represented by the opus was an analogy of the creation of the world. and the opus itself an analogy of God's work of creation.

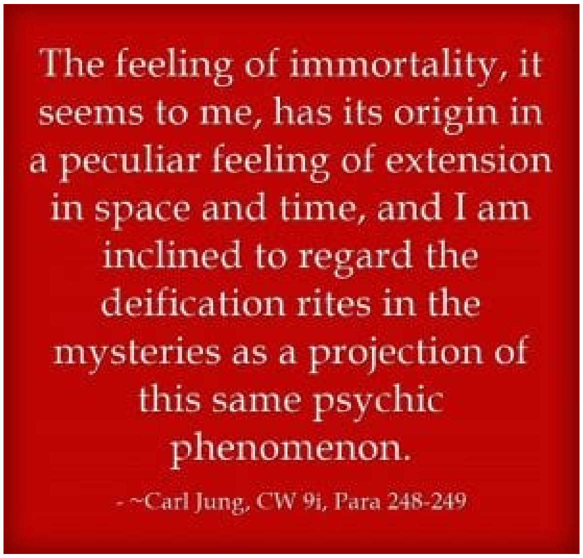
- Carl Jung. CW 9i. Para 550

For the alchemists the process of individuation represented by the opus was an analogy of the creation of the world, and the opus itself an analogy of God's work of creation. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 550

How often in the critical moments of life everything hangs on what appears to be a mere nothing!

~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 408

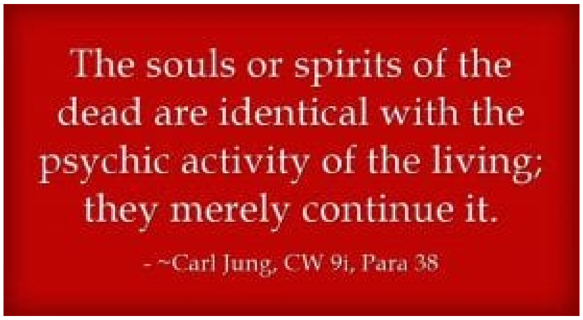
How often in the critical moments of life everything hangs on what appears to be a mere nothing! Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 408



The feeling of immortality, it seems to me, has its origin in a peculiar feeling of extension in space and time, and I am inclined to regard the deification rites in the mysteries as a projection of this same psychic phenomenon.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 248-249

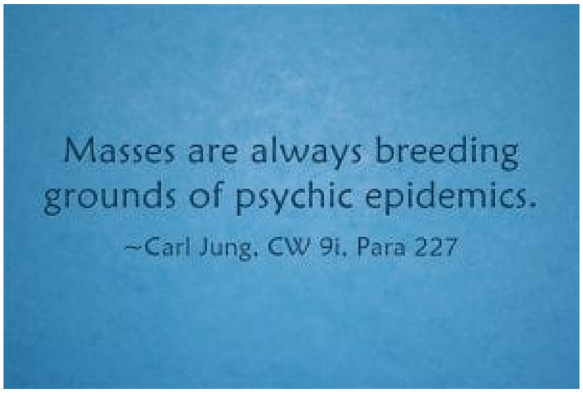
The feeling of immortality, it seems to me, has its origin in a peculiar feeling of extension in space and time, and I am inclined to regard the deification rites in the mysteries as a projection of this same psychic phenomenon. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 248-249



The souls or spirits of the dead are identical with the psychic activity of the living; they merely continue it.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 38

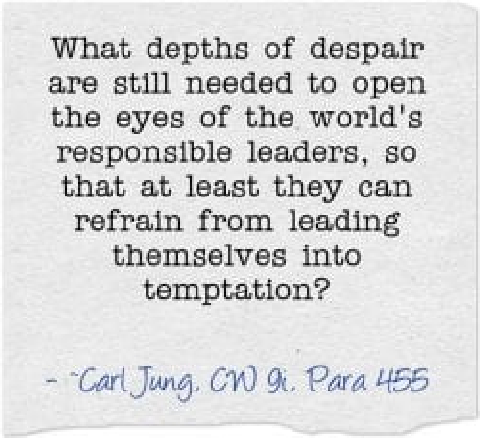
The souls or spirits of the dead are identical with the psychic activity of the living; they merely continue it. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 38



Masses are always breeding grounds of psychic epidemics.

~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 227

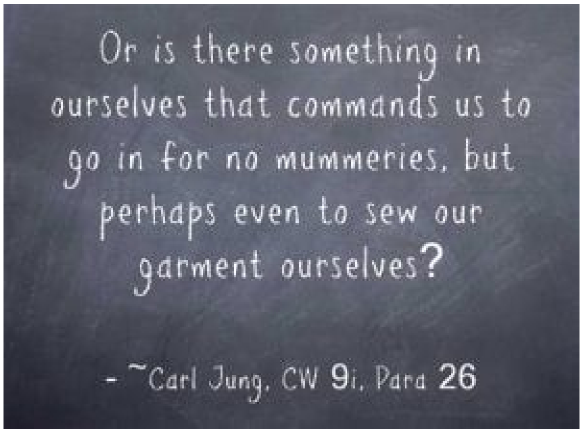
Masses are always breeding grounds of psychic epidemics. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 227



What depths of despair are still needed to open the eyes of the world's responsible leaders, so that at least they can refrain from leading themselves into temptation?

- ~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 455

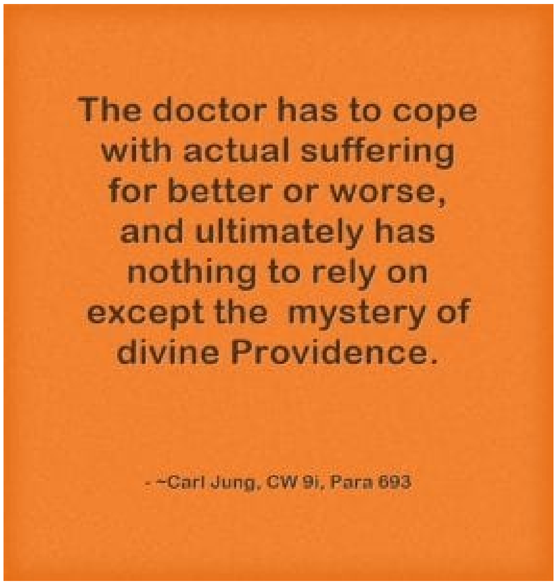
What depths of despair are still needed to open the eyes of the world's responsible leaders, so that at least they can refrain from leading themselves into temptation? Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 455



Or is there something in ourselves that commands us to go in for no mummeries, but perhaps even to sew our garment ourselves?

- ~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 26

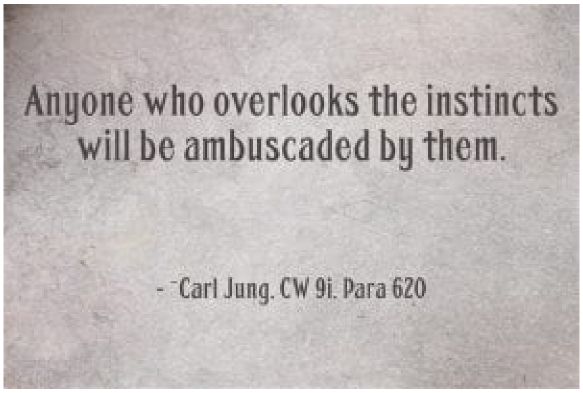
Or is there something in ourselves that commands us to go in for no mummeries, but perhaps even to sew our garment ourselves? Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 26.



The doctor has to cope with actual suffering for better or worse, and ultimately has nothing to rely on except the mystery of divine Providence.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 693

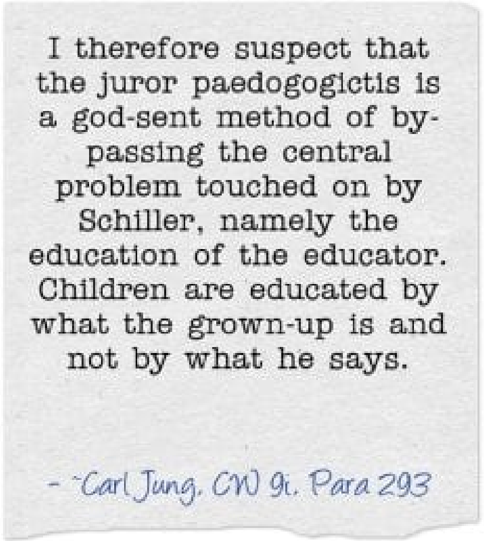
The doctor has to cope with actual suffering for better or worse, and ultimately has nothing to rely on except the mystery of divine Providence. Carl Jung, Para 18, Para 693



Anyone who overlooks the instincts will be ambuscaded by them.

- ~Carl Jung. CW 9i. Para 620

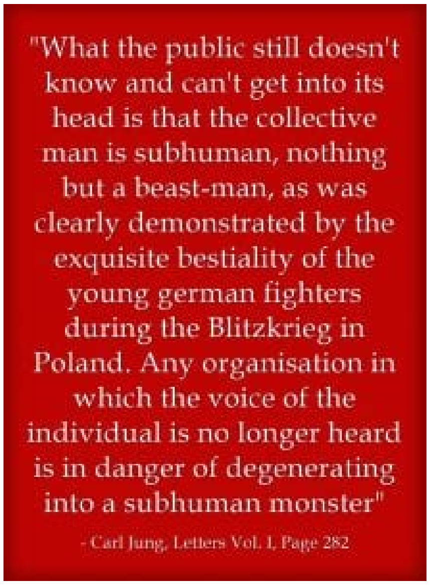
Anyone who overlooks the instincts will be ambuscaded by them. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 620



I therefore suspect that the juror paedogogictis is a god-sent method of by-passing the central problem touched on by Schiller, namely the education of the educator. Children are educated by what the grown-up is and not by what he says.

- ~Carl Jung. CW 9i. Para 293

I therefore suspect that the juror paedogogictis is a god-sent method of by-passing the central problem touched on by Schiller, namely the education of the educator. Children are educated by what the grown-up is and not by what he says. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 293



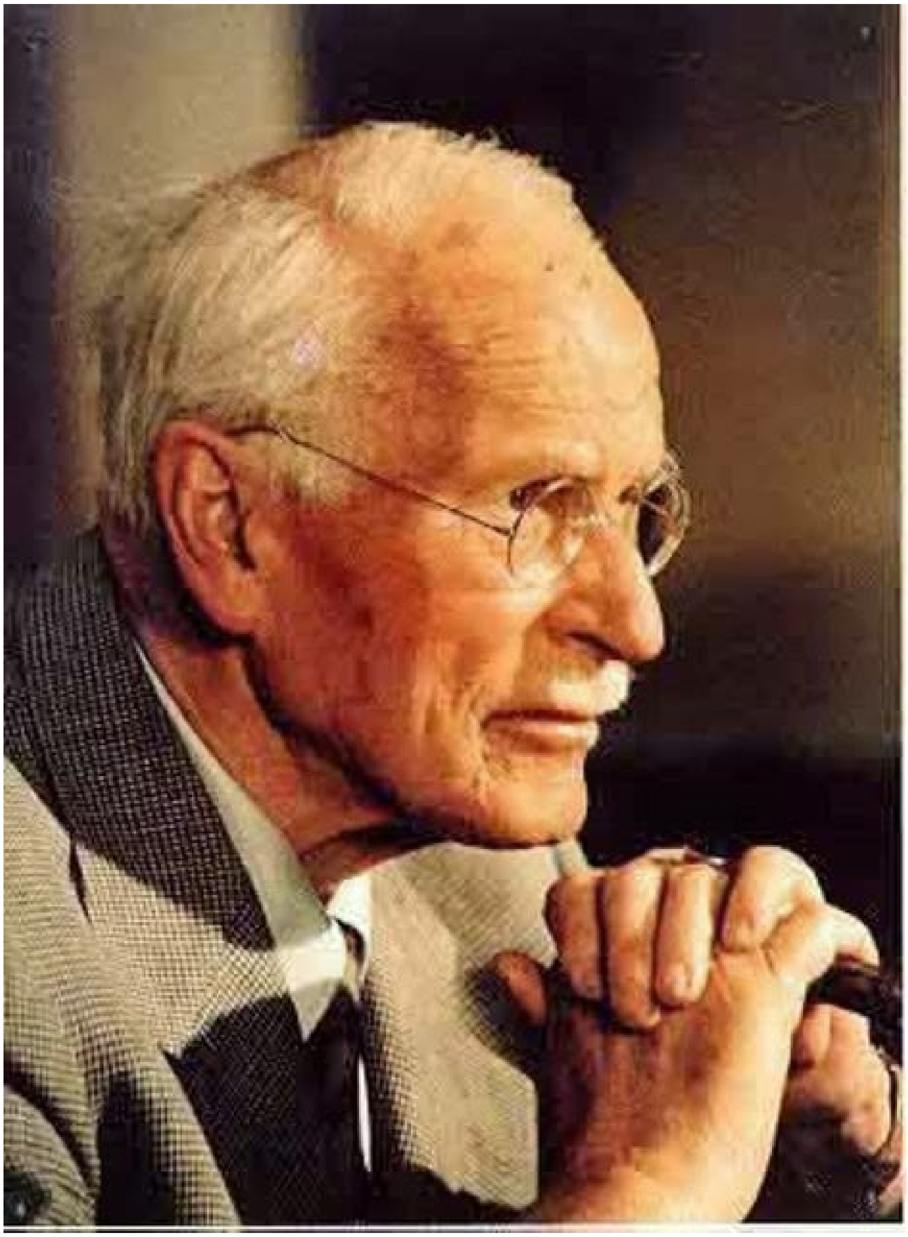
"What the public still doesn't know and can't get into its head is that the collective man is subhuman, nothing but a beast-man, as was clearly demonstrated by the exquisite bestiality of the young german fighters during the Blitzkrieg in Poland. Any organisation in which the voice of the individual is no longer heard is in danger of degenerating into a subhuman monster"

- Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 282

What the public still doesn't know and can't get into its head is that the collective man is subhuman, nothing but a beast-man, as was clearly demonstrated by the exquisite bestiality of the young German fighters during the Blitzkrieg in Poland. Any organization in which the voice of the individual is no longer heard is in danger of degenerating into a subhuman monster. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 282

Carl Jung: "So one never can tell how the future religion will look or what it will be based on."

(2019-11-26 05:20)



[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Leslie Hollingsworth

Dear Mr. Hollingsworth, 21 April 1934

Of course one can guess what the religion of the future might be, but it’s hardly worthwhile guessing.

Surely the Christians of 80 A.D. guessed too, but they never would have guessed the splendors of the Vatican and Alexander VI on St. Peter’s throne and the popes of Avignon and 10,000 Christian heretics burnt in Spain, etc.

So one never can tell how the future religion will look or what it will be based on.

Also one can't say whether the religion will be based upon love or upon fear, because Christianity has shown that even a religion of love can be based on fear, and moreover it can cause fear just as well as love.

We also don't know whether it will be a brotherhood of man or anything as lovely as that.

Religions are not necessarily lovely or good.

They are powerful manifestations of the spirit and we have no power to check the spirit.

Surely great catastrophes such as earthquakes or fires are no longer convincing to the modern mind, but we don't need them.

There are things much more gruesome, namely man's insanity, the great mental contagions from which we actually suffer most indubitably.

Everybody wants peace and understanding and with an infernal fatality the nations are working for war and misunderstanding.

Not even the most modest disarmament has been possible.

That shows where our real catastrophes come from.

Curiously enough people are still too unconscious to become aware of the real dangers they are threatened with.

By the way, my so-called article in the Cosmopolitan Magazine was an interview with a reporter and not an article written by myself.

I have not even seen a copy of it.

Sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 158-159.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/b1d27-jung.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=SU4TWDWQG4PV&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574763838&sprefix=jung+le%2`

New York Time Book Review of Psychology and Religion [1958] (2019-11-26 05:39)

[1]

April 20, 1958

What Makes a Man the Way He Is?

By JOOST A. M. MEERLOO

The last surviving giant of modern psychology, Carl Gustav Jung, will be 83 years old this July. It is amazing how fervently for or hostilely against Jung modern psychologists and psychoanalysts still show themselves to be when they discuss him and his work. I remember vividly a psychiatric meeting at which Jung was the principal speaker. At the beginning nearly everyone, in a skeptical spirit, traded jokes and little fibs about him. Yet when he started to speak, all were fascinated by his words and personality. There was something about his metaphysical impact on people that we scientists sought to escape but could not when we were face to face with him.
Perhaps it is this characteristic of Jung that has created the most animosity among his contemporaries. Even Edward Glover, the Freudian theoretician, in his diatribe against Jung ("Freud or Jung?"), calls him an enigma.

I must confess that I started to read these two volumes by Jung–one a newly published volume in his collected works dealing with oriental thought, the other with the contemporary crisis of man– with the same smug reservation many scientists feel when confronted with the ideas of another school of thought. I must acknowledge that, like many people, I tend to distrust what I cannot understand and verify with fact and theory. We suppose that everything must have a known cause. It is a fearful thing to live in the world of the unknown, beyond the edges of theoretical clarification. And this is, of course, the area into which Jung’s theories and inquiries have taken him. In attacking rational knowledge, in speaking in the tongue of a prophet, he forgets that science has to be built on verifiable facts and concepts.

The danger in learning about psychology and psychoanalysis through one particular set of concepts is that the neophyte will become so involved and entangled in it that it will be well-nigh impossible for him to shake loose his allegiance to his master, along with that master’s very human prejudices and blindness to the theories of rivals. But more and more the differing schools are acknowledging that the study of man’s souls must be approached from various angles. Increasingly it is realized that the time is about here for final integration and clarification of concepts.

Another cause of confusion and disagreement in the fields of psychology and psychoanalysis is language. As Freud developed the new depth psychology, several of his students and collaborators, showing all the convulsive signs of maturation and rebellion against the patriarch, attempted to fly out of his nest. In their attempt to appear original and in their struggle for individuation–to use a Jungian term–they gave new, involved names to concepts that were similar, thus producing more confusion than clarity.

Usually their criticisms and reproaches of one another were actually misrepresentations of one another. Yet however detestable, unreadable, and unquotable these schools found one another, they subtly influenced each other–and will continue to influence each other until the crisis in the evolution of psychological thought is passed.

Jung is one of these rebellious collaborators, of course, but with a difference. He and Freud employed different idioms, but both showed a poetic and creative touch in their choice of words.

The difference in the concepts of Freud and Jung is best illustrated in the way they considered man. Freud emphasized him in the present, Jung looked at him in a timeless, creative sense. Where Freud described a nearly unfathomable personal unconscious, Jung postulated a far wider unconscious for man in the collective sense, a subterranean storeroom for symbols, myths and fairy tales that represented inherited patterns of thought. Freud emphasizes the psychology of "here and now"; Jung is concerned with man taking shape under the burden of history, myth and eternity. For Freud the creative molders of man are the tensions of Eros; for Jung man’s spiritual core is determined by religious experience, by transcendental experience and by an unsophisticated self-composure.

Psychoanalysis, as created by Freud, ushered in a new understanding of man. It taught us to see that in our daily life we are aware of only a small, superficial portion of him; most of his psychic life remains hidden beneath the surface. He brought man down from his pedestal as the godlike molder of life. He revealed the hidden bias in every man and the intricate interdependence of body and mind.

Though Freud, the empiricist, shattered the picture of man as a mere rational being, he himself lived too much in the age of causal Darwinian thinking to inquire into comparable oriental concepts of man. Jung's merit is that he was not bound by the assumptions of "the rational thinker." Occupying himself more and more with myths and legends, he built up an audacious system of concepts often incapable of being verified empirically.

Jung demonstrates his vast knowledge of mythical lore and offers his conclusions about oriental thought in the seventh volume of this collected works, a volume intended especially for student and scholar, "Psychology and Religion: West and East."

Nowhere else than in this study of the interplay of East and West is the point so forcefully made that man's cultural past somehow molds his feelings and thinking as well as his highly contrasting attitudes toward reality. Occidental culture makes an ideal of the rational, thinking, individual being who lives in a vacuum separate from his fellow men. The Orient sees man more as a part of a family or group, continually participating, living in mystic interpretation with each other.

The volume contains Jung's famous treatises on Western and Eastern religion and his "Answer to Job," in which the struggle between good and evil in man is illustrated through the epic story of Job, who expected God to help him against God. Yet, the Biblical poem is the expression of total acceptance of life. "Naked came I forth out of my mother's womb, And naked shall I return thither: The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; Blessed be the name of the Lord."

The best example of the combination of Jung's intuitive grasp and psychological intuition is his foreword to Suzuki's "Introduction to Zen Buddhism," which in itself is one of the finest treatises about Zen that I have read.

In "The Undiscovered Self," a rather small monograph published last summer in Switzerland under the title "Gegenwart und Zukunft," Jung, the archaeologist of the psyche, puts aside for the moment the final edition of his collected works to take a look at the distress of the Western world and the agonies of the entire planet. At the age of 82 he has the right to offer a capsule view of such a large subject. R. F. C. Hull's translation is excellent and reads even more smoothly than the German original.

Jung inquires what the psychic forces are that today divide our world into two armed camps, ready to jump at each other at any moment. Why, in the midst of towering organizations, institutions and machines, is the individual lost and forgotten?

Jung's response is a passionate plea for individual integrity and for freedom against intrusion upon it by mechanical forces and political majorities. He asks for an awareness of the uniqueness of the individual that can be understood neither by generalizations nor by statistics.

Thus Jung turns from scrutiny of the collective self to the far more important question of the meaning of the individual self. No wonder that he repeatedly quotes his former friend and teacher Freud. He has traveled a long way from that time in his life when he was infected by the collective mysticism of the Nazi ideology, when he postulated a creative Aryan collective unconscious opposed to a destructive Semitic unconscious. Now he recognizes that only through a study of the crisis within the individual and the widening gulf between his conscious and unconscious aspects can we improve our understanding of the crisis in society.

Jung does not write about the individual and the mass as contrasts. Both elements are represented in every living person. It is the lack of awareness of man's duality and inner contrasts that may lead to uncontrolled outbursts, as in the time of the Nazis. The hope of increasing the control of the destructive forces within man lies in increasing man's image of self, of his individuality and his feelings of inner freedom and inner confidence. It is here that the ego psychology of Freud and the thought of Jung again parallel each other.

Jung closes his treatise with a moving message: "I am neither spurred on by excessive optimism nor in love with high ideals, but am merely concerned with the fate of the individual human being–that infinitesimal human unit on whom a world depends, and in whom, if we read the meaning of the Christian message aright, even God seeks his goal.
The Problem

It is not that present-day man is capable of greater evil than the man of antiquity or the primitive. He merely has incomparably more effective means with which to realize his proclivity to evil. As his consciousness has broadened and differentiated, so his moral nature has lagged behind. That is the great problem before us today.–The Undiscovered Self." Joost A. M. Meerloo, New York Times, April 20, 1958.

1. `https://1.bp.blogspot.com/-4spkYzyPXpM/Whq1AChen8I/AAAAAAAAqB4/p2afPGtNeLw4oOSoIa7FFBq6ymNNeadegCLcBGAs/s1600/1joost.jpg`

Carl Jung: "These royal tombs, deliberately built for eternity..." (2019-11-26 05:56)

[1]

[2]Children's Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940 (Philemon Foundation Series)

[Carl Jung: "These royal tombs, deliberately built for eternity..."]

In the pyramid of Borobudur in Java, the picture of Buddha is clearly visible on the lower terraces, surrounded by scenes from his life.

On the middle terraces it stands alone, without any narrative framework.

Higher up still, its portrayal is hardly visible any longer, and finally completely eludes the human eye on the uppermost terrace.

The pyramids are huge central edifices rising above a quadratic base, with a strong emphasis on the top as the actual center of the towering rock mass.

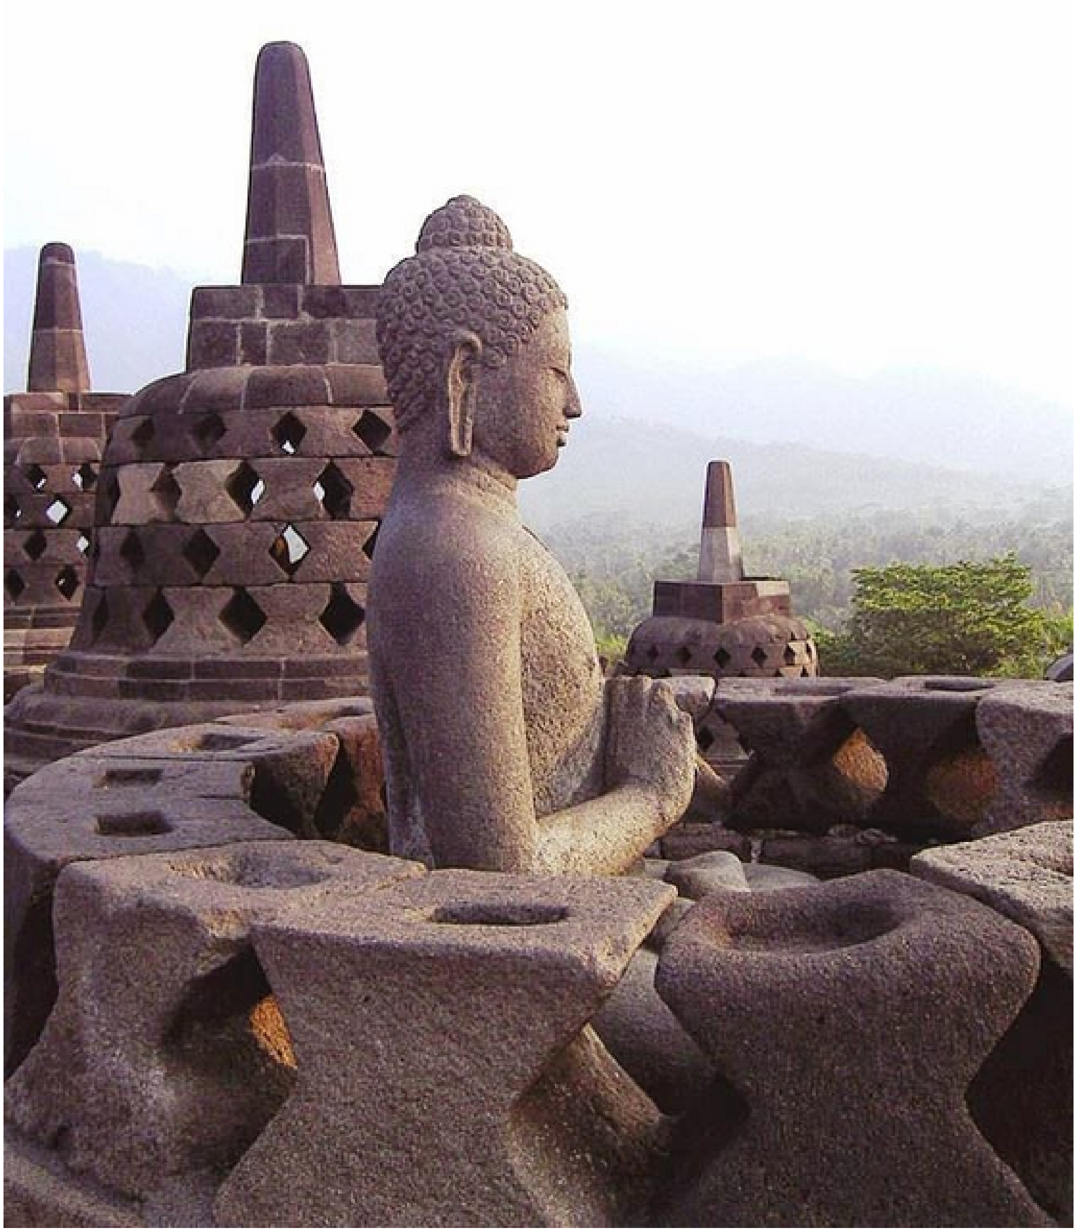
Such a central edifice is a body mandala, that is, a sacred area that offers not only protection, but also a place in whose center the god is born or has his home.

These royal tombs, deliberately built for eternity in the third millennium b.c. (the Cheops pyramid was built around 2800 b.c.), make an immense, if remote, impression even today; they are perfect and inaccessible at the same time, and, like something final or absolute, extend from the dim and distant past into our age.

In such a perfect form, which cannot be surpassed in its simplicity, there is no twilight zone in which fairy tales or legends could emerge.

As if in awe, neither language nor popular belief have taken possession of these monuments, and dealt with or shaped their meaning.

With great aplomb, however, Goethe wrote to Lavater in 1780, at the age of thirty one: “the desire to acuminate the pyramid of my existence, whose base was given to me as a foundation, as high up into the air as possible, prevails over everything else, and makes immediate forgetting nearly impossible.



I must not tarry, for I am already far advanced in years, and perhaps fate breaks me in two in the middle, and the Babylonian Tower will remain blunt and unfinished.

At least it should be said: He was of audacious design; and if I live the forces shall reach, God willing, up to the top."

To conclude, the symbol of the pyramid provides the following indications for our dream: it is an archetypal image, a body mandala, in whose depths the body of the king rests as a mummy, and at whose summit the glorification of the soul takes place.

The composition of the form displays how matter becomes dematerialized, and the arrangement of the reflecting surfaces shows how mass reflects the Eternal Light. Carl Jung, Children's Dream Seminar, Pages 282-283.

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/592d1-1.jpg
2. https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-Seminar-1936-1940-Seminars/dp/0691148074/ref=sr_1_2?keywords=jung+children+dreams&qid=1574776533&sr=8-2
3. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/a7f23-3.jpg

---

Carl Jung: the anima is an allurement to an intensification of life. (2019-11-27 03:07)

[1]

[2]Letters of C. G. Jung: Volume 2, 1951-1961

Dear Herr N., 13 March 1958

Thank you for your kind letter of 7.2. 58. You have rightly recognized that the encounter with the anima logically leads to a great expansion of our sphere of experience.

The anima is a representative of the unconscious and hence a mediatrix, just as the Beata Virgo is called "mediatrix" in the dogma of the Assumption.

On the one hand the anima is an allurement to an intensification of life, but on the other she opens our eyes to its religious aspect.

Here you are confronted with the whole problem of the present and, in particular, with the question you raise concerning the nature of religious experience.

The greater part of modern humanity is satisfied with the Church and with belief in the ecclesiastical sense.

Another part demands the convincing primordial experience.

Theology, precisely because it is ecclesiastical, naturally knows very little of this and has developed an understandable resistance to it.

The primordial experience is not concerned with the historical bases of Christianity but consists in an immediate experience of God (as was had by Moses, Job, Hosea, Ezekiel among others) which "con-vinces" because it is "overpowering."

But this is something you can’t easily talk about.

One can only say that somehow one has to reach the rim of the world or get to the end of one’s tether in order to partake of the terror or grace of such an experience at all.

Its nature is such that it is readily understandable why the Church is actually a place of refuge or protection for those who cannot endure the fire of the divine presence.

A logion says: "He that is near me is near the fire. He that is far from me is far from the kingdom."

I think I understand ecclesiastical Christianity but the theologians do not understand me.

Their raison d’ etre consists in the very fact of belonging to a Church, and mine in coming to terms with that indefinable Being we call "God."

Probably no compromise is possible except that of "coexistence," each allowing the other his say.

At any rate, again and again the allegory is repeated of the strait and steep path trodden by the few and the broad path trodden by the many, though with no guarantee that the few will necessarily get to heaven and the many go down to hell.

Wherever our need for knowledge may turn we stumble upon opposites, which ultimately determine the structure of existence.

The centre is the indivisible monad of the self, the unity and wholeness of the experiencing subject.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 423-424

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/639fe-1anima.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Letters-C-G-Jung-1951-1961/dp/0415051711/ref=sr_1_fkmr2_1?keywords=carl+jung+letters+volume+ii&qid=1574845032&sr=8-1-fkmr2`

One cannot individuate without being with other human beings. (2019-11-27 03:51)

[1]

One cannot individuate without being with other human beings.

One cannot individuate
on top of Mt. Everest, or in a cave where one doesn't see anyone
for seventy-years;

one can only individuate with or against something or somebody.

Being an individual is always a link
in a chain.

Carl Jung

www.jungcurrents.com

[2]Nietzsche's Zarathustra: Notes of the Seminar Given in 1934 - 1939

One cannot individuate without being with other human beings.

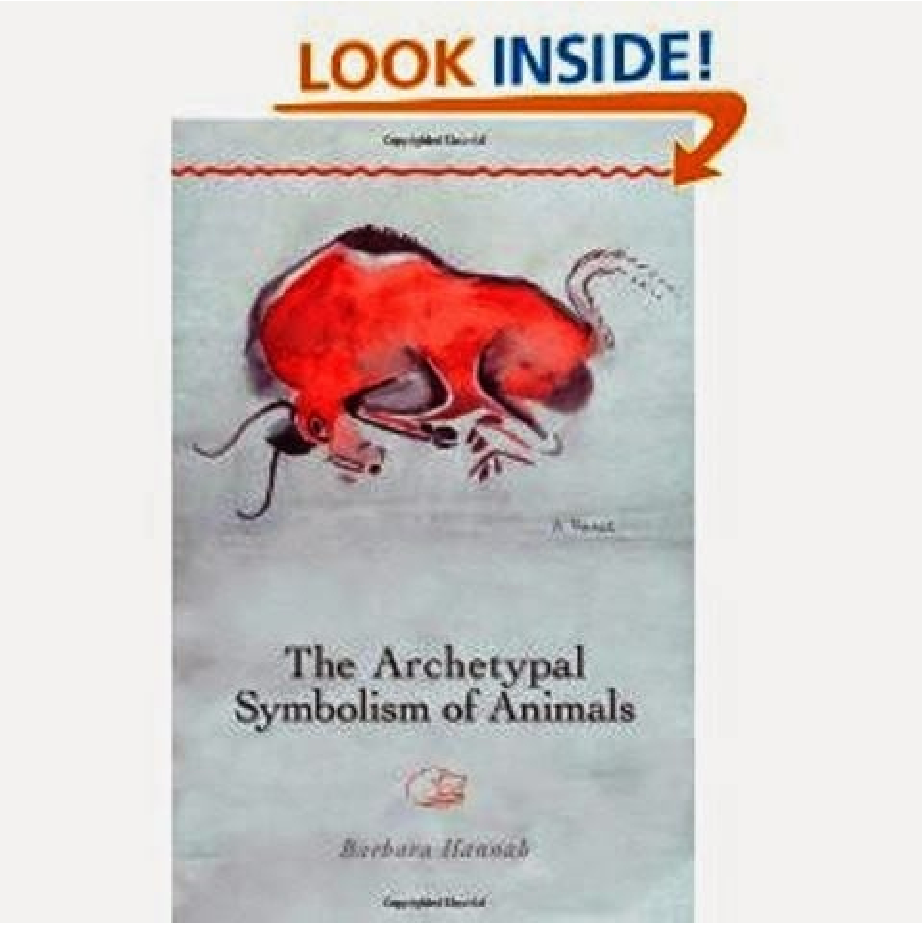
One cannot individuate on top of Mt. Everest, or in a cave where one doesn't see anyone for seventy-years; one can only individuate with or against something or somebody.

Being an individual is always a link in a chain.

Carl Jung, Nietzche's "Zarathustra": notes of the seminar given in 1934-1939 by C. G. Jung, Page 102

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/3b2cc-individuate.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Nietzsches-Zarathustra-Notes-Seminar-Given/dp/0691099537/ref=sr_1_fkmr1_1?keywords=carl+jung+zarathustra&qid=1574845582&sr=8-1-fkmr1`

Carl Jung: "...the lowest layers of our psyche still have an animal character." (2019-11-27 03:54)



LOOK INSIDE!

The Archetypal Symbolism of Animals

Barbara Hannah

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Robert Eisler

Dear Dr. Eisler, 25 June 1946

What I said in Two Essays about archetypes in the animal psyche was only an aside.

I hazard the conjecture, which is based .on certain experiences, that the lowest layers of our psyche still have an animal character.

Hence it is highly probable that animals have similar or even the same archetypes.

That they do have archetypes is certain in so far as the animal-plant symbioses clearly demonstrate that there must be an inherited image in the animal which drives it to specific instinctive actions.

I have dealt with this point only in one essay: "Instinct and the Unconscious" (in Contributions to Analytical Psychology, Kegan Paul, London, 1928).

An offprint of my lecture "Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious" follows by the same post.

I have also asked my publisher to send you a copy of my Psychology and Alchemy, which of all my writings is probably the most concerned with archetypes.

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 427-428.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/21c93-animal.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_fkmr1_1?keywords=carl+jung+letters+volume+ii&qid=1574845852&sr=8-1-fkmr1`

Jay Dunn Prospects for C.G. Jung’s Psychology in the United States (2019-11-27 04:09)

[1]Contact with Jung: Essays on the influence of his work and personality

At first glance, the temper of the United States seems to stand in direct opposition to the basic tenets of analytical psychology.

American materialism, extraversion, and rationalism are antithetical to a psychology that attempts to probe the inner world of man.

One would expect a society that places value on the principle of scientific causality to resist a psychological viewpoint that introduces the concept of synchronicity .

Americans gave ready acceptance to behavioristic psychology.

They found this formulation attractive because it provided a basis for the belief that a new start in a new land would result in a better individual.

The philosophical pragmatism of William James added its impetus to their scientific positivism.

They continued to judge by one criterion, ’Will it work?’

On this basis the standards were utilitarian, and the human equation was subordinated to the relentless advance of technology-mass production was, for instance, an American contribution to the world. Its value was proved by the high standard of living it produced.

However, not all of the results were beneficial:

the inventor was influenced by his invention, and the American applied the uniformity and pace of the assembly-line to himself.

Working hard at producing objects, he came to regard himself as another ’thing’.

This gave rise to the conformity in the United States that was so evident to visitors from abroad and found public expression in The Organization Man (Whyte, 1956).

The genius of this country lies in the capacity to make things work, to make more of them, and to make them better, and so we may expect this spirit to influence the growth of analytical psychology in America.

It will become more businesslike, and there will be an increase in emphasis on clinical and therapeutic problems.

It follows that the practical applications of Jung’s psychology will undoubtedly receive great attention.

It is noteworthy that Americans have been drawn to analytical psychology in the same number and to the same degree as their European counterparts; indeed, during the ’twenties and ’thirties, Jung’s seminars in Zurich were well attended by people from the United States.

These early adventurers were weather-vanes of their national character.

They anticipated the growing sophistication now taking place in their country regarding the world and themselves.

The appearance of the Collected Works has, indeed, brought Jung’s name before the general public at a fortunate time, and now they can explore and judge the value of his contribution for themselves.

Americans are suspicious of speculative thinking.

Despite the fact that the major advances of modern knowledge derive from theoretical speculations, the United States has not produced men of the calibre of Einstein, Wohler, Steinmetz, etc.

The American remains wary, and it is unlikely that Jung’s theoretical formulations will get much attention or be developed to any great extent.

The forefathers of present-day Americans left a Europe that was conceived to be in the process of freeing itself from a dark age.

They were reacting, in part, against the static mentality of the Old World.

The new nation saw frontiers to conquer, action replaced reflection, and a drive towards accomplishment formed which still influences the national outlook.

This is another reason why the American approaches analytical psychology with caution: its techniques of amplification and active imagination, in particular, appear to lead him back to a former mentality that he had actively rejected.

Practical as he is, the American is not immune to the influence of images; indeed, he lives under a powerful mythologem: the archetype of the Utopian ideal. From the beginning, European immigrants looked to the New World for redemption.

They placed their hopes for a better life in the newly discovered lands.

Every schoolboy in America is taught that his country accepts the weary and downtrodden, and he grows up with the idea that others are less fortunate than himself, and he must help them.

Living with this great promise accounts for the optimism and naivete so characteristic of the American.

It causes him to look ahead, not backward, and in this Jung’s prospective-ongoing ideas will prove attractive.

He believes that continual growth and expansion are virtues in themselves, and he expects future generations to achieve what his own leaves undone.

Pessimism is not only unhealthy, it is un-American.

The Utopian ideal accounts for the youthfulness and vitality of this country, and it was not accidental that Ponce de Leon, the Spanish explorer, sought the Fountain of Youth in Florida.

The recent admission of Alaska and Hawaii into statehood closes the last frontiers. Immigration is strictly limited, and Ellis Island is up for sale.

Disentanglement and isolation from the affairs of the world are no longer possible.

The American’s one-sided image of himself is ending, and, little by little, he is forced to accept himself as a paradox-the ’ugly American’ is coming into view.

Americans are realizing that their motives are not always idealistic-they, too, a must be confronted.

This can result in increase in consciousness which may add depth and weight to the national character.

It is here that we may expect analytical psychology to make its most important contribution.

Countless Americans travel to Europe in search of their past.

Lacking deep roots in their own country, they travel abroad in the attempt to re-establish a connection with their origins, and they may well be equally receptive to Jung's discovery of the historical psyche.

The collective unconscious can enable the American to regain the values of the past without renouncing his interest in the present and future.

I want to suggest that individuation, in so far as it can be experienced by the American, is reflected in a folklore theme that grows out of his own soil.

It reaches expression in the tale of the Western gun-battle.

This gun-fight drama is played time and again in endless variation on television and in the cinema.

Young boys buckle on their gun-belts and re-enact this fight in the streets, and they continue to play at being cowboys despite the lure of the space age.

The gun-fight appears in an endless variety of settings, but the essentials remain the same.

The location is the Old West; two men meet in a face-to-face confrontation, and the encounter is to the death; the atmosphere has an aura of fatefulness, as though destiny guided all the preceding events to just this moment.

The hero faces his opponent by himself.

His friends may be nearby, but they accept the fact that the man must face this crucial encounter alone.

The code forbids interference, just as it determines that the fight must be fair.

Each proponent has an equal opportunity to draw, and nothing is more despicable than shooting a man down while he is at a disadvantage.

The rules of the drama are inviolate.

The gun-fight scene is typically American, and the theme of civilizing the Wild West reveals essential character traits of the people.

The issues at stake are simple.

Law and order triumph over disorder, and the righteous always win.

Americans face their opponents in open combat, and the fight is fair and square.

This tendency to state the conflict in simple terms and to resolve it by direct action is clearly an enactment of the ego-shadow conflict.

We may expect the future development of analytical psychology in this country to be influenced by its characteristics.

It is far too early to do more than speculate on the future of analytical psychology in America.

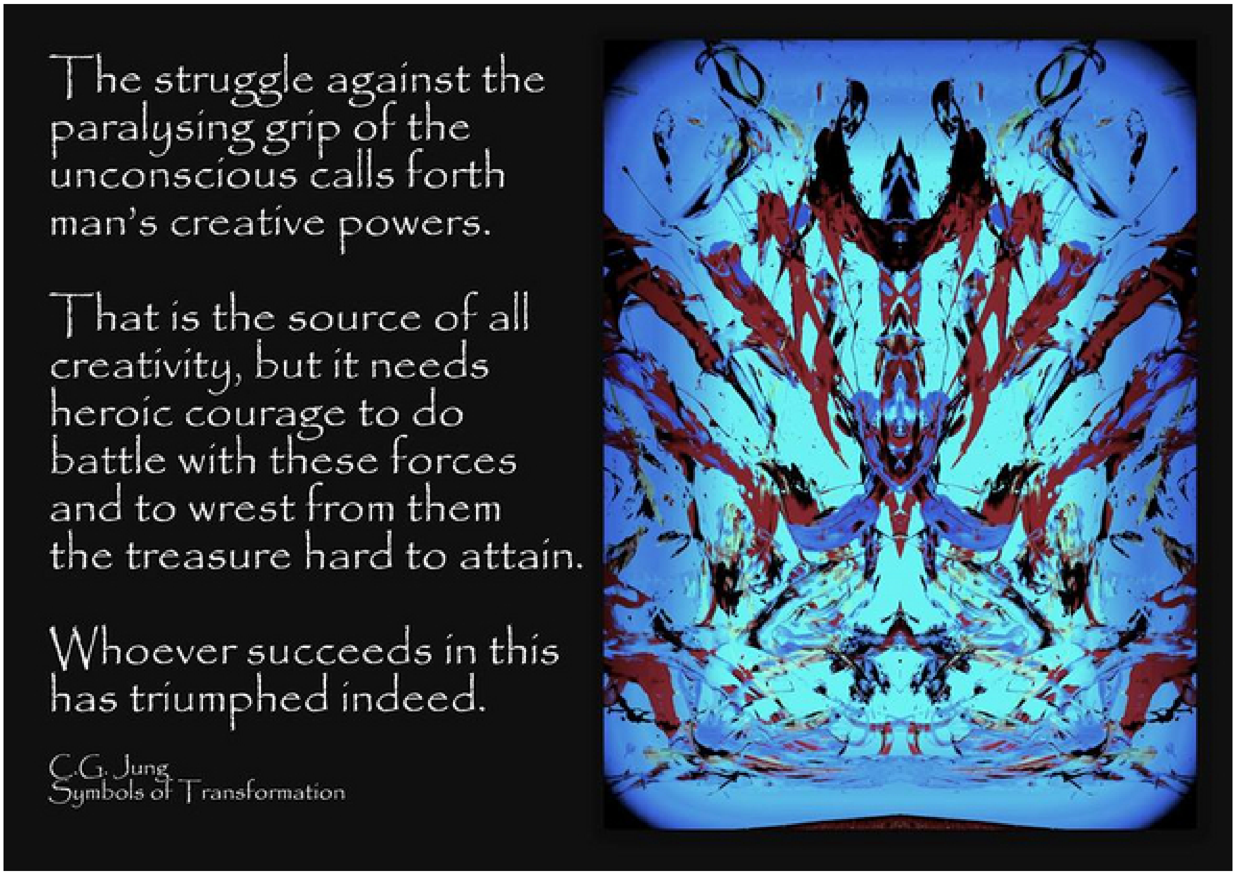
Its fundamental contributions that widen consciousness will not be lost, but neither will they remain catholic.

Whatever emerges as the final product, it is very likely that it will bear the label, ’Made in the U.S.A.’ Jay Dunn, Contact with Jung, Pages 164-167

1. https://www.amazon.com/Contact-Jung-Essays-influence-personality/dp/B0000CLPU0/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+fordham+contact&qid=1574880952&sr=8-1

Carl Jung: Hiawatha wrestles with himself in order to create himself. (2019-11-27 04:13)

[1]



The struggle against the paralysing grip of the unconscious calls forth man’s creative powers.

That is the source of all creativity, but it needs heroic courage to do battle with these forces and to wrest from them the treasure hard to attain.

Whoever succeeds in this has triumphed indeed.

C.G. Jung
Symbols of Transformation

Faint with famine, Hiawatha
Started from his bed of branches,
From the twilight of his wigwam
Forth into the flush of sunset,
Came and wrestled with Mondamin;
At his touch he felt new courage
Throbbing in his brain and bosom,
Felt new life and hope and vigour
Run through every nerve and fibre.

The battle in the sunset with the corn-god gives Hiawatha new strength—necessarily so, because the fight against the paralyzing grip of the unconscious calls forth man’s creative powers.

That is the source of all creativity, but it needs heroic courage to do battle with these forces and to wrest from them the treasure hard to attain.

Whoever succeeds in this has triumphed indeed.

Hiawatha wrestles with himself in order to create himself.

The struggle again lasts for the mythical three days; and on the fourth day, as Mondamin prophesied, Hiawatha conquers him, and Mondamin, yielding up his soul, sinks to the ground.

In accordance with the latter’s wish, Hiawatha buries him in the earth his mother, and soon afterwards, young and fresh, the corn sprouts from his grave for the nourishment of mankind. (Cf. pi. lii.)

Had Hiawatha not succeeded in conquering him, Mondamin would have "killed" him and usurped his place, with the result that Hiawatha would have become "possessed" by a demon.

Now the remarkable thing here is that it is not Hiawatha who passes through death and emerges reborn, as might be expected, but the god.

It is not man who is transformed into a god, but the god who undergoes transformation in and through man.

It is as though he had been asleep in the "mother," i.e., in Hiawatha’s unconscious, and had then been roused and fought with so that he should not overpower his host, but should, on the contrary, himself experience death and rebirth, and reappear in the corn in a new form beneficial to mankind.

Consequently he appears at first in hostile form, as an assailant with whom the hero has to wrestle.

This is in keeping with the violence of all unconscious dynamism.

In this manner the god manifests himself and in this form he must be overcome.

The struggle has its parallel in Jacob's wrestling with the angel at the ford Jabbok.

The onslaught of instinct then becomes an experience of divinity, provided that man does not succumb to it and follow it blindly, but defends his humanity against the animal nature of the divine power.

It is "a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God," and "whoso is near unto me, is near unto the fire, and whoso is far from me, is far from the kingdom"; for "the Lord is a consuming fire," the Messiah is "the Lion of the tribe of Judah":

Judah is a lion's whelp;
from the prey, my son, thou art gone up.
He stooped down, he couched as a lion, and as an old lion; who shall rouse him up? [Hebrews 10:31]

Carl Jung, CW 5, Pages 337-338

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/3be0b-1triumph.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Symbols-Transformation-Collected-Works-Vol-5/dp/0691018154/ref=sr_1_fkmr0_1?keywords=jung+cw5+symbols&qid=1574880837&sr=8-1-fkmr0`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/393bc-1hiawatha.jpg`

Carl Jung on the importance of Painting. (2019-11-27 04:19)

[1]

[2]The Practice of Psychotherapy: Essays on the Psychology of the Transference and Other Subjects

I have turned these hints to practical account, urging my patients at such times to paint in reality what they have seen in dream or fantasy.

As a rule I am met with the objection, "But I am not a painter!"

To this I usually reply that neither are modern painters, and that consequently modern painting is free for all, and that anyhow it is not a question of beauty but only of the trouble one takes with the picture.

How true this is I saw recently in the case of a talented professional portraitist; she had to begin my way of painting all over again with pitiably childish efforts, literally as if she had never held a brush in her hand.

To paint what we see before us is a different art from painting what we see within.

Many of my more advanced patients, then, begin to paint.

I can well understand that everyone will be profoundly impressed with the utter futility of this sort of dilettantism.

Do not forget, however, that we are speaking not of people who still have to prove their social usefulness, but of those who can no longer see any sense in being socially useful and who have come upon the deeper and more dangerous question of the meaning of their own individual lives.

To be a particle in the mass has meaning and charm only for the man who has not yet reached that stage, but none for the man who is sick to death of being a particle.

The importance of what life means to the individual may be denied by those who are socially below the general level of adaptation, and is invariably denied by the educator whose ambition it is to breed mass-men.

But those who belong to neither category will sooner or later come up against this painful question.

Although my patients occasionally produce artistically beautiful things that might very well be shown in modern "art" exhibitions, I nevertheless treat them as completely worthless when judged by the canons of real art.

As a matter of fact, it is essential that they should be considered worthless, otherwise my patients might imagine themselves to be artists, and the whole point of the exercise would be missed.

It is not a question of art at all or rather, it should not be a question of art but of something more and other than mere art, namely the living effect upon the patient himself.

The meaning of individual life, whose importance from the social standpoint is negligible, stands here at its highest, and for its sake the patient struggles to give form, however crude and childish, to the inexpressible.

But why do I encourage patients, when they arrive at a certain stage in their development, to express themselves by means of brush, pencil, or pen at all?

Here again my prime purpose is to produce an effect.

In the state of psychological childhood described above, the patient remains passive; but now he begins to play an active part.

To start off with, he puts down on paper what he has passively seen, thereby turning it into a deliberate act.

He not only talks about it, he is actually doing something about it.

Psychologically speaking, it makes a vast difference whether a man has an interesting conversation with his doctor two or three times a week, the results of which are left hanging in midair, or whether he has to struggle for hours with refractory brush and colours, only to produce in the end something which, taken at its face value, is perfectly senseless.

If it were really senseless to him, the effort to paint it would be so repugnant that he could scarcely be brought to perform this exercise a second time.

But because his fantasy does not strike him as entirely senseless, his busying himself with it only increases its effect upon him.

Moreover, the concrete shaping of the image enforces a continuous study of it in all its parts, so that it can develop its effects to the full.

This invests the bare fantasy with an element of reality, which lends it greater weight and greater driving power.

And these rough-and-ready pictures do indeed produce effects which, I must admit, are rather difficult to describe.

For instance, a patient needs only to have seen once or twice how much he is freed from a wretched state of mind by working at a symbolical picture, and he will always turn to this means of release whenever things go badly with him.

In this way something of inestimable importance is won the beginning of independence, a step towards psychological maturity.

The patient can make himself creatively independent through this method, if I may call it such.

He is no longer dependent on his dreams or on his doctor's knowledge; instead, by painting himself he gives shape to himself.

For what he paints are active fantasies that which is active within him.

And that which is active within is himself, but no longer in the guise of his previous error, when he mistook the personal ego for the self; it is himself in a new and hitherto alien sense, for his ego now appears as the object of that which works within him.

In countless pictures he strives to catch this interior agent, only to discover in the end that it is eternally unknown and alien, the hidden foundation of psychic life. Carl Jung, The Practice of Psychotherapy, Pages 47-49.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/d7ad8-paint.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Practice-Psychotherapy-Psychology-Transference-Bollingen/dp/0691018707/ref=sr_1_1?crid=12EWPV0Q33TTK&keywords=the+practice+of+psychothera`

Carl Jung: "Believe me, I often think of you and I often wish I could see you again." (2019-11-27 04:23)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Mary Mellon

My dear Mrs. Mellon, Bollingen, 8 September 1941

Thank you very much for your kind letter! •

I just got it and I answer it immediately.

I wrote a long letter to you in spring. But I think you never got it.

At least I heard from our post office that the letter has not been let through. I don’t know why.

Believe me, I often think of you and I often wish I could see you again.

But you are further away than the moon.

I thought of you in Ascona, where we had a very nice meeting.

Your dream is shocking indeed.

You get such dreams when you are too much identified with somebody.

The unconscious then tries to throw something in between.

You probably have a very living image of myself and it might keep you too much away from yourself, no matter what I am.

It must be something of the sort, because all your letters emanate an immediate warmth and something like a living substance which has an almost compelling effect.

I get emotional about them and I could do something foolish if you were not on the other side of the ocean.

Please don't misunderstand me: I am in a healthy condition of mind, but I merely describe, with utmost honesty, that which is produced by a letter of yours.

It is slightly uncanny, and it proves that there is a living connection through the non-space, i.e., an unconscious identity.

Such a thing is dangerous to a certain degree, at least it can cause a certain alienation from yourself.

I do consider your dream as a very necessary compensation, though a painful one.

My attitude is one of honest and sincere devotion beyond all doubt.

It has never changed .

You don't need to do anything about it, because I think a normally functioning unconscious will compensate the trouble efficiently.

It is f.i. enough to get this shock of such a poisonous dream.

You know, we have to realize that no matter how much we should like to be able to talk to each other, we shall be separated for a long time, perhaps forever, if such a human concept can be applied to whatever happens after death .

You know time and space are only relative realities, which under certain conditions do not exist at all.

Yet our conscious life detains us within the confines of time and space.

Perhaps you ought to realize the facts as they are.

We don't know what is going to happen over here.

Germany exhales a simply devastating atmosphere.

It is well-nigh indescribable.

I am not going to lecture this winter.

I feel it is time to reduce my public work.

A time might come when there will be nothing left but the life within.

It is splendid that Paul is with the army.

It is true, he has the air of a good marksman. We know them well in Switzerland.

I hope my lectures about the Mass will please you.

I don't write a book about Paracelsus, only two lectures, because I have been asked to lecture about him on the occasion of the 400th return of the day of his death (1541).

Please give my best regards to Paul. Sincerely hoping that my letter will reach you, I remain yours,

Affectionately,

C.G. Jung

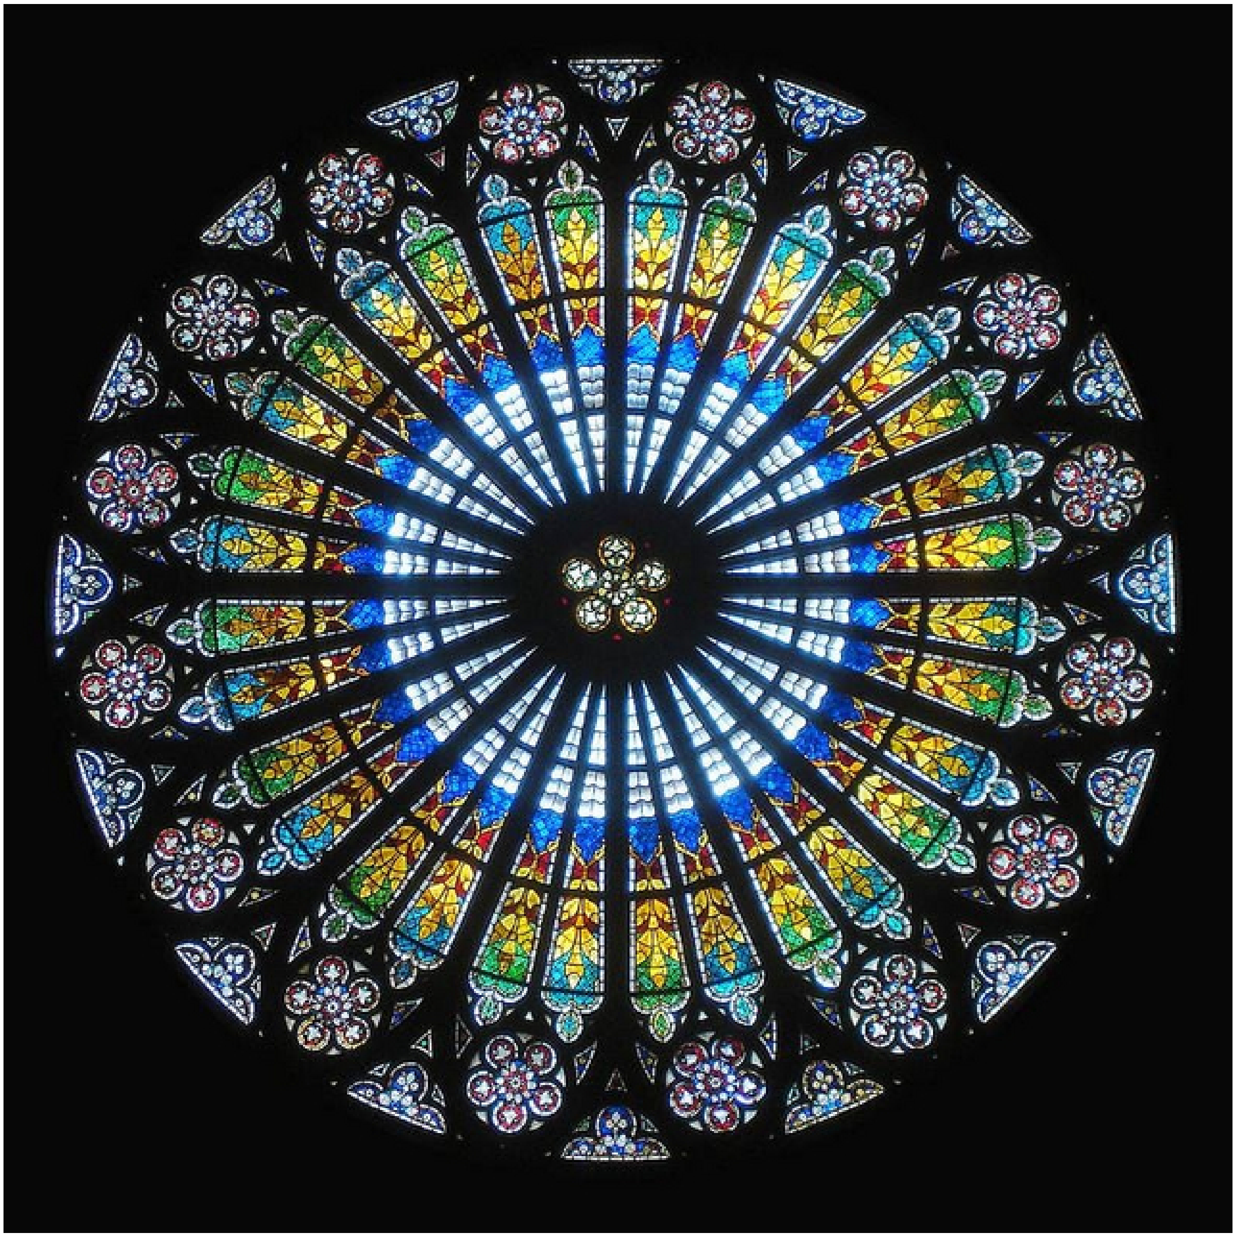
P .S. Can't you pull a wire and tell the Bermuda censor who I am and that I am a F.R.S. and that I got an honorary D.Sc. at Oxford? And moreover I am a thoroughly reliable individual? Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 303-304.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/fe245-mary.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=RHU85JZ6BU57&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574880476&sprefix=jung+lett`

Carl Jung: The Rose Window is a mandala and we come here to a curious analogy between East and West,

(2019-11-27 04:30)

[1]



[2]Philemon Foundation Projects

The Rose Window is a mandala and we come here to a curious analogy between East and West, the mystical flower which is the seat of the divinity.

We have already often spoken of the Indian Padme or Lotus.

It has a female significance, for it really symbolises the womb.

And we read in the Paradiso, Canto XXXIII:

"For in thy womb rekindling shone the love
Reveal’d, whose genial influence makes now
This flower to germin in eternal peace:"
This rose is the rose we read of in the beginning of Canto XXXI:
"In fashion, as a snow white rose, lay then
Before my view the saintly multitude,
Which in His own blood Christ epoused . . ."

This is the multitude of the whole Church and the centre, the womb so to speak, is the innermost sanctuary, the Deity:

. .... , "In that abyss
Of radiance, clear and lofty, seem ’d, methought,
Three orbs of triple hue, clipt in one bound:
And, from another, one reflected seem’d,
As rainbow is from rainbow: and the third
Seem’d fire, breathed equally from both."

Ignatius was probably familiar with all these things, they appear again and again right through the Middle Ages and even up to the present time.

Dante represents the whole sphere of Heaven as consisting of a series of circles and the highest or last is the rose.

That is an exact parallel to those eastern mandalas where the lotus is in the centre surrounded by a magic circle.

Curiously enough I came across a similar picture the other day, belonging to modern Catholic art, a Representation of the birth of Christ, the Christmas mystery.

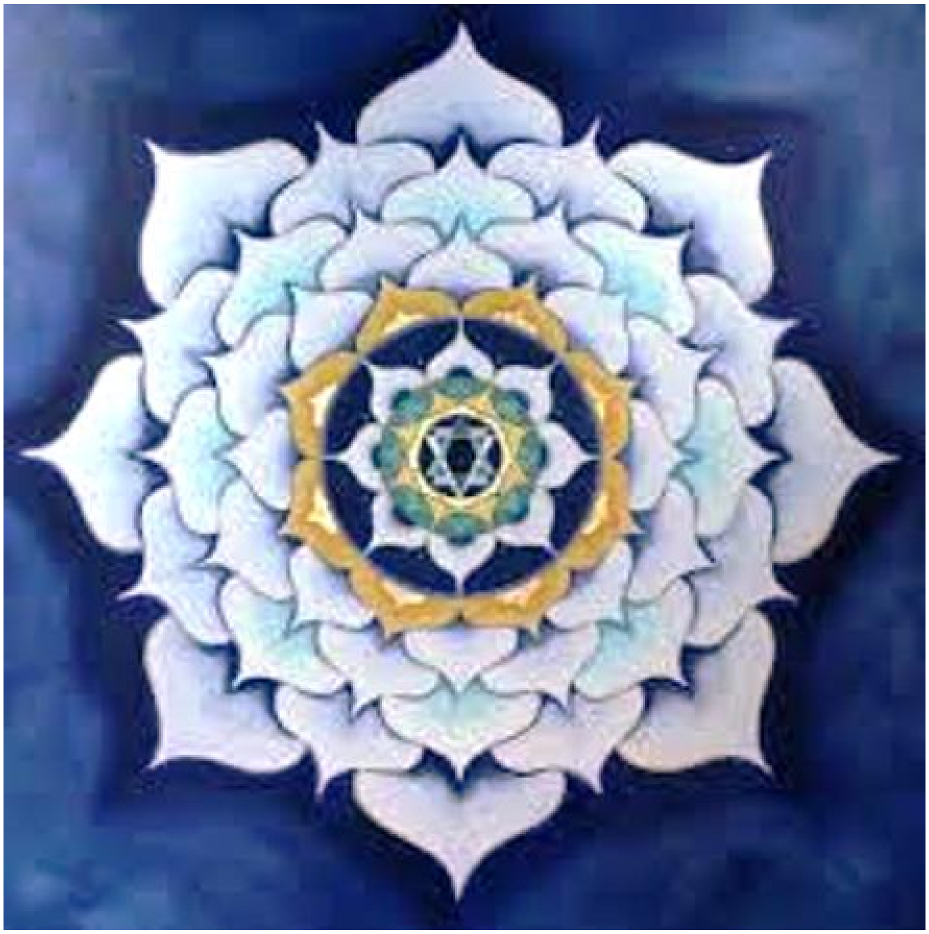
It depicted a snow landscape with mountains in the distance, there were some houses and quite in the foreground a plant with four buds.

The Christ child is emerging from the central flower. [See sketch.)

[3]

This is a purely eastern idea, the god in the lotus and, as far as I know, it is not to be found in this form in medieval art.

[4]



It may also possibly be an effort at syncretism, that is, at introducing the eastern symbol of the lotus into Church iconography. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 19 January 1930

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/14ce8-12brose2bwindow.jpg`
2. `https://philemonfoundation.org/`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/8e6ed-12beth.png`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/92746-12blotus.jpg`

Alfred Torrie Schizophreniform Illness as a Therapeutic Process (2019-11-27 04:30)

ALFRED TORRIE

QUAKERISM AND COMMUNITY CARE

PUBLISHED BY THE FRIENDS HOME SERVICE COMMITTEE, FRIENDS HOUSE, EUSTON ROAD,
LONDON, N.W.1

FOURPENCE

[1]Contact with Jung: Essays on the influence of his work and personality

It was contact with Jung the man and with his work that led me to a study of this subject. The man I met first in 1938.

My training analyst had himself been trained by a pupil of Jung.

My case work was done under the supervision of a present member of the Society of Analytical Psychology.

On the occasion of my first meeting with Jung we had just seen the play Glorious Morning, which dealt with resistance to the Nazi movement. seeing of this play was called by the Professor a ’valid experience’.

I have never understood why Jung (like P. G. Wodehouse) was wrongfully thought to be pro-Nazi.

The next occasion was in the summer of 1947 when I had tea with him at his home in Kusnacht.

Those two hours for me produced a ’valid experience’.

We talked of many things, including the summer conference for which Heinz Westmann and I were responsible, in order to develop Jungian ideas in various walks of life-especially the practice of dialogue, group discussion, and enantiodromia.

Most of the time was given to discussing the group psychotherapy which I was then practising at the Tavistock Clinic.

Jung told me of his experiment before the first world war in the group psychotherapy of schizophrenics in the Burgholzli.

We then talked of the idea which forms the title of this paper.

We now bring about a schizophreniform illness by hallucinogenic drugs. In doing this we accelerate the production of the symbols of transformation.

I have found that enough time must Schizophreniform Illness as a Therapeutic Process be given between the treatments for assimilation and interpretation; not only that the therapist, in dealing with the patient who is revealing archetypes and his shadow side, must himself be aware of his own shadow side.

About five years ago a patient came under my care in the mental hospital where I work. He was thirty-five.

He complained of strange sensations, and felt he was in possession of a power he had never experienced before.

He had the idea that a supernatural female was calling on him to follow her.

He felt that he was soon to die, and that he was the reincarnation of great figures in history.

He was the son of a widow. Felix Brown's studies (1961) have shown that this itself can be a precipitating factor in psychological illness.

This patient was single and, as in most cases of this type, he was frustrated in his effort to attain the major objective in life in terms of his own picture of himself Like others in a similar situation, the problem lay in the field of personal relationships, in which he had an acute sense of failure.

He felt isolated from the group through a social judgement which he pronounced on himself He began to build up in defence a delusional misinterpretation which accompanied his emotional disturbance.

It was manifested at one stage of the illness in a depressive episode in which he lost all interest in the external world and in himself, and felt as if he were dead.

This disturbance was like a febrile illness and was part of the therapeutic process.

Very often these cases proceed to disintegration and the old phase of dementia praecox, true schizophrenia, which Jung believed has a physical factor.

There is, in this type of case, an eruption of unconscious contents interpreted as manifestations of the supernatural.

This phase can be repeated by the hallucinogenic drugs which seem to speed up the unconscious component of the individuation process.

It is important for the patient to have sufficient ego strength to cope with the uprush of the unconscious contents.

To ascertain ego strength, I usually had a Rorschach test done by a psychologist familiar with Jungian techniques.

It is as if the ’self’ had descended into the region of the mind where it was no longer in control but at the mercy of primitive and terrifying ideas and imagery.

My patient had the idea of a coming cataclysm alternating with the feeling of being possessed of great power.

He had ideas of death, catastrophe in the universe, and an identification with the universe. Ideas of rebirth, of having existed before, and of being called upon to do some great work, were also present.

There was a profound regression, which in the end was to be a psychosis that served to clear up problems which had for years been obstructing the normal functioning and development of his personality.

His autochthonous ideas seemed to be the result of his ’journey’ into the deeper layers of his psyche.

The regression into the depths was an attempt to assimilate previously unassimilated areas of his experience.

There was a changing of his old attitudes to a new outlook.

The illness was purposive, and all that one could do was to help ’the integrating factor’ in the transforming of the obstructions to his development.

The patient was seen several times weekly and listened to while he described his bizarre ideas.

These were accepted as part of the recovering process as in any febrile delirium.

He constantly dreamed of himself carrying a mop and pail.

This dream was accompanied by a lightening of his symptoms.

I did not understand it until some time after his discharge, when I learned that he was doing voluntary evening work with a family service unit which catered for problem families.

I was once chairman of such a group of workers, and residential for the same kind of family.

The workers called themselves the ’mop and pail’ brigade, since they visited homes thus equipped, and worked with the families in rehabilitating the ’down-and-out’ homes.

My patient achieved social adaptation.

From being a solitary mother-fixated individual with fears of adaptation to the other sex, he mixed freely in voluntary work with a team of both sexes and was a popular member of the group.

He was no longer shy but able to make satisfactory personal relationships.

Not every such schizophreniform illness has a satisfactory result.

Our mental hospitals are half full of the failures, the drifters, the dreamers, the ineffective Messiahs.

Russell Brain has studied the linkage between emotional instability and genius in Some Reflections on Genius and Other Essays (1960).

The case described seemed to have a preoccupation with religious ideas.

The founder of the Quakers, George Fox, had a Schizophreniform Illness as a Therapeutic Process similar illness which lasted from the age of nineteen to twenty-three.

In this illness he had grandiose delusions, identification with the universe, a feeling of a new birth, deep depression, and thought he had sinned against the Holy Ghost.

He recovered and founded a movement which has had very great influence in proportion to its membership. From being a solemn, self-righteous, obstinate, hyper-sensitive boy he developed courage, great feeling, and a remarkable influence over men.

His symptoms of instability became fewer and fewer, and he became integrated, disciplined, and possessed of an understanding and healthy critical judgement.

He had a brief second schizophreniform episode twenty years later, but recovered to go on and extend his work.

John Bunyan was another religious genius who has left a record of his schizophreniform illness, which was also of four years' duration and occurred in his twenties.

He had alternating hope and despair, and many symptoms similar to those of George Fox, including the feeling of committing the unforgivable sin.

His experience was not so profound. Professor Royce of Harvard (1898) said he had a 'heavy and morbid load of nervous ill'.

Bunyan himself looked on his ilh1ess as constructive and problem solving.

He was not a religious genius in spite of his disabilities, but because of this experience and its outcome in integration.

St. Paul is another who has been studied.

He had a cataclysmic experience which resulted in a reorganization of his life.

He had hallucinations similar to those we find in our L.S.D. cases, followed by a period of three years of confusion and disorder, which resulted in his being instrumental in making Christianity a world-wide religion.

It appears that the stages of disturbance that these men went through accompanied the attainment of some near insight and a reorganization of their personalities.

Jung suggests that the 'daimon' seems to triumph over the 'demon'.

During a period in charge of the Quaker Hospital, The Retreat, in York, I discovered in a visitor's book a comment written by Elizabeth Fry who must have been familiar with all this.

She wrote: ’Treat the insane as if they were sane.’

Over a hundred years ago this was done in The Retreat, and a long follow-up showed that the relapse rate was half what it is today when we rush to relieve symptoms. Alfred Torrie, Contact with Jung, Pages

There is nothing new in this thesis, but Jung gave it a new meaning and a scientific basis.

It was also held by Stack Sullivan (1924), who wrote of patients who before their psychosis had been emotionally unstable, excessively sensitive, and extremely self-conscious, but emerged from the illness open and frank, with previous defects either mitigated or overcome. Alfred Torrie, Contacts with Jung, Pages 82-85

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Contact-Jung-Essays-influence-personality/dp/B0000CLPU0/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=fordham+contact+jung&qid=1574851783&sr=8-1`

Max Knoll’s Letter to Wolfgang Pauli on UFOs. (2019-11-27 04:51)

[1]Atom and Archetype: The Pauli/Jung Letters, 1932-1958

Max Knoll’s Letter to Wolfgang Pauli on UFOs.

M. Knoll to Pauli

Dear Mr. Pauli,

Technische Hochschule Miinchen Institute for Technological Electronics [Munich] . u. 57

[Typewritten carbon copy]

Please excuse our delay in replying, which was due to the start of the new semester and the fact that Ursula had a severe bout of Ru.

Despite that, we were able to have long discussions about the really interesting-albeit far from simple-problems in your letter.

Your first question about the nature of the radar system is easy to answer.

A ground-based radar system for observing aeroplanes consists, for example, of a beamed, rapidly pulsed wave, shaped like a fan which, within one minute of time, scans the whole horizon (360°) in polar coordinates, with the fan beam rising up to 45° above the horizon.

The beaming of this fan and its scanning movement occur through a rotating mirror.

The electromagnetic wave impulses reflected by aeroplanes are detected by a nearby receiver and amplified, their arrival time being dependent on the distance of the reflecting aeroplane.

They then control the grid of a cathode-ray tube, with the ray moving synchronously in polar coordinates; the sky zone being scanned will be projected concentrically onto the screen of the cathode-ray tubes so that the reflecting aeroplanes will appear as light objects against a black background and the observation point corresponds to the center of the screen.

The circuit is so arranged that the objects appearing on the periphery of the screen correspond to the desired maximum distance of observation.

Objects closer to the center of the screen correspond to shorter transit times of the wave impulses and correspondingly shorter distances from the observation point.

Similar radar systems are used for observation from an aeroplane, and they usually just scan one quadrant of the sky or less .

You later ask who persuaded Jung to believe in UFOs.

I do not know, either; you are probably correct when you assume that his American patients are responsible.

Incidentally, in the U.S. Air Force there are not only several pilots but also quite a few senior officers who believe in UFOs.

In fact, 3 years ago one of them gave a lecture on the subject in Princeton (which I did not attend).

It is crucial to bear in mind that the observation of radar images in general is no greater guarantee for the objectivity of the “sighting” of UFO than direct visual sighting; in fact, it is less so, since radar images almost always show a series of “virtual” objects as well as the ones being scanned-e.g., unwanted reflections and the level of the electronic noise of the equipment, with the result that it is very easy to project something onto the screen pattern.

This means that the interpretation of radar images, in the case of objects lying at the limit of measurability, is often very uncertain and more like a Rorschach test, where the structure of the screen pattern is also a “random” one.

Radar images would only be convincing if they were photographed or filmed, so that a number of experts could form an objective opinion as to what are real objects and what are subjective interpretations.

But so far this has not happened.

When we visited Jung at the beginning of this year, he also told us about the so-called confirmation by radar of the existence of UFOs.

I then proceeded to raise the objections cited above.

He listened attentively but then seems to have forgotten what I said.

In the course of our visit on 15 June of this year, he brought up the subject of UFOs again, but this time in relation to their psychological significance for the individuation process, and here (like your) I agree with him.

He then went on to relate that he had seen UFOs on a Nuremberg engraving from the 16th century: ‘ A cylindrical mother ship is releasing disk-shaped daughter ships from a glass tube, like pills from a pillbox.”

In summary, I would like to say that once again Jung must be made to understand that the UFOs seen on radar screens are no more “real” than those sighted directly, and that no definite conclusions can be drawn bout their actual existence except by rear photographs or radar films (examined by experts), and no such material has been published.

Based on the observations that have been made so far, Jung would actually be in a position “to give a convincing denial of the objective existence of UFOs.”

In addition to that, there is no ruling out the possibility-as Ursula points out-that they are American or Russian secret rocket-propelled aircraft.

But even this would not detract from the Jungian concept, since they are clearly defined synchronistic causal chains, probably with psychological processes, perhaps the most remarkable fact being that the disk shape constellated by the unconscious is actually the mot favorable one from the aerodynamic point of view.

I have read reports in illustrated magazines about test models with such disk-shaped, rocket-propelled aircraft (in Canada and France, I believe).

Of course, they are not UFOs.

On the whole, Jung’s basic idea that individuation symbolism is te reason why the UFO myth is so widespread strikes me as quite plausible, although in my opinion, the problem of their “reality without as causal chain” does not exist since there are no reliable sightings.

For the same reason For the same reason. lung’s comparison of a "reality without a causal chain" with the physical system of symmetry (page 2 of his letter [Letter 77, par. 4]) does not seem to fit, whereas the analogy between the individuation process and the physical problem of symmetry (page 3 [ibid.])

I find good, also because of the way in which the characteristic of “orderedness" emerges more clearly in the "wholeness symbols."

The conclusions you drew from your impressions of the international Physics Congress were very convincing for us; it is a pity that we were not able to talk in November, but we had to postpone our visit to Zurich because of Ursula's long and difficult illness (she sends best wishes to you both).

We hope we shall soon be able to come in the new year.

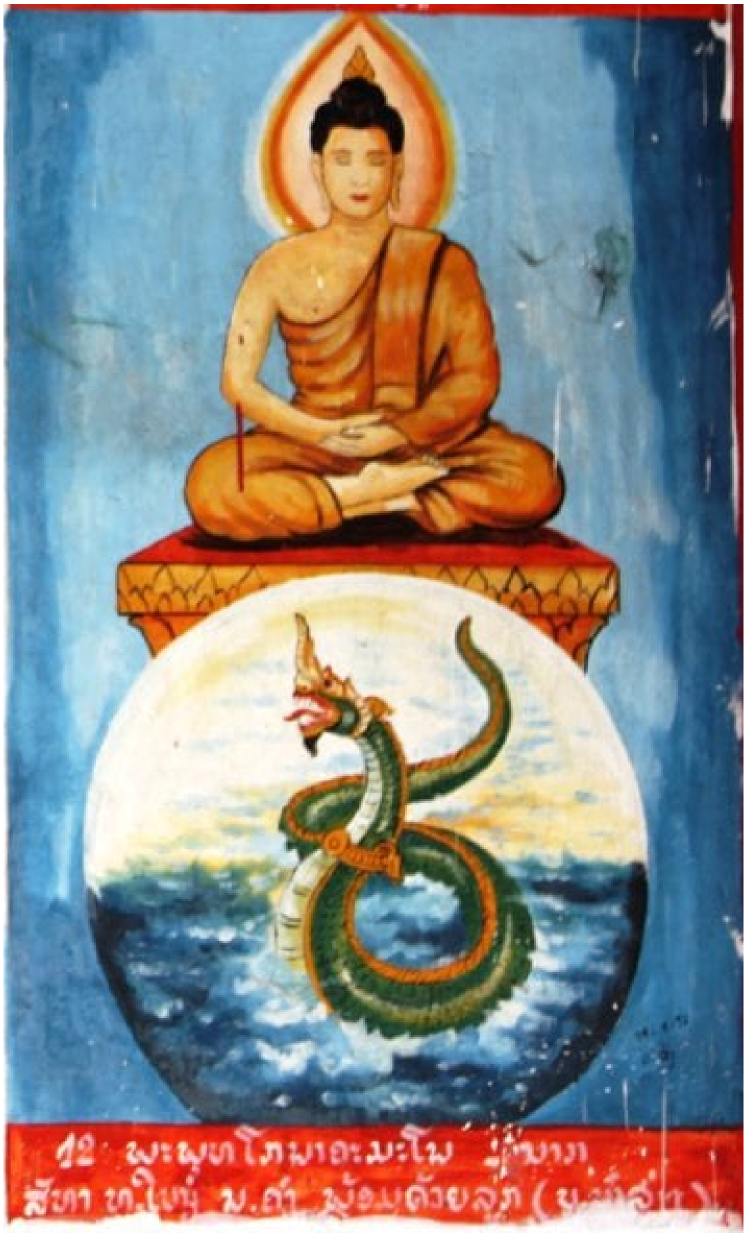
With kind regards, also to Franka,

Yours, MAX KNOLL Max Knoll to Wolfgang Pauli, Atom and Archetype, Pages 200-202

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Atom-Archetype-Letters-1932-1958-Updated/dp/069116147X/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3V4PUU5VVC28P&keywords=atom+and+archetype+the+pauli%2Fjung+letters`

”More especially the threat to one's inmost self from dragons and serpents… (2019-11-27 04:56)

[1]



[2]Aion: Researches into the Phenomenology of the Self (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.9 Part 2)

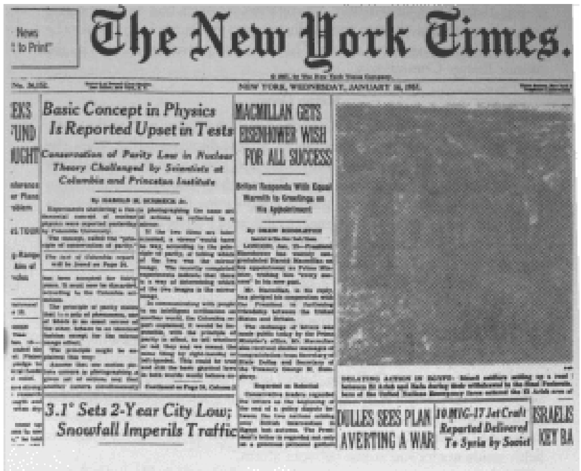
”More especially the threat to one’s inmost self from dragons and serpents points to the danger of the newly acquired consciousness being swallowed up again by the instinctive psyche, the unconscious.” Carl Jung, CW 9i, paragraph 282.

"Some have their reason in thinking, others in feeling. Both are servants of Logos, and in secret become worshipers of the serpent." Carl Jung; Red Book

“The symbols of the self arise in the depths of the body and they express its materiality every bit as much as the structure of the perceiving consciousness. The symbol is thus a living body, corpus et anima.” Carl Jung, CW 9i, paragraph 291.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/1e2a6-serpent.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Aion-Researches-Phenomenology-Collected-Works/dp/069101826X/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+aion&qid=1574851510&sr=8-1`

The meaning of Parity (Mirror Symmetry) by Wolfgang Pauli (2019-11-27 05:04)



The New York Times.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 16, 1957.

Basic Concept in Physics Is Reported Upset in Tests

Conservation of Parity Law in Nuclear Theory Challenged by Scientists at Columbia and Princeton Institute

MACMILLAN GETS EISENHOWER WISH FOR ALL SUCCESS

Briton Responds With Equal Warmth to Greetings on His Appointment

3.1° Sets 2-Year City Low; Snowfall Imperils Traffic

DULLES SEES PLAN AVERTING A WAR

10 MIG-17 Jet Craft Reported Delivered To Syria by Soviet

[1]Atom and Archetype: The Pauli/Jung Letters, 1932-1958

THE MEANING OF PARITY (MIRROR SYMMETRY) by Wolfgang Pauli

The parity law of physics states that for any atomic or nuclear system no new physical consequence or law should result from the construction of a new system, differing from the original by being a mirror twin.

Consider Particle" spinning about a direction M’.

Now construct or find Particle 2, which is chosen to be identical to the mirror image of 1.

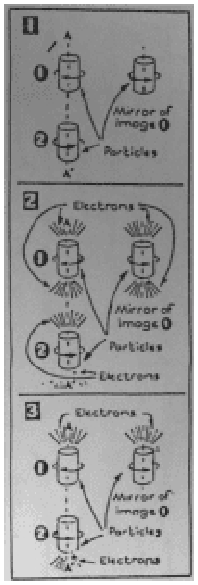
The parity law says that there should be no observable difference between the two particles, 1, and 2, which may be detected by measurements made along direction M’.

This law permits one to make predictions: suppose 1 is radioactive, disintegrating into electrons.

The parity law predicts that equal numbers will be emitted towards A, and A’.

Why? Consider the alternative.

If 1 emits more electrons towards A, 2 must emit more towards A’ since 1 becomes identical to 2 simply by turning it upside down.



1
A
1
Mirror of image 1
2
Particles
A'
2
Electrons
1
Mirror of image 1
2
Particles
Electrons
A'
3
Electrons
1
Mirror of image 1
2
Particles
Electrons
A'

But now 2 is no longer the same as the mirror image of 1.

The physicist observing would make one decision about the relation between the direction of favored electron emission and the spin sense; the physicist in the mirror world would obtain a different answer.

Parity law would have been violated.

For the past thirty years, the special conditions predicted by the philosophically pleasing idea of mirror symmetry have borne fruit, consistently making successful predictions about atomic and nuclear processes.

However a general theory of the structure of matter eluded us.

Then, in the new subject of "strange particles," the K-mesons studied at Brookhaven and Berkeley, the first parity puzzle appeared.

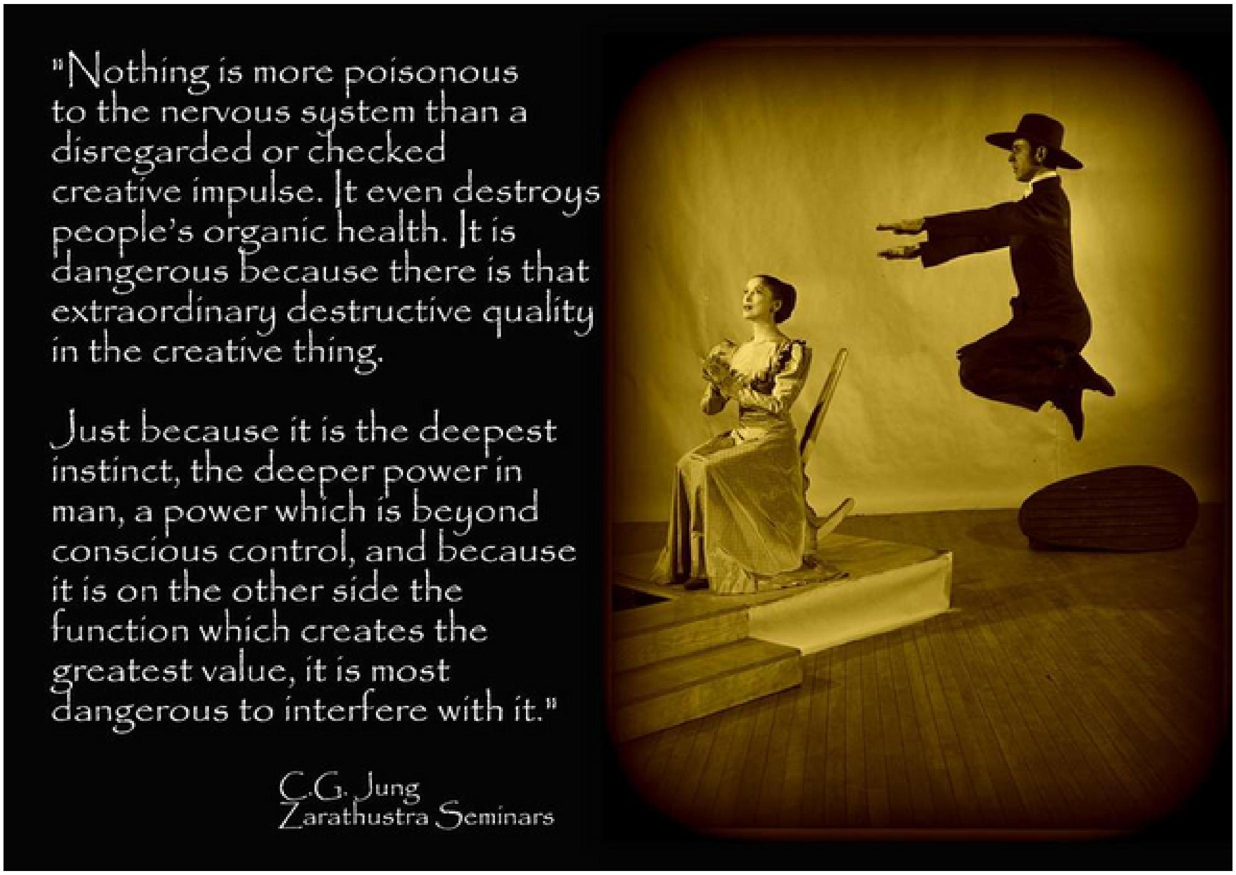
This led to the Lee Yang proposal.

The preferential emission of electrons towards one direction of its spin is the observation that disproved the parity law. Wolfgang Pauli, Atom and Archetype, Pages 225-226

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Atom-Archetype-Letters-1932-1958-Updated/dp/069116147X/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3V4PUU5VVC28P&keywords=atom+and+archetype+the+pauli%2Fjung+letters`

Carl Jung: "Always doth he destroy who hath to be a creator" is true. (2019-11-27 05:17)

[1]



"Nothing is more poisonous to the nervous system than a disregarded or checked creative impulse. It even destroys people's organic health. It is dangerous because there is that extraordinary destructive quality in the creative thing.

Just because it is the deepest instinct, the deeper power in man, a power which is beyond conscious control, and because it is on the other side the function which creates the greatest value, it is most dangerous to interfere with it."

C.G. Jung
Zarathustra Seminars

[2]Jung's Seminar on Nietzsche's Zarathustra

Here the process of thought turns into an enantiodromia.

All that he has said has been true with the sole exception that Nietzsche takes it as the action of consciousness, while we know that our conscious valuation means just nothing.

Try it on your children or on other people, and you will see it is all bunk: it simply won't work. If you say to a child, "My deepest conviction is that this soup is very good," the child doesn't think it is very good: he won't eat it.

When my parents told me that something was very good and wonderful, I thought, "Not a bit of it, it bores me."

"Always doth he destroy who hath to be a creator" is true.

You cannot put something on a table which is already laden; you must first clear those things away in order to put new ones in their place.

And to build a house where an old house stands, you must first destroy the old house.

We must go a bit deeper and realize that with the instinct of creation is always connected a destructive something; the creation in its own essence is also destructive.

You see that quite clearly in the moment when you check the creative impulse; nothing is more poisonous to the nervous system than a disregarded or checked creative impulse.

It even destroys people's organic health.

It is dangerous because there is that extraordinary destructive quality in the creative thing.

Just because it is the deepest instinct, the deeper power in man, a power which is beyond conscious control, and because it is on the other side the function which creates the greatest value, it is most dangerous to interfere with it. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 654.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/63c83-1poisonous.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Jungs-Seminar-Nietzsches-Zarathustra-Jarrett/dp/0691017387/ref=sr_1_2?crid=2Q7P4MVL`

`W79OM&keywords=jung+zarathustra+seminars&qid=157485131`

Wolfgang Pauli: Observations on "Cosmic Rays" as Dream Symbol (2019-11-27 05:27)

[1]Atom and Archetype: The Pauli/Jung Letters, 1932-1958

Pauli’s Observations on Cosmic Rays [Handwritten note from Pauli, undated]

OBSERVATIONS ON "COSMIC RAYS" AS DREAM SYMBOL.

I have long been familiar (U-15 years) with dreams in which other physicists (usually experts in the field of cosmic rays) conduct experiments with these rays (reflection, dispersion of rays, and similar things) .

Frequently, the rays are described as "dangerous; in that they can all cause "bum wounds" (like radioactive rays) .

As a protection against this, the physicists in the dreams indicate "asbestos sheets" (to insulate the body) or a "spin factor" (spin meaning "rotating on its own axis"; "spin factor" here being similar in meaning to "circumambulatio").

The "cosmic rays" in the dreams are not the real cosmic rays of physics.

They are actually supra-personal (archetypal) contents but not yet made more specific.

The dreams under consideration seem to correspond to a relatively early stage of the confrontation of consciousness with other-as yet unknown-contents of this kind.

Let me give one example.

It contains a very favorable indication namely, the "fine structure" of the second line.

What this does is to indicate the beginning of an assimilation of an unconscious content into consciousness.

Example: Dream 7 October 1949

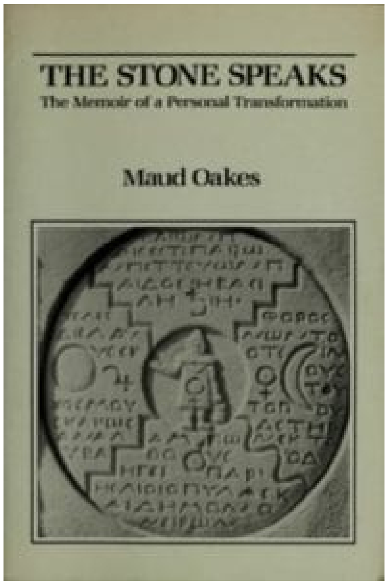
"The physicist H. is present and says that his father is conducting experiments with cosmic rays. They will be made visible by having objects put in their way as obstacles. My wife and I are looking on. Lines appear on a photographic plate, more or less like this: My wife says that she finds it very interesting."

Comment (made at the time):

It is as if "contents" had been sent to me but ricochet off me (scattering), possibly to reappear elsewhere. Wolfgang Pauli, Atom and Archetype, Page 210

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Atom-Archetype-Letters-1932-1958-Updated/dp/069116147X/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3V4PUU5VVC28P&keywords=atom+and+archetype+the+pauli%2Fjung+letters`

Maud Oakes: The Stone Speaks - Quotations (2019-11-27 10:38)



[1]The Stone Speaks: The Memoir of a Personal Transformation

“You Americans don’t know your own heritage. You know nothing about the American Indian!" -fired Maud Oakes with the determination to work with the Navaho shamans whose sand paintings she had read about in an anthropological study. Joseph Henderson, The Stone Speaks, Page x

From [Heinrich] Zimmer, Maud learned the symbolism of the Tarot cards and their use in divination. Joseph Henderson, The Stone Speaks, Page xi

Mary Mellon’s quite unexpected death threatened to end the Bollingen enterprise. Her last words to her husband- "I had so much to do!„-heartened him [Paul Mellon] to carry the Foundation on under the leadership of John Barrett. Joseph Henderson, The Stone Speaks, Page xi

Six months later, while recuperating from an illness [Maud Oakes] she placed a photograph of the [Jung’s]] stone before her as an object of meditation. Joseph Henderson, The Stone Speaks, Page xiii

Miss Oakes who studied Navaho ceremonials and sand paintings understood the need for psychic as well as physical treatment. Joseph Henderson, The Stone Speaks, Page xiii

You understand the stone as a statement about a more or less limitless world of thought-images. I quite agree with your view. One can read the symbols like that. When I hewed the stone I did not think, however. I just brought into shape what I saw on its face. Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, xvi

You have not interpreted a dream or fantasy correctly if you merely tell the patient something he already knows. Only if you can enable him to learn something about himself he does not know, and this knowledge can be verified as indispensable for the progress of his therapy, has your interpretation succeeded. Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, xviii

My father became very ill with cancer. Tommy and I stayed in the country with Cece [My Governess]. We were taken to see Father lying in a large double bed. He looked so thin and pale that I knew he was very ill and felt very sad. One night I dreamt that my father walked out the door of the town house and waved good-bye to me and rose into the sky. I woke Cece and told her the dream. It was 6 A.M., so we stayed abed. Around eight the trained nurse called and told Cece that my father had died around 4 A.M. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page xxv

Henry Miller said "I have been debating whether or not to give you the message I received this morning. As I sat at my work table thinking over my plans for the day a voice spoke to me saying, ’I have a message for Maud Oakes.’ On the other side of the table I saw an elderly woman resembling Madame Blavatsky [the famous psychic] who had come to me before in fantasy. Her message was that if you went to Peru you would experience danger, despair, destruction, disillusionment and disaster. In the end however, things would change and there would be some kind of marriage." Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 2

It was as I imagined one of the circles of Dante’s Inferno to be. I had read that the ancient Peruvians had buried their dead along this coastal desert north and south of Lima. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 4

Although there was much to see and enjoy in the short visit with Dr. and Mrs. Jung, it was Jung himself, and especially what he had carved on the central face of a stone placed in his walled garden, that captured me and remained most clearly in my thoughts. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 12

I wondered how Mrs. Jung coped with this primitive kitchen, where the only way to cook was over charcoal, and all water had to be pumped from an outdoor well. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 12

Erica Anderson showed me a small photograph she had taken of the mandala-face of Jung's curved Stone. It seemed to jump out at me! There was no doubt that it was an "Opener of the Door." It spoke to me and seemed to say, "I am a Stone that heals makes whole, if you become aware of my significance for you." Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 13

At times it was a difficult and subjective experience not unlike an analysis, for it seemed that I had made a transference to the Stone in the way an analysand transfers expectations for a basic change onto the analyst. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 14

My friends, how can I help you? I realize how difficult your task is. The Stone is nothing. I am not an artist; I did it to amuse myself. It is a holiday thing-as if I sang a song. Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Page 15

How can I help you? I don't know who I am. I am the last person to tell you who I am. I'm invisible. I am nothing; I am an old man. I no longer lie. Once perhaps, I had to, as a young scientist without a reputation. Now I no longer lie. What I have to say is so simple that it is hard to understand; it is refused. It is so far away ahead of now. It cannot be shown to those who do not think. In Switzerland my books seem to reach the most unlikely people-uneducated people. Truth is like water; it passes all barriers. Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Pages 15-16

In Switzerland my books seem to reach the most unlikely people-uneducated people. Truth is like water; it passes all barriers. Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Page 16

I hope I have given you some ideas of what I am." Then he [Jung] looked directly at me, saying, "I need not have written any books; it is all on the Stone." Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Page 16

Dear Miss Oakes, January 31, 1956

As you can imagine, I am quite astonished to hear about your project although I am fully aware of the fact that an imaginative person could easily write not one but several volumes about my stone. All the volumes I had written are "in nuce" contained in it. The mandala itself is just a sort of hieroglyph, hinting at and trying to express a vast background in a most abbreviated form. Your method to realize its contents through your subjective experience is unexceptionable, as a matter of fact the only correct way of reading its message. That is just the virtue of symbolic expression that it can be read in many different ways by many different individuals. And if they are honest, the reading will be correct. Thus, as you see, I am prepared for the shock to get the MS about a thing most emphatically belonging to my innermost self. I only ask you to be patient with the slow ways of old age-Deo concedente you will get an answer.-Inshallah! [If God Wills It.] Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 17-18

Dear Miss Oakes, February 2, 1956

I have read your meditation about the stone with much interest. Your method of reading its messages is adequate and in this case the only one yielding positive results. You understand the stone as a statement about a more or less limitless world of thought-images. I quite agree with your view. One can read the symbols like that. When I hewed the stone I did not think, however. I just brought into shape what I saw on its face. Sometimes you express yourself (in the MS), as if my symbols and my text were sort of a confession of a belief. Thus it looks as if I were moving in the vicinity of Theosophy. In America, especially, one blames me for my so-called mysticism. Since I don't claim at all to be the happy proprietor of metaphysical truths, I should prefer that you attribute to my symbols the same tentativeness which characterizes your explanatory attempts. You see, I have no religious or otherwise convictions about my symbols. They can change tomorrow. They are mere allusions, they hint at something, they stammer and often lose their way. They try only to point in a certain direction, viz. to those dim horizons beyond which lies the secret of existence. They are just no Gnosis, no metaphysical assertions. They are partly even futile or dubious attempts at pronouncing the ineffable. Their number therefore is infinite and the validity of each is to be doubted. They are nothing but humble attempts to formulate, to define, to shape the inexpressible. "Wo fass ich Dich, unendliche Natur?" (Faust) It is not a doctrine, but a mere expression of and a reaction to the experience of an ineffable mystery. There is one point more I want to mention: the stone is not a product only of thought images, but just as much of feeling and local atmosphere i.e. of the specific ambiente of the place. The stone belongs to its secluded place between the lake and hill where it expresses the beata solitudo and the genius loci the spell of the chosen and walled-in spot. It could be nowhere else and cannot be thought of or properly understood without the secret web of threads that relate to its surroundings. Only there in its solitude it can say: Orphanus sum and only there it makes sense. It is there for its own sake and only seen by a few. Under such conditions only the stone will whisper its misty lore of ancient roots and ancestral lives. Thank you for letting me see your typescript. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages, 18-19

Through my transference to the Stone it became humanized by contact with the man. Jung then became the carrier of the Self for me. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 20

Mrs. Jung was a positive feminine figure who as Jung’s wife insured that my transference would not be misunderstood as being purely personal. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 20

I felt that Jung had built two houses in one his inner house and Bollingen, the latter being an outer expression of an inner process. Moreover,

Bollingen was created in the way a true artist creates a work of art. It was done with love, and I felt this. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 21

I touched it [The Stone] with my hand the way I would a well loved friend and thought "You are an Opener of the Door, unlike earlier stones that Jung carved for his house. They were prospective but you are retrospective of what Jung discovered and experienced and what he goes back to in thought." Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 22

In reference to my manuscript Jung said "Yes, you have done it." When I then asked his permission to publish it he said, "Yes, in America, but not in Europe until after my death." Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 22

When it was time for me to leave, Dr. Jung and I stood silently gazing at the Stone. He then conducted me to the gate. His last words were a suggestion that I visit the prehistoric caves at Lascaux in France. My cousin Jerome and I went to Lascaux a month later. I will always be thankful to Dr. Jung for this great experience. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 23

I felt that I became a participant in the prehistoric ritual [Lascaux], overpowered by the beautiful paintings. I understood in a new way what Jung called the collective unconscious as a world of archetypal images. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 24

Dear Miss Oakes, October 3, 1957

Since you want to hear my opinion about your essay on the stone1 I should say that I find it a bit too intellectual inasmuch as it considers the thought-images only, but as I have already called your attention to its ambiente, I miss the all-important feeling tone of the phenomenon. This is of exclusively artistic consideration, but if you want to do justice to the stone, you have to pay particular attention to the way, in which it is embedded in its surroundings: the water1 the hills1 the view1 the peculiar atmosphere of the buildings, the nights and days1 the seasons, sun, wind and rain and man living close to the earth, and yet remaining conscious in daily meditation of everything being just so. The air round the stone is filled with harmonies and disharmonies, with memories of times long ago, of vistas into the dim future with reverberations of a world far away, yet the so-called real world, into which the stone has fallen out of nowhere. A strange revelation and admonition. Try and dwell in this wholeness for a while and see what happens to you. Sincerely yours, C. G. Jung Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Page 25

The Marn Indians with whom I lived in Guatemala feel that every stone contains a spirit. On the summit of one of their holy mountains the shamans and prayer-makers worship a sacred stone in the form of a bird. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 27

In a trance, I laid my head against its hard, cold surface and asked the spirit of the Stone to give me of its mana. The Stone sank down, down within me, rather like a sinker on a fishing line. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 28

To Lao Tzu the Uncarved Block is a symbol of our own original nature; I must return to my "original nature" by the way of the carved Stone. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 28

For years I had kept a record of my dreams and even illustrated them, trying to understand what they were telling me. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 28

In New Mexico I have seen Navaho medicine men heal patients with mandala-form sand paintings, in the same way that Jung’s Stone healed me. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 29

The analysand may eventually discover and experience his own mandala, "an inner representation of the soul." This was not difficult for me to imagine, for I could see and feel the hypnotic power that came to me from Jung’s mandala. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 30

I compare Jung’s explorations and discoveries to those of an archeologist, one who finds an ancient temple overgrown by a vast and unknown jungle. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 30

"Our psyche is part of nature, and its enigma is as limitless. Thus we cannot define either the psyche or nature. We can merely state what we believe them to be and describe, as best we can, how they function." Carl Jung, Man and His Symbols, Page 23.

If the human [soul] is anything it must be of unimaginable complexity and diversity, so that it cannot possibly be approached through a mere psychology of instinct. I can only gaze with wonder and awe at the depths and heights of our psychic nature. Its non-spatial universe conceals an untold abundance of images which have accumulated over millions of years of living development and become fixed in the organism. My consciousness is like an eye that penetrates to the most distant spaces, yet it is the psychic non-ego that fills them with nonspatial images. And these images are not pale shadows, but tremendously powerful psychic factors. . . . Beside this picture I would like to place the spectacle of the starry heavens at night, for the only equivalent of the universe within is the universe without; and just as I reach this world through the medium of the body, so I reach that world through the medium of the psyche. Carl Jung, MDR, Page 399

It seemed perfectly natural to me that Jung’s Stone mandala should be an Opener of the Door and that the little figure in the center-his discovered treasure1 the end of his treasure hunt should represent my inner journey’s beginning. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 32

At the time I did not understand fully the mystery of my animal visitors. I can see now, however, that the healing help I needed came to me at the instinctual animal stratum of my psyche. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 36

After breakfast I walked in the grass to the back of the house, and cried out in amazement when I came upon a good-sized turtle. I then remembered a Chinese painting of a turtle supporting the world on its back, and I wondered if this turtle had come to hold up my tottering world. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 36

I remember my mother once saying: "Anyone who has a physical relationship to their own sex should be locked up in an insane asylum." As I have an inquisitive nature, this remark did not deter me from experimentation. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 37

So, to find out for myself, I had a few affairs, not only with men but also with a woman. Unfortunately, all these people were not only as unconscious as I was, but also as inexperienced as I in the art of love and sexual expression. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 38

We are born out of the maternal fluid of the womb and out of the living waters of the unconscious. Speaking of his theory regarding the primary source of life energy, Dr. Szent Gyorgi, one of the world's foremost biochemists, says: "The body's water ceases to be just a neutral medium and becomes part of the living material, part of the living machine, part of the basic life process. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 39

The Taoists believed that from the low came the high, that "Tao, like water 'takes the low ground,'" and that the low ground is the "dwelling-place of Tao. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 40

The collective unconscious, on the other hand, is the fathomless core of the globe, the inner circle within which the child Mercury stands. And these two circles, the inner and the outer, remind me now of the experience I had later under the influence of LSD. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 40

I see the unconscious as an artesian well. To dig this well, I would have to penetrate with great difficulty an outer stratum of rocky, sandy soil, a layer that symbolizes all the personal memories that would be forgotten or repressed. Beneath it, there would lie an immeasurable depth represented by a stratum of rock. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 40

As the evolution of the embiyonic body repeats its prehistory, so the mind also develops through a series of prehistoric stages. The main task of dreams is to bring back a sort of 'recollection' of the prehistoric, as well as the infantile world, right down to the level of the most primitive instincts. Carl Jung, Man and His Symbols, Pages 98-99.

What we properly call instincts are physiological urges, and are perceived by the senses. But at the same time, they also manifest themselves in fantasies and often reveal their presence only by symbolic images. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 41

Jung thought of this energy as "a psychic analogue of physical energy." Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 42

When I look back on my childhood, I realize that most of my training and education were suited for a sensory or outer world existence on]y. My inner world was almost completely neglected. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 42

While I was engrossed in thinking of the opposites a voice seemed to say to me: "Look at me in the center of Jung’s Stone. I stand between the opposites. As the center of this mandala I am between the four radiating lines of energy. I am between the Moon and the Sun and Jupiter and Venus; Mars is beneath my feet and Saturn is above my head. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Pages 43-44

"Every step forward, even the smallest, along the path of consciousness, adds to the world, to the visible and tangible God. There is no consciousness without the distinguishing of opposites." Carl Jung, Man and His Symbols, Page 69.

An extrovert like myself has a compass only in the outer world. An introvert has one in his or her special world1 the inner world. The challenge is to develop a compass that will function in both worlds. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 44

My dominant function, I learned, is sensation; accordingly, my inferior function is intuition, that inner function that apprehends directly what is in the future or what arises from within. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 44

Thinking is my third function, and I am now trying to cultivate it. When I was in analysis, I noticed that I always seemed to make new friends with thinking-intuitive people-my opposites. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 45

With Dr. L., my medicine man, I moved spirally into the dark, mysterious, magic world of the unconscious. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 61

I felt like the Sumerian Goddess lnanna, who had to pass through the seven gates of the Underworld. At each portal she had to shed one of her worldly garments before she was allowed to pass on. Finally, she stood naked before the dreaded Queen of the Underworld. Her sentence was death; death with no guarantee of rebirth. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 61

Lao Tzu said: "We put thirty spokes together and call it a wheel; but it is on the space where there is nothing that the utility of the wheel depends." Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 62

Again I heard the voice: "I am the Spirit of the Stone. I am as important to you as I was to my carver-creator Jung. Now is the time to tum away from me and rediscover me again within yourself." "But I need you," I said aloud. "I can’t give you up when I have just found you."

"I shall always be here; for I am within you and outside you and all about you, as you will soon know." Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 64

The analyst was not only my human guide, but also my animus in the role of medicine man, priest, and phantom lover. To me he was "my man/’ the recipient of my deepest feelings. My whole life revolved around him. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Pages 64-65

In 1941 I lived for six months on the outskirts of the Navajo reservation twenty-two miles from Gallup, New Mexico, before the Indians accepted me. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 74

the dream I told Jung when I visited him at Kusnacht in 1953.

In the dream I was sitting nude on yellow female pollen in a holy medicine basket. The Navaho Wind God was looking down at me. When I told this dream to the medicine man I was working with at the time, he said, "It is a good dream. If you were a Navaho I would give a prayer over you." "What difference does it make, I would like a prayer,» I said. So he recited the prayer sprinkling me with holy pollen as he gave it. It was then and during the Purifying Rite that my femininity was born and I removed my mask, or the persona, as Jung calls it, and became myself. The Indians felt this and accepted me as a friend, a woman friend they could trust. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 75

When the spiral-shaped sperm cell with its male and female chromosomes penetrates the female egg it is like the snake line of the Stone entering the inner circle in which Mercury stands it is similar also to the line that divides the Yang and Yin of the Taoists. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 48

My mother was a wonderful woman. She had great dignity and inner beauty and was admired and loved by those who knew her. But there was very little affection between us; she was so introverted that she was unable to express her feelings. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 49

Latin was not a favorite subject with me, so the day I was asked to conjugate pigo I stood up and said, "Pigo, pigire, squeelie, gruntum." I was dismissed from the class and sent home with a letter to my mother from the principal Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 49

However, in giving up communion I did not tum my back on God or Christ. I believed deeply within myself in a God, in a force or something beyond my comprehension. It was just the automatic way religion was presented to me that I could not accept. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 50

A mother and daughter were dining at a table near mine, and the daughter looked older than the mother. Her sad, lost expression and her drained, dry, sexless body horrified me, and I knew that this must not happen to Maud Oakes. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 54

This spiritual journey of mine, which lasted seven years, opened vast new horizons and afforded me much needed training in the fields of mythology, symbolism, and theosophy. But those who helped me the most were the Indians. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 54

It never ceased to amaze me that my outer activities always seemed to lead me into tense personal situations, like falling in love, or its opposite. These interpersonal dynamics were necessary at the time for my inner development. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 58

How strange that it is taken for granted that man can travel to the moon and can delve into other worlds on drugs, yet some people still consider it abnormal for anyone to enter analysis in order to explore regions of the psyche. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 70

Thinking is my third function, and I am now trying to cultivate it. When I was in analysis, I noticed that I always seemed to make new friends with thinking-intuitive people-my opposites. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 45

My dominant function, I learned, is sensation; accordingly, my inferior function is intuition, that inner function that apprehends directly what is in the future or what arises from within. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 44

When I reentered the hogan, Wilito gave me a new name, "Gleniba," she who walks with her friends. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 71

He is the hero who has to kill the dragon of the underworld, an ordeal and trial of strength. For a woman it is the gradual realization of her identity as a woman, an awakening to consciousness. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 73

Without thought I spoke up. "I am very much aware of the mythology of the Indians" I said, "and I would give anything to be able to record the myths and sand··paintings of the Navaho." Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 74

Every step forward, even the smallest, along the path of consciousness, adds to the world, to the visible and tangible God. There is no consciousness without the distinguishing of opposites. Carl Jung, Man and His Symbols, Page 69.

An integral part of individuation is the theme of death for rebirth. It entails great suffering and a strong desire to attain a new approach to life1 a new personality, and, finally, inner and outer freedom. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 77

According to Jung, the feminine aspect of a man the anima produces moods, while the male aspects of a woman, the animus, produces opinions. " ... [As] the moods of a man issue from a shadowy background, so the opinions of a woman rest on equally unconscious prior assumptions." Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 79

T. S. Eliot: "And any action is a step to the block to the fire down the sea's throat. Or to an illegible stone; and that is where we start." Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 92

In my horoscope, Leo is the rising sign. Jung himself was a Leo, and this is another reason I felt so strong an affinity for him and the Stone. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 93

For me Jupiter also represented Jung, Dr. L., and all medicine men and shamans who have insight into the veiled mysteries of Life. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 94

Venus was also an initiating goddess of the mysteries, and as the soul-temptress of man she was an enchanting, seducing, orgiastic woman. Venus is an important symbol for me. She stands for much of what was left out of my earlier sense of identity. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 95

'It is a remarkable fact that perhaps the majority of cosmogonic gods are of a bisexual nature. The hermaphrodite means nothing but a union of the strongest and most striking opposites.' Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, 98

"The Stone does not belong to me. You might have come by boat and stepped into the garden to photograph it." Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Page 85

The Navaho never kill a snake, since they believe that a god might inhabit its body. That serpents move without legs in an undulating manner, that they are cold-blooded, and can strike, bite, and kill, make them a perfect symbol for the dark unconscious life of man. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 89

I was walking with an animus figure. The serpent ball shows a real block, a trauma at a deep instinctual level, since a serpent can symbolize the Earth Mother, she who rules the animal world of the instincts. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 90

Jung once told me that the mandala that he carved on the Stone was the eye of a fish and that in the small circle one can see his own reflection. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 102

When I lived with the Indians, time seemed not to exist. It had no importance. I was part of nature, one with natur and so experienced still another type of time: eternal time eternity that has no beginning nor end. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 104

The last line on the central face of the Stone [Jung's] is a quotation from Homer: 'He points the way to the Gates of the Sun.'" Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 108

The cross, or whatever other heavy burden the hero carries, is himself, or rather the self, his wholeness, which is both God and animal-not merely the empirical man, but the totality of his being, which is rooted in his animal nature and reaches out beyond the merely human towards the divine. Carl Jung, CW 13, Par 284.

The saying of Maria Prophetissa is: One becomes two, two becomes three, and out of the third comes the one as the fourth." When Jung first spoke to me of the prophecy, when I was at Kusnacht with Jerome in 1953, I showed him a color photograph reproduced in Life magazine of the life-cell division, and I asked if it wasn't like the saying of Maria. "Yes," he answered, "only the reverse. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 116

The necessity of the <ten thousand things' unifying themselves, that is, the Four that is One becomes the Three, the Three becomes the Two, the Two gives birth to the One. You see," he added, "in the middle of a person's life, when the birth process is finished, the reverse must begin to take place. And here we can have some control." Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 166

At Kusnacht I had asked Jung what he felt about numbers and he had said1 "Yes numbers! Numbers have always existed within and without. Maybe they existed before the world was created. Many people have questioned whether numbers were invented or discovered. They were of course, discovered. America was not invented; it was discovered. It has been there all along. You know, fantasy is always in the act of becoming fact.

Fantasy remains fantasy until man needs it and then he makes it fact. He won't believe it until it is fact." Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 123

If the individual is to develop and consolidate his ego, the 'mother' as the symbol of the darkness of unconsciousness must first be destroyed by the bright light of youthful consciousness, symbolized by the sun's rays or by the arrow, sword, or club. Jolandi Jacobi, The Stone Speaks, Page 52

The development of modern art with its seemingly nihilistic trend towards disintegration must be understood as the symptom and symbol of a mood of universal destruction and renewal that has set its mark on our age. This mood makes itself felt everywhere, politically, socially, and philosophically. We are living in what the Greeks called the Kmp6<;the right moment-for a "metamorphosis of the gods," of the fundamental principles and symbols. This peculiarity of our time, which is certainly not of our conscious choosing, is the expression of the unconscious man within us who is changing. Carl Jung, CW 10, § 585.

A story told by the conscious mind has a beginning, a development, and an end, but the same is not true of a dream. Its dimensions in time and space are quite different; to understand it you must examine it from every aspect-just as you may take an unknown object in your hands and tum it over and over until you are familiar with every detail of its shape. Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Page 57

The meaning and the purpose of the process is the realization in all its aspects of the personality originally hidden away in the embryonic germ-plasm; the production and unfolding of the original1 potential wholeness. Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Page 69

It is built on the premise that the cosmos and man in the last analysis obey the same law; that man is a microcosm and is not· separated from the macrocosm by any fixed barriers. The very same laws rule for the one as for the other and from the one a way leads into the other. The psyche and the cosmos are to each other like the inner world and the outer world. Therefore man participates by nature in all cosmic events, and is inwardly as well as outwardly interwoven with them. Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Page 71-72

I remember a dream I had when I was living with the Mam Indians of Guatemala. I had been with them six months, and was trying to establish a rapport with them and particularly with the shamans, the medicine men. Every night I prayed for help, and finally it came. It was night and I was in a sort of village square. On my right was a fountain with no water in it. A very old man approached me1 dressed in the Mam costume, and he said: "I want you to take the male lead in a play that I am going to present." I said, "But how can I take the male lead when I am a woman?" He repeated what he had said. I looked down and saw I was dressed in a Mam Indian male costume, so I agreed. At that moment water began to rise upward in the fountain (source of the waters of life). Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 79

With my eyes still closed, I pictured the Stone's mandala face very clearly in my mind. Hermes, with Mercury on his tunic, was between the Sun and the Moon and four other planetary symbols, making seven archetypal images. I knew that I must look on them with great care and be constantly aware that their message for me, a woman, is different from what they symbolize for Jung, a man. It was also possible that some of these symbols wouldn't speak to me at all. Collectively, they are "The Sacred Seven of the Heavenly Bodies," the inspiration for countless myths and gods that man has worshipped as a close family. In my research I had found an even more interesting fact: All these gods have in some way been worshipped as, or connected with, stones. Kronos-Saturn was fated to be overcome by Zeus-Jupiterj he was tricked into swallowing a stone wrapped in swaddling clothes that he thought was his son. Zeus-Jupiter was worshipped in the form of a stone that was used in the taking of oaths, as we use the Bible. Aphrodite-

Venus was worshipped in the form of a dorm or a conical stone, either black or white in color, showing the negative and positive sides of her nature.

Ares-Mars was knocked down by a stone thrown by Athena-Minerva during the battle of the gods. Hermes-Mercury was also worshipped as a herm, a carved stone placed on roads to protect the traveler. The Sun-god, Mithra, was born from a stone and the earliest representation of the moon in the form of a cone. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, 91-92

At one time I took a great interest in art. I painted myself, sculpted and did wood carving. I have a certain sense of color. When modern art came on the scene, it presented a great psychological problem for me. Then I wrote about Picasso and Joyce. I recognized there something which is very unpopular, namely the very thing which confronts me in my patients.1

It was as I imagined one of the circles of Dante's Inferno to be. I had read that the ancient Peruvians had buried their dead along this coastal desert north and south of Lima. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 4

At times it was a difficult and subjective experience not unlike an analysis, for it seemed that I had made a transference to the Stone in the way an analysand transfers expectations for a basic change onto the analyst. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 14

Our psyche is part of nature, and its enigma is as limitless. Thus we cannot define either the psyche or nature. We can merely state what we believe them to be and describe, as best we can, how they function. Carl Jung, Man and His Symbols, Page 23

As the evolution of the embryonic body repeats its prehistory, so the mind also develops through a series of prehistoric stages. The main task of dreams is to bring back a sort of 'recollection' of the prehistoric, as well as the infantile world, right down to the level of the most primitive instincts. Carl Jung, Man and His Symbols, Pages 98-99.

What we properly call instincts are physiological urges, and are perceived by the senses. But at the same time, they also manifest themselves in fantasies and often reveal their presence only by symbolic images. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 41

Jung thought of this energy as a psychic analogue of physical energy. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 42

When I look back on my childhood, I realize that most of my training and education were suited for a sensory or outer world existence on]y. My inner world was almost completely neglected. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 42

An extrovert like myself has a compass only in the outer world. An introvert has one in his or her special world the inner world. The challenge is to develop a compass that will function in both worlds. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 44 2f

Early that morning, I dreamt that I saw my father walking out the front door of our town house. He waved to me and said good-by as he vanished upward. Waking my nurse, I told her the dream. Afterwards she checked the time of my father's death and found that it was approximately at the time of my dream. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Pages 48-49

It [Individuation] is not a withdrawal from life but life itself-a way between man-the-seen and his soul-the-unseen. It is a way of death-and-rebirth transformation toward experiencing wholeness. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 69

To me, individuation was an initiation, a sacred experience that should not be discussed. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 69

While I was engrossed in thinking of the opposites a voice seemed to say to me: "Look at me in the center of Jung's Stone. I stand between the opposites. As the center of this mandala I am between the four radiating lines of energy. I am between the Moon and the Sun and Jupiter and Venus; Mars is beneath my feet and Saturn is above my head. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Pages 43-44

It may well be the most primitive element of order in the human mind. . . . That numbers have an arcetypal foundation is not, by the way, a conjecture of mine but of certain mathematicians .... Hence it is not such an audacious conclusion after all if we define number psychologically as an archetype of order which has become conscious." 1 Chapter XI

When I had questioned Jung about the symbolism of the foundation, he said, "The whole base was constructed on the bases of six and two. Six had the implication of Venus-the feminine-her number. It also represented the Star of David. The Stone’s foundation had three levels: the first level of six rocks; on top of them two rocks; and surmounting them the Stone as One itself." Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 125

Jung also said: union of opposites in the stone is possible only when the adept has become One himself. The unity of the stone is the equivalent of individuation, by which man is made one i we would say that the stone is a projection of the unified self . . . the stone is a transcendent unity." Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Pages 131-132

It is most significant that on Jung’s Stone there is one uncarved face. He must have had an important reason to leave that face of emptiness-perhaps to allow things to happen. Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 133

"You see” he said "four divisions into four-four parts: here are three lightnings and one river. Three were supposed to be equal and one had a double meaning and that’s the one here1 the river1 and this is an old alchemist secret, the so-called Axioma Maria. This has played a veiy great role through seventeen hundred years of alchemy." . Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 115

Here stands the mean, uncomely stone,

’Tis very cheap in price I

The more it is despised by fools,

The more loved by the wise. Arnaldus de Villanova

The Stone which the builders rejected has become the head of the comer.

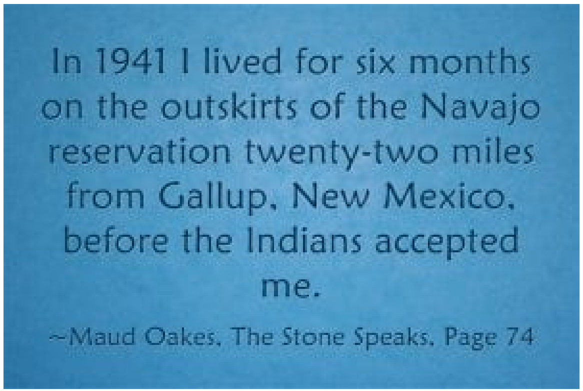
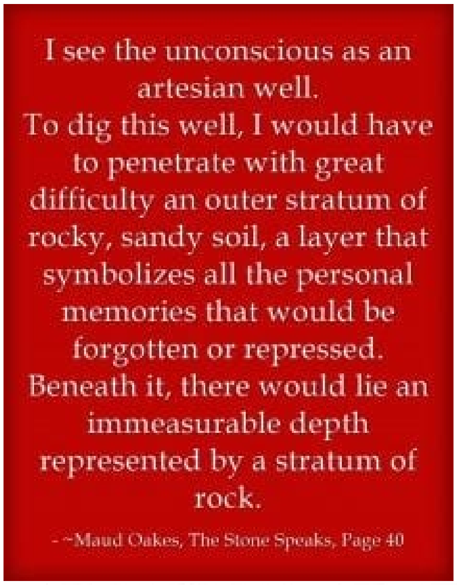
This is the Lord’s doing;

it is marvelous in our eyes. Psalms 118:22



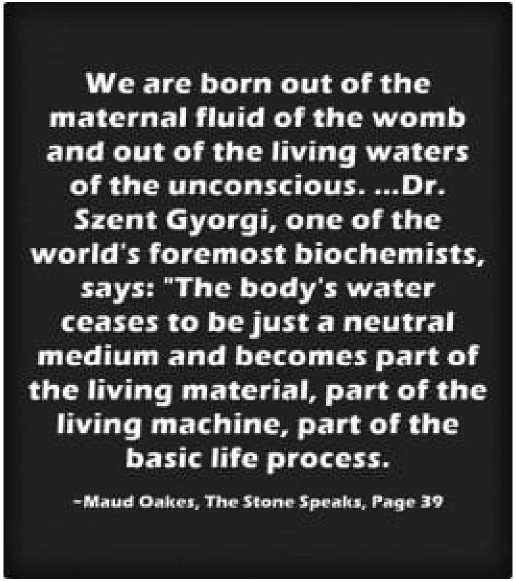
In 1941 I lived for six months on the outskirts of the Navajo reservation twenty-two miles from Gallup, New Mexico, before the Indians accepted me.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 74



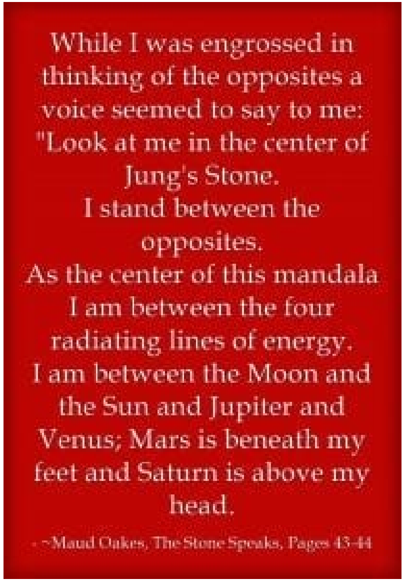
I see the unconscious as an artesian well.
To dig this well, I would have to penetrate with great difficulty an outer stratum of rocky, sandy soil, a layer that symbolizes all the personal memories that would be forgotten or repressed.
Beneath it, there would lie an immeasurable depth represented by a stratum of rock.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 40



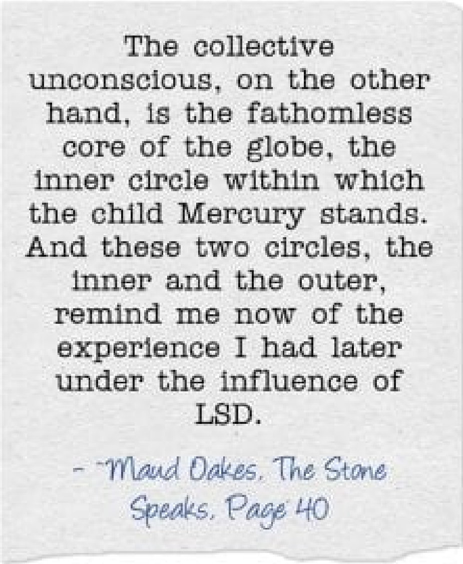
We are born out of the maternal fluid of the womb and out of the living waters of the unconscious. ...Dr. Szent Gyorgi, one of the world's foremost biochemists, says: "The body's water ceases to be just a neutral medium and becomes part of the living material, part of the living machine, part of the basic life process.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 39



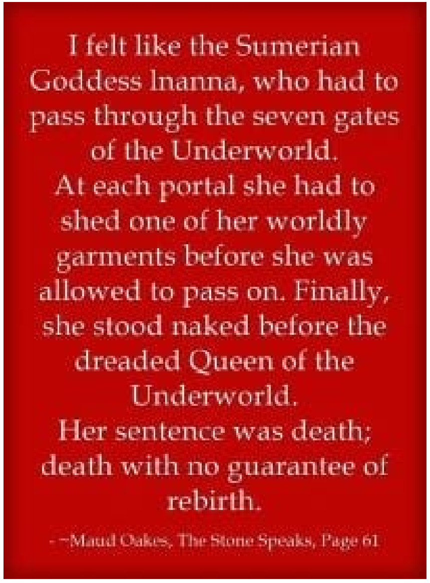
While I was engrossed in thinking of the opposites a voice seemed to say to me: "Look at me in the center of Jung's Stone.
I stand between the opposites.
As the center of this mandala I am between the four radiating lines of energy.
I am between the Moon and the Sun and Jupiter and Venus; Mars is beneath my feet and Saturn is above my head.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Pages 43-44



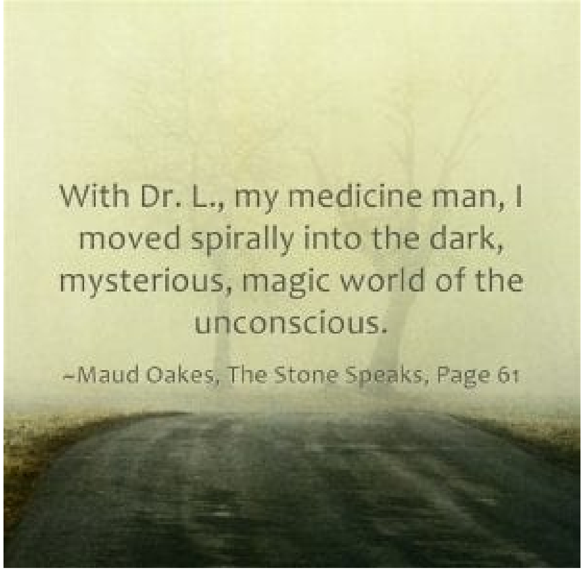
The collective unconscious, on the other hand, is the fathomless core of the globe, the inner circle within which the child Mercury stands. And these two circles, the inner and the outer, remind me now of the experience I had later under the influence of LSD.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 40



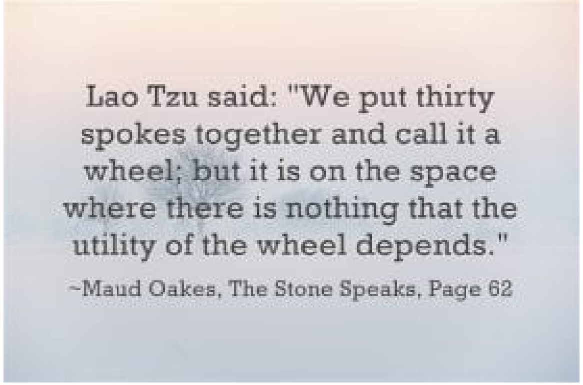
I felt like the Sumerian Goddess Inanna, who had to pass through the seven gates of the Underworld.
At each portal she had to shed one of her worldly garments before she was allowed to pass on. Finally, she stood naked before the dreaded Queen of the Underworld.
Her sentence was death; death with no guarantee of rebirth.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 61



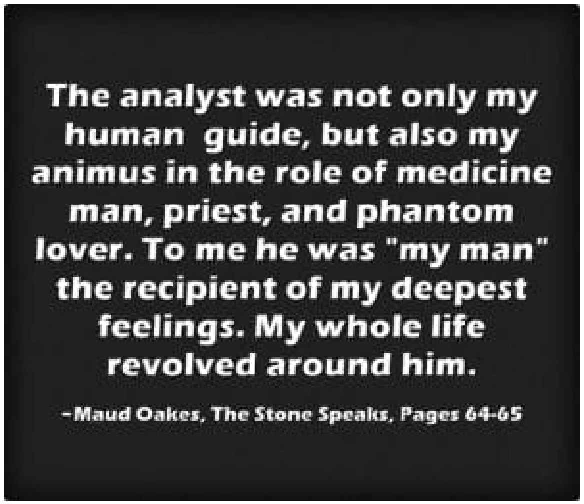
With Dr. L., my medicine man, I moved spirally into the dark, mysterious, magic world of the unconscious.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 61



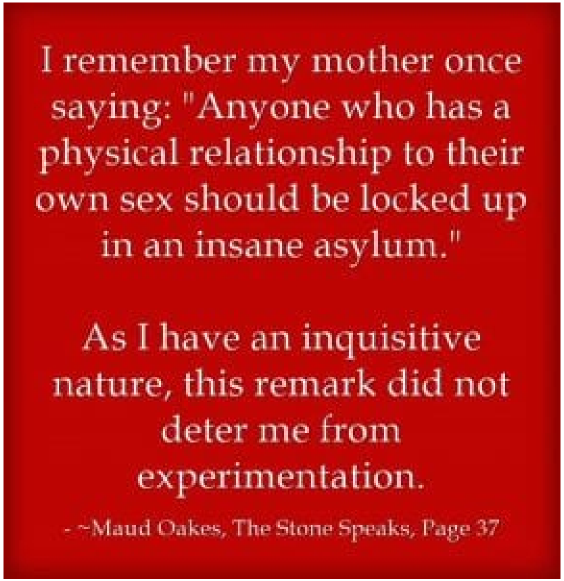
Lao Tzu said: "We put thirty spokes together and call it a wheel; but it is on the space where there is nothing that the utility of the wheel depends."

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 62



The analyst was not only my human guide, but also my animus in the role of medicine man, priest, and phantom lover. To me he was "my man" the recipient of my deepest feelings. My whole life revolved around him.

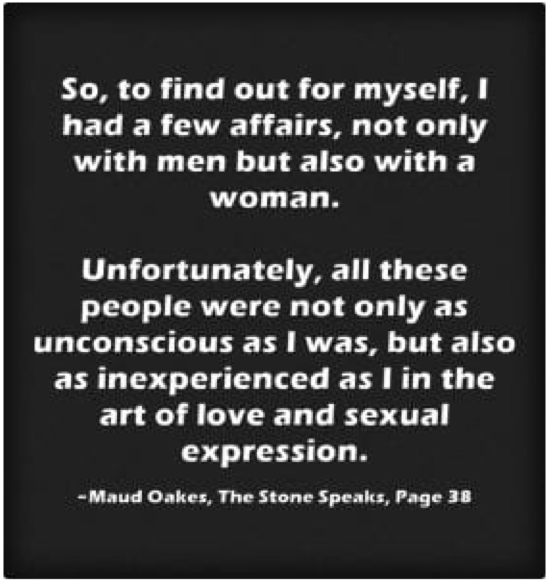
~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Pages 64-65



I remember my mother once saying: "Anyone who has a physical relationship to their own sex should be locked up in an insane asylum."

As I have an inquisitive nature, this remark did not deter me from experimentation.

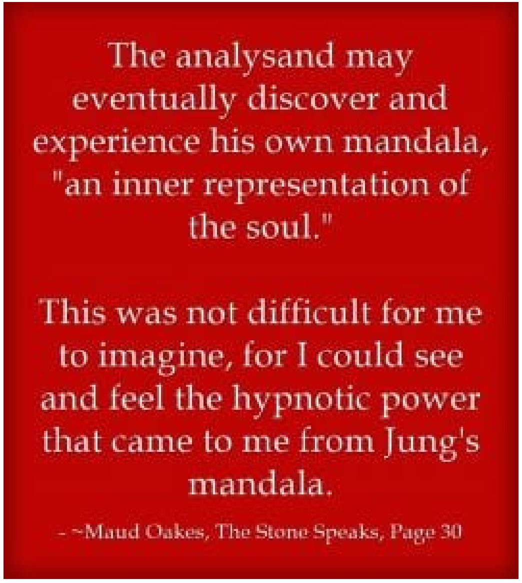
- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 37



So, to find out for myself, I had a few affairs, not only with men but also with a woman.

Unfortunately, all these people were not only as unconscious as I was, but also as inexperienced as I in the art of love and sexual expression.

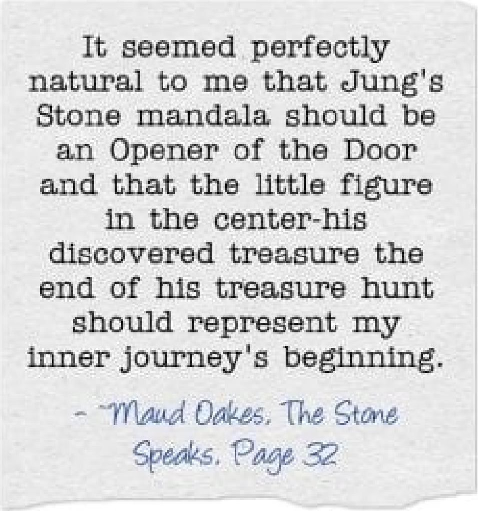
~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 38



The analysand may eventually discover and experience his own mandala, "an inner representation of the soul."

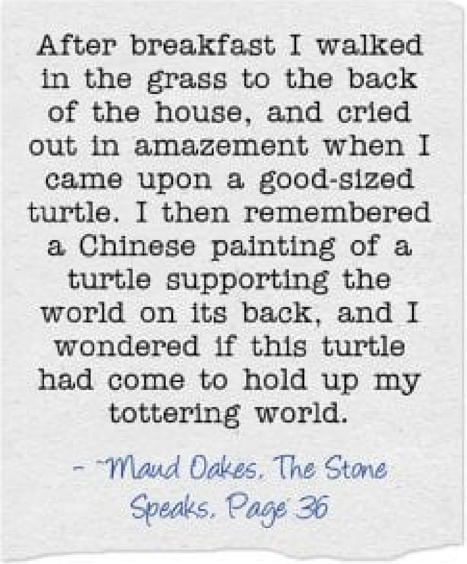
This was not difficult for me to imagine, for I could see and feel the hypnotic power that came to me from Jung's mandala.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 30



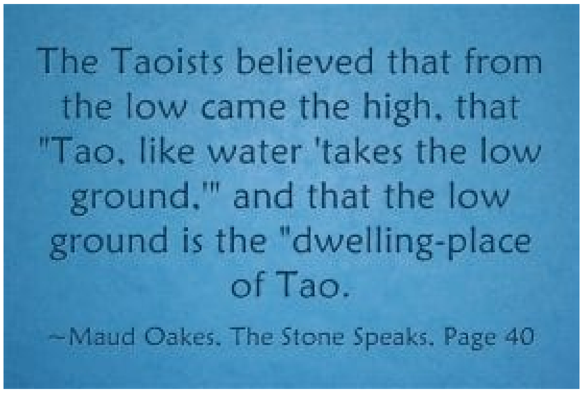
It seemed perfectly natural to me that Jung's Stone mandala should be an Opener of the Door and that the little figure in the center-his discovered treasure the end of his treasure hunt should represent my inner journey's beginning.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 32



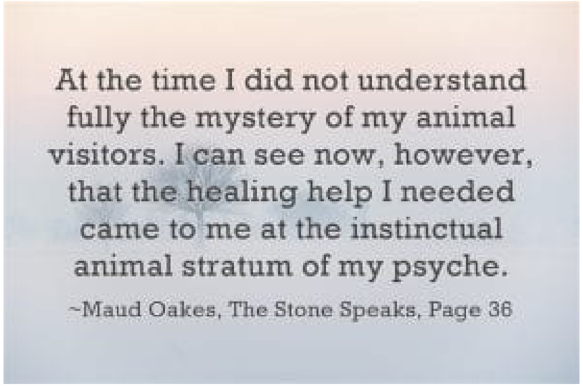
After breakfast I walked in the grass to the back of the house, and cried out in amazement when I came upon a good-sized turtle. I then remembered a Chinese painting of a turtle supporting the world on its back, and I wondered if this turtle had come to hold up my tottering world.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 36



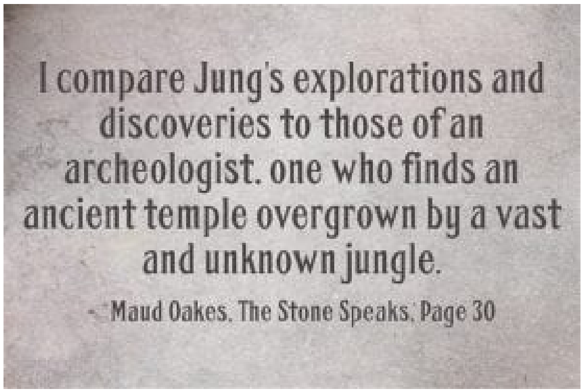
The Taoists believed that from the low came the high, that "Tao, like water 'takes the low ground,'" and that the low ground is the "dwelling-place of Tao.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 40



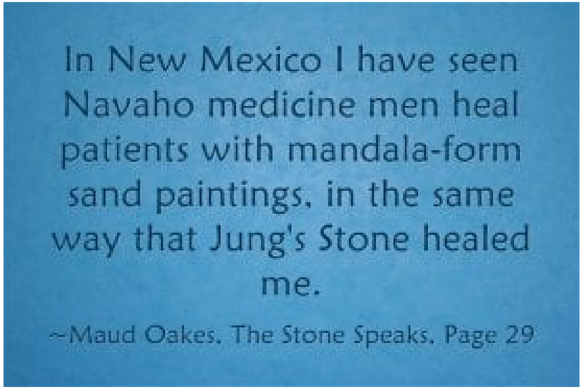
At the time I did not understand fully the mystery of my animal visitors. I can see now, however, that the healing help I needed came to me at the instinctual animal stratum of my psyche.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 36



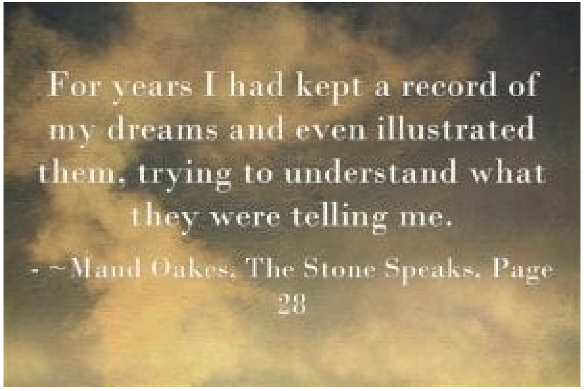
I compare Jung's explorations and discoveries to those of an archeologist, one who finds an ancient temple overgrown by a vast and unknown jungle.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 30



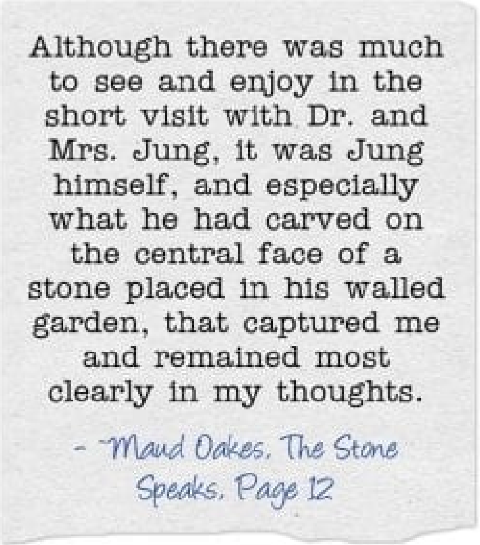
In New Mexico I have seen Navaho medicine men heal patients with mandala-form sand paintings, in the same way that Jung's Stone healed me.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 29



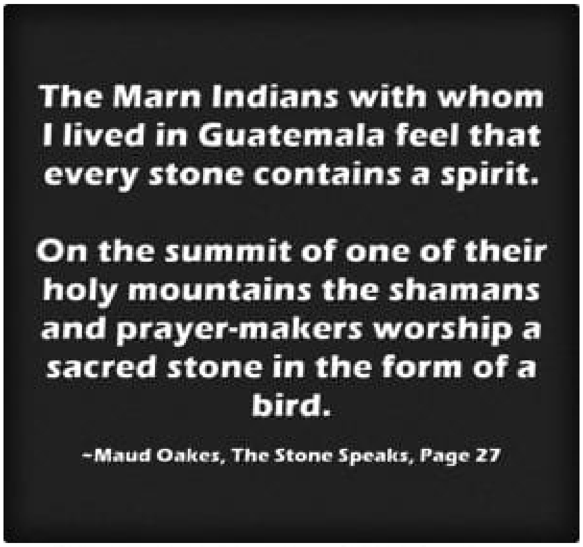
For years I had kept a record of my dreams and even illustrated them, trying to understand what they were telling me.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 28



Although there was much to see and enjoy in the short visit with Dr. and Mrs. Jung, it was Jung himself, and especially what he had carved on the central face of a stone placed in his walled garden, that captured me and remained most clearly in my thoughts.

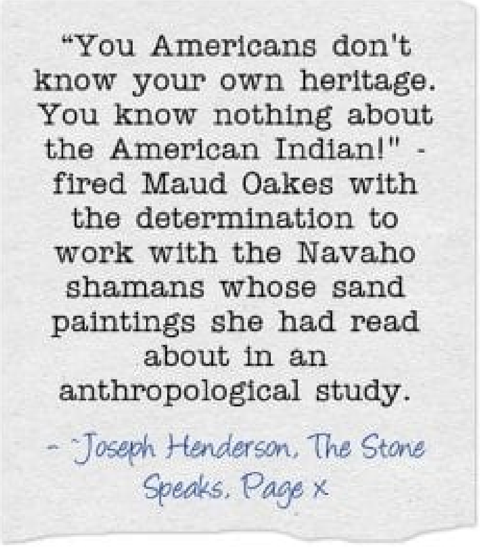
- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 12



The Marn Indians with whom I lived in Guatemala feel that every stone contains a spirit.

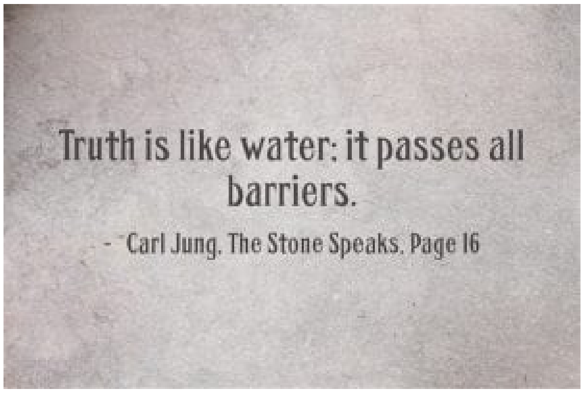
On the summit of one of their holy mountains the shamans and prayer-makers worship a sacred stone in the form of a bird.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 27



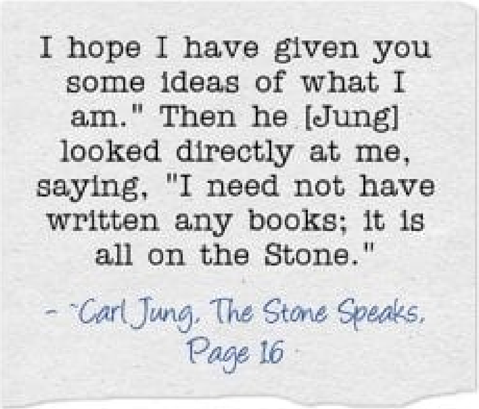
“You Americans don't know your own heritage. You know nothing about the American Indian!" - fired Maud Oakes with the determination to work with the Navaho shamans whose sand paintings she had read about in an anthropological study.

- ~Joseph Henderson, The Stone Speaks, Page x



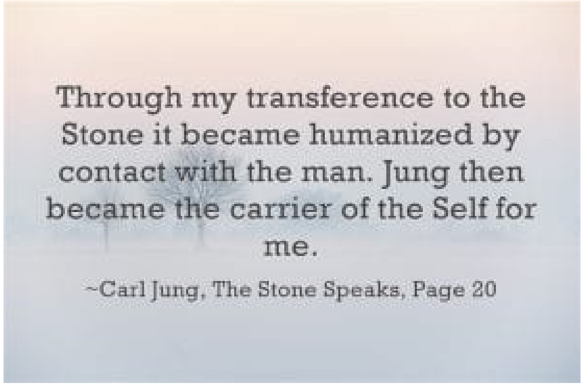
Truth is like water: it passes all barriers.

- ~Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Page 16



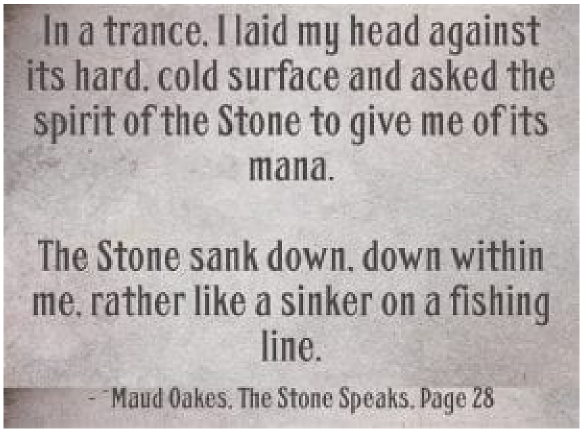
I hope I have given you some ideas of what I am." Then he [Jung] looked directly at me, saying, "I need not have written any books; it is all on the Stone."

- ~Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Page 16



Through my transference to the Stone it became humanized by contact with the man. Jung then became the carrier of the Self for me.

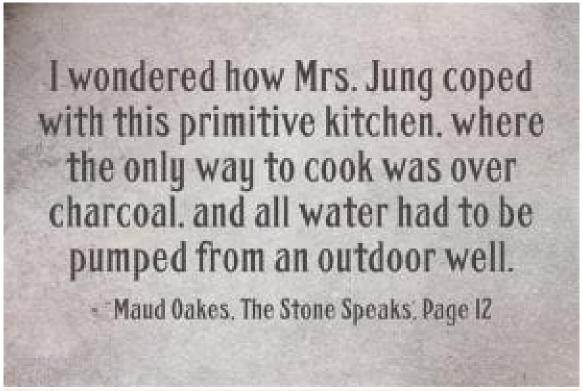
~Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Page 20



In a trance. I laid my head against its hard. cold surface and asked the spirit of the Stone to give me of its mana.

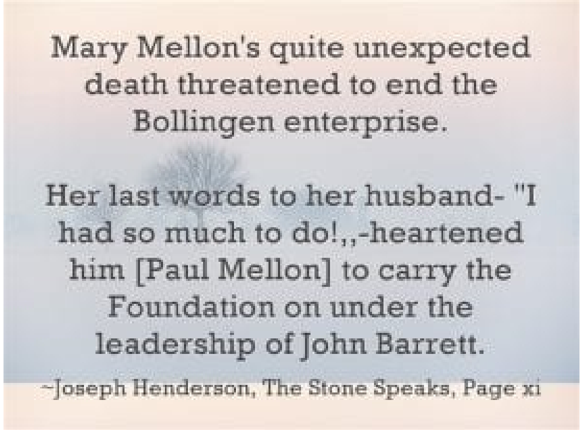
The Stone sank down. down within me. rather like a sinker on a fishing line.

- ~Maud Oakes. The Stone Speaks. Page 28



I wondered how Mrs. Jung coped with this primitive kitchen. where the only way to cook was over charcoal. and all water had to be pumped from an outdoor well.

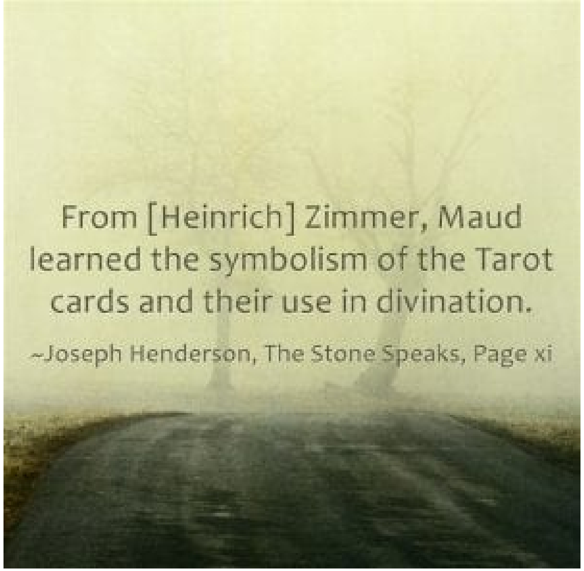
- ~Maud Oakes. The Stone Speaks. Page 12



Mary Mellon's quite unexpected death threatened to end the Bollingen enterprise.

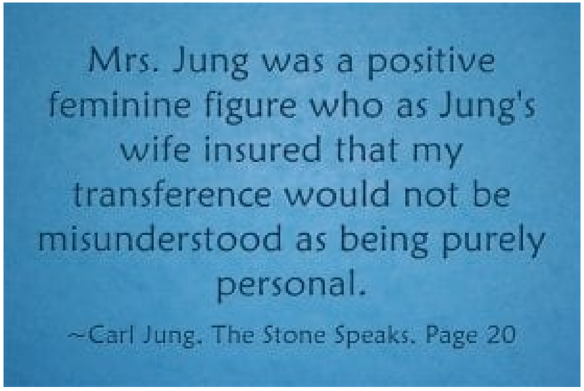
Her last words to her husband- "I had so much to do!,,-heartened him [Paul Mellon] to carry the Foundation on under the leadership of John Barrett.

~Joseph Henderson, The Stone Speaks, Page xi



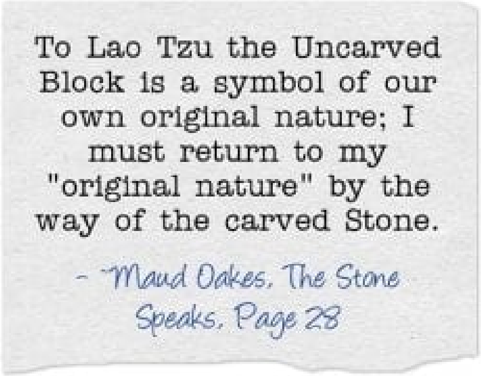
From [Heinrich] Zimmer, Maud learned the symbolism of the Tarot cards and their use in divination.

~Joseph Henderson, The Stone Speaks, Page xi



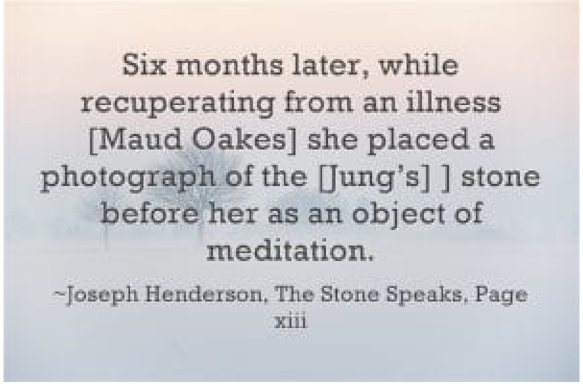
Mrs. Jung was a positive feminine figure who as Jung's wife insured that my transference would not be misunderstood as being purely personal.

~Carl Jung. The Stone Speaks. Page 20



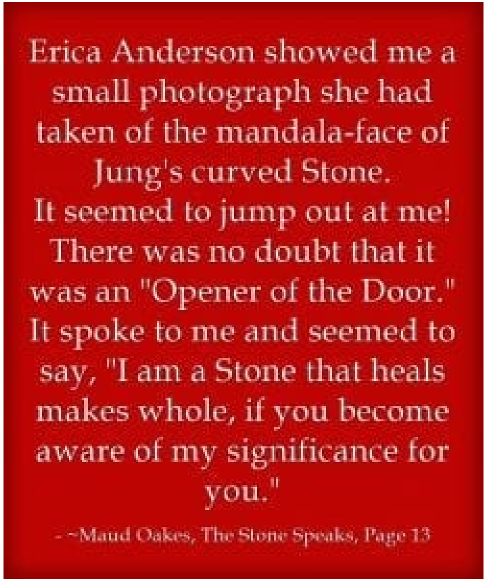
To Lao Tzu the Uncarved Block is a symbol of our own original nature; I must return to my "original nature" by the way of the carved Stone.

- ~Maud Oakes. The Stone Speaks. Page 28



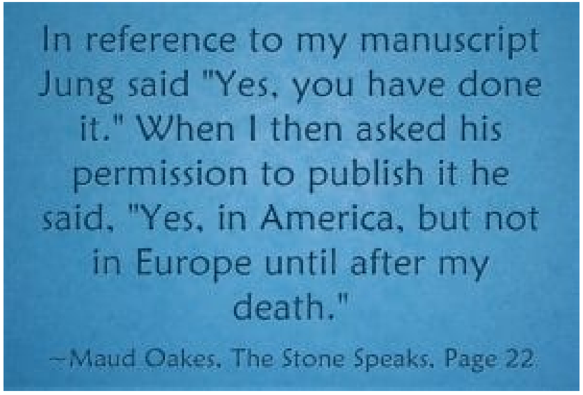
Six months later, while recuperating from an illness [Maud Oakes] she placed a photograph of the [Jung's]] stone before her as an object of meditation.

~Joseph Henderson, The Stone Speaks, Page xiii



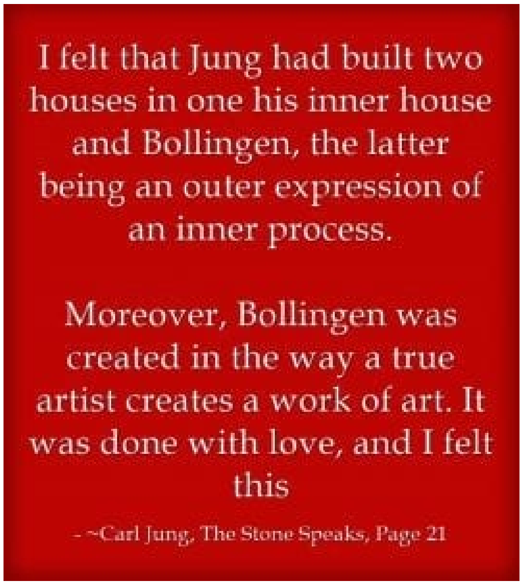
Erica Anderson showed me a small photograph she had taken of the mandala-face of Jung's curved Stone.
It seemed to jump out at me! There was no doubt that it was an "Opener of the Door." It spoke to me and seemed to say, "I am a Stone that heals makes whole, if you become aware of my significance for you."

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 13



In reference to my manuscript Jung said "Yes, you have done it." When I then asked his permission to publish it he said, "Yes, in America, but not in Europe until after my death."

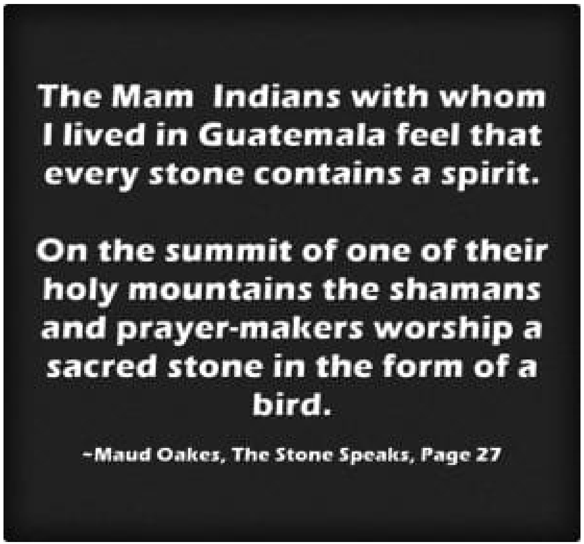
~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 22



I felt that Jung had built two houses in one his inner house and Bollingen, the latter being an outer expression of an inner process.

Moreover, Bollingen was created in the way a true artist creates a work of art. It was done with love, and I felt this

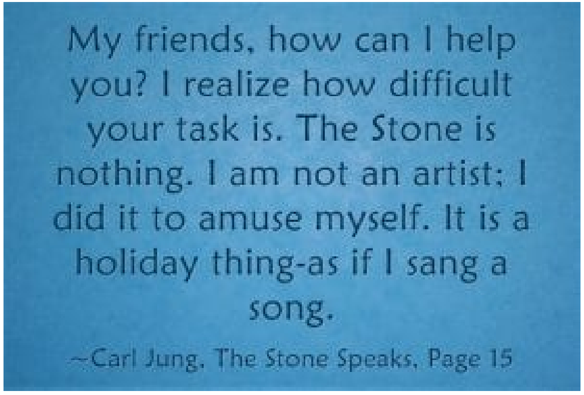
- ~Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Page 21



The Mam Indians with whom I lived in Guatemala feel that every stone contains a spirit.

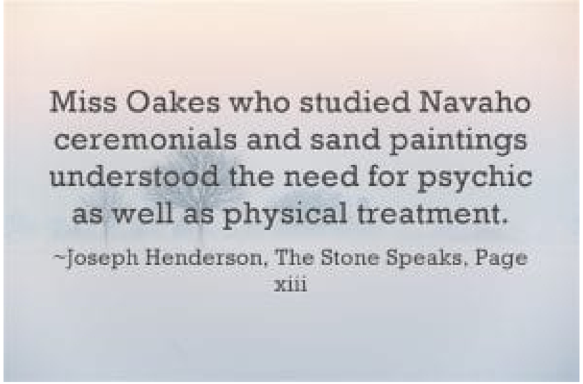
On the summit of one of their holy mountains the shamans and prayer-makers worship a sacred stone in the form of a bird.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 27



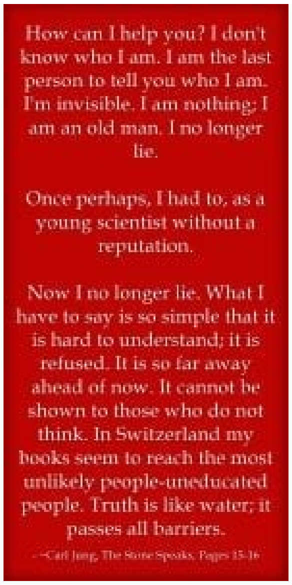
My friends, how can I help you? I realize how difficult your task is. The Stone is nothing. I am not an artist; I did it to amuse myself. It is a holiday thing-as if I sang a song.

~Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Page 15



Miss Oakes who studied Navaho ceremonials and sand paintings understood the need for psychic as well as physical treatment.

~Joseph Henderson, The Stone Speaks, Page xiii

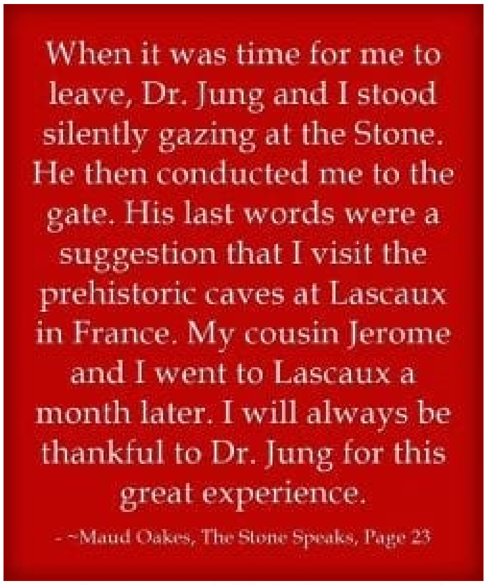


How can I help you? I don't know who I am. I am the last person to tell you who I am. I'm invisible. I am nothing; I am an old man. I no longer lie.

Once perhaps, I had to, as a young scientist without a reputation.

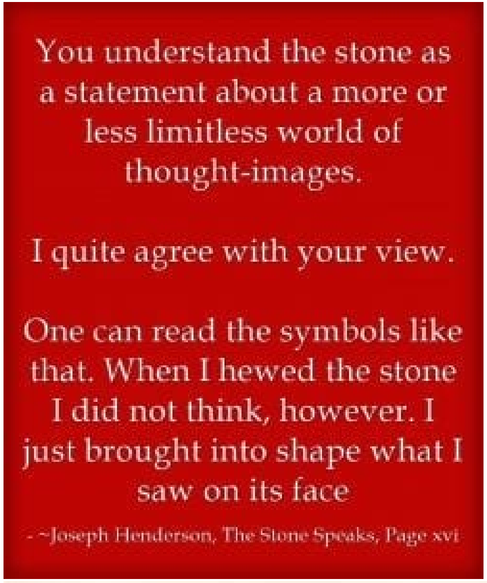
Now I no longer lie. What I have to say is so simple that it is hard to understand; it is refused. It is so far away ahead of now. It cannot be shown to those who do not think. In Switzerland my books seem to reach the most unlikely people-uneducated people. Truth is like water; it passes all barriers.

- ~Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Pages 15-16



When it was time for me to leave, Dr. Jung and I stood silently gazing at the Stone. He then conducted me to the gate. His last words were a suggestion that I visit the prehistoric caves at Lascaux in France. My cousin Jerome and I went to Lascaux a month later. I will always be thankful to Dr. Jung for this great experience.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 23

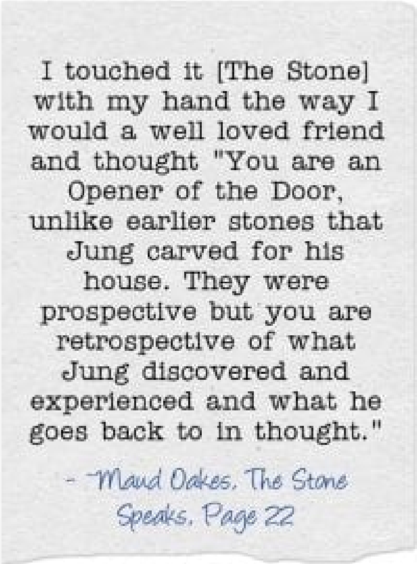


You understand the stone as a statement about a more or less limitless world of thought-images.

I quite agree with your view.

One can read the symbols like that. When I hewed the stone I did not think, however. I just brought into shape what I saw on its face

- ~Joseph Henderson, The Stone Speaks, Page xvi



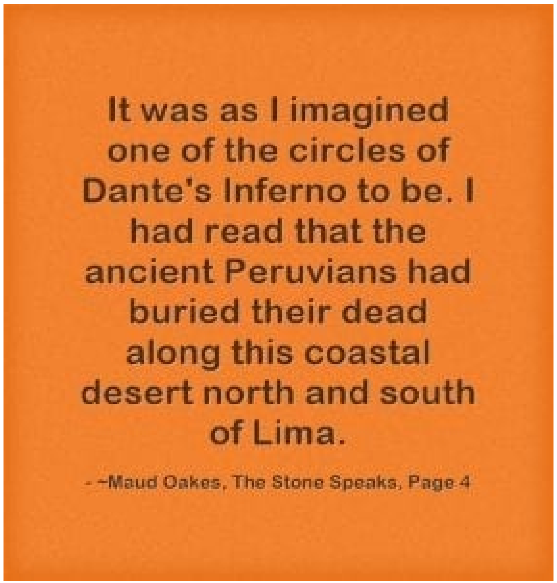
I touched it [The Stone] with my hand the way I would a well loved friend and thought "You are an Opener of the Door, unlike earlier stones that Jung carved for his house. They were prospective but you are retrospective of what Jung discovered and experienced and what he goes back to in thought."

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 22

I felt that I became a participant in the prehistoric ritual [Lascaux], overpowered by the beautiful paintings.

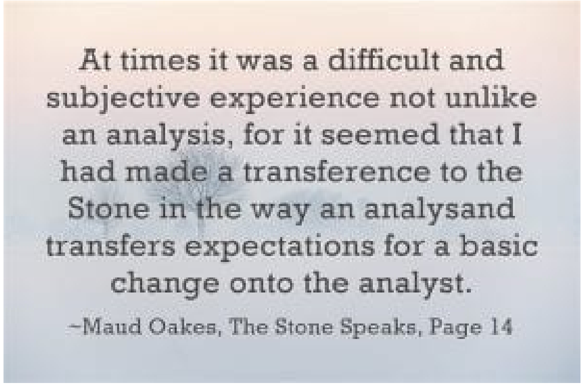
I understood in a new way what Jung called the collective unconscious as a world of archetypal images.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 24



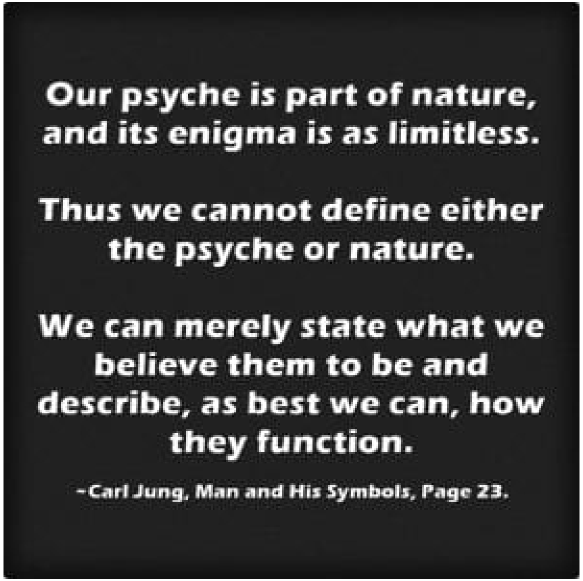
It was as I imagined one of the circles of Dante's Inferno to be. I had read that the ancient Peruvians had buried their dead along this coastal desert north and south of Lima.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 4



At times it was a difficult and subjective experience not unlike an analysis, for it seemed that I had made a transference to the Stone in the way an analysand transfers expectations for a basic change onto the analyst.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 14

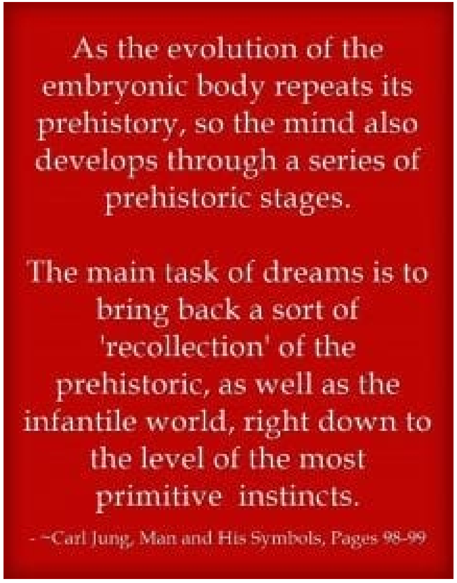


Our psyche is part of nature, and its enigma is as limitless.

Thus we cannot define either the psyche or nature.

We can merely state what we believe them to be and describe, as best we can, how they function.

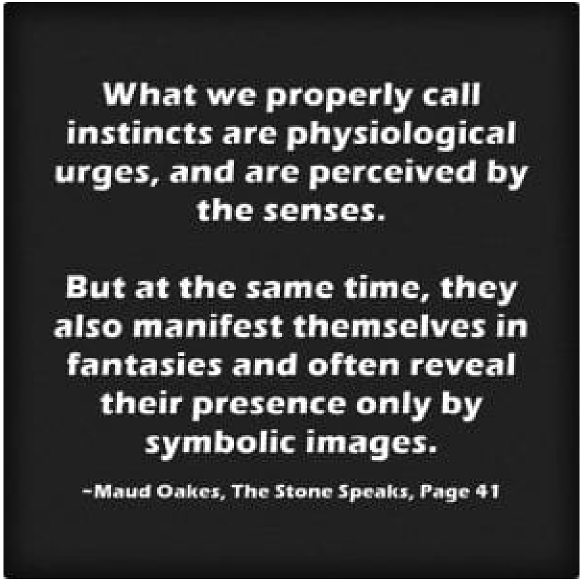
~Carl Jung, Man and His Symbols, Page 23.



As the evolution of the embryonic body repeats its prehistory, so the mind also develops through a series of prehistoric stages.

The main task of dreams is to bring back a sort of 'recollection' of the prehistoric, as well as the infantile world, right down to the level of the most primitive instincts.

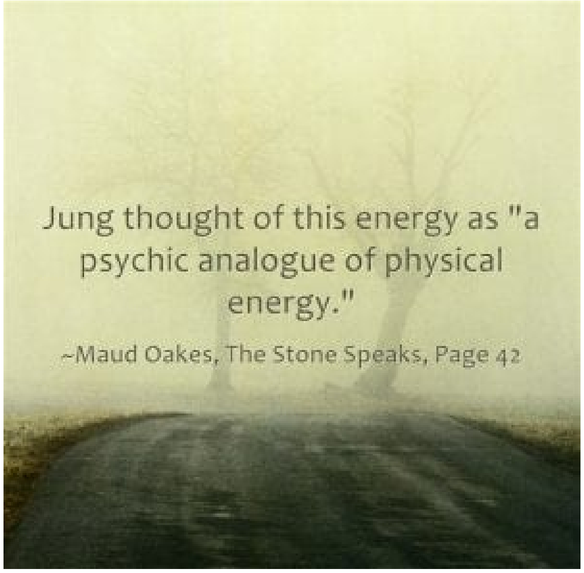
- ~Carl Jung, Man and His Symbols, Pages 98-99



What we properly call instincts are physiological urges, and are perceived by the senses.

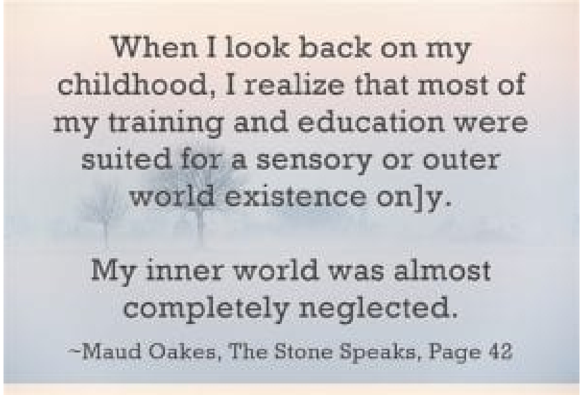
But at the same time, they also manifest themselves in fantasies and often reveal their presence only by symbolic images.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 41



Jung thought of this energy as "a psychic analogue of physical energy."

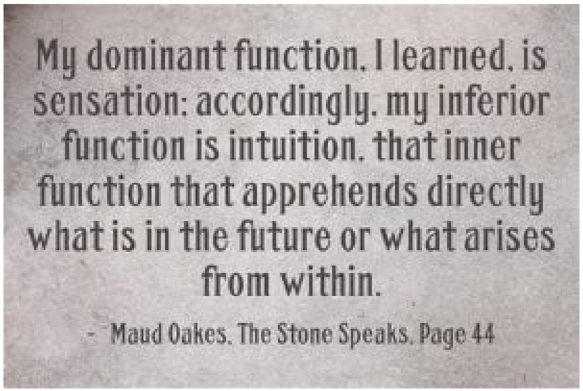
~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 42



When I look back on my childhood, I realize that most of my training and education were suited for a sensory or outer world existence only.

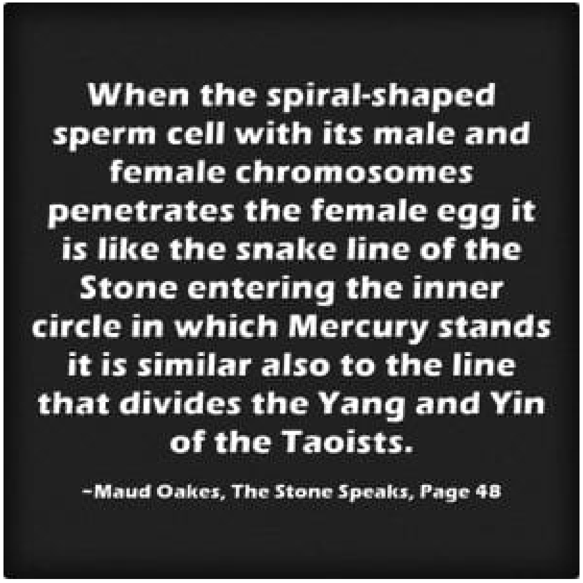
My inner world was almost completely neglected.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 42



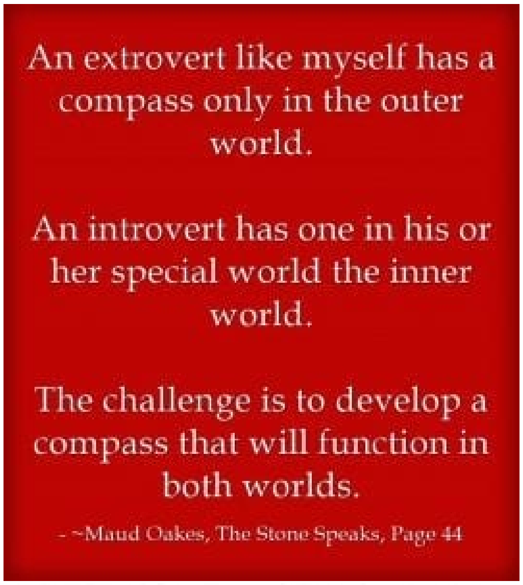
My dominant function, I learned, is sensation; accordingly, my inferior function is intuition, that inner function that apprehends directly what is in the future or what arises from within.

- Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 44



When the spiral-shaped sperm cell with its male and female chromosomes penetrates the female egg it is like the snake line of the Stone entering the inner circle in which Mercury stands it is similar also to the line that divides the Yang and Yin of the Taoists.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 48

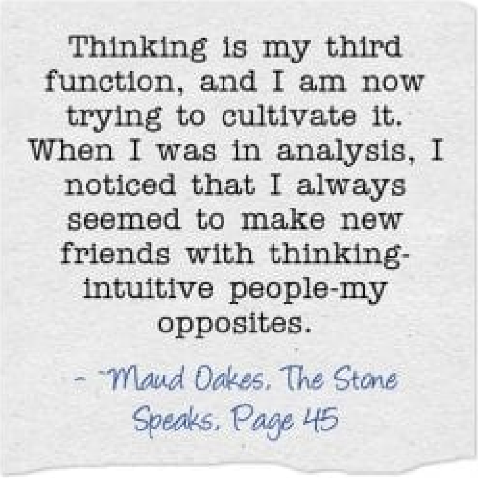


An extrovert like myself has a compass only in the outer world.

An introvert has one in his or her special world the inner world.

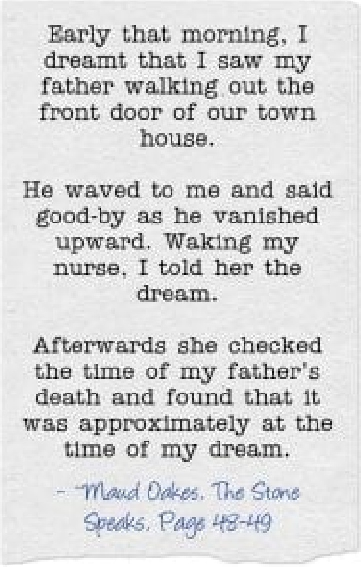
The challenge is to develop a compass that will function in both worlds.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 44



Thinking is my third function, and I am now trying to cultivate it. When I was in analysis, I noticed that I always seemed to make new friends with thinking-intuitive people-my opposites.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 45

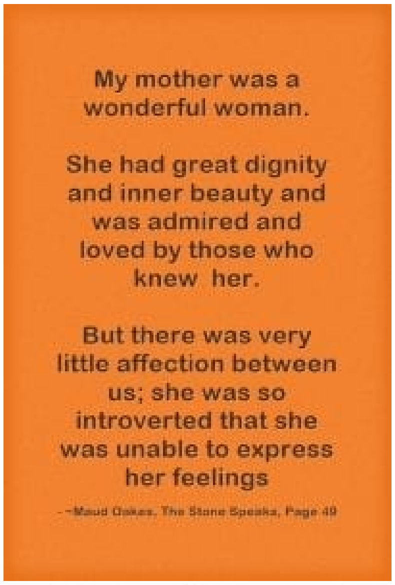


Early that morning, I dreamt that I saw my father walking out the front door of our town house.

He waved to me and said good-by as he vanished upward. Waking my nurse, I told her the dream.

Afterwards she checked the time of my father's death and found that it was approximately at the time of my dream.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 48-49

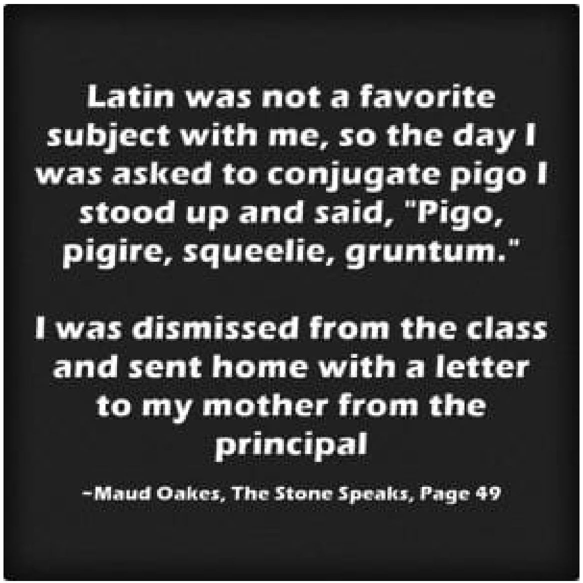


My mother was a wonderful woman.

She had great dignity and inner beauty and was admired and loved by those who knew her.

But there was very little affection between us; she was so introverted that she was unable to express her feelings

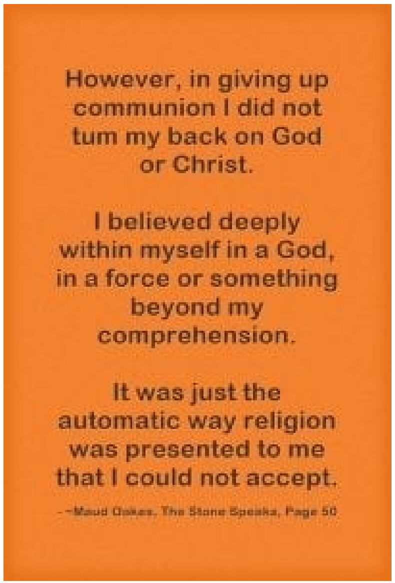
- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 49



Latin was not a favorite subject with me, so the day I was asked to conjugate pigo I stood up and said, "Pigo, pigire, squeelie, gruntum."

I was dismissed from the class and sent home with a letter to my mother from the principal

-Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 49

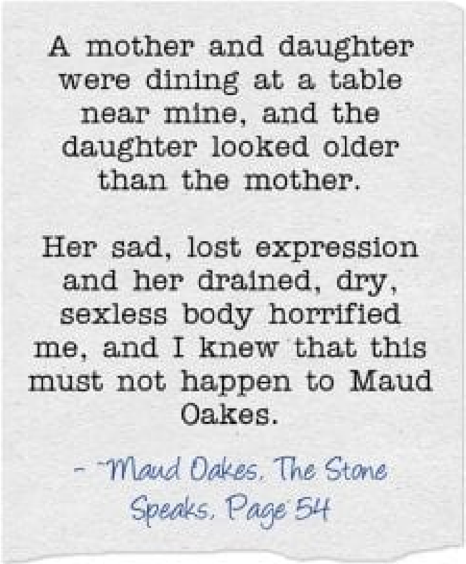


However, in giving up communion I did not tum my back on God or Christ.

I believed deeply within myself in a God, in a force or something beyond my comprehension.

It was just the automatic way religion was presented to me that I could not accept.

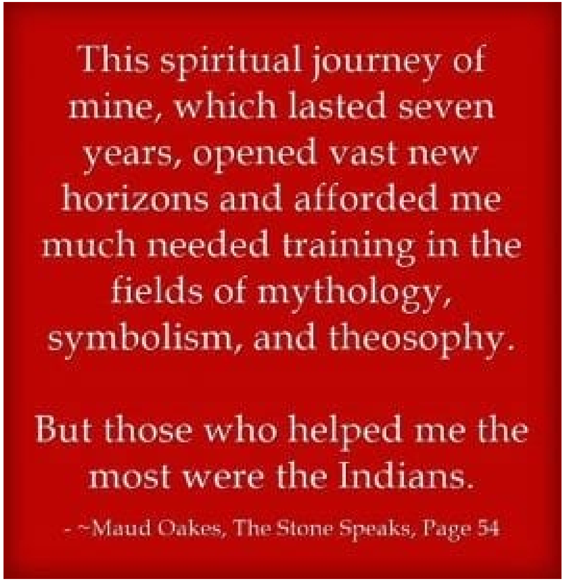
- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 50



A mother and daughter were dining at a table near mine, and the daughter looked older than the mother.

Her sad, lost expression and her drained, dry, sexless body horrified me, and I knew that this must not happen to Maud Oakes.

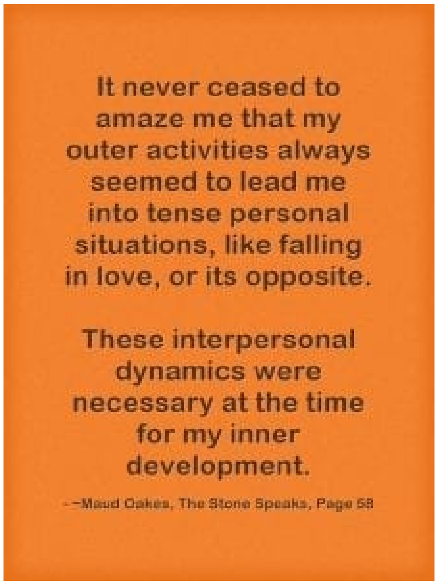
- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 54



This spiritual journey of mine, which lasted seven years, opened vast new horizons and afforded me much needed training in the fields of mythology, symbolism, and theosophy.

But those who helped me the most were the Indians.

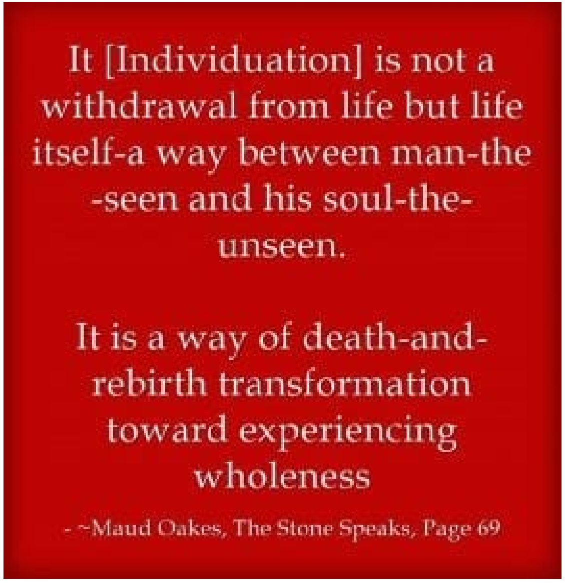
- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 54



It never ceased to amaze me that my outer activities always seemed to lead me into tense personal situations, like falling in love, or its opposite.

These interpersonal dynamics were necessary at the time for my inner development.

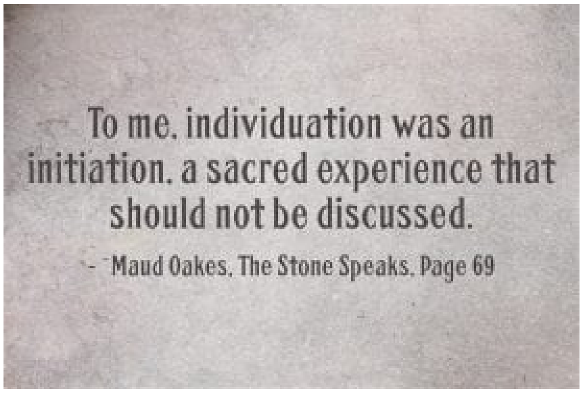
- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 58



It [Individuation] is not a withdrawal from life but life itself-a way between man-the -seen and his soul-the-unseen.

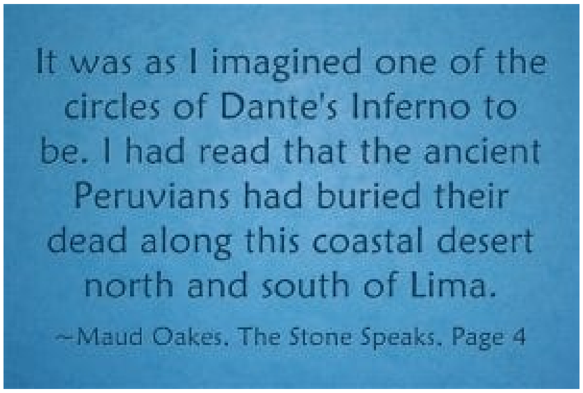
It is a way of death-and-rebirth transformation toward experiencing wholeness

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 69



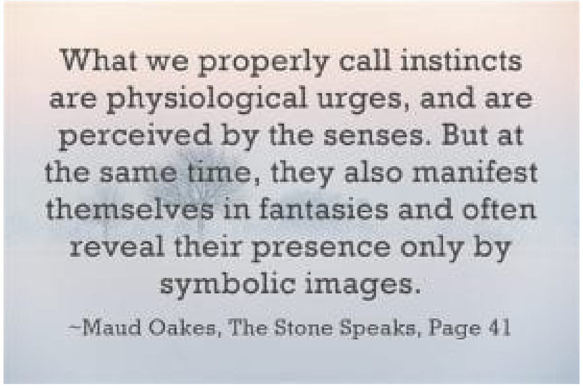
To me, individuation was an initiation, a sacred experience that should not be discussed.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 69



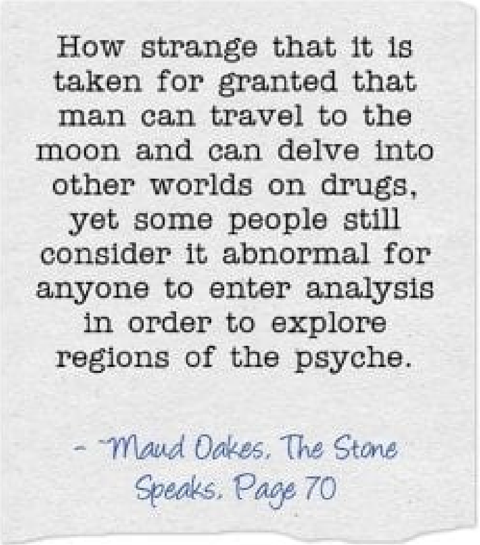
It was as I imagined one of the circles of Dante's Inferno to be. I had read that the ancient Peruvians had buried their dead along this coastal desert north and south of Lima.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 4



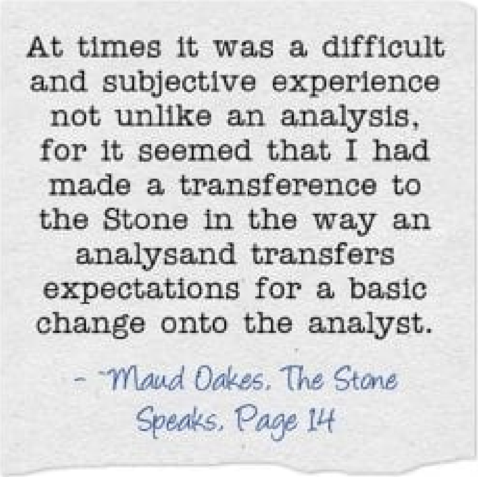
What we properly call instincts are physiological urges, and are perceived by the senses. But at the same time, they also manifest themselves in fantasies and often reveal their presence only by symbolic images.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 41



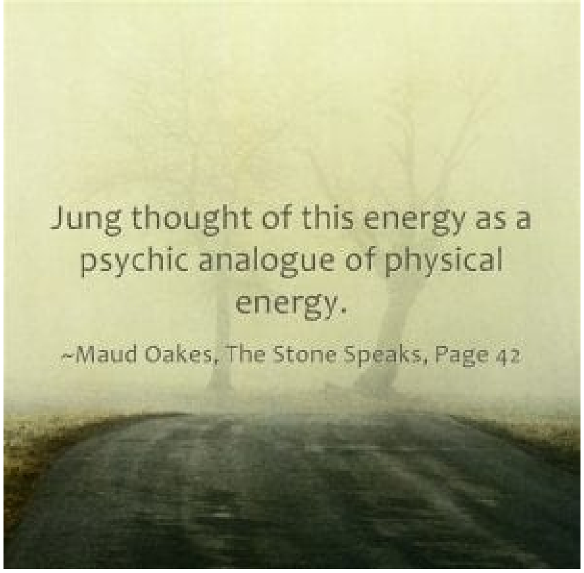
How strange that it is taken for granted that man can travel to the moon and can delve into other worlds on drugs, yet some people still consider it abnormal for anyone to enter analysis in order to explore regions of the psyche.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 70



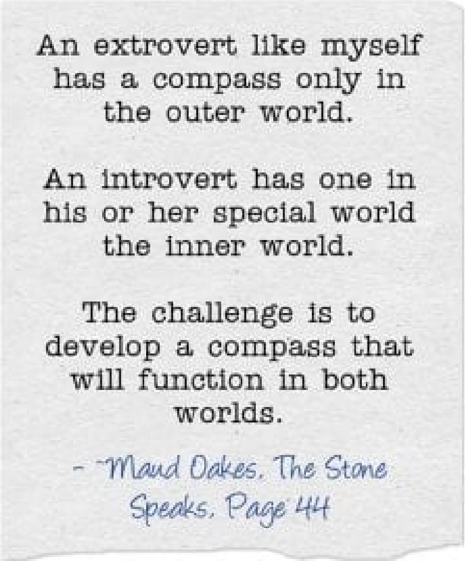
At times it was a difficult and subjective experience not unlike an analysis, for it seemed that I had made a transference to the Stone in the way an analysand transfers expectations for a basic change onto the analyst.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 14



Jung thought of this energy as a psychic analogue of physical energy.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 42

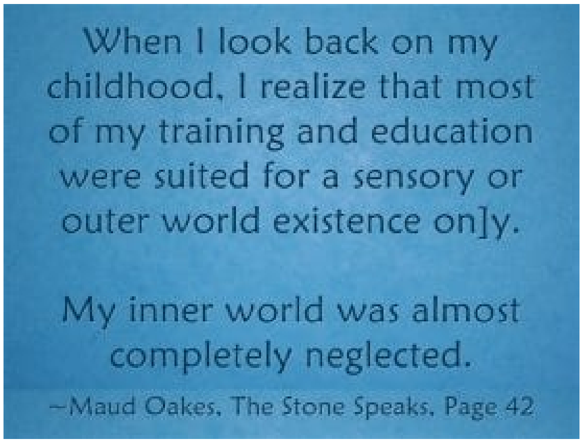


An extrovert like myself has a compass only in the outer world.

An introvert has one in his or her special world the inner world.

The challenge is to develop a compass that will function in both worlds.

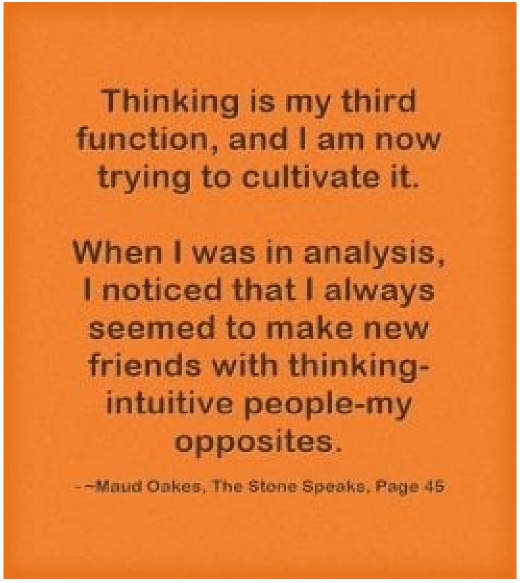
- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 44



When I look back on my childhood, I realize that most of my training and education were suited for a sensory or outer world existence only.

My inner world was almost completely neglected.

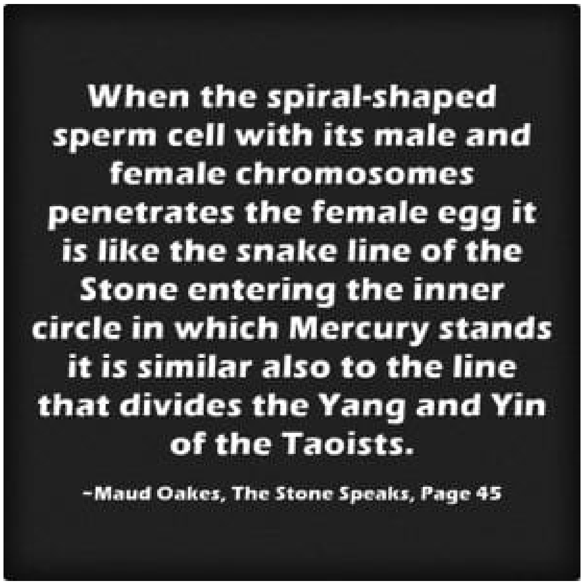
~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 42



Thinking is my third function, and I am now trying to cultivate it.

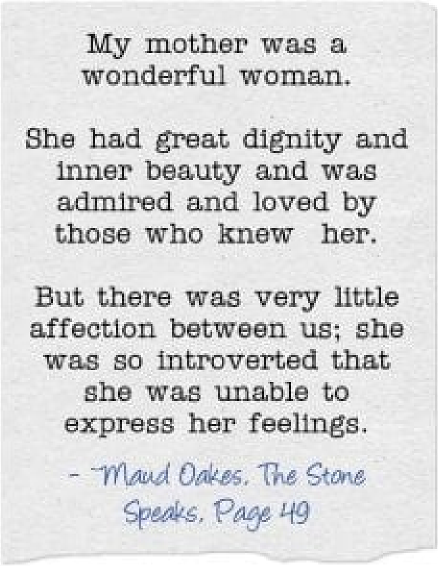
When I was in analysis, I noticed that I always seemed to make new friends with thinking-intuitive people-my opposites.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 45



When the spiral-shaped sperm cell with its male and female chromosomes penetrates the female egg it is like the snake line of the Stone entering the inner circle in which Mercury stands it is similar also to the line that divides the Yang and Yin of the Taoists.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 45

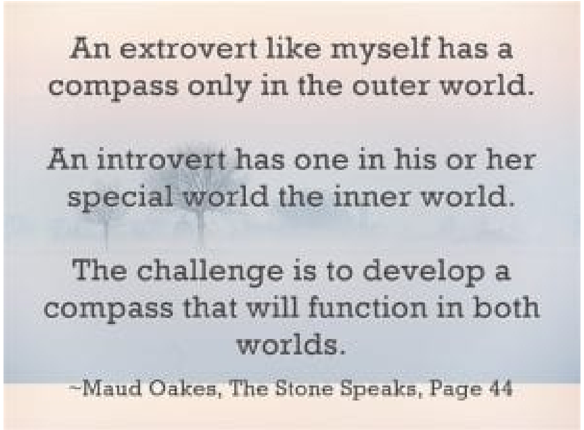


My mother was a wonderful woman.

She had great dignity and inner beauty and was admired and loved by those who knew her.

But there was very little affection between us; she was so introverted that she was unable to express her feelings.

- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 49

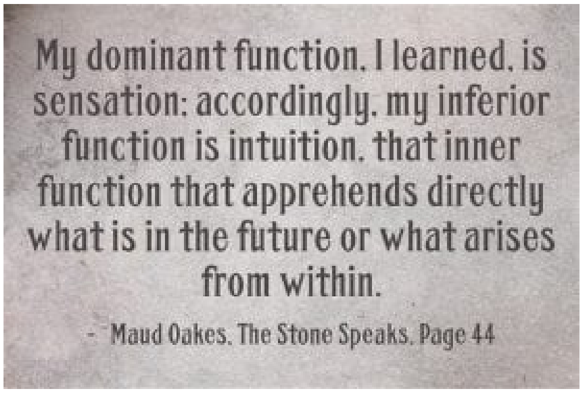


An extrovert like myself has a compass only in the outer world.

An introvert has one in his or her special world the inner world.

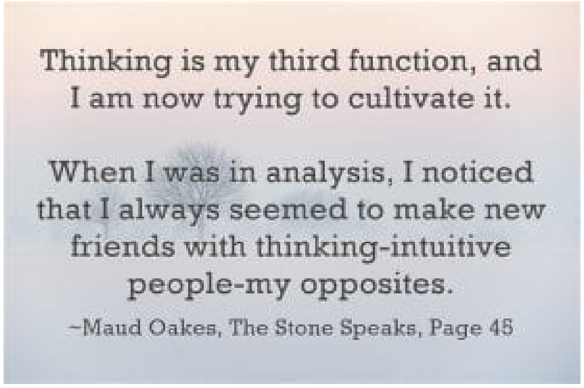
The challenge is to develop a compass that will function in both worlds.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 44



My dominant function, I learned, is sensation; accordingly, my inferior function is intuition, that inner function that apprehends directly what is in the future or what arises from within.

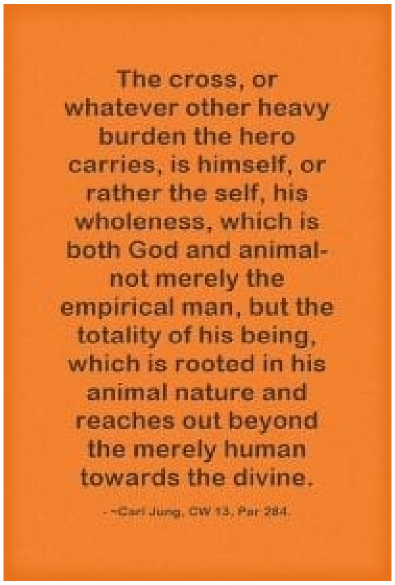
- Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 44



Thinking is my third function, and I am now trying to cultivate it.

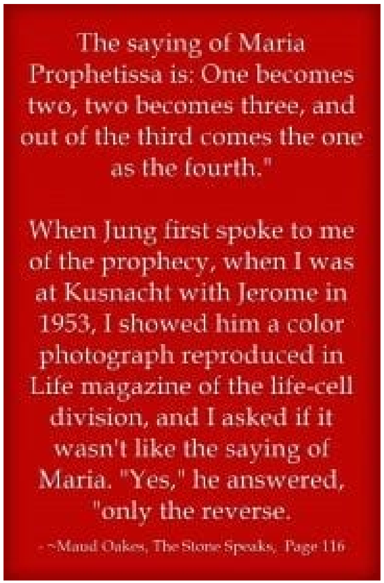
When I was in analysis, I noticed that I always seemed to make new friends with thinking-intuitive people-my opposites.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 45



The cross, or whatever other heavy burden the hero carries, is himself, or rather the self, his wholeness, which is both God and animal-not merely the empirical man, but the totality of his being, which is rooted in his animal nature and reaches out beyond the merely human towards the divine.

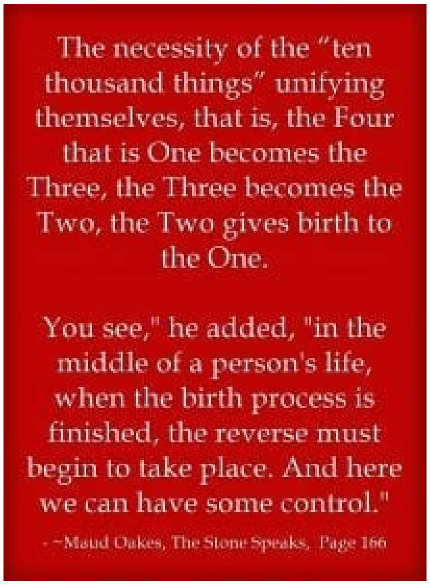
- ~Carl Jung, CW 13, Par 284.



The saying of Maria Prophetissa is: One becomes two, two becomes three, and out of the third comes the one as the fourth."

When Jung first spoke to me of the prophecy, when I was at Kusnacht with Jerome in 1953, I showed him a color photograph reproduced in Life magazine of the life-cell division, and I asked if it wasn't like the saying of Maria. "Yes," he answered, "only the reverse.

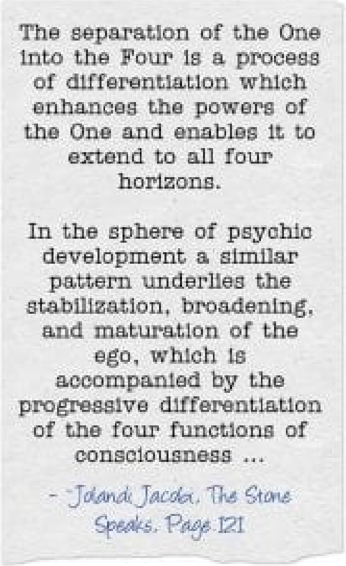
- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 116



The necessity of the "ten thousand things" unifying themselves, that is, the Four that is One becomes the Three, the Three becomes the Two, the Two gives birth to the One.

You see," he added, "in the middle of a person's life, when the birth process is finished, the reverse must begin to take place. And here we can have some control."

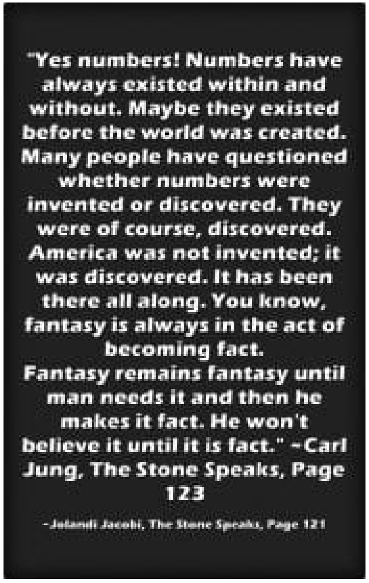
- ~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 166



The separation of the One into the Four is a process of differentiation which enhances the powers of the One and enables it to extend to all four horizons.

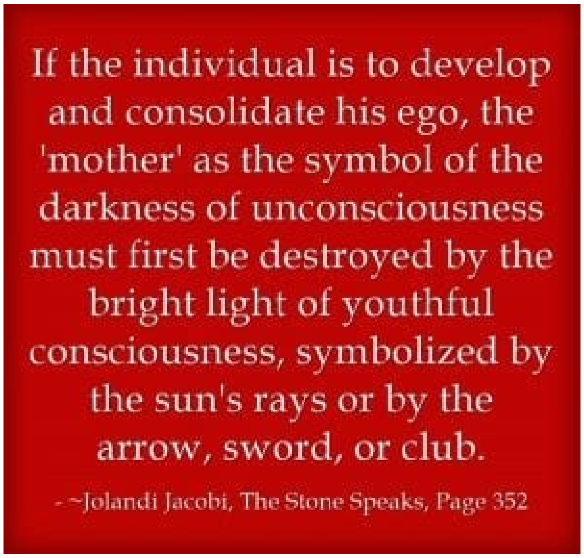
In the sphere of psychic development a similar pattern underlies the stabilization, broadening, and maturation of the ego, which is accompanied by the progressive differentiation of the four functions of consciousness ...

- ~Jolandi Jacobi, The Stone Speaks, Page 121



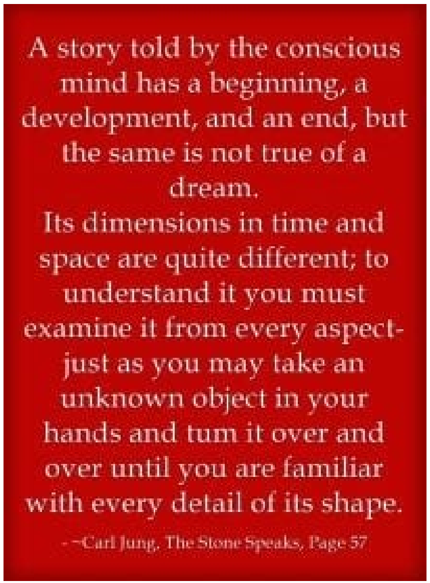
"Yes numbers! Numbers have always existed within and without. Maybe they existed before the world was created. Many people have questioned whether numbers were invented or discovered. They were of course, discovered. America was not invented; it was discovered. It has been there all along. You know, fantasy is always in the act of becoming fact. Fantasy remains fantasy until man needs it and then he makes it fact. He won't believe it until it is fact." ~Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Page 123

~Jolandi Jacobi, The Stone Speaks, Page 121



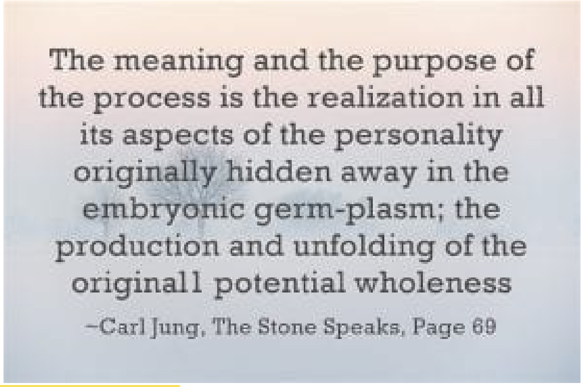
If the individual is to develop and consolidate his ego, the 'mother' as the symbol of the darkness of unconsciousness must first be destroyed by the bright light of youthful consciousness, symbolized by the sun's rays or by the arrow, sword, or club.

- ~Jolandi Jacobi, The Stone Speaks, Page 352



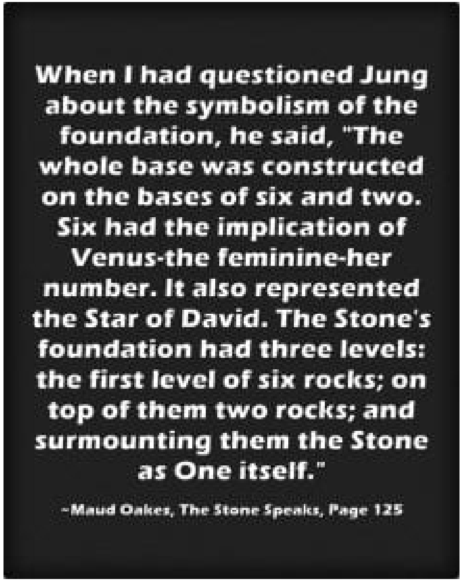
A story told by the conscious mind has a beginning, a development, and an end, but the same is not true of a dream.
Its dimensions in time and space are quite different; to understand it you must examine it from every aspect- just as you may take an unknown object in your hands and turn it over and over until you are familiar with every detail of its shape.

- ~Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Page 57



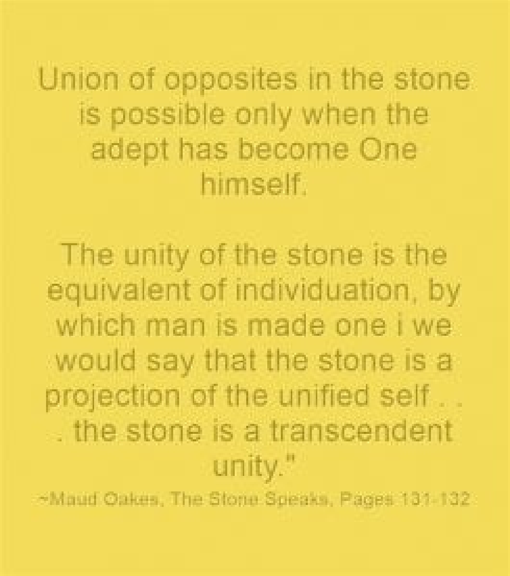
The meaning and the purpose of the process is the realization in all its aspects of the personality originally hidden away in the embryonic germ-plasm; the production and unfolding of the originall potential wholeness

~Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Page 69



When I had questioned Jung about the symbolism of the foundation, he said, "The whole base was constructed on the bases of six and two. Six had the implication of Venus-the feminine-her number. It also represented the Star of David. The Stone's foundation had three levels: the first level of six rocks; on top of them two rocks; and surmounting them the Stone as One itself."

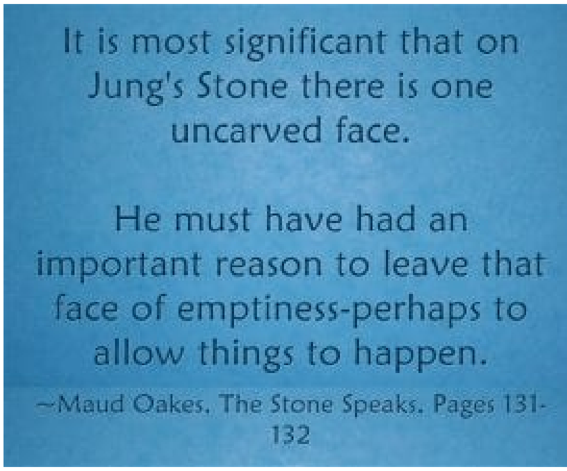
~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Page 125



Union of opposites in the stone is possible only when the adept has become One himself.

The unity of the stone is the equivalent of individuation, by which man is made one i we would say that the stone is a projection of the unified self . . . the stone is a transcendent unity."

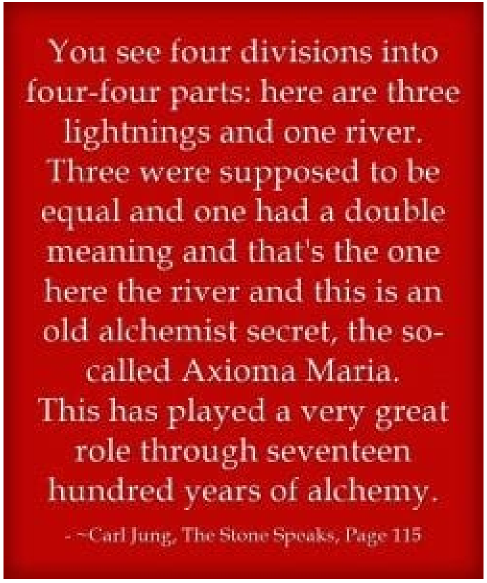
~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Pages 131-132



It is most significant that on Jung's Stone there is one uncarved face.

He must have had an important reason to leave that face of emptiness-perhaps to allow things to happen.

~Maud Oakes, The Stone Speaks, Pages 131-132



You see four divisions into four-four parts: here are three lightnings and one river. Three were supposed to be equal and one had a double meaning and that's the one here the river and this is an old alchemist secret, the so-called Axioma Maria.
This has played a very great role through seventeen hundred years of alchemy.

- ~Carl Jung, The Stone Speaks, Page 115

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Stone-Speaks-Memoir-Personal-Transformation/dp/1630516287/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=maud+oakes+stone&qid=1574880203&sr=8-1`

The aim of individuation and to divest the self of the false wrappings of the Persona (2019-11-28 03:15)

[1]

“The aim of individuation is nothing less than to divest the self of the false wrappings of the persona
on the one hand,
and of the suggestive power of primordial images
on the other .”

Carl Jung

www.jungcurrents.com
Image: Labirinto do Outeiro do Cribo, 1000 B.C.

"The aim of individuation is nothing less than to divest the self of the false wrappings of the persona on the one hand, and of the suggestive power of primordial images on the other." Carl Jung, The Function of the Unconscious, Collected Works 7, Paragraph 269

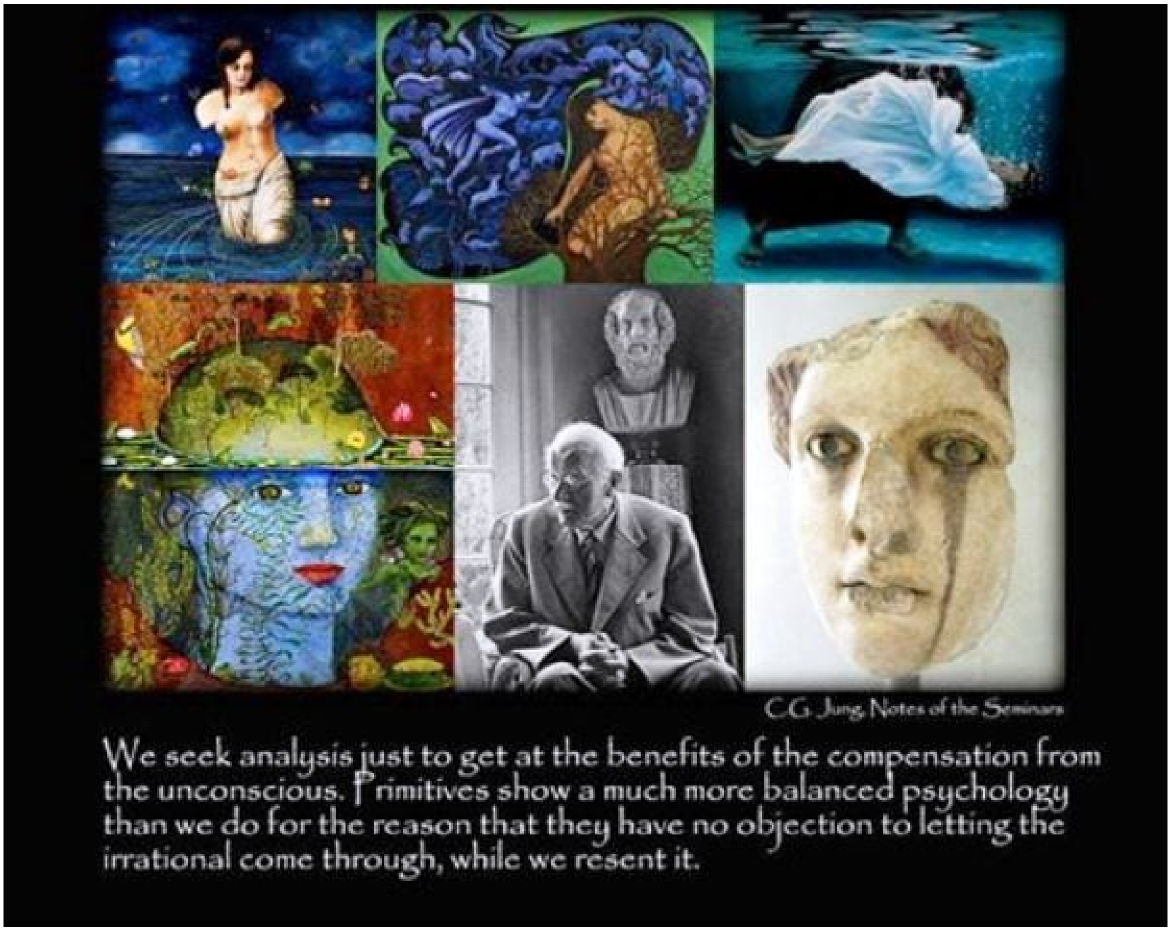
Images and Quotation thanks to Jung Hearted

http://jungcurrents.com/persona-individuation-jung/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/16c51-middle.jpg`

Carl Jung: Sometimes a patient becomes greatly outraged at the mere possibility of a dream or a fantasy having a sexual content, (2019-11-28 03:53)

[1]



C.G. Jung, Notes of the Seminars
We seek analysis just to get at the benefits of the compensation from the unconscious. Primitives show a much more balanced psychology than we do for the reason that they have no objection to letting the irrational come through, while we resent it.

One can follow this same principle of balance in any separate units holding a compensatory relation to one another—for example, in the relation of men and women to each other.

There is no man who could not exist without a woman—that is, he carries the necessary balance within himself if he be obliged to live his life that way, and the same thing applies to a woman with respect to a man, but if either sex is to have a complete life, it requires the other as a compensatory side.

It is the same thing with the conscious and the unconscious, and we seek analysis just to get at the benefits of the compensation from the unconscious.

Primitives show a much more balanced psychology than we do for the reason that they have no objection to letting the irrational come through, while we resent it.

Sometimes a patient becomes greatly outraged at the mere possibility of a dream or a fantasy having a sexual content, though to be sure, today it has become fashionable to recognize sexuality.

But let a dream show a moral criticism about the individual—let it say there is something unclean and ugly about you—and there is the same violent reaction that used to come with a sexual dream. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar,

Page 114.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/996d9-analysis.jpg`

Some people feel that nobody should read the book... (2019-11-28 04:03)

[1]

THE RED BOOK
C·G·JUNG

EDITED AND INTRODUCED BY SONU SHAMDASANI
TRANSLATED BY MARK KYBURZ, JOHN PECK, AND SONU SHAMDASANI

"The years . . . when I pursued the inner images, were the most important time of my life. Everything else is to be derived from this. It began at that time, and the later details hardly matter anymore. My entire life consisted in elaborating what had burst forth from the unconscious and flooded me like an enigmatic stream and threatened to break me. That was the stuff and material for more than only one life. Everything later was merely the outer classification, the scientific elaboration, and the integration into life. But the numinous beginning, which contained everything, was then." —C. G. JUNG

During World War I, C. G. Jung embarked on an extended self-exploration he called his "confrontation with the unconscious." At the heart of this exploration was The Red Book, a large, illuminated volume he created between 1914 and 1930, containing the nucleus of his later works. It was here that he developed his principle theories of the archetypes, the collective unconscious, and the process of individuation that would transform psychotherapy from a practice concerned with the treatment of the sick into a means for the higher development of the personality.

While Jung considered The Red Book to be his most important work, only a handful of people have ever seen it. It is possibly the most influential unpublished work in the history of psychology. Now, in a complete facsimile and translation, edited and introduced by Dr. Sonu Shamdasani, it is available to scholars and the general public. It is an astonishing volume of calligraphy and art suggesting influences as diverse as Persia and the Mayan empires—a work of beauty on a par with such illuminated manuscripts as The Book of Kells and those of William Blake. This publication of The Red Book is a watershed that will inaugurate a new era in Jung studies.

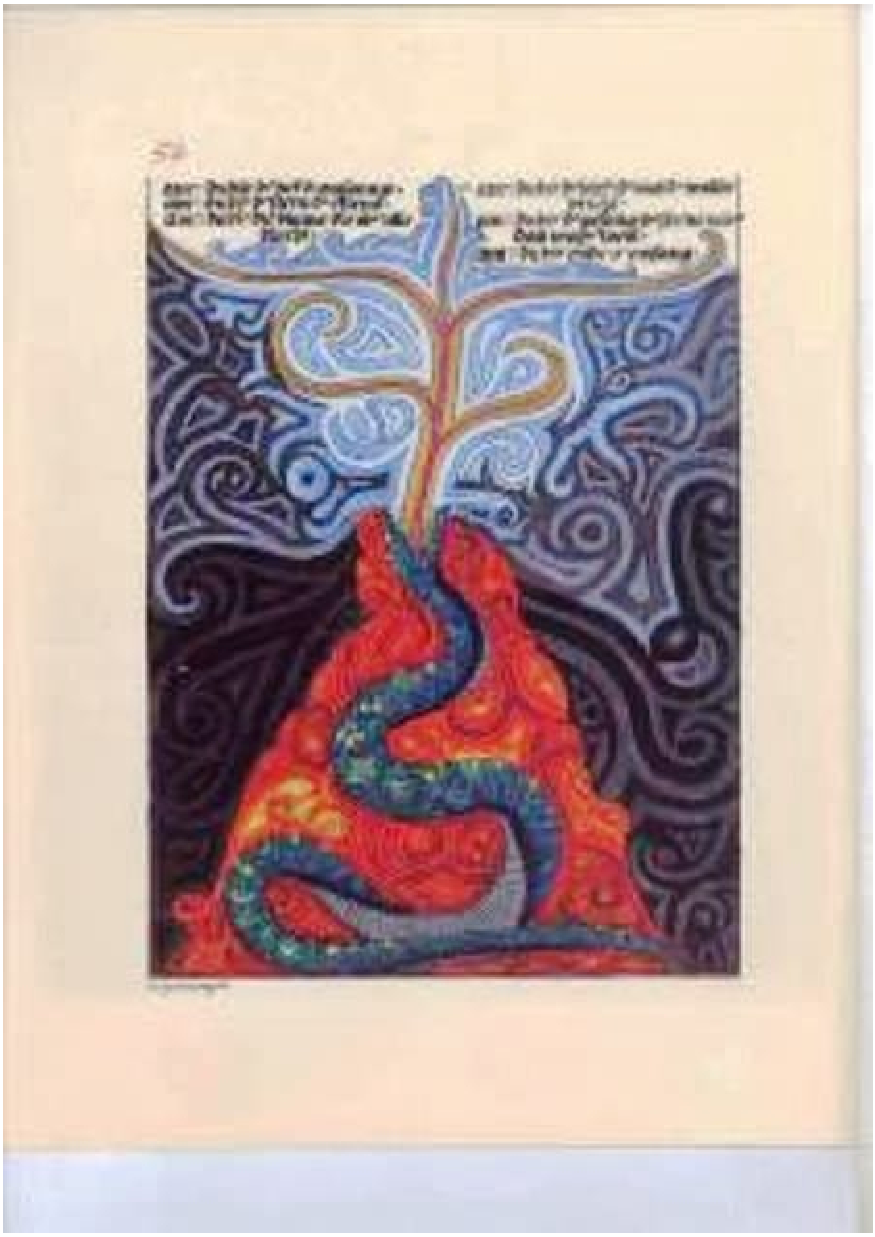
Sonu Shamdasani, a preeminent Jung historian, is Reader in Jung History at Wellcome Trust Centre for the History of Medicine at University College London. He lives in London, England.

The Red Book is one of the volumes of the Philemon Series, sponsored by the Philemon Foundation.

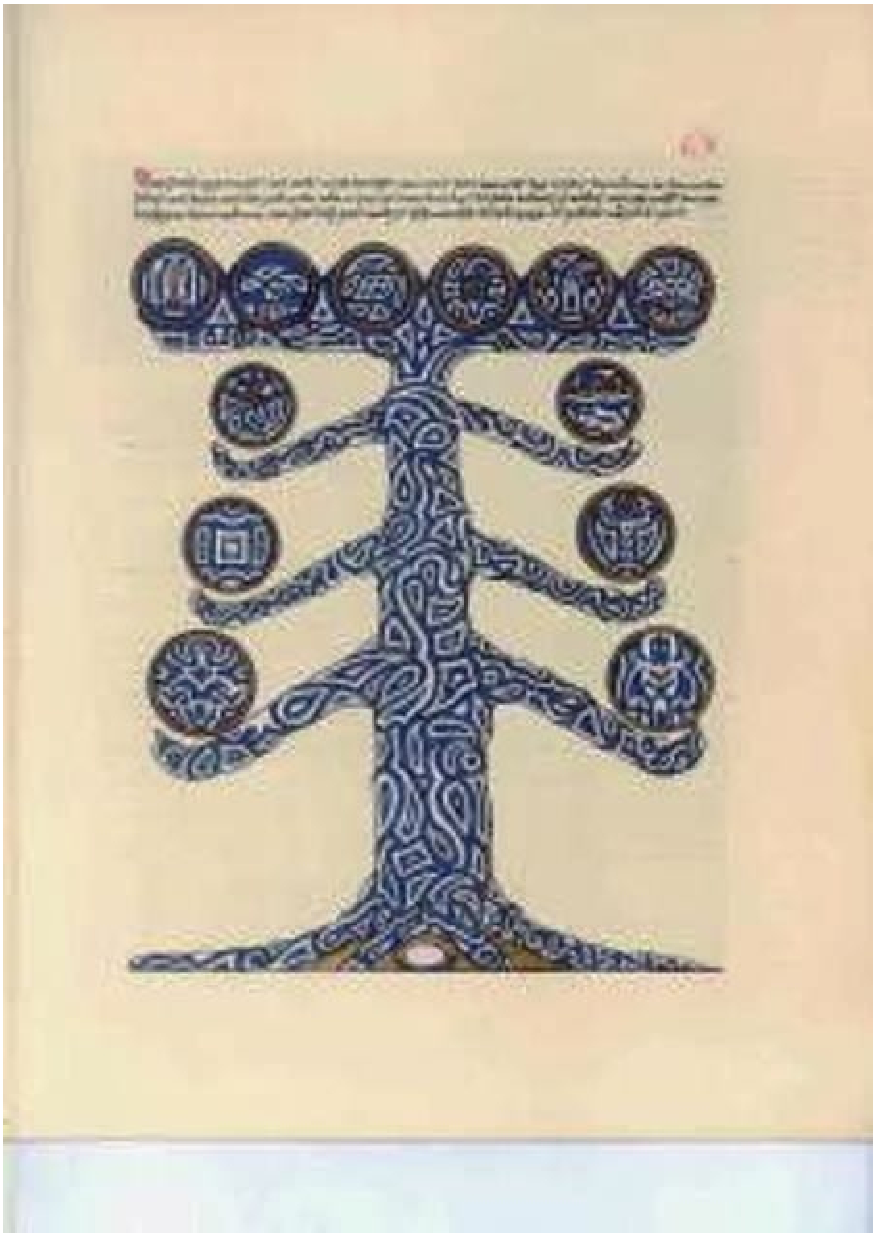
[2]The Red Book: A Reader’s Edition (Philemon)

Some people feel that nobody should read the book, and some feel that everybody should read it. The truth is, nobody really knows. Most of what has been said about the book — what it is, what it means — is the product of guesswork, because from the time it was begun in 1914 in a smallish town in Switzerland, it seems that only about two dozen people have managed to read or even have much of a look at it.

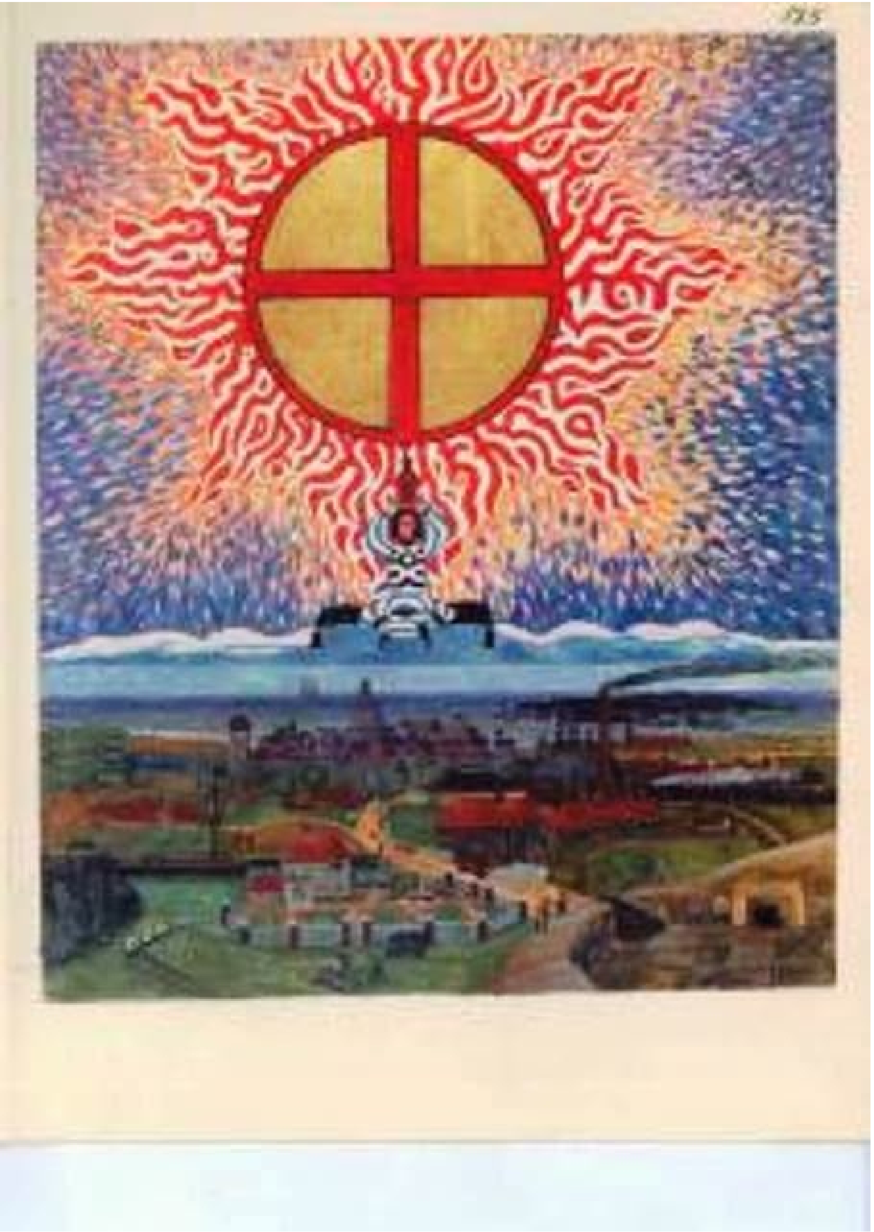
[3]



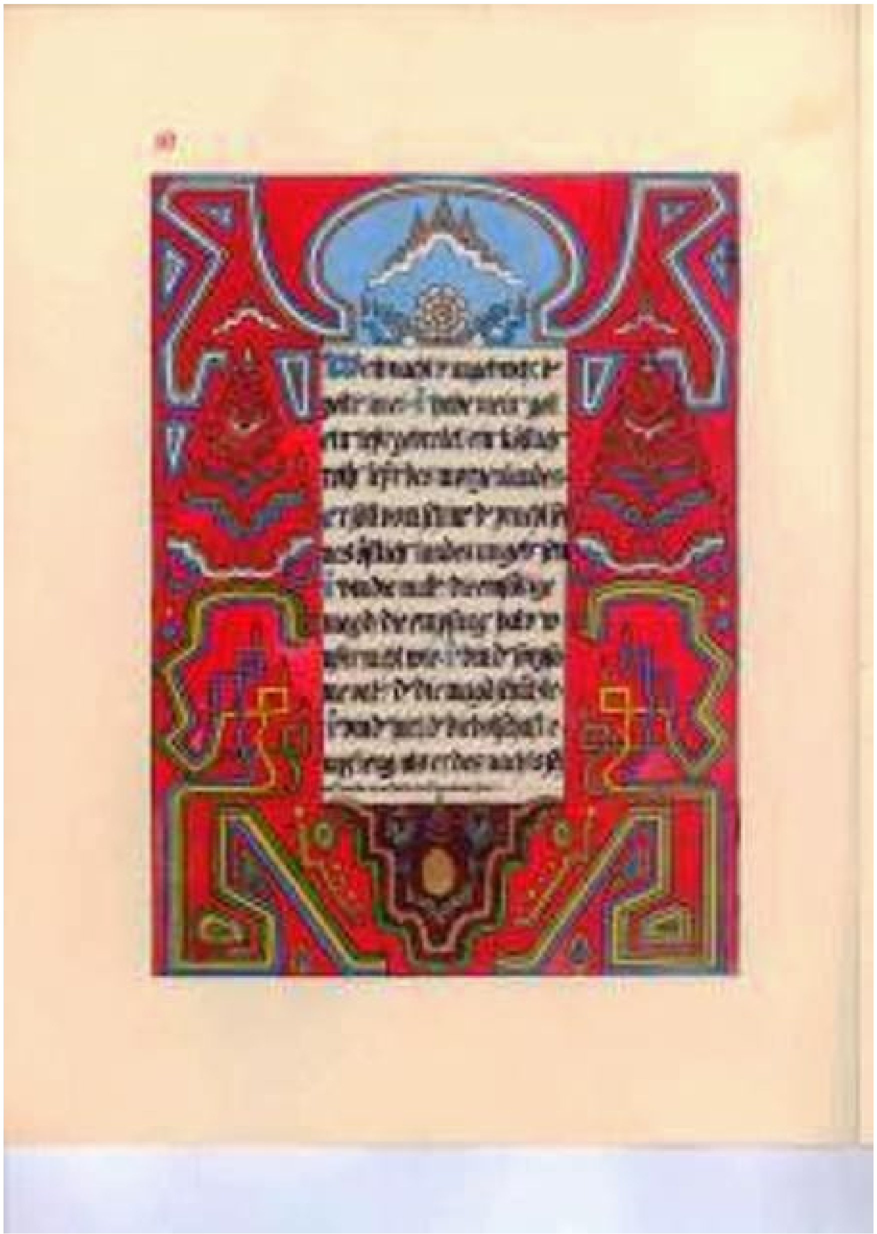
Whether or not he would have wanted it this way, Jung — who regarded himself as a scientist — is today remembered more as a countercultural icon, a proponent of spirituality outside religion and the ultimate champion of dreamers and seekers everywhere, which has earned him both posthumous respect and posthumous ridicule. Jung’s ideas laid the foundation for the widely used Myers-Briggs personality test and influenced the creation of Alcoholics Anonymous. His central tenets — the existence of a collective unconscious and the power of archetypes — have seeped into the larger domain of New Age thinking while remaining more at the fringes of mainstream psychology.



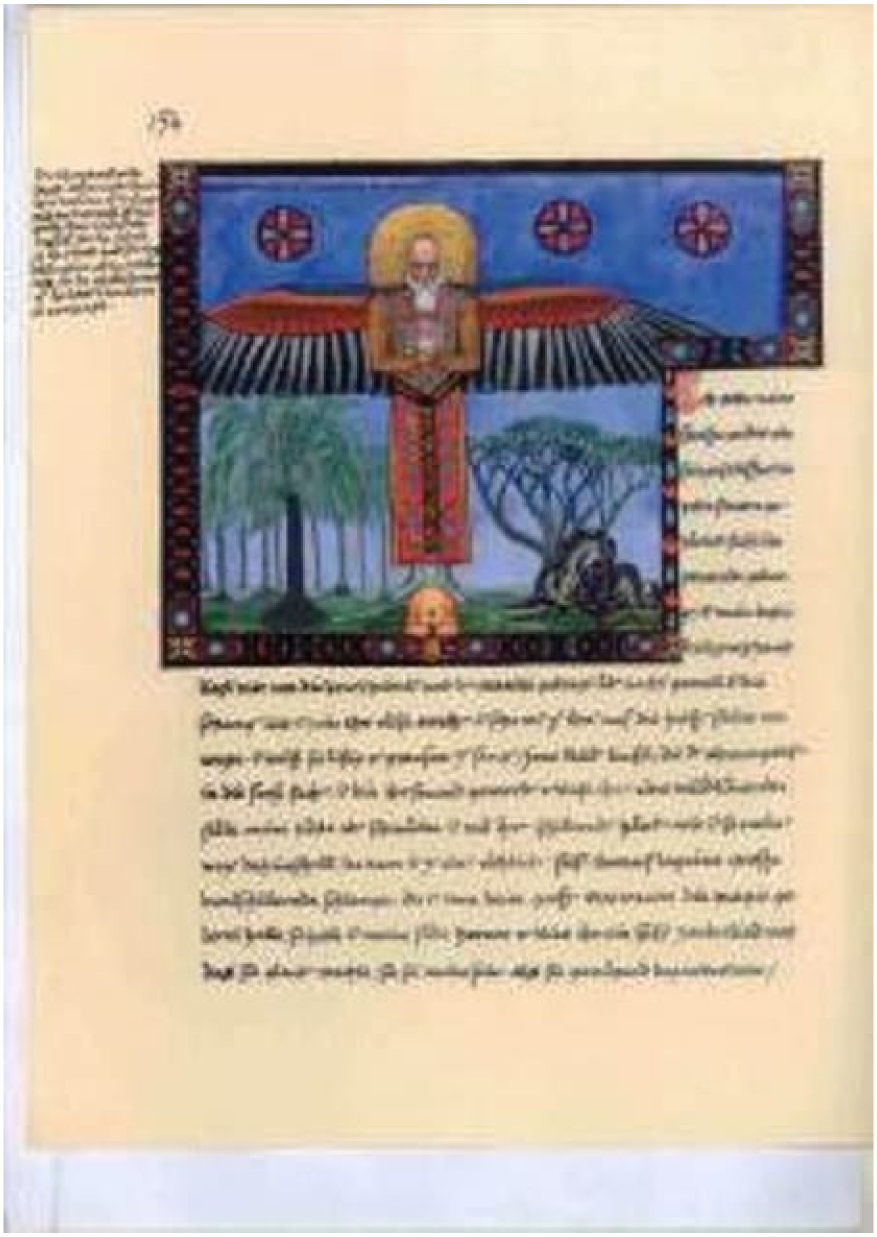
Working at Zurich’s Burghölzli psychiatric hospital, Jung listened intently to the ravings of schizophrenics, believing they held clues to both personal and universal truths. At home, in his spare time, he pored over Dante, Goethe, Swedenborg and Nietzsche. He began to study mythology and world cultures, applying what he learned to the live feed from the unconscious — claiming that dreams offered a rich and symbolic narrative coming from the depths of the psyche. Somewhere along the way, he started to view the human soul — not just the mind and the body — as requiring specific care and development, an idea that pushed him into a province long occupied by poets and priests but not so much by medical doctors and empirical scientists.



Jung soon found himself in opposition not just to Freud but also to most of his field, the psychiatrists who constituted the dominant culture at the time, speaking the clinical language of symptom and diagnosis behind the deadbolts of asylum wards. Separation was not easy. As his convictions began to crystallize, Jung, who was at that point an outwardly successful and ambitious man with a young family, a thriving private practice and a big, elegant house on the shores of Lake Zurich, felt his own psyche starting to teeter and slide, until finally he was dumped into what would become a life-altering crisis.

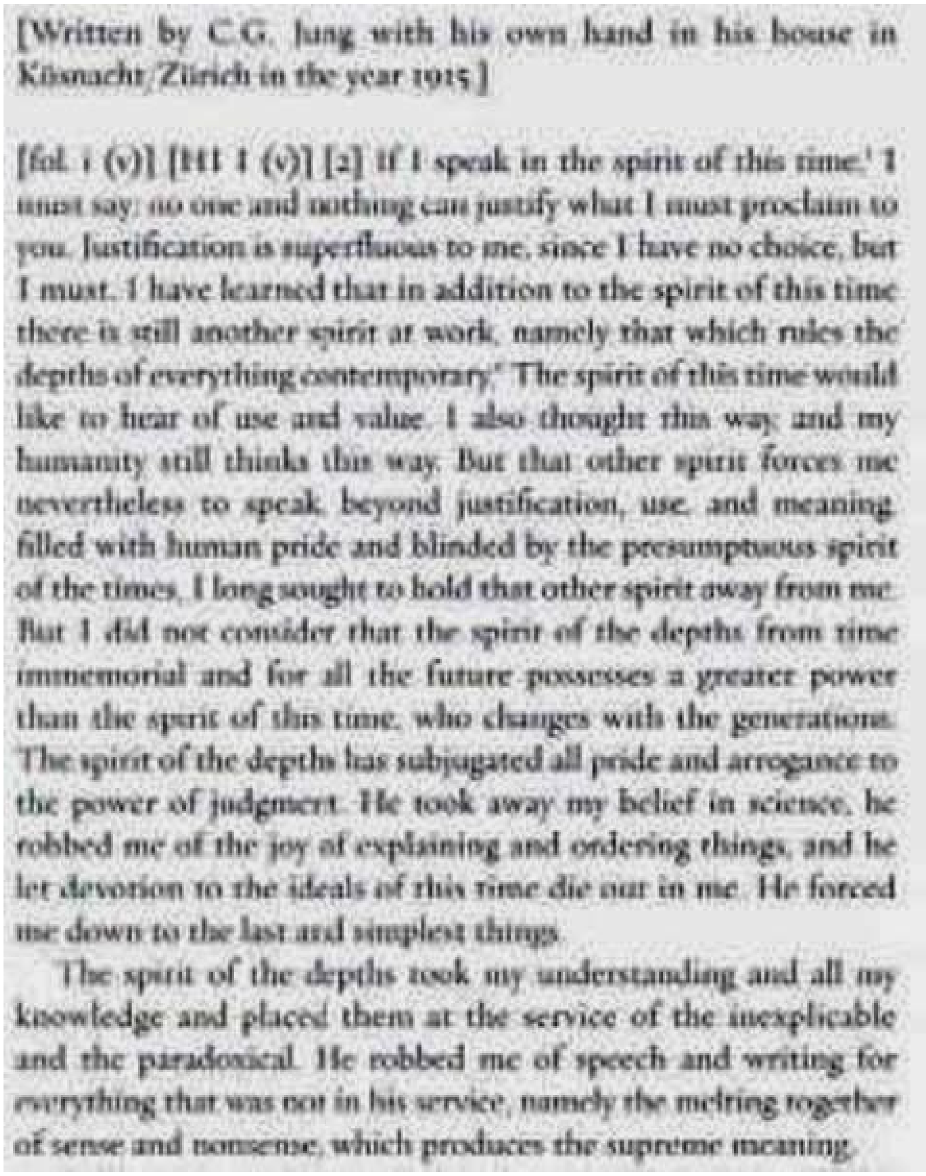


What happened next to Carl Jung has become, among Jungians and other scholars, the topic of enduring legend and controversy. It has been characterized variously as a creative illness, a descent into the underworld, a bout with insanity, a narcissistic self-deification, a transcendence, a midlife breakdown and an inner disturbance mirroring the upheaval of World War I. Whatever the case, in 1913, Jung, who was then 38, got lost in the soup of his own psyche. He was haunted by troubling visions and heard inner voices. Grappling with the horror of some of what he saw, he worried in moments that he was, in his own words, “menaced by a psychosis” or “doing a schizophrenia.”



Jung recorded it all. First taking notes in a series of small, black journals, he then expounded upon and analyzed his fantasies, writing in a regal, prophetic tone in the big red-leather book. The book detailed an unabashedly psychedelic voyage through his own mind, a vaguely Homeric progression of encounters with strange people taking place in a curious, shifting dreamscape. Writing in German, he filled 205 oversize pages with elaborate calligraphy and with richly hued, staggeringly detailed paintings.

[8]

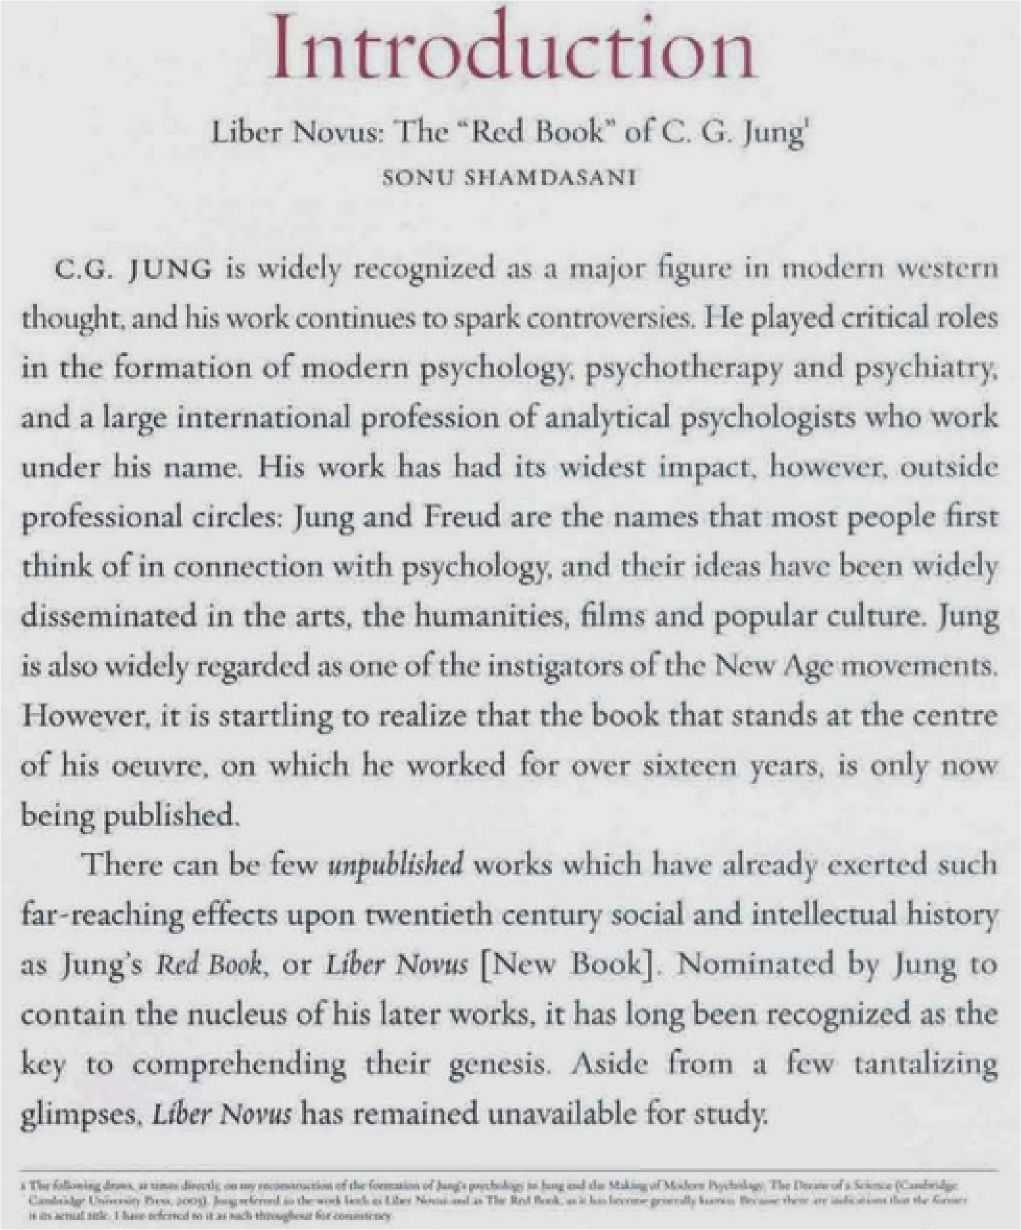


[Written by C.G. Jung with his own hand in his house in Küsnacht/Zürich in the year 1915]

[fol. i (v)] [HI 1 (v)] [2] If I speak in the spirit of this time,[1] I must say: no one and nothing can justify what I must proclaim to you. Justification is superfluous to me, since I have no choice, but I must. I have learned that in addition to the spirit of this time there is still another spirit at work, namely that which rules the depths of everything contemporary.[2] The spirit of this time would like to hear of use and value. I also thought this way, and my humanity still thinks this way. But that other spirit forces me nevertheless to speak, beyond justification, use, and meaning. Filled with human pride and blinded by the presumptuous spirit of the times, I long sought to hold that other spirit away from me. But I did not consider that the spirit of the depths from time immemorial and for all the future possesses a greater power than the spirit of this time, who changes with the generations. The spirit of the depths has subjugated all pride and arrogance to the power of judgment. He took away my belief in science, he robbed me of the joy of explaining and ordering things, and he let devotion to the ideals of this time die out in me. He forced me down to the last and simplest things.

The spirit of the depths took my understanding and all my knowledge and placed them at the service of the inexplicable and the paradoxical. He robbed me of speech and writing for everything that was not in his service, namely the melting together of sense and nonsense, which produces the supreme meaning.

The book tells the story of Jung trying to face down his own demons as they emerged from the shadows. The results are humiliating, sometimes unsavory. In it, Jung travels the land of the dead, falls in love with a woman he later realizes is his sister, gets squeezed by a giant serpent and, in one terrifying moment, eats the liver of a little child. ("I swallow with desperate efforts — it is impossible — once again and once again — I almost faint — it is done.") At one point, even the devil criticizes Jung as hateful.



Introduction

Liber Novus: The "Red Book" of C. G. Jung[1]

SONU SHAMDASANI

C.G. JUNG is widely recognized as a major figure in modern western thought, and his work continues to spark controversies. He played critical roles in the formation of modern psychology, psychotherapy and psychiatry, and a large international profession of analytical psychologists who work under his name. His work has had its widest impact, however, outside professional circles: Jung and Freud are the names that most people first think of in connection with psychology, and their ideas have been widely disseminated in the arts, the humanities, films and popular culture. Jung is also widely regarded as one of the instigators of the New Age movements. However, it is startling to realize that the book that stands at the centre of his oeuvre, on which he worked for over sixteen years, is only now being published.

There can be few unpublished works which have already exerted such far-reaching effects upon twentieth century social and intellectual history as Jung's Red Book, or Liber Novus [New Book]. Nominated by Jung to contain the nucleus of his later works, it has long been recognized as the key to comprehending their genesis. Aside from a few tantalizing glimpses, Liber Novus has remained unavailable for study.

---

[1] The following draws, at times directly, on my reconstruction of the formation of Jung's psychology in Jung and the Making of Modern Psychology: The Dream of a Science (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2003). Jung referred to the work both as Liber Novus and as The Red Book, as it has become generally known. Because there are indications that the former is its actual title, I have referred to it as such throughout for consistency.

He worked on his red book — and he called it just that, the Red Book — on and off for about 16 years, long after his personal crisis had passed, but he never managed to finish it. He actively fretted over it, wondering whether to have it published and face ridicule from his scientifically oriented peers or to put it in a drawer and forget it. Regarding the significance of what the book contained, however, Jung was unequivocal. "All my works, all my creative activity," he would recall later, "has come from those initial fantasies and dreams."

Jung evidently kept the Red Book locked in a cupboard in his house in the Zurich suburb of Küsnacht. When he died in 1961, he left no specific instructions about what to do with it. His son, Franz, an architect and the third of Jung's five children, took over running the house and chose to leave the book, with its strange musings and elaborate paintings, where it was. Later, in 1984, the family transferred it to the bank, where since then it has fulminated as both an asset and a liability.

For about two years, Shamdasani flew back and forth to Zurich, making his case to Jung's heirs. He had lunches and coffees and delivered a lecture. Finally, after what were by all accounts tense deliberations inside the family, Shamdasani was given a small salary and a color copy of the original book and was granted permission to proceed in preparing it for publication, though he was bound by a strict confidentiality agreement. When money ran short in 2003, the Philemon Foundation was created to finance Shamdasani's research.

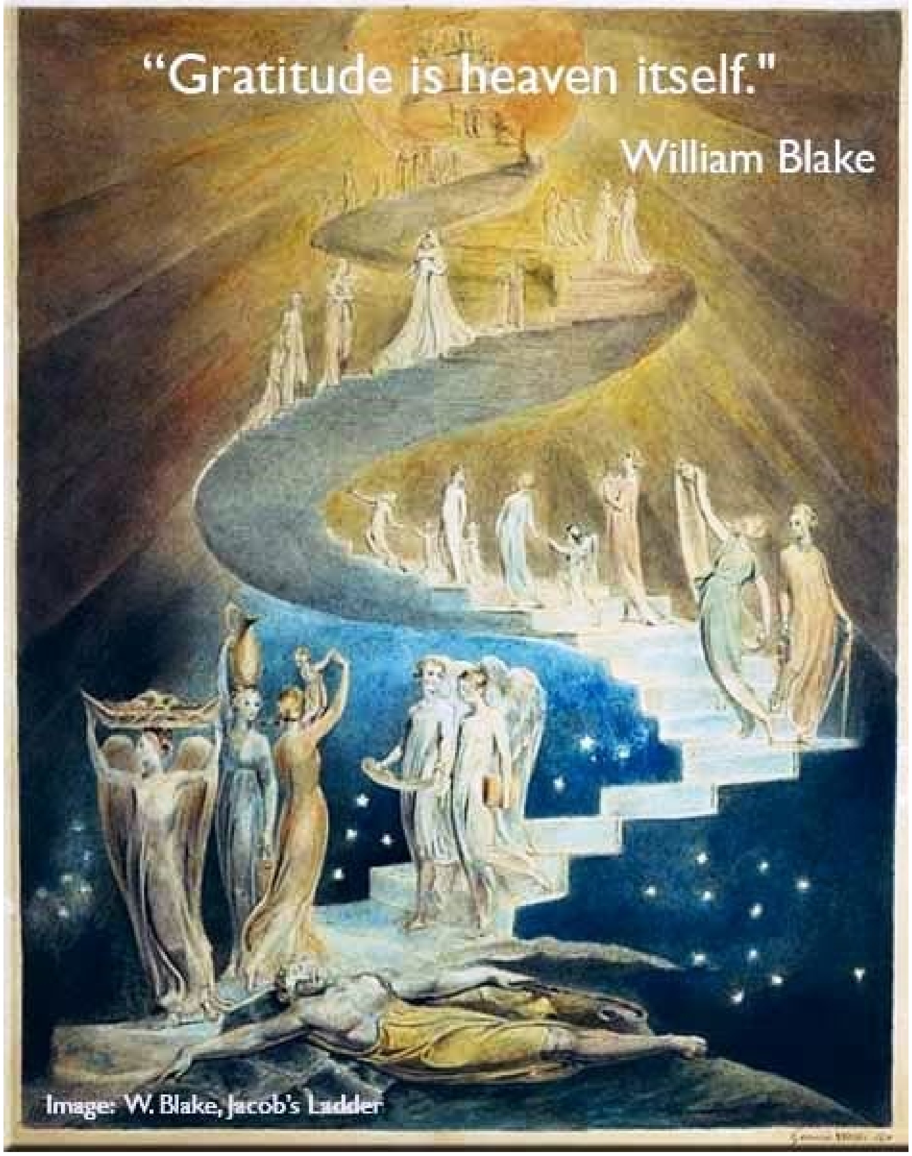
Having lived more or less alone with the book for almost a decade, Shamdasani — who is a lover of fine wine and the intricacies of jazz — these days has the slightly stunned aspect of someone who has only very recently found his way out of an enormous maze. When I visited him this summer in the book-stuffed duplex overlooking the heath, he was just adding his 1,051st footnote to the Red Book.

Note: All Quotations above from New York Times Book Review of The Red Book

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/4027a-book.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Red-Book-Readers-Philemon/dp/0393089088/ref=sr_1_2?crid=179OVGESX796P&keywords=jung+red+book&qid=1574973726&sprefix=jung+%2Caps%2C173&sr=`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/ff5d2-1.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/e4c2f-1a.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/76816-1b.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/de9a1-1c.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/1606e-1d.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/57d6a-1e.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/cf5f3-intro.jpg`

If our religion is based on salvation (2019-11-28 04:10)

[1]



“Gratitude is heaven itself."
William Blake
Image: W. Blake, Jacob's Ladder

“If our religion is based on salvation, our chief emotions will be fear and trembling.
If our religion is based on wonder, our chief emotion will be gratitude.” Carl Jung

“If the only prayer you ever said in your whole life, was, thank you, that would suffice.” Meister Eckhart http://jungcurrents.com/jung-blake-gratitude-quote/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/51fa2-gratitude.jpg`

Carl Jung on the Symbol of Losing Teeth (2019-11-28 04:20)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Elined Kotschnig

Dear Mrs. Kotschnig, 16 April 1936

The symbol of losing teeth has the primitive meaning of losing one’s grip because under primitive circumstances and in the animal kingdom, the teeth and mouth are the gripping organ.

If one loses teeth, one loses the grip on something.

Now this can mean a loss of reality, a loss of relationship, a loss of self-control, etc.

The English word grip is contained in the German word Begriff (conception or notion).

The Latin word conceptio means the same, i.e., catching hold of something, having a grip on something.

Thus the lost tooth also can mean that one loses a certain conception of things, a hitherto valid opinion or attitude.

For instance pregnancy can have such an effect that one loses one's grip on the psychic continuity as the physiological condition takes the lead over the mind.

The dream of the bone in the skull seems to point to the hole in the skull through which the soul escapes according to primitive belief.

This can mean a fear of death or a somewhat dangerous communication with the unconscious.

That the bone comes out of the mouth in the form of a tooth would convey the idea that a certain old opinion has been lost or is to be lost.

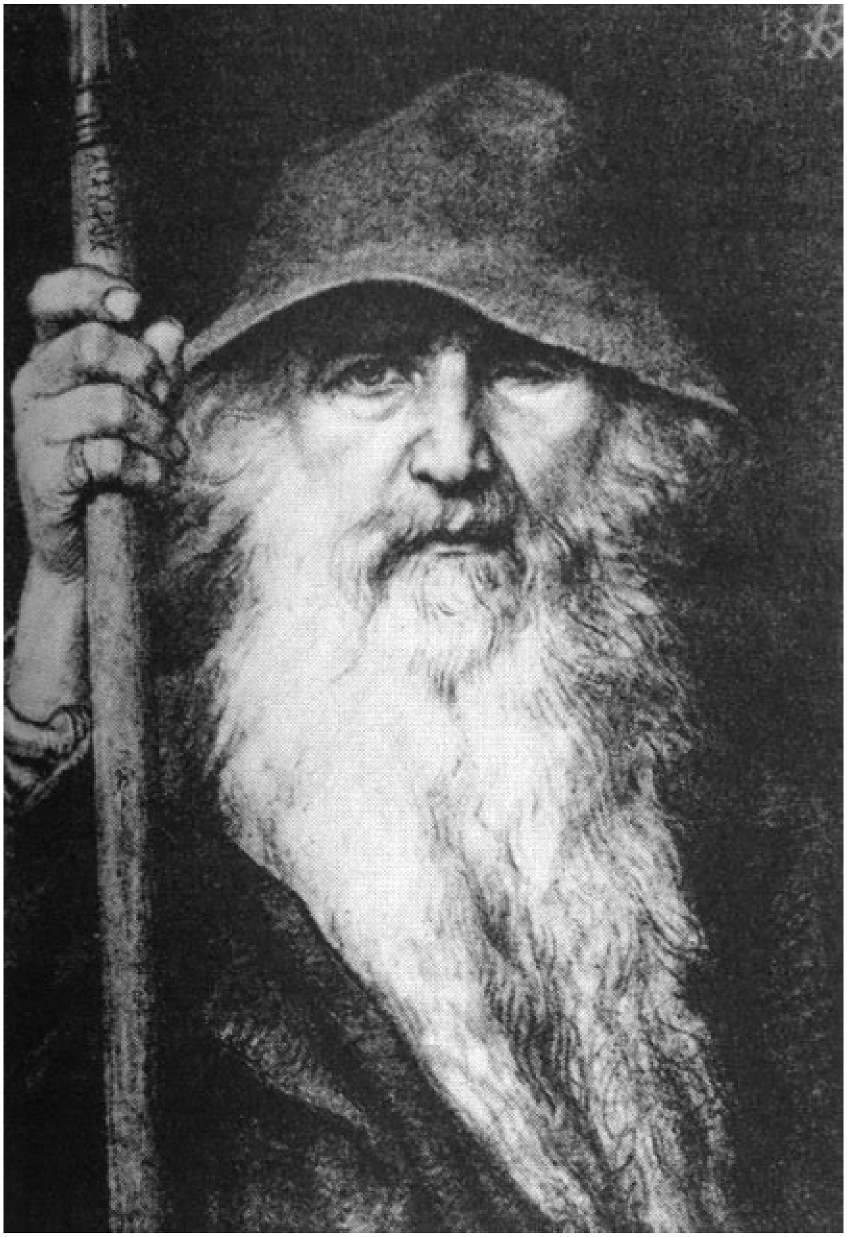
Occasionally it can also mean getting old or older, particularly so with women that have children, because there is a saying that each child cost a tooth.

Sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 212.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/23346-teeth.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2G6G9SB98G406&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574933891&sprefix=jung+let`

Carl Jung: "The counterpart of sentimentality is as we know brutality." (2019-11-28 04:47)



[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Wilhelm Laiblin

Dear Herr Laiblin,

The toad that appears in your book generally signifies an anticipation of the human being on the level of the coldblooded creatures, and actually stands for the psyche associated with the lower spinal cord. Like the snake, it is a symbol of the creative unconscious.

What interested me most in your letter was that you as the Ergriffener look at the situation more from the feminine side.

This fits exactly, because the Ergreifer is the man and the Ergriffener is the woman.

But the Ergirffener whose ergreifer one does not see is taken for the Ergreifender and also functions as such (i.e. dangerously).

The counterpart of sentimentality is as we know brutality.

Wotan's inner meaning, represented by his lost eye, is Erda, the Magna Mater.

I understand perfectly why you feel the German phenomenon differently.

It would be the same with me, but I am caught my outsiderness and dare not let myself see it too exclusively from the inside.

That would also rob me of the capacity to make the German character comprehensible to the non-German world.

The West knows too much about sentimentalities to believe m them.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung

1. L., to whom Jung had sent "Wotan," asked why the outsider was more impressed by the masculine aspect of events in Germany whereas to one judging from inside the feminine aspect was more impressive
2. : Ergriffener = he who is gripped; Ergreifer/Ergreifender =he who grips. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 213.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/9c899-odin.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2G6G9SB98G406&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574933891&sprefix=jung+let`

The Hero must fall for the sake of our Redemption (2019-11-28 05:39)

[1]
[2]The Red Book: A Reader’s Edition (Philemon)

We think that there is singleness within us, and communality outside us. Outside of us is the communal in relation to the external, while singleness refers to us. We are single if we are in ourselves, but communal in relation to what is outside us. But if we are outside of ourselves, then we are single and selfish in the communal. Our self suffers privation if we are outside ourselves, and thus it satisfies its needs with communality Consequently; communality is distorted into singleness.

If we are in ourselves, we fulfill the need of the self we prosper, and through this we become aware of the needs of the communal and can fulfill them. If we set a God outside of ourselves, he tears us loose from the self since the God is more powerful than we are. Our self falls into privation. But if the God moves into the self he snatches us from what is outside us. We arrive at singleness in ourselves. So the God becomes communal in reference to what is outside us, but single in relation to us. No one has my God, but my God has everyone, including myself. The Gods of all individual men always have all other men, including myself So it is always only the one God despite his multiplicity You arrive at him in yourself and only through your self seizing you. It seizes you in the advancement of your life.

The hero must fall for the sake of our redemption, since he is the model and demands imitation. But the measure of imitation is fulfilled. We should become reconciled to solitude in ourselves and to the God outside of us. If we enter into this solitude then the life of the God begins. If we are in ourselves, then the space around us is free, but filled by the God.

Our relations to men go through this empty space and also through the God. But earlier it went through selfishness since we were outside ourselves. Therefore the spirit foretold to me that the cold of outer space will spread across the earth. With this he showed me in an image that the God will step between men and drive every individual with the whip of icy cold to the warmth of his own monastic hearth. Because people were beside themselves, going into raptures like madmen.

Selfish desire ultimately desires itself You find yourself in your desire, so do not say that desire is vain. If you desire yourself you produce the divine son in your embrace with yourself Your desire is the father of the God, your self is the mother of the God, but the son is the new God, your master. If you embrace your self then it will appear to you as if the world has become cold and empty The coming God moves into this emptiness.

If you are in your solitude, and all the space around you has become cold and unending, then you have moved far from men, and at the same time you have come near to them as never before.

Selfish desire only" apparently led you to men, but in reality it led you away from them and in the end to yourself which to you and to others was the most remote. But now, if you are in solitude, your God leads you to the God of others, and through that to the true neighbor, to the neighbor of the self in others.

If you are in yourself you become aware of your incapacity. You will see how little capable you are of imitating the heroes and of being a hero yourself So you will also no longer force others to become heroes. Like you, they suffer from incapacity Incapacity; too, wants to live, but it will overthrow your Gods. [Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 245.]

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/02/8d154-redemption.jpeg`

2. `https://www.amazon.com/Red-Book-Readers-Philemon/dp/0393089088/ref=sr_1_2?crid=179OVGESX796P&keywords=jung`

`+red+book&qid=1574973726&sprefix=jung+%2Caps%2C173&sr=`

Carl Jung: “The combination of priest and medicine man is not so impossible as you seem to think.” (2019-11-28 05:40)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Father Victor White

Dear Victor, Bollingen, 8 January 1949

Thank you cordially for your nice human letter!

I know now at least where you are. I was afraid America had spirited you away altogether.

It is of course just like me to forget your most helpful and comprehensive letter about the anima Christi, i .e., to forget to thank you.

As a matter of fact I felt particularly grateful to you for having answered my request so thoroughly.

Such things happen to me time and again and always have happened, namely that my feelings or a certain kind of them are suddenly no more in sight, especially in that moment when I should acknowledge them.

That’s how the inferior function behaves.

Your cryptic remarks about "synchronistic effects" on Dec. 16th arouse my curiosity, since I feel peculiarly innocent as to ulterior motives of my letter.

This feeling of innocence may prove the contrary. I am sorry you can’t tell me more about it.

On my side it was an inner urge that prompted me to write.

I felt a need to hear from you.

The effect America had upon you looks exactly like something that went right through to the unconscious, whence it will appear again after a more or less prolonged incubation, in a new form.

The combination of priest and medicine man is not so impossible as you seem to think.

They are based upon a common archetype, which will assert its right provided your inner development will continue as hitherto.

It is true, the "fringe" of new things is always made up of funny figures.

I imagine we could have observed very similar lunatics among the early Christian followers, f.i. those people who were cured of possession.

After all, England and our old world is your Rhodus, hie salta.

One’s anxiety always points out our task.

If you escape it you have lost a piece of yourself, and a most problematic piece at that, with which the Creator of things was going to experiment in His unforeseeable ways.

They are indeed apt to arouse anxiety.

Particularly so, as long as one can’t see below the surface.

The independent mind in you is subject and object of the divine experiment. . . . If you feel isolated in England, why don’t you make one of your fratres into a real brother in the spirit?

When I came to Zurich, the most materialistic city of Switzerland, there was nobody ready-made for my needs.

I then shaped some for me.

They were meant for this experience.

One could see it from their dreams.

Sorry this is a long letter again.

Don’t trouble to answer it.

Yours cordially,

C,. G . Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 516-517.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/02/08f9b-1.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2KPD1NZL74ZX9&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1574975572&sprefix=jung+le%`

Hindu Brahmans and Gnostics (2019-11-28 05:51)

[1]

[2]Psychology of the Unconscious

The Zosimos vision mentioned above betrays the same train of thought, where it is said of the place of transformation:

We have already observed that the place of transformation is really the uterus. Absorption in one's self (introversion) is an entrance into one's own uterus, and also at the same time asceticism.

In the philosophy of the Brahmans the world arose from this activity; among the post-Christian Gnostics it produced the revival and spiritual rebirth of the individual, who was born into a new spiritual world.

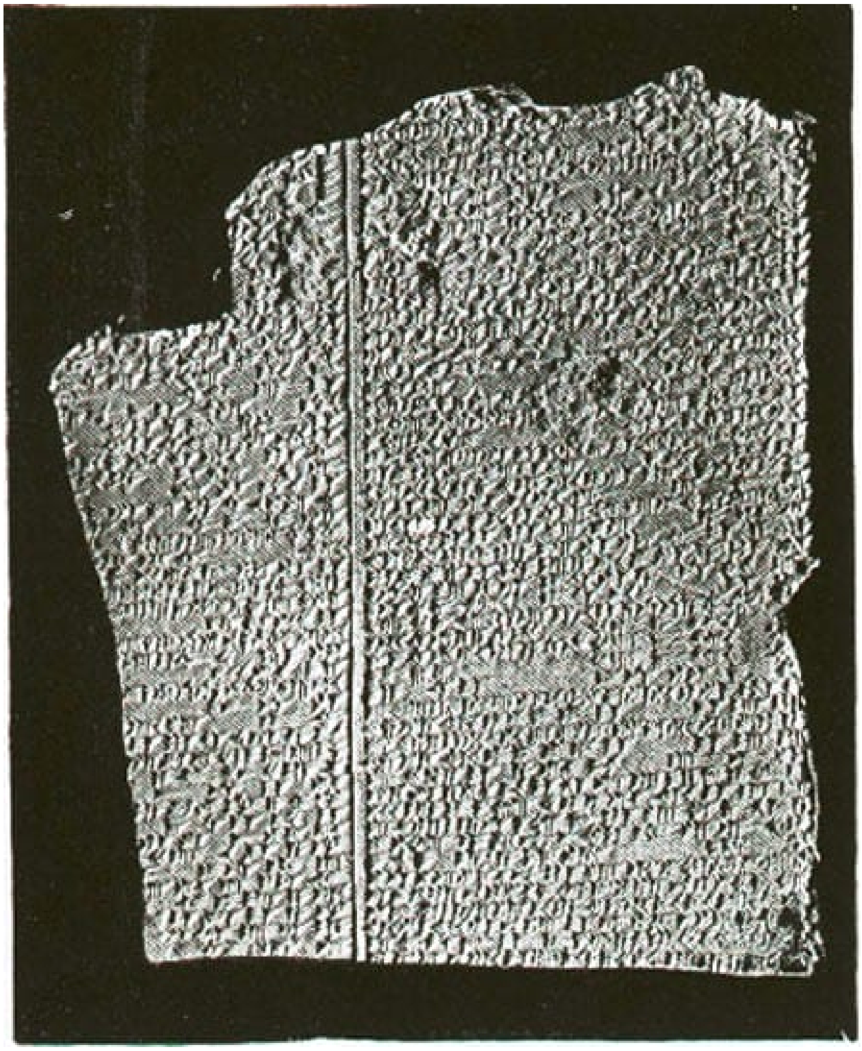
The Hindu philosophy is considerably more daring and logical, and assumes that creation results from introversion in general, as in the wonderful hymn of Rig Veda, 10, 29, it is said:

" What was hidden in the shell,
Was born through the power of fiery torments.
From this first arose love,
As the germ of knowledge,
The wise found the roots of existence in non-existence,
By investigating the heart's Impulses." Carl Jung; Psychology of the Unconscious.

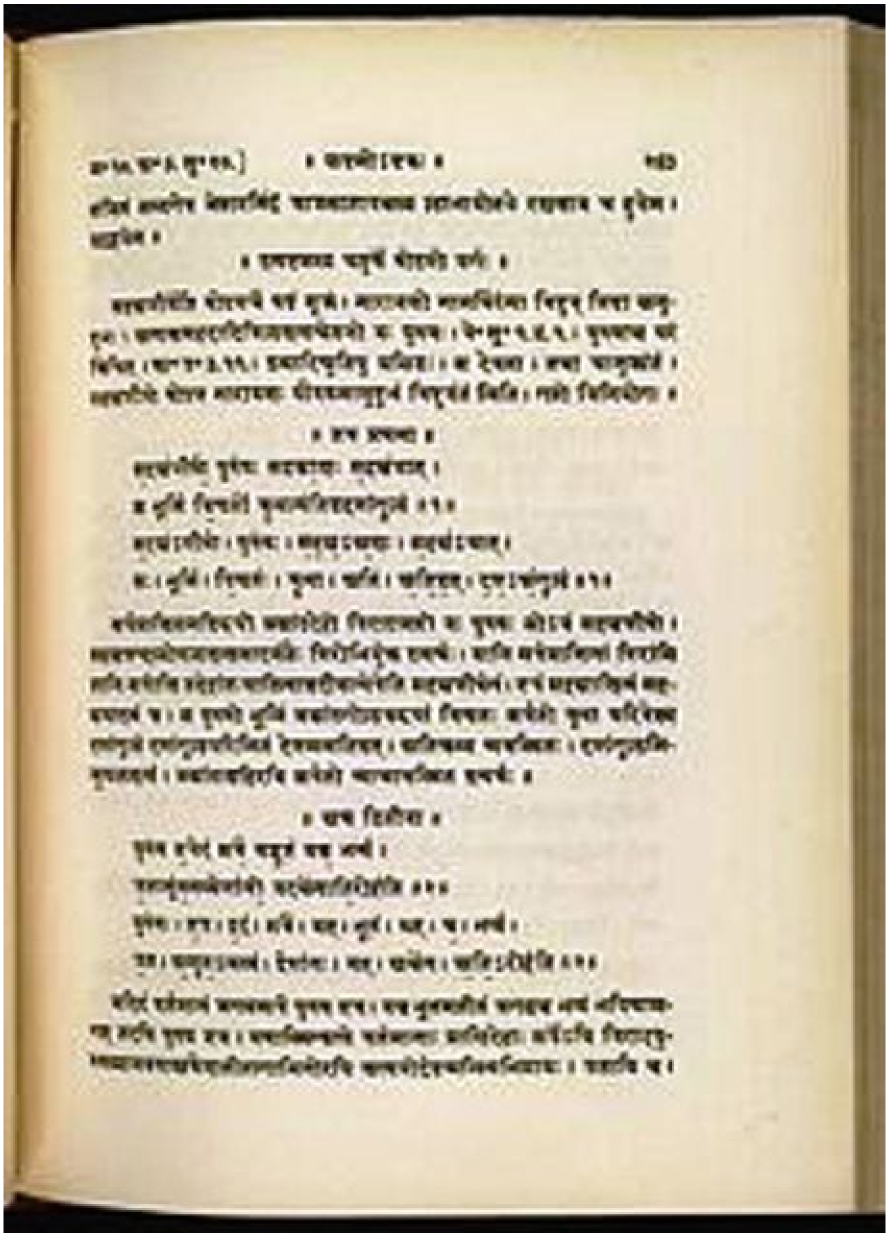
1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/02/8344b-brahman.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Unconscious-C-G-Jung/dp/0486424995/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1J3MWO8RZ5XT4&keywords=jung+psychology+of+the+unconscious&qid=1574975398&sp`

Gilgamesh and the Rig Veda (2019-11-28 05:55)

[1]



[2]



[3]Gilgamesh: The Life of a Poem

The Epic of Gilgamesh is, perhaps, the oldest written story on Earth.

It comes to us from Ancient Sumeria, and was originally written on 12 clay tablets in cunieform script.

It is about the adventures of the historical King of Uruk (somewhere between 2750 and 2500 BCE).

Notice how a passage in the first Book of Gilgamesh refers to Gilgamesh as “Man” being 2/3rds God and 1/3rd Human

Who can compare with him in kingliness?

Who can say like Gilgamesh: "I am King!"?
Whose name, from the day of his birth, was called "Gilgamesh"?
Two-thirds of him is god, one-third of him is human. Gilgamesh, Book 1.

The Rig Veda was written 2200–1600 BC in the Northwestern Subcontinent of India. Notice How this venerable Book refers to Purusha as “Man” being 3/4th Immortal and 1/4th Mortal

HYMN XC. Puruṣha.

1. A THOUSAND heads hath Puruṣa, a thousand eyes, a thousand feet. On every side pervading earth he fills a space ten fingers wide. 2 This Puruṣa is all that yet hath been and all that is to be; The Lord of Immortality which waxes greater still by food. 3 So mighty is his greatness; yea, greater than this is Puruṣa. All creatures are one-fourth of him, three-fourths eternal life in heaven. 4 With three-fourths Puruṣa went up: one-fourth of him again was here. Rig Veda

The first two verses of the Purusha sukta, with Sayana’s commentary. Page of Max Müller’s Rig-Veda-sanhita, the Sacred Hymns of the Brahmans (reprint, London 1974).

The Deluge tablet of the Gilgamesh epic in Akkadian

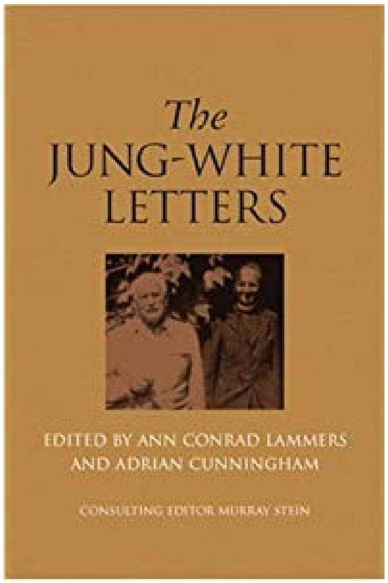
1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/02/3afa8-gilgamesh.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/02/7e6d4-purusha.jpg`
3. `https://www.amazon.com/Gilgamesh-Life-Poem-Michael-Schmidt/dp/0691195242/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3980DE9ZVQYYY&keywords=gilgamesh+the+life+of+a+poem&qid=1574975275&spre`

Reflections on the Jung-White Letters (2019-11-28 06:01)

[1]r The Jung-White Letters

Reflections on the Jung-White Letters

[2]



When after World War II Victor White, a Dominican priest, began to correspond with C.G. Jung, and Jung responded enthusiastically, the stage was set for the beginning of a genuine Jungian-Christian dialogue. Jung was about to begin a series of writings on Christianity, and welcomed the collaboration of a Catholic priest trained in the scholastic philosophy and theology of Thomas Aquinas. And White was deeply attracted to Jung's psychology both personally and in regard to what it had to offer Christianity. Each was open to what the other had to say, and soon Jung was inviting White to stay with him at Bollingen, his country retreat, so that they could explore the possibility of such a dialogue. Eventually Jung was to write Answer to Job, and White was to criticize it, and these difficulties pointed to the problems a deep Jungian-Christian dialogue would have to face. The recent publication of White's letters to Jung (The Jung-White Letters, edited by Ann Conrad Lammers and Adrian Cunningham, Routledge, 2007) allow us to see with a new clarity just what those difficulties were.

As soon as their correspondence began important epistemological issues surfaced. Jung was keenly aware that what he was doing rested on an empirical foundation, and was not a philosophy or theology. He makes it clear that it would be beyond the competence of scientific empiricism to talk about the divine entity. "I don't preach, I try to establish psychological facts. I can confirm and prove the interrelationship of the God image with other parts of the psyche, but I cannot go further without commiting the error of a metaphysical assertion which is far beyond my scope. I am not a theologian and I have nothing to say about the nature of God." (p. 9) And what does the interrelationship of the God image with other parts of the psyche mean? Jung responds: "My personal view of this matter is, that Man's vital energy or libido is the divine pneuma… " (p. 7) But the deeper question is whether such an equation is actually so, and whether philosophy and theology are simply speaking in alternative languages instead of distinctive languages where each of them would have a viewpoint of their own.

As much as White admired Jung, it did not stop him from severely criticizing him, as we can see in his review of Jung's essay, "On the Self" (p. 140, note 26) where he accuses Jung of a quasi-Manichean dualism when he would have done better to follow St. Thomas on the question of evil. Jung, in turn, asserts that Christian doctrine is fundamentally irrational (p. 187), and consists of metaphysical truths grasped by archetypal motives. White, in turn, makes an important response. He feels that Jung's empirical psychology is unnecessarily bound up with Kantian presuppositions, (p. 189) so that embracing Jung's psychology demands giving up philosophical and theological convictions. White considered most of Jung's remarks on evil and the goodness of the Godhead terribly unworthy of him, (p. 202) and it hurt him to see Jung talk in that manner. Jung, of course, was free to pursue his distinctive interpretation of Christianity. Psychologically his experience of God is "the perception of an overpowering impulse" (p.

218) coming from the unconscious. Christ at the time of the Incarnation had to split off his shadow and call it the devil.

While White and others dreamed of a coming together of “Jungian Catholics,” (p. 227) the name given to an association in England, deep epistemological challenges still overshadowed the whole possibility of a Jungian-Christian dialogue. Jung’s Answer to Job was officially published in English in late 1954, but even before that White had to deal with the impression it left on Jung’s readers from other editions. His own review in Black Friars in March, 1955, was a rather paradoxical piece of work. On one hand he was concerned about how Jung would take it. He feared he would take it badly, and he was right, but that didn’t make him initially soften what he had to say. Once the review was published, he regretted it, and later deleted some of its most cutting passages. It was as if he had come to the rational insight that Jung was wrong, but since Jung expressed himself in a highly emotional way, he, in turn, could not help phrasing his dissent in a negatively charged feeling way, as well. White also – perhaps under the pressure of his not completely examined feelings – felt that Jung had said that he never intended to publish Answer to Job. And later White acted as if he didn’t understand why Jung was upset. Yet over and over again he regretted the feeling tone of the review, but never reputiated its substance.

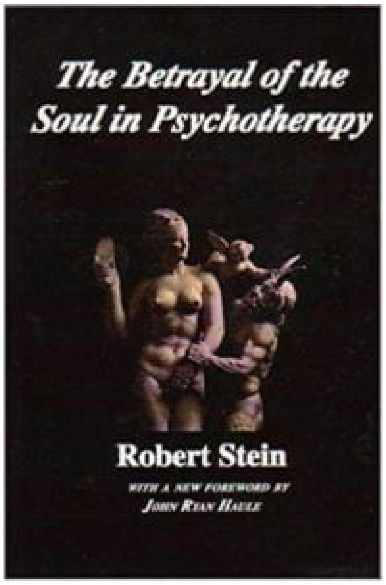
But what was critical in the whole matter was what Jung really had to say in Answer to Job and the substance of White’s response. As important as their personal feelings were, especially in regard to their own relationship, what they had to say was even more important. For Jung God is only partially conscious, and partially good. If one were to address him as if he were a human, one might say “For heaven’s sake, man, pull yourself together and stop being such a senseless savage!” (Answer, p. 9, (572)). It is men and women who possess “a somewhat keener consciousness based on self-reflection.” (p. 13 (579)) And this is an indication that man is in some ways superior to God. Indeed, the conclusion we would have to draw from this is that God needs man in order to become more fully conscious, and to deal with the evil in his nature which he is ignoring. What we are dealing with here, however, is not the Godhead himself, but Jung’s feelings about it. We can’t help but think about the powerful emotions that stirred up Jung’s earliest years, the stories of which he recounted in Memories, Dreams, Reflections. It is as if here he is allowing those feelings about God to come out. Victor White’s review makes it clear that he has been caught up in Jung’s emotions and is responding in kind. He asks us, “Is he (Jung), after the manner of his own “Yahweh,” duped by some satanic trickster into purposely torturing his friends and devotees?” (p. 352) For White, Jung is reading the Scriptures “through a pair of highly distorted spectacles.” (p. 353) So Answer to Job, while not about God, but God images, is not really about Job’s images of God, but Jung’s images. But as we just saw, Jung’s images of God in his childhood were associated with all sorts of powerful feelings that had little to do with the Scriptures or, if we can put it that way, with God’s nature. White was to go on and make comments about Jung’s Answer to Job – “the clear-sightedness and blindness of the typical paranoid system which rationalizes and conceals an even more unbearable grief and resentment” (p. 355) – that was to make it, in fact, impossible for them to pick up the earlier intimacy of their relationship.

Thus, the first and most promising attempt at a Jungian-Christian dialogue with Jung, himself, as one of the major players ended in failure. The epistemological gap that separated the two men was never bridged. White came the closest when he pointed out Jung’s Kantian presuppositions. Jung, in fact, was an empiricist, and was working out an empirical science of the psyche. But at the same time he did not actually believe that philosophy and theology could actually know something in their own distinctive ways.

For extensive background on the Jung-White relationship see Ann Conrad Lammers’ In God’s Shadow, the Collaboration of Victor White and C.G. Jung, 1994. This book also contains an appendix about the long process that led to the publication of White’s letters, which were first used in detail in In God’s Shadow. Lammers also talks about the epistemological problem between Jung and White, but arrives at no firm conclusion about how the impasse their relationship reached could have been resolved.

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Jung-White-Letters-Ann-Conrad-Lammers/dp/1583911944/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2DOY43FKVYLSQ&keywords=jung+white+letters&qid=1574975002&sprefix=junh`
2. `http://ecx.images-amazon.com/images/I/416wsUGyP0L._SL500_AA300_.jpg`

Robert M. Stein Reflections on Jung's Practice and Concepts (2019-11-28 06:18)



[1]Contact with Jung: Essays on the influence of his work and personality

IT is not an easy task to answer the question of the most significant stimulus that I have derived from C. G. Jung, since he opened the door for me to an entirely new orientation toward my own being and toward the world.

I believe it was H. G. Wells who once said, 'The rational mind is at the end of its tether', and it is precisely in answer to this precarious dilemma of our times that Jung has spoken most clearly and courageously. Freud's discovery that the irrational were primarily responsible for the neurotic suffering and behavior of the individual, and his therapeutic approach of uncovering the unconscious in order to bring it under better control and direction of the rational mind, leave the ultimate solution still dependent on the primacy and superiority of the ego.

But, if the rational mind is really at the end of its tether, it does not seem likely that the 'way out' is going to come via reason.

I believe that Freud's concepts were limited by the metaphysical bias of the scientific tradition of the Age of Reason.

Jung, on the other hand, broke sharply with this metaphysical foundation when he conceptualized the individuation process as a regrouping of the personality around the central symbol of the self.

Thus, in Jung’s system, the superior knowledge of the numinous and divine is once again re-established as central, while man’s ego consciousness and the rational mind are moved to the periphery.

As analytical psychologists, we place our faith and trust primarily in the healing power of the self, and, although we stress the essential importance of the dialectical relationship between ego and unconscious, we believe that through this relationship the birth of a reconciling symbol will eventually occur.

To put it another way, we look for healing to come about through ’revelation’ rather than through reason.

In this way we depart sharply from the tradition of modern scientific medicine.

I remember my first visit to Jung.

Hardly had I sat down in his study when he said to me, ’Why doesn’t the medical profession understand me?’

He smiled with a somewhat mischievous twinkle in his eyes and did not wait for an answer.

Then he began to tell me of some of his own life experiences which gradually led him to his deep appreciation of the wisdom of the unconscious.

For two hours he continued to give me rich and vivid illustrations of how the unconscious works toward healing and wholeness.

As far as I could see, Jung was attempting to show me that the aim of psychotherapy was to help the individual to re-establish a connection with his soul.

For him, the genetic factors which may have contributed to the patient’s soul sickness could fit into a number of psychopathological formulations, all of which might yield valid causalistic explanations for the patient’s disturbed ego function.

But, however much these things are of interest from the medical point of view, Jung did not feel that they offered any real hope for redeeming the sick and suffering soul.

As I understand Jung, it was his conviction that modern man’s dilemma is due to his neglect of psychic reality, that his only hope for psychic health is to turn inward and give serious attention and consideration to what his unconscious and his soul have to say, that the unconscious is the true source of life and wisdom.

Is there any wonder that the medical profession has not been able to understand Jung?

We can see further evidence of Jung’s attitude in his approach to dreams.

Although, for him, the dream does present unconscious contents and complexes which must be made conscious, he sees the most valuable function of dreams in the fact that they reveal to consciousness astonishingly specific solutions to conflicts which appear insoluble to the rational mind.

In other words, dreams are not only a way to understanding the unconscious, but they are in themselves potentially and extraordinarily potent healing mechanisms.

From a practical therapeutic point of view, this approach has enabled me to put my trust in the healing powers of the unconscious and the self.

Thus, I see the unconscious as the chief source of strengthening ego consciousness as well as the total personality.

Rather than attempting to strengthen a weak ego by helping it to build up more adequate defenses, I have gradually come to the conviction that any real strengthening of the ego can only come about through re-establishing a connection with psychic reality, not concrete reality.

Or, to put it another way, Jungian psychology has led me to the realization that the modern epidemic of the weak and fragmented ego is not so much due to the ego's distorted view of outer reality, as to Western man's utter neglect and devaluation of his soul and inner reality.

This is indeed a difficult position to hold in face of the fact that it can be objectively demonstrated that the ego of the neurotic generally has a distorted or inadequate response to reality-testing.

Jung realized that for the individuation process an adequate and whole ego was essential, since a dialectical relationship between ego and non-ego was fundamental to individuation as he conceived it; therefore, in his earlier writings he often stated the importance of a reductive Freudian type of analysis for individuals in the first half of life or with inadequate ego strength.

I do not know how much Jung may have altered this view in his later years, but I have found an exclusively reductive analysis entirely inadequate for any individual.

Because of my Jungian orientation, I find it increasingly difficult to view even the most severe non-organic psychic disturbances as a psychopathological process going on entirely within the individual.

Rather, I feel my patients suffer primarily from the disease of our times: namely, from a loss of connection with soul and spirit, from the collective over-concretization of the soul and over-rationalization of the spirit.

Certainly, there is psychopathology to be dealt with, but I, at least, have no doubt that an exclusively causalistic medical approach to modern man's psychic disorders can at best serve only to delay the violent and perhaps catastrophic irruption of the unconscious.

There is indeed a danger in turning to the unconscious to reveal the way toward self-regulation and self-realization, in that a tendency may develop to minimize the importance of the ego body complex.

This type of criticism has often been directed toward analytical psychology.

Assuming that there may be a tendency among some Jungian analysts to devalue the ego, body, sex, etc., I think this is owing to a gross misunderstanding and misinterpretation of Jung rather than to an inherent weakness in his psychotherapeutic formulations.

The ego must react, must take a stand toward the unconscious, for without a reacting ego there is no possibility for revelation.

On the other hand, can we speak of a truly dialectical relationship if the 'I' starts out with the presumption that, at best, the 'Thou' can only point to the problem, but that the solution must come from the 'I'?

In a reductive analysis, it is indeed the ego which throws its narrow beam of light into the unconscious in order to explore and differentiate the various contents which it encounters.

In this way the powers of conscious discrimination are increased and the ego is to some extent able to free itself from the domination of disturbing unconscious complexes.

However, there is nothing dialectical in a reductive analysis, since its aim is to strengthen the ego and depotentiate the unconscious.

Practically speaking, I have grave doubts whether an exclusively reductive analysis can even achieve its limited aim, since the 'ever-changing demon' will return again and again to pursue and harass the individual.

It cannot be depotentiated, it can only be transformed.

And we know that the ego is incapable of transforming anything, it can only participate in the process.

I have, nevertheless, found the reductive work of analysis an essential instrument in bringing the individual to an awareness of psychic reality, but only if at the same time one realizes that a meaningful life does not come through knowing, but by being known.

To put it another way, human life takes on direction and meaning only when the individual is in touch with that source which knows and recognizes his unique destiny.

Thus, isolated and alienated modern man needs above all to re-establish his connection with those eternal images which the spirit imprints upon the soul.

Only then will he find a kinship connection with all life and feel once again that he is known.

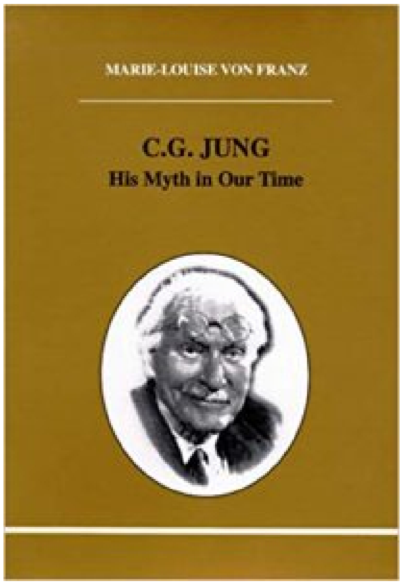
It has been difficult to express my debt to Jung without exceeding the limits of science.

Still, I think it hardly necessary to remind the reader that Jung was far from being anti-scientific.

Rather, he has attempted to introduce the human soul into a rational scientific Weltanschauung which has become sterile and destructive. Robert M. Stein, Contact with Jung, Pages 172-175

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Contact-Jung-Essays-influence-personality/dp/B0000CLPU0/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+fordham+contact&qid=1574974481&sr=8-1`

Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time - Quotations (2019-11-28 06:27)



[1]C.G. Jung (Studies in Jungian Psychology by Jungian Analysts)

Life has been so cruel to some people that one cannot pass judgment on them for being warped. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 24

Strangely enough, Jung's discoveries were less accepted or were accepted more slowly in his own profession, academic psychiatry, than in many others. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 6

As I saw it, a scientific truth was a hypothesis which might be adequate for the moment but was not to be preserved as an article of faith for all time. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 9

I have set up neither a system nor a general theory but have merely formulated auxiliary concepts to serve me as tools.... Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 9

I have never been inclined to think that our senses were capable of perceiving all forms of being.... All comprehension and all that is comprehended is in itself psychic, and to that extent we are hopelessly cooped up in an exclusively psychic world. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 9

... at the source of the great confessional religions as well as of many smaller mystical movements we find individual historical personalities whose lives were distinguished by numinous experiences. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 11

The significant difference ... between merely pathological cases and 'inspired' personalities is that sooner or later the latter find an extensive following and can therefore transmit their effect down the centuries.... they are talking of something that is 'in the air' and is 'spoken from the heart.' Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 11

The wise man who is not heeded is counted a fool, and the fool who proclaims the general folly first and loudest passes for a prophet and Führer, and sometimes it is luckily the other way round. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 11

it seems to me very much more cautious and reasonable to take cognizance of the fact that there is not only a psychic but also a psychoid unconscious, before presuming to pronounce metaphysical judgments.... There is no need to fear that the inner experience will thereby be deprived of its reality and vitality. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 12

There was a daimon in me.... It overpowered me, and if I was at times ruthless it was because I was in the grip of the daimon. I could never stop at anything once attained. I had to hasten on, to catch up with my vision. Since my contemporaries, understandably, could not perceive my vision, they saw only a fool rushing ahead. ... I had no patience with people aside from my patients. I had to obey an inner law.... Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 22

"Shamefully A power wrests away the heart from us, For the Heavenly Ones each demand sacrifice; But if it should be withheld Never has that led to good," Holderlin, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 23

The daimon of creativity has ruthlessly had its way with me. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 23

Part of being a good cook, of course, is being a gourmet. He loved to let his guests guess what ingredients had gone into a soup or a sauce; I remember a boeuf braisé à la marseillaise with a sauce of sixteen ingredients! Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 25

Rather like Goethe’s "God-nature," Jung referred to nature as "God’s world" an overwhelming mystery all around us, full of the most wonderful and awesome events and forms. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 27

To ’God’s world’ belonged everything superhuman dazzling light, the darkness of the abyss, the cold impassivity of infinite space and time, and the uncanny grotesqueness of the irrational world of chance. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 27

For the rest of his life, and despite certain moral criticisms of the character of Faust, Jung kept his great admiration for Goethe and, indeed, loved him as one loves a kindred spirit. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 35

This transformation is a process in the collective psyche which is a preparation for the new aeon, the Age of Aquarius. This new image of God appears in Jung’s first dream of the underground phallic god-king, awaiting in this hidden form its eventual resurrection. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 37

The play and counter play between personalities No. 1 and No. 2, which has run through my whole life, has nothing to do with a it’ or dissociation in the ordinary medical sense. On the contrary, it is played out in every individual. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 39

Now I knew that No. 1 was the bearer of the light, and that No. 2 followed him like a shadow. My task was to shield the light and not look back at the vita peracta; this was evidently a forbidden realm of light of a different sort.... I recognized clearly that my path led irrevocably outward, into the limitations and darkness of three-dimensionality. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 41-42 in the light of consciousness the inner realm of light appears as a gigantic shadow... Now all at once I understood ... that cold shadow of embarrassment which passed over people’s faces whenever I alluded to anything reminiscent of the inner realm Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 42

I deliberately chose this form because I wanted to avoid the impression that I had any idea of announcing an ’eternal truth.’ The book [Answer to Job] does not pretend to be anything but the voice or question of a single individual who hopes or expects to meet with thoughtfulness in the public. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 42

From earliest times attempts have been made to classify individuals according to types, and so to bring order into the chaos. The oldest attempts known to us were made by oriental astrologers.... Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 47

Here [Psychology] alone the two currents of my interest could flow together.... Here was the empirical field common to biological and spiritual facts.... It was as though two rivers had united and in one grand torrent were bearing me inexorably toward distant goals. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 52

It cannot be assumed, the analyst is a superman who is above such differences, just because he is a doctor who has acquired a psychological theory and a corresponding technique.... There is no therapeutic technique or doctrine that is of general application, since every case that one receives for treatment is an individual in a specific condition. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 53

The thinking type finds the feeling type stupid and sentimental; the latter takes the thinking type to be a "cold intellectual. To the sensation type, the intuitive is "unreal," whereas the latter finds the sensation type a "flat spiritless pedestrian creature," etc. Food for one is poison for the other. Judging from my practical experiences, the merit of Jungian typology, Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 48

There is no therapeutic technique or doctrine that is of general application, since every case that one receives for treatment is an individual in a specific condition. It is much more important to establish a relationship of trust than it is to demonstrate a clinical theory. The doctor "has something to say, but so has the patient. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 53

The treatment is also never merely logotherapy (Victor Frankl), because to therapeutic encounter, as understood by Jung, belong all those irrational imponderabilia, such as tone of voice, facial expression, gestures and by no means least that unconscious itself "which really is unconscious." Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 54

You see, I have some rare and beautiful plants. I offer them the soil. If they like it they can stay here and bloom and grow. If they don’t, well then, nothing can be done. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 55

Matter and spirit both appear in the psychic realm, "as distinctive qualities of conscious contents. The ultimate nature of both is transcendental, that is, irrepresentable, since the psyche and its contents are the only reality which is given to us without a medium.’ Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 58

In consequence of the inevitability of psychic phenomena, a single approach to the mystery of existence is impossible, there have to be at least two: namely, the material or physical event on the one hand and its psychic reflection on the other. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 58

[Psychology] is not concerned with things as they are ’in themselves,’ but only with what people think about them. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 58

Since the human body is built up by heredity out of a multitude of Mendelian units, it does not seem altogether out of the question that the human psyche is similarly put together. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 59

From the start of my psychiatric career the studies of Breuer and Freud, along with the work of Pierre Janet, provided me with a wealth of suggestions and stimuli. Above all, I found that Freud's technique of dream analysis and dream interpretation cast a valuable light upon schizophrenic forms of expression. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 59

it should be clear enough that Jung was not a pupil of Freud's who defected, as has often been erroneously reported, but that he had already developed the basic features of his own life-work before his meeting with Freud. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 61

For Freud, sexuality in the last analysis is rooted in a biological drive; for Jung, sexuality, although indeed a biological occurrence, is also the expression of a "chthonic spirit," which is "God's other face," the dark side of the God-image (phallus dream). Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 61

I knew Jung personally from 1933 until his death and I never perceived the slightest conscious or unconscious trace of any such attitude. On the contrary he frequently inveighed against Hitler and Nazism in quite unambiguous terms. He had numerous Jewish refugees among his analysands (some of whom he treated gratis) Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 63

This [Nazism] evil is so abysmal that it can only end in total destruction. Even the innocent people who are left can no longer be spared the suffering that is coming now. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 64

As Mircea Eliade points out, the shaman himself does not heal; he mediates the healing confrontation of the patient with the divine powers. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 66

Among the so-called neurotics of our day there are a good many who in other ages would not have been neurotic that is, divided against themselves. If they had lived in a period and in a milieu in which man was still linked by myth with the world of the ancestors, and thus with nature truly experienced and not merely seen from outside, they would have been spared this division' with themselves. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 67-68

In reality ... individuation is an expression of that biological process simple or complicated as the case may beby which every living thing becomes what it was destined to become from the beginning. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 73

The reproach most frequently levelled against Jung is that individuation is an asocial, egocentric exercise. This is by no means the case. The human being, in his instinctual nature, is a social being, and when this nature is rescued from unconsciousness and related to consciousness he becomes more socially fit and better related to his fellow men. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 75

Spirit threatens the naïve minded man with inflation, of which our own times have given us the most horribly instructive examples. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 84

We can perceive the slightest emotional fluctuations in others and have a very fine feeling for the quality and quantity of affects in our fellow-men. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 85

In exactly the same way Jung thought that psychic processes, and especially dreams, should be described both causally and in respect to their goal or purpose. The psychic healing process can only be understood from the final standpoint, whereas the causal standpoint is more apt to yield a diagnosis. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 87

The mind, as the active principle in the inheritance, consists of the sum of the ancestral minds, the ’unseen fathers’ whose authority is born anew with the child. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 89

The creative function of the symbol-forming psychic dynamicor the spiritalways appears in the single individual. Only in the individual are new ideas, artistic inspirations and constructive hunches and fantasies created. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 90

One of Jung’s most important contributions to the art of dream analysis lay in adding an interpretation on the subjective level to Freud’s interpretation on the objective level. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 92

We must therefore take it that the dream is just what it pretends to be, neither more nor less Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 94

The dream never points exclusively to something known but always to complex data not yet grasped by our ego-consciousness. It points to a meaning we have not yet consciously realized. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 94

"The shaman,” says Eliade, "is the great specialist in the human soul; he alone ’sees’ it, for he knows its ’form’ and its destiny." Mircea Eliade, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 99

Dreams, sickness, or initiation ceremony, the central element is always the same: death and symbolic resurrection of the neophyte. Mircea Eliade, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 100

Sometimes I know so little about what the unconscious demands that I simply leave it to my hands, so that afterwards I can think about what I have shaped. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 106

Active imagination is the most effective means through which the patient can become independent of the therapist and learn to stand on his own feet. However, he must then undertake the inner work on his own, for no one else can do it for him. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 112

In the reading of this Eastern guide to meditation it became clear to Jung that he had set out quite spontaneously along an inner way that had not only been known in the East for hundreds of years but had over many centuries been developed into a structured inner path. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 113

Most Zen masters expressly decline to take serious account of dreams, which they look upon as fragments of illusion which must be overcome. Jung, on the other hand, regards dreams as ”messages from the Self" which support the way of meditation. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 114

Although the wisdom of the East made a profound impression on Jung, nevertheless he constantly warned Westerners against imitating its yoga techniques and other practices. He looked upon such imitation as theft and as a disregard of our own psychic heritage, especially of our shadow. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 114

He [Jung] writes that he does not seek, as the East Indian does, to be freed from nature and the inner opposites. Instead he seeks that wisdom which comes from the fullness of a life lived with devotion "Nature, the psyche, and life appear to me like divinity unfolded. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 115

Here Jung confesses his Christian spiritual heritage: conflict (represented by the symbol of the cross) may not be circumvented, nor suffering avoided. He liked to quote Thomas à Kempis to the effect that suffering is the horse which carries us fastest to wholeness. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 115

Jung found the Buddha to be a more complete human being than the Christ, because the Buddha lived his life and took as his task the realization of the Self through understanding, whereas with the Christ this realization was more like a fate which happened to him. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 115

Jung foresaw that the East would exert a growing psychological influence on our culture, while we would intervene drastically in their world with materialism and political destruction. He saw that Buddhism, too, has been weakened by a partial hardening into an outer formula, as Christianity has with the Westerner. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 115-116

It is clear to me," wrote a Japanese professor, "that Jung can contribute to our spiritual tradition and religion a reality basis that we have partly lost." Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 116

The dynamic which produces such inner symbolic patterns in the psyche is what Jung understands by the word "spirit." Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 93

Religion, says Jung, "on the primitive level means the psychic regulatory system that is coordinated with the dynamism of instinct. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 83

In Jung's opinion, therefore, symbols were not invented or thought up by man, but were produced from the unconscious by way of so-called revelation or intuition. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 88

The advocates of hallucinogenic drugs are engulfed in a one-sidedly overvalued unconscious, and movements and parties which are politically and rationalistically oriented hope to change the world with only conscious sociological measures, completely ignoring the unconscious. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 97

The medically controlled use of hallucinogenic drugs which has come into practice in recent years is also crippled by the same misuse of power, which is characteristic of many of the methods which employ imagination: the power of the unconscious is conjured up through the use of the drug, but it is then the controlling therapist, instead of the experiencing subject, who is responsible for the confrontation. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 119

Drug users are often plagued by fearful anxiety dreams and visions which are meant to prevent them from going further into the unconscious (a bad trip!), and the dreams of politically and sociologically oriented world reformers generally criticize their intellectualism, their inflation and their lack of feeling. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 98

In civilized societies the priest is primarily the guardian of existing collective ritual and tradition; among primitive peoples, however, the figure of the shaman is characterized by individual experience of the world of spirits (which today we call the unconscious) and his main function is the healing of personal illnesses and disturbances in the life of the collective. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 99

Jung did not enter this world in a trance-state, but rather in full consciousness and without any diminution of the individual moral responsibility which is one of the attainments of Western culture. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 117

It is generally agreed today that Jung's greatest and most characteristic discovery was the empirical proof that there is in fact such a "collective soul" or collective psyche the collective unconscious, to use the name he gave it. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 123-124

In his later work Jung wrote that the archetypes might, in the last analysis, be partly non-psychic, but for the present at least can be described only in terms of their ordering function in the psychic field. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 125

At first Jung regarded the question of the origin of the archetypes as one of heredity, but in his later works he left the question completely open. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 126

Intensive contact with the unconscious is thus not only important for the mentally ill, because the healing tendencies of the psychic self-regulatory system can come into their consciousness in this way. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 97

The secret poet and director of the dream, however, is, as we have said, the "spirit," the active, dynamic aspect of the psyche. Spirit is the real culture creating factor in human beings. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 88

From ancient Iran there are accounts of such celestial journeys in which the ecstatic experiences what, under normal conditions, would be in store for the soul after death. In the Book of Artay Viraf there is a description of the suffering of Viraf for seven days from tetanus. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 104

In the Roman Sominum Scipionis, described by Macrobius, Scipio is instructed in the secrets of the beyond by tile spirit. of his dead ancestor; and the so-called Oracula Chaldaica depict at great length an initiate's visionary journey to the beyond. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 105

The future will show whether a psychic process of development will arise from the psychological "binding-back" (religion), whether the scientific path of subjective knowledge can lead without a break into the heartening universe of objective faith. In the fact ... that it is no longer exclusively 'psychology' in the scientific sense intended by Freud but is already in a position to claim to be a theory of the soul in this fact lies the real meaning of complex psychology. Jean Gebser, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 129

Those who do not realize the special feeling-tone of the archetype, end with nothing more than a jumble of mythological concepts, which can be strung together to show that everything means anything or nothing at all. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 130

Although in the last analysis the myth, like the dream, is "its own meaning," one cannot ignore the historical fact that myths do not have the same meaning for people living in the present that they had for past cultures. If they are to have meaning for us today, then they must be reinterpreted psychologically. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 130

Psychology is the only science that has to take the factor of value (i.e., feeling) into account, because it is the link between events and life. Psychology is often accused of not being scientific on this account; but its critics fail to understand the scientific and practical necessity of giving due consideration to feeling. Carl Jung C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 131-132

Our "modern" interpretations will probably be regarded as amplifying mythologems and a new interpretation will once again attain validity. This does no damage to the "eternal" myth. We are the ones who suffer when we can no longer connect it to our own psychic life. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 133

One wonders why the Christ-image, as an Anthropos figure uniting humanity, was inadequate to the task of liberating "the true man," so that such projections of a differently modified Anthropos-image occurred and why was the symbolic image of the Buddha unable to protect the East from the invasion of communistic ideology? Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 135

The astrological image of the Aquarian period is an image of man which, according to Jung, represents the Anthropos as an image of the Self, or of the greater inner personality which lives in every human being and in the collective psyche. He pours water from a jug into the mouth of a fish, of the constellation of the so-called "Southern Fish," which represents something still unconscious. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 136

This could mean that the task of man in the Aquarian Age will be to become conscious of his larger inner presence, the Anthropos, and to give the utmost care to the unconscious and to nature, instead of exploiting it (as is the case today, for the most part). Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 136

In the Kabbala, Adam Kadmon consists of the precepts of the Torah, and the Adam-image of the Mandaeans consisted of "the law." Psychologically this means that at this cultural level the individual cannot make direct contact with the "inner man" but must do so through religious precepts. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 136

The Anthropos, seen as mankind’s "group soul" is, namely, an image of the bond uniting all men, or of inter-human Eros, the preconscious ground of all communication and community among men, as well as being that psychic element which, through its power to compensate and limit, stands opposed to the boundless or one-sided drive to live out any single instinct. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 138

Later on they drew together into one god, and then that god became man. But in our day even the Godman seems to have descended from his throne and to be dissolving himself in the common man." Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 152

... Is it possible that God wishes to see whether I am capable of obeying His will even though my faith and my reason raise before me the specters of death and hell? That might really be the answer! But these are merely my own thoughts. I may be mistaken.... Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 159

The appearance of the Antichrist at the end of the second Christian millennium is to be accompanied by an indescribable world-wide catastrophe, which is described in the darkest colors in the Johannine Revelation. Then, however, unmediated and in the midst of the most utter destruction, there will appear in heaven the sun-woman, "with the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars." Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 164

If God himself should demand from me a murder, I would not commit it; instead, I would throw my tiny human freedom and consciousness onto the scale, and sooner offer myself as a sacrifice. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 167

If, however, latent meaning as a conscious plan for creation is ascribed to the Creator, then the question arises: Why should the Creator organize this whole phenomenon of the world, since he already knows wherein he can see his reflection? And why should he be reflected, since he is already conscious of himself? Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 169

After all these reflections I have come to the conclusion that man's likeness to God is a matter which concerns not only man but also his Creator. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 169

Evil has become a determinant reality. It can no longer be dismissed from the world by a circumlocution. We must learn how to handle it, since it is here to stay. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 172

Nothing can spare us the torment of ethical decision. Nevertheless, harsh as it may sound, we must have the freedom in some circumstances to avoid the known moral good and do what is considered to be evil, if our ethical decision so requires. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 172

Naturally, human understanding and the human will can never pretend to have fathomed the depths of the divine spirit; any such statements are of course merely human and an "endless approximation" to the concealed. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 174

St. Augustine, the Church father, made a distinction between two kinds of awareness: a morning awareness (cognitio matutina) and an evening awareness (cognitio vespertina). Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 176

Augustine compares the gradual transformation of morning awareness into evening awareness with the succession of the symbolic days of the Genesis story of creation. On the first day there is knowledge of the Self in God, then follows knowledge of the firmament, of the earth, of the sea, of "things that grow out of the earth," of "all animals that swim in the water and that fly in the air" until finally, on the sixth day, man discovers knowledge of man himself. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 176

He [Eckhart] too made a distinction between an "evening knowledge," in which the creature is known in himself and a "morning knowledge" in which creature and the human self are known "in the One which is God Himself." This morning knowledge, however, is discovered only by the man who is "detached," who has forgotten his ego and all creatures and who lives in a psychic condition "in which God is nearer the soul than the soul is to itself." Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 177

Toynbee has seen what I mean, by historical function of archetypal developments. That is a mighty important determinant of human behavior and can span centuries or thousands of years. It expresses itself in symbols. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 181

The psyche is nothing different from the living being. It is the psychical aspect of the living being. It is even the psychical aspect of matter. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 184

We discover that this matter has another aspect, namely, a psychic aspect. And so it is simply the world ... seen from within. It is just as though you were seeing into another aspect of matter." At present, however, most materialists still believe in "dead" matter. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 184

The psyche is an autonomous factor, and religious statements are psychic confessions which in the last resort are based on unconscious, i.e., on transcendental, processes. These ... statements are filtered through the medium of human consciousness: that is to say, they are given visible forms which in their turn are subject to manifold influences from within and without. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 187

It is, in fact, impossible to demonstrate God's reality to oneself except by using images which have arisen spontaneously or are sanctified by tradition, and whose psychic nature and effects the naïve-minded person has never separated from their unknowable metaphysical background.... Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 188

Only heedless fools will wish to destroy [the Christian dogma]: the lover of the soul, never. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 188

Psychology as the science of the soul has to confine itself to its subject and guard against overstepping its proper boundaries by metaphysical assertions or other professions of faith. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 188

For it is not that 'God' is a myth, but that myth is the revelation of a divine life in man. It is not we who invent myth, rather it speaks to us as a Word of God. The Word of God comes to us, and we have no way of distinguishing whether and to what extent it is different from God. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 192

The essay by James Hillman, "Psychology: Monotheistic or Polytheistic," on this subject seems to me to be unsuccessful. Hillman's conclusions are based on the erroneous assumption that monotheism equals Self equals old king, and polytheism equals animus and anima equals son, which historically is not justified. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 196

The feminine factor had a determining influence on Jung's personality and thought. The intellect, the purely masculine spirit of the world of professional scholarship, was alien to him, because this world knows nothing of the process of fertilization through the unconscious. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 145

But a larger mind bears the stamp of the feminine; it is endowed with a receptive and fruitful womb which can reshape what is strange and give it a familiar form. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 145

But the integration of the feminine into the world of masculine Logos to which our culture has been committed up to the present was not simply a personal matter with Jung. He was convinced that in general it is required of everyone these days. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 146

The mandala differs from a personal god-image not only in its feminine aspect but also in its unequivocally mathematical-geometrical character. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 150

If the process of robbing cosmic nature of its soul by the withdrawal of the gods or of God into the human being continues as at present, "then everything of a divine or daemonic character outside us must return to the psyche, to the inside of the unknown man, whence it apparently originated." Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 153

One might also say that man himself, or his innermost soul, is the prisoner or the protected inhabitant of the mandala. Since modern mandalas are amazingly close parallels to the ancient magical circles, which usually have a deity in the center, it is clear that in the modern mandala man the deep ground, as it were, of the Self is not a substitute but a symbol for the deity. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 154

He [Christ] must have been a person of singular gifts to have been able so completely to express and to represent the general, though unconscious, expectations of his age.... In those times the omnipresent, crushing power of Rome ... had created a world where countless individuals, indeed whole peoples, were robbed of their cultural independence and of their spiritual autonomy." Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 182

Like Toynbee, Jung was convinced that we are in a period of cultural decline today and that the survival or disappearance of our culture depends on a renewal of our archetypal myth. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 183

Christianity slumbers and has neglected to develop its myth in the course of the centuries. Those who gave expression to the dark stirrings of growth in mythic ideas were refused a hearing. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 199

It is one of Jung's greatest achievements, the significance of which has not yet been adequately recognized, that he rediscovered the projected religious myth of alchemy and showed unmistakably where it originated and where it is still at work today: not in matter but in the objective unconscious psyche of Western man. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 201

In their day the alchemists were the "empiricists in experience of God," in contrast to the denominational representatives of the different creeds, whose aim was not experience but the consolidation and exegesis of a historically revealed truth. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 203

Greek alchemy, like the mathematics and the natural sciences of antiquity, was continued by the Arabs. In the Islamic world the alchemists were much closer in spirit to the Shi'ites, who were also "empiricists in experience of God," Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 203-204

Thus he [Mercurius] is always a paradox containing within himself the most incompatible possible opposites. The alchemists at least suspected the psychic origin of this symbol and therefore defined Mercurius as "spirit" and "Soul." Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 208

There have always been great individuals who knew about this divine aspect of the soul: St. Augustine, Meister Eckhart, Ruysbroeck, Tauler and numerous others even Giordano Bruno called the soul "God's light." Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 218

The "terrible God" whom Nicholas of Flüe also encountered, whom Martin Luther and Jakob Böhme and many others knew, became for Jung a permanent reality as a result of this experience. All his childish and naïve ideas about a "loving God" as a Summum Bonum were outgrown once and for all. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 160

In Western alchemy, too, several masters suspected that it was a question of a meditative development of one's own inner personality which, it was hoped, would then complete itself in the outer world. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 220

Petrus Bonus then further describes the stone as the resurrecting body which is spiritual as well as corporeal and of such subtlety that it can penetrate and pervade anything. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 221

...for without the conscious acknowledgment and acceptance of our kinship with those around us there can be no synthesis of personality.... The inner consolidation of the individual is not just the hardness of collective man on a higher plane, in the form of spiritual aloofness and inaccessibility; it emphatically includes our fellow man. Carl Jung, C. G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 226

The Gnostics, in their way, attained to a similar deep understanding of Christ as symbol of the Self, but they were caught in an inflation. They felt themselves to be superior to the "blind multitude," in possession of a mystery which set them apart. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 233

As physics has to relate its measurements to objects, it is obliged to distinguish the observing medium from the thing observed, with the result that the categories of space, time, and causality become relative. Carl Jung, C.G.

Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 236

From 1929 on Jung observed a class of events that appear to point to a direct relation between psyche and matter. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 236

Toward the end of his life Jung planned to concentrate his research on the nature of natural numbers, in which he saw archetypal structures and a primordial, very primitive expression of the spirit, that is, of psychic dynamics. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 246

While the mandala represents a psychological analogy to the unus mundus, synchronistic phenomena represent a parapsychological analogy which points empirically to an ultimate unity of the world. In the end everything that happens happens in one and the same world and is part of it. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 249

In the final analysis, we count for something only because of the essential we embody, and if we do not embody that, life is wasted. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 250

Jung had his dream of the giant radiolarian, hidden in the center of the forest, while he was still a student in the Gymnasium, and this dream led to his decision to study natural science. Although at that time he could not have known anything about the universal meaning of the dream image, he rightly concluded that it was an indication that he should seek the light of all further knowledge in the secret orderedness of nature. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 139

My mandalas were cryptograms concerning the state of the self.... I had the distinct feeling that they were something central, and in time I acquired through them a living conception of the self. The self, I thought, was like the monad which I am, and which is my world. The mandala represents this monad and corresponds to the microcosmic nature of the psyche.... The mandala is the center. It is the exponent of all paths. It is the path to the center, to individuation. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 139-140

In 1927 Jung dreamed of such a mandala. He painted it and called it a "Window on Eternity." A year later he painted a similar picture, with a golden castle in the center. Shortly after that there ensued an extraordinary coincidence: Richard Wilhelm sent him the manuscript of The Secret of the Golden Flower, in which Jung enthusiastically recognized a description of the same process at work. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 140

This dream brought with it a sense of finality. I saw that here the goal had been revealed.... Through this dream I understood that the self is the principle and archetype of orientation and meaning. Therein lies its healing function.... Out of [this insight] emerged a first inkling of my personal myth. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 141

The symbols of the cosmic Anthropos and the mandala are synonymous; they both point to an ultimate inner psychic unity, to the Self. The Buddha, the great Eastern symbol of this unity, was always represented in the early days as a twelve-spoked wheel; it was only after some contact with Greece that he began to be represented in India as a human figure. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 141

As womb or matrix of the "psychic ground," the mandala contains more feminine features, which in the East are expressed by the image of Buddha’s lotus and the golden city, and in Western culture by the image of Eden divided into four parts, by the temenos, the fortress and the round vessel all feminine symbols. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 145

"The dream discloses a thought and a premonition that have long been present in humanity: the idea of the creature that surpasses its creator by a small but decisive factor. This "small but decisive factor" is consciousness. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 168

Through his investigations into the principle of synchronicity Jung prepared the way for an eventual alliance between depth psychology and microphysics, and therewith for the use of his ideas by contemporary natural science. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 254

We ought not to underestimate the psychological effect of the statistical world-picture: it thrusts aside the individual in favour of anonymous units that pile up into mass formations. Instead of the concrete individual, you have the names of organizations Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 254

The goal and meaning of individual life (which is the only real life) no longer lie in individual development but in the policy of the State, which is thrust upon the individual from outside and consists in the execution of an abstract idea which ultimately tends to attract all life to itself. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 254

The fact that historically collective consciousness is probably older and more important than ego-consciousness is relevant here; the ego-consciousness of the individual appears to be a late acquisition and even today is a very labile factor in a great many people. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 256

Mass-degeneration does not come only from without: it also comes from within, from the collective unconscious. Against the outside, some protection was offered by the droits de l'homme which at present are lost to the greater part of Europe, and even where they are not actually lost we see political parties, as naïve as they are powerful, doing their best to abolish them in favour of the slave state, with the bait of social security." Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 258

But most religions have compromised with the world and with the State to such an extent that they have become creeds, that is, collective institutions with general convictions instead of a subjective relation to the irrational inner powers. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 260

The State takes the place of God; that is why, seen from this angle, the socialist dictatorships are religions and State slavery is a form of worship.... Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 260

Western man, however, has fallen under the spell of the ideal of community, and for some time now the churches have been making every effort to encourage "group experience" and to attract the public to every sort of social "come-on," from marriage and job bureaus to pop concerts, instead of doing their job, which is to speak to the "inner spiritual man." Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 261

The contemporary division of society into a "right" wing and a "left" wing is nothing but a neurotic dissociation, reflecting on the world stage what is happening in the individual modern man: a division within himself, which causes the shadow that is, what is unacceptable to consciousness to be projected onto an opponent, while he identifies with a fictitious self-image and with the abstract picture of the world offered by scientific rationalism, which leads to a constantly greater loss of instinct and especially to the loss of caritas, the love of one's neighbor so sorely needed in the contemporary world. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 265 therefore, that one could even define the ego as a "relatively constant personification of the unconscious itself, or as the Schopenhauerian mirror in which the unconscious becomes aware of its own face. All the worlds that have ever existed before man were physically there. But they were a nameless happening, not a definite actuality, for there did not yet exist that minimal concentration of the psychic factor, which was also present, to speak the word that outweighed the whole of Creation: That is the world and this is I! That was the first morning of the world … when that inchoately conscious complex, the ego, the son of the darkness, knowingly sundered subject and object, and thus precipitated the world and itself into definite existence…." Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 52

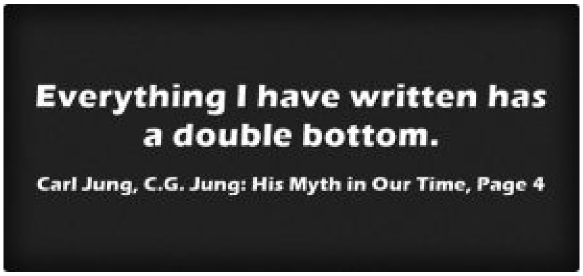
Freud's greatest achievement probably consisted in taking neurotic patients seriously and entering into their peculiar individual psychology…. He saw with the patient's eyes, so to speak, and so reached a deeper understanding of mental illness than had hitherto been possible. In this respect he was free of bias, courageous, and succeeded in overcoming a host of prejudices. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 60

When I once remarked to Jung that his psychological insights and his attitude to the unconscious seemed to me to be in many respects the same as those of the most archaic religions for example shamanism, or the religion of the Naskapi Indians who have neither priest nor ritual but who merely follow their dreams which they believe are sent by the "immortal great man in the heart" Jung answered with a laugh: "Well, that's nothing to be ashamed of. It is an honor!" Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 13

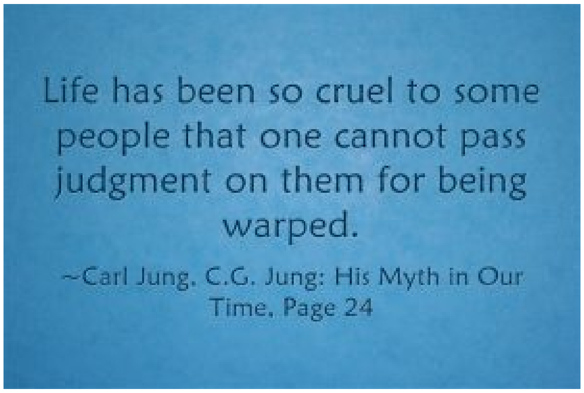
Hegel's weakness lay in what Jung calls "the attempt to dominate everything by the intellect" including the unconscious. In order to avoid the necessity of admitting that one is exposed to uncanny autonomous psychic influences from the unconscious, and thereby to circumvent the experience of these influences, one interprets them in an "artificial … two-dimensional conceptual world in which the reality of life is well covered up by so-called clear concepts." Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 44-45

They were perfect creatures of God, for He created only perfection, and yet they committed the first sin…. How was that possible? They could not have done it if God had not placed in them the possibility of doing it. That was clear, too, from the serpent, whom God had created before them, obviously so that it could induce Adam and Eve to sin…. Therefore it was God's intention that they should sin. Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 159



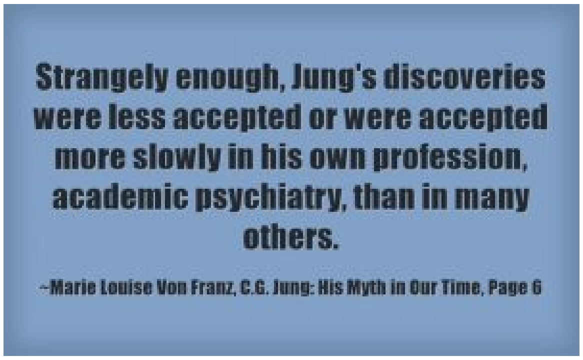
Everything I have written has a double bottom.

Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 4



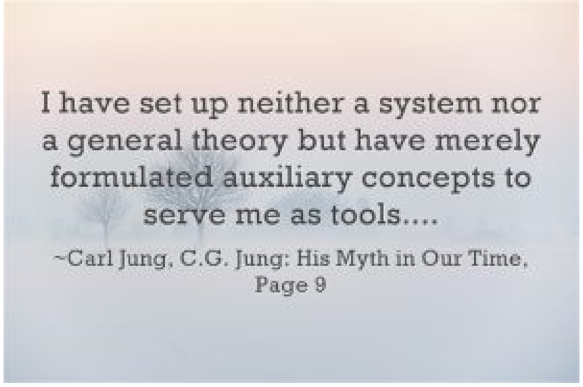
Life has been so cruel to some people that one cannot pass judgment on them for being warped.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 24



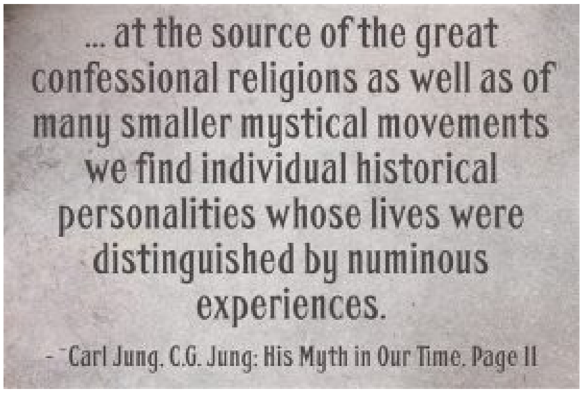
Strangely enough, Jung's discoveries were less accepted or were accepted more slowly in his own profession, academic psychiatry, than in many others.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 6



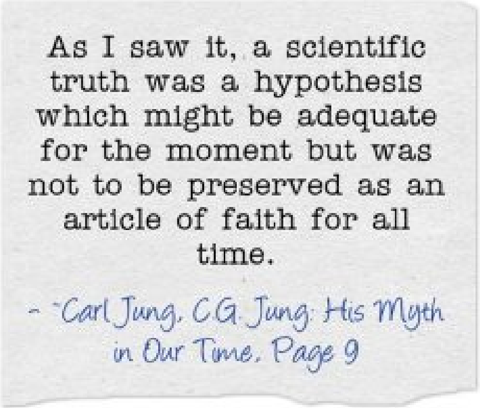
I have set up neither a system nor a general theory but have merely formulated auxiliary concepts to serve me as tools....

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 9



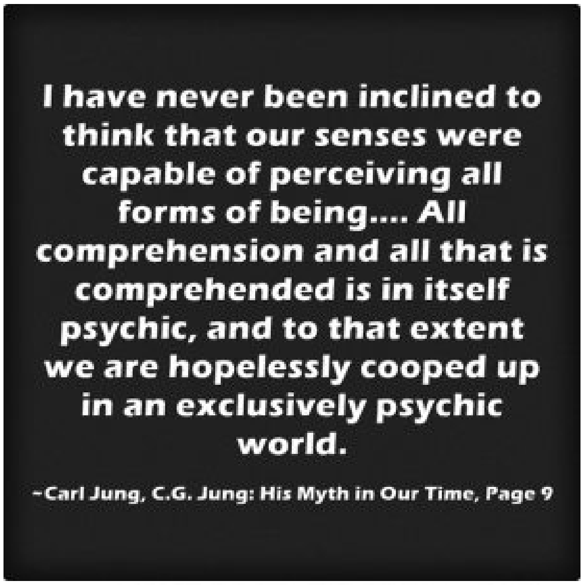
... at the source of the great confessional religions as well as of many smaller mystical movements we find individual historical personalities whose lives were distinguished by numinous experiences.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 11



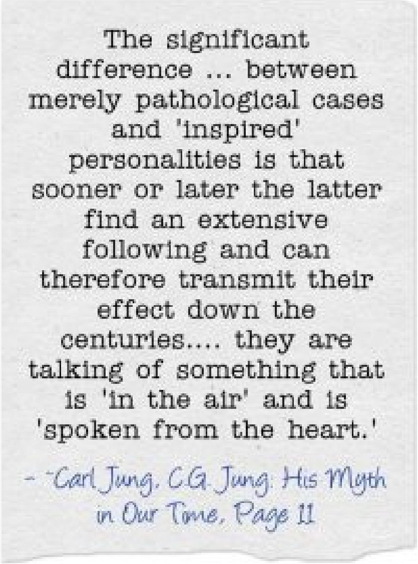
As I saw it, a scientific truth was a hypothesis which might be adequate for the moment but was not to be preserved as an article of faith for all time.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 9



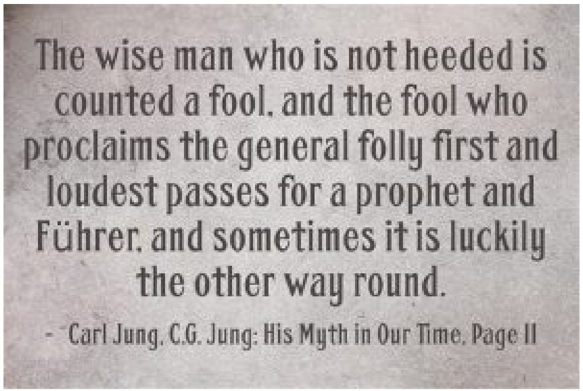
I have never been inclined to think that our senses were capable of perceiving all forms of being.... All comprehension and all that is comprehended is in itself psychic, and to that extent we are hopelessly cooped up in an exclusively psychic world.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 9



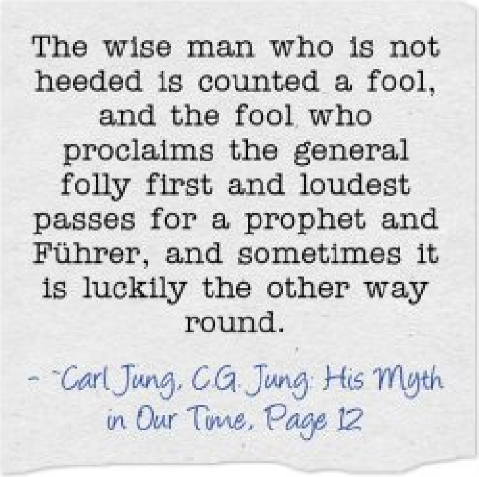
The significant difference ... between merely pathological cases and 'inspired' personalities is that sooner or later the latter find an extensive following and can therefore transmit their effect down the centuries.... they are talking of something that is 'in the air' and is 'spoken from the heart.'

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 11



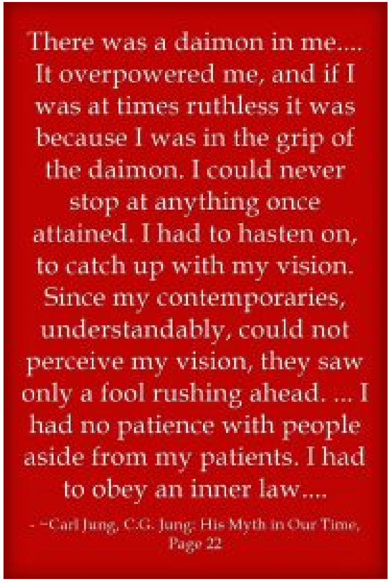
The wise man who is not heeded is counted a fool, and the fool who proclaims the general folly first and loudest passes for a prophet and Führer, and sometimes it is luckily the other way round.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 11



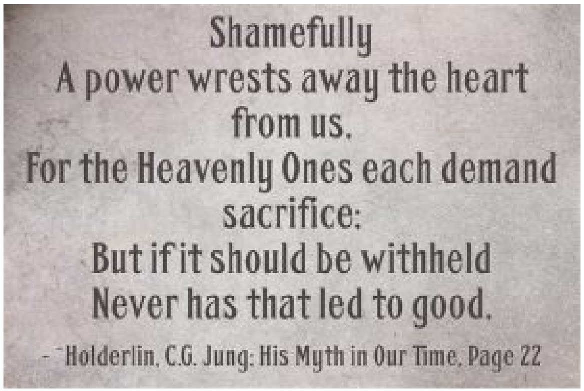
The wise man who is not heeded is counted a fool, and the fool who proclaims the general folly first and loudest passes for a prophet and Führer, and sometimes it is luckily the other way round.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 12



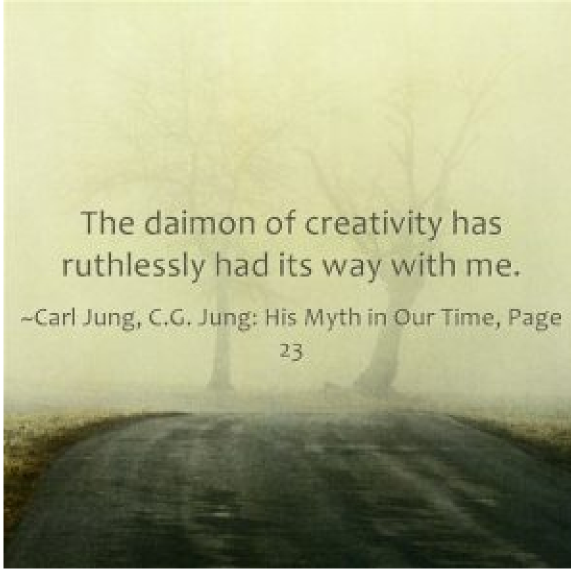
There was a daimon in me.... It overpowered me, and if I was at times ruthless it was because I was in the grip of the daimon. I could never stop at anything once attained. I had to hasten on, to catch up with my vision. Since my contemporaries, understandably, could not perceive my vision, they saw only a fool rushing ahead. ... I had no patience with people aside from my patients. I had to obey an inner law....

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 22



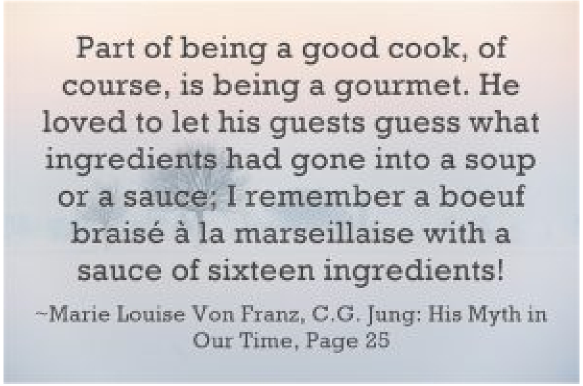
Shamefully
A power wrests away the heart from us.
For the Heavenly Ones each demand sacrifice:
But if it should be withheld
Never has that led to good.

- ~Holderlin, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 22



The daimon of creativity has ruthlessly had its way with me.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 23

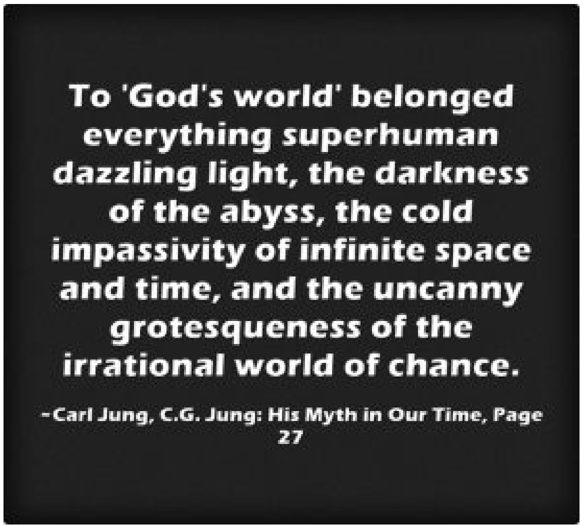


Part of being a good cook, of course, is being a gourmet. He loved to let his guests guess what ingredients had gone into a soup or a sauce; I remember a boeuf braisé à la marseillaise with a sauce of sixteen ingredients!

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 25

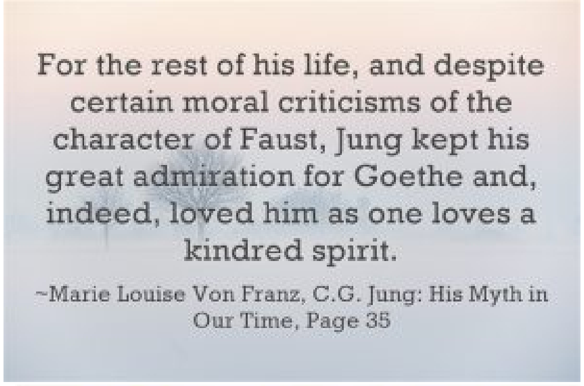
Rather like Goethe's "God-nature," Jung referred to nature as "God's world" an overwhelming mystery all around us, full of the most wonderful and awesome events and forms.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 27



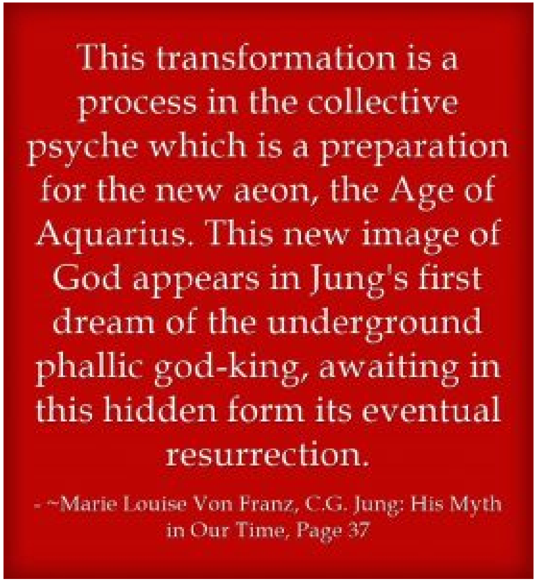
To 'God's world' belonged everything superhuman dazzling light, the darkness of the abyss, the cold impassivity of infinite space and time, and the uncanny grotesqueness of the irrational world of chance.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 27



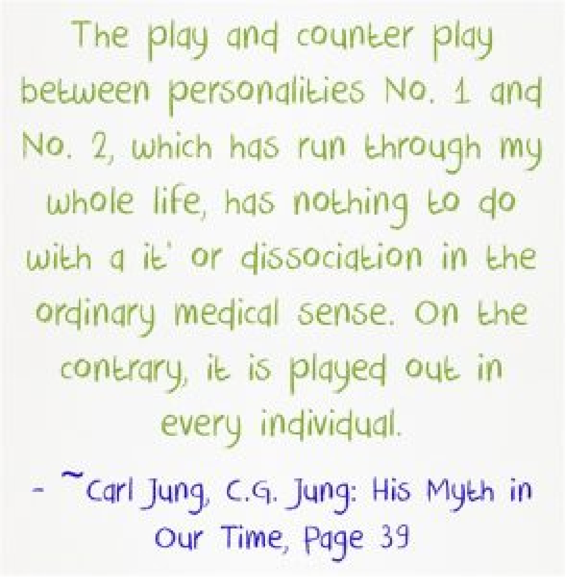
For the rest of his life, and despite certain moral criticisms of the character of Faust, Jung kept his great admiration for Goethe and, indeed, loved him as one loves a kindred spirit.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 35



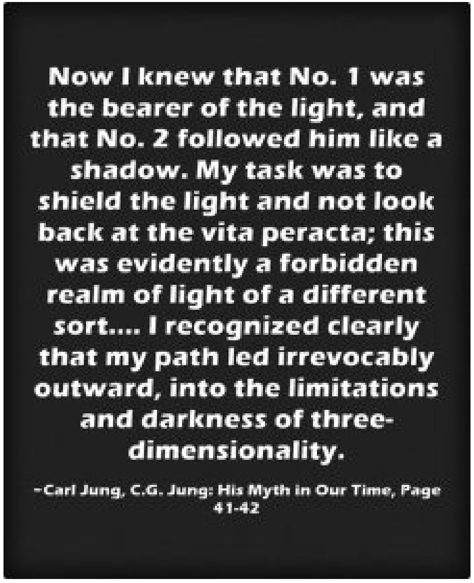
This transformation is a process in the collective psyche which is a preparation for the new aeon, the Age of Aquarius. This new image of God appears in Jung's first dream of the underground phallic god-king, awaiting in this hidden form its eventual resurrection.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 37



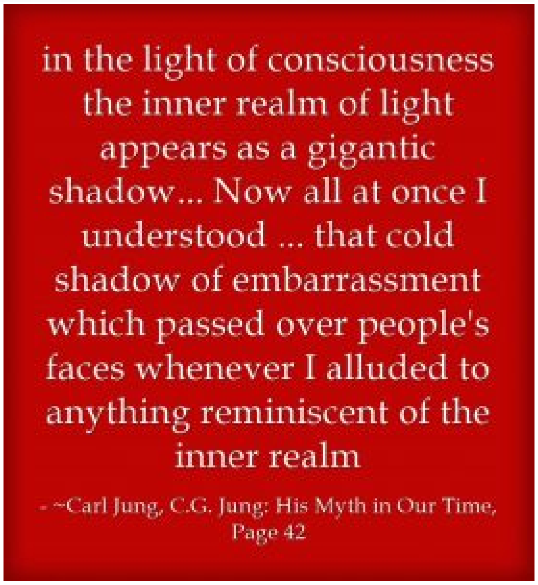
The play and counter play between personalities No. 1 and No. 2, which has run through my whole life, has nothing to do with a it' or dissociation in the ordinary medical sense. On the contrary, it is played out in every individual.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 39



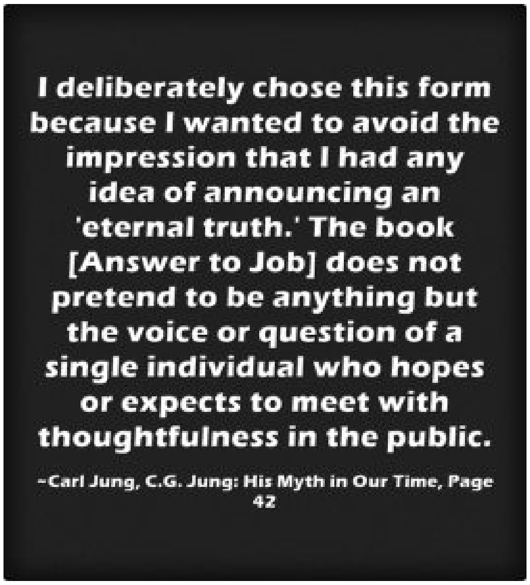
Now I knew that No. 1 was the bearer of the light, and that No. 2 followed him like a shadow. My task was to shield the light and not look back at the vita peracta; this was evidently a forbidden realm of light of a different sort.... I recognized clearly that my path led irrevocably outward, into the limitations and darkness of three-dimensionality.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 41-42



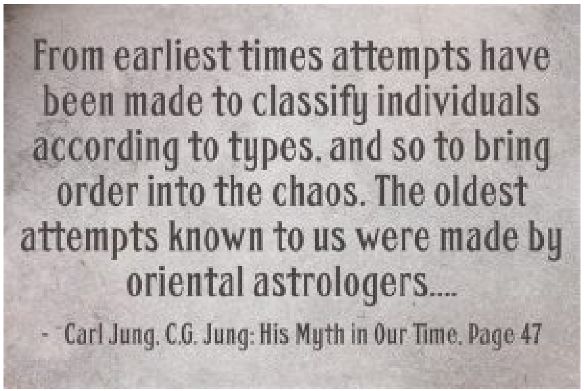
in the light of consciousness the inner realm of light appears as a gigantic shadow... Now all at once I understood ... that cold shadow of embarrassment which passed over people's faces whenever I alluded to anything reminiscent of the inner realm

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 42



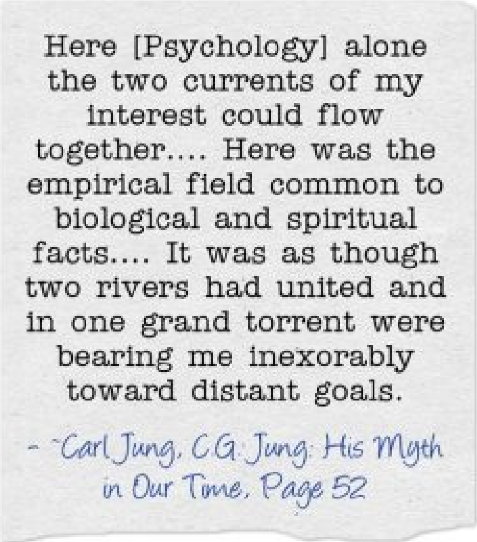
I deliberately chose this form because I wanted to avoid the impression that I had any idea of announcing an 'eternal truth.' The book [Answer to Job] does not pretend to be anything but the voice or question of a single individual who hopes or expects to meet with thoughtfulness in the public.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 42



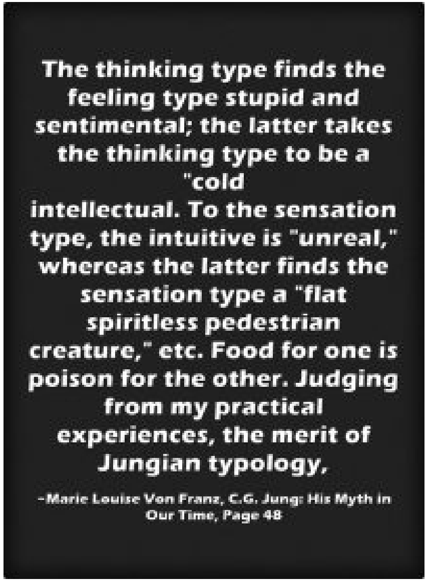
From earliest times attempts have been made to classify individuals according to types, and so to bring order into the chaos. The oldest attempts known to us were made by oriental astrologers....

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 47



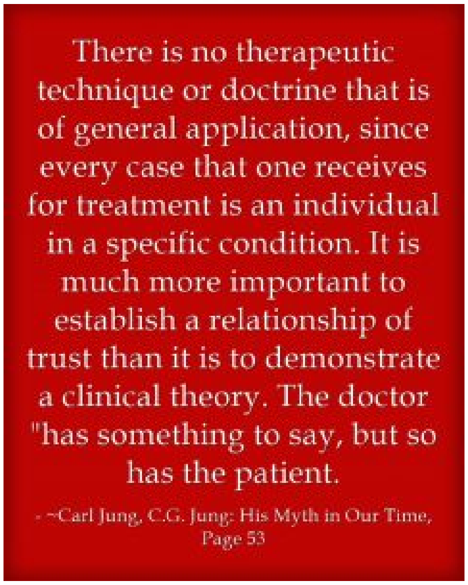
Here [Psychology] alone the two currents of my interest could flow together.... Here was the empirical field common to biological and spiritual facts.... It was as though two rivers had united and in one grand torrent were bearing me inexorably toward distant goals.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 52



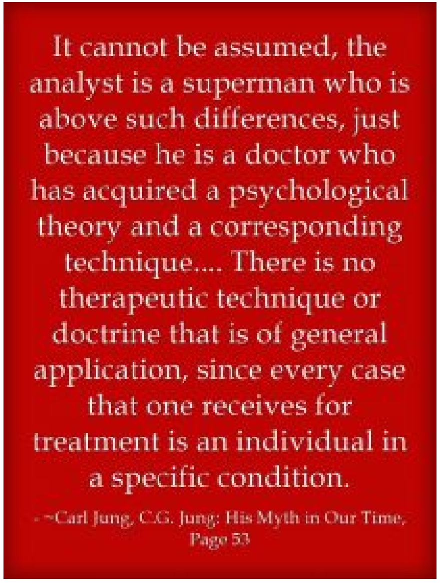
The thinking type finds the feeling type stupid and sentimental; the latter takes the thinking type to be a "cold intellectual. To the sensation type, the intuitive is "unreal," whereas the latter finds the sensation type a "flat spiritless pedestrian creature," etc. Food for one is poison for the other. Judging from my practical experiences, the merit of Jungian typology,

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 48



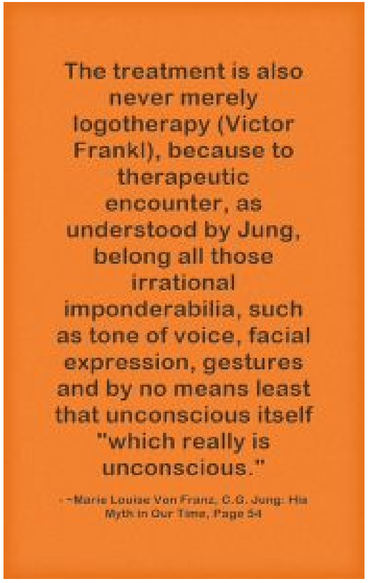
There is no therapeutic technique or doctrine that is of general application, since every case that one receives for treatment is an individual in a specific condition. It is much more important to establish a relationship of trust than it is to demonstrate a clinical theory. The doctor "has something to say, but so has the patient.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 53



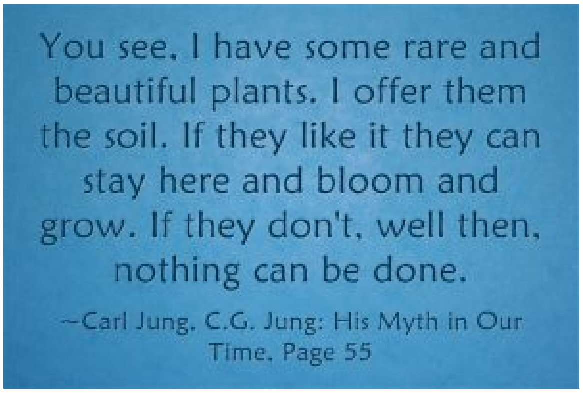
It cannot be assumed, the analyst is a superman who is above such differences, just because he is a doctor who has acquired a psychological theory and a corresponding technique.... There is no therapeutic technique or doctrine that is of general application, since every case that one receives for treatment is an individual in a specific condition.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 53



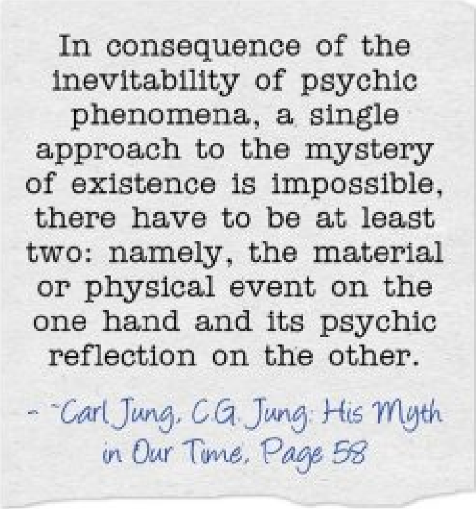
The treatment is also never merely logotherapy (Victor Frankl), because to therapeutic encounter, as understood by Jung, belong all those irrational imponderabilia, such as tone of voice, facial expression, gestures and by no means least that unconscious itself "which really is unconscious."

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 54



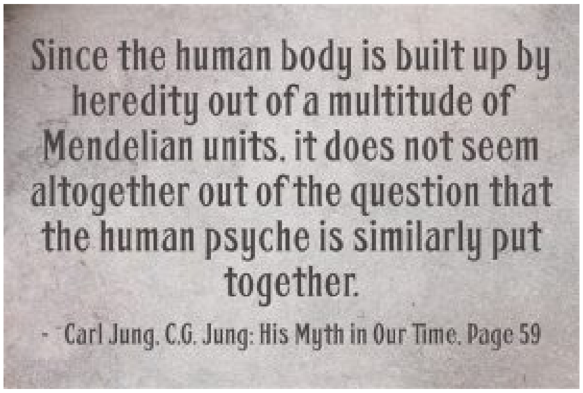
You see, I have some rare and beautiful plants. I offer them the soil. If they like it they can stay here and bloom and grow. If they don't, well then, nothing can be done.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 55



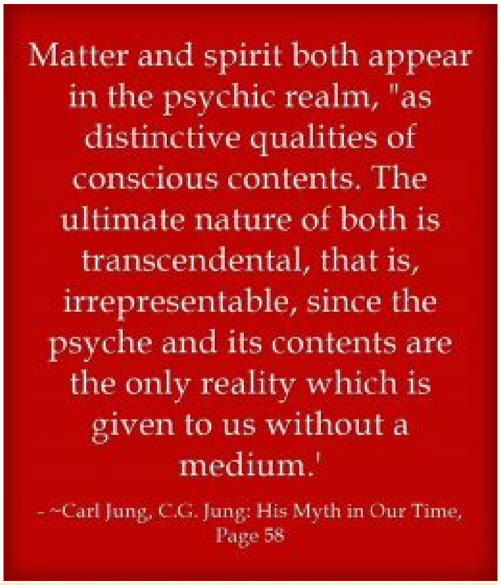
In consequence of the inevitability of psychic phenomena, a single approach to the mystery of existence is impossible, there have to be at least two: namely, the material or physical event on the one hand and its psychic reflection on the other.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 58



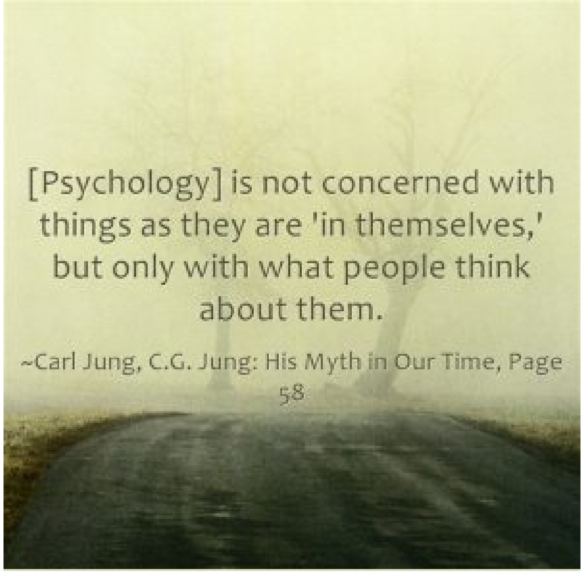
Since the human body is built up by heredity out of a multitude of Mendelian units, it does not seem altogether out of the question that the human psyche is similarly put together.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 59



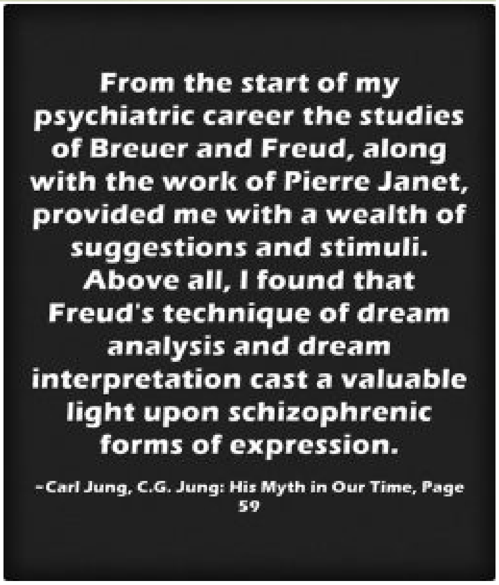
Matter and spirit both appear in the psychic realm, "as distinctive qualities of conscious contents. The ultimate nature of both is transcendental, that is, irrepresentable, since the psyche and its contents are the only reality which is given to us without a medium.'

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 58



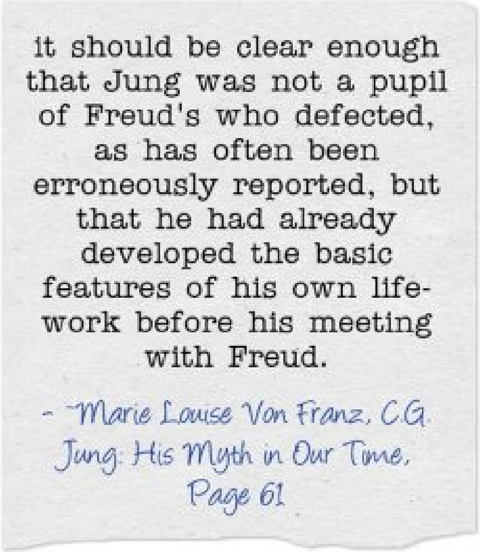
[Psychology] is not concerned with things as they are 'in themselves,' but only with what people think about them.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 58



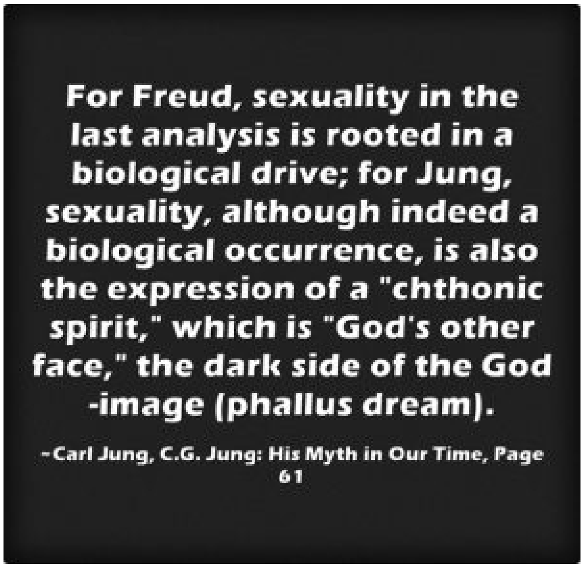
From the start of my psychiatric career the studies of Breuer and Freud, along with the work of Pierre Janet, provided me with a wealth of suggestions and stimuli. Above all, I found that Freud's technique of dream analysis and dream interpretation cast a valuable light upon schizophrenic forms of expression.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 59



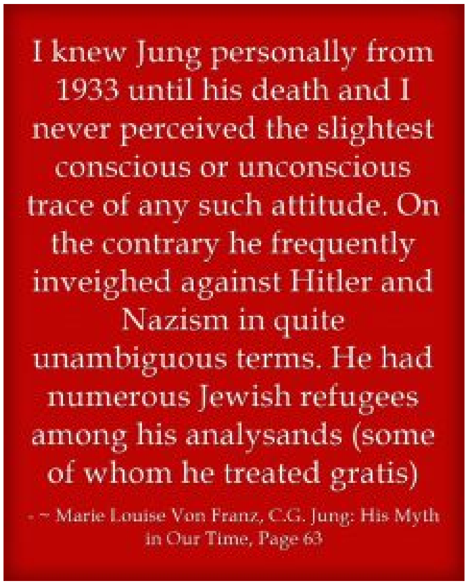
it should be clear enough that Jung was not a pupil of Freud's who defected, as has often been erroneously reported, but that he had already developed the basic features of his own life-work before his meeting with Freud.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 61



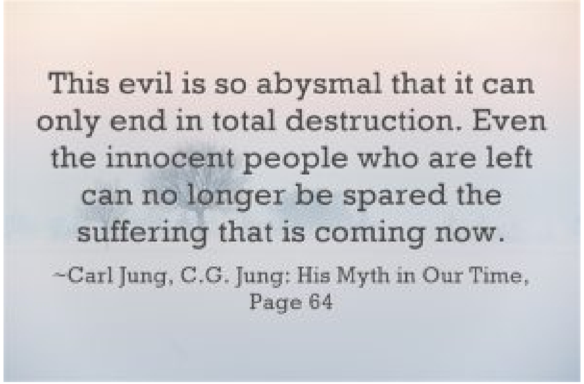
For Freud, sexuality in the last analysis is rooted in a biological drive; for Jung, sexuality, although indeed a biological occurrence, is also the expression of a "chthonic spirit," which is "God's other face," the dark side of the God-image (phallus dream).

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 61



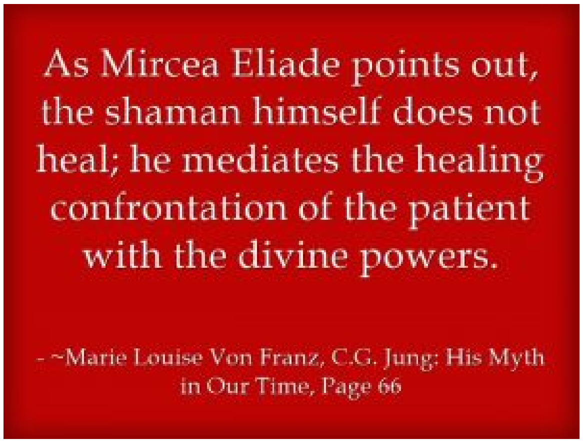
I knew Jung personally from 1933 until his death and I never perceived the slightest conscious or unconscious trace of any such attitude. On the contrary he frequently inveighed against Hitler and Nazism in quite unambiguous terms. He had numerous Jewish refugees among his analysands (some of whom he treated gratis)

- ~ Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 63



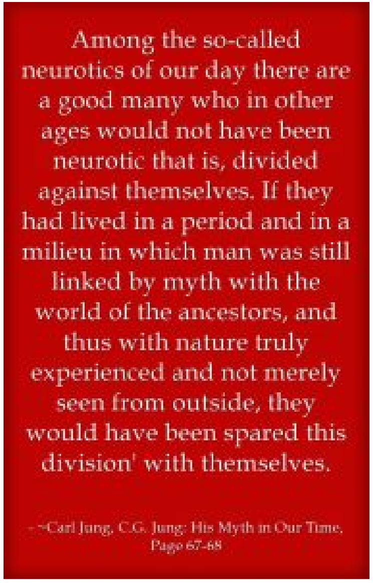
This evil is so abysmal that it can only end in total destruction. Even the innocent people who are left can no longer be spared the suffering that is coming now.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 64



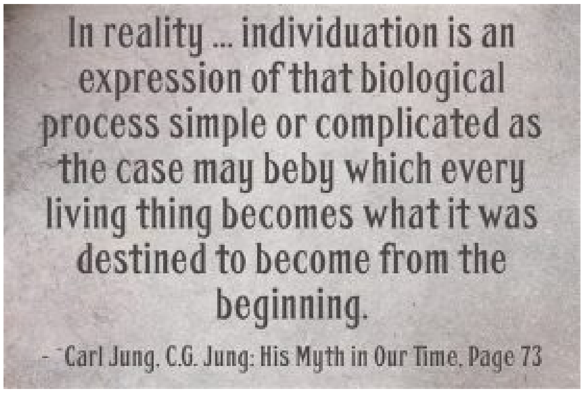
As Mircea Eliade points out, the shaman himself does not heal; he mediates the healing confrontation of the patient with the divine powers.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 66



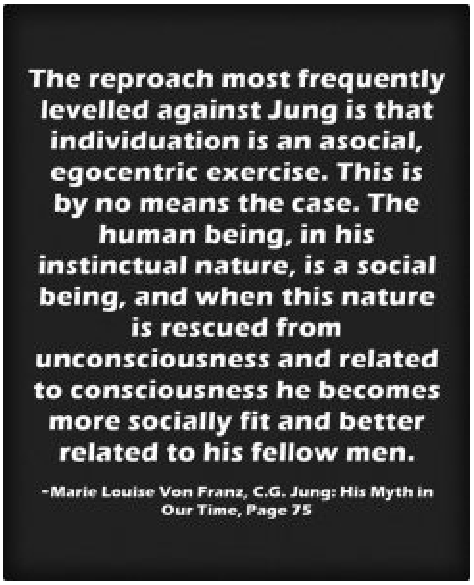
Among the so-called neurotics of our day there are a good many who in other ages would not have been neurotic that is, divided against themselves. If they had lived in a period and in a milieu in which man was still linked by myth with the world of the ancestors, and thus with nature truly experienced and not merely seen from outside, they would have been spared this division' with themselves.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 67-68



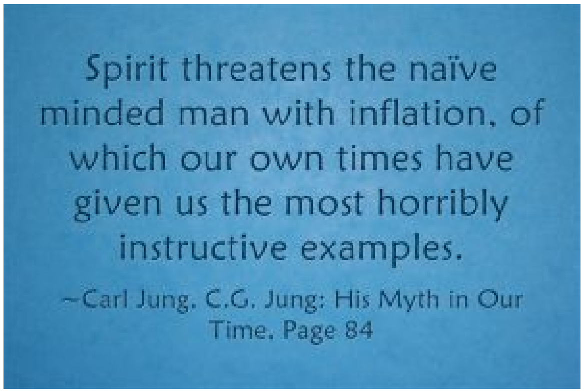
In reality ... individuation is an expression of that biological process simple or complicated as the case may beby which every living thing becomes what it was destined to become from the beginning.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 73



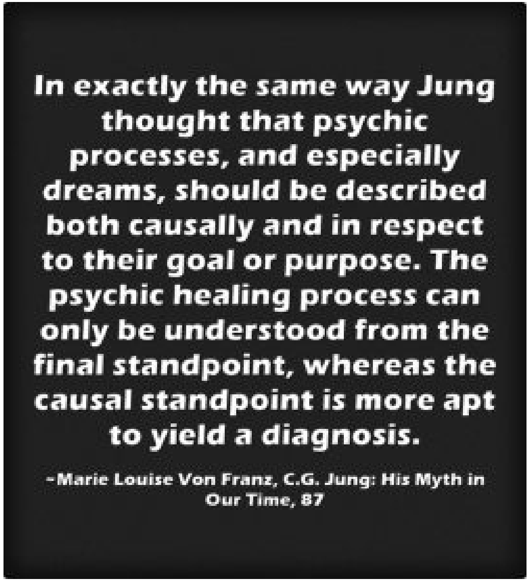
The reproach most frequently levelled against Jung is that individuation is an asocial, egocentric exercise. This is by no means the case. The human being, in his instinctual nature, is a social being, and when this nature is rescued from unconsciousness and related to consciousness he becomes more socially fit and better related to his fellow men.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 75



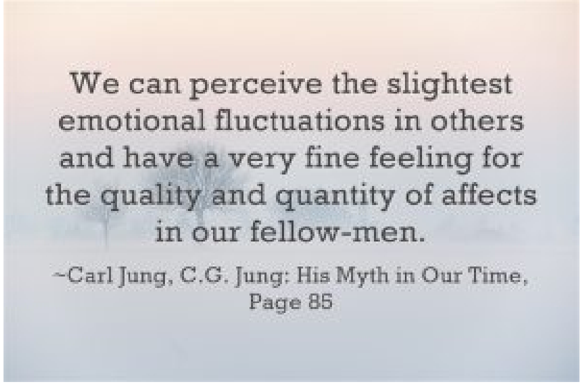
Spirit threatens the naïve minded man with inflation, of which our own times have given us the most horribly instructive examples.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 84



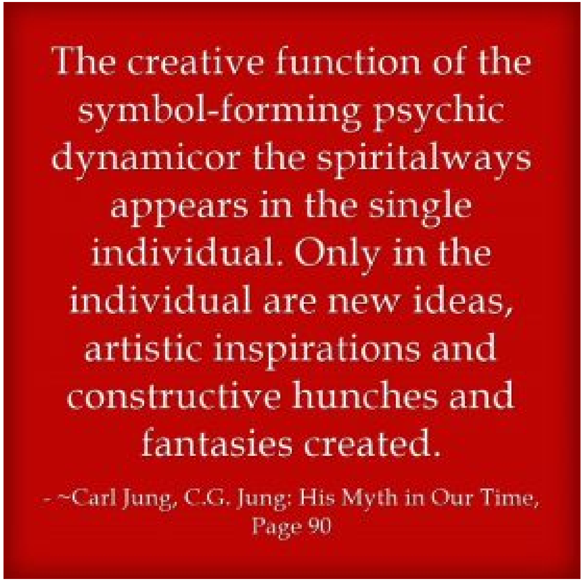
In exactly the same way Jung thought that psychic processes, and especially dreams, should be described both causally and in respect to their goal or purpose. The psychic healing process can only be understood from the final standpoint, whereas the causal standpoint is more apt to yield a diagnosis.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 87



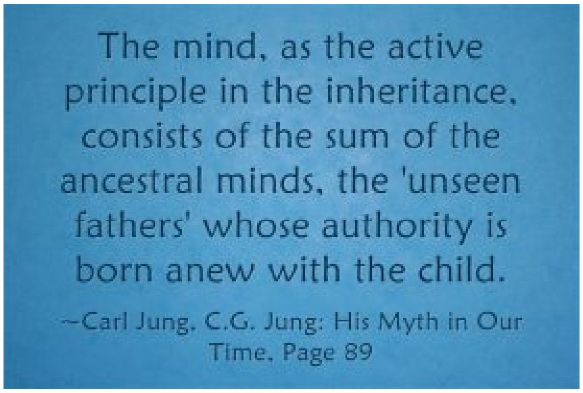
We can perceive the slightest emotional fluctuations in others and have a very fine feeling for the quality and quantity of affects in our fellow-men.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 85



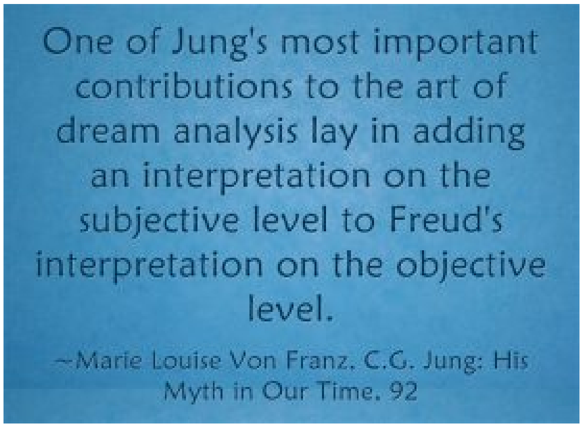
The creative function of the symbol-forming psychic dynamicor the spiritalways appears in the single individual. Only in the individual are new ideas, artistic inspirations and constructive hunches and fantasies created.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 90



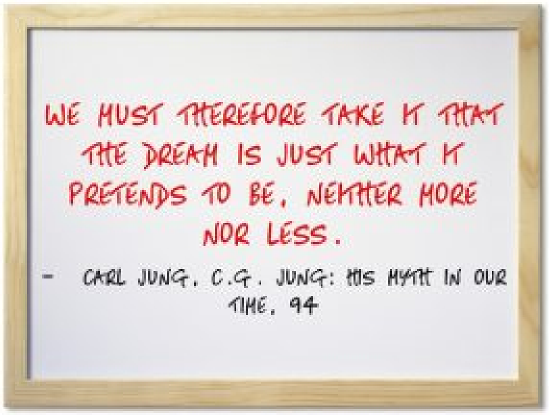
The mind, as the active principle in the inheritance, consists of the sum of the ancestral minds, the 'unseen fathers' whose authority is born anew with the child.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 89



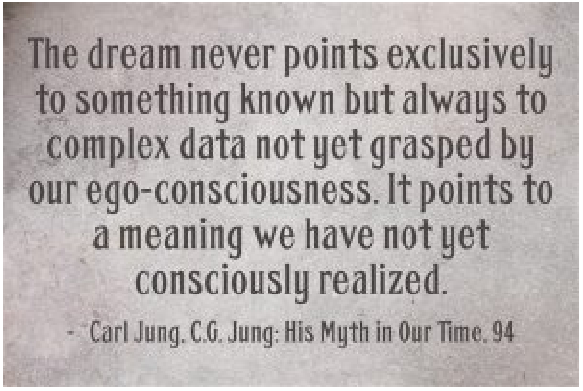
One of Jung's most important contributions to the art of dream analysis lay in adding an interpretation on the subjective level to Freud's interpretation on the objective level.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 92



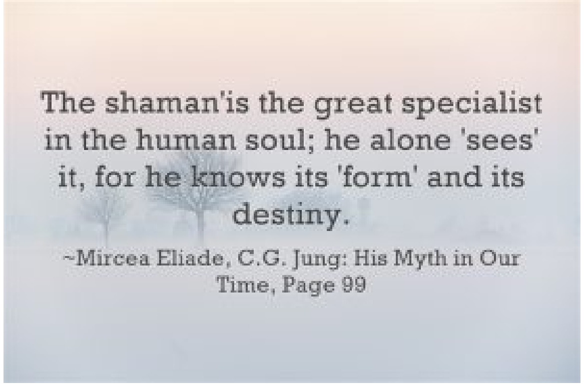
WE MUST THEREFORE TAKE IT THAT THE DREAM IS JUST WHAT IT PRETENDS TO BE, NEITHER MORE NOR LESS.

- CARL JUNG, C.G. JUNG: HIS MYTH IN OUR TIME, 94



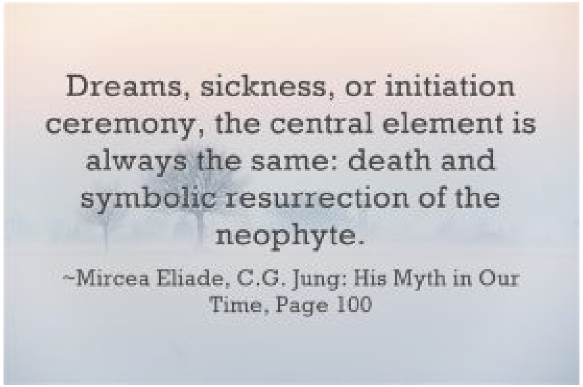
The dream never points exclusively to something known but always to complex data not yet grasped by our ego-consciousness. It points to a meaning we have not yet consciously realized.

- Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 94



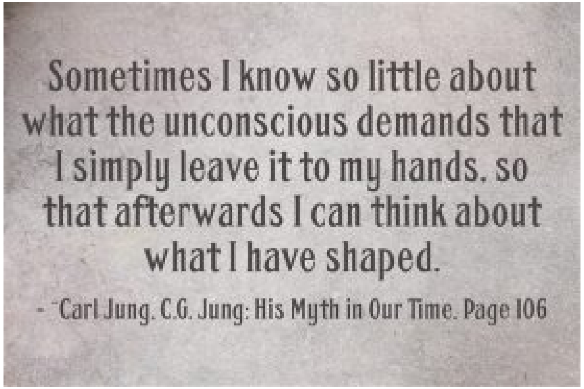
The shaman'is the great specialist in the human soul; he alone 'sees' it, for he knows its 'form' and its destiny.

~Mircea Eliade, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 99



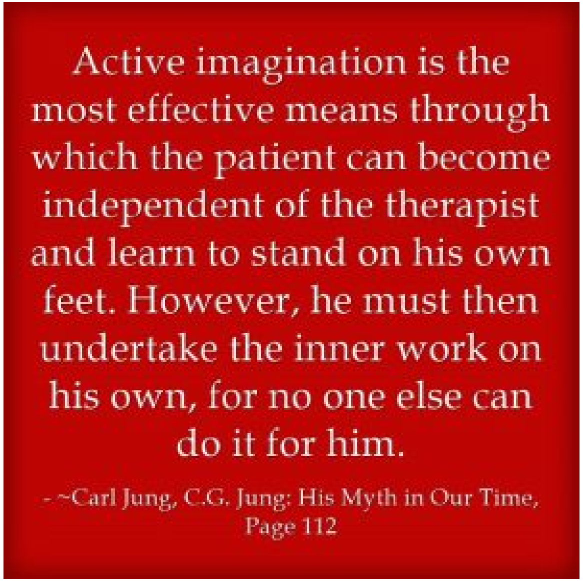
Dreams, sickness, or initiation ceremony, the central element is always the same: death and symbolic resurrection of the neophyte.

~Mircea Eliade, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 100



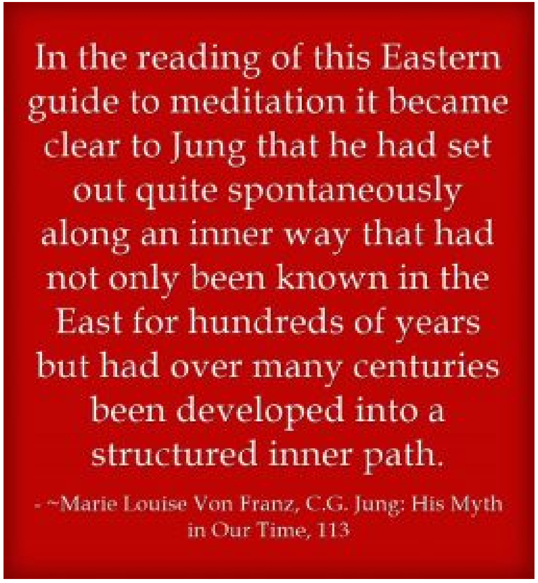
Sometimes I know so little about what the unconscious demands that I simply leave it to my hands. so that afterwards I can think about what I have shaped.

- Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 106



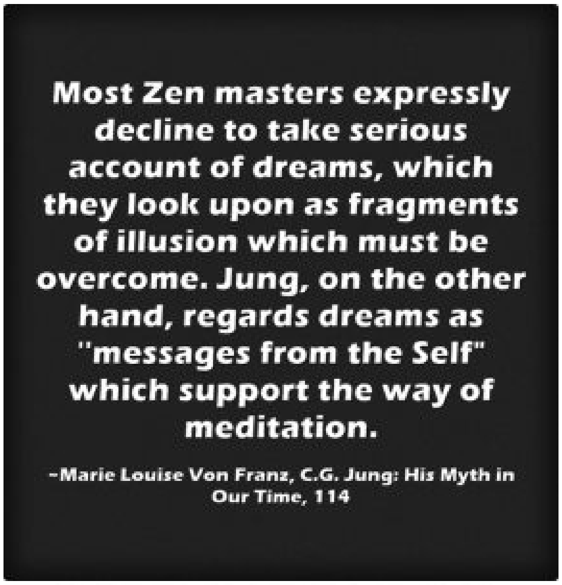
Active imagination is the most effective means through which the patient can become independent of the therapist and learn to stand on his own feet. However, he must then undertake the inner work on his own, for no one else can do it for him.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 112



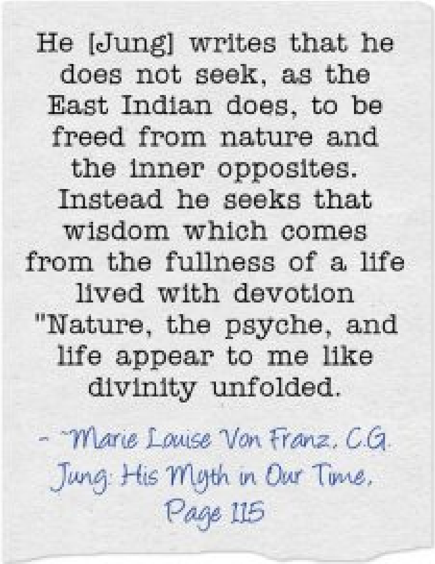
In the reading of this Eastern guide to meditation it became clear to Jung that he had set out quite spontaneously along an inner way that had not only been known in the East for hundreds of years but had over many centuries been developed into a structured inner path.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 113



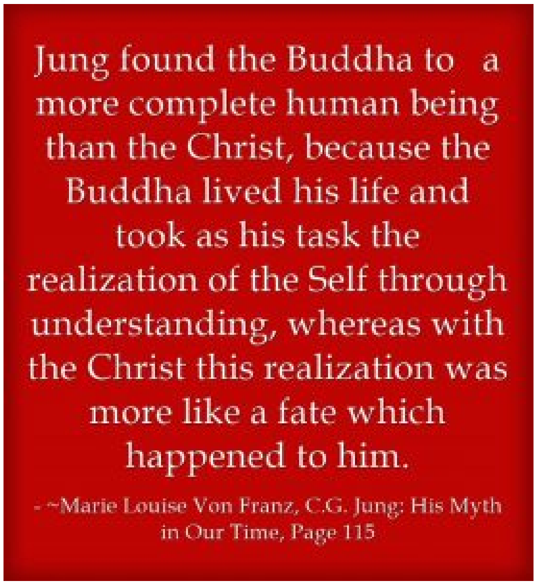
Most Zen masters expressly decline to take serious account of dreams, which they look upon as fragments of illusion which must be overcome. Jung, on the other hand, regards dreams as "messages from the Self" which support the way of meditation.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 114



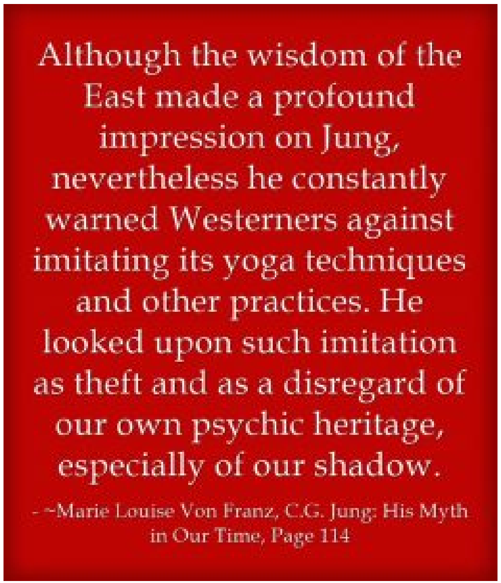
He [Jung] writes that he does not seek, as the East Indian does, to be freed from nature and the inner opposites. Instead he seeks that wisdom which comes from the fullness of a life lived with devotion "Nature, the psyche, and life appear to me like divinity unfolded.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 115



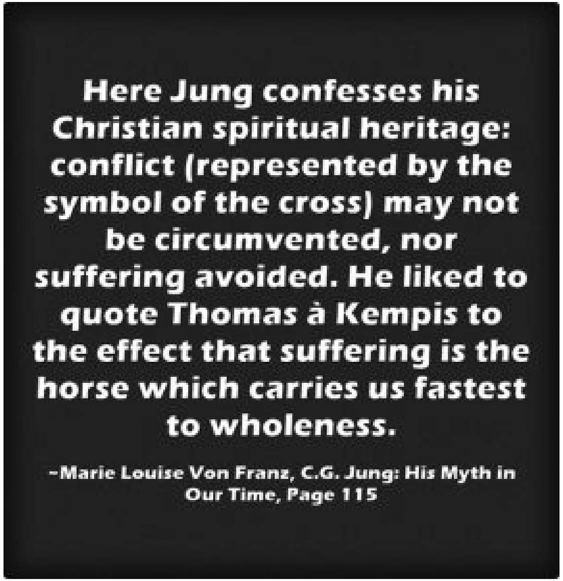
Jung found the Buddha to a more complete human being than the Christ, because the Buddha lived his life and took as his task the realization of the Self through understanding, whereas with the Christ this realization was more like a fate which happened to him.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 115



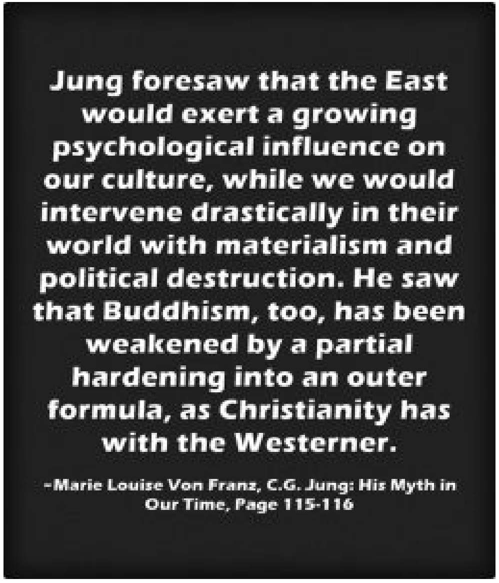
Although the wisdom of the East made a profound impression on Jung, nevertheless he constantly warned Westerners against imitating its yoga techniques and other practices. He looked upon such imitation as theft and as a disregard of our own psychic heritage, especially of our shadow.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 114



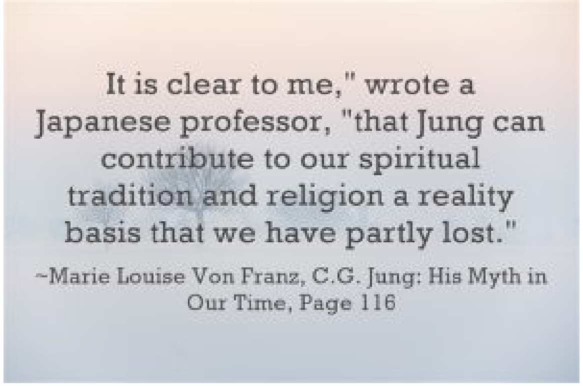
Here Jung confesses his Christian spiritual heritage: conflict (represented by the symbol of the cross) may not be circumvented, nor suffering avoided. He liked to quote Thomas à Kempis to the effect that suffering is the horse which carries us fastest to wholeness.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 115



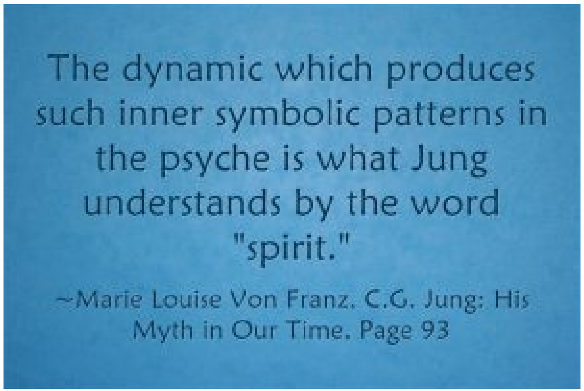
Jung foresaw that the East would exert a growing psychological influence on our culture, while we would intervene drastically in their world with materialism and political destruction. He saw that Buddhism, too, has been weakened by a partial hardening into an outer formula, as Christianity has with the Westerner.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 115-116



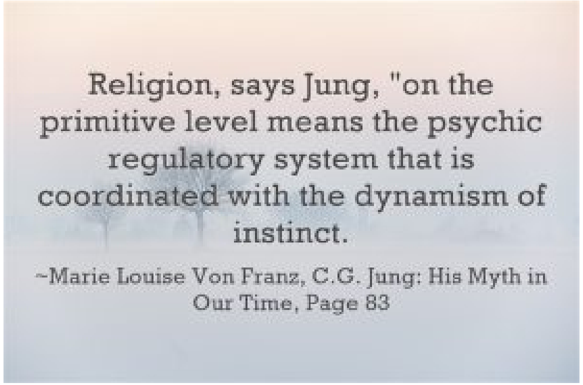
It is clear to me," wrote a Japanese professor, "that Jung can contribute to our spiritual tradition and religion a reality basis that we have partly lost."

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 116



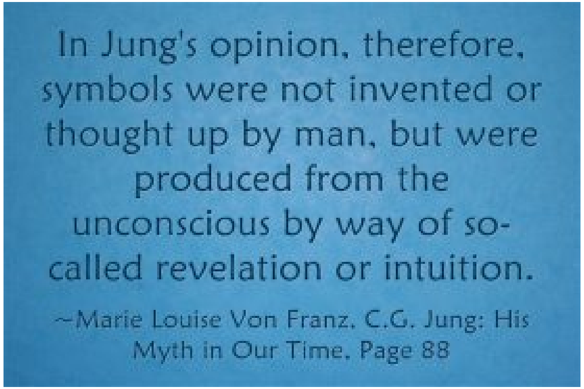
The dynamic which produces such inner symbolic patterns in the psyche is what Jung understands by the word "spirit."

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 93



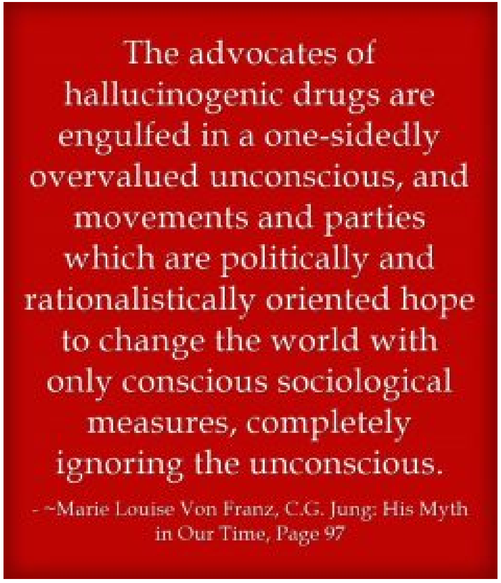
Religion, says Jung, "on the primitive level means the psychic regulatory system that is coordinated with the dynamism of instinct.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 83



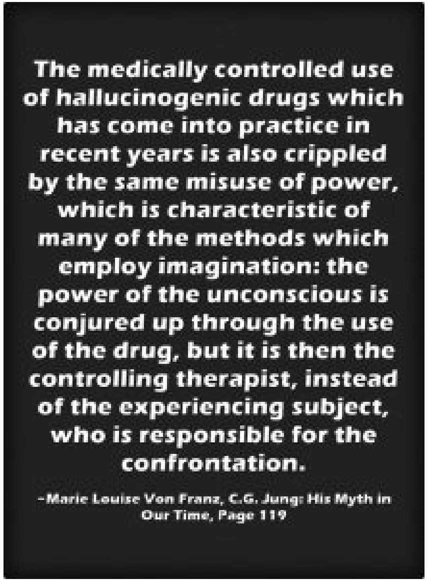
In Jung's opinion, therefore, symbols were not invented or thought up by man, but were produced from the unconscious by way of so-called revelation or intuition.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 88



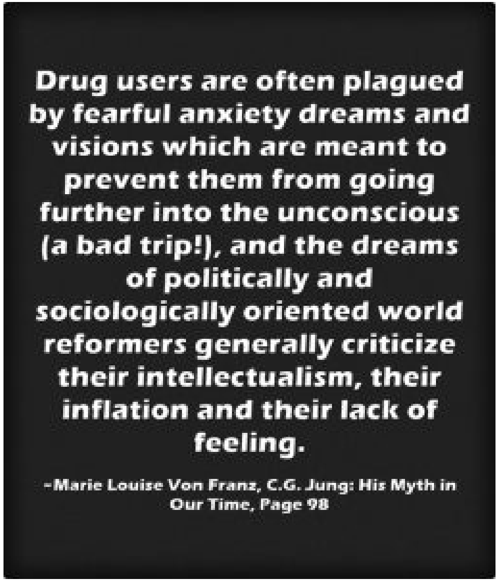
The advocates of hallucinogenic drugs are engulfed in a one-sidedly overvalued unconscious, and movements and parties which are politically and rationalistically oriented hope to change the world with only conscious sociological measures, completely ignoring the unconscious.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 97



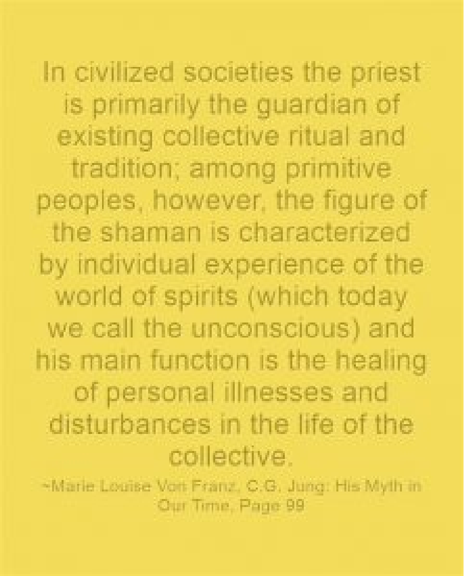
The medically controlled use of hallucinogenic drugs which has come into practice in recent years is also crippled by the same misuse of power, which is characteristic of many of the methods which employ imagination: the power of the unconscious is conjured up through the use of the drug, but it is then the controlling therapist, instead of the experiencing subject, who is responsible for the confrontation.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 119



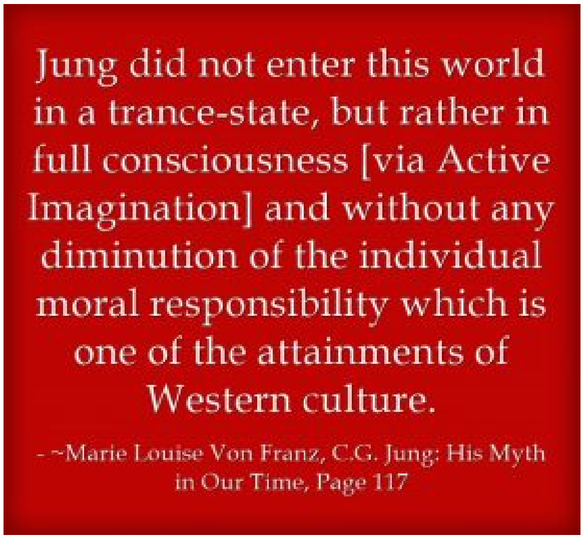
Drug users are often plagued by fearful anxiety dreams and visions which are meant to prevent them from going further into the unconscious (a bad trip!), and the dreams of politically and sociologically oriented world reformers generally criticize their intellectualism, their inflation and their lack of feeling.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 98



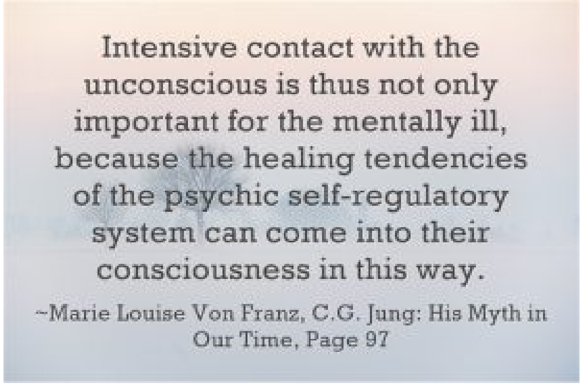
In civilized societies the priest is primarily the guardian of existing collective ritual and tradition; among primitive peoples, however, the figure of the shaman is characterized by individual experience of the world of spirits (which today we call the unconscious) and his main function is the healing of personal illnesses and disturbances in the life of the collective.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 99



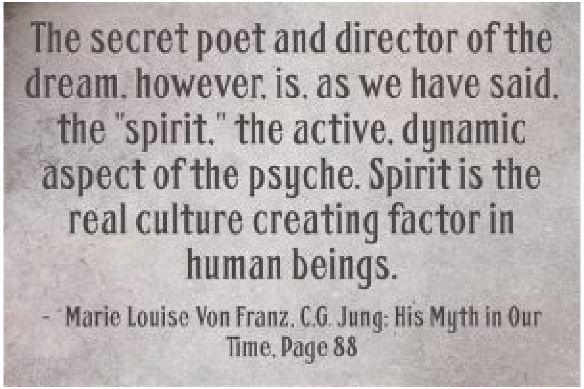
Jung did not enter this world in a trance-state, but rather in full consciousness [via Active Imagination] and without any diminution of the individual moral responsibility which is one of the attainments of Western culture.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 117



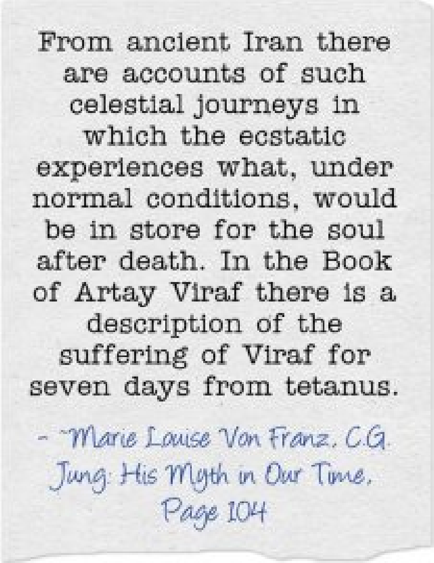
Intensive contact with the unconscious is thus not only important for the mentally ill, because the healing tendencies of the psychic self-regulatory system can come into their consciousness in this way.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 97



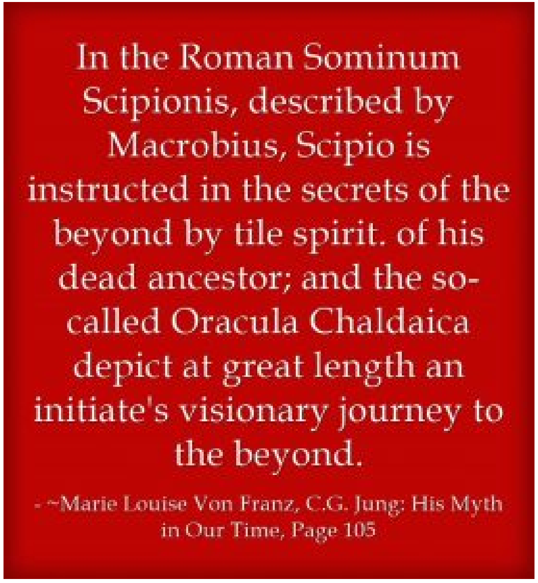
The secret poet and director of the dream, however, is, as we have said, the "spirit," the active, dynamic aspect of the psyche. Spirit is the real culture creating factor in human beings.

- Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 88



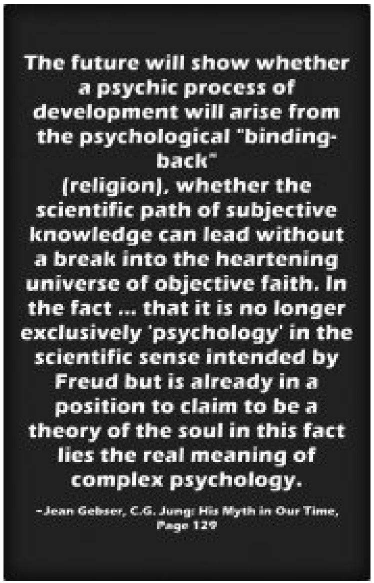
From ancient Iran there are accounts of such celestial journeys in which the ecstatic experiences what, under normal conditions, would be in store for the soul after death. In the Book of Artay Viraf there is a description of the suffering of Viraf for seven days from tetanus.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 104



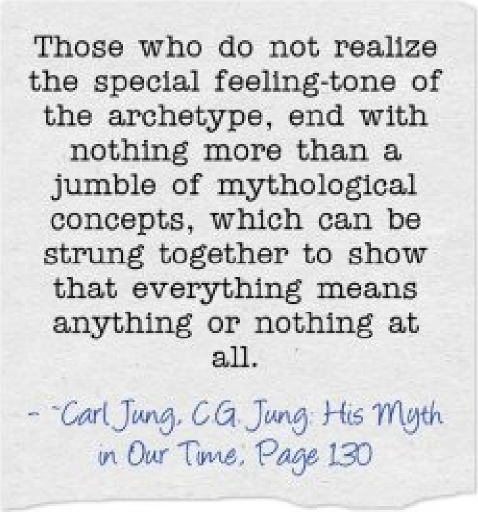
In the Roman Sominum Scipionis, described by Macrobius, Scipio is instructed in the secrets of the beyond by tile spirit. of his dead ancestor; and the so-called Oracula Chaldaica depict at great length an initiate's visionary journey to the beyond.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 105



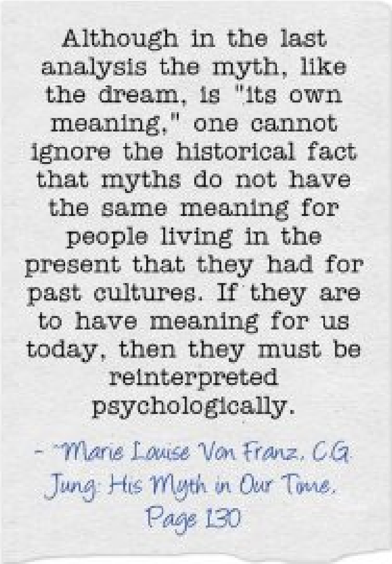
The future will show whether a psychic process of development will arise from the psychological "binding-back" (religion), whether the scientific path of subjective knowledge can lead without a break into the heartening universe of objective faith. In the fact ... that it is no longer exclusively 'psychology' in the scientific sense intended by Freud but is already in a position to claim to be a theory of the soul in this fact lies the real meaning of complex psychology.

~Jean Gebser, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 129



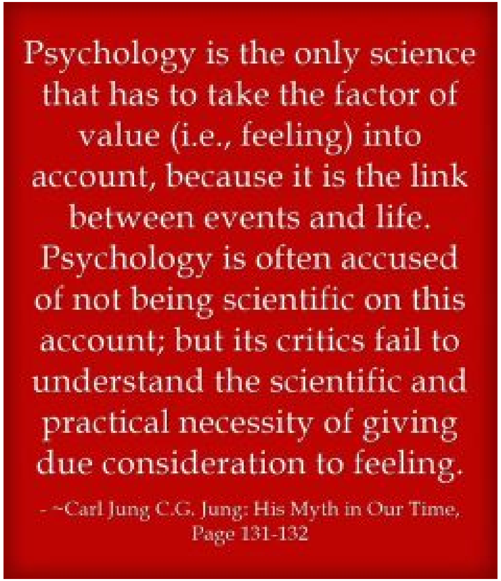
Those who do not realize the special feeling-tone of the archetype, end with nothing more than a jumble of mythological concepts, which can be strung together to show that everything means anything or nothing at all.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 130



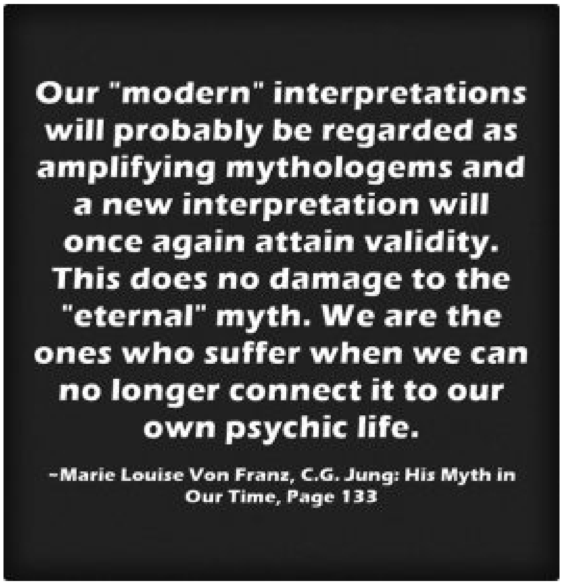
Although in the last analysis the myth, like the dream, is "its own meaning," one cannot ignore the historical fact that myths do not have the same meaning for people living in the present that they had for past cultures. If they are to have meaning for us today, then they must be reinterpreted psychologically.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 130



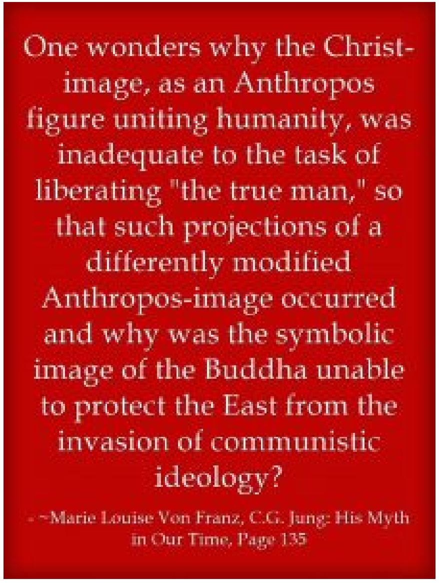
Psychology is the only science that has to take the factor of value (i.e., feeling) into account, because it is the link between events and life. Psychology is often accused of not being scientific on this account; but its critics fail to understand the scientific and practical necessity of giving due consideration to feeling.

- ~Carl Jung C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 131-132



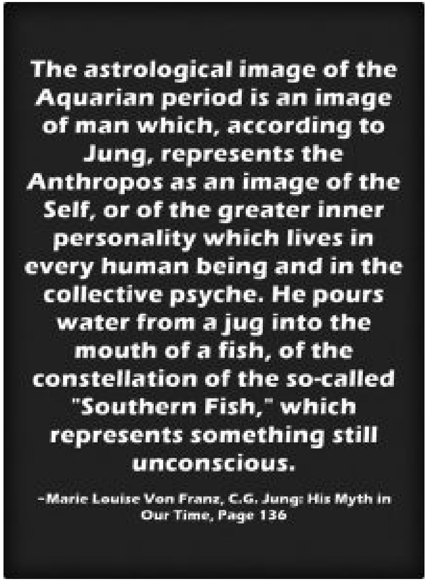
Our "modern" interpretations will probably be regarded as amplifying mythologems and a new interpretation will once again attain validity. This does no damage to the "eternal" myth. We are the ones who suffer when we can no longer connect it to our own psychic life.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 133



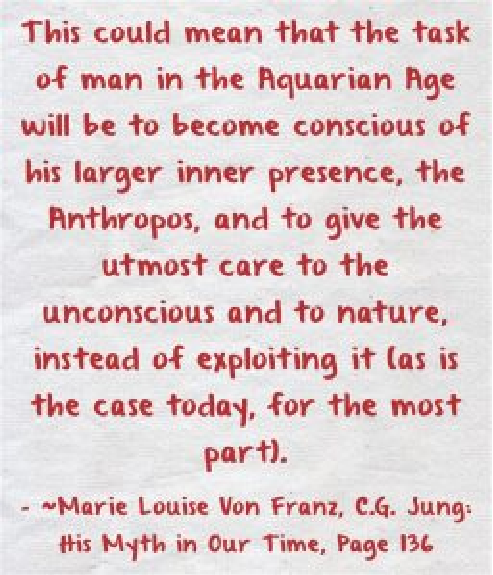
One wonders why the Christ-image, as an Anthropos figure uniting humanity, was inadequate to the task of liberating "the true man," so that such projections of a differently modified Anthropos-image occurred and why was the symbolic image of the Buddha unable to protect the East from the invasion of communistic ideology?

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 135



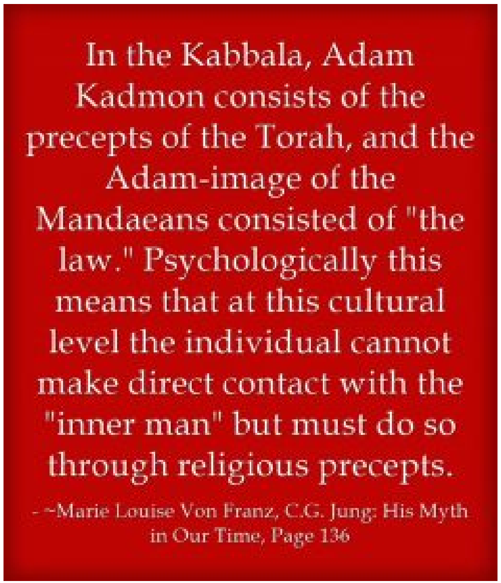
The astrological image of the Aquarian period is an image of man which, according to Jung, represents the Anthropos as an image of the Self, or of the greater inner personality which lives in every human being and in the collective psyche. He pours water from a jug into the mouth of a fish, of the constellation of the so-called "Southern Fish," which represents something still unconscious.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 136



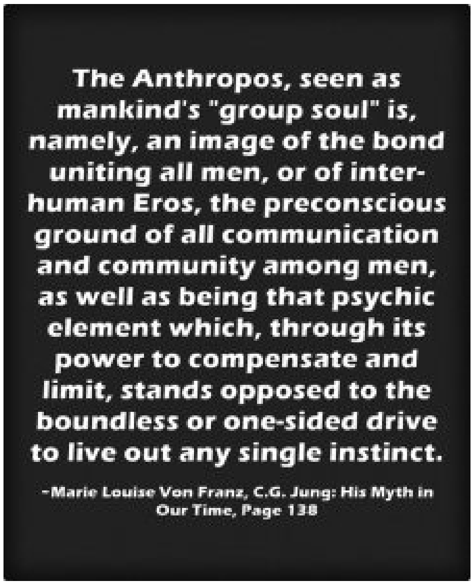
This could mean that the task of man in the Aquarian Age will be to become conscious of his larger inner presence, the Anthropos, and to give the utmost care to the unconscious and to nature, instead of exploiting it (as is the case today, for the most part).

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 136



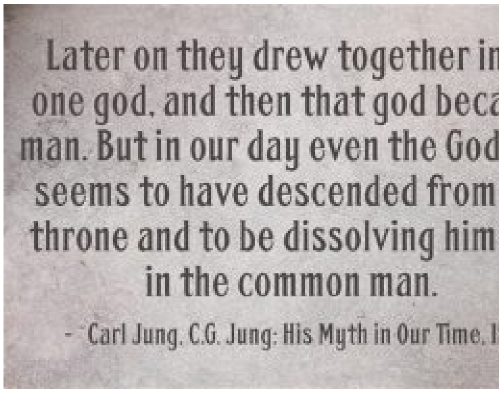
In the Kabbala, Adam Kadmon consists of the precepts of the Torah, and the Adam-image of the Mandaeans consisted of "the law." Psychologically this means that at this cultural level the individual cannot make direct contact with the "inner man" but must do so through religious precepts.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 136



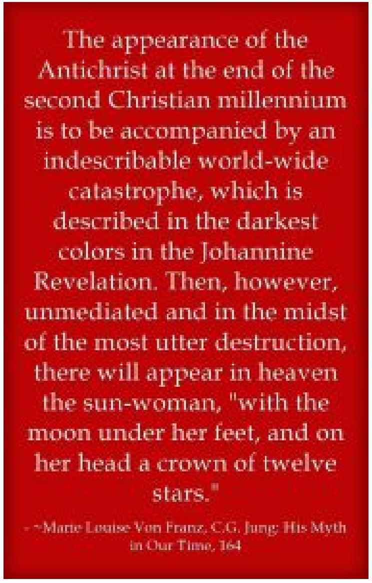
The Anthropos, seen as mankind's "group soul" is, namely, an image of the bond uniting all men, or of inter-human Eros, the preconscious ground of all communication and community among men, as well as being that psychic element which, through its power to compensate and limit, stands opposed to the boundless or one-sided drive to live out any single instinct.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 138



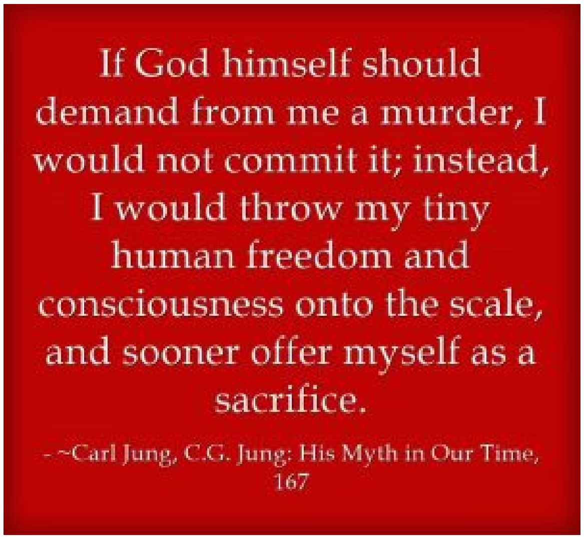
Later on they drew together in one god, and then that god beca man. But in our day even the God seems to have descended from throne and to be dissolving him in the common man.

- Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time,



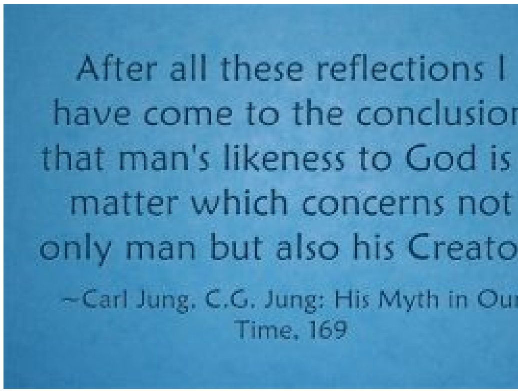
The appearance of the Antichrist at the end of the second Christian millennium is to be accompanied by an indescribable world-wide catastrophe, which is described in the darkest colors in the Johannine Revelation. Then, however, unmediated and in the midst of the most utter destruction, there will appear in heaven the sun-woman, "with the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars."

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 164



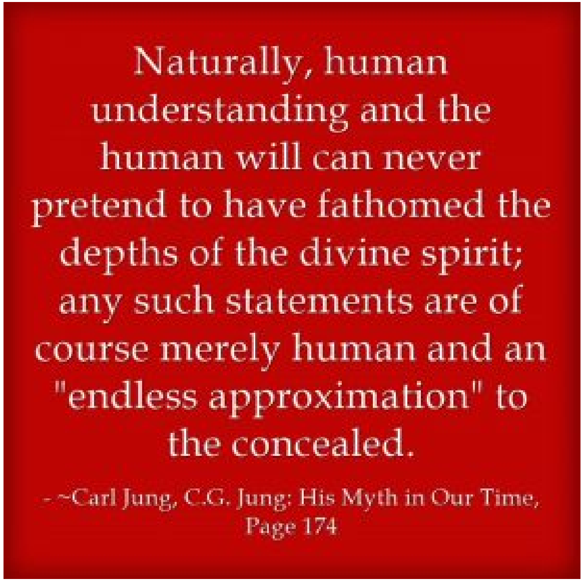
If God himself should demand from me a murder, I would not commit it; instead, I would throw my tiny human freedom and consciousness onto the scale, and sooner offer myself as a sacrifice.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 167



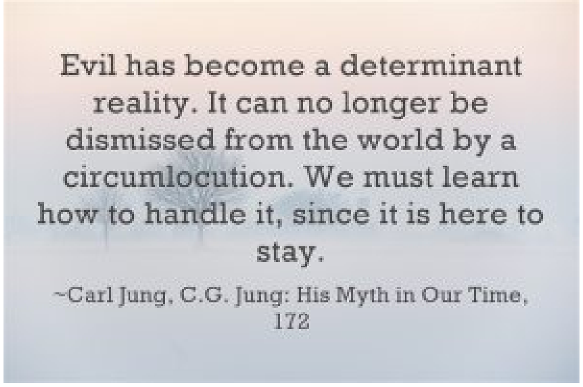
After all these reflections I have come to the conclusio that man's likeness to God is matter which concerns not only man but also his Creato

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Ou Time, 169



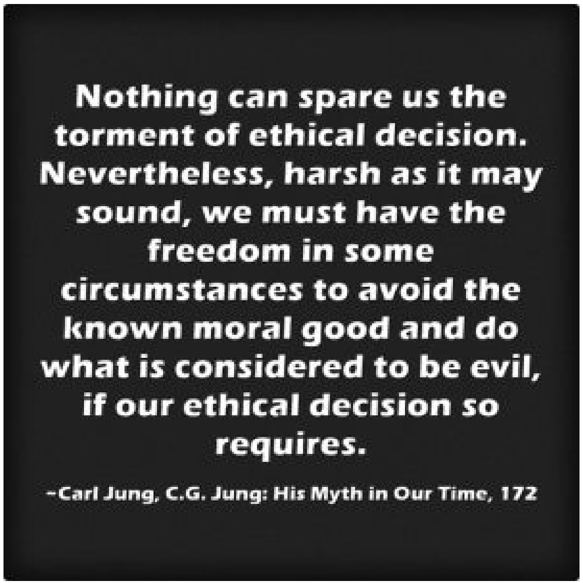
Naturally, human understanding and the human will can never pretend to have fathomed the depths of the divine spirit; any such statements are of course merely human and an "endless approximation" to the concealed.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 174



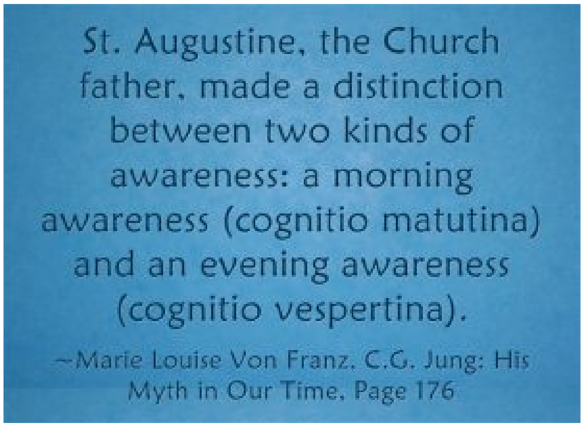
Evil has become a determinant reality. It can no longer be dismissed from the world by a circumlocution. We must learn how to handle it, since it is here to stay.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 172



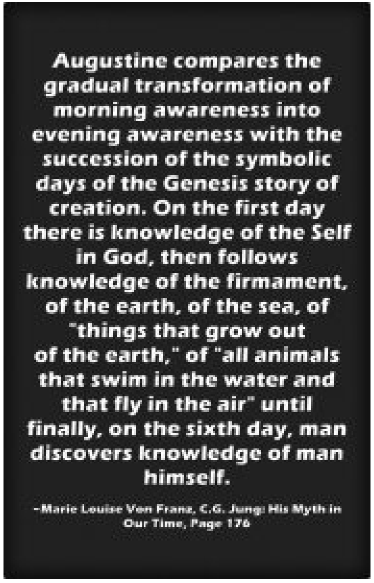
Nothing can spare us the torment of ethical decision. Nevertheless, harsh as it may sound, we must have the freedom in some circumstances to avoid the known moral good and do what is considered to be evil, if our ethical decision so requires.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 172



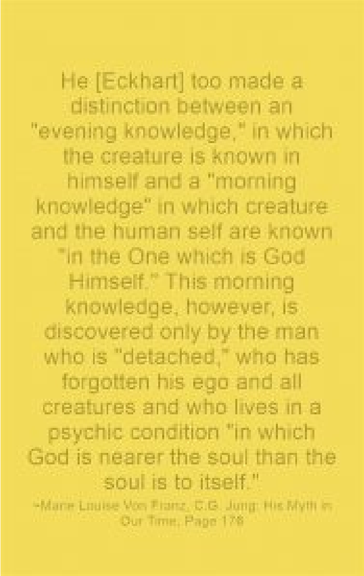
St. Augustine, the Church father, made a distinction between two kinds of awareness: a morning awareness (cognitio matutina) and an evening awareness (cognitio vespertina).

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 176



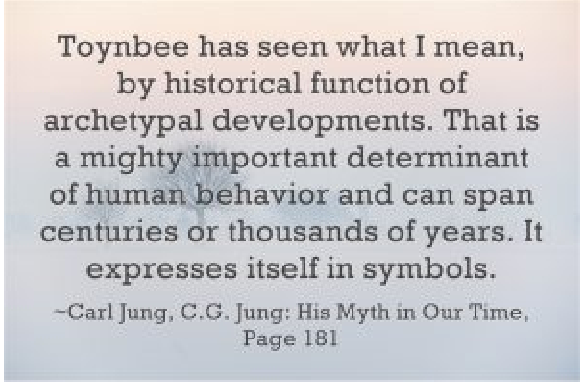
Augustine compares the gradual transformation of morning awareness into evening awareness with the succession of the symbolic days of the Genesis story of creation. On the first day there is knowledge of the Self in God, then follows knowledge of the firmament, of the earth, of the sea, of "things that grow out of the earth," of "all animals that swim in the water and that fly in the air" until finally, on the sixth day, man discovers knowledge of man himself.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 176



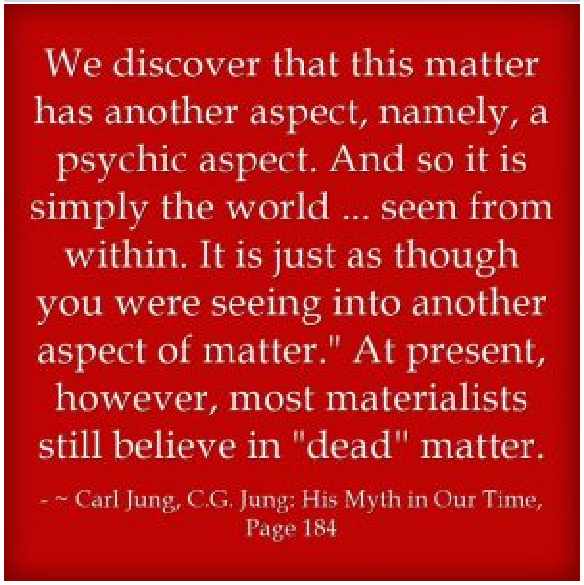
He [Eckhart] too made a distinction between an "evening knowledge," in which the creature is known in himself and a "morning knowledge" in which creature and the human self are known "in the One which is God Himself." This morning knowledge, however, is discovered only by the man who is "detached," who has forgotten his ego and all creatures and who lives in a psychic condition "in which God is nearer the soul than the soul is to itself."

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 178



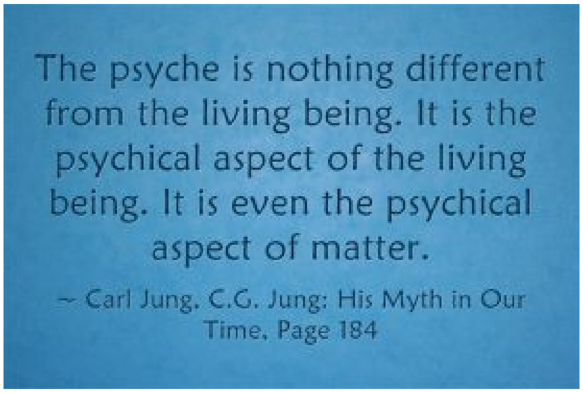
Toynbee has seen what I mean, by historical function of archetypal developments. That is a mighty important determinant of human behavior and can span centuries or thousands of years. It expresses itself in symbols.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 181



We discover that this matter has another aspect, namely, a psychic aspect. And so it is simply the world ... seen from within. It is just as though you were seeing into another aspect of matter." At present, however, most materialists still believe in "dead" matter.

- ~ Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 184

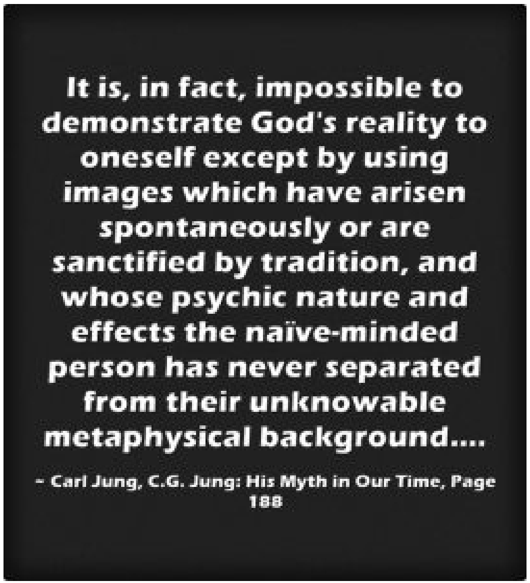


The psyche is nothing different from the living being. It is the psychical aspect of the living being. It is even the psychical aspect of matter.

~ Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 184

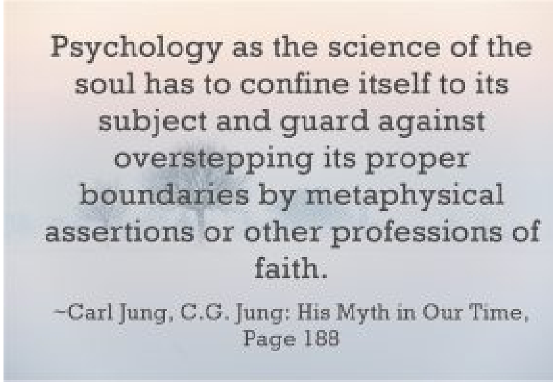
The psyche is an autonomous factor, and religious statements are psychic confessions which in the last resort are based on unconscious, i.e., on transcendental, processes. These ... statements are filtered through the medium of human consciousness: that is to say, they are given visible forms which in their turn are subject to manifold influences from within and without.

- ~ Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 187



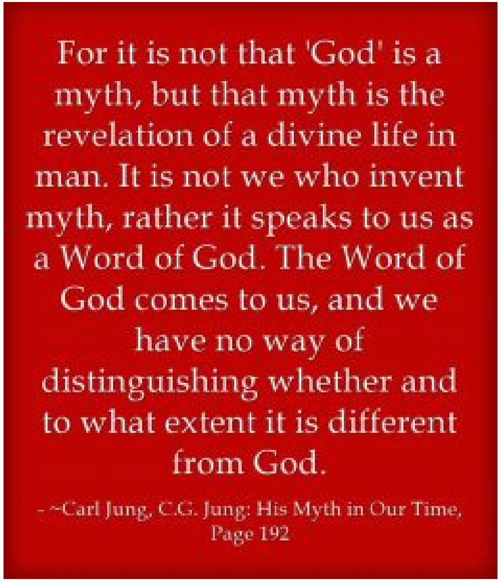
It is, in fact, impossible to demonstrate God's reality to oneself except by using images which have arisen spontaneously or are sanctified by tradition, and whose psychic nature and effects the naïve-minded person has never separated from their unknowable metaphysical background....

~ Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 188



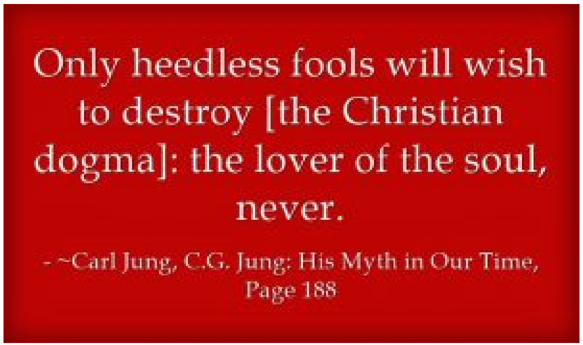
Psychology as the science of the soul has to confine itself to its subject and guard against overstepping its proper boundaries by metaphysical assertions or other professions of faith.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 188



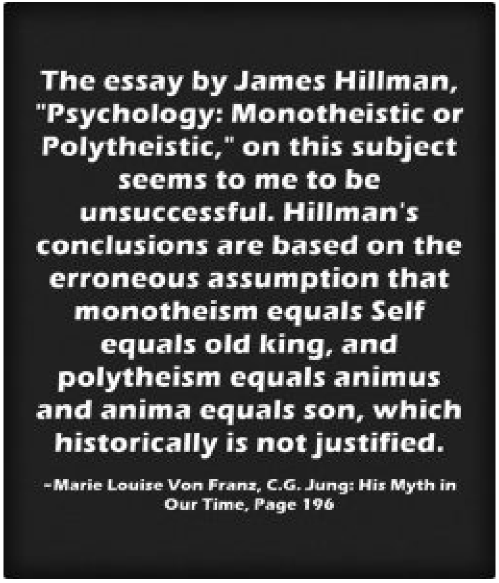
For it is not that 'God' is a myth, but that myth is the revelation of a divine life in man. It is not we who invent myth, rather it speaks to us as a Word of God. The Word of God comes to us, and we have no way of distinguishing whether and to what extent it is different from God.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 192



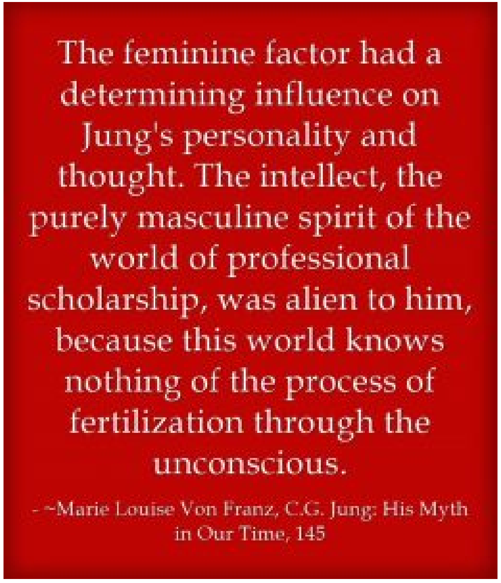
Only heedless fools will wish to destroy [the Christian dogma]: the lover of the soul, never.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 188



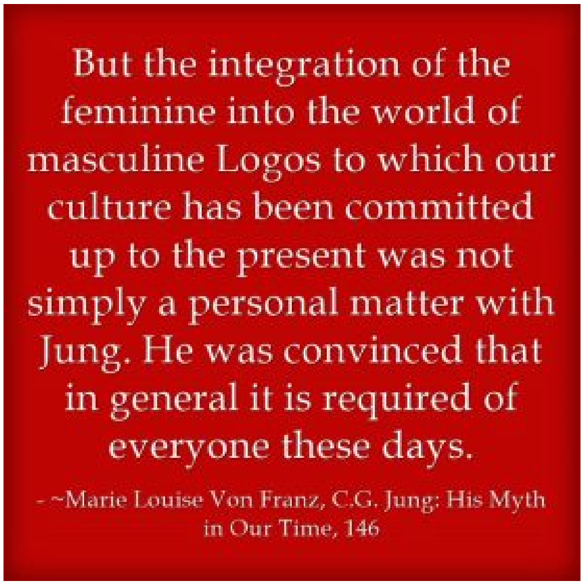
The essay by James Hillman, "Psychology: Monotheistic or Polytheistic," on this subject seems to me to be unsuccessful. Hillman's conclusions are based on the erroneous assumption that monotheism equals Self equals old king, and polytheism equals animus and anima equals son, which historically is not justified.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 196



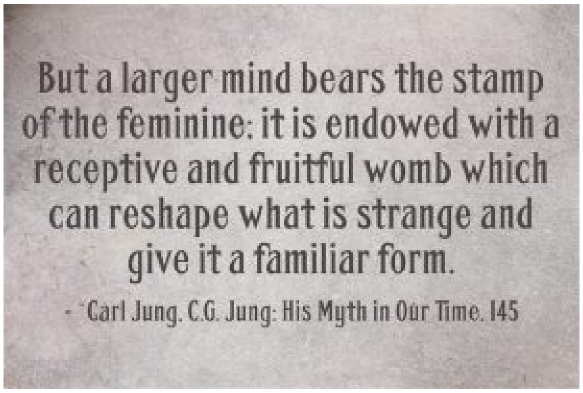
The feminine factor had a determining influence on Jung's personality and thought. The intellect, the purely masculine spirit of the world of professional scholarship, was alien to him, because this world knows nothing of the process of fertilization through the unconscious.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 145



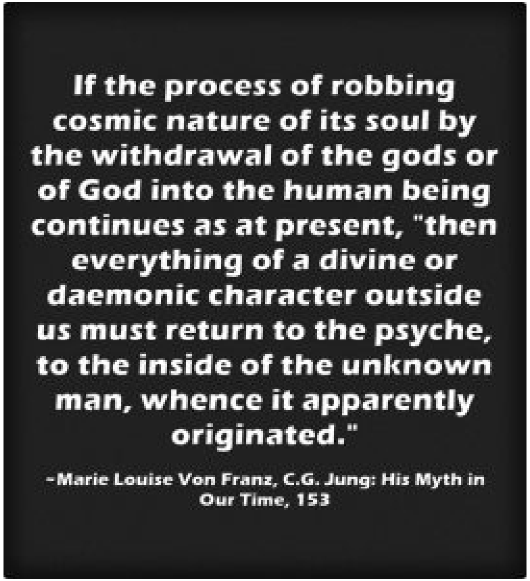
But the integration of the feminine into the world of masculine Logos to which our culture has been committed up to the present was not simply a personal matter with Jung. He was convinced that in general it is required of everyone these days.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 146



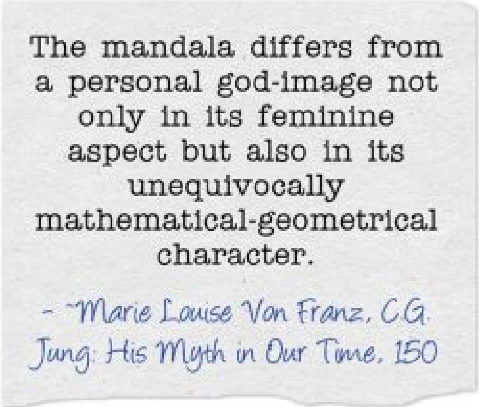
But a larger mind bears the stamp of the feminine; it is endowed with a receptive and fruitful womb which can reshape what is strange and give it a familiar form.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 145



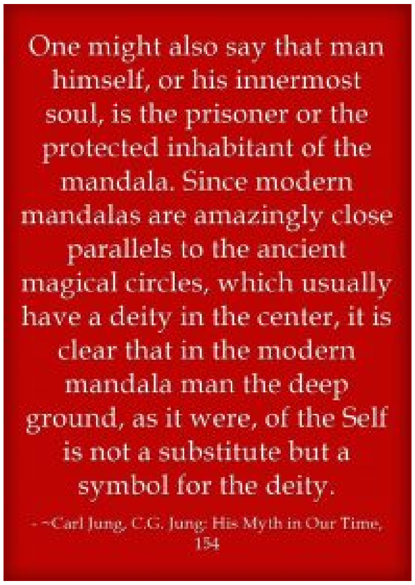
If the process of robbing cosmic nature of its soul by the withdrawal of the gods or of God into the human being continues as at present, "then everything of a divine or daemonic character outside us must return to the psyche, to the inside of the unknown man, whence it apparently originated."

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 153



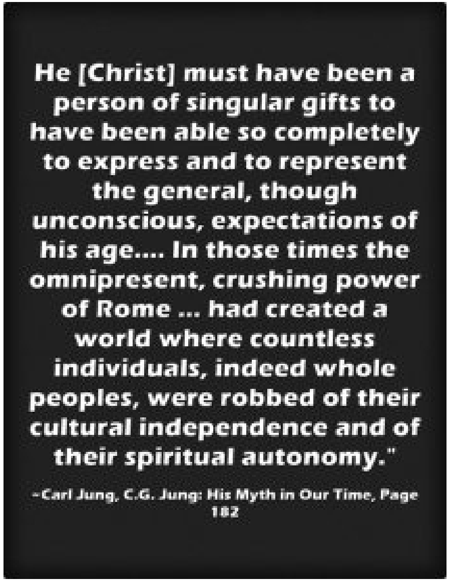
The mandala differs from a personal god-image not only in its feminine aspect but also in its unequivocally mathematical-geometrical character.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 150



One might also say that man himself, or his innermost soul, is the prisoner or the protected inhabitant of the mandala. Since modern mandalas are amazingly close parallels to the ancient magical circles, which usually have a deity in the center, it is clear that in the modern mandala man the deep ground, as it were, of the Self is not a substitute but a symbol for the deity.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, 154



He [Christ] must have been a person of singular gifts to have been able so completely to express and to represent the general, though unconscious, expectations of his age.... In those times the omnipresent, crushing power of Rome ... had created a world where countless individuals, indeed whole peoples, were robbed of their cultural independence and of their spiritual autonomy."

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 182

